Bellarmine hath nothing to anſwer here: but that S. Paul ſpeaketh not of the confidence or certaintie of our juſtification, but of the truth of the articles of the faith, that Chriſt is now riſen, aſcended, and ſitteth at the right hand of God a Mediator, and interceſſor, and therefore wee have boldneſſe, Bellarm. reſponſ. ad loc. 12.

Contra. Firſt, it is not the knowledge only of the articles of faith, that they are true, that can worke this boldneſſe, and confidence in us: for then the devill who beleeveth and acknowledgeth the truth of theſe things, Marke 5. 7. Iam. 2. 19. ſhould have acceſſe with confidence as well as the faithfull.

Secondly, S. Paul declareth elſe-where, that his acceſſe, or entrance with boldneſſe, is a fruit of our juſtification by faith, Rom. 5. 1. Being juſtified by faith we have peace with God, &c. then it followeth, by whom we have acceſſe thorough faith unto this grace, verſ. 2. therefore by the ſame faith which juſtifieth, thorough the ſame we have this boldneſſe.

Argum. 3. S. Iohn ſaith, We know we are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe wee love the brethren, 1 Iohn 3. 14. Againe, hereby know we, that we dwell in him, and he in us, becauſe he hath given us of his ſpirit, chap. 4. 13. We know that we are of God, chap. 5. 19. Hee that beleeveth in the Son of God, hath the witneſſe of God in himſelfe, 1 Ioh. 5. 10. By theſe places it is proved, that wee may be aſſured of the favour of God, and that we are in the ſtate of grace.

Anſw. This knowledge, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, doth not ſhew an abſolute and infallible certainty or ſureneſſe: but we may be ſaid to know, when as by ſignes and conjectures only we do gather any thing, Bellarm. reſponſ. ad loc. 13.

Contra. 1. It appeareth that this knowledge of our ſalvation wrought in us by the ſpirit, is ſure and certaine, without any doubting, not conjecturall: becauſe the Apoſtle by this word uſeth to expreſſe
1 Ioh. 5. 18. 20. the ſure and undoubted apprehenſion, that we have of any thing: We know that whoſoever is of God, ſinneth not: we know that the Son of God is come: This knowledge whereby we know, that they which are borne of God, ſin not, that is, have not ſin reigning in them; and whereby wee alſo know, that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is moſt firme and ſure without any wavering or doubting: Ergo, in the ſame ſenſe the Apoſtle ſaith, we know, that wee are of God, verſ. 19. for why ſhould not the ſame word, being twice taken in the ſame place, both in the verſe next before, and in the verſe next after, for a ſure and certaine knowledge, be ſo alſo underſtood in this verſe?

2 The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not in the ſecond or third perſon, you know, or they know, but in the firſt, wee know, putting himſelfe in the number: Now I truſt they will not ſay that the Apoſtle did geſſe only, and was not ſure that he had the holy Ghoſt: S. Paul indeed ſaith, I thinke that I have the ſpirit of God, 1 Cor. 7. 40. not as though he doubted of it or ſpake by conjecture; but he thus ſpeketh in modeſtie, leſt he ſhould ſeeme to boaſt; for he was ſure he had the ſpirit: for if he could pronounce certainely of others: God hath given you his holy ſpirit, 1 Theſſal. 4. 8. much more was he certaine of himſelfe.

3 The knowledge of faith is ſure and certaine, without any doubting: as our Saviour ſaith to Peter, O thou of little faith, wherefore didſt thou doubt? Matth. 14. 31. where faith is full and perfect then, there is no doubting. Saint Iames alſo ſaith, Let him aske in faith, and waver not, Iam. 1. 6. But this knowledge, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, is of faith: He that beleeveth in the Sonne of God, hath the witneſſe of God in himſelfe, 1 Iohn 5. 10. Ergo, it is a certaine and infallible knowledge.

4 That knowledge, whereby we doe aſſure our hearts before God, and have boldneſſe with God, is a certaine and undoubted knowledge. Such is this knowledge: Thereby wee know wee are of the truth, and ſhall before him aſſure our hearts, and wee have boldneſſe toward God, Ergo. If the Jeſuite anſwer us, as he doth, that, audacia non eſt certitudo, boldneſſe is not certaintie: we reply againe, that boldneſſe, which the children of God ſhall have in the day of judgement, is full of confidence, without any deſpaire or doubting, and therefore certaine: but this knowledge worketh in us ſuch boldneſſe: Herein is love perfect in us, that we ſhould have boldneſſe in the day of judgement: Ergo. 1 Iohn 3.19.21. 1 Iohn 4.17.

Argum. 4. Prove your ſelves, whether you are in the faith, examine your ſelves, know yee not your owne ſelves, how that Ieſus Chriſt is in you, except yee be reprobates, 2 Cor. 13. 5. Ergo, they that by faith are ſure that Chriſt is in them, are ſure alſo of their ſalvation, and know, that they are not reprobates.

Anſw. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the preſence of Chriſt by grace, but by his power and providence: ſo that his meaning is, that unleſſe they are given over to reprobate ſenſe, they will acknowledge the power of Chriſt working amongſt them, by theſe miracles, which the Apoſtle wrought: and by which power he delivered ſome to Satan, Bellarm. reſponſ. ad teſtim. 11.

Contra. That the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the preſence of Chriſt by grace, and of juſtifying faith; it may ſtrongly be gathered by theſe arguments: 1 The Apoſtle uſeth this phraſe of ſpeech, to be in the faith, or of the faith, when hee would expreſſe the manner of juſtification: as, They which bee of faith, are bleſſed with faithfull Abraham: Where it is evident, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of juſtifying faith. 2 Examine your ſelves, ſaith the Apoſtle: but it is that faith, which juſtifieth, whereby we do examine our ſelves: Let a man examine himſelfe, and ſo let him eat of this bread, &c. To examine themſelves is to prove whether they be in the faith: And that faith, whereby we doe eat and drinke worthily the body and blood of Chriſt, is juſtifying faith. 3 S. Paul ſpeaketh of that faith, whereby wee live in Chriſt, verſ. 4. But wee ſhall live with him; but that is juſtifying faith: The juſt ſhall live by faith, Rom. 1. 17. I live by faith in the Son of God, Galath. 2. 20. 4 For Chriſt to be in us, ſheweth his preſence and being by grace, and not by his power only: he in whom Chriſt is, he hath Chriſt, and hath the Son: hee that hath the Son, hath life, even life eternall: Ergo, he in whom Chriſt the Son of God is, hath eternall life: Ergo, knowing Chriſt to be in him, he knoweth thereby that he ſhall be ſaved: by the being then of Chriſt in him, he is ſure of his ſalvation. Galath. 3. 9. 1 Cor. 11. 28. 1 Cor. 13. 5. 1 Iohn 5. 12.

Argum. 5. Further, we thus reaſon for the certitude of juſtification by faith out of theſe places of Scripture.

1 Ioh. 3. 21. Hee that doth the truth commeth to the light, that his deeds may be made manifeſt, that they are wrought according to God. But this a man cannot know, not being aſſured of his faith and juſtification, that his works are acceptable to God: whom it is impoſſible to pleaſe without faith. 1.

2 Ioh. 14. 17. But yee know the ſpirit, for he dwelleth with you, and ſhall be in you: Ergo, if wee know the ſpirit to be in us, we alſo conſequently know our juſtification. 2.

3 Rom. 4. 13. Therefore it is by faith, that the promiſe may be ſure: Ergo, we by faith are ſure of the promiſe. 3.

4 Epheſ. 3. 12. By whom we have boldneſſe and entrance with confidence by faith in him: Ergo, faith maketh us confident and aſſured. 4.

Anſw. 1. Chriſt ſpeaketh of thoſe which in a ſimple heart came unto him, as Nathanael, Nicodemus, not being yet juſtified, but comming to be juſtified; how then could they yet be ſure of their juſtification? Bellar. [illegible]c. 9. reſp. ad loc. 2. 1.

Contra. Chriſt ſpeaketh of beleevers, verſ. 18. He that beleeveth, ſhall not be condemned: of thoſe that doe the truth, whoſe deeds are wrought according to God: but they, which are but comming to Chriſt, having yet no knowledge of the truth, cannot doe the truth, nor worke according to God. Iohn 3. 18. 21.

Anſw. By the preſence of the ſpirit we are not ſure of our juſtification, but only we know, having faith, that it is not without Gods help, Bellar. reſp. ad loc. 4. 2.

Contra. A moſt abſurd anſwer: a man, ſaith he, is not ſure of his faith: but if hee have faith, hee is ſure the ſpirit worketh it. Firſt, if a man be ſure of the ſpirit, how is he not ſure of faith, which is the effect of the ſpirit? as if there be fire, there is heate neceſſarily. Secondly, indeed if a man have not faith, he cannot be ſure of it: but when he hath it, he knoweth he hath it, becauſe hee knoweth hee hath the ſpirit that worketh it.

Anſ. Abraham was ſure by faith: but we have not ſuch a faith as Abraham had, Bell. reſp. ad 5. teſtim. 3.

Contra. Firſt, that the promiſe might be ſure by faith to all the ſeed, ſaith the Apoſtle: Ergo, not in Rom. 4. 12. Abraham only, but in all his ſeed faith worketh the ſame ſureneſſe. Likewiſe, That righteouſnes might be imputed to them alſo that walke in the ſteps of the faith of Abraham. Secondly, ſo S. Ambroſe expoundeth: Quid credidit Abraham? ſe ſemen habiturum, in quo omnes gentes juſtificantur per fidem, ſicut & Abraham, &c. What did Abraham beleeve? that he ſhould have a ſeed, wherein all nations ſhould be juſtified by faith, as Abraham was juſtified, &c. in 4. c. ad Roman. Abrahams faith then and ours is the ſame.

4. Anſw. The certitude, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, is not of our juſtification, but of the truth of the myſteries of faith, as of Chriſts death, reſurrection, &c. Bellarm. reſp. ad loc. 12.

Rom. 5. 1. 2. Contra. S. Paul aſcribeth this aſſurance to juſtification by faith: as, Being juſtified by faith, we are at peace with God: then it followeth verſ. 2. by whom we have entrance by faith: where the Apoſtle uſeth the ſame word προσαγωγὴν, which he doth here: ſhewing that our entrance with boldneſſe is a fruit or effect of our juſtification by faith.

1 Auguſtine ſaith upon theſe words, Iohn 5.22. He that beleeveth—is paſſed from death to life: Ego audivi verba Domini, credidi—tranſii de morte ad vitam, ad judicium non venio, non præſumptione mea, ſed promiſſione ipſius: I have heard the words of God and beleeved: when I was an unbeleever, I became a beleever, I am paſſed from death to life (as he ſaith) I come not to judgement, not by my preſumption but by his promiſe, tract. 22. ſuper Ioan. Here Auguſtine directly affirmeth, that he was by faith ſure of life, and freed from judgement. Againe, he ſaith, Unuſquiſq; inſpiciat ſe intus, appendat ſe, probet ſe in omnib. factis ſuis—fides, quæ operatur per dilectionem ſi in vobis eſt, jam pertinetis ad prædeſtinatos: Let every man looke into himſelfe, examine, prove himſelfe—if faith working by love be in you, even now you doe belong unto the number of the predeſtinate: de verb. Apoſtol. ſerm. 16.

Origen ſaith, Tract. 7. in Matth. Omnis anima, quæ ſe inſeparabilem eſſe cognoſcit à Chriſto, dicit, &c. Every ſoule which knoweth it ſelfe to be inſeparable from Chriſt, ſaith, Who ſhall ſeparate us? &c.

Epheſ. 3. 17. S. Ambroſe thus excellently writeth upon theſe words: That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith: In eo petit eos magis firmari, ut non ambigant, ſed magis credant Chriſtum habitare in ſe, ut certi ſint de Chriſto, quòd habitat per fidem, &c. Hee deſireth them therein to be confirmed, that they ſhould not doubt, but rather beleeve that Chriſt dwelleth in them, that they may be ſure of Chriſt that hee dwelleth by faith in their hearts, that when we have his faith in our hearts, we may be knowne to have him, ut ſecuri ſimus de auxilio ejus, that we may be ſure or ſecure of his help, becauſe hee doth not forſake us, but is alway preſent, becauſe of his faith, which he ſeeth to be in us, &c.

2 Theodoret ſaith: Fides eſt inſita credentium animis citra ambiguitatem aliquam diſpoſitio: Faith is a diſpoſition ſetled in the minde of beleevers without any ambiguitie.

Harm. ſect. 8. pag. 239. 3 Confeſſ. of Wittemberg. c. 14. We are not ignorant, that ſome doubt of the mercie and favour of God doth alwayes cleave to our fleſh, ſo long as we live in the body: but ſeeing God doth promiſe unto us his free mercie for Chriſt his Sons ſake—he doth require, that we ſhould mortifie this doubting of the fleſh, and have a moſt aſſured affiance in his mercie: And to this purpoſe Hilarie is alleaged: Iuſtification through faith Ibid. pag. 261. is none at all, if faith it ſelfe be doubtfull. Belgia. artic. 23. This righteouſneſſe doth drive from our conſcience Ibid. ſect. 9. p. 285. all feare, Saxonic. artic. of juſtification: This common error of doubting is evidently refuted by theſe words, being juſtified by faith, we are at peace with God, &c.

We want not their owne teſtimony: Decr. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 7. c. 1. Stephanus: Dubius in fide infidelis eſt: He that is doubtfull in faith, is an Infidell.

Ambroſ. Catharinus apolog. cont. Dominic. à Soto, Enchirid. Colonienſ. tract. de juſtificat: Theſe Popiſh authors doe herein agree with us: Poſſe fideles certa fide ſtatuere, ſibi remiſſa pecca: That faithfull men by their faith, may certainly determine that their ſins are forgiven them.

Laſtly, Let us adjoyne the conſent and teſtimonie of the holy Martys: Maſter Patricke Hamelton Martyr, condemned for this article with others, for ſaying, Hee is not worthy to be called a Chriſtian, which beleeveth not that he is in grace: Fox pag. 974. col. 2. articul. 4. Maſter Tyndall ſaith thus: Chriſt is thine, and all his deeds are thy deeds, Chriſt is in thee, and thou in him, neither canſt thou bee damned, except Chriſt be damned with thee: neither can Chriſt be ſaved, except hee bee ſaved with thee: pag. 1248. Maſter Bradford thus: Know for a certaine, that as the devill goeth about nothing ſo much, as to bring you in doubt, whether you be Gods child: ſo whatſoever ſhall move you to admit that dubitation, be aſſured, the ſame to come of the devill: pag. 1640. epiſtol. quadam. Maſt[illegible] Philpot thus boldly and confidently proteſteth: Let him doubt of his faith that liſteth, God give mee alwayes grace to beleeve, that I am ſure of true faith, and favour in Chriſt: pag. 1825. Iulius Palmer Martyr thus confeſſeth: No man can beleeve, but by the inſpiration of the holy Ghoſt: therefore if I were not a ſpirituall man, and inſpired with Gods holy ſpirit, I were not a true Chriſtian: Qui ſpiritum Chriſti non habet, hic non eſt ejus: He that hath not the ſpirit of God, is none of his, pag. 1938. All theſe holy Martyrs, with many other, both were aſſured themſelves of their ſalvation by faith in Chriſt, and in confirmation of this doctrine, gave their moſt precious lives. Such a ſeale of their doctrine our adverſaries are never able to ſhew.

An appendix, whether Faith, or the grace of juſtification may bee loſt.

The Papiſts.

A Man, they ſay, may fall away from the faith, which once truly he had, and be deprived altogether of the ſtate of grace, ſo that he may juſtly be counted among the reprobates: Bellarm. lib. 3. de juſtificat. cap. 14. 57. Error.

Argum. 1. Firſt, they alleage theſe and ſuch like teſtimonies of Scripture; If a righteous man turne away from his righteouſneſſe, &c. S. Paul alſo ſaith of ſome, That they had made ſhipwracke of their faith: Rhemiſt. Bellarm. lib. 3. de juſtificat. cap. 12. Ergo, true faith and juſtice may be loſt. Ezech. 18. 24.

Anſw. The Apoſtle ſaith, ſome having put away a good conſcience, made ſhipwracke of faith: ſuch a faith indeed, that hath not a good conſcience may be loſt: for it is not a true lively faith, but a dead fruitleſſe faith: So is alſo the place in Ezechiel to be underſtood, of ſuch righteous perſons, as ſeemed ſo to be rather, than were ſo indeed. And thus S. Luke teacheth us to expound it: who, whereas other Evangeliſts write, From him that hath not, ſhall be taken away, even that which hee hath: hee ſaith, that which he ſeemed to have, God taketh away his grace from him, that hath it not; but ſeemeth only to have it: he giveth ſtill to him that hath. Thus one of your owne expoundeth this place: Fidem quam habere magis viderentur, quam haberent perdiderunt: They loſt faith, which they rather ſeemed to have, than they had indeed: Eſpenc. in hunc locum. 1 Tim. 1. 19. Luke 8. 18.

Argum. 2. Further, theſe places of Scripture are produced:

1 They receive the word with joy, but they have no root, which for a while beleeve, but in the time of tentation goe away: Theſe have faith, for they beleeve the word of God, yet fall away. 1.

2 Iohn 15. 2. Every branch that beareth not fruit in mee, hee taketh away: but it can bee no branch, unleſſe it were once in the ſtocke. 2.

3 Matth. 24. 12. The love of many ſhall wax cold. 3.

4 1 Cor. 9. 27. I doe chaſtice my body, leſt when I have preached to others, I ſhould be a reprobate. 4.

5 Galath. 5. 4. Whoſoever are juſtified by the law, are fallen from grace. 5.

6 Hebr. 6. 4. It is impoſſible, that they which were once lightened, &c. and have taſted of the word of God, if they fall away, &c. Ergo, they which have faith may loſe it, and fall away from it: Bellarm. cap. 14. 6.

Anſw. 1. The text expoundeth it ſelfe, they had no roote, and they beleeved but for a while: Ergo, they had no true faith: for a true faith is not without a root: Epheſ. 3. 17. That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith, that being rooted, &c. 1.

2 Hypocrites & unbeleevers may for a while be coūted among the branches of Chriſt, but they were never true branches: firſt, Chriſt ſaith, verſ. 5. I am the vine, yee are the branches, ſpeaking to his faithfull followers. Secondly, Matth. 15. 13. Every plant, which my father hath not planted, ſhall bee rooted up: there are plants then in outward ſhew, not planted of God: but all the true brances, of the true vine are planted of God. Thirdly, then as S. Iohn ſaith, They went out from us, but were not of us, ſo theſe branches may be accounted among the true branches, ſecundum preſentem juſtitiam, non ſecundum præſcientiam, according to their preſent juſtice, but not in reſpect of Gods preſcience: as Ambroſe well ſaith. 2. 1 Ioh. 2. 19.

3 That love, which falleth away, was never any true love: as Auguſtine: Charitas, quæ deſeri poteſt, nunquam vera fuit: Charity, which may be forſaken, was never true charity. This ſentence is rehearſed, decret. p. 2. cauſ. 33. diſt. 2. c. 2. 3.

4 Firſt, S. Paul hath no ſuch feare leſt he ſhould become a reprobate or caſt-away: he profeſſeth the contrary, that he was perſwaded nothing could ſeparate him from the love of God: and I truſt yee ſhall know we are not reprobates. And ſay if you dare, that Paul the elect veſſell might become a reprobate. Secondly, but his meaning is this, leſt if he preached one thing, and practiſed another, he might be reproved and reproached of men: in which ſenſe he ſaith, though we be as reprobates, that is in mans judgement, and as he expoundeth himſelfe, If I build the things that I have deſtroyed, I make my ſelfe a treſpaſſer, παραβάτην, which is all one, as if he had ſaid, ἀδόκιμον, reprobate to men. 4. 2 Cor. 13. 6. 2 Cor. 13. 7. Galath. 2. 18.

5 The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of any mans particular ſtate, but of the generall falling away of the Galathians from the doctrine of the Goſpell: as, I marveile yee are ſo ſoone removed to another Goſpell: Are yee ſo fooliſh, that when yee have begun in the ſpirit, yee would end in the fleſh? This is then nothing to the purpoſe. 5. Gal. 1. 6. c. 3. 3.

6 Theſe which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, never had any true faith, but onely a taſte thereof, and a momentany or ſuperficiall lightning of the minde: for the Apoſtle ſaith, They that went out from us, that is, fall away, were not of us. 6. 1 Iohn 2. 19.

Thus their owne gloſſe expoundeth this text: Aliud eſt bibere, vel manducare, aliud degustare, &c. It is one thing to drinke or eat, another thing to taſte: he drinketh, that is rooted in charity: Ille degustat, qui ex aliqua temporali communicat, à qua poſtea delinquendo recedit, de quibus Apoſtolus: Impoſſibile eſt, &c. He taſteth, that doth ſomewhat communicate of that water, but afterward by ſinning departeth, of whom the Apoſtle ſaith: It is impoſſible, that they which are once lightned, and have taſted, &c. if they fall away, &c. Cauſ. 33. diſt. 2. c. 44. gloſſ.

Argum. 3. David, Peter, did grievouſly fall: Saul, Simon, Iudas, became reprobates: Ergo, the righteous may finally fall away. Bellarm.

Luke 22. 32.

Anſw. Firſt the faith of David and Peter, by their tranſgreſſion, was greatly decayed, and much ſhaken, yet not utterly loſt: for Chriſt prayed for Peter, that his faith ſhould not faile. Secondly, as for the reſt, they were never [a] truly juſt or righteous. Iudas is called the child of perdition, and when hee was [b] in his holieſt courſe, hee was but a theefe, and an hypocrite, as the Scripture teſtifieth of him. S. Peter alſo ſaith of Simon Magus, That his heart [c] was not right in the ſight of God, howſoever he appeared before men: Act. 8. 21. Theſe examples therefore prove nothing.

[a] This by a popiſh Caviller is called a notable lye, that Saul was never truely juſt: whereas the Scripture in ſaying of David, that the Lord had ſought him a man after his owne heart. 1 Sam. 13. 14. doth imply, that Saul was not a man after the Lords heart: Auguſtine ſaith, that Saul was, Rex peſſimus perſecutor ſancti ſervi, &c. A wicked King perſecutor of his holy ſervant David: de ſanct. ſerm. 17. And he applieth unto him that text, Iob 34. 30. Qui regnare facit hypocritam, &c. which cauſeth an hypocrite to reigne, &c. in Pſalm. 51. he thinketh hee was from the beginning an hypocrite. [b] This alſo is termed a notable lye: whereas our bleſſed Saviour pronounceth of Iudas, that he was a devill. Iohn 6. 70. even at the beginning, when he was choſen to bee one of the twelve, he was alſo a theefe long before he betrayed Chriſt, Iohn 12. 6. upon which place Auguſtine thus writeth: Non tunc periit, jam fur erat, & Dominum perditus non corde ſed corpore ſequebatur: Hee did not then periſh (when hee betrayed his Maſter hee was even now a theefe, and followed the Lord being a caſt-away, not in heart but in bodie, &c. tract. ſerm. Ioann. then the lye is given to Auguſtine, yea to the Scripture it ſelfe: See my further anſwer Retect. p. 43. Here I am changed with corrupting the Scripture, becauſe I reade was not, for is not: whereas I in ſo citing the Scripture, have relation not to the time preſent wherein S. Peter ſo ſpake, but to the time now paſt: S. Peter might by the like reaſon bee charged to bee a corrupter, becauſe that place, Pſal. 16. 9. Thou wilt ſhew me the wayes of life: hee citeth as ſpoken in the time paſt ἐγνώρισας, thou haſt made knowne: having reference to the fulfilling of that Propheſie, which was fore-told by David: ſuch peeviſh Cavilling is not worthy of an anſwer: See further a more full anſwer, Retect. pag. 228.

Annot. in 1. Chron. 22. 8.

Argum. 4. The Doway proctors and agents for the Pope and Popery, would thus infringe the certaintie of faith: as of Sampſon they give this note, upon theſe words, If my head ſhall be ſhaven, my ſtrength ſhall depart from me: Supernaturall ſtrength or grace departeth, when any leave the rule of their profeſſion: and concerning David, they ſay, that he was not without faith, yet contaminate not with iniquity: ſo they ſay Salomon loſt Gods grace, and fell away.

Annot. in 1. Chron. 28. 8. Salomon did not finally fall away.

2 Sam. 7. 15.

Contra. One anſwer may ſerve for all theſe objections: theſe holy men had their ſlips and infirmities, their faith was eclipſed, and obſcured by their ſins: but it was not utterly loſt and extinguiſhed, it revived againe, as the trees, that ſeeme to be dead in Winter, revive in the Spring, and the coales covered with aſhes, kindle againe: And the Lord teſtifieth of Salomon: My mercie ſhall not depart from him as I take it from Saul.

The Proteſtants.

See what is here objected, and the ſame anſwered, Retect. p. 124. and before. Error. 52. Proteſt. in the margine.

OVr ſentence is this: that he which once hath received a true lively faith, and is thereby juſtified before God, can never finally fall away; neither can that faith utterly periſh, or faile in him, though it may for a while ſomewhat decay, and be empaired, yet ſhall it revive, and hee bee raiſed up againe.

Argum. 1. Iohn 4. 14. He that drinketh of the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall never be more athirſt, &c. 1 Iohn 3. 9. Whoſoever is borne of God, ſinneth not, for his ſeed remaineth in him, &c. Ergo, the grace of juſtification cannot be loſt.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſo long as they have this water and ſeed, they ſhall neither thirſt, nor ſin; but the fountaine may be dried up, and the ſeed loſt: and then may they fall into both.

Contra. 1 The Goſpell ſaith, It ſhall be in him a Well of water, ſpringing up to everlaſting life: Ergo, it cannot be dried up, for it ſpringeth continually and ſtinteth not, till it have brought him to life eternall. 2 S. Iohn ſaith not, they ſin not, if, or while they have their ſeed: but ſimply, becauſe their ſeed abideth, Neither doth he reaſon thus: they ſin not: Ergo, they have the ſeed: But they have this ſeed abiding: Ergo, they cannot ſin: for if they that are borne of God, are ſubject to ſin in ſuch ſort, as the Apoſtle meaneth, then may the child of God, be the child of the devill: for he that ſo ſinneth willingly with delight, and continuance therein, is of the devill.

Iohn 5. 24.

Argum. 2. He that beleeveth, is already paſſed from death to life: If it be then poſſible for a man to be brought from life to death, from heaven backe againe to hell, then may a faithfull beleever become alſo a faithleſſe infidell.

Cantic. 8. 7.
1 Cor. 13. 8.

Argum. 3. Much water cannot quench love, neither can the floods drowne it: Love doth never fall away; if charity cannot be loſt, then neither faith, for without faith there is no charity.

Anſw. Charity indeed falleth not away, but a man may fall from charity: and as long as charitie remaineth, no floods, that is, perſecutions can drowne it or extinguiſh it: Bellarm. cap. 15. reſp. ad 1. teſt. & 4.

Luke 8. 13.

Contra. 1. As charity it ſelfe is alwayes permanent, both in this world and the next, which I grant is the ſpeciall meaning of the Apoſtle: yet it is true alſo, that true charity cannot bee ſeparated from the heart of a faithfull man, being rooted (ſaith the Apoſtle) and grounded in love. How can that wither, which hath a roote? the ſeed ſowen in ſtony ground doth wither, becauſe it hath no roote. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Radicata eſt charitas, ſecurus eſto, Charity is rooted, be ſecure or out of doubt tract. 8. ſuper epiſt. 1. Ioan. rehearſed cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 2. c. 3. 2 Origen expoundeth this place, 1 Cor. 13. of the ſtability and firmeneſſe of charity, tract. 23. in Matth. upon theſe words, Charity never falleth away: Ex charitate nunquam excidente erant illa verba dicentis, confido, &c. From charity never falling away, proceeded thoſe ſpeeches of the Apoſtle, I am perſwaded, that neither death, nor life, &c. can ſeparate me from the love of God, &c. 3 Saint Gregorie alſo thus expoundeth the firſt place, Valida eſt ut mors dilectio, virtuti mortis dilectio comparatur, quia mentem, quam ſemel ceperit, à delectatione mundi funditus occidit, &c. Love is ſtrong as death; love is compared to the ſtrength of death, becauſe it doth ſlay in the minde for ever where it is the delight of the world, *lib.*10. *moral. c.*22. repeated, *cauſ.*33. *diſt.*2.*c.*4.

1 Auguſtine doth plainly ſet downe his ſentence of this matter: *Horum fides qua per dilectionem operatur, profecto, aut omnino non deficit, aut ſi qui ſunt quorum deficit, reparatur, antequam vita iſta finiatur: de corrept. & grat. cap.*7. Their faith, which worketh by love, either never faileth at all, or if it doe faile in any, it is repaired againe, before the life be ended: this ſentence is ratified, *cauſ.*33. *diſtinct.*2. *c.*25.

Tertullian here is a moſt plentifull witneſſe: Illius es (i. Chriſti) conſcriptus in libris vita; Thou art his, that is, Chriſts, written in the booke of life. Againe, Inter hac vada & freta idololatria veliſicata ſpiritu Dei fides navigat, tuta ſi cauta, ſecura ſi attonita; Amid theſe ſeas and ſhallowes of idolatrie ſailleth faith winded by the ſpirit of God, ſafe, if it be warie, and ſecure, if appaied: Fides integra ſecura de ſalute, Faith intire is ſecure of ſalvation, &c. But faith, if it were mutable and ſubject to be loſt, could not bring this ſecuritie.

2 Chryſoſtome ſaith, Fides eſt pactum cum Deo, cum Chriſto placitum, conſignatio promiſſorum: quoties ad fidem acceditur pactum inter Deum & homines firmatur, &c. Faith is a covenant with God, a league with Chriſt, a ſigning of the promiſes: as oft as we come unto the faith, the covenant betweene God and man is confirmed, &c. Seeing then the covenant betweene God and man in Chriſt is unchangeable, the ſeale of the covenant, which is faith, muſt needs alſo bee firme and permanent.

Et jam habent jus adeunda hareditatis illius, qua eſt vita aterna*; They that are juſtified, are adopted the ſons of God, and have alreadie, or even now, the right to come unto the inheritance of eternall life. How then can they loſe the heavenly inheritance, that have it alreadie?

Let us ſee further teſtimonie from themſelves: *Cauſ.*33. *diſt.*2. *c.*5. Charitas eſt recta voluntas, &c. juncta Deo inſeparabiliter; Charitie is a right minde inſeparably joyned to God.

*Ibid. c.*8. Charitas in quocunq́ fuerit, radix illi erit, areſcere non poteſt; In whomſoever charitie is, it is as a root, it cannot wither.

*Cap.*14. Charitas eſt aqua, de qua Dominus in Evangelio, &c. Charitie is that water, whereof the Lord ſaith in the Goſpell: He that drinketh of this water, which I ſhall give, ſhall not thirſt for ever.

*Ibid. c.*44. Aurum, quod quaſi lutum ſterni poteſt, aurum ante Dei oculos nunquam fuit, &c. Gold, which may become dirt, was never gold before God: They which are ſeduced, and never returne, quaſi habitam ſanctitatem ante oculos hominum videntur amittere, &c. Doe ſeeme to loſe ſanctitie, which they had before men, but they never had any before God.

Decret. part. 3. *diſtinct.*4. *c.*129. upon theſe words, Nolite ſpiritum extinguere; Quench not the ſpirit: Non quia ille extingui poteſt, ſed quantum in ipſis eſt; Not that the ſpirit can be extinguiſhed, but as much as in them lieth, &c.

*Peter Lombard, lib.*1. *diſt.*17. liter. ſ. ex Auguſtin. Si nulla res ab ejus charitate nos ſeparat, quid eſſe non ſolum melius, ſed etiam certius hoc bono poteſt? If nothing can ſeparate us from the love of God, what thing is better or more certaine? &c.

This truth alſo is ſealed by Maſter Bradford holy Martyr: Our cecitie or blindneſſe and corrupt affections, doe often ſhadow the ſight of Gods ſeed in Gods children, as though they were plaine reprobates: whereof it commeth, that they praying according to their ſenſe, but not according to the truth, deſire of God to give them againe his ſpirit, as though they had loſt it, and he had taken it away: which thing God never doth indeed; although he make us to thinke ſo for a time, Fox pag. 1655.

The fifth part of good works, firſt in generall, then in particular.

The

The firſt queſtion of the Law.

THe parts of this queſtion are theſe: firſt, of the differences of the Law and the Goſpell: Secondly, whether the law be poſſible to be kept: Thirdly, of the works of Supererogation: Fourdly, whether God be to be ſerved for hope of reward, or feare of puniſhment.

The firſt part, of the true and falſe difference betweene the Law and the Goſpell.

Firſt of the falſe differences.

Coloſſ. 2.17. Heb. 7.12. Galath. 3.24. Rom. 8.15. Acts 15.10. Matth. 11.30.

THere are ſome differences betweene the Law and the Goſpell, concerning the which we are both agreed: as firſt the Law ſetteth forth but the ſhadow of things to come; the Goſpell containeth the body it ſelfe, Coloſſ. 2. 17. Secondly, the law of Moſes was mutable, and to be changed, Heb. 7. 12. if the Prieſthood be changed, there muſt be a change alſo of the law: but the Goſpell is eternall. Thirdly, the law was not given to juſtifie us, but to be only a ſchoolemaſter to bring us to Chriſt, Galath. 3. 24. The Goſpell teacheth the way to life by Chriſt. Fourthly, the law of Moſes engendred feare: the Goſpell bringeth libertie and peace, Rom. 8. 15. You have not received the ſpirit of bondage to feare againe. Fifthly, the Law of Moſes was a hard yoke, grievous to bee borne, Acts 15. 10. but Chriſts yoke is eaſie, Matth. 11. 30. Theſe differences we acknowledge: but theſe following wee doe utterly reject.

78. Error.

FIrſt, Bellarmine ſaith, the Goſpell differeth from the law, as a perfect thing from an imperfect: and that the Goſpell is contained and included in the law, as the tree in the ſeed: and that the Goſpell doth not only explane, and expound the law, but addeth the Counſels of perfection unto it: Bellarm. de juſtificat. lib. 4. cap. 4.

The Proteſtants.

Luke 1. 70.

Contra. 1. IF by the law wee underſtand whatſoever is contained in the old Teſtament, as for Moſes and the Prophets wee willingly grant, that the doctrine of the Goſpell is included in the law: for of Chriſt ſpake all the Prophets, Luke 1. 70. but then ſhould we not ſpeake properly to our purpoſe: for when wee compare the Law and the Goſpell together, wee underſtand onely the law of works, which is called the morall law, as it is oppoſite to the doctrine of faith. 2 This then wee affirme, that the law of faith, which is the ſubſtance of the Goſpell, is not incluſively contained in the decalogue, which is the law of works; as it may appeare by theſe reaſons.

Rom. 7. 9. Rom. 6. 2. Rom. 3. 28. Rom. 11. 6. Rom. 4. 5. Mark. 9. 22.

1 The law of works and the law of faith have contrary effects: by the law ſin is revived, and receiveth ſtrength, Rom. 7. 9. but being baptized by faith into Chriſts death, we are dead unto ſin, Rom. 6. 2. Ergo, no affinity betweene the Law and the Goſpell, which commandeth faith. 2 If faith were commanded in the law, it ſhould be a worke of the law, which the Apoſtle denieth, concluding thus: That a man is juſtified by faith, without the works of the law. 3 Grace excludeth works, and works exclude grace. If of works, then no more of grace: works alſo exclude faith and beleefe: Rom. 4. 5. To him that worketh not, but beleeveth, &c. If then the law of works exclude faith, faith can in no wiſe be included in the law. The Goſpell therefore and the law are two diſtinct things: the law ſaith, Doe this, and thou ſhalt be ſaved: the Goſpell; Beleeve only, and it ſufficeth unto life: For all things are poſſible to him that beleeveth: the doctrine therefore of the faith of the Goſpell cannot be ſet forth in the law of works: and if it were, this would ſhew an agreement rather betweene the Law and the Goſpell, than a difference: for betweene the thing that containeth, and that which is contained, there muſt needs be ſome affinity: therefore the Jeſuite cannot properly herein make any difference betweene the law and the Goſpell.

Saint Ambroſe ſaith, in Luc. 10. Nemo ſub lege fidem conſtituat; lex enim intra menſuram, ultra menſuram gratia; nemo fidem intra menſuram legis conſtituat: Let no man place faith in the law: the law is within meaſure; grace is without meaſure: let no man place faith within the meaſure of the law, &c. Ergo, faith is not contained in the law.

In 3. cap. ad Galatas.

2 Theodoret ſaith: Lex non quærit fidem, ſed actionem exigit: The law ſeeketh no faith, but exacteth action, &c. How then is the Goſpell contained in the law?

Harm. ſect. 7. pag. 202.

3 Latter Confeſſion of Helvetia, chap. 13. The Goſpell is oppoſed to the law, for the law worketh wrath, but the Goſpell doth preach grace, and a bleſſing, &c.

4 Cauſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 16. Cum lege ſcriptum ſit, diliges amicum, odio habebis inimicum, &c. Whereas it is written in the law, Thou ſhalt love thy friend, and hate thine enemie, &c. It was lawfull then for righteous men to hate their enemies: quod in novo Teſtamento compeſcitur: which is reſtrained in the new: If the law ſuffered that which the Goſpell forbiddeth, how is the one contained in the other?

Peter Lombard.lib.3. diſtinct. 37. liter. c. Litera evangelii exprimitur, quod litera legis non exprimebatur: That is expreſſed in the letter of the Goſpell, which was not expreſſed in the letter of the law, &c. how then is the Goſpell contained in the law?

3 Neither is it true, that the Goſpell addeth unto the law, precepts or counſels, concerning works of greater perfection: for all good works appertaine to the law, as faith belongeth to the Goſpell: and therefore the Apoſtle concludeth, that if we be not juſtified by the works of the law, it followeth, that we are by faith. He findeth no meane betweene. Our Saviour Chriſt alſo ſaith, that there are no commandements greater, than to love God above all, and our neighbour as our ſelfe, which are contained in the law, Marke 12. 31. Therefore the Goſpell cannot counſell or command any thing greater than the law: ſeeing there can be no greater thing, than to love God with all the heart, ſoule and ſtrength Marke 12. 33.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmines ſecond difference betweene the Law and the Goſpell is this: The law only teacheth the doctrine, and ſheweth the way to diſcerne betweene vertue and vice: the Goſpell beſide this knowledge, giveth power and ſtrength to keep the law: ſo ſaith S. Iohn 1. 17. The law was given by Moſes, but grace and truth came by Ieſus Chriſt: Bellarm. cap. 4.

59. Error.
Iohn 1. 17.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. FIrſt, it is true, that the law is a revealer and diſcoverer of ſin, Rom. 7. 7. not a giver of righteouſneſſe, for that is impoſſible to the law, in as much as it was weake, &c. Rom. 8. 3. Yet even under the law by grace they received ſtrength, in ſome meaſure to keep the law, though not thereby to bee juſtified: I will run the way of thy commandements, (ſaith the Prophet David) when thou ſhalt enlarge my heart, Pſal. 119. 32. Secondly, grace indeed is given unto us in the Goſpell, not to enable us to bee juſtified by doing the works of the law, but by grace are we ſaved through faith, Epheſ. 2. 8. In that Chriſt is become our righteouſneſſe, 1 Cor. 1. 30. and we the righteouſneſſe of God in him, 2 Cor. 5. 21. So that as by grace the righteous both under the Law and the Goſpell are ſanctified to walke in ſome meaſure of obedience to the law: ſo neither then, nor now doth grace give power to us to be juſtified by the keeping of the law: but our juſtification, wholly, onely, and immediatly is wrought by the faith of Chriſt, Galath. 3. 16. This therefore is no difference betweene the Law and the Goſpell.

Galath. 3. 16.

1 Theodoret ſaith: Qui credit Domino Chriſto, is ſcopum legis adimplet: Hee that beleeveth the Lord Chriſt, doth fulfill the ſcope of the law, &c. The law is not fulfilled under the Goſpell, but by faith in Chriſt.

In 10. cap. ad Roman.

2 Tertullian: Evangelium Chriſti à lege evocare debuit ad gratiam: The Goſpell of Chriſt, from the law ſhould call us to grace, &c. But, if the works of the law are ſtill required under the Goſpell to bee juſtified by, we are not called from the law, but remaine under it ſtill.

Lib. 5. contr. Marcion.

3 Wittemberg, confeſſ. chap. 6. The law was given to ſhew man his imperfection, &c. and to ſtirre them up to ſeeke remiſſion of their ſins, righteouſneſſe and ſalvation by faith in the only Son of God: The righteouſnes then which the Goſpell teacheth, is not by keeping the law, but by faith in Chriſt, who hath fulfilled the law for us.

Harm. ſect. 7. pag. 208.

4 Ferus ſaith: The law is impoſſible, ſemper enim plus contra legem quam pro lege facimus: for wee alwayes doe more againſt the law, than for it, and that we doe is imperfect. The Goſpell then giveth us not power and ſtrength to keep the law.

In Act. 15.

Of the true differences of the Law and the Goſpell.

The Papiſts.

WHereas wee diſtinguiſh the Law and the Goſpell, chiefly in theſe two reſpects: firſt, that the law engendreth terror and feare; the Goſpell peace. Secondly, the law requireth obedience of the commandements, thereby to be juſtified; the Goſpell commandeth only faith. Bellarmine refuſeth theſe two differences betweene the law and the Goſpell, and thus bendeth his force to overthrow them.

60. Error.

Argum. 1. Firſt, that the Goſpell worketh feare, as well as the law, hee would prove it by theſe menacings and threatnings, which are denounced in the Goſpell, as Matth. 7. 19. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewen downe, &c. Rom. 1. 16. I am not aſhamed of the Goſpell of Chriſt, &c. Then he ſheweth the fruits and effects of the Goſpell: Firſt, the righteouſnes of God is revealed from faith to faith. Secondly, the wrath of God is revealed from heaven againſt all ungodlineſſe: The Goſpell then revealeth the wrath of God: Ergo, it worketh feare. Bellar. cap. 2.

Matth. 7. 19.
Rom. 1. 16.

Anſw. Firſt, as whatſoever is contained in the old Teſtament, doth not appertaine to the law, as the promiſes of mercie in Chriſt foreſhewed by the Prophets, which though they were uttered in the time of the law, yet belonged to the Goſpell: ſo in the new Teſtament, all that we finde there written, is not ſtraightway of the ſubſtance of the Goſpell: but the threatning of Gods judgements there contained, do as well appertaine to the law, as the comfortable promiſes in the old Teſtament to the Goſpell. So that thoſe places doe prove onely, that the law and the Goſpell are joyned in uſe; yet it followeth not, that they have the ſame operation and effect: S. Peter, Acts 2. and 3. and the reſt of the Apoſtles, in their Sermons tempered the threatnings of the law, and the comforts of the Goſpell together; by the one drawing the people to repentance, by the other miniſtring hope of remiſſion of ſins: the ſame courſe ought the Miniſters of the Goſpell to take in teaching the people now: firſt in humbling them by the law, then comforting them by the Goſpell: for the law, as S. Paul ſaith, *is a Schoolemaſter to bring us to Chriſt, Galath.*3.24. But all this ſheweth onely a joyning of the law and Galath.3.24. the Goſpell in uſe, not in nature or propertie.

Secondly, the Goſpell worketh feare and terror, per accidens, not of it ſelfe, but accidentally and improperly: as Saint Paul ſaith, The Goſpell is the ſavour of life unto life, and of death unto death, 2 Cor. 2. 16. That is, properly and of it ſelfe, it worketh unto life, but not ſo unto death: which is not the 2 Cor. 2. 16. proper effect of the Goſpell, but is cauſed by the wilfull contemners, and diſobedient hearers of the Goſpell: by whoſe perverſe nature the ſweetneſſe thereof is turned to bitterneſſe. So then unto the faithfull and beleevers the Goſpell bringeth comfort and peace: if it doe not ſo to others, the fault is in themſelves: but the law brought terror to all, even to the righteous: for Moſes trembled and Heb.12.11. quaked at the delivering of the law, *Heb.*12. 21.

61. Error. Argum. 2. Bellarmine alſo proveth, that the Goſpell requireth the condition of obedience as well Math.19. 17. as the law: as Chriſt ſaith to the young man, If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the Commandements. Hence he inferreth, that the Goſpell alſo injoyneth obedience, and not onely faith: And the Councell of Trent, *ſeſſ. 6. cap.*7. doe call this verbum fidei, and verbum Chriſti, the word of faith, and the word of Chriſt, to be obeyed and followed of all Chriſtians, which Chriſt here uttered to the young man.

Contra. Firſt, we grant that the Goſpell requireth obedience, for it eſtabliſheth the law, and without this obedience there is no ſalvation: for every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit ſhall bee cut downe, &c. But it is not now required as in the law, to be a meanes and cauſe of life and juſtification, as it was then ſaid, Doe this, and thou ſhalt live; but onely as a neceſſarie conſequent of our faith, and an effectuall fruit of our juſtification. Secondly, our Saviour Chriſt uttered theſe words to the young man onely to humble him thereby, and to teach him to know himſelfe: for he willing to juſtifie him- Luke 10. 29. ſelfe by keeping of the law; as we read, Luke 10.29. of another, which came to our Saviour with the ſame queſtion, What ſhall I doe to have eternall life? Our Saviour hereby ſheweth him how farre ſhort he came of keeping the law, that not by doing, but by beleeving from henceforth hee ſhould hope to be ſaved. Thirdly, the Apoſtles exhorted men to beleeve without any other condition, and ſo to Acts 16.31. be ſaved, Acts 16. 31. Their doctrine was not divers from Chriſts: therefore Chriſt onely required the condition of faith to juſtification. By this meanes alſo, the law ſhould become a Miniſter and inſtrument of life, contrarie to Saint Paul, who ſaith, it ſerveth onely as a Schoolemaſter to bring us to Galath. 3.24. Chriſt, Galat. 3.24. It diſcovereth and revealeth ſin, *Rom.*7. 7. the Apoſtle alſo calleth it the killing Rom.7.7. letter, and miniſterie of condemnation, 2 Cor. 3. 6. 9. It cannot therefore helpe to procure our ſalvati- 2 Cor. 3. 6. 9. on: but if that we are juſtified by our obedience to the law, then ſhould the law helpe to juſtifie us, which is contrarie to the Apoſtle.

The Proteſtants.

NOw on the contrarie ſide, our arguments are theſe: Firſt, that the law worketh terror, the Goſ- Rom. 8. 15. pell onely comfort. Ye have not received the ſpirit of bondage to feare againe, but ye have received Galath. 4. 4. the ſpirit of adoption, whereby we crie Abba father. And againe, God ſent his ſon, that he might redeeme them that were under the law, that wee might receive the adoption of ſons. and becauſe yee are ſons, God hath ſent the ſpirit of his ſon into your hearts, which crieth Abba father. Theſe places prove, that while we were under the law, we were ſervants, and kept in feare: but by the Goſpell of Jeſus Chriſt we are made ſons, and receive the ſpirit of adoption.

Bellarmines anſwer here is very ſimple, that not the law but the old Teſtament, engendreth feare; and not the Goſpell, but the new Teſtament miniſtreth comfort, Bellarm. cap. 2.

Contra. 1. The contrarie rather hereof is moſt evident, that not the old Teſtament, but the law: not the new Teſtament, but the Goſpell worketh, the one feare, the other comfort: for both the old Teſtament containeth comfortable promiſes of the Goſpell, and the new, fearefull threatnings of judgement: therefore neither the old wholly, nor the new wholly can be, that the miniſter of feare, this of peace, but the law and the Goſpell comprehend both in the old and new Scriptures.

2 Bellarmine himſelfe, forgetting what he had ſaid before, confeſſeth afterwards in theſe words: Lex Moſis, lex timoris & ſervitutis fuit; Evangelium lex amoris; The law of Moſes was the law of feare and ſervitude; the Goſpell the law of love and peace. Thus he himſelfe acknowledgeth this diſtinction betweene the law and the Goſpell, *Bellarm. lib.*4. *diſcrim.*7.

Argum. 2. That the Goſpell requireth not obedience to the commandements as a meane of ſalvation, as the law doth, but only commandeth faith, S. Paul every where ſheweth: Rom. 3. 20. We cannot be juſtified by the works or obedience of the law: the reaſon followeth: for by the law commeth the knowledge of ſin. And againe, verſ. 21. The righteouſneſſe of God (which is by the faith of Chriſt Jeſus, verſ. 22.) is made manifeſt without the law: Only faith then is required to make us righteous before God, without the works or obedience of the law. Ambroſ. in c. 3. ad Galath. Non eſt ex fide lex, quia nihil mandat credendum: The law is not of faith, becauſe it commandeth nothing to be beleeved, &c. As the law commanded not faith, ſo neither doth the Goſpell command obedience to the law as a meane to our juſtification.

2 Theodoret: Lex eos qui peccabant condemnabat, gratia autem eos ſuſcipiens, per fidem juſtificat, &c. The law condemned them which ſinned, but grace receiving them, doth juſtifie by faith, &c. The law then requireth works, the Goſpell faith: the one worketh terror, the other peace and comfort. Qu. 43. in Deuteron.

3 Bohemia confeſſ. chap. 10. The word of the law and old teſtament, is the word of death, feare, &c. but the word of the Goſpell is the miniſtery of faith, of grace, &c. Harm. ſect. 7. pag. 266.

4 Lyranus alleageth, and approveth that ſaying of Auguſtine: Differentia legis & Evangelii, timor & amor, timor reſpicit conditionem ſervilem, amor libertatem: The difference of the law and Goſpell, are feare and love; feare reſpecteth a ſervile condition, love reſpecteth libertie. Annot. in 2. c. Iam. 25.

Maſter Patricke Hamelton holy Martyr, hath ſealed this truth: The law ſheweth us our ſin, the Goſpell ſheweth us remedie for it: the law is the word of ire, the Goſpell is the word of grace: the law is the word of deſpaire, the Goſpell is the word of comfort, &c. Fox p. 977.

An appendix concerning the libertie of the Goſpell.

B*Ellarmine* here is not aſhamed to ſlander us, that wee ſhould affirme Chriſtian libertie herein to ſtand, in that we are altogether freed from the obedience and ſubjection of the law: Ut Moſes cum ſuo decalogo nihil ad nos pertineat: And that Moſes with his decalogue belongeth not to us, lib. 5. de juſtificat. c. 5. initio. But wee call God and all the world to record, that we witneſſe no ſuch thing, knowing that Chriſt came not to diſſolve, but to fulfill the law, Mat. 5. 17. Here therefore Bellarmine fighteth with his owne ſhadow, cap. 5. The Muſcovites indeed doe hold, that the decalogue is abrogated by the Apoſtles, Theol. Moſcovit. c. 5. But Proteſtants are farre off from ſo groſſe an opinion. Math. 5. 17.

Chriſtian liberty then conſiſteth in theſe three points: Firſt, in that wee are exempted from the ceremonies of the law, and the Judicials, ſo farre forth, as they concerned the politike ſtate of the Jewes: Acts 15. 10. Why lay yee a yoke on the diſciples necks, which neither our fathers nor we were able to beare? Secondly, we are freed from the curſe and guilt of the law: Galath. 3. 13. Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, when he was made a curſe for us. Thirdly, we are delivered from the ſervitude of ſin, that although it remaine in us, yet it reigneth not in us, Rom. 6. 12. Herein the Jeſuite diſſenteth from us. Acts 15. 10. Galath. 3. 13. Rom. 6. 12.

The Papiſts.

B*Ellarmines* opinion then is this, that by the liberty of the Goſpell we are altogether freed from ſin, ſo that it is throughly dead, and not only not imputed, but not alive, or having any being in the righteous, cap. 6. 61. Error.

Argum.

Rom.7.6.20.21. verſ. 23. Argum. Rom.7.6. Now wee are delivered from the law, being dead unto it, that wee ſhould ſerve in newneſſe of the Spirit: If ſin be dead in us, and we unto it, then hath it no life at all.

Anſw. Firſt, in the very ſame Chapter, the Apoſtle ſheweth by his owne example, that even in the regenerate there is ſome remnant of ſin: verſ. 20. Sin that dwelleth in me: verſ. 21. Evill is preſent with me: verſ. 23. I finde a law in my members rebelling againſt the law of my minde: If ſin dwell, bee preſent, rebell even in the righteous, then are they not fully purged from it. Secondly, wherefore the Apoſtle in ſaying, we are dead unto ſin, or to the law, would be underſtood as where he ſaith, Rom. 6.7.12. He that is dead, is freed from ſin, Rom.6.7. that is, from obedience and ſervice to ſin: verſ.12. Let not ſin reigne in your mortall bodie: they are freed from the Kingdome of ſin, not from the having of ſin.

The Proteſtants.

THat we are by the libertie of faith, freed from the tyrannie and Kingdome of ſin, but not altogether from the dwelling and abiding of ſin in us, ſo long as wee live in the fleſh: thus wee are perſwaded out of the Scripture.

Argum. Saint Paul being now an Apoſtle, and ſo conſequently a ſanctified and regenerate man, Rom. 7.14. 25, 24. ſaith, I am carnall, and ſold under ſin, Rom.7. 14. And verſ.25. In my fleſh I ſerve the law of ſin: Ergo, ſin was yet abiding in him. Verſ. 24. Who ſhall deliver me from the bodie of death? that is, the bodie of ſin, Rom. 6.6. Ergo, he was not yet fully delivered from ſin, though it reigned not in him: but his freedome onely conſiſted in this, that the bodie of ſin ſhould be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould Rom. 6.6. not ſerve ſin, Rom. 6.6. We are freed then from the ſervice and obedience to ſin, not from the poſſeſſion and habitation of ſin.

1 Auguſtine ſaith, Aliud eſt non peccare, aliud non habere peccatum: nam in quo peccatum non regnat, non peccat, id eſt, qui non obedit deſideriis ejus: in quo autem non exiſtunt iſta deſideria, non ſolum non peccat, ſed nec habet peccatum; It is one thing not to ſinne, another not to have ſin: for in whom ſin reigneth not, he ſinneth not, that is, obeyeth not the deſires thereof: but hee in whom none of theſe deſires are, hath no ſin at all: in 5. cap. epiſtol. ad Galat. But there is no man living, in whom there be not found ſome evill deſires: Ergo, no man, but hath ſin.

Ambroſe ſheweth wherein Chriſtian libertie conſiſteth: in 2 Galath. Libertas in Ieſu Chriſto hac eſt, non ſubjici legi; This is the libertie in Jeſus Chriſt, not to be ſubject to the law: that is, the terror and feare thereof, as he expoundeth, Galath. 4. Lex data eſt, ut terrori eſſet; The law was given to be a terror. Againe, in 2 Cor. 3. Lex ſpiritus dat libertatem ſolam fidem poſcens; The law of the ſpirit giveth libertie, requiring onely faith, &c. Ergo, this is our libertie, that by faith we are delivered from the thraldome and bondage of the law, both in the obſervation thereof required as a meane to ſalvation, and the puniſhment of the tranſgreſſion thereof.

De Eccleſiaſt. Dogmat. c. 86. Auguſtine further ſaith: Nullus ſanctus & juſtus caret peccato, &c. No juſt or holy man wanteth ſin, &c.

In 6. c. Levit. 2 Iſychius ſaith: Peccato refertum eſt omne viventium genus; All mankinde living, aboundeth with ſin, &c. None then are delivered from the contagion of ſin, but from the tyrannie and dominion thereof.

Harm. ſect. 7. pag. 111. 3 Latter confeſſion of Helvetia, chap. 12. Neither could there ever, neither at this day can any fleſh ſatisfie the law of God and fulfill it, by reaſon of the weakneſſe in our fleſh, which remaineth and ſticketh faſt in us, even to our laſt breath, &c. None then are freed altogether from ſin in this life.

De juſtificat. lib. 6. cap. 3. 4 Stapleton one of their owne Doctors ſubſcribeth to that concluſion, reſolved upon againſt the Pelagians, Neminem juſtorum in hac vita ſine peccato vivere poſſe; That none of the righteous can in this life live without ſin.

The ſecond part, whether it be poſſible to keepe the law in this life.

The Papiſts.

63. Error. IF any man ſay, that the precepts and commandements of God unto a man juſtified, and in the ſtate of grace, are impoſſible to be kept, let him be accurſed, Concil. Tridentin. ſeſſ. 6. can. 18.

Rom. 8.4. Argum. 1. Rom. 8 4. That the righteouſneſſe of the law might be fulfilled in us: Ergo, the law of God by the grace of Chriſt may be kept, and the keeping thereof is our juſtice. Chriſt alſo ſaith my yoke is eaſie, and my burthen light: Ergo, his commandements are poſſible to be kept.

1 Cor. 1. 30. Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith not, that the law is fulfilled by us, but in us by Chriſt, who is our righteouſneſſe and ſanctification. The law remaineth ſtill impoſſible to bee kept through the weakneſſe of our fleſh, verſ. 3. Neither doth God give us abilitie to keepe it, but Chriſt hath fulfilled it for us: God ſent his ſon in the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, verſ. 3. We notwithſtanding are bound to walke in obedience to the commandements, which is, to walke after the ſpirit, not after the fleſh, verſ. 4. But this our obedience is imperfect, and farre off from that perfection, which Gods juſtice requireth. Secondly, to him that is borne of God, his commandements are ſaid to be eaſie, and not grievous, not becauſe they are able perfectly to keepe them: but that ſtrength is given to keepe them in part, and they doe willingly, not of conſtraint exerciſe themſelves therein: as alſo for the reſt, that notwithſtanding their obedience is imperfect, yet the curſe of the law is taken away, and their ſins pardoned in Chriſt.

Auguſtine alſo telleth us how Chriſts yoke is light: Precepta ſunt nolentibus gravia, volentibus levia, ſicut ipſe aiit jugum meum ſuave eſt: de ſalutar. docum. cap. 7. His precepts are heavie to the unwilling, but to the willing light, as he himſelfe ſaith, my yoke is pleaſant. The commandements then are eaſie, not becauſe we can keepe them perfectly, but Chriſt maketh us willing by his ſpirit in ſome meaſure to walke in obedience.

Argum. 2. *Rom.*13. He that loveth his neighbour hath kept the whole Law: but it is poſſible to love our neighbour: Ergo, to keepe the Law, *Bellar.cap.*11. Rom.13.8.

Anſw. He that loveth perfectly, as he ought, may keepe the Law: but the aſſumption is falſe, that it is poſſible for any man ſo to love. Bellarmine ſheweth, that our love may bee perfectly ſufficient toward the keeping of the Law, becauſe David ſaith, With my whole heart have I ſought thee. Contra. Pſalm.119.10. The Prophet David in ſo ſaying, With my whole heart, ſheweth the qualitie rather than the quantitie of his love: to love therefore with all his heart, is all one as where he ſaith, I have loved exceedingly, Pſalm.119.167. that is, unfainedly, not with a double heart: and as the Hebrew phraſe is, an heart and an heart. Pſalm.12.2. This ſheweth not therefore the perfection of his love before God, but the ſingleneſſe and ſimplicitie of his owne heart.

Argum. 3. That it is poſſible to keepe the Law, they would enforce further by theſe teſtimonies of Scripture.

*Ioſu.*11.15. Ioſua left nothing undone of all, that the Lord had commanded Moſes. 1.

*Act.*13.22. I have found David a man after mine owne heart, which will doe all things that I will. 2.

2 *King.*23.25. Like unto Ioſiah was there no King that turned unto the Lord with all his heart, with all his ſoule, with all his might, according to all the law of Moſes. 3. Ioſua 11.15. Act.23.22. 2 King.23.25.

Luke 1.6. Both were juſt before God, (that is, Zacharie and Elizabeth) and walked in all the commandements and ordinances of the Lord without reproofe. 4. Luke 1.6.

Iohn 17.6. Our Saviour thus teſtifieth of his Apoſtles, Thine they were, thou gaveſt them mee, and they have kept thy word. 5. Iohn 17.6.

*Rom.*7.19. *The evill that I would not, that doe I: now, if I doe that I would not, it is no more I that doe it, but ſin that dwelleth in me. Verſ.*25. I my ſelfe in my minde ſerve the Law of God: then Paul ſinned not, for ſin cannot be but in the minde, *Bellarm. lib.*4. *de juſtificat.c.*11. 6. Rom.7.19.v.25.

1. Anſw. 1. Ioſua in that particular, concerning the deſtruction of the cities of the Heathen, did all as God commanded, *Deut.*7.2. 2 Otherwiſe Moſes himſelfe that gave the charge to Ioſhua, did not abſolutely keepe all Gods Commandements: for thus the Lord ſiith to him and Aaron: Becauſe yee beleeved not me, to ſanctifie mee in the preſence of the children of Iſrael, yee ſhall not bring this congregation into the land, &c. Deut 7.2. Numb.20.12.

2. The Scripture maketh a manifeſt exception of the matter of Vriah, that David did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, ſaving in that: Ergo, hee did not keepe all the commandements. 1 King.15.5.

3. Ioſiah turned with all his heart unto the Lord, which noteth the ſingleneſſe and integritie of his heart, rather than perfection: for he alſo was diſobedient to the voice of God in going againſt Pharao: as he ſaid unto him in the name of God, Leave off to come againſt God that is with me, leſt he deſtroy thee. 2 Chron.35.21.

4. They were juſt without reproofe: as Auguſtine ſaith, Aliud eſt eſſe ſine peccato, &c. aliud ſine querela: It is one thing to be without ſin, which is ſaid onely of Chriſt; another to be without reproofe, de perfect. juſtit. contr. Celeſtin. Hierome alſo diſtinguiſheth of juſtice: there is perfecta juſtitia, a perfect juſtice, and another, qua competit noſtra fragilitati, which agreeth with our frailtie, and ſo Zacharie and Elizabeth are ſaid to be juſt, *dialog.*1. contr. Pelag. Otherwiſe that they were not perfectly juſt, it is manifeſt, for the Angell ſaith to Zacharie, Thou ſhalt be dumb, quia non credidiſti, becauſe thou haſt not beleeved my words. Luke 1.20.

5. In the ſame ſenſe the Apoſtles kept the word of Chriſt; as Paul ſaith, Wee are perfect: As many as bee perfect: Secundum humane fragilitatis modum; after the meaſure of humane frailtie: As Philip.3.13. Hierome ſaith, *dialog.*2. contra Pelag. For abſolutely the Apoſtles had not kept Chriſts word, ſeeing Peter before this, for giving carnall counſell to Chriſt againſt his paſſion, deſerved to bee called Satan. Matth.16.23.

6. Firſt, this place evidently maketh againſt him; for how dare hee conclude that Paul had no ſinne, ſeeing hee confeſſeth that ſinne dwelt in him? Rom.7.19. Secondly, by his minde and ſpirit is not underſtood his ſoule, but the regenerate part of the whole man, wherein by the grace of God hee conſented to the Law of God; but the Law of his fleſh, that is, the unregenerate part reſiſted; ſo that his obedience to the Law was thereby hindred. 3 Laſtly, Auguſtine thus ſaith, Idem Apoſtolus & perfectum ſe dicit & imperfectum; imperfectum cogitando quantum illi ad illam juſtitiam deſit, &c. The Apoſtle doth call himſelfe perfect, and imperfect, *ibid. verſ.*12. imperfect; by thinking what he wanted of that juſtice, Pſalm.3.15.12. whoſe fulneſſe he thirſted for: perfect; quod ſuam perfectionem fateri non erubeſcit, becauſe hee is not aſhamed to confeſſe his imperfection: Like as wee call a Traveller perfect, cujus bene promovetur acceſſio, quamvis non perficiatur intentio, niſi fuerit facta perventio: Whoſe acceſſion ſtill is furthered, though his intention bee not perfited, till his pervention be fulfilled, *contr.*2. *epiſtol. Pelag.*3.7. Paul therefore had no perfect or abſolute juſtice and obedience.

Argum. 4. The old Pelagians, who held the ſame or verie like poſition to the Papiſts, objected thus; Si impoſſibilia ſunt mandata, non in his erit culpa, qui accepere mandata, ſed in eo qui dedit impoſſibilia: If the commandements be impoſſible, the fault is not in them that received them, but in him that gave them, Hieron. ad Cteſiphont.

First, Hierome anſwereth, Nunquid precepit mihi Deus, ut eſſem, quod Deus eſt? &c. Hath God commanded that I ſhould be the ſame that God is? that I ſhould have that which the Angels have not? Of Chriſt it is written, Peccatum non fecit, he did no ſin: if this be common to me and Chriſt, Quid ille habuit proprium? What had he proper to himſelfe?

Secondly, ſaith hee, Poſſibilia ſunt Dei mandata, &c. The commandements of God are poſſible; who denieth it? but how this is to be underſtood, the choſen veſſell ſheweth, That which was impoſſible in the law, &c. God ſending his ſonne, &c. His meaning is, that the commandements were poſſible in the obedience of Chriſt, Hieron. ad Cteſiphont.

Thirdly, Impoſſibilia ſunt, non imbecillitate naturæ, ſed animi laſſitudine: They are impoſſible, not by the imbecillitie of nature, (wherein Adam was firſt created) ſed laſſitudine animi, but through the infirmitie of the minde, (by Adams fall:) dialog. 1. adverſ. Pelagian.

Doway Bible, pag.459. pag.704.

The Doway Students would prove the poſſibilitie of keeping the law by that place, Deut. 30. 11. This commandement which I command thee this day is not above thee: When thou art ſtirred up, indued and aſſiſted with Gods grace (ſay they) the commandement of God is not then above thee, as farre from thee, but verie neere thee in thy mouth (to confeſſe God) and in thy heart to doe it, &c. And in the margent they give this note, (By grace men are able to keepe Gods commandements) ſo the commandements are not impoſſible, &c.

Rom.10.6,7.

Cont. 1. The tranſlate-latines following their Latine text, do not read this text aright: the Hebrew word nipleeth, ſignifieth not above, but abditum, abſconditum, hid from thee, and ſo their owne Interpreters, Vatablus and Montanus doe tranſlate. 2 But allowing this reading, this maketh nothing at all for the poſſibilitie of keeping the law; but either, as Vatablus noteth, all pretext of ignorance is taken from them, that they had the law given them, it was neere at hand, they need not ſeeke farre for it. 3 Or rather this, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, is underſtood of the word of faith: directly ſetting downe a difference betweene the law of works, which requireth doing, and the law of faith, which requireth of us onely beleeving in Chriſt, who hath performed the law for us. So Oecumenius upon that place to the Romans: Brevis ſalus nihil indigens externis laboribus: A compendious ſalvation not ſtanding in need of externall works. And their owne Lyranus, Oſtenditur juſtitiæ per fidem Chriſti facilitas; the eaſineſſe of juſtice by faith in Chriſt is ſhewed; they therefore verie unskilfully apply that to the law of works, which the Apoſtle referreth unto faith.

The Proteſtants.

THat no mortall man is able to keepe the Law of God perfectly in this life, it may bee thus proved.

1. Act.15.10.

Argum. 1. S. Peter ſaith, Act. 15.10. Why tempt yee God, to lay a yoke on the diſciples necks, which neither our fathers nor we were able to beare: Ergo, the Law is an importable burthen, and ſo impoſſible to be kept.

2. Rom.7.18.

Againe, S. Paul ſaith, Rom. 7.18. To will is preſent with me, but I finde no meanes to performe that is good: Ergo, Paul could not keepe the Law.

Bellar. Saint Peter ſpeaketh of the ceremoniall law, which being added to the morall law, made it importable; but now the ceremoniall being aboliſhed, the morall law is portable, cap. 14. reſp. ad loc. 1.

1. Act.15.11.

Contra. 1. Though the Apoſtle in that place treat chiefly of the ceremoniall, yet the reaſon is generall: We beleeve through the grace of the Lord Ieſus to be ſaved. Beleefe is oppoſed not onely to the ceremoniall, but morall law alſo: wherefore ſeeing that is made eaſie and portable by faith, which otherwiſe is importable, it followeth that both the ceremoniall and morall are in themſelves importable. 2 The Apoſtle generally ſpeaking of the whole Law, ſaith it was impoſſible, Rom. 8.3.

2. Rom.7.7,10.

Bellarm. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the act of concupiſcence, which is no ſin, reſponſ. ad object. 3.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle ſheweth the contrarie: that both it is a ſin to luſt, Rom. 7.7. I know not ſin, but by the law; for I had not knowne luſt, except the law had ſaid, thou ſhalt not luſt: Ergo, it is ſin to luſt. 2 He confeſſeth in direct words alſo, that this ſin dwelleth in him, verſ. 10.

Galat 3.10,12.

Argum. 2. Galath. 3.10. As many as are under the works of the law, are under the curſe: for it is written, curſed is everie one that continueth not in all things which are written in the booke of the law: The Apoſtle reaſoneth thus: who ſo keepeth not the Law in all points, ſtandeth accurſed: but no man is able to keepe it: Ergo, everie man is under the curſe.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that they are accurſed which think to keepe the law by their owne ſtrength, without grace, which indeed it is impoſſible to doe, but poſſible by grace: reſp. ad loc. 2.

Contra. Nay the Apoſtle ſheweth, that it is poſſible no way to keepe the law perfectly: for if man by grace might performe the law, he might deliver himſelfe by grace from the curſe: but now are we redeemed only from the curſe by Chriſt, who was made a curſe for us, verſ. 13. Ergo, the law by no man can be performed. 2 *The Law is not of faith, verſ.*12. But if by faith and grace the Law could be kept, then the Law ſhould be of faith.

Argum. 3. If the righteous man doth keepe the Law, then is hee without ſin: for where there is no tranſgreſſion of the Law, there is no ſin: but no man is without ſin, In many things wee offend all. If we ſay we have no ſin, we deceive our ſelves: Ergo, no man can keepe the Law.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the veniall ſinnes which juſt men commit, are not directly againſt the law, but præter legem, beſide the law: and therefore they may keepe the law, and yet have veniall ſinnes.

Contra. Firſt, Saint Iohn ſaith, Sinne is the tranſgreſſion of the law, and whoſoever committeth ſinne tranſgreſſeth the law: but a veniall or ſmall offence is ſinne: Ergo, a tranſgreſſion: and where the law is tranſgreſſed it is not kept. Secondly, S. Iames ſaith, Whoſoever ſhall keepe the whole law, and yet faile in one point, he is guiltie of all. But hee that committeth veniall ſinnes, faileth in ſome point, hee doth ſomewhat (præter legem) beſide the law: Ergo, they are guiltie of the whole, and ſo tranſgreſſe contra legem, againſt the law: and ſo this diſtinction of ſinnes beſide, and againſt the law, is found nothing worth.

Iames 2,10.

1 Auguſtine thus writeth of this matter againſt the Pelagians: Illud quod dicunt ſine ullo peccato aliquos homines vixiſſe in hoc ſeculo, vel vivere, optandum eſt ut fiat, conandum eſt ut fiat, ſupplicandum eſt ut fiat, non tamen, quaſi factum fuerit, confidendum: That which they ſay, that ſome may and have lived here without ſin, we muſt endevour and pray that it may be ſo, not preſume that it hath beene done: *De peccator. merit. & remiſſ. contr. Pelag. lib.*3. *cap.*13.

*Concil. Milevitan. c.*6. Placuit, quod aiit S. Iohannes, ſi dixerimus, quod peccatum non habemus, nos ipſos ſeducimus, quiſquis ſic accipiendum putat, ut dicat propter humanitatem non oportere dici, nos non habere peccatum, non quia veritas eſt, anathema ſit: Whereas S. Iohn ſaith, if wee ſay wee have no ſin, we deceive our ſelves: if any man thinke that of curteſie and humanitie, wee ſay that we have no ſin, not becauſe it is ſo indeed, let him be accurſed, &c. But they which ſay they can keepe the law, conſequently affirme that they have no ſinne.

The Chriſtian Church of Æthiopia holdeth, Legem excepto Ieſu Chriſto nemo cuſtodire potuit: None except Chriſt can keepe the law: Zaga Zabo.

Damianus a Goes.

2 Iſychius ſaith: Chiſtum ideo incarnatum ut legem impleret: That Chriſt was therefore incarnate to fulfill the law, &c. then cannot man fulfill it, for then Chriſt needed not to have come.

Lib. 1. in 5. c. Levit.

3 Latter Confeſſ. of Helvetia, c.12. Neither could there ever, nor at this day can any fleſh ſatisfie the law of God, and fulfill it, by reaſon of the weakneſſe of our fleſh, which remaineth and ſticketh faſt in us, even to our laſt breath. Bohemia, cap.7. No wan can fully performe the commandements of God, neither can any be found, who doth not faile in any part thereof, and who is cleane without ſin, &c. Auſpurg, loc. of Faith. In this ſo great infirmitie and uncleanneſſe of nature, the Saints doe not ſatisfie the law of God, —their imperfect obedience doth not pleaſe God, as ſatisfying the law, but becauſe the perſons themſelves are reconciled, and made righteous through Chriſt, &c.

Sect.9 p.257.
Sect.9.pag.273.

4 Ferus, as hee is alleaged before: Lex impoſſibile onus eſt, quia non tantum exigit manum, ſed cor, &c. The law is an impoſſible burthen, for it requireth not onely the hand, but the heart: Secondly, it convinceth us to be ſinners, for we doe alwayes more againſt the law than for it, &c.

Commentar. in Act.15.fol.164.

See the teſtimony of the holy Martyrs: Patricke Hamelton Martyr ſaith, that the law biddeth us to doe that thing which is impoſſible, in as much as the keeping of the commandements which the law biddeth, is impoſſible, Fox, pag.976.

Maſter Tyndall holy Martyr: The law when it commandeth thou ſhalt not luſt, giveth thee not power ſo to doe, but damneth thee, becauſe thou canſt not ſo doe: If thou wilt therefore be at peace with God, then muſt thou turne to the promiſes of the Goſpell: Fox, pag.1247.

An Appendix of the diviſion of the Law.

The Papiſts.

THe Maſter of the Sentences, whom the reſt doe follow, maketh but three commandements in the firſt table, joyning in one the firſt and the ſecond: *lib.*3. *diſt.*37. liter. b. and hee divideth the ſecond table into ſeven, making two of the laſt commandement: this to be the ſixth, Thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbours wife: that which followeth, Thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbours houſe, nor his ſervant, &c. to bee the ſeventh and the laſt: *lib.*3. *diſt.*40. liter. a. This device the Papiſts ſucceeding have the more willingly embraced, that the ſecond commandement, which doth pinch them verie ſore, might be left out altogether, which ſome of them have moſt impiouſly attempted. And Catharinus a great popiſh writer is directly of this judgement, mandatum ſecundum fuiſſe temporale, that the ſecond commandement was but temporall, to continue for a time: Opuſcul. de imaginib. For this their device, reaſons out of Scripture they have none.

64. Error.

Our Doway Doctors doe thus help out the matter: 1 They ſay the firſt commandement cannot be divided, becauſe to make a picture to the end to adore it as God, were in deed to have a ſtrange God. 2 The laſt commandement they would have to be two, becauſe the deſire and internall con-ſent to adulterie and theft differ as much altogether, as the externall acts of the ſame ſinnes, &c.

Contra. 1. Though everie picture adored as God bee a ſtrange god, yet there may bee a worſhip of a ſtrange god without a picture: and ſo Lyranus confeſſeth. Thus ſome of their Doctors make this difference betweene this precept and the next, that here is forbidden ſuch worſhip of ſtrange gods, as is done without an image, as Varro ſaith, the Romans did worſhip their gods a long time without any image: and ſome thinke, that the idols of ſuch things as are fained, and have no exiſtence in nature are here forbidden, as to make an image with a mans body and a rams head, as they did of Iupiter, and imagined him ſo to be. And further, they which worſhipped the Sun and Moone, and bruit beaſts, as the Ægyptians did, did not adore images, but the things themſelves: all theſe kindes of idolatries fall not under this prohibition, Thou ſhalt not make unto thy ſelfe any graven image; wherefore all this cannot be one Commandement.

Rom.7.8. Exod.20.17. Deut.5.21. 2 The laſt Commandement is but one: 1 S. Paul calleth it ἐντολὴ, a Commandement in the ſingular number. 2 In one place, Thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbours wife is put firſt: in another, Thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbours wife: If they were two Commandements, it ſhould bee uncertaine in what order to place them. 3 Neither doe the thoughts of coveting differ as much as the acts: for then there ſhould bee other Commandements alſo of not coveting to kill, to diſhonour parents, to beare falſe witneſſe.

The Proteſtants.

THis diviſion of the Law, to joyne the firſt and the ſecond Commandement in one, and ſo to make two of the laſt; we ſhew it to be contrarie to the Scripture, to reaſon and authoritie.

Marke 10.19. First, our Saviour Chriſt maketh but ſix Commandements in the ſecond table: where in ſtead of the laſt, Thou ſhalt not covet, is put, μὴ ἀποστερήσῃς, Thou ſhalt hurt no man, no not ſo much as by thought or deſire to covet any thing of his.

Rom.7.8. Againe, S. Paul calleth the Law forbidding to luſt, ἐντολὴν, a Commandement in the ſingular number, not Commandements.

Secondly, reaſon alſo giveth, that this Commandement, Thou ſhalt not covet, ſhould bee but one: firſt, divers commandements have their divers acts which are forbidden, as to ſteale, to kill, to commit adulterie: but theſe two ſuppoſed lawes have but one action, which is to covet. Secondly, the concluſion after the particular induction, nor any thing that is his, ſheweth, that all the particulars before going belong unto the ſame charge and commandement.

Thirdly, 1 Origen miſliketh this diviſion thus writing, in 8. Exod. Hæc omnia nonnulli putant ſimul unum eſſe mandatum, quod ſi ita putetur, non complebitur decem numerus mandatorum: Some thinke all theſe to be one commandement: which if it be ſo, how ſhall the number of ten commandements be fulfilled? Therefore this is the firſt commandement, Thou ſhalt have no other Gods, &c. The ſecond, Thou ſhalt make no idoll, &c.

Ambroſ. Conſtat primum eſſe mandatum, &c. It is evident this is the firſt commandement, Thou ſhalt have no other Gods, &c. then, Thou ſhalt make no image, &c. the third, Thou ſhalt not take the name, &c. in 5. ad Epheſ.

Com. in 7. ad Roman. v.7. 2 Theophylact, As the Apoſtle calleth the precept, thou ſhalt not luſt, ἐντολὴ, a commandement in the ſingular number, ſo he ſaith in the ſame number, Lex ad hoc homines inſtruebat, ut à concupiſcendo abigeret, The Law inſtructed men, to drive them from coveting, &c.

[a] Locor. commun. claſ.2. cap.4. [b] Lib.2. inſtit. cap.8. ſect.12. [c] Commentar. Exod. cap.20. 3 Our beſt Proteſtant writers doe divide the firſt table into foure commandements, and the ſecond into ſix: as Peter [a] Martyr, Maſter [b] Calvin, [c] Buchanus with others.

4 Leodienſ. epiſt. cont. Paſcal. 2. Tertium decalogi, &c. The third precept, Thou ſhalt not take in vaine, &c.

The third part, of the works of Supererogation.

The Papiſts.

95. Error. THey teach that it is not onely poſſible for men to keepe the Law of God in this life, but to doe more than is preſcribed or commanded: and that men of their abundance may allot unto others ſuch works of ſupererogation, Rhemiſt. 1 *Cor.*9. *ſect.*6. *ex Tileman. loc.*3. *err.*16.

Argum. 2 *Cor.*8. *ſect.*3. As your abundance now ſupplyeth their want, their abundance alſo may ſupply your want, that there may be equalitie. Saints, or other vertuous perſons may in meaſure and proportion of other mens deſervings, allot unto them as well the ſupererogation of their ſpirituall works, as thoſe that abound in worldly goods may give almes of their ſuperfluities to them which are in neceſſitie, Rhemiſt. totid. verbis.

Anſw. 1. This place proveth no communication of merits of one to another: but that as everie one aboundeth in the gifts and graces of God, ſo they ought to communicate the uſe thereof one to anothers benefit: for no man meriteth himſelfe by any worke of his: therefore he cannot communicate that to another, which he hath not himſelfe. Here alſo mention is made of mutuall communication, for one to ſupply anothers want: but he that doth ſupererogate to another of the abundance of his good works, hath no need to have his wants ſupplyed by another mans deſervings: therefore there is no mutuall communicating betweene them, which is the thing whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in this place.

The Proteſtants.

Arg. THat no man is holpen by another mans deſervings, but all that a man can doe is little enough and not ſufficient for himſelfe; it is plaine in the Goſpell: where our Saviour ſaith, That when we have done all that is commanded, we are unprofitable ſervants, and did no more than was our dutie: Ergo, a man cannot doe more than his dutie. Luk.17.10.

Hierome upon this place thus concludeth: Si inutilis eſt, qui fecit omnia, quid de illo dicendum eſt, qui explere non potuit: If he be an unprofitable ſervant which did all, what ſhall be ſaid of him which could not fulfill them? ad Cteſiphont.

Saint Ambroſe upon the ſame words writeth thus; Ergo, & cum fecerimus quod nobis imperatum eſt, &c. Therefore when we have done that which is commanded us, we muſt not ſtraight be exalted, but humble our ſelves: Quia non ſtatim, ſi aliquid fecerimus, implevimus omnia ſervitutis obſequia, quis tanta ſalutis beneficia digno poſſit aquare ſervitio? quis poteſt ſolvere, quod accepit? Becauſe not ſtraight wayes, if we have done any thing, we have performed all the duties of our ſervice, who can be equall in his ſervice to ſo great benefit of ſalvation? who can pay that which he hath received? Serm. 16. in Pſal. 119. Ergo, no man can doe more than he is bound to doe.

We may alſo remember the parable of the Virgins, Matth. 25. where the five wiſe refuſe to give of their oyle to the five fooliſh: leſt (ſay they) there will not be enough for us and you. No man therefore hath attained to ſuch a perfection of goodneſſe, that he is able to ſpare ought for his brother, but ſhall have need thereof himſelfe.

1 Auguſtine writing upon this parable ſaith: Vnuſquiſque pro ſe rationem reddet, nec alieno teſtimonio quicquam adjuvatur, apud Deum: -- & vix ſibi quiſque ſufficit, ut ſibi teſtimonium perhibeat conſcientia ſua: Everie man ſhall give account for himſelfe, neither is a man releeved by anothers teſtimony before God: -- the teſtimony of a mans conſcience is hardly ſufficient for himſelfe: de verb. Domini ſerm. 22. See more of this matter: Controverſ. 14. quaſt. 7. part. 4. & quaſt. 8. part. 3. artic. 2.

Tertullian hereof alſo thus writeth, lib. de Pudicit. Sufficiat martyri propria delicta purgaſſe, ingrati, vel ſuperbi eſt in alios ſpargere, quod ipſe pro magno fuerit conſecutus: ecquis alienam mortem ſua morte ſolvit, niſi ſolus filius Dei? Let it ſuffice a Martyr to have purged his owne ſin, it is the part of an unthankfull or proud man, to ſcatter upon others that which he hath obtained for a great benefit: doth any man by his death looſe anothers death, but onely the Son of God?

2 Chryſoſtome (as he is alleaged by Ieremy Patriarch of Conſtantinople) ſaith: Non quiſquam mortalium -- poteſt ante Deum conſiſtere. No mortall man is able to ſtand before God, &c. if a mans righteouſneſſe ſuffice not for himſelfe, much leſſe hath he to impart unto another. Cenſor. oriental. cap. 6.

3 Confeſſ. of Sweveland, artic. 11. The Saints are farre off from aſcribing their ſalvation to their owne merits, how therefore ſhould they preſume to help any other with their merits. Auſpurg, artic. 6. They have feined (ſpeaking of Monks) that they doe ſo ſatisfie Gods commandements, that they can doe ſomewhat more, and hereupon roſe that horrible error of the works of ſupererogation, &c. Harm. ſect. 2. pag. 49. Harm. ſect. 18. pag. 563.

4 Eſpenc. a learned Papiſt thus confeſſeth: Quo die multa nimirum miſericordia opus erit omnibus Sanctis: In which day of the Lord all the Saints ſhall have great need of mercie: in 2 Tim. 4. 15. And againe hee thus alleageth out of Auguſtines Sentences, collected by Proſper. ſent. 234. Nemo fidelium, quamvis multum profecerit, dicat, ſufficit mihi: Let none of the Saints, though he have well profited, ſay, it ſufficeth me: p. 126. If no man hath ſufficient for himſelfe, how can he ſupererogate to others?

The fourth part, Whether God be ſerved for hope of reward, or feare of puniſhment.

The Papiſts.

MEn ought to doe good in reſpect and for reward and recompence in Heaven for their good works: the Apoſtle ſaith of Moſes, Heb. 11. 26. He had reſpect to the recompence of reward, Rhemiſt. ibid. 66 Error. Heb. 11. 26.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, we deny that we ought to make account of Heaven to be given as a juſt recompence deſerved by our works: for life eternall, as the Apoſtle ſaith, is the free gift of God, Rom. 6. 23. Secondly, wee grant that men in their well doing ought to have reſpect to the reward, but not chiefly or principally: but the reſpect of Gods glorie and their owne dutie ought to move them more. Rom. 6. 23.

Argum. Taſte and ſee how gracious the Lord is: Wee ought as dutifull children to yeeld obedience to the Lord, and delight in him, even becauſe of that pleaſant taſte, comfort and joy, which wee feele in his goodnes toward us. Auguſtine ſaith well, Deus non propterea ſe amari vult, quia dat aliquid Pſalm. 34. 8. In Pſalm 52.

præter ſe, ſed quia dat ſe: God would not be beloved of us, becauſe he giveth or promiſeth any thing beſide himſelfe, but becauſe he giveth himſelfe.

In 3. Levitic. Iſychius ſaith, Ita ſe quis debet diſponere, ut omne deſiderium & propoſitum cujuſlibet actionis & conſummationem Deo offerat, &c. Everie one muſt ſo diſpoſe of himſelfe, that he offer unto God the deſire and purpoſe of everie action, and the conſummation thereof, &c. the glorie then of God, not the hope of our reward muſt be the chiefe end of our actions.

Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c. 7. Wee muſt exerciſe our ſelves in good works—for the reward of eternall life,—and that by faith wee may have a more eaſie entrance to theſe rewards, &c. Wee may looke then to the reward, but not as the reward of our merits, but given us by grace, and apprehended by faith.

Lib. 2. de triplice homin. officio, c. 18. Their owne Doway Doctor Weſton ſaith, No worke of a righteous man, Habere valorem condignum præmio cœleſti, hath a valour worthy of the heavenly reward, but all the valour is placed, in Dei acceptatione, in the acceptance of God, &c. then it will follow, that Heaven muſt not be expected as a reward due unto our works.

Ambroſe; Propoſitum piæ mentis mercedem non expetit, ſed pro mercede habet boni facti conſcientiam & juſti operis effectum: The purpoſe of a godly minde doth deſire no reward, but in ſtead of a reward hath the conſcience of a good fact, and the effect of a righteous worke, Lib. 1. de Abram. c. 8.

Maſter Tyndall holy Martyr ſaith: Everie Chriſtian man muſt keepe Gods Commandements by love, and not by hope, to get for his ſervice everlaſting life, pag. 1255. artic. 10. Againe, they that for feare of Hell, or the joyes of Heaven doe their dutie, doe a conſtrained ſervice which God will not have: ſuch as are hyred men and waged ſervants, not children, pag. 1255. col. 2.

The Papiſts.

47. Error. 2. EVen in right Chriſtian godly men there remaineth doubt, miſtruſt, feare of hell and damnation: and the feare of Gods judgements cauſeth juſt men to humble themſelves, leſt they ſhould be damned, And ſo S. Paul ſaith, Worke out your ſalvation with feare and trembling, Philip. 2. Rhemiſt. 1. Iohn 4. ſect. 6.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. WE acknowledge a dutifull reverence and feare of God alwayes remaining in the godly: but it is farre from that ſervile and flaviſh feare, which is cauſed only by the remembrance of hell fire and eternall judgement. In Pſal. 127. Auguſtine doth thus reſemble the matter: The chaſte wife (ſaith he) and the adulterous doe both feare their husbands: ſed caſta timet ne diſcedat vir; adultera, ne veniat: But the chaſte wife is afraid leſt her husband ſhould depart: the adulterous is afraid leſt he ſhould come, &c. Such a feare as is in the chaſte wife, wee grant to be in the children of God, but not the other.

2 We alſo confeſſe, that the horror of hell is profitable to make a way and entrance for the calling of worldly and hard hearted men, as the needle or briſtle (as Auguſtine ſaith) maketh a way for the threed; but in a man already called, this feare is expelled by love, as the Apoſtle ſaith: 1 Iohn 4. 18. for we muſt be of thoſe that love the appearing of Chriſt, 2 Tim. 4. 8. not of that number which feare it, and wiſh it were prolonged.

Auguſt. Si poſſumus efficere, fratres, ut dies judicii non veniret, puto, quia nec ſic erat, male vivendum: If wee could bring it about, that the day of judgement ſhould not come at all, we ought not for all that to live ill, &c. His meaning is, that wee ought not to live well onely for feare of Gods judgements.

Origen tract. 33. in Matth. upon theſe words, Matth. 25. 24. I know thou waſt an hard man, and therefore was afraid: Nec eſt bonus hujuſmodi timor, nec liberat nos talis timor à tenebris exterioribus: This feare is not good, neither delivereth us from utter darkneſſe.

Lib. 1. de fid. 2 Theodoret ſaith, Fides eſt inſita credentium animis citra ambiguitatem aliquam diſpoſitio: Faith is a diſpoſition ſetled in the mindes of beleevers without all ambiguitie, &c. but where is feare, there is doubtfulneſſe and ambiguitie.

Harm. ſect. 17. pag. 519. 2 Confeſſ. of Bohemia: Their minde (i. of the faithfull) is ſtirred up to performe theſe things, rather of love, than of any debt to any compulſion, &c.

4 Peter Lombard. Inimicus eſt juſtitiæ, qui pœnæ timore non peccat: He is an enemie to juſtice, that ſinneth not for feare of puniſhment, lib. 3. diſt. 36. liter. a.

Maſter Tyndall holy Martyr: They are the people of Chriſt, which willingly doe heare and follow him, not for feare of the Law, but onely enticed and lead with a gracious libertie and faithfull love, not doing any thing becauſe it is commanded, but becauſe it is pleaſant and acceptable to them, though it were not commanded, Fox, pag. 1253. col. 2.

The ſecond generall Queſtion of good works.

The firſt Part of the neceſsity of good works.

The Papiſts.

THeir opinion is, that good works are not onely neceſſary to ſalvation, neceſsitate præſentiæ, becauſe they muſt neceſſarily be preſent, and we cannot be without them: but neceſsitate efficientiæ, they are neceſſary, as efficient cauſes together with faith, of our ſalvation. 68. Error.

Argum. Work out your ſalvation with feare, and trembling: Our light affliction cauſeth unto us a more excellent weight of glory: Ergo, our works and ſufferings are the cauſe of ſalvation, Bellarm. lib. 6. de juſtificat. c. 7. Phil. 2. 12. 2 Cor. 4. 17.

Anſw. 1. To the firſt place we ſay, that the Apoſtle there ſaith none other thing, than his fellow Apoſtle S. Peter: Make your election ſure: to work out our ſalvation, and to make our election ſure by good works, is all one, not that our ſalvation or election is thereby cauſed before God: but good works doe ſerve to aſſure our owne conſcience of our ſalvation, and to perfect or finiſh it to our ſelves. And againe it followeth in the next verſe: For it is God which worketh in you both the will and the deed, verſ. 13. So then man worketh, but it is God, that giveth him grace to work: as Auguſtine ſaith upon theſe words, without me you can doe nothing: Ioan. 15. 5. Sive parum, ſive multum, ſine illo fieri non poteſt, ſine quo nihil fieri poteſt: whether it be little or much, nothing can be done without him, without whom nothing can be done, tract. 81. in Ioan. 2 Pet. 1. 10, 13.

2 Affliction is not the cauſe of ſalvation, for then the Apoſtle ſhould be contrary to himſelfe, I count that the afflictions, of this preſent time are not worthy the glory, &c. But it is onely the way, that bringeth us to heaven, The gate is narrow, and the way ſtrait, that leadeth to life. And Bernard (well ſaith) Sunt via regni, non cauſa regnandi: Good workes are the way to the kingdome, not the cauſe of the kingdome. Rom. 8. 18. Matth. 7. 14.

The Proteſtants.

A Neceſsity of good works we grant, as lively teſtimonies of our faith, without the which there is neither faith nor life: Every tree, that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewne downe, &c. And Saint Iames ſaith, Shew me thy faith, out of thy works: Bernard alſo writeth: Credis in Chriſtum? fac Chriſti opera, ut vivat fides tua: Doeſt thou beleeve in Chriſt? doe Chriſts works, that thy faith may live: In Paſchal. ſer. 2. ſuch a neceſsity of works we grant, but not as the cauſe and efficient of ſalvation. Matth. 7. 19. Iam. 2. 18.

Argum. A man is juſtified by faith, without the works of the law: I live by the faith of the Son of God; No man is juſtified by the law, and the law is not of faith: Ergo, faith onely is neceſſary to our juſtification: works, as being of the law, are not herein joyned with faith, for then the law were of faith: But they follow after as fruits of our juſtification. Rom. 3. 28. Galath. 2. 20. Galath. 3. 11.

1 Chryſoſtome thus ſaith upon theſe words of our Saviour, Iohn 6. This is the work of God that ye beleeve, &c. Ye ſee how he calleth faith the work of God: therefore as ſoone as thou beleeveſt, thou art adorned with good works, not that workes are wanting, ſed per ſeipſam fides eſt plena operibus, but faith by it ſelfe is full of works, &c. Ieremie Patriark agreeth, While we praiſe good works, my meaning is, not that we repoſe our whole confidence therein, for therein we ſhould much offend: Sed ita a nobis coli volumus, ut quæ ad ſalutem neceſſaria ſunt, & quæ fidem natura ſua conſequantur, &c. But I would have them ſo imbraced, as ſuch as are neceſſary to ſalvation, and doe of their owne nature follow faith, &c. Works then are neceſſary as fruits and teſtimonies of faith, not otherwiſe. Iohn 6. 2, 9. Serm. de fid. & leg. natur. Cenſor. oriental. c. 6.

2 Cyrill of Alexandria ſaith, Opera fidei congruentia facere, &c. To doe works agreeable to faith, belongeth onely to them that love God. Lib. 9. in Ioann. c. 44.

3 Confeſſ. of Helvetia, c. 16. Thoſe ſame works that are agreeable to Gods will muſt be done, not to the end to merit eternall life by them; for life everlaſting, as the Apoſtle ſaith, is the gift of God—but to the glorie of God, but to commend and ſet forth our calling, &c. Harm. ſect. 9. pag. 246.

4 Synod. Moguntin. cap. 8. Opera juſtificatorum gratiæ Dei effectus ſunt, & movente & adjuvante ſpiritu ſancto fiunt: The works of thoſe that are juſtified, are the effects or fruits of grace, and are wrought by the motion of the ſpirit.—Men then are firſt juſtified by grace, and after their juſtification, good works are wrought.

The Martyrs have ſealed this truth: Patrick Hamilton: No man is juſtified by the deeds of the law, but by the faith of Ieſus, Fox pag. 978. Catherine Hamilton put to death, for ſaying, I know perfectly, that no workes can ſave me, but only the workes of Chriſt my Lord and Saviour.

The

The ſecond Part, Of the efficacie of workes, whether wee are thereby juſtified.

69. Error.

THat a man by good workes is juſtified, and made more juſt, they think to be very manifeſt and plaine out of Scripture: wherein, as it ſhall appeare, they are greatly deceived, and do no leſſe deceive others ſeduced by them.

Iam.2.21,25.

Argum. 1. Of all others, which may ſeeme to make for them, they moſt of all urge that of S. James: Was not Abraham our father juſtified through works? verſ. 25. Likewiſe was Rahab the harlot juſtified through works: Ergo, we are juſtified by our works, Bellarm. cap. 18.

Rom.3.28.

Anſw. S. James in ſaying we are juſtified by works, meaneth not that juſtification whereby we are made juſt before God, for then he ſhould be contrary to S. Paul, who ſaith, we are juſtified without works. But by being juſtified he underſtandeth nothing elſe, but to be declared juſt, as well before men, as in the ſight of God: which declaration is teſtified and ſhewed forth by our works proceeding of faith.

Bellarmine contrariwiſe laboureth to prove, that the word cannot be ſo taken here: for the Apoſtle joyneth works and faith together, verſ. 22. The faith wrought with his works, and through the works the faith was made perfect: works and faith doe then work together; as one worketh, ſo doth the other, they juſtifie both alike; but faith juſtifieth not by way of declaration, but verily, and indeed, Ergo.

De ſpiritu & liter. cap. 26.
Iam.2.18.

Contra. Firſt, it followeth not, becauſe faith worketh with works, that therefore they work both alike: it is one thing for faith to juſtifie with works, another to juſtifie as works: Secondly, as faith doth juſtifie us before God, ſo alſo it juſtifieth before men, that is, faith ſerveth alſo for the declaration of our juſtification, in that it cauſeth good works, and theſe good works doe teſtifie of faith, that it is lively, and perfect, not a dead faith. Thirdly, that to juſtifie is here taken onely for the declaration, or teſtification of our faith, it thus appeareth: firſt, that this word is ſo uſed in Scripture, it is plaine, that thou mayeſt be juſtified in thy words: that is knowne, or declared to be juſt. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Iuſtificabuntur, id eſt, juſti habebuntur, they ſhall be juſtified, that is, counted juſt, as we alſo ſay, Sanctificetur nomen tuum, id eſt, ſanctum habeatur, let thy name be hallowed, that is, acknowledged to be holy, Secondly, the Apoſtle himſelfe ſaith, verſ. 18. Shew me thy faith out of thy works, &c. he ſpeaketh onely of the outward ſhewing and teſtification of faith. Thirdly, if we take juſtification properly, as S. Paul uſeth the word, then ſhould S. James be contrary to S. Paul, who ſaith, we are juſtified by faith without works.

Lib.4. in cap. 4. ad Roman.

Origene alſo thus expoundeth this text: Indicium eſt fidei vera ubi non delinquitur,— It is a ſigne of true faith, where is no offence, &c. Abraham is ſaid to be juſtified by works, quia certum eſt eum qui vere credit, opus fidei & juſtitia operari, becauſe it is certaine, that he which beleeveth, doth work the work of faith and juſtice, and ſo is capable of both glories, of that which is in ſecret with God, and open before man, &c.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that S. Paul ſpeaketh of the firſt juſtification, which is, without works; S. James of the ſecond juſtification, whereby a man is made more juſt, and this is cauſed by good works.

Rom.8.30.

Contra. Firſt, we deny any ſuch difference of juſtification; the Scripture ſpeaketh but of one juſtification, Whom hee juſtified, them alſo hee glorified: unleſſe you will have another juſtification to come after our glorification: and verſe 7. Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiven: the juſtification in remiſſion of ſinnes, doth make a man bleſſed: Ergo, it is the onely ſufficient juſtification.

Secondly, if faith doe juſtifie as it is a work, by the merit and worthineſſe thereof, as it is by our adverſaries affirmed, and not inſtrumentally only by apprehending Chriſt, then neither ſhall their firſt juſtification be without works, becauſe it is not without faith.

Geneſ.15.6.

Thirdly, S. Paul and S. James ſpeak both of one and the ſelfe-ſame juſtification before God: for both of them alleage the ſame example of Abraham, both citing the ſame teſtimony of Scripture: Abraham beleeved God, and it was counted unto him for righteouſneſſe: Wherefore they bringing in the ſame example, and uſing the ſame words, muſt needs apply them to the ſame end. Rahab alſo is brought in an example of the very firſt juſtification, Rahab the harlot was juſtified: ſhe was an harlot only before her firſt juſtification: ſo then it will follow, that even the firſt juſtification is by works, if they will have S. James to underſtand juſtification as S. Paul doth.

Argum. 2. Bellarmine for juſtification by works further oppoſeth theſe places of Scripture.

1. Rom.6.19.

1 Rom. 6. 19. As you have given your members ſervants to uncleanneſſe, and iniquity to commit iniquity, ſo now give your members ſervants to juſtice or righteouſneſſe to ſanctification: by ſanctification here juſtification is ſignified, being oppoſed to iniquity.

2. 2 Cor.7.1.

2 2 Cor. 7. 1. Having theſe promiſes, let us cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſſe of the fleſh and ſpirit, and grow up unto ſanctification in the feare of the Lord: we muſt grow up every day to more juſtice and ſanctification.

3 2 Cor.

3 2 Cor 9.10. He will multiply your ſeed, and increaſe the fruits of your juſtice: by almes then our juſtice is increaſed. 2 Cor.9.10.

4 Iohn 14. 23. If any man love me, he will keepe my word, and my father will love him: this keeping of the commandements doth procure the love of God, and conſequently juſtification. 4. Iohn.14.23.

5 Apocal. 22. 11. He that is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill, he that is juſt, juſtificetur adhuc, let him be juſtified ſtill. Ergo, by good works a man hath increaſe of juſtification. 5. Apocal. 22.11.

1 Anſw. Firſt, ſanctification, ἁγιασμὸς, is the fruit of juſtice or righteouſneſſe by faith: as the Apoſtle ſaith, you have your fruit unto holineſſe or ſanctification: this place onely ſheweth, that we muſt be the ſervants of the juſtice of faith, to bring forth fruits of ſanctification. Secondly, ἀνομία, iniquity, is a generall name, both ſignifying the depravation and uncleanneſſe of our nature, as here it is joyned with it, as alſo it betokeneth actuall ſin, for a S. Iohn ſaith, ἁμαρτία is ἀνομία: ſin is iniquity, or tranſgreſſion of the law, ſo that the word iniquity or tranſgreſſion, may very well anſwer unto juſtice and ſanctification, the tree and the fruit. 1. Rom.6.22. 1 Iohn.3.4.

2 We deny not, but that we muſt continually grow up and increaſe in the works of ſanctification, which the Apoſtle here affirmeth; but juſtification is one thing, ſanctification another: we muſt firſt be juſtified by faith in the promiſes of Chriſt; of the which promiſes alſo the Apoſtle here maketh mention; then followeth as an effect and fruit therof, our ſanctification and holineſſe with the works thereof. 2.

3 Firſt, by juſtice here either the Apoſtle underſtandeth not the juſtice of faith, wherewith we are juſtified before God; but the juſtice wrought in us by faith, which they call inherent or ſecond juſtice: as Matth. 6.1. Doe not your juſtice before men, to be ſeene of them: but the inward juſtice of faith cannot be ſeene of men: and verſe 2. by juſtice, our Saviour expoundeth almes. Secondly, or elſe, if we underſtand the true juſtice of faith: the Apoſtle ſaith not, that juſtice it ſelfe, but the fruits thereof are increaſed, which we deny not. Thirdly, though the juſtice of faith before God be not increaſed, yet we may increaſe in the aſſurance thereof unto our ſelves. 3. Matth.6.1.2.

4 Our Saviour expoundeth himſelfe, verſ. 21. I will love him, and ſhew my ſelfe unto him: this love then of God in Chriſt, is not procured by good works, but only ſhewed, manifeſted and aſſured, as Saint Peter ſaith, 2 Pet. 1.10. Make your calling and election ſure by good works. 4. Iohn 14.21. 2 Pet.1.10.

5 Firſt, it is manifeſt by the oppoſition, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of that juſtice which is wrought in us by faith, which they call the ſecond juſtice: for he had ſaid before: ὁ ἀδικῶν he that is unjuſt or injurious, or as their owne tranſlation readeth, qui nocet, he that is hurtfull, let him be hurtfull ſtill: as this is underſtood not of originall, but externall injuſtice; ſo the clauſe following, ὁ δίκαιος, he that is juſt, let him be more juſtified, muſt be referred to the increaſe of juſtice. Secondly, unleſſe we will underſtand it of the aſſurance of juſtification to our ſelves, wherein as I ſaid before wee may increaſe: but what is this to juſtification by works, whereof there is not one ſyllable mentioned? 5.

The Proteſtants.

THat good works, although they be notable teſtimonies of our faith, yet help not to juſtifie us before God: the Scripture thus witneſſeth.

Argum. 1. Rom. 4.7. Bleſſed are thoſe whoſe iniquities are forgiven; our bleſſedneſſe is not cauſed by our works, but by the free remiſſion of our ſins in Chriſt. 1 Rom.4.7.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Saint Paul ſpeaketh of the firſt juſtification, or the beginning of juſtification.

Contra. 1. He ſpeaketh of that juſtification, which bleſſedneſſe followeth, which is not the beginning, but the very perfection of our juſtification: we ſee heaven is promiſed at the firſt remiſſion of our ſins, what need then any other juſtification? As Auguſtine ſaith, Donando delicta fecit ſe debitorem corona, by forgiving of our ſins, he hath made himſelfe a debtor of the crowne. 2 Againe, whereas man all his life long hath need of remiſſion of ſins, this juſtification, whereby all our ſins are remitted, is not the beginning onely, but the conſummation thereof, which extendeth it ſelfe thorowout our whole life. Wherefore good works are not given us to be juſtified thereby, but to be evident ſignes and witneſſes of our faith, to the glory of God: as Bernard ſaith, Sicut corporis hujus vitam ex corporis motu dignoſimus, ſic fidei vitam ex operibus bonis; As we diſcerne the life of the body by the motion, ſo faith by good works, In Paſchal. ſerm. 2.

Argum. 2. Pſalm. 143.2. Enter not into judgement with thy ſervant (ſaith the Prophet) for in thy ſight ſhall none that liveth be juſtified, Matth. 6. 12. Our Saviour teacheth every man, though never ſo juſt, to pray, forgive us our ſins, &c. Ergo, no man is juſt by his works. 2. Pſal.143.2. Matth.6.12.

Bellarm. 1. David deſireth not to be judged according to thoſe things which he had of himſelfe, whereby hee could not bee juſtified. 2 Or it is to be underſtood of veniall ſins. 3 Or hee ſaith, that in compariſon of God, who is perfectly juſt, no man can bee juſtified, Bellarm. cap. 20. reſp. ad loc. 2. 1.

Contra. 1. David ſpeaketh of himſelfe as Gods ſervant, and ſo in the ſtate of grace, not as under his naturall condition. 2 Doth hee think that God having forgiven unto his ſervants their greater ſins, will enter into judgement with them for ſmall offences, which hee calleth veniall? therefore 1.

David

Pſal.130.2. David underſtandeth all ſins whatſoever : as in the like place is evident, Pſal. 130.2. Si obſervaveris iniquitates, quis ſuſtinebit? If thou marke iniquities, who ſhall abide it? 3 He ſaith not, in compariſon of God, but in the ſight of God; and what other juſtification doe we ſpeak of, but before God? before men, we deny not, but by good works one may be juſtified, that is, knowne or declared ſo to be. Againe, he ſpeaketh of ſuch a juſtification, whereby Gods ſervants ſhall be delivered from judgement; which is not to be made juſt, as God is, or equall unto him; for then every man ſhould be judged or condemned : for ſuch juſtice the Angels have not, much leſſe men.

2 Bellarm. That Petition of the Lords prayer is to be underſtood only of veniall ſins, which are mixed with our good works, c.20.reſp.ad loc.5.

2 Contra. 1. The word is ὀφειλήματα, debts; we pray to have all our debts forgiven : but I truſt we are more indangered and indebted to God, by great ſins then ſmall. 2 S. Luke readeth ἁμαρτίας, ſins: and 1 Ioh 3.4. S. Iohn defineth, ἁμαρτία, ſin, to be ἀνομία, tranſgreſſion, 1 Iohn 3. 4. but great ſins are tranſgreſſions of the law more than veniall : Ergo, they are not excluded. 3 If good works are tempered with veniall ſins, how can they, being imperfect, make us juſt and perfect before God?

*Concil. Arauſican.can.*20. Multa in homine bona fiunt, quæ non facit homo nulla vera bona facit homo, quæ Deus non præſtat, ut faciat homo: Many good things are wrought in man, without man; but man doth no good things, which God doth not firſt give ſtrength to man to work and doe them, &c. A man then muſt firſt receive grace of God to work (which is given in his juſtification) and then he worketh: ſo that good works are the effect, not the cauſe of juſtification. See the ſeale of the Martyrs to this doctrine, *Part.*1. of this Queſtion.

Pſal n 130 4. Cenſur.oriental.cap.6. 1 Ieremie the Patriark thus alleageth Chryſoſtome to this purpoſe, upon theſe words of the Pſalme: With thee is mercy: Hoc eſt non in noſtris recte factis, ſed in tua bonitate ſitum eſt, ut tantam effugiamus damnationem: that is, It lieth not in our well done deeds, but in thy goodneſſe, that we eſcape ſo great damnation.

In cap.4. ad Roman. In 3. cap. ad Galat. 2 Primaſius ſaith, Impium per ſolam fidem juſtificat: He juſtifieth the wicked by faith alone, &c. Si gentes fide ſola non ſalvavit, nec nos, quia ex operibus, nemo juſtificabitur: if he did not ſave the Gentiles onely by faith, neither doth he ſave us : for by works ſhall none be juſtified.

Harm.ſect.9. 246. Sect 9 pag. 259. 3 Latter confeſſ. of Helvet. *c.*16. We teach with the Apoſtle, that a man is juſtified by faith in Chriſt, and not by any good works. French confeſſ. *artic.*22. We confeſſe, that the good works which we doe, by the direction of his ſpirit, are not ſo regarded of God, that we ſhould be juſtified thereby, becauſe we ſhould waver with a perpetuall doubting, &c. See alſo the confeſſ. of Belgia, *artic.*22.*pag.*261. Ausburg, *pag.*263. and the reſt of the reformed Churches agree.

In cap.20 Mat. In cap.11 epiſt. ad Roman. 4 Ferus: If thou deſire to have Gods favour and mercy, nullam meritorum tuorum mentionem facias, make no mention at all of thy merits. Faber. Stapulen. Non ex operibus ſalutem attingere poſſumus, ſed Dei electione & gratia: We doe not attaine ſalvation by our works, but by Gods election and grace.

*Decret.part.*2. *cauſ.*3. *qu.*7.*c.*5. Gregor. upon theſe words, Geneſ. 4. 4. The Lord had reſpect to Abel and his offering: firſt unto Abel, then to his offering : Ex qua re patenter oſtenditur, quia non offerens à muneribus, ſed munera ab offerente placuerunt: By the which it is evident, that not the offerer by his gift, but the gift becauſe of the offerer pleaſed : Ergo, Abel was not juſtified by his gift, but before his gift.

The third Part, Of the impediments of good works.

Firſt, VVhether the works of the righteous be perfect.

The Papiſts.

70. Error. THeir opinion is, that a juſt man in his good works doth not ſin ſo much as venially. *Concil. Triden. ſeſſ.6. can.*25. but that their works are truly juſt, without any ſpot or blemiſh of ſin, *Bellarmin. cap.*15.

Iob 1 22. Pſal.7.6. Argum. 1. Iob 1.22. *In all this did not Iob ſin, nor charge God fooliſhly, Pſal.*7.6. Judge me according to my righteouſneſſe : David would not have ſtood upon his righteouſneſſe before God, if it had beene defiled with ſin, *Bellarm.cap.*15.

Iob 9.30. Anſw. 1. Iob is ſaid as yet not to ſin, not that he was ſimply without ſin, but in reſpect of his ſin afterward committed with his mouth, in murmuring againſt God; he had not yet fallen into that great ſin to charge God fooliſhly : for otherwiſe Iob confeſſeth himſelfe, that if he ſhould waſh himſelfe moſt cleane, his owne clothes ſhould defile him, that is, even in his beſt works, God could finde ſufficient matter againſt him.

Pſal.133.2. Pſal.143.2. 2 The Prophet David doth not ſtand upon his innocencie or righteouſneſſe before God: for elſewhere he ſaith, If thou markeſt what is done amiſſe, who ſhall be able to abide it? and in thy ſight no man living ſhall be juſtified, But hee cleereth himſelfe for his upright and true dealing among men, a *verſ.*3.If I have done this thing,&c. his enemies accuſed him wrongfully,and perſecuted him without a cauſe,*Pſal.*25.3. Pſal.25.3.

Argum. 2. Theſe places are alſo produced for the perfection of Works.

1 Matth. 6.22. If thy eye be ſingle,all thy body is light: Luke 11.36. *If thy body be light, having no part dark: Ergo,*In good works there is no darkneſſe at all. Matth.6.22. Luke 11.36.

2 1 *Corinth.*3.12.*If any build upon this foundation,gold,ſilver: Ergo,*ſome works are as precious and perfect as gold. 1 Cor.3.12.

3 *Iam.*3.2.In many things we offend all: Ergo, in ſome things we offend not.

4 Pſal. 4.4.Tremble and ſin not; Iſay 1.16,17.Ceaſe to doe evill,learne to doe well: to what end are we thus exhorted to ſin,if we cannot chuſe but ſin in our good works? Iam.3.2. Pſal.4.4.

5 Act. 10.35. He that feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſſe, is accepted before him: but nothing can pleaſe God,but that which is truly good. Iſay 1.16,17. Act.10.35.

6 In divers places the Scripture calleth the works of the righteous,good works: as Matth. 5.16. that men *ſeeing your good works,&c. Bellarm.lib.*4.*de juſtificat.c.*15. Matth.5.16.

1. Contra. 1. The ſimple eye,ſignifieth not perfection,but integrity and ſingleneſſe of heart,without guile or diſſimulation: as Auguſtine very well diſtinguiſheth betweene rectum corde, & mundum corde: right in heart,and cleane in heart: rectus corde eſt,—ut recto curſu,id eſt,recta fide atq; intentione pervenire,ubi habitat mundus corde; He is right in heart,which endevoureth that with a right courſe,that is a right faith,and intention he may come thither,where dwelleth the cleane in heart, de perfect.juſtit. contr.Celeſtin. Secondly,the light having no darkeneſſe,is Faith,which wholly lighteneth the body: as Chriſt ſaith,He that is waſhed,is cleane every whit: this maketh not for the perfection of works. Thirdly,yet the light of faith,though conſidered in it ſelfe,it hath no darkneſſe;yet in the ſight of God,and conferred with his light,is full of darkneſſe: As Hierome well noteth upon theſe words, God is light, and in him is no darkneſſe: Oſtendit omnia aliorum lumina aliqua ſorde maculari; He ſheweth that all other lights are obſcured with ſome blemiſh. Ioh.13.10. 1 Ioh.1.5.

2. First, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of teachers, and of ſound or corrupt doctrine, which hee compareth to gold, ſilver, or ſtubble, hay,&c. for he compareth himſelfe and other teachers to builders, verſe 10. So then a man may teach pure and ſincere doctrine, Wee ſpeak of ſincerity: though the Apoſtle deny himſelfe to be perfect in working, Not as though we were already perfect. 2 This gold, ſilver,&c. is ſo called not ſimply, being laid to Gods touchſtone, but in reſpect of the hay, ſtubble,&c. So wee deny not, but that good works in reſpect of evill, are as gold. 3 Saint Peter expoundeth faith to be that, which is more precious than gold, This place therefore maketh nothing for the perfection of works. 2 Cor.2.17. Philip.3.12. 1 Pet.1.7.

3. Firſt, In many things we offend all; ſaith the Apoſtle: whereupon it is well inferred, that in ſome things we offend not all,which is true: for every man offendeth not in every thing: but hereof it followeth not,that in ſome things no man offendeth. 2 The Apoſtle affirmeth the contrary, that he is a perfect man,that offendeth not in word: but no man is ſo perfect, and therefore in this point all offend in ſome meaſure: as Let God be true and every man a liar. 3 The word is πταίομεν, we fall or ſtumble: ſo that in his conſtruction, ſome thing there may be, wherein a righteous man doth not fall or ſtumble; that is,apparantly or notoriouſly tranſgreſſe,though he be not without fault. Rom.3.4.

4. Firſt,his meaning is, that we ſhould not be outragious or immoderate in our anger; as the Apoſtle expoundeth, Let not the Sun goe downe upon your wrath: not that we cannot be altogether free from corruption. 2 We are exhorted to ceaſe to doe evill; that is, to abſtaine from the works of the wicked: For as Hierome well ſaith,hominem poſſe eſſe ἀναμάρτητον, ſed non abſq; κακίᾳ vitio, I ſay, a man may be without ſin,but not without fault,*dial.*2.contra.Pelag. 3 And as Auguſtine well ſaith,Cur non preciperetur homini iſta perfectio,&c. Why ſhould not perfect juſtice be commanded,though it cannot be performed? Non enim recte curritur, ſi quo currendum eſt neſciatur,&c. A man cannot run well,if he know not whither to run,de perfect.juſtit.contr.Celeſtin. Epheſ.4.26.

5. Good works are acceptable to God, but through Chriſt: Such ſacrifices God is pleaſed with, but we muſt offer theſe ſacrifices by Chriſt. Heb.13.15.

6. Our works are called good, Non ſecundum perfectam juſtitiam, ſed hanc quæ humanæ fragilitati competit, not after perfect juſtice, but as it is agreeable to our humane fragility,*dialog.*1.contra. Pelag. Hieron.

I cannot here omit a moſt excellent teſtimony of Origen to this purpoſe: Etſi omnia fecerimus, &c. Although we have done all things that are commanded us,yet have we not done any good: (for God onely is good) for if the things were truly good,that we doe, it would not have beene written, that doing thoſe things,we ſhould ſay we are unprofitable ſervants, Quantum ad comparationem cæterorum dicuntur bona quæ agimus; quantum autem ad veritatem,bonum noſtrum non eſt bonum; In reſpect then of other things, the works are called good,which we doe: but in regard of the truth, our good doing is not good,*tract.*8.in Matth. Luke 17.10.

The Doway champions doe here thus helpe out the matter: whereas Luther would prove by that text; The imaginations of the thoughts of mans heart are only evill continually: that all mens actions are polluted, as proceeding from a corrupt heart; they make this anſwer, that Moſes deſcribeth the enormity of ſin, that reigned then in the world before the floud: but Noah there is excepted, Geneſ.6.5. Doway Bible, Pag.23,24.

ted, who is called not onely juſt but perfect, and complete in doing all that was commanded, &c.

Geneſ.8.21. Contra. 1. That Moſes ſpeaketh not onely of theſe times, but generally of all mankinde, ſhewing what man is by nature, is evident by the like place, *cap.*8. The imagination of mans heart is evill, even from his youth: This was ſpoken after the floud: and your Latine Bible here hath this marginall note, which theſe tranſlators have omitted, cor hominis malum, mans heart is evill: which ſheweth the generall condition of all men by nature. 2 And how Noah was counted perfect, your Interlineárie Gloſſe ſheweth he was perfect, Tanquam viator, non comprehenſor; As a traveller by the way, not as one that comprehended; that is, was attained to perfection: their owne Vatablus alſo ſaith, that the Apoſtle pronounceth Noe to have done juſt per fidem, by faith, then not by his owne perfection: yea, the Doway Gloſſe-men themſelves elſewhere confeſſe, that the ſpot of veniall ſinnes may be in a juſt man, &c. how then is any man perfect?

Annot. in Iob 15. verſ.15.

The Proteſtants.

THe moſt righteous men in earth, have not onely their infirmities, and are in danger to ſin daily, but even their beſt and moſt holy works are blemiſhed with ſome infirmitie, and have a ſmacke of ſinne.

Eccleſ.7.22. Prov.20.9. Argum. 1. There is no juſt man in the earth that doth good, and ſinneth not: that is, not at another time, as Bellarmine gloſſeth, but even at the ſame time wherein he doth good, is not free from ſinne: for who can ſay, I am cleane from ſinne? the juſt man cannot ſay, that at any time he is cleane from ſinne.

Iſay 64.6. Argum. 2. All our righteouſneſſe is as a ſtained clout: Ergo, the beſt works which we doe are ſomewhat defiled with our owne corruptions.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1 That the Prophet ſpeaketh of the wicked men with whom God was angrie, not of the righteous.

Iſay 65.5,8. Contra. Yea, even of the righteous which ſay, *verſ.*5. We ſhall be ſaved, and *verſ.*8. Thou art our father, and we are the worke of thy hands. The wicked cannot ſay thus.

Bellarm. 2. The Prophet underſtandeth onely their ceremoniall righteouſneſſe, in bringing ſacrifices, obſerving their new Moones, and ſuch like.

Contra. The Prophets words are generall: All our righteouſneſſe is ſtained: all, that is, whether the righteouſneſſe of the morall or ceremoniall Law.

1 Pet.4.18. Argum. 3. Hierome urgeth againſt the Pelagians theſe texts of Scripture: Firſt, The righteous ſhall ſcarcely be ſaved: Salvaretur autem facile, ſi nihil in ſe macula haberet: But he ſhould be eaſily ſaved, if he had no blot or blemiſh.

Galath.5.17. Secondly, Yee cannot doe the ſame things yee would: Ecce Apoſtolus omneſque credentes quod volunt implere non poſſunt: Behold, neither the Apoſtle, nor any beleever, can fulfill that which they would.

1 Ioh.1.5. Thirdly, God is light, and in him is no darknes: Quando dicit nullas tenebras in Dei lumine reperiri, &c. When he ſaith no darkneſſe is found in Gods light, he ſheweth that all other mens lights are ſtained.

Matth.9.13. Fourthly, I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance: Nullus enim ad perfectum juſtus, ſed aliqua ex parte peccator: For no man is perfectly juſt, but in ſome ſort a ſinner: Dial. 2. adverſ. Pelag.

Firſt, if the righteous then have alwayes ſome ſtaine; Secondly, if they cannot in any worke do that they would; Thirdly, if their light be alwayes mixed with darkneſſe; Fourthly, if they be not in any thing perfectly juſt: then it followeth, that their beſt works are blemiſhed and imperfect.

1 Origen ſaith well: Vix eſt qui ita curetur, &c. As there is hardly any man ſo cured of his wound, but there remaineth ſome marke of it, Ita anima, quæ peccati vulnus accepit, etiamſi curetur, habet tamen peccati cicatricem: ſo the ſoule which received the wound of ſin, though it be cured, hath ſome ſcars of ſin ſtill: *Homil.*8. in Levitic.

Auguſtine upon theſe words of Iob 29.14. I put on juſtice as a robe, thus writeth: Veſtis iſta belli magis ſolet eſſe quam pacis, ubi adhuc expugnatur concupiſcentia, non ubi erit plena, ſine aliquo prorſus hoſte juſtitia: This garment, that is, a cloake or mantle, is rather for warre than peace: for here wee doe daily fight againſt concupiſcence, and there is no perfect righteouſneſſe without ſome enemy, cont. Caleſt. de perfect. juſtit. But if ſo any worke of ours could be perfect without ſin, righteouſneſſe might be without an enemy, which Auguſtine denieth.

Cenſur. orient. cap.4. 2 Ieremy Patriarch confeſſeth, that which we doe, parvum quid & nihil ſit, ſi conferatur, &c. it is a ſmall thing, and even as nothing, being compared with the divine bountie, &c. And to the ſame purpoſe hee citeth Chryſoſtome: Ea quæ nobis parva delicta videntur; Thoſe which ſeeme ſmall faults with us, doe deſerve great puniſhment before the Divine Tribunall, &c. And againe, in that Tribunall where mercie is preſident, non omnia exacte computantur; all things are not exactly reckoned, the Judge of his great mercie, multa prætermittente, multa condonante, pretermitting many things, and pardoning many.

Exod.34. Iob 15.15. Harm. ſect.2. pag.26. 3 Confeſſ. of Bohemia, cap.17. No man can be ſanctified by his works as holy actions, according to that ſaying of Moſes (O Lord in thy ſight no man is innocent, that is, perfectly holy.) And in the booke of Iob; What is man, that he ſhould be undefiled? &c. Behold, he found no ſtedfaſtneſſe among his Saints, and the heavens are not cleare in his ſight.

Helvetia. confeſſ. latter. c. 16. Many unperfect things are found in the works even of the Saints. Saxonie lec. of remiſſion of ſins: Although vertues in us bee begun, yet be they ſtill imperfect, and the relicks of ſin doe ſticke in us.

Sect. 4. p. 247.
Sect. 9. p. 284.

Gregory ſaith: Sanctus vir omne virtutis noſtræ meritum vitium eſſe conſpicit: An holy man ſeeth all the merit of our vertue to be vice; ipſa juſtitia noſtra ad examen divinæ juſtitiæ deducta injuſtitia eſt, & ſordet in diſtinctione judicis, quæ in æſtimatione fulget operantis: even our righteouſneſſe, being examined by the Divine juſtice is unrighteouſneſſe, and that ſtinketh in the ſtrict triall of the Judge, which ſhineth in the eſtimation of the worker, &c.

Clementin. lib. 5. tit. 11. c. 1. Ubi culpa non eſt, ibi timere ſolent conſcientiæ timoratæ: Where no fault is, yet fearefull conſciences are afraid of it. If mens good works were not ſubject to fault and blame, what need a righteous man to feare it?

Eſpenc. in 1 Timoth. 5. 7. Quis non quaſi in pulchro corpore, nævum aut verrucam habet? Who hath not as in a beautifull body ſome ſpot or wart? In 2 Timoth. p. 110. ex Chryſoſtomo: Nemo poteſt ſic in omnibus malus eſſe, quin aliqua bona habeat; vel bonus, quin quædam peccata: No man can be ſo evill in all things, but he hath ſome good things; no man ſo good, but he hath ſome evill.

Secondly, whether a righteous man may fall into any mortall ſinne.

The Papiſts.

Mortall ſin (they ſay) cannot conſiſt together with the grace of God, and cannot bee committed by a man continuing the ſonne of God: for he that is borne of God ſinneth not, ſaith the Apoſtle; that is, falleth into no mortall ſin, Rhemiſt. 1 Ioh. 3. ſect. 5.

72. Error.
1 Iohn 3. 9.

The Proteſtants.

First, underſtanding mortall ſin, as they doe for every ſin, that deſerveth death, as adulterie theft, murther, their expoſition is hereticall: for then David ſhould not have been the ſon of God, when he committed adulterie, and conſequently ſhould have been none of the predeſtinate; but hee that is once the Son of God, is alwayes to the * end: For whom God loveth, he loveth to the end, Iohn 13. 1.

* It is objected by a popiſh caviller, that this doctrine is dangerous, becauſe it ſpurreth to all villanie: and falſe, becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith of ſome, yee which are juſtified by the law, are fallen from grace: Galath. 5. 4. Anſwer. 1. Aſſurance of ſalvation, that ſuch as are the ſons of God cannot fall away, breedeth not carnall ſecurity, but godly carefulneſſe, that they may walke worthy of their calling, as the Apoſtle ſaith, we are choſen in him, that we ſhould be holy: Ephoſ. 1. 4. 2. They are ſaid to fall from grace, not in reſpect of Gods election, whereby they were never ordained to grace that fall from it: but of the outward meanes, which ſhould bring them to ſalvation. See our further anſwer, Retect. pag. 114.

Secondly, the Apoſtles meaning, when he ſaith, he that is borne of God ſinneth not, is no other but as S. Paul ſaith, let not ſin reigne, &c. Rom. 6. 12. that is, the children of God, though they fall into ſin, continue not in it, neither delight therein, neither are wholly overcome of it: for it is true of them, that they doe it not, but ſin that dwelleth in them, Rom. 7. 20. Auguſtine ſaith, Quicunque in Dei providentiſſ. diſpoſitione prædeſtinati ſunt, non ditu nondum renati, ſed etiam nondum nati, filii Dei ſunt & perire non poſſunt: Whoſoever in the moſt wiſe counſell of God are predeſtinate to ſalvation, not only before they are regenerate and borne againe, but even before they are borne, are the children of God, and cannot periſh: de corrupt. grat. cap. 9. Such therefore cannot finally periſh, and ceaſe to bee the Sons of God, though they may fall into ſin.

Hierome to this purpoſe urgeth that place of the Pſalme againſt the Pelagians: Pſal. 32. 5. when the Prophet had ſaid: I will confeſſe againſt my ſelfe my wickednes: it followeth: Pro hac, id eſt, impietate orabit ad te omnis ſanctus: ſi ſanctus eſt, quomodo orat pro iniquitate? ſi iniquitatem habet, qua ratione ſanctus appellatur? juxta illum ſcilicet modum, qui in alio loco ſcribitur, ſepties cadit juſtus & reſurgit: For this, that is, impietie, ſhall every holy man pray, &c. If holy, how prayeth he for iniquitie? if hee have iniquitie, how is he holy? Surely as it is written in another place, The righteous falleth ſeven times a day and riſeth againe, Dial. 2. ad Pelag. Ergo, an holy man may fall into impietie or iniquitie, though by Gods grace he may be recovered againe.

Pſalm. 32. 5.

1 Auguſtine ſaith, Nullus ſanctus & juſtus caret peccato, &c. No holy or juſt man, is without ſin, &c. And Primaſius ſaith, Sagitta mortis peccatum, per quod animæ jugulantur: Sinne is the arrow of death, by the which the ſoules are ſlaine, &c. If then a juſt man cannot bee without ſin, then conſequently the arrow of death ſticketh in his ſoule: but it is pulled forth by the blood of Chriſt.

2 Chryſoſtome ſaith, as hee is alleaged by Ieremie the Patriarch, Quæ nobis parva delicta videntur —magnam merentur pœnam, &c. The ſins which ſeeme ſmall to us, deſerve great puniſhment before the juſt tribunall. &c. then even the ſmall and veniall ſins, as they call them, are mortall, and worthy of death in the ſeveritie of the divine juſtice.

4 Gregory ſaith, that even the righteous perituros ſe ſine ambiguitate præſciunt, ſi remota pietate judicentur, doe foreſee that they ſhall undoubtedly periſh, if they bee judged without mercie, &c. then it followeth, that even the juſt may commit ſins worthy of death.

In 3 c. Iob. lib. 5. c. 8.

The third impediment of good works, namely of ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt: whether it bee a ſinne irremiſſible.

The Papiſts.

73. Error. ALL ſins are pardonable, ſo long as the committers of them bee in caſe to repent: as they are, ſo long as they live in this world: It is great blaſphemie therefore, which the Calviniſts utter, that Apoſtaſie, and certaine other ſins of the reprobate, cannot be forgiven at all in this life: Rhem. 1 Iohn 1. 5. ſect. 4. And therefore they ſay, that blaſphemie againſt the ſpirit is ſaid to be irremiſſible, becauſe it is hardly forgiven: And they define ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt to bee nothing elſe but finall impenitencie, Rhemiſt. Matth. 12. 4.

Bellarmine better adviſed, ſaith, that blaſphemie againſt the holy ſpirit is neither every ſin committed after Baptiſme, as Origen thought, nor finall impenitencie, nor yet every ſin committed of malice, but defineth it to be a malicious hatred, and deteſtation of the knowne truth: but hee ſaith as the reſt, that it is not a ſin ſimply irremiſſible, Bellarm. lib. 2. de pœnitent. cap. 15.

Iohn 20.23. Argum. Ioh. 20. 23. Whoſe ſins ſoever you remit, they are remitted, &c. Ergo all ſins are remiſſible: Bellar. lib. 2. de pœnit. c. 15.

Anſw. 1. The Apoſtles had not commiſſion to bind or looſe whom they would, but to bind all impenitent perſons, and to looſe all penitent ſinners: as Matth. 18. 18. this authority of binding and looſing is given with a limitation, that if any man would not heare the Church, he ſhould be as a heathen; him they muſt bind, looſe him they cannot whom they ſee impenitent. And therefore ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, becauſe it was alwayes joyned with impenitencie, cannot be looſed. — Math. 18. 18.

2 Secondly, Bellarmine ſpendeth many words in vaine, to proove nullum eſſe peccatum, &c. that there is no ſin, which is not taken away by true repentance: none of us ever denied it: yea wee doubt not to ſay with Ambroſe: Arbitror, quod etiam Iudas potuiſſet tanta Dei miſeratione non excludi à venia, ſi pœnitentiam non apud Iudæos, ſed apud Chriſtum egiſſet: I thinke, that Iudas might have been not excluded from forgiveneſſe by the great mercie of God, if hee had done repentance not before the Jewes, but with Chriſt, lib. 2. de pœnitent. cap. 4. He ſhould then have prooved, that repentance may bee joyned with ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt: but ſeeing all, which commit that ſinne are hardened in their hearts, and ſo finally impenitent, they cannot be forgiven: for they which repent not ſhall periſh, Luke 13. 3. — Luke 13. 3.

1 King. 2, 25. The Doway diſciples doe here alſo play their part, giving this marginall note upon that place: If a man ſhall ſin againſt our Lord, who ſhall pray for him? ſins directly againſt God—are more hardly remitted, but none are irremiſſible before death, becauſe during life, every one may repent, if they will: annotat. upon that place.

Contra. 1. Though we urge not this place concerning ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt: yet their gloſſe is falſe: for ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt ſhall never be forgiven, Marke 3. 29. and therefore it is irremiſſible even in this life. 2 The reaſon of the gloſſe is untrue, that it is in mans power to repent: the Scripture ſaith otherwiſe, convert thou me, and I ſhall be converted: and the very next words are againſt them, they heard not the voice of their father, becauſe the Lord would kill them: and their note thereupon confuteth their former gloſſe: For their obſtinacie God left them to themſelves, without his grace, and ſo juſtly puniſhed them. If they could have repented of themſelves, without the grace of God, the withholding of Gods grace had been no impediment to their repentance: it was certaine therefore, that they could not repent, becauſe God certainely had decreed their puniſhment; and ſo the Apoſtle calleth the heart of ſuch ἀμετανόητον, impenitent, or which cannot repent. — Marke 3. 29. Ierem. 31. 18. Rom. 2. 5.

The Proteſtants.

THis queſtion of ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, though it come here ſomewhat out of place, (for it belongeth properly to the 18. Controverſie, where the other queſtions are handled concerning ſin) yet I thought it better to touch a matter ſo waightie briefly by the way, than altogether to let it bee omitted: Wee have therefore to deale both with the Rhemiſts, who doe not rightly deſcribe this ſin, and then with Bellarmine, that together with the reſt affirmeth this ſin to bee remiſſible, though not ordinarily and commonly.

Firſt then, againſt the Rhemiſts we ſhew, that ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt is not finall impenitencie: every one indeed that ſo ſinneth, is finally impenitent, becauſe he ſhall never have the grace to repent: But our Saviour Chriſt meaneth ſome ſpeciall ſin in calling it blaſphemie againſt the holy Ghoſt: for many a wicked man may die impenitently, and yet not blaſpheme.

And againe, if finall impenitencie were this ſin, then could it not be committed before death: But ſeeing our Saviour chargeth the Phariſies then living, with blaſphemie, and S. Iohn ſpeaking of the ſins of the living, which are ſeene, ſaith, there is a ſin unto death: If thou ſee thy brother ſin, &c. 1 Iohn 5. 16. But if a man could not commit this ſinne before hee die, hee could not bee ſeene to ſinne. — 1 Iohn 5. 16.

Auguſtine better defineth this ſin: Cum poſt agnitionem Domini per gratiam, &c. quiſquam oppugnat fraternitatem & adverſus gratiam ipſam, qua reconciliatus eſt Deo, invidentia facibus agitatur: When after the acknowledging of the Lord by the grace of Chriſt, any man doth oppugne the brotherhood, and maliciouſly is carried againſt that grace whereby hee was reconciled to God : lib. 1. de ſerm. in mont. 41. But moſt perfectly is this ſin deſcribed, Heb. 10. 29. where there are ſet downe three circum-ſtances that make this ſin : firſt, the perſon ; he muſt be ſuch an one as hath been lightened with grace, Heb. 10. 29. and been in outward appearance ſanctified : therefore Jewes, Turks, or Infidels, cannot commit this ſin ; becauſe their minds were never illuminate by the truth. Secondly, his affection muſt be conſide-red, which is moſt deadly and hatefull in the higheſt degree : blaſpheming the ſpirit, and deſpiting the ſame, crucifying and perſecuting Chriſt againe as it were, Heb. 6. 6. Wherefore, they which offend of Heb. 6. 6. ignorance, as S. Paul before his converſion ; or infirmity and weaknes, as S. Peter did when hee denied Chriſt ; or which fall not into horrible blaſphemies, are not guiltie of this ſin. Thirdly, it is the truth which they hate and deteſt, which ſometime they loved, and were thereby ſanctified, not denying ſome part thereof, as the heretiks doe, but making a generall Apoſtaſie from the whole profeſſion of the faith, they count the blood of the teſtament as an unholy thing. Blaſphemie then againſt the holy Ghoſt, is an horrible hatred and deteſtation of the truth, and grace of Gods ſpirit, whereby hee that now blaſphemeth, was before illuminate. Lyranus defineth it, impugnatio veritatis agnitæ, an impug- Lyranus annot.

ning of the knowne truth. in Mat. 12. 32.

Secondly, againſt Bellarmine wee ſhew, that this ſin not only eaſily ſhall not bee forgiven but not at 1.
all, as our Saviour ſaith, Neither in this world, nor the world to come. And it is impoſſible for them to 2.
be renewed by repentance. From hence wee gather theſe arguments : No ſinne without repentance Matth. 12. 32.
can bee forgiven. Unleſſe yee repent, yee ſhall periſh : But ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt is utterly void of Heb. 6. 6.
repentance : neither can he that committeth it be renewed by repentance, it is impoſſible ſaith the A- Luke 13. 3. poſtle : Ergo.

That ſinne, for the which there remaineth no ſacrifice, is not remiſſible : for our ſins cannot otherwiſe be forgiven us, than by the ſacrifice of Chriſts death : But ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, which is 3. Heb. 10. 26.
a willing or wilfull backſliding after the knowledge of the truth, cannot be done away by any ſacrifice, 4.
Heb. 10. 26. Ergo.

There is no hope of forgiveneſſe for that ſin, for the which it is not lawfull to pray : for ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, which is a ſin unto death, it is not lawfull to pray, 1 Iohn 5. 16. Ergo. Wherefore it is a great blaſphemie in the Papiſts ſo contrary to the Scripture to affirme, that blaſphemie againſt the ſpirit may be forgiven.

1 Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt is ſaid not to be remitted in this world nor the next : quia ordinariè & ut plurimùm, becauſe ordinarily, and for the moſt part it is not forgiven : 1.
lib. 2. de pœnit. c. 16. reſp. ad arg. 1.

1 Contra. Firſt, S. Marke ſaith : Non habet remiſſionem in æternum : He that blaſphemeth the holy Ghoſt, ſhall not be forgiven for ever, Mark. 3. 29. If never, how then dare he contradict the Scripture? Marke 3. 29.
Yes, he ſhall be forgiven, though hardly : if he be forgiven at all, then the Evangeliſt ſaith not true, hee ſhall never, &c. Secondly, as other blaſphemies are forgiven, ſo this blaſphemie is not forgiven : but other blaſphemies and ſins are alſo hardly forgiven ; The righteous ſhall ſcarcely be ſaved : Ergo, this ſin 1 Pet. 4. 18.
is not forgiven, no not hardly. Thirdly, thus Cyprian expoundeth, Non poſſe in Eccleſia remitti ei, qui in Deum deliquerit, &c. He cannot be forgiven in the Church, which ſinneth againſt God : and then he citeth this place, Matth. 12. 32. lib. 3. ad Quirinum cap. 28.

*Origen : Quibus (qui, i. in Spiritum Sanctum, blaſphemant) neque in præſenti, neque in futuro ſeculo Matth. 12. 32.
remittetur* : To whom (that ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt) it ſhall not be forgiven, neither in this world nor the next.

Cauſ. 33. diſt. 1. c. 59. gloſſ. Blaſphemiam in ſpiritum Dominus neque in hoc ſeculo, nec futuro remittendam aſſeruit : Blaſphemie againſt the holy Ghoſt, the Lord ſaid, ſhall neither in this world be forgiven, nor in the world to come, &c. that is, never, or not at all.

2 Bellarmine to the ſecond and third place maketh the ſame anſwer, that hee that is once lightened, that is, baptized, if he fall away, cannot be renewed againe by the baptiſme of repentance : and for ſuch 2.
there is no more ſacrifice, that is, no ſecond baptiſme to be expected : Bellar. ibid.

2 Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle, Heb. 6. 1. 2. maketh repentance from dead works, and the doctrine of Heb. 1. 2.
Baptiſmes two divers things : therefore by repentance Baptiſme is not inſinuated. Secondly, the meaning of the Apoſtle is, that ſuch an one cannot at all repent, and ſo cannot be renewed by repentance :
the reaſon is taken from the greatneſſe of ſinne, becauſe hee doth crucifie againe the Sonne Verſ. 6. 8. of God, and make a mocke of him, verſ. 6. and therefore is neere to curſing, verſ. 8. Thirdly, Ambroſe ſaith in Luc. 22. Caſſa erat proditoris pœnitentia, qui peccavit in ſpiritum ſanctum : The traytors repentance was in vaine (meaning Iudas) which ſinned againſt the holy Ghoſt, &c. ſignifying, that ſuch an one cannot have true repentance. Likewiſe Hierome : Nihil ita repugnat Deo quam cor impœnitens ; ſolum crimen eſt, quod veniam conſequi non poteſt ; ſolum deſperationis crimen, quod mederi non poteſt :
Nothing doth ſo much reſiſt againſt God, as an impenitent heart ; it is the only crime, which cannot obtaine pardon ; only the crime of deſperation cannot be healed : objurgat. Sabinian. The Apoſtles meaning then is, that they which ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, having no grace to repent, cannot at all bee forgiven.

3 Firſt, in the ſame ſenſe the Apoſtle ſaith, there remaineth no ſacrifice for this, nor any meanes

Heb. c. 27. 28. at all of forgivenes: but a fearefull looking for of judgement and violent fire, Heb. 10. 27. ſo that the Apoſtle excludeth all meanes and hope of comfort and remiſſion. Secondly, v. 28. he dieth without mercy that deſpiſeth Moſes law: but he that blaſphemeth the ſpirit, is worthy of greater puniſhment, verſ. 29. therefore he alſo ſine ulla miſeratione moritur, dieth without mercy; and where there is no mercy there is no forgivenes. Thirdly, Peter Lombard lib. 2. diſt. 43. b. rehearſeth thus out of Auguſtine: Hoc ſolum peccatum veniam mereri non poteſt: Thus ſin only againſt the holy Ghoſt can find no mercy. And out of Hierome: Taliter peccans digne pœnitere non poteſt: He that thus ſinneth, cannot worthily repent, &c. Ergo, there is no hope at all of mercy for ſuch, nor no ſacrifice for remiſſion of their ſin.

4 Bellar. The Apoſtle doth not forbid us to pray for ſuch, but only ſheweth, that wee are not ſo
1 Ioh. 5. 15. 14. eaſily heard, nor cannot pray with ſuch aſſurance: otherwiſe he had ſaid before, 1 Ioh. 5. 15. we know that he heareth whatſoever we aske: Bellarm. ibid. reſp. ad 4. loc.

Contra. First, the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, verſ. 14. This is the aſſurance, that we have in him, that if we aske any thing according to his will, hee heareth us: but to pray for a ſin irremiſſible, is to pray againſt his will. Secondly, the Apoſtle having before given a direct precept to pray for a brother, ſinning not unto death, afterward giveth a flat exception, of this ſin unto death, I ſay not that thou ſhouldeſt
John 13. 18. pray for it. Now that which is excepted out of the precept, is it not denied, or forbidden? as Ioh. 13. 18. our Saviour ſaith, I ſpeake not of you all: hee doth manifeſtly except and exclude Iudas: ſo here to pray for a ſin unto death, being excepted from the generall precept before, is evidently forbidden and denied. Thirdly, the end of our prayer for ſinners, is, that God would give them life, that ſin not unto death: but life cannot bee granted for a ſin unto death, (for how is it a ſinne unto death, if it may find life?) Ergo, there is no prayer for ſuch, where the end of the prayer cannot bee hoped for. Fourthly, thus Ambroſe expoundeth: Non poteſt ibi exoratio eſſe veniæ, ubi ſacrilegii eſt plenitudo: There can be no entreatie for pardon, where there is a fulneſſe of ſacrilege. Hierome, as he is cited by Pet. Lombard, Recte dicit Ioannes, non pro eo oret quis, &c. S. Iohn ſaith well, let not any man pray for him: lib. 3. diſt. 43. b. He maketh this exception of the Apoſtle a flat prohibition.

So I conclude this place, with that ſentence of Hierome: Genus eſt lepræ, quod omnino mundari non poteſt, &c. There is a kind of leproſie, which cannot be cleanſed at all, and therefore ſuch a man was bid to goe out of the campe. This is that ſin which is committed againſt the holy Ghoſt, that is, of blaſphemie, which, as our Lord ſaith in the Goſpell, ſhall not bee forgiven, neither in this nor the next world: de diverſ. generib. lepr.

We have alſo the teſtimony of holy Martyrs: Maſter Tyndall; Sin againſt the holy Ghoſt is, when men of a ſet malice doe perſecute the truth, and of a grounded hate againſt the law of God, by reaſon of a full conſent they have to ſin, and to walke in their old wayes of ignorance, whereunto being now paſt all repentance, they have utterly yeelded themſeves, to follow with full luſt, without bridle or ſnaffle, &c. Fox pag. 1080. col. 2.

Lib. de pudicitia. And for further evidence: 1 Tertullian thus evidently diſtinguiſheth ſins: Eſt delictum non ad mortem—hoc erit remiſſibile, eſt delictum ad mortem hoc erit irremiſſibile,—ubi eſt poſtulationis, illic erit remiſſionis, ubi nec poſtulationis, ibi æque neque remiſſionis—alia erit quæ veniam conſequi poſſit, alia quæ conſequi nullo modo poteſt, &c. There is a ſin not unto death, and a ſin unto death, for this I ſay not (ſaith the Apoſtle) that any ſhould pray: where is place for prayer, there is of remiſſion, where not for prayer, neither for remiſſion:—ſome may obtaine pardon, ſome cannot by any meanes, &c.

Lib. de certaminib. eſſent. patr. fil. & ſperit. Athanaſius ſaith, Nullum eſt peccatum irremiſſibile apud Deum, &c. There is no ſin irremiſſible before God to them that from their heart doe repent, &c. and this we deny not.

Cyril of Jeruſalem ſaith, Chriſt Jeſus, the Judge of the quicke and dead, hath decreed, ὅτι οὐκ ἔχει ἄφεσιν, Catech. 16. that ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, ſhall have no forgiveneſſe.

Cenſur. orien. cap. 4. 2 So alſo Ieremy the Patriarch ſaith, Nullum eſt peccatum tantum quod miſericordiam Dei vincere poſſit, There is no ſin ſo great, which can overcome the mercie of God, that is, if wee can repent: but to them which cannot repent, as in the ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, there is no pardon.

4 The interlinearie gloſſe giveth this note, Matth. 3. 29. ſhall never be forgiven, quia digne pœnitere non poteſt, becauſe he that committeth that ſin, can never worthily repent, &c. Therefore this ſin in this ſenſe is irremiſſible.

1 The Pelagians thought to have poſed Auguſtine with the ſame queſtion, which the Papiſts propound to us. Was it ſin in the Heathen (ſay they) to clothe the naked? Auguſtine anſwereth, Non per ſeipſum factum peccatum eſt,—ſed de tali opere non in domino gloriari, ſolus impius negat eſſe peccatum: The fact of it ſelfe is not ſin, but in doing any ſuch thing not to rejoyce in the Lord, none but wicked men will deny it to be ſin, &c. I may therefore ſay unto theſe patrons of Ethnicke vertues, as Bernard in the like caſe: Dum multum ſudat quomodo Platonem faciat Chriſtianum ſe probat Ethnicum: While he laboureth to make Plato a Chriſtian, he ſheweth himſelfe an Ethnicke: Epiſtol. 191.

The Papiſts.

76. Error. BY any worke proceeding of faith and charitie, the merit of Chriſts paſſion is applied to us, Soto, ex Tileman, loc. 11. err. 21. Men by their ſufferings and other works, may applie to themſelves the generall medicine of Chriſts merits and ſatisfaction, Rhemiſt. annot. 1. Coloſſ. ſect. 4.

The Proteſtants.

IT is the propertie of faith onely, to apprehend, and applie unto us the benefits of Chriſts paſſion, and all other his merits.

Rom. 10. 7. 8. Argum. Rom. 10. 7, 8. We need not (ſaith the Apoſtle) to aſcend to heaven, or deſcend into the deepe, to bring Chriſt from thence: it is the word of faith, which we preach. By faith then we doe ſcale the heavens, and behold Chriſt: it is not the doctrine of works, but the word of faith that performeth this. And therefore the Apoſtle defineth faith to be the ground of things hoped for, and the evidence of

Heb. 11. 1. things not ſeene, Hebr. 11. 1. This definition cannot agree unto works, or unto any other thing but faith: for then it were no good definition, nor yet deſcription: Ergo, faith onely is the evidence of things inviſible: and therefore onely applieth Chriſts precious merits, which are things beleeved and not ſeene.

Auguſtine thus alſo deſcribeth faith: Rerum abſentium præſens eſt fides; rerum quæ foris ſunt, intus eſt fides: rerum, quæ non videntur, videtur fides; Faith maketh things abſent, preſent; things without us, to be within us; things not ſeene, to be ſeene: de Trinitat. lib. 13. c. 1. Ergo, faith onely hath this applicatorie power, to applie Chriſts merits, not preſent nor ſeene, and to make them as our owne.

Ambroſ. in 2 Cor. 3. Lex ſpiritus dat libertatem ſolam fidem poſcens, ut quia quæ non vidit, credit, de conditione ervi mereatur; The law of the ſpirit giveth libertie, requiring onely faith, which becauſe it beleeveth thoſe things it ſeeth not, is thought worthie to be delivered. This then is that which in faith is availeable, becauſe it beleeveth that which is not ſeene, which is onely proper and peculiar to faith, and not to works.

In 2. cap. ad Epheſ. Now for further evidence: 1 Theodoret ſaith, Sola fide ſuſcepta condonavit peccata; Hee hath pardoned our ſins, by faith onely received, non exegit vitæ innocentiam, hee exacteth not innocencie of life, &c. that is, toward juſtification: works then applie not Chriſts merits but faith.

In 5. c. ad Roman. 2 Primaſius: Impium per ſolam fidem juſtificat non opera; Hee juſtifieth the wicked onely by faith, not by works, &c. but if works applied Chriſts merits, they ſhould juſtifie, as well as faith, &c.

Harm. ſect. 14. pag. 437. Confeſſ. of Auſpurg, &c. The applying of the benefit of Chriſt, is by a mans owne faith, as Paul witneſſeth, whom God hath ſet forth to be a reconciliation through faith in his bloud, &c.

Index Hiſpan. expurg. f. 11. pag. 2. 4 Vatablus giveth this note in Cantic. 3. numer. 2. Sola gratia invenitur Chriſtus non opera hominis; onely by faith is Chriſt found, not by the helpe of man, &c. Which ſentence therefore is in their index expurgatori, noted to be blotted out.

The ſecond article, whether bona opera be expiatoria.

The Papiſts.

78. Error. THe works of charitie and mercie, as almes deeds, and ſuch like, have force to extinguiſh our ſins, as Saint Peter ſaith, Charitie doth cover a multitude of ſins, Epiſt. 1. 4. 8. Rhemiſt. ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. THe Apoſtle ſpeaketh of mutuall charitie amongſt our ſelves, whoſe propertie is to cover a multitude of our neighbours offences, as Salomon ſaith, Prov. 10. 12. Hatred ſtirreth up

Prov. 10. 12. contentions, but love covereth treſpaſſes: what is this to the extinguiſhing of our ſins before God?

Argum. It is an abominable and blaſphemous opinion, that any man by his works ſhould be able

Heb. 1. 3. to redeeme his ſins: for the Scripture ſaith, that by himſelfe Chriſt hath purged our ſins, Heb. 1. 3.

If he have wholy done it by himſelfe, hath not given this power and force of redemption to any other meanes.

If they underſtand by the force of extniſhing ſins, the meanes onely of applying Chriſts merits: in that ſenſe, faith onely is ſaid to ſave us*heſ.* 2. 8. Epheſ. 2. 8.

Auguſtine: Si merita noſtra aliquid rent, ad damnationem noſtram veniret; ſed non venit ad inſpectionem meritorum, ſed remiſſionem peccrum: If our merits were availeable to any purpoſe, God ſhould come to our condemnation: but commeth not to behold our merits, but to forgive us our ſins, enarr. in Pſal. 43. Ergo, by our meritr ſins are not forgiven.

Ambroſe: Peccatum aut donatur aut dur, aut tegitur; donatur per gratiam, deletur per ſanguinem crucis, tegitur per charitatem; Sin isher pardoned, extinguiſhed, or blotted, covered; it is pardoned by grace, blotted or waſhed away Chriſts bloud, covered by charitie: apolog. David, cap. 13. So then though before men by love anaritie offences may be covered, yet before God by grace onely and faith in Chriſts bloud, are theyotted and extinguiſhed. And that is Ambroſe meaning, that before God ſins are not covered by chie, but by faith, it is evident by his owne words: Remittere, tegere, non imputare, una ratio, un ſenſus; To remit, to cover, not to impute, have all one ſenſe: in 4. ad Roman. But he had ſaidfore, that ſins are pardoned and ſo remitted by grace: Ergo, by grace and faith they are alſo covere

1 Cyrillus further ſaith, Ne juſtificari opputemus, ne gratiam Dei meritis noſtris, ſed fide affuturam nobis ſperemus; That wee ſhould not the to be juſtified by worke, nor hope for grace by our merits, but by faith, &c. Lib. 4. in Joann. cap. 51.

2 Chryſoſtome upon theſe words, With th mercie, as he is cited by Ieremie the Patriarch, Hoc eſt non in noſtris recte factis ſed in tua bonitate m eſt, ut tantam effugiamus damnationem, &c. that is, it lieth not in our well doing, but in thy gneſſe, that we eſcape ſo great damnation, &c. Cenſur. oriental. cap. 6.

3 Confeſſ. of Bohemia, cap. 4, Neither hay man, of all things whatſoever any thing at all, whereby he may deliver, ſet free, or redeeme himſelfm his ſins and condemnation. Confeſſ. of Baſil. The faithfull doe works not to ſatisfie for their ſins, bnely that in ſome ſort they may ſhew themſelves thankfull unto God. Harm. ſect. 6. pag. 95. Sect. 9. pag. 249.

4 Vatablus giveth this marginall note, *Ecc*9. Per juſtitiam operum neſcit homo amore an odio dignus ſit; By the righteouſneſſe of works, a mnoweth not whether he be worthie of love or hatred, &c. then cannot his works expiate or redehis ſins: this note is likewiſe in their Index, blotted out. Index expurg. Hiſpan f. 11. pag. 1.

The third article, whetheur works be meritorious.

Thepiſts.

GOd giveth as well everlaſting life and gloriemen, for and according to their works, as hee giveth damnation for the contrary works Rhiſt. Roman. 2. ſect. 2. And men by their works, proceeding of grace, doe deſerve or merit heavand the more or leſſe joy in the ſame, 1 Cor. 3. ſect. 2. 79. Error.

Argum. 1. Hee will render to every man accordi his works, Rom. 2. 6. Every man ſhall receive his reward according to his labour. Here we ſee tingdome of heaven is a retribution, hyre, wages for works: Ergo, our works are the value, price, wh and merit of the ſame, Rhemiſt. Rom. 2. 6.

Anſw. Our labours and works are a meaſurehe reward, according to the which God doth meete out and render unto his Saints of the heaveeward: but they are no meritorious or deſerving cauſe thereof. The reward is of mercie, not eſert; of grace, not of merit: for life eternall is the meere gift of God through Ieſus Chriſt, Rom. 6. But the wages of ſin is death. Where the Apoſtle doth ſet a manifeſt difference betweene the re of the righteous, and the juſt recompence of the wicked: for life eternall is the free and graciouft of God, not deſerved: but eternall damnation is the due debt of ſin. Wherefore the Papiſts bid open battell to the Apoſtle, in ſaying, that the one is as due by debt as the other. Rom. 6. 23.

Argum. 2. S. Paul ſaith, That there is a crowne hteouſneſſe laid up for him, which God the juſt Iudge ſhall give him: Ergo, the crowne is given nmercie, but of juſtice, as a wages and juſt recompence to the Apoſtle. 2 Timoth. 4. 8.

Anſw. God rendreth heaven as a juſt Judge, nothe merit and worthineſſe of our works, but to the merit and worthineſſe of Chriſt, and as due toy his promiſe made to us in Chriſt. The reward therefore of heaven is of the mercie of God, whth freely promiſed it us in Chriſt. It is of his juſtice, in that he is faithfull and juſt in keeping of homiſe made to us: So that it is a debt, not in reſpect of any deſert in us, but in regard of his one piſe; As Auguſtine ſaith; Debitorem ipſe ſe Dominus fecit, non accipiendo, ſed promittendo: Ndicitur redde, quod accepiſti, ſed redde quod promiſiſti; God hath made himſelfe a debtor, by prong, not by receiving any thing at our hands: Wee ſay not to him, render that thou haſt receivut give that which thou haſt promiſed: In Pſalm. 83.

Alexander

Heb. c. 27. 28. at all of forgivenes : but a fearefull looking for of judgement and violent fire, Heb. 10. 27. ſo that the Apoſtle excludeth all meanes and hope of comfort and remiſſion. Secondly, *v.*28. he dieth without mercy that deſpiſeth Moſes law: but he that blaſphemeth the ſpirit, is worthy *of greater puniſhment, verſ.*29. therefore he alſo ſine ulla miſeratione moritur, dieth without mercy; and where there is no mercy there is no forgivenes. Thirdly, Peter Lombard lib. 2. diſt. 43. b. rehearſeth thus out of Auguſtine : Hoc ſolum peccatum veniam mereri non poteſt : Thus ſin only againſt the holy Ghoſt can find no mercy. And out of Hierome : Taliter peccans dignè pœnitere non poteſt : He that thus ſinneth, cannot worthily repent, &c. Ergo, there is no hope at all of mercy for ſuch, nor no ſacrifice for remiſſion of their ſin.

1 Ioh. 5. 15. 14. 4 Bellar. The Apoſtle doth not forbid us to pray for ſuch, but only ſheweth, that wee are not ſo eaſily heard, nor cannot pray with ſuch aſſurance : otherwiſe he had ſaid before, 1 Ioh. 5. 15. we know that he heareth whatſoever we aske : Bellarm. ibid. reſp. ad 4. loc.

John 13. 18. Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, verſ. 14. This is the aſſurance, that we have in him, that if we aske any thing according to his will, hee heareth us : but to pray for a ſin irremiſſible, is to pray againſt his will. Secondly, the Apoſtle having before given a direct precept to pray for a brother, ſinning not unto death, afterward giveth a flat exception, of this ſin unto death, I ſay not that thou ſhouldeſt pray for it. Now that which is excepted out of the precept, is it not denied, or forbidden ? as Ioh. 13. 18. our Saviour ſaith, I ſpeake not of you all : hee doth manifeſtly except and exclude Iudas : ſo here to pray for a ſin unto death, being excepted from the generall precept before, is evidently forbidden and denied. Thirdly, the end of our prayer for ſinners, is, that God would give them life, that ſin not unto death : but life cannot bee granted for a ſin unto death, (for how is it a ſinne unto death, if it may find life ?) Ergo, there is no prayer for ſuch, where the end of the prayer cannot bee hoped for. Fourthly, thus Ambroſe expoundeth : Non poteſt ibi exoratio eſſe venia, ubi ſacrilegii eſt plenitudo : There can be no entreatie for pardon, where there is a fulneſſe of ſacrilege. Hierome, as he is cited by Pet. Lombard, Rectè dicit Ioannes, non pro eo oret quis, &c. S. Iohn ſaith well, let not any man pray for him : lib. 3. diſt. 43. b. He maketh this exception of the Apoſtle a flat prohibition.

So I conclude this place, with that ſentence of Hierome : Genus eſt lepræ, quod omnino mundari non poteſt, &c. There is a kind of leproſie, which cannot be cleanſed at all, and therefore ſuch a man was bid to goe out of the campe. This is that ſin which is committed againſt the holy Ghoſt, that is, of blaſphemie, which, as our Lord ſaith in the Goſpell, ſhall not bee forgiven, neither in this nor the next world : de diverſ. generib. lepr.

We have alſo the teſtimony of holy Martyrs : Maſter Tyndall ; Sin againſt the holy Ghoſt is, when men of a ſet malice doe perſecute the truth, and of a grounded hate againſt the law of God, by reaſon of a full conſent they have to ſin, and to walke in their old wayes of ignorance, whereunto being now paſt all repentance, they have utterly yeelded themſeves, to follow with full luſt, without bridle or ſnaffle, &c. Fox pag. 1080. col. 2.

Lib. de pudicitia. And for further evidence : 1 Tertullian thus evidently diſtinguiſheth ſins : Eſt delictum non ad mortem—hoc erit remiſſibile, eſt delictum ad mortem hoc erit irremiſſibile,—ubi eſt poſtulationis, illic erit remiſſionis, ubi nec poſtulationis, ibi æque neque remiſſionis—alia erit qua veniam conſequi poſſit, alia quæ conſequi nullo modo poteſt, &c. There is a ſin not unto death, and a ſin unto death, for this I ſay not (ſaith the Apoſtle) that any ſhould pray : where is place for prayer, there is of remiſſion, where not for prayer, neither for remiſſion :—ſome may obtaine pardon, ſome cannot by any meanes, &c.

Lib. de certaminib. eſſent. patr. fil. & ſperit. Athanaſius ſaith, Nullum eſt peccatum irremiſſibile apud Deum, &c. There is no ſin irremiſſible before God to them that from their heart doe repent, &c. and this we deny not.

Catech. 16. Cyril of Jeruſalem ſaith, Chriſt Jeſus, the Judge of the quicke and dead, hath decreed, ὃν οὐκ ἔχει ἄφεσιν, that ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, ſhall have no forgiveneſſe.

Cenſur. orien. cap. 4. 2 So alſo Ieremy the Patriarch ſaith, Nullum eſt peccatum tantum quod miſericordiam Dei vincere poſſit, There is no ſin ſo great, which can overcome the mercie of God, that is, if wee can repent : but to them which cannot repent, as in the ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, there is no pardon.

Harm. ſect. 9. pag. 216. 3 Latter confeſſ. of Helvetia, c. 14. God doth forgive all ſins of the faithfull, only that one ſin excepted, which is committed againſt the holy Ghoſt.

4 The interlinearie gloſſe giveth this note, Matth. 3. 29. ſhall never be forgiven, quia dignè pœnitere non poteſt, becauſe he that committeth that ſin, can never worthily repent, &c. Therefore this ſin in this ſenſe is irremiſſible.

The fourth part, of the dignity and worthines of good works, that is, of merits.

The firſt part, which be the good works of Chriſtians.

The Papiſts.

74. Error. THey doe not only call them good works, which are commanded of God, but which are alſo injoyned by the Church and the governours thereof ; and that even by ſuch works men are juſtified, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 6. cap. 10. Tapper. ex Tileman. loc. 11. err. 1.

The Proteſtants.

SAint Paul defineth good works otherwiſe, namely, thoſe which God hath ordained, that we ſhould walke in them, Epheſ. 2. 10. They are not the precepts of men, but the commandements of God in his word, the doing whereof hath the name of good works. As for the traditions and injunctions of men not warranted by Gods word, they are ſo farre from being commended or commanded, that our Saviour calleth the doing thereof, but a Worſhipping of God in vaine, Mark. 7. 7.

Epheſ. 2. 10. Marke 7. 7.

Auguſtine upon thoſe words, in the 103. Pſalme. The loving kindnes of the Lord is upon thoſe that keep his covenant, and thinke upon his commandements to doe them, ſaith thus: Vide ut precepta teneas: ſed quomodo teneas? non memoria, ſed vita: Memoria retinentibus mandata ejus, non ut reddant ea, ſed ut faciant ea: See that thou keep Gods commandements: but how? not in thy memory, but in thy life; not to ſay them by rote, but to doe them: Ergo, they are Gods commandements, which we muſt thinke of to doe them: occurrat in Pſal. 102. for unto ſuch the bleſſing is promiſed, not to the obſervers of mens precepts or traditions.

Pſalm, 103, 18.

1 Origen upon thoſe words, Cantic. 1. 14. Speciosa es proxima: Thou art faire my love, or neighbour: Incipis eſſe ſpecioſa, quod proxima mihi es: Thou beginneſt to bee faire, becauſe thou art neere unto me: Hom. 2. in Cantic. The neereneſſe then to God maketh us beautifull and faire in good works.

Cantic. 1. 14.

2 Chryſoſtome ſaith: Virtutes & actio purgata cælitus datur hominibus, a Deo: Vertue and purged actions are given unto men from heaven, from God, &c. Ieremie Patriarke, Abſque exercitio illorum operum, quæ Deus precepit, neque ſpes ulla ſalutis: Without the exerciſe of thoſe works, which God hath commanded, there is no hope of ſalvation, &c. Theſe then are the good works, which God hath preſcribed.

De dicto Pſal. 142. non intres, &c. Cenſur. orient. cap. 20.

3 Latter confeſſ. of Helvetia, c. 16. Good works—are done of the faithfull, according to the will or rule of Gods word. Bohemia, c. 7. good works—are expreſſely ſhewed and propounded to us by the ſpirit of God—the rule and choiſe ſquare thereof, is God himſelfe in his word, &c.

Harm. ſect. 9. pag. 245.

4 Eſpenc. out of Theodoret, thus expoundeth that 1 Timoth. 6. 18. ἀγαθοεργεῖν, to doe well, that is, Credere Deo, & quæcunque fidei conveniunt facere: To beleeve in God, and to doe all things agreeable to faith: in 1 Tim. p. 171. Good works then are thoſe which God hath appointed, and are according to faith.

1 Tim. 6. 18.

The ſecond part, whether there be any good works without Faith.

The Papiſts.

THough they dare not altogether juſtifie the works of the Heathen and Infidels, yet they doe excuſe them, and do blame us for ſaying, that Infidels do ſin in honouring their parents, in fighting for their countrey, and ſuch like. They therefore doe diſcharge the Heathen of ſin, in theſe works of theirs, Rhemiſt, Rom. 14. ſect. 4.

75. Error.

The Proteſtants.

THeſe works are not ſinne in themſelves, but in Infidels they are, becauſe they proceed of Infidelity.

Argum. It is the rule of the Goſpell, that a corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit: But all Infidels are corrupt trees, being without faith: Ergo. they can bring forth no good fruit.

Matth. 7. 18.

1 The Pelagians thought to have poſed Auguſtine with the ſame queſtion, which the Papiſts propound to us. Was it ſin in the Heathen (ſay they) to clothe the naked? Auguſtine anſwereth, Non per ſeipſum factum peccatum eſt,—ſed de tali opere non in domino gloriari, ſolus impius negat eſſe peccatum: The fact of it ſelfe is not ſin, but in doing any ſuch thing not to rejoyce in the Lord, none but wicked men will deny it to be ſin, &c. I may therefore ſay unto theſe patrons of Ethnicke vertues, as Bernard in the like caſe: Dum multum ſudat quomodo Platonem faciat Chriſtianum ſe probat Ethnicum: While he laboureth to make Plato a Chriſtian, he ſheweth himſelfe an Ethnicke: Epiſtol. 191.

Cyrillus, Opera fidei congruentia facere, eorum ſolummodo eſt, qui diligunt Deum: To doe works agreeable to faith, it belongeth only to them that love God.

2 Ieremie Patriarch: Illa vero bona opera eſſe judicamus, quæ a vera & certa fide ſejuncta non ſunt, &c. We judge thoſe to be right good works, which are not ſeparated from the right faith, &c. and in another place he approoveth that ſentence, quicquid non ex fide peccatum, whatſoever is not of faith is ſin.

Cenſur. orient. cap. 6. Cap. 13.

3 Latter confeſſ. of Helvetia, cap. 16. Works which are good indeed, doe proceed from a lively faith. Bohem. cap. 17. The Lord himſelfe ſaith, without me you can do nothing that is, nothing, that may pleaſe God, and be for our ſalvation, &c.

Harm. ſect. 9. pag. 245. Pag. 255.

vine bringeth no fruit: ſo neither can a man without faith doe any thing, that is good.

Decr. par. 2 cauſ. 1. q. 1. c. 26. Gregor. Ubi Chriſtus non eſt fundamentum, nullum eſt boni operis adificium; Where Chriſt is not the foundation, there can be no good worke builded upon.

Peter Lombard. lib. 2. diſt. 41. a. Quæ ſine fide fiunt, bona non ſunt; The things done without faith, are not good.

The third part of the uſe and office of good works.

THey make a threefold uſe of good works, as they call them: firſt, by them the merits of Chriſt, they ſay, are applied unto us. Secondly, they doe purge our ſins. Thirdly, they are meritorious.

The firſt article, whether bona opera be applicatoria.

The Papiſts.

76. Error. BY any worke proceeding of faith and charitie, the merit of Chriſts paſſion is applied to us, Soto, ex Tileman, loc. 11, err. 21. Men by their ſufferings and other works, may applie to themſelves the generall medicine of Chriſts merits and ſatisfaction, Rhemiſt. annot. 1. Coloſſ. ſect. 4.

The Proteſtants.

IT is the propertie of faith onely, to apprehend, and applie unto us the benefits of Chriſts paſſion, and all other his merits.

Rom. 10. 7. 8. Argum. Rom. 10. 7, 8. We need not (ſaith the Apoſtle) to aſcend to heaven, or deſcend into the deepe, to bring Chriſt from thence: it is the word of faith, which we preach. By faith then we doe ſcale the heavens, and behold Chriſt: it is not the doctrine of works, but the word of faith that performeth this. And therefore the Apoſtle defineth faith to be the ground of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not ſeene, Hebr. 11. 1. Heb. 11, 1. This definition cannot agree unto works, or unto any other thing but faith: for then it were no good definition, nor yet deſcription: Ergo, faith onely is the evidence of things inviſible: and therefore onely applieth Chriſts precious merits, which are things beleeved and not ſeene.

Auguſtine thus alſo deſcribeth faith: Rerum abſentium præſens eſt fides; rerum quæ foris ſunt, intus eſt fides: rerum, quæ non videntur, videtur fides; Faith maketh things abſent, preſent; things without us, to be within us; things not ſeene, to be ſeene: de Trinitat. lib. 13. c. 1. Ergo, faith onely hath this applicatorie power, to applie Chriſts merits, not preſent nor ſeene, and to make them as our owne.

Ambroſ. in 2 Cor. 3. Lex ſpiritus dat libertatem ſolam fidem poſcens, ut quia quæ non vidit, credit, de conditione ervi mereatur; The law of the ſpirit giveth libertie, requiring onely faith, which becauſe it beleeveth thoſe things it ſeeth not, is thought worthie to be delivered. This then is that which in faith is availeable, becauſe it beleeveth that which is not ſeene, which is onely proper and peculiar to faith, and not to works.

In 2. cap. ad Epheſ. Now for further evidence: 1 Theodoret ſaith, Sola fide ſuſcepta condonavit peccata; Hee hath pardoned our ſins, by faith onely received, non exegit vitæ innocentiam, hee exacteth not innocencie of life, &c. that is, toward juſtification: works then applie not Chriſts merits but faith.

In 5. c. ad Roman. 2 Primaſius: Impium per ſolam fidem juſtificat non opera; Hee juſtifieth the wicked onely by faith, not by works, &c. but if works applied Chriſts merits, they ſhould juſtifie, as well as faith, &c.

Harm. ſect. 14. pag. 437. Confeſſ. of Auſpurg, &c. The applying of the benefit of Chriſt, is by a mans owne faith, as Paul witneſſeth, whom God hath ſet forth to be a reconciliation through faith in his bloud, &c.

Index Hiſpan. expurg. f. 11. pag. 2. 4 Vatablus giveth this note in Cantic. 3. numer. 2. Sola gratia invenitur Chriſtus non opera hominis; onely by faith is Chriſt found, not by the helpe of man, &c. Which ſentence therefore is in their index expurgatori, noted to be blotted out.

The ſecond article, whether bona opera be expiatoria.

The Papiſts.

78. Error. THe works of charitie and mercie, as almes deeds, and ſuch like, have force to extinguiſh our ſins, as Saint Peter ſaith, Charitie doth cover a multitude of ſins, Epiſt. 1. 4. 8. Rhemiſt. ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. THe Apoſtle ſpeaketh of mutuall charitie amongſt our ſelves, whoſe propertie is to cover a multitude of our neighbours offences, as Salamon ſaith, Prov. 10. 11. Prov. 10. 11. Hatred ſtirreth up contentions, but love covereth treſpaſſes: what is this to the extinguiſhing of our ſins before God?

Argum. It is an abominable and blaſphemous opinion, that any man by his works ſhould be able to redeeme his ſins: for the Scripture ſaith, that by himſelfe Chriſt hath purged our ſins, Heb. 1. 3. Heb. 1. 3.

If he have wholy done it by himſelfe, hee hath not given this power and force of redemption to any other meanes.

If they underſtand by the force of extinguiſhing ſins, the meanes onely of applying Chriſts merits: in that ſenſe, faith onely is ſaid to ſave us, Epheſ. 2. 8. Epheſ. 2. 8.

Auguſtine: Si merita noſtra aliquid facerent, ad damnationem noſtram veniret; ſed non venit ad inſpectionem meritorum, ſed remiſſionem peccatorum: If our merits were availeable to any purpoſe, God ſhould come to our condemnation: but he commeth not to behold our merits, but to forgive us our ſins, *enarr. in Pſal.*43. Ergo, by our merits our ſins are not forgiven.

Ambroſe: Peccatum aut donatur aut deletur, aut tegitur; donatur per gratiam, deletur per ſanguinem crucis, tegitur per charitatem; Sin is either pardoned, extinguiſhed, or blotted, covered; it is pardoned by grace, blotted or waſhed away by Chriſts bloud, covered by charitie: apolog. David, cap. 13. So then though before men by love and charitie offences may be covered, yet before God by grace onely and faith in Chriſts bloud, are they blotted and extinguiſhed. And that is Ambroſe meaning, that before God ſins are not covered by charitie, but by faith, it is evident by his owne words: Remittere, tegere, non imputare, una ratio, unus eſt ſenſus; To remit, to cover, not to impute, have all one ſenſe: in 4. ad Roman. But he had ſaid before, that ſins are pardoned and ſo remitted by grace: Ergo, by grace and faith they are alſo covered.

1 Cyrillus further ſaith, Ne juſtificari opere putemus, ne gratiam Dei meritis noſtris, ſed fide affuturam nobis ſperemus; That wee ſhould not thinke to be juſtified by worke, nor hope for grace by our merits, but by faith, &c. Lib.4. in Joann. cap. 51.

2 Chryſoſtome upon theſe words, With thee is mercie, as he is cited by Ieremie the Patriarch, Hoc eſt non in noſtris recte factis ſed in tua bonitate ſitum eſt, ut tantam effugiamus damnationem, &c. that is, it lieth not in our well doing, but in thy goodneſſe, that we eſcape ſo great damnation, &c. Cenſur. oriental. cap. 6.

3 Confeſſ. of Bohemia, cap. 4, Neither hath any man, of all things whatſoever any thing at all, whereby he may deliver, ſet free, or redeeme himſelfe from his ſins and condemnation. Confeſſ. of Baſil, The faithfull doe worke not to ſatisfie for their ſins, but onely that in ſome ſort they may ſhew themſelves thankfull unto God. Harm. ſect. 6. pag. 95. Sect. 9. pag. 249.

4 Vatablus giveth this marginall note, Eccleſ. 9. Per juſtitiam operum neſcit homo amore an odio dignus ſit; By the righteouſneſſe of works, a man knoweth not whether he be worthie of love or hatred, &c. then cannot his works expiate or redeeme his ſins: this note is likewiſe in their Index, blotted out. Index expurg. Hiſpan f. 11. pag. 1.

The third article, whether our works be meritorious.

The Papiſts.

GOd giveth as well everlaſting life and glorie to men, for and according to their works, as hee giveth damnation for the contrary works Rhemiſt. Roman. 2. ſect. 2. And men by their works, proceeding of grace, doe deſerve or merit heaven, and the more or leſſe joy in the ſame, 1 Cor. 3. ſect. 2. 79. Error.

Argum. 1. Hee will render to every man according to his works, Rom. 2. 6. Every man ſhall receive his reward according to his labour. Here we ſee the Kingdome of heaven is a retribution, hyre, wages for works: Ergo, our works are the value, price, worth and merit of the ſame, Rhemiſt. Rom. 2. 6.

Anſw. Our labours and works are a meaſure of the reward, according to the which God doth meete out and render unto his Saints of the heavenly reward: but they are no meritorious or deſerving cauſe thereof. The reward is of mercie, not of deſert; of grace, not of merit: for life eternall is the meere gift of God through Ieſus Chriſt, Rom. 6. 23. But the wages of ſin is death. Where the Apoſtle doth ſet a manifeſt difference betweene the reward of the righteous, and the juſt recompence of the wicked: for life eternall is the free and gracious gift of God, not deſerved: but eternall damnation is the due debt of ſin. Wherefore the Papiſts doe bid open battell to the Apoſtle, in ſaying, that the one is as due by debt as the other. Rom. 6. 23.

Argum. 2. S. Paul ſaith, That there is a crowne of righteouſneſſe laid up for him, which God the juſt Iudge ſhall give him: Ergo, the crowne is given not of mercie, but of juſtice, as a wages and juſt recompence to the Apoſtle. 2 Timoth. 4. 8.

Anſw. God rendreth heaven as a juſt Judge, not to the merit and worthineſſe of our works, but to the merit and worthineſſe of Chriſt, and as due to us by his promiſe made to us in Chriſt. The reward therefore of heaven is of the mercie of God, who hath freely promiſed it us in Chriſt. It is of his juſtice, in that he is faithfull and juſt in keeping of his promiſe made to us: So that it is a debt, not in reſpect of any deſert in us, but in regard of his one promiſe; As Auguſtine ſaith; Debitorem ipſe ſe Dominus fecit, non accipiendo, ſed promittendo: Non ei dicitur redde, quod accepiſti, ſed redde quod promiſiſti; God hath made himſelfe a debtor, by promiſing, not by receiving any thing at our hands: Wee ſay not to him, render that thou haſt received, but give that which thou haſt promiſed: In Pſalm. 83.

Alexander Setõn Preacher and Martyr thus witneſſeth: If you aske if good works ſhall bee rewarded, I ſay yea, and with no leſſe than eternall glorie: but for no merit they deſerve, but onely becauſe God hath promiſed, not for the merit of the worke, but for his promiſe ſake, and he will not breake his promiſe, Fox. pag. 1206.

Argum. 3. Further, theſe places are produced for the proofe of merits.

Matth. 5. 12. Matth. 20. 8. 1 Life everlaſtrng is in Scripture called merces, a recompence or reward, therefore good works do properly merit, Rejoyce and be glad, great is your reward in heaven: Call the labourers, and give them their hire.

Matth. 25. 34. verſ. 21. 2 Good works are rendred as the cauſe, why eternall life is rendred, Come yee bleſſed inherit the Kingdome, for when I was hungred ye gave me meat, &c. Thou haſt beene faithfull in little, I will make thee ruler over much, enter into thy Maſters joy.

Matth. 19. 17. 1 Tim. 4. 8. 3 Life eternall is promiſed to good works: If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the Commandements. Godlineſſe hath the promiſe both of this life and the next: So then, as he that promiſeth, is endebted by promiſe; ſo he that worketh, and fulfilleth the condition meriteth.

Luke 10. 7. 2 Theſ. 1. 5. Apocal. 3. 4. 4 The Scripture counteth men worthie: The labourer is worthie of his wages. That ye may be counted worthie of the Kingdome of God, for which ye ſuffer: They ſhall walke with mee in white, for they are worthie.

Rom. 2. 11. Galath. 2. 6. 5 God is no accepter of perſons: There is no reſpect of perſons with God: Therefore he giveth unto every man according to their works, Bellarm. lib. 5. de juſtif. c. 3.

1 Anſw. Firſt Auguſtine ſaith, Quicquid promiſit indignis promiſit, ut non quaſi operibus merces promitteretur, ſed gratia gratis daretur; Whatſoever God hath promiſed, hee hath promiſed to thoſe that are unworthie, that it ſhould not bee promiſed as a reward unto works, but as grace freely given: Præfat. in Pſalm. 109. The argument then followeth not, there is a reward, Ergo, merit: For the reward may be counted of favour as well as of debt, Rom. 4. 4. Secondly, S. Ambroſe inferreth the cleane contrarie concluſion: Cum hi qui in multo labore ſudarunt, &c. Seeing they, which were in all the labour received no more than the laſt, Intelligant donum ſe gratiæ non operum accepiſſe mercedem; Let them know that they received a gift of grace, not a reward of their works, Ambr. lib. 1. de vocat. gent. c. 3.

2 Good works are alleaged not as the cauſe or reaſon of life, but as the way and order thereunto; Saint Ambroſe ſheweth the reaſon, Habet vitam æternam fides, quia fundamentum eſt bonum, habent & bona facta, quibus vir juſtus & dictis & rebus probatur: Faith hath life eternall, as a good foundation, and good works alſo, whereby a righteous man is proved in word and deed, Officior. lib. 2. c. 2. Good works then are recompenſed as teſtimonies and proofes of our faith.

Rom. 4. 16. Rom. 4. 3. 3 Promiſe and merit or worke cannot ſtand together, but promiſe is the object of faith: It is by faith, that the promiſe might be ſure, and that which is of faith is not of debt: as the Apoſtle ſheweth, To him that worketh, the wages is counted of debt; to him that worketh not, faith is counted, &c. And Ambroſe, Veniam tanquam ex fide ſperemus, non tanquam ex debito; Let us hope for pardon as of faith, not of debt, lib. 2. de pœnitent. c. 8. Wherefore it followeth not, God promiſeth life with a condition, Ergo, by the condition performed wee doe merit: ſeeing that the reward dependeth upon the promiſe which is apprehended by faith, and ſo is not of merit.

4 Firſt, he that laboureth in the Goſpell, is worthie of his wages before men, but it followeth not that it is ſo before God. Secondly, the text is: That yee may be counted worthie: and verſ. 11. That God may make you worthie: we are not then verily worthie, but as it pleaſeth God in Chriſt to account us worthie. Ambroſe ſaith well, Quantum ad cæterorum comparationem pertinet, hi digni ſunt, quantum ad rem ipſam omnes indigni ſunt; In reſpect of others they are worthie, but in deed in reſpect of the thing, they are all unworthie, in 2 Timoth. c. 1.

5 God is no accepter of perſons, to admit unto life thoſe that have not laboured in his name, and to refuſe others with their righteous works: but hee giveth unto every one according to their works, but not for, or becauſe of their works: their works as lively teſtimonies of their faith, are a rule and meaſure of their reward, but no cauſe: men ſhall be both knowne here and judged there by their works, as the tree is diſcerned and judged by the fruit. Auguſtine very well upon theſe words, Matth. 7. 2. With what meaſure yee meet, ſhall be meaſured to you againe, &c. Eſt apud te menſura veniæ dandæ, invenies apud me menſuram veniæ accipiendæ, &c. There is with thee a meaſure in giving leave or pardon, thou ſhalt finde with me a meaſure of receiving pardon; in Pſalm. 143. Our works then are a meaſure, whereby it ſhall be meaſured againe to us, but no merit or deſert. Gregorie ſaith, Reddendum eſt unicuique ſecundum opera, ſed aliud eſt ſecundum, aliud propter opera reddere: It ſhall be rendred to every man according to his works: but it is one thing according another to render for works, in Pſalm. 142.

Matth. 7. 2.

Argum. 4. The Doway gloſſe-men doe alleage theſe places of Scripture to prove merits.

Exod. 1. 21. 1 Exod. 1. 21. Upon theſe words, becauſe the Midwives feared God, hee built them houſes: they give this marginall note, The feare of God is meritorious.

2 Ruth 2. 12. Boaz ſaith to Ruth: Our Lord render unto thee for thy worke, and God grant thou mayſt receive a full reward, &c. Where their marginall note is, Boaz doubteth not but reward ward was due to good works. Good works are meritorious, and rewards are promiſed for the ſame, Levit.26. Pag. 704.

Contra. 1. The firſt note is grounded upon a falſe tranſlation : for he built them houſes : that is, made them to proſper, is underſtood of the Iſraelites, that they increaſed, not of the Midwives: for the pronoune affix is of the Maſculine Gender, lahem, to them : it ſhould be lahen in the feminine, if it were referred to the Midwives.

2 The ſecond place ſheweth, that good works ſhall be rewarded, which wee denie not, but not of merit ; or the worthineſſe in them ; but becauſe of faith, whereof they are teſtimonies : as it followeth in the ſame place, under whoſe wings thou art come to cover thee : it was her faith in God, which made her works acceptable.

3 The bleſſings there promiſed, are not given for the merit or worthineſſe of their works, but becauſe of Gods promiſe, who crowneth in mercie the imperfect obedience of his children : as it is in the Pſalme, which crowneth thee with mercie. Pſal. 103.4.

Argum. 5. Now whereas divers Fathers are alleaged for merits, as Ignatius epiſtol. ad Roman. Ut Deum poſſim promereri ; That I may merit God : Hilar. c. 8. in Matth. De noſtro eſt beata illa æternitas promerenda ; Wee muſt merit heaven of our owne. Ambroſ. lib. 1. de offic. c. 15. Evidens eſt meritorum aut præmia aut ſupplicia manere poſt mortem ; It is evident, that either reward or puniſhment of our merits doe remaine after death, Bellarm. c. 4.

Our generall anſwer to theſe and the like places of the Fathers is this : Firſt, that this word promereri, to merit, ſometime ſignifieth nothing elſe but to pleaſe or be acceptable : as Heb. 13. 16. with ſuch ſacrifice, promeretur Deus, God is merited, as the vulgar Latine readeth ; the word is εὐαρεστεῖται, is pleaſed : and ſo the vulgar text tranſlateth, Hebr. 11. 6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God : and in this ſenſe Ignatius is to be underſtood. Hebr. 13. 16. Hebr. 11. 6.

Secondly, promereri ſignifieth as much as ſatagere, for a man to endevour or put forward himſelfe, or to doe ſervice ; as the Latine phraſe is uſed, mereri ſub aliquo, to ſerve under one : ſo Hilarie is to be interpreted : for otherwiſe heaven is not merited, de noſtro, of our owne. And as it followeth, præſtandum aliquid eſt ex proprio, ſomewhat muſt be performed of our owne : but he that meriteth, muſt not doe ſomewhat, but the whole : it ſignifieth therefore ſervice rather and diligent endevour, than deſert properly.

Thirdly, ſometime meritum, merit is taken abſolutely, for opus, worke : as Augustine ſo taketh it, Tract. 3. in Ioann. Deus coronat dona ſua, non merita tua. (i. opera) God crowneth his gifts, not thy merits, that is, works : for if they be properly merits, they ſhould be crowned. So then, merit noteth the ſubſtance of the worke, and not the qualitie : and thus the word alſo may have a tolerable ſenſe.

Fourthly, the fathers uſe the word merit, properly referring it unto the efficacie of Chriſts death, and the merits thereof : as Auguſtine ſaith, Mors ejus meritum meum—non ſum meriti inops, quamdiu ille miſerationum Dominus non defuerit ; His death is my merit -- I am not without merit, as long as my Lord is not without mercie, Manual. c. 22. In this ſenſe Bernard : Meum meritum miſeratio Domini, non ſum inops meriti, quamdiu ille miſerationum non eſt ; My merit is Gods mercie, I am not without merit, as long as he is not without mercie : Cantic. 61. Gods mercie in Chriſt, or Chriſts merit by Gods mercie is our merit.

Fifthly, mereo, ſignifieth abſolutely to get, to compaſſe, obtaine : as Plaut. Meruit illa virum dote ; She got or obtained an husband with her dowrie. Thus Auguſt. ſerm. de tempor. 252. Nullis præcedentibus meritis per gratiam Dei meruimus fieri templum Dei ; Without any merits going before by grace we merited (that is, obtained) to be the temple of God, &c. otherwiſe the grace of God properly is not merited. And how can we merit without merit, as here it is ſaid? And Ambroſe ſaith : Lex ſpiritus dat libertatem, ſolam fidem poſcens, &c. The law of the ſpirit giveth libertie requiring only faith, that becauſe it beleeveth, that which it ſeeth not, de conditione erus mereatur, it may deſerve to be delivered : that is, obtaine, in 2 Cor. 3. for otherwiſe faith meriteth not : As Ambroſe againe, Veniam tanquam ex fide ſperemus, non tanquam ex debito, &c. Let us hope for pardon as of faith, not of debt, lib. 2. de pœnit n. c. 8. But if it were by the merit of faith, it ſhould be of debt. And Auguſtine : Non pro merito accipies vitam æternam, ſed pro gratia, fides enim gratia ; Thou ſhalt not receive life eternall for merit, but for grace, for if faith is grace, &c. Tract. 3. in Ioann. Ergo, there is no merit of faith properly. If the fathers be underſtood in any of theſe ſenſes, when they ſpeake of merit, though the phraſe be not proper, it is tolerable : otherwiſe if they be conſtrued to aſcribe the Kingdome of heaven any way to mans merit, they ſpeake contrarie to themſelves, as after in our arguments followeth to be ſhewed.

The Proteſtants.

WE confeſſe a neceſſarie uſe of good works : As firſt, they doe ſerve as notable meanes and inſtruments to ſet forth Gods glorie by. Secondly, by them alſo our faith is ſhewed, publiſhed and made knowen, for the good example of others. Thirdly, our owne conſcience alſo is thereby quieted, and our election daily made more ſure unto us : wee doe grow and increaſe in the certaintie and aſſurance thereof. But we acknowledge no power, force, or efficacie at all in them to deſerve and merit any thing at the hands of God, neither doth the Scripture in any place ſo ſpeake. Matth. 5. 16. Jam. 2. 18. 2 Pet. 1. 10.

Argum. 1,

Dan.9.9. Argum. 1. If man conſider his deſerts, he ſhall finde, that he is worthie of nothing but death: To us (ſaith the Prophet) belongeth ſhame, Dan.9.9. There is nothing elſe by debt due unto us: as Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Nihil praeceſſerat in meritis noſtris, niſi unde damnari deberemus; Nothing goeth before in our merits, but that whereby we ought juſtly to bee condemned, in Pſal. 18. expoſit. 2. And againe, Omne peccatum noſtra eſt negligentia, omnis virtus & ſanctitas eſt Dei indulgentia, in Matth. ſerm.7. All evill and ſin in us, is of our owne negligence; all goodneſſe and holineſſe, of the free mercie of God. Si miſericordia Domini multa, multus ego in meritis; If the mercies of God be many, my merits are many, Gods mercies are our merits, Manual. c. 22. our due debts are nothing elſe but puniſhment for ſin.

Rom. 8. 18. Argum. 2. Betweene the deſert or merit, and the wages or recompence, there ought alwayes to be ſome proportion: a like ſtipend for a like labour: But heaven without compariſon exceedeth the worthineſſe of our works: Ergo, it is not given as a debt, but as a free gift: therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that the afflictions that are preſent, are not worthie of the glorie that ſhall be revealed, Auguſtine ſaith, Quàm parvo conſtat regnum cœlorum? duobus minutis emit vidua regnum cœlorum; How little doth the Kingdome of God ſtand us in? a certaine widow for two mites bought the Kingdome of heaven, Homil.8. -- Shall wee thinke that the widowes caſting in of two mites deſerved the Kingdome of heaven? Farre be it from us ſo to thinke: it is then a gift of favour and mercie, not wages of debt.

Argum. 3. Theſe places of Scripture doe plentifully teſtifie againſt merits, aſcribing all to the mercie of God.

Pſal. 103. 4. 1 Pſal.103. 4. Which crowneth thee in mercie and compaſſion.

Dan.9. 18. 2 Dan.c. 18. We doe not preſent our ſupplications before thee, for our owne righteouſneſſe, but for thy great mercies.

Luk.17.10. 3 Luke 17. 10. When ye have done all, ſay ye are unprofitable ſervants.

Rom. 6. 23. 4 Rom. 6. 23. The wages of ſin is death, but life eternall is the grace of God through Chriſt: Life eternall then is not ſo the wages of good works; as eternall death is of evill.

Rom. 8. 18. 5 Rom.8. 18. The afflictions of this preſent time, are not worthie of the glorie, which ſhall be revealed.

Rom. 3. 27. 6 Rom.3. 27. Your rejoycing is excluded by the law of faith: Ergo, works merit not, for then wee might rejoyce in them.

1 Anſw. Firſt, the Crowne is ſaid to be of mercie; becauſe the merits, which deſerve the crowne, are given unto us of mercie. Secondly, or Gods mercie is ſeene in pardoning our veniall ſins, while he giveth the crowne to our good works, Bellarm. c.5. reſponſ. ad argum.1.

1 Contra. Firſt, this is like the anſwer of the Pelagians; that granted, that free will was of grace, becauſe it was Gods grace and gift in giving free will to man at the firſt; as here hee ſaith it is Gods mercie in giving us merits: But as Auguſtine anſwereth to that cavill, epiſt.95. Gratia iſto, &c. That we read not of grace taken in that ſenſe with the Propheticall, Evangelicall, Apoſtolicall writings, &c. ſo neither doe wee read of mercie ſo taken. 2 The Prophet ſaith in the ſame verſe, which redeemeth thy life; and before, which forgiveth thy ſin: they may ſay as well, that Gods mercie is ſeene in giving men power to redeeme themſelves and their ſins, as in giving them power to merit. 3 If man meriteth the crowne, and Gods mercie forgiveth onely veniall ſins, then man doth more than God: for, to get the crowne, is more than to wipe away veniall and ſmall ſins: and if a man may merit the crowne, how is it, that by his merits he alſo cannot extinguiſh his veniall ſins? there is no coherence in this broken ſtuffe. 4 Mercie and merit, grace and worke cannot ſtand together, Rom.4.4. Rom.4.4. To him that worketh, it is not counted of favour but of debt; but this fellow correcteth the Apoſtle, and ſaith, Yes, it is of favour and mercie that they merit, and ſo challenge as of debt. Auguſtine well ſaith, Non pro merito accipies vitam æternam, ſed tantum pro gratia; fides enim gratia eſt, & vita æterna eſt gratia pro gratia; Thou ſhalt not receive life eternall for merit, but onely for grace; for faith is a gift or grace, and life eternall is grace for grace, tract. 3. in Ioan. But this conſequent were not good, if the ſame thing were both grace and merit.

2 Anſw. Daniel in that place doth not deſire the crowne of life, but onely deliverance from captivitie, whereunto their ſins had brought them, ibid. reſp. ad loc. 2.

Dan.9. 5. Contra. 1. If Daniel aſcribeth not a temporall deliverance to his merit, but Gods mercie; how much leſſe can our eternall and ſpirituall deliverance bee deſerved. 2 Daniel utterly excludeth himſelfe from all merit, in confeſſing with the reſt. We have ſinned, and committed iniquitie: as Hierome ſaith, in 7. ad Roman. Daniel, quem juſtum fuiſſe novimus, quaſi de ſe dicit cum aliis, peccavimus: Daniel, whom we know to have beene juſt, doth confeſſe as of himſelfe with others, we have ſinned, &c. If a righteous and juſt man be a ſinner, what place is there for merit? ſinners muſt claime mercie, not challenge merit: as the Publicane, O God be mercifull to me a ſinner.

Luk.18. 13.

1. 3 Firſt, we are unprofitable ſervants of our ſelves, but by grace made profitable.

2. Secondly, we are ſaid to be unprofitable in reſpect of God, becauſe the profit of our works redoundeth not to him.

3. Thirdly, we are taught ſo to ſay for humilities ſake, though indeed we are not unprofitable.

4. Fourthly, or the meaning is, that for all our ſervice, wee can demand no reward, ſeeing that God without reward might bind us to doe all wee doe, but that gratuito pacto, hee dealeth with us more graciouſly and liberally by his free covenant, in reſpect whereof we may ſay with the Apoſtle, There is a crowne of righteouſneſſe laid up in ſtore for me, Bellarm. ad loc. 3.

Contra. 1. By grace indeed we are made profitable, becauſe it is not in vaine in us, but not profitable 1. to merit or deſerve any thing; but profitable, in that wee are not unfruitfull: as the Apoſtle ſheweth 2 Our Saviour ſpeaketh here of ſervants, and there of ſuch as are in the ſtate of grace; for Tit. 3. 8, 14.
before grace, we are not obedient ſervants, but ſtubborne enemies: So Ambroſe ſaith, upon this place;
Agnoſce te ſervum plurimis obſequiis diſfavatatum. neq; te jactes ſi bene feciſti, quod facere debuiſti;
Acknowledge thy ſelfe a ſervant diverſly bound, neither boaſt if thou have well done, that which thou oughteſt to doe, in 17. Luc. But we cannot doe any thing well of our ſelves, but by grace: Ergo, even having received grace, we are in this ſenſe unprofitable ſervants.

Firſt, it is true, that God in himſelfe is not by our ſins hindred, or by our righteouſneſſe furthered 2. or profited, Iob 35. 6. If thou ſinneſt, what doeſt thou againſt him? if thou be righteous, what giveſt Job 35. 7.
thou unto him? and therefore good works properly are ſaid to be profitable to men: And, though before Tit. 3. 8.
men Gods glorie be ſet forth by the ſervice of the Saints, yet the profit, uſe and benefit thereof extendeth unto themſelves. 2 Wherefore, even in reſpect of our ſelves wee are ſaid to be unprofitable ſervants:
because by our ſervice wee deſerve no thanks at Gods hands: Doth he thanke that ſervant? Luk. 17. 9.
and thus Ambroſe expoundeth; Sicut tu ſervo tuo gratias non agis, &c. nec in te patitur Dominus unius uſum eſſe operis vel laboris, &c. As thou doeſt not give thy ſervant thanks, &c. ſo the Lord doth not ſuffer thee to have uſe of any one worke or labour, becauſe as long as we live, we muſt alwayes worke; in 17. Luc. The uſe then and profit of our ſervice, wherein we are ſaid to be unprofitable, is referred 3.
to our ſelves. 3 Bernard ſhall here anſwer for us, writing upon theſe words, *When yee have done all that is commanded, ſay ye are unprofitable ſervants: Sed hoc inquies propter humilitatem monuit eſſe dicendum:
plane propter humilitatem, nunquid contra veritatem*; You will ſay, we are taught thus to ſpeake for humilitie: indeed for humilitie, but not againſt the veritie, Serm. de triplic. cuſtod. 4 He anſwereth well, that we cannot challenge the crowne and reward by our works, but, ex gratuito pacto, 4. of Gods gracious covenant: which is none other thing, than we our ſelves affirme: the crowne of righteouſneſſe, whereof Saint Paul ſpeaketh, dependeth not upon the merit of our works, but 2 Timoth. 4. 8. of Gods gracious promiſe: and ſo Bernard expoundeth the Apoſtle: There is laid up for me a crowne of juſtice, &c. Eſt ergo, quam Paulus expectat, corona juſtitiæ, ſed juſtitia Dei non ſua, juſtum eſt enim ut reddat quod debet, debet autem, quod pollicitus eſt: & hæc eſt juſtitia Dei, de qua præſumit Apoſtolus, promiſſio Dei; There is then a crowne of righteouſneſſe, which the Apoſtle doth expect, but of the righteouſneſſe of God, not his owne: for it is juſt that God ſhould render that hee oweth, and hee oweth what he promiſed: this is the juſtice of God, whereof the Apoſtle preſumeth, even his promiſe, lib. de liber. arbitr.

4 Bellarm. Eternall life is ſaid to be the grace of God, becauſe our merits whereby eternall life is 4.
procured, are of grace: for otherwiſe eternall life is as well the ſtipend of juſtice, as death is the ſtipend of ſin, Bellarm. reſp. ad loc. 4.

Contra. 1. This is a moſt corrupt gloſſe, by grace to expound works: for the Apoſtle maketh a disjunction and oppoſition betweene works and grace, If of grace, then not of works, for then grace were Rom. 11. 6.
no more grace. And if it be anſwered, hee meaneth works of nature, not of grace: the Apoſtle ſaith againe, Not by the works of righteouſneſſe, but by his mercie he ſaved us; Here even works of juſtice Tit. 3. 5. and grace are oppoſed to mercie and grace: wherfore grace and works being ſo divers, the one cannot be contained in the other.

Secondly, Auguſtine ſaith, Non pro merito accipies vitam æternam, ſed tantum pro gratia, &c. Thou ſhalt not have heaven by merit, but onely by grace: tract. 3. in Ioan. This were no good disjunction, if merit could be contained in grace. And againe he ſaith, Deus videtur vitam æternam tanquam debitam reddere, cui debitum; fideli quia promeruerat; God ſeemeth to give eternall life as due; but due unto the faithfull for his faith, which is a gift or grace, &c. ibid. Due, not to the merit of faith, but the grace and gift of faith. Thus better doth he underſtand the Apoſtle, that life eternall is the gift of God, than this corrupt gloſſer.

Thirdly, Bernard ſaith, Merita omnia Dei dona ſunt, & ita homo magis propter ipſa Deo debitor eſt, quam Deus homini; All our merits are Gods gifts, and ſo a man rather for them is a debtor to God, than God to man, de annunt. Mar. ſerm. 1. Therefore our good works cannot merit of God, ſeeing he meriteth of us, becauſe he giveth us grace to bring forth good works.

5 Our afflictions indeed are not worthie in themſelves of heaven, becauſe they are but ſhort, and the reward is eternall: but yet, as Chriſts paſſions being but ſhort, for the worthineſſe of his perſon, were equivalent to everlaſting puniſhment, ſo our afflictions for the worthineſſe of charitie, are worthie of everlaſting glorie: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Our light affliction doth worke unto us an eternall waight of glorie, Bellarm. c. 3. argum. 6. 2 Cor. 4. 17.

Contra. 1. It is not farre from blaſphemie to aſcribe the like force to charitie in making our temporarie works equivalent to the eternall reward, as to the dignitie of Chriſts perſon in the execution of his paſſion to be worthie to ſatisfie for everlaſting puniſhment.

Secondly, the Apoſtle in ſaying, Our affliction worketh, &c. expoundeth himſelfe in the 18. verſe:
While we looke not on the things that are ſeene, but on the things which are not ſeene: which is the office of faith: affliction then as it ſheweth our faith, is ſaid to worke, not as the cauſe, but as the way and meane: and the Apoſtle ſaith no otherwiſe than Saint Peter, 1 Pet. 1. 7. That the triall of your faith, may be found unto your praiſe, &c. Affliction then worketh, as the triall of our faith: and it worketh no otherwiſe, but becauſe it ſhall be found, and God will not forget the ſervice of our love. Thirdly, otherwiſe the Apoſtle ſaith directly, that the afflictions are not worthie, &c. that is, not at all worthie of ſo great a reward: So Ambroſe expoundeth, Quid poſſumus dignum facere præmiis cœleſtibus? What can we do worthie of the heavenly reward? what merit can man bring, that this mortall ſhould put on immortalitie? Indigna ſunt hujus temporis paſſiones ad ſuperventuram gloriam; The paſſions of this life are unworthie the glorie to come, ſerm. 20. in Pſal. 119. So alſo Gregorie; Beatæ vitæ nullus poteſt æquari labor, nulla opera, paſſiones nullæ; To bleſſed life, no labour, worke, ſuffring can be equall, in Pſal. 142. Bernard; Quid ſunt merita omnia ad tantam gloriam? What are all our merits to ſo great glorie? ſerm. 1. de annunt. Mar.

6 Bellarm. Faith doth indeed exclude their rejoycing, that glorie in themſelves and their owne ſtrength, but not that rejoycing whereby we rejoyce in our works and merits by grace, reſp. ad loc. 7.

Contra. 1. Faith excludeth all rejoycing even in good works wrought by grace: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that rejoycing is excluded by the law of faith, and not by the law of works: if faith then exclude rejoycing, we muſt rejoyce in nothing but faith. 2 The Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 4. 2. If Abraham were juſtified by works, hee hath wherein to rejoyce, but not with God: hee ſpeaketh of Abraham as a faithfull man, and of his works, as good works; even at that time when hee beleeved, and it was counted to him for righteouſneſſe; as it followeth in the next verſe. 3 Bernard alſo ſaith, Perfecta & ſecura gloriatio eſt, cùm veremur omnia opera noſtra, ſicut teſtatur Iob de ſeipſo; omnes juſtitias noſtras non aliud eſſe quàm pannum menſtruatæ; Then our rejoycing is perfect, when we feare all our works, as Iob teſtifieth: all our righteouſneſſe is as a ſtayned clout, ſerm. de triplic. gradu. A man then is not to rejoyce in any of his works, no not in his righteouſneſſe. 4 S. Paul further ſaith, Epheſ. 2. 9. 10. Not of works leſt any man ſhould boaſt himſelfe: he muſt not boaſt of works: and what works, the Apoſtle ſheweth in the next verſe 10. Wee are his workmanſhip created in Ieſus Chriſt to good works: Ergo, wee muſt not boaſt nor rejoyce no not in good works. And thus notwithſtanding all theſe cavils, I truſt it evidently appeareth by theſe Scriptures alleaged, that our works are no way meritorious of life everlaſting.

Rom. 4. 5. Argum. 4. S. Paul ſaith, Faith is counted to him for righteouſneſſe, that worketh not: Rom. 11. 9. If it be of grace, it is no more of works, for then grace were no more grace: If of worke, then not of grace; for then worke were no more worke. We ſee that the righteouſneſſe of faith or of grace, and the righteouſneſſe of works cannot ſtand together, nor be matched one with the other.

Our adverſaries have here two evaſions: Firſt they grant, that the beginning of our juſtification, which they call the firſt juſtification, is meerely of Gods grace, neither can wee have any acceptable works before we are juſtified: but in the ſecond juſtification, which is the increaſe of the former juſtice, a man may merit by good works, Rhemiſt. Rom. 2. 3.

Anſw. This is but a late and new device of the firſt and ſecond juſtification: as afterward wee will ſhew in the proper place. The Scripture teacheth us, that not onely the beginning of our righteouſneſſe, but the finiſhing and perfecting of it, is onely by grace in Chriſt, Epheſ. 2. 5. 6. When we were dead in our ſins, he hath quickned us together in Chriſt, by whoſe grace ye are ſaved, and hath raiſed us up, and made us ſit together in heavenly places: Wee ſee that this ſalvation by grace bringeth us up to heaven: Ergo, both the firſt and ſecond juſtification are of grace, for they can bring us no further than to heaven.

Rhemiſt. 2. Works done of nature without, or before faith cannot merit: but works done by Gods grace may, and are joyned with it as cauſes of ſalvation.

Anſw. Not onely the works of nature, but even of grace alſo are excluded: We are ſaved (ſaith the Epheſ. 2. 9. 10. Apoſtle) by grace through faith, not of works: And then he ſheweth what works, namely good works, ſuch as the Lord hath ordained for us to walke in. Ergo, works alſo of grace, wrought in us by the ſpirit of God, are ſhut out from being any cauſes of our ſalvation. I conclude with Auguſtine upon Pſal. 35. 27. thoſe words of the Pſalme, Let the Lord alway be magnified: Peccator es? magnificetur, ut vocet: confiteris? magnificetur, ut ignoſcat: jam juſtè vivis? magnificetur, ut regat: perſeveras uſque ad finem? magnificetur, ut te glorificet; Art thou a ſinner? let God be magnified in calling thee: doeſt thou confeſſe thy ſins? let him be magnified in forgiving them: doeſt thou live well? let him be magnified in directing thee: doeſt thou continue to the end? let him be magnified in glorifying thee, &c. God is as much to be praiſed for all things wrought after our calling and converſion, as for mercie ſhewed before: All then is wholy to be aſcribed to Gods grace and mercy: nothing is left for our merit or deſert.

De liber. arbitr. Bernard hath of this matter an excellent ſpeech: Si à Deo voluntas eſt, & meritum; Deus igitur author eſt meriti qui voluntatem applicat operi, & opus explicat voluntati: Alioqui, ſi propriè appellantur ea, quæ dicimus noſtra merita, ſpei quædam ſunt ſeminaria, occultæ prædeſtinationis indicia, futuræ felicitatis præſagia; via regni, non cauſa regnandi; denique quos juſtificavit, non quos juſtos invenit, magnificavit; If our will be of God, then alſo our meriting: for God is the author of the merit, in applying our will to the worke, and fitting the worke to our will: otherwiſe to ſpeake properly, our merits ſo called, are but the ſeed-plat of our hope, the ſignes of predeſtination, and the forerunners of our happineſſe, the way to the kingdome, not the cauſe thereof: laſtly, whom God hath juſtified, not whom hee found juſt he glorifieth,&c. What more evident teſtimonie can we have againſt meriting of heaven? Bernard retaineth the name, but denieth the thing.

Concil. Arauſican. can. 18. Debetur merces bonis operibus ſi fiant, ſed gratia, quæ non debetur, præcedit, ut fiant: A reward is due to good workes, if they be done; but grace, which is not due nor of debt, goeth before, that they may be done,&c. All therefore is to be aſcribed to grace.

Now whereas wee doe alleage many teſtimonies of the Fathers againſt merits: Bellarmine would ſhift us of with this anſwer, that they ſpeake of man, qualis eſt ſine gratia Dei, as he is without grace, that he cannot merit by his owne ſtrength: I will therefore ſhew out of the Fathers, that even a man in the ſtate of grace cannot merit.

Ambroſ. de vocat. gent. lib. 1. c. 5. Nulla tam præclara opera exiſtere, quibus hoc, quod gratis tribuitur, per retributionis iudicium debeatur. There is no ſuch excellent works, to the which, that which is freely given, ſhould by way of retribution be owing,&c. if to no excellent works, then not to the works of grace of man is God indebted.

1 Auguſtine Hypognoſt. Cont. Pelag. artic. 3. De meritis in hoc ſeculo Chriſtianus extolli non debet, quia nemo in hac vita poſitus, dicit ſe eſſe ſine peccato, quicquid ergo in hac vita conſecutus fuerit, donum eſt, non meritum, &c. A Chriſtian muſt not bee lifted up for his merits in this world, becauſe no man here in this life can ſay he is without ſinne, whatſoever he hath in this life is a gift, not a merit,&c. he ſpeaketh of Chriſtians that are under grace.

Bernard, Quærant alii meritum, nos gratiam invenire ſtudiamus; Maria non prætendit meritum ſed gratiam quærit: Let other men ſeeke for merit, let us ſtudie to find grace: Marie pretendeth not merit, but ſeeketh grace,&c. Serm. in nativ. Mar. Marie was in the ſtate of grace, and yet depended not upon any merit.

Primaſius ſaith: Non ex operib. ſed ſola fide per gratiam vitam habere te noſti: Thou knoweſt thou haſt life not by works, but by faith onely. In 2.c.ad Gal.

2 Chryſoſtome: He that glorieth, let him glorie in the Lord: Ergo, de meritis ſuis nihil aſſignare ſibi debet: niſi peccata, quæ ſunt propria noſtra: Therefore he muſt atribute nothing to himſelfe of his merits, but onely his ſinnes, which are properly ours,&c. Ieremie Patriarke: Id, quod nos ipſi conficimus, parvum quid, &c. That which we doe is very little, or nothing at all, if it bee compared with the divine bountie,&c. In Pſal.142. Super illa, ne intres in judicium. Cenſur. orient. c.6.

3 Latter confeſſ. of Helvetia, c. 16. We doe not atribute this reward which God giveth, to the merit of man which receiveth it, but to the goodneſſe and liberalitie of God which promiſeth, &c. Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. Our Divines do teach, that it is requiſite to do good workes, not for to hope to deſerve grace by them, but becauſe it is the will of God we ſhould do them, &c. ſee alſo the confeſſ. of Saxonie. p. 246. of Wirtemb. p. 300. Harm.ſect.9. p.247. Pag.274.

4 Thomas Waldenſ. ſaith, Simpliciter quis non meretur regnum cœlorum, niſi ex gratia Dei, Simply one deſerveth not the kingdome of heaven, but of grace,&c. Vatablus hath this marginall note, Non propter juſtitiam, &c. God doth not give any thing unto men for their righteouſneſſe,&c. This note their Index would have blotted out. Tom.6. ſacram. tit.1.c.7. Ann.in 9.c. Deut.15.4.

The holy Martyrs have moſt confidently ſealed this truth: Alexander Seton Martyr: They that preach that workes doe merit, doe make workes the tree, which are but the fruit of juſtice, wrought by him that is alreadie a juſt man: Chriſt was promiſed to be our onely juſtifier: God ſaid to Abraham, in thy ſeed ſhall all people be bleſſed; he ſaid not in thy ſeeds, or in the works of thy ſeeds, but in thy ſeed, that is, Chriſt. Againe, the ſame holy Martyr and Preacher thus witneſſeth moſt confidently: He that can ſhew me in any Scripture, that works doe merit, or be any meanes to our juſtification: for the firſt Scripture, I will, without any further judgement, loſe both mine eares; for the ſecond, my tongue; for the third, my necke: Fox. pag. 1206. Yea this holy Martyr, though no Scripture were ſhewed him, neither ſhall ever bee ſhewed, yet he moſt conſtantly gave his life in the defence of this truth. But in defence of Popiſh merits, I have not heard of any that hath adventured ſo farre.

An Appendix, to this part, concerning the name of merit.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine would beare us in hand, that the name of merit is either contained in Scripture, or collected from the ſame: Lib. 5. de juſtif. c. 2. 80.Error.

Argum. The places of Scripture, which he pretendeth for proofe hereof are theſe.

1 Eccleſiaſt. 16. 12. He judgeth a man according to the merits of his workes. Eccleſ.16.12.

2 Heb. 13. 16. With ſuch ſacrifices, promeretur Deus, God is merited. Hebr.13.16.

3 The Scripture maketh mention of dignity or worthines, which is the ſame that Merit is: That ye may be counted worthie of the kingdome of God: They ſhall walke with me in white, for they are worthy. 2 Theſ.1.5. Apoc.3.4.

4 There is often alſo mention found in Scripture of reward: Your reward is great in heaven: Every man ſhall receive his wages according to his labour. And in divers other places; as, The Lord ſaith to Abraham, I am thine exceeding great reward: But where there is a reward, there merit goeth before. Matth.5.12. 1 Cor 3.8. Geneſ.15.1.

The Proteſtants.

1 Anſw. First, the Greeke text readeth onely κατὰ ἔργα according to their workes, not the merit of their works. Secondly, and in the ſame place he ſaith, As his mercy is great, ſo is his puniſhment: ſo that mens good works are rewarded not of merit but of mercie. Thirdly, neither is it all one to ſay, according to their works, and after the merit of their workes, as hee might have learned out of Gregorie alleaged before: Aliud eſt ſecundum, aliud propter opera reddere: It is one thing to render according, and another to render for works, in Pſal. 142. Fourthly, if we had no other anſwer, the authoritie of this book bindeth us not, being no part of the Canonicall Scripture.

Heb.11.6,15. 2 The word is εὐαρεστεῖται God is pleaſed: as Heb. 11. 6. the ſame word is uſed: Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: We grant that God is well pleaſed with good works, as proceeding from our faith in Chriſt: for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ. 15. Let us by him offer the ſacrifice of praiſe. By faith then in Chriſt God is pleaſed with our ſacrifice: what is this to merit?

3 Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith: That you may be counted worthy: Digni habeamini. This worthineſſe then is onely by imputation of Chriſts worthineſſe. Secondly, they are worthie to have white robes: becauſe their robes are made white in the blood of the Lambe, and the Lambe onely is found to be worthy, Apoc.7.14. Apoc.8.4.9. Apoc. 8.4.9. The worthineſſe of the Saints is none other, but the worthineſſe of the Lambe, accounted theirs by faith: for if they be worthie, then is not the Lambe onely worthie.

Rom.4.4. Pſal.103.4. 4 Firſt, the reward is counted of favour as well as of debt: Which crowneth thee in mercie. Secondly, ſeeing God himſelfe is our reward, how is it poſſible, that man can merit God? Auguſtine ſaith, that none dare or will affirme, Filium hominis—meruiſſe ut Dei filius eſſet: That the ſonne of man merited to be the ſonne of God: de corrept. & grat. c. 11. Even ſo neither can man merit to have God. Thirdly, Matth.20. further S. Ambroſe writing upon that parable, Matth. 20. where the laſt hired labourers received as much as the firſt, that did endure the heat of the day, concludeth thus: Ut intelligant donum ſe gratiæ, non operum accepiſſe mercedem: That they may underſtand that they received a gift of grace, not a reward of their labour: de vocat. Gent. lib. 1. c. 3. Thus we ſee, that out of the Scripture there can bee no ſhew made for the uſe of this word merit, being aſcribed to the works of men.

And yet further, it is granted that the Fathers uſed this word, merit, not ſignifying thereby any worthineſſe to deſerve, but, as much, as to obtaine: 1. as Auguſtine ſaith, the Apoſtles merited to be ſlaine In Pſal.35. of their owne Citizens: where it muſt not ſignifie a deſerving, for the Apoſtles by their innocencie deſerved not to be put to death.

In Pſal.143. 2 Otherwiſe Baſil, to ſpeak properly ſaith, Non quod eo dignus ſum, ſed propter benignitatem tuam: Not that I am worthie of the reward of heaven, but of thy bountie.

Harm. ſect.9. p.300. 3 In this ſenſe, the confeſſion of Wittemberg. c. 7. uſeth the word, deſerve: through the mercie of God, good works deſerve their owne, either ſpirituall, or corporall rewards, &c. They meane not, that they properly merit, for where merit is, there is no need of mercie or favour, but good works make one fit and meet to obtain the reward, which is given of mercie to them that are ſo prepared and diſpoſed.

Moral.lib.9. c.17. 4 Gregorie the great uſeth the word merit, to ſignifie to obtaine, Paul when he ſought to extinguiſh lib. 8. de juſtifi. cat.c.8. the name of the redeemer in earth, Ejus verba meruit de cœlo audire, merited to heare his voice from heaven: And hereupon, their owne Vega confeſſeth thus, I am not ignorant, that the fathers uſe this word (merit) Ubi nulla eſt ratio meriti, where is no reaſon or reſpect of merit.

The fourth part, of the diſtinction of merits.

The Papiſts.

81.Error. Act.10. They make two kinds of merit: Meritum de congruo, merit of congruitie: ſuch are the preparative works before juſtification, as were the praiers and almes-deeds of Cornelius, Act. 10. which though they be not ſimply meritorious, ex debito juſtitiæ, by the due debt of juſtice, yet they deſerve at Gods hands of congruitie, becauſe hee doth graciouſly accept them, Act. 10. ſect. 5. The other Ex Tileman. loc.11.err.22. kind, they call Meritum de condigno, merit of condignitie, when the reward is juſtly due by debt: ſuch are the works done in the ſecond juſtification, which are truly meritorious, and worthie of heaven, Gabriel. Biel. Rhemiſt. Rom. 2. ſect. 3.

The Proteſtants.

First, wee utterly denie any ſuch merit of condignitie: for S. Paul ſaith, That the afflictions of Rom.8.8. this life are not condigne of the glorie to come: Condignitie then is wholly removed and taken away.

Secondly, a reward of congruitie in ſome ſort wee grant, but neither for any thing done before faith or juſtification: for it is impoſſible without faith to pleaſe God, or doe any thing acceptable unto him, Heb. 6. 6. Neither is it of congruitie for the merit of our workes: but it is (congruum) it is agreable to the mercie and juſtice of God in reſpect of his promiſe graciouſly made in Chriſt, to reward the faithfull obedience of his ſervants: ſo then the congruitie is on Gods behalfe, not in reſpect of our works.

We are juſtified, ſaith the Apoſtle, gratis per gratiam, freely by grace, Ergo, there is no merit either of congruitie or condignitie, ſeeing all is done freely.

Rom.3.24.

1 Auguſtine ſaith, Quid ille latro attulerat de fauce ad judicium, de judicio ad crucem, de cruce in Paradiſum? I pray you what merit did the theefe bring with him from the priſon to judgement, from the judgement place to the croſſe, from the croſſe to Paradiſe? In Pſal. 55. Here was neither merit of congruitie, nor condignitie.

Auguſtine againe ſaith, Va etiam laudabili vita ſi remota miſericordia diſcutias eam Domine: Wo unto a moſt commendable life, if mercie removed, thou doeſt examine it O Lord.

Confeſſ.lib.9. c.13.

Tertullian, upon that place, Rom. 8. The afflictions of this life, are not worthie of the glorie, &c. & hic minora oſtendit incommoda pramiis ſuis, Here he ſheweth the incommodities of this life, to be inferiour than the rewards, &c. where is now the merit of condignitie?

Lib. de reſurrect. carnis.

2 Ieremie the Patriarke approveth that ſaying of Chryſoſtome: No mortall man, if an exact account be taken of his life, can ſtand before God, Nec venia & benevolentia ejus dignus inveniri, nor bee found worthie of his pardon and mercie, there is then no dignitie or worthineſſe in any mans workes, &c.

Cenſur. oriental. c.6.

3 Confeſſ. of Baſil. artic. 1. They reigne with Chriſt, becauſe they confeſſed Chriſt to be their Saviour,—without any addition of mans merit, &c. Saxonic. 17. They call it a Pelagian dreame, that righteouſneſſe ſhould deſerve remiſſion of ſinnes either of congruitie or condignitie.

Harm. ſect. 1. p.23. Sect 9. p.283.

4 Vega affirmeth: Gregor. Ariminenſ. Marſilius, Burgenſ. Eckius all to be of this opinion, Nullum eſſe nobis meritum de condigno, &c. That wee have no merit of condignitie, in reſpect of eternall happineſſe.

Opuſcul. de meritis. q.5. p.784.

The fifth part, of the manner of meriting.

The Papiſts.

OUr workes (ſay they) are pleaſing and acceptable unto God, even after the ſame manner, that Chriſt and his works were, Tapper. ex Tileman. loc. 11. err. 14. Chriſts paines of their owne nature, compared to his glory, were not any whit comparable, yet they were meritorious and worthy of heaven, not for the greatneſſe of them, but for the worthineſſe of his perſon: So our works, not of their owne nature, but as they are of grace, are meritorious of the joyes of heaven, Remiſt. Rom. 8. 18.

82. Error.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, it is a great blaſphemie, to ſay, that Chriſts paſſions in themſelves deſerved not that glorie which he hath purchaſed for us: neither that there was any compariſon between them: for then, how could he have fully ſatisfied the wrath of God? Chriſt hath payed the ranſome for our ſins: We are redeemed with his precious blood, as of a lambe unſpotted: His blood was the price of our redemption: therfore of it ſelfe meritorious. It was not in reſpect of Chriſt, of grace; but of merit in him: Unto us his redemption is of grace: Wherefore his paſſion being the paſſion of the Sonne of God, was a full ſatisfaction, and worthie deſert of that glorie, which he hath purchaſed for us.

Rom.3.24.

Secondly, it is another great blaſphemie to match and compare in the way and manner of meriting, Chriſts works and ours together. For firſt, there is no merit at all in us unto ſalvation: wee have no merits but Chriſts, and are ſaved onely by faith in him, not by workes. Secondly, by your owne confeſſion, our works are not of their nature meritorious, but of grace: but Chriſts works were of themſelves full of merit, without any externall helpe, or acceſſion of grace: for in himſelfe did all fulneſſe dwell.

Coloſſ.1.19.

1 Auguſtine very well ſheweth the great difference in the way of meriting betweene Chriſt and us, thus writing: Quantum intereſt, cum duo ſint in carcere, inter reum & viſitatorem ejus:—illum cauſa premit, illum humanitas adduxit: ſic in iſta mortalitate nos reatu tenebamur, Chriſtus miſericordia deſcendit: Look what difference there is, when two are in one priſon together, between the priſoner, and his friend that commeth to viſit him; the one is there of neceſſitie, the other commeth of good will: ſuch difference there is betweene Chriſt and us: for when we are detained in the priſon of this mortalitie, for the guilt of our ſins, Chriſt came in mercie to viſit us: tract. 2. in epiſt. Ioann. How can there now be any proportionable or like way of meriting, in the guiltie priſoner, and the innocent and friendly viſiter?

Tertullian calleth it donativum vita aterna, the donative or gift of eternall life, &c. then in reſpect of Chriſts merit, it is no gift, but deſerved.

Lib. de reſurrect, carnis.

2 Baſil ſaith, that everlaſting reſt, non tanquam debitum operib. redditum, &c. is not as a debt, rendred unto our works, but as a gift of Gods munificence.

in Pſal.114.

3 Bohemia, c. 17. They are acceptable to God without any merit or worthineſſe of theirs—of meer grace.

Harm. ſect. 2. p.26.

4 Thomas Waldenſ. concludeth, Quia non ſimpliciter quis meretur regnum cœlorum, ſed ex gratia Dei: That ſimply one doth not merit the kingdome of heaven, but by the grace of God.

Tom.8. ſacramtit. 1. c.17.

The Sixth part, of the qualitie and condition of merits.

The Papiſts.

83.Error. BEllarmine ſaith, that the good workes of the righteous, are properly and verily meritorious of eternall life, even, ex condigno, of condignitie, or worthineſſe, in the higheſt degree: Bellar. c.16. and that non ſolum ratione pacti, ſed operis, in reſpect of the work, as well as of the covenant or promiſe.

2 Tim.4.8. Argum. 2 Tim..4.8. S. Paul ſaith, that God the juſt judge ſhall give him a crowne of glorie: but it is the part of juſtice to give unto every man as he hath deſerved: the Apoſtle therfore worthily deſerved this crowne: it was of juſtice, not of mercie: Bellarm. ibid.

The Proteſtants,

Anſw. THis crowne laid up for the Apoſtle, was both of mercie, in that the Lord graciouſly promiſed it: *Iam.*1.12. He ſhall receive the crowne of life, which the Lord hath promiſed to all that love him. It was alſo of juſtice: Iuſtum eſt (ſaith Bernard) ut reddat, quod debet; debet autem, quod pollicitus eſt: It is right and juſt, that God ſhould pay what he oweth: now he oweth that which he hath promiſed, &c. All therefore was of Gods mercie toward the Apoſtle, not of his deſert. Gods juſtice in keeping his promiſe, reſpecteth not any deſert in man, but dependeth upon the conſtancie and truth of his word in himſelfe.

Iam.1.12.

Rom.8.18. Argum. S. Paul ſaith, The afflictions of this life are not condigne of the glorie, &c. Ergo, there is no ſuch condignitie.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that in their owne nature they are not worthy; but as they proceed from the grace of God, they are, *cap.*18.

*Contra.*1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh in this place of no other ſufferings, but thoſe which are wrought by grace in the children of God: as *verſ.*17. Suffer with Chriſt, that ye may be glorified with him. Therfore the Apoſtle excludeth even ſuch ſuffrings, as are wrought by the ſpirit. 2. Grace or favour, and deſert cannot ſtand together: To him that worketh, the wages is not counted of favour, but by debt. Wherfore if heaven be merited, it is of debt, grace and favour is excluded: therfore to ſay, that works are meritorious by grace, and that their worthines & condignity is partly of grace accepting, & partly of the work deſerving, is to affirme contrarie things, and match things of divers and unlike nature together.

Herein alſo he may be overthrowne by his owne poſitions: Firſt, hee ſaith that God doth reward, ſupra condignum, above the worthineſſe or condignitie of our works, *cap.*19. then it will follow, that there is no ſuch condignitie, becauſe the reward exceedeth their worthineſſe: but betweene the wages and the worke, there ſhould be an equalitie. Againe, heaven is the greateſt reward that can bee, and therefore if God doe give a reward beyond their deſert, heaven is not deſerved, for a better reward than heaven there cannot be.

Secondly, Bellarmine confeſſeth, that neither the grace of juſtification, *cap.*21. nor the gift of perſeverance to the end, or a mans reparation after his fall, can bee merited, ex condigno, of condignitie: much leſſe can the kingdome of heaven bee ſo merited, which is a more excellent thing than any of the other: our glorification far exceedeth in excellencie our juſtification and perſeverance: if the leſſe then cannnot be merited, neither can the greater.

The author of the Sermons de tempor. ſer. 210. Cum dies judicij advenerit, & ſi coronam non mereamur accipere, vel ad peccatorum indulgentiam mereamur pervenire, &c. When the day of judement ſhall come, if we deſerve not to receive the crowne, let us deſerve to attaine at the leaſt to pardon of our ſinnes, &c. Ergo, it is more to merit the crowne, than to merit forgiveneſſe: but this cannot be merited by their owne confeſſion: Ergo, not the other.

We have witneſſe of a Synod of their owne: *Senonenſ. ſynod. decr. de fide.*16. Faciet tandem miſericordia Dei unicuiq; locum juxta meritum operum ſuorum, non abſoluta condignitate quidem, (neque enim condignæ ſunt paſſiones, &c. Rom. 8. 18.) ſed gratuita magis & liberali repromiſſione, &c. At the length the mercie of God ſhall make a place to every one according to the merit of their workes, not by an abſolute condignitie, (for the afflictions of this life are not condigne, &c. *Rom.*8.18.) but rather by a gratious and liberall promiſe, &c. Ergo, our works are not properly ex condigno, meritorious.

Divers alſo of the Schoole men are of the ſame opinion, that good works, ex condigno, of condignitie, are not meritorious of life eternall: Sic Thom. Waldenſ. tom. 3. de Sacramental. c. 7. Durand. in 2. *ſenten. diſt.*27. *qu.*2. Gregor. in 1. *ſentent. diſt.*17. *qu.*1. *artic.*2. 1 Anſ. WE denie not, but that by a ſanctified life, and good workes, we may grow up to the aſſurance of our election, yet not by the merit or worthineſſe of the workes, but as they have relation unto faith, whereof they are lively ſignes: for to ſpeak properly, it is faith whereby *we have peace toward God, Roman.*5.1. And in this place the Apoſtle ſaith, They have confidence in the faith which is in Chriſt: Their confidence is grounded upon faith, unto the aſſurance whereof they are conducted and guided by their faithfull ſervice. Rom.5.1.

2 All theſe depend upon the ſecond verſe: By whom wee have acceſſe through faith unto this grace, &c. and not ſo only, but we rejoyce in tribulations. All theſe then are rehearſed, as fruits iſſuing from our faith, rejoycing in tribulation, experience, hope. Againe, hope maketh not aſhamed, *verſ.*5. becauſe the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts: but this love of Chriſt wee know no otherwiſe than by faith: *Epheſ.*3.17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith: then it followeth, *verſ.*19. and that ye may know the love of Chriſt, &c. Epheſ.3.17.19.

3 This confidence ſpringeth of faith, *verſ.*32. After ye had received light, ye endured a great fight: and therefore *verſ.*22. it is called πληροφορία πίστεως, the aſſurance of faith. Heb.10.32.22.

And in this place, *verſ.*19. Let us not love in word, &c. thereby we know we are in the truth, and ſhall before him aſſure our hearts: The being in the truth, which is faith, is the ground of this aſſurance; the way whereby to know it, is by love, Theſe places will hold no water for them. Of good workes in particular, divided into three parts, of praier, faſting, almes-deeds.

The firſt part, of prayer.

THe ſeverall queſtions are theſe: Firſt, of the fruits of prayer. Secondly, of the condition and qualitie of prayer. Thirdly, of the order.

The firſt queſtion, of the fruits.

Iam.2.13. Iam.1.5. 1 Tim.4.5. Luk.22.31.32. SUch fruits of prayer, as we learne out of the word of God, we moſt willingly acknowledge. Firſt, it comforteth the ſoule being in heavineſſe: If any be afflicted, let him pray. Secondly, it obtaineth wiſdome for us, and all ſpirituall grace. Thirdly, by prayer the good creatures of God are ſanctified to our uſe. Fourthly, by prayer are we preſerved from all ſpirituall danger: I have prayed for thee Peter, &c. And other ſuch fruits and uſes prayer hath: But theſe fruits following we doe refuſe.

The Papiſts.

86. Error. BEllarmine maketh theſe two fruits of prayer: that it is ſatisfactorie, and meritorious.

Argum. 1. For the firſt he reaſoneth thus: Every good laborious worke is ſatisfactorie: praier is a laborious worke: Ergo. lib. 1. de bon. operib. in particul. c. 3.

Anſw. 1. Though one man may ſatisfie and recompence another, yet no worke of ours can work Coloſſ.1.20. any ſatisfaction before God: but Chriſt onely by his death, hath made ſatisfaction for us all: All things are ſet at peace through the blood of his croſſe. 2 Againe, whereas they muſt be good workes, whereby God ſhould be ſatisfied, ſeeing God is the giver of every good gift and work, and all our good works proceed from him, he thus ſhould be ſatisfied with his owne, which were no ſatisfaction. 3 Further, prayer is no laborious work to the ſpirituall man, though it be to the fleſh: for in the inner man there Rom.7.22. is a ſpirituall delight in all good things. 4 And what if it were laborious? as though God delighted in the puniſhment, ſorrow, and travell of his children, as the Idolatrous Prieſts of Baal conceived of their Idoll, that by launcing of their fleſh, they ſhould be the ſooner regarded and heard.

Argum. 2. That prayer alſo is meritorious, he would thereby prove it, becauſe God is ſaid to re- Matth.6.6. ward them openly, that pray ſecretly: his reaſon is this, reward is of merit, praier is rewarded: Ergo, it is of merit.

Anſw. The propoſition is not true, for reward may as well be of favour, as of deſert: He that gi- Matth.10.42. veth but a cup of cold water, ſhall not loſe his reward. Heaven is not merited by ſo ſmall a gift: this reward then is of mercie: wherefore this place ſheweth, that prayer is not in vaine, but is accepted of God, that it is meritorious it proveth not.

The

The Proteſtants.

First prayer is not ſatisfactorie: no imperfect thing can ſatisfie before God, but our prayers are imperfect, We know not what to pray as we ought : Ergo. Againe, that onely ſatisfieth God, whereby his wrath is once for ever appeaſed; neither need that ſatisfaction often to be repeated: the reaſon is, becauſe if God be once ſatisfied, he is not mutable, he ſo continueth. But prayer muſt often be repeated, Onely Chriſt hath once for ever, &c: He hath once for all appeaſed the wrath of God, which ſatiſfaction cannot be repeated: Ergo, the death of Chriſt is onely ſatisfactorie: prayer is not. Auguſtine ſpeaking of Peters repentance, which was tempered (no doubt) with prayer, ſaith: Lachrymas lego, ſatisfactionem non lego: I read of Peters teares, but of no ſatisfaction: de tempor. ſerm. 117. See more of this, controv. 14. queſt. 7. part. 4.

Rom. 8. 26. Heb. 10. 14.

Secondly, prayer is not meritorious, nor any other religious act done by us: where merit or deſert is, there ſomewhat is performed to him, at whoſe hands we deſerve: But by our works, prayer, almes-deedes, or whatſoever, we profite not the Lord: as Iob 35. 7. If thou be righteous, what giveſt thou unto him, or what receiveth he at thy hand? verſ. 8. Thy wickedneſſe may hurt a man, as thou art, and thy righteouſneſſe may profite the Sonne of man : Ergo, prayer doth not merit at Gods hand.

Job 35. 7.

Againe, we muſt not pray, as the heathen did, Matth. 6. 7. but they thought to be heard for the merit of their long prayers: Ergo, it becommeth not Chriſtians to pray with any opinion of merit to be heard. Further, that cannot merit at anothers hand, the benefit whereof wholy redoundeth to our ſelves: But prayer is wholly for our benefit; we doe pray for ſuch things, as we need, Matth. 6. 8. therefore it cannot merit before God. Wee have alſo a direct place in Scripture againſt the merit of prayer: Daniel 9. 18. We doe not preſent our prayers before thee for our owne righteouſnes, but for thy great mercies.

Matth 6. 7. Matth. 6. 8. Daniel. 9. 18.

1 Heſychius ſaith: Chriſtus nobis propitiatio facta eſt, &c. Chriſt is made our propitiation, therefore in him the ſacrifice of penance is adminiſtred and performed, Et omne quod quis ex pœnitentia conſequitur, ad eum refertur : And whatſoever any obtaineth by repentance, it is referred to him, &c. Then prayer, which is a fruit of repentance, hath no merit in it ſelfe, but as it is referred to Chriſt.

In Levit. 7. lib. 2.

2 Auguſtine ſaith: Pœnitentia mea non ſufficit ad ſatisfactionem, certum eſt, quod miſericordia tua ſuperat omnem offenſionem : My repentance ſufficeth not for ſatisfaction, it is certaine, that thy mercie goeth beyond all offences, &c. then prayer, which doth accompanie repentance, ſufficeth not neither to ſatisfie.

Harm. ſect. 2. p. 35. Sect. 15. p. 475.

4 Gregorie Biſhop of Rome ſaith: Non in fletib. non in actis noſtris, ſed in advocati noſtri allegatione confidamus : Let us not put our confidence in our weeping, or other acts, but in the interceſſion of our advocate, &c. there is then no merit or ſatisfactorie vertue in our prayer, for then we might repoſe our truſt therein.

Hom. 7. in Ezech. in fine.

Their owne champion Vega, confeſſeth, that divers catholique and learned Divines among them, doe hold, that their merit of congruitie is but recens inventum, a new invention, &c. there is not then in prayer ſo much as any merit of congruitie.

Lib. 8. de juſtif. c. 8.

Bernard ſaith well: Conſiderare debet is, qui orat, in ſeipſo duo: ut pro ſuis meritis nihil ſe accepturum putet, ſed de Dei miſericordia impetraturum : Hee that prayeth muſt conſider two things in himſelfe, that hee thinke not to receive any thing for his owne merits, but onely for the mercie of God. In Pſalm. 91.

The ſecond Queſtion, of the conditions required in prayer.

There be divers conditions and qualities, which muſt alwaies concurre in a faithfull prayer: Firſt, that we pray in charitie, without wrath, 1 Tim. 2. 8. Secondly, wee muſt pray with the devotion and intention of the heart: God will be worſhipped in ſpirit, Ioh. 4. 24. Thirdly, we muſt perſevere and continue in prayer: 1 Theſſ. 5. 17. Pray continually. Fourthly, wee ſhould pray onely for things neceſſarie, Matth. 6. 32. Your heavenly father knoweth you have need of all theſe things : Theſe and ſuch other conditions preſcribed in the word of God, we hold to be neceſſarie in prayer: but theſe following we refuſe.

1 Tim. 2. 8. John 4. 24. 1 Theſſ. 5. 17. Matth. 6. 32.

The Papiſts.

First, Bellarmine affirmeth, that it is not requiſite to pray with faith, whereby wee beleeve and are perſwaded, that God will heare us: but it ſufficeth onely in generall to beleeve, that God is moſt mightie and moſt mercifull, both able and willing to grant our prayer, if there be no defect in us.

88 Error.

Argum. 1 David, when he prayed for the life of his childe, was not aſſured that God would heare him: for hee ſaith, Who can tell, whether God will have mercie on me, that the childe may live? Bellarm. cap. 9.

2 Cor.12.8. 2 So S. Paul prayed doubtfully, that the pricke of the fleſh might be taken from him: for he prayed of faith, and yet beleeved not that he ſhould obtaine that he prayed for, for then it ſhould have beene a falſe faith, ſeeing hee obtained not his requeſt: ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. INdeed, when we pray for temporall things, we have no warrant otherwiſe to receive them, than as God ſeeth them to be good for us: but for ſpirituall bleſſings, we may pray reſolutely with all aſſurance and confidence to be heard in Gods good time: As David, though here praying for the temporall life of his ſone, bee not ſure to obtaine; yet when hee prayeth for ſome ſpirituall Pſal.6.1.9. grace, as for the forgiveneſſe of his ſinne, Pſalm.6.1. hee is aſſured, that his prayer is received, verſ.9. The Lord hath heard my petition, he will receive my prayer. This difference betweene the requeſt of things ſpirituall, and temporall, Auguſtine well noteth: Sanitatem quis non petit, cum ægrotat? & tamen fortè adhuc ei ægrotare utile eſt, poteſt fieri ut hic non exaudiaris:—at verò cum illud petis, ut det tibi Deus vitam æternam—ſecurus eſto, accipies, &c. Who will not aske health when he is ſicke? and is not heard, for it may be good for him yet to be ſicke; but when thou prayeſt for eternall life, be ſecure and out of doubt for this matter, thou ſhalt have it, but the time is not yet: in Pſalm.59.

2 S Paul alſo prayed inſtantly, even thrice, and therefore he prayed with faith, not doubting: for though in that particular hee was not aſſured to be heard, yet hee doubted not but that God would grant to him that which was needfull; and therein he was heard: for the Lord ſaid, My grace is ſufficient for thee: So our Saviour prayed for the paſſing away of the cup of death, therein he was not heard; yet he was heard in generall, in that he ſubmitteth his human will to his Fathers will, and was heard Heb.5.7. in that which he feared, Heb.5.7. Shall we therefore inferre, that Chriſt prayed doubtfully?

We muſt pray without doubting: let him aske in faith and waver not: Iames* 1.6. The prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſicke: Iames 5.15. This confidence in our prayers, ſpringeth, as we ſee, from faith, not from an uncertaine and doubtfull hope, as the Jeſuit ſeemeth to affirme.

Iohn 16.23. Chriſt alſo ſaith, Whatſoever ye ſhall aske the father in my name, he will give it you: Iohn 16.23. here is the ground of our confidence in prayer, the promiſe of God in Chriſt Jeſus, therefore all doubting muſt be removed.

Wee have not onely the examples of holy men, but the promiſe alſo of God, for the hearing of ſinners prayers: as it appeareth by Salomons prayer made at the dedication of the temple, with the which God was pleaſed: a part of which prayer is this, that if they, which have ſinned, returne and pray unto God, and confeſſe their ſinnes: Then heare thou 1 King.8.49. in heaven, ſaith Salomon: God was pleaſed with this prayer of Salomon, and every part thereof.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſinners are heard praying for any ſpirituall or temporall gift, when they are in the way to repentance, as the Publican was: but then they are heard, Non ex juſtitia, ſed ex miſericordia; Not of juſtice as worthie, but of Gods mercie: neither are they heard certainly or infallibly.

Contra. 1. Neither is the moſt righteous man heard for his righteouſneſſe, as Daniel was a righteous man: yet he prayeth thus, We preſent not our ſupplications before thee for our owne righteouſneſſe, but thy great mercies. 2 The Publican was heard certainely being a ſinner, ſo are all other praying in faith, as our Saviour ſaith, Whatſoever ye deſire, when ye pray, beleeve that ye ſhall receive it, and it ſhall be done unto you.

Mark.11.24.

2 Chryſoſtome ſaith, Si quiſquam noſtrum, qui peccatis obnoxii ſumus, recedens à priſtinis malis, verè & ex animo promittat Deo, &c. If any of us, which are ſubject to ſinne, departing from his former wickedneſſe, doe truly and from his heart promiſe unto God, never to returne to the ſame againe, the Lord requireth nothing elſe for ſatisfaction, &c. Hee then that is ſubject to ſin, may come to God to make promiſe in his prayer, not to returne to the ſame againe.

De beat. Philogon.

3 Confeſſ. of Belgia. artic. 26. They to this purpoſe alleage that ſaying, in as much as he being tempted hath ſuffered, he is alſo able to helpe thoſe that are tempted: They then which are tempted with ſinne, may have acceſſe unto God.

Heb. 2. 18.

4 Gregorie, Biſhop of Rome ſaith: Iuſtus advocatus noſter juſtos nos defendet in judicio, quia noſmetipſos & cognoſcimus, & accuſamus injuſtos: Our righteous advocate will defend us as juſt in judgement, becauſe we know and accuſe our ſelves to be unjuſt, &c. he then that knoweth himſelfe to be unjuſt, and accuſeth himſelfe may pray, &c.

Hom. 7 in Ezech.

The third queſtion, of the order and manner of Prayer.

IT hath theſe ſeverall parts: firſt, of the time and number of canonicall houres: ſecondly, of the matter of prayer: thirdly, the manner: fourthly, of the perſons.

The Firſt part, of Canonicall houres.

The Papiſts.

THey have their nocturne houres, and diurne or day houres appointed for prayer: In the night, the third, ſixth, ninth, and twelfth houre, which were called the foure watches of the night: In the day they obſerve the prime, the firſt houre, the third, the ſixth, the ninth, and the twelfth: and they have their complin immediatly after the evening or twylight.

90. Error.

Argum. Theſe canonicall houres the Jeſuit would warrant by the example of David, who prayſed God ſeven times a day. David alſo kept his nocturnes: At midnight will I riſe up, and praiſe thee: Thou ſhalt heare my voyce in the morning. In theſe houres alſo the greateſt myſteries of our redemption were wrought by our Saviour Chriſt: as in the veſpertine, or twelfth houre he inſtituted the Sacrament, at complin hee was taken, in the prime led to Pilate, in the third houre condemned, in the ſixth crucified, in the ninth he gave up the Ghoſt: theſe houres therefore are conſecrate by Chriſts example unto prayer: Bellarm. cap. 13.

Pſal. 119. 164.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. 1. FIrſt, we denie not, but that at all times and houres both of the day and night, it is lawfull to pray, ſo oft as we are aright diſpoſed thereunto, as the Prophet David did.

Secondly, further we alſo grant, a politike uſe in the Church of ſet houres for prayer, both puplikely in the Church, and privately in families, for order and decencie ſake; ſo it be done without any ſuperſtitious opinion of the houre and neceſſarie limitation of our prayers thereunto: and in this ſenſe wee refuſe not the councell of the author of the Epiſtle ad Demetriad. which goeth under Hieromes name: Quanquam nullam prorſus horam à ſpiritualis profectus vacuam eſſe conveniat, &c. Although it bee not convenient, that any houre ſhould be void of ſpirituall exerciſe, yet there ſhould be ſome determinate and appointed number of houres, quo plenius Deo vaces, & qui te ad ſummam animi intentionem quaſi lege quadam contineat: In the which you ſhould more fully be vacant for God, and which as by a law ſhould binde you to a greater intention of the minde: I thinke the morning the fitteſt time for this, and the greater part of the day, uſq; ad horam tertiam, till the third houre, or three a clocke, &c. Here are three reaſons given of ſet houres, which we miſlike not. 1 That we may ſet all other buſineſſe aſide, and be vacant onely for God. 2 That the houre comming, wee may prepare our ſelves more zealouſly to pray. 3 That the morning bee choſen, as the fitteſt time of the day: But of the veſpertine and complin and prime, here is no mention.

3 Yet it followeth not, that our prayer ſhould be tied and limited unto certaine houres. Neither hath David any ſuch meaning, in ſaying, ſeven times a day, he meaneth, that often times in a day hee

Pſal.119.97. Pſal.55.17. praiſed God: verſ.97. He meditated in the law of God continually: And *Pſalm.*55.17.theſe ſeven times, he reduceth to three times, Evening, morning, and at none will I pray: hee kept therefore no certaine time. Further, if they ſtand ſo ſtrictly upon Davids example, why doe they not keepe their nocturne Pſal.119.62. houres? as David ſaith, He roſe at midnight, and his eyes prevented the night watches: Their nocturne watches are too painfull for them.

Secondly, concerning the example of Chriſt, we ſay that not onely theſe houres, but every houre of the day and night was conſecrated with ſome vertuous act of his: that, as Leo ſaith of feſtivall dayes, Leo 1.epiſt.4. cap.4. that if we ſhould keepe all dayes holy, wherein Chriſt did any notable thing, Omnia tempora continuatis erunt deputanda feſtis: All times ſhould be feſtivall: ſo if all houres ſhould be obſerved for prayer, wherein Chriſt wrought any part of our redemption: then we ſhould doe nothing elſe but pray. See our reaſons againſt their Popiſh nocturnes and canonicall houres: Controv. 5. quaſt. 6. part. 3. & controv. 9 quaſt. 8. appendix.ad 4. partem.

Pſal.119.147. S Ambroſ. ſaith notably upon theſe words, I prevented the morning light: Qui ergo Dominum deprecatur, non velut præſcripta præcipue tempora præſtoletur, &c. ſed ſemper in corde ſit Chriſtus, ſemper in ore ſit Chriſtus: He that prayeth to the Lord, let him not ſtay as it were, for the preſcript times; but let Chriſt be alwayes in his heart, alwayes in his mouth, *ſerm. 19. in Pſal.*119.

Lib.adverſ. Pſychicos. 1 Tertullian is here a plentifull witneſſe, for having made mention of the third houre, when the Apoſtles received the holy Ghoſt; of the ſixth, when Peter went up to pray: Act. 10. of the ninth, when he and Iohn whent to the Temple: he thus inferreth; Cur non intelligamus ſalva plane indifferentia, ſemper & ubiq́, & omni tempore orandum, &c. Why ſhould we not underſtand without any difference, thas alwayes & every where, and at all times we ought to pray, &c. yet he granteth that theſe three houres, the third, ſixth and ninth, ut inſigniores in rebus humanis, &c. as being more notable in human affaires, becauſe they divide the day, and diſtinguiſh buſineſſe, ita & ſolenniores fuiſſe in reb. divinis, Were alſo more ſolemne in divine matters: and further he ſaith, that Peter did obſerve the ninth houre ex vetere uſu, according to the old uſe and cuſtome, meaning of the Jewes, and that it was now grounded onely upon tradition, wanting the authoritie of Scripture. This was the judgement of the elder Africane Church: but the moderne Æthiopike Church is ſomewhat declined: for they Damianus a Goes de morib.Æthiop. have their ſeven houres both by night and day, wherein they attend divine ſervice: yet upon the Lords day, it ſeemeth, they obſerve them not, for they come together at the third houre, and ſpend the time in hearing the Prophets read, and in preaching: as Zaga Zabo their Biſhop teſtifieth.

Hom.14.in 8. c.ad Roman. 2 Chryſoſtome exhorteth ad matutinas & nocturnas orationes: to morning and evening prayer: other canonicall houres he ſpeaketh not of: and as he ſaith of the place, Chriſtianos ad certum aliquem locum non eſſe alligatos, That Chriſtians are not tied to any certaine place, as were the Jewes, the like reaſon may ſerve againſt the tying of prayer unto times and houres.

Harm.ſect.15. p.477. 3 Confeſſ. of Wittemberg. c.27. They ſimply miſlike not, that ſet times ſhould bee appointed for the reading of Scripture: but this they condemne, to appoint a ſpeciall kinde of Prieſts to chaunt out thoſe canonicall houres, and to ſing them in a ſtrange tongue, and in ſome places in the night and day without intermiſſion,—and to make hereof a worſhip, &c.

4 They are not themſelves agreed concerning the time of their canonicall houres; as for completorium, the complin, Rabanus holdeth, that it ſhould bee celebrate hora undecima, in the eleventh houre, that is, the houre before Sunne ſet, the laſt but one, lib. 2. de inſtit. Cleric. c. 8. Smaragdus Abbas ſaith horam duodecimam, that the twelfth, that is, the laſt houre of the day, belongeth to Complin: comment. ad cap. 16. regul. S. Benedic. The reſt doe generally holde, that Complin is in the beginning of the night.

The ſecond part, of the matter of divine ſervice and Prayer.

91 Error. IN the matter of their ſervice we take exception againſt two parts of their leiturgie chiefly: firſt, we miſlike the reading of the fabulous ſtories of their Saints lives in ſtead of the Scriptures, which Nehem.8. onely ought to be reade in the Church, as it may thus appeare; Nehem. 8. Ezra did reade from morning to midday only in the booke of the law: The Jewes did reade the Prophets onely in their Synagogues upon the Sabbath day: and Moſes, Act. 15. 21. And Chriſt ſendeth us no whither but to Act.13.27. 15.21. John 5.39. the Scriptures: Search the Scriptures.

See the conſent of antiquitie: Concil. Laodicen. can. 59. Non oportet libros extra canonem legere. Carthag. 3. can. 47. Placuit ut præter Scripturas canonicas nihil in Eccleſia legatur ſub nomine divinarum Scripturarum: It was decreed, that nothing beſide the canonicall Scriptures, ſhould be read for Scripture in the Church.

Gelaſius alſo thus decreed of this matter: Geſta ſanctorum Martyrum, ſecundum antiquam conſuetudinem, ſingulari cautela, in Eccleſia Romana non leguntur, quia & eorum qui conſcripſerunt, nomina ignorantur, & multa ſuperflua, aut minus apta ſcripta putantur: The deedes of the Martyrs, we have provided, not to be read any more in the Roman Church, afore time; becauſe their names are not knowne that writ them, and there is much ſuperfluous and unfit matter there written: Decret. de Apocryphis.

Yet for all this, the Jeſuit would beare us downe, that it is a commendable uſe of the Church, to reade ſuch ſtories ſtill: *Bellarm.cap.*14.

Secondly, 1. We condemne that idolatrous and blaſphemous ſong, called (Salve Regina) endited to the honour of the Virgine Marie; but to the diſhonour of Chriſt. 92. Error

2 They call her in this ſong, matrem miſericordiæ, the mother of mercie: which is a title proper unto God, to be called the father of mercie, 2 *Cor.*1.3. 2 Cor.1.3.

3 They call her our life: but Chriſt only is the way, the truth and the life, Iohn 14.6. Iohn 14.6.

4 Another title is (dulcedo) our ſweetneſſe, or comfort: but the Lord our God, onely is the God of all comfort. 2 *Cor.*1.3. 2 Cor.1.3.

5 This ſong calleth Marie our hope: But the Scripture holdeth them accurſed that make man their confidence, *Ierem.*17.5. Ier.17.5.

6 They pray unto Marie in this ſong, Ut poſt hoc exilum Ieſum oſtendat, That ſhe would ſhew unto us Jeſus after this life: contrarie to the Scripture; for God the father bringeth us to Chriſt, *Ioh.*6.44. and it is the office of Chriſt to ſhew himſelfe to us, Iohn.4. 21. It is great Idolatrie then to aſcribe this office proper unto God, to any other: yet notwithſtanding all theſe blaſphemies, this ſong is defended by the Jeſuite: *cap.*15. Iohn 6.44. Iohn 4.2.

Bellarmines anſwer is here moſt abſurd.

1 Marie is called or ſaluted by the name of Queene; as all other Saints are, *Matth.*5.3. Bleſſed are the poore in ſpirit, for theirs is the Kingdome of heaven, lib. 1. *de bon. operib.c.*15. and ſhee more ſingular is called a Queene, being the mother of the King of Kings. Matth.5.3.

Contra. 1 If Marie be no otherwiſe a Queene than all other Saints are, as it is ſaid, He hath made us Kings and Prieſts; then every faithfull woman in earth is a Queene as well as ſhee. 2 Why doe you then rob other Saints of this title, and give it onely to her, if it be common to the reſt? 3 We are all indeed Kings and Prieſts, but unto God, that is, ſpiritually, by faith, we are not made Kings one to another. 4 As Marie was the mother of the King of Kings, ſo was ſhee the mother of God; if the firſt make her a Queene, the ſecond muſt make her a Goddeſſe: and ſeeing Chriſt was a King, while hee lived in the fleſh, and is noted to have beene obedient to his parents, Luke 2,51. he ſhould have done his mother wrong, in not giving to her the name of a Queene, which was due unto her. Apoc.1.6. Luk.2.51.

2 She is called the Mother of mercie, becauſe ſhe was the mother of Chriſt, by whom wee obtaine mercie: and for that ſhe prayeth dayly for mercie for us, and obtaineth, ibid.

Contra. 1. Chriſt alſo is called the Sonne of David, and the ſonne of Adam: Say alſo, that Adam and David were likewiſe Fathers of mercie. 2 Marie obtaineth no mercie for us: he onely is our advocate for mercie, that is, the propitiation for our ſinnes. 3 Marie while ſhe lived, had need of mercie her ſelfe; acknowledging Chriſt to be her Saviour. Luk.3.18. 1 Iohn 2.2. Luk.1.47.

3 She is called life, becauſe ſhe was the mother of Chriſt our life, and by him made the mother of all that live ſpiritually; as Eva was the mother of all living the naturall life, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1 It is a great blaſphemie to ſay that Marie is ſo the mother of the ſpirituall life, as Eva was of the naturall: what is this elſe, but to make Marie the Saviour of the world? 2 The prerogative to be Chriſts mother ſpiritually, Chriſt giveth to all faithfull beleevers and followers, Matthew 12.50. Will you ſay alſo that every faithfull woman that ſpiritually beareth Chriſt, is life? 3 Jeruſalem, which is from above, is the mother of us all: The Church of God is the mother of the ſpirituall life: have we then two mothers? 4 Chriſt ſaith, I am the way and the life. If Marie be the life, make her alſo the way. Matth.12.50. Galath.4.26. Iohn 14.6.

4 Shee is called the ſweetneſſe, becauſe of the innumerable benefits wherewith ſhee continually comforteth the afflicted, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1 The Prophet David ſaith: Taſte and ſee how ſweet the Lord is, bleſſed is the man that truſteth in him: will you have alſo the Virgine Marie truſted in, or ſo truſted in, as that they are not bleſſed, that truſt not in her? 2 Chriſt ſaith, I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another comforter: Doth he meane his mother ſhall be this comforter? or will you make two comforters, whereas Chriſt will ſend but another beſide himſelfe? how then is the Virgine Marie become a comforter of the afflicted? 3 S. Paul ſaith, God which comforteth the abject, comforted us: Is not God ſufficient to comfort the afflicted, but yee muſt alſo make the Virgine Marie a comforter? miſerable comforters are ye, that drive us to ſuch comforts. Pſal.34.8. Iohn 14.16. 2 Cor.7.6.

5 We may truſt in men, ſo that wee chiefly truſt in God: as Chriſt ſaith of the Jewes, There is one which accuſeth you, even Moſes in whom ye truſt: and thus alſo may we truſt in the virgine Marie, Bellarm. ibid. Iohn 5.45.

Contra. 1. By truſting in Moſes, our Saviour underſtandeth Moſes law or Moſes writings: as to beleeve Moſes, is to beleeve Moſes writings: And where it is ſaid, Moſes hath in every Citie them that preach him: Is it to bee underſtood of Moſes perſon, or Moſes doctrine? And thus the Jewes themſelves ſhew how they truſted in Moſes: We are Moſes diſciples, we know that God ſpake by Moſes: their truſt then was in his doctrine. 2 But, that God onely is to be truſted in, the Prophet teacheth: Whom have I in heaven, but thee? S. Ambroſe well ſaith, writing upon theſe words, 1 Cor. 3. What is Paul, what is Apollos, but your Miniſters? Ut quia miniſtri ſunt, ſpes in his non ſit, ſed in Domino cujus miniſtri ſunt: Becauſe they are miniſters, let not truſt be in them, but in the Lord, whoſe Miniſters they are. Ioh.5.46.47. Act.15.21. Iohn 9.29. Pſalm.73 25. 1 Cor 3.

1 Tim.4.16. James 5.20.

6 Like as S. Paul ſaith to Timothie : Take heede unto learning, and thou ſhalt both ſave thy ſelfe and them that heare thee: and S. Iames, He that hath converted a ſinner, &c. ſhall ſave a ſoule from death: as men may ſave others by preaching, prayer, converting; ſo the Virgins prayer is ſaid to ſhew us Chriſt by her interceſſion, Bellarmin. ibid.

1 Tim.4.16. Iam.5.16. Iohn 14.21. Iohn 17.24.

Contra. 1 If Marie doe but ſhew you Chriſt by her mediation, then other Saints, whom yee make your mediators, doe as much: yet you doe not pray in theſe tearmes unto them. 2 Men as inſtrumentall meanes by their preaching and prayers are ſaid to ſave others, becauſe theſe are duties preſcribed, and commanded in the word: as preaching, Take heede unto doctrine : Prayer, Pray one for another : but where hath Marie any ſuch office committed to her to ſhew us Chriſt, or to be a Mediator to that end? 3 Chriſt ſaith, I will ſhew mine owne ſelfe unto him : What neede we then a Mediator to him, to ſhew himſelfe? Yea, and he himſelfe is our Mediator herein; Father I will, that they, which thou haſt given me, be with me, &c. that they may behold my glory : Doe ye thinke that Chriſt is not a ſufficient Mediator of himſelfe, but that you muſt joyne another with him? Thus we ſee, notwithſtanding all theſe ſhifts, and miſtie conceits, that they cannot bring any good defence or excuſe for this their idolatrous ſong of (Salve Regina.)

Lib.7.in 24.c. Levit.

What was the matter of divine ſervice and prayer in the purer ages of the Church, 1 Iſychius of the Greeke Church teſtifieth: Sancta eſt oratio, ſancta divina ſcriptura lectio, & interpretationis auditio: The prayer is holy, the reading of the divine Scripture holy, and the hearing of the interpretation, and all things are holy, which are done in the Church ſecundum legem ejus, according to his law, &c. Here is nothing done in the Church, but according to the rule of Gods law.

Apologet.

2 The ſame was the uſe of the African Church: as Tertullian ſheweth: Coimus ad divinarum literarum commemorationem, &c. fidem ſanctis vocib. paſcimus: We come together to the rehearſing of the divine Scriptures, we feed our faith with holy ſpeech, &c.

Harm. ſect. 15. pag. 476.

3 Confeſſ. of Wittemberg. c. 7. They allow canonicall houres, wherein the whole holy Scripture ſhould be publikely overrunne every yeere.

4 Now let us ſee what teſtimonie wee have from themſelves: Eſpenc. thus rehearſeth out of Algerus de Sacrament. lib. 3. c. 13. Multi aliqua erroris verba per imperitiam precatores effundunt, &c. in quibus multa reperiuntur contra catholicam fidem : Many in their prayers unskilfully doe utter erronious words, &c. wherein many things are contained, contrarie to the Catholique faith, digreſ. lib. 1. cap. 11.

2 Nicholaus Clamengius thus complained in his time: Qualiter hac tempeſtate legatur ſacer divinæ legis Canon, &c. How in theſe dayes the divine law is read, is manifeſt: vix ſola librorum capita inchoantur, &c. ſcarcely the titles of the bookes are read: I know a Cathedrall Church in this Kingdome, wherein, when the actes of the Saints are rehearſed, from the beginning to the end, when as they come to the reading of Scripture, Lector ſingulis lectionibus vix quatuor lineas explet : the reader hardly endeth foure lines: ex citation. Eſpenc. ibid. This was another fault in the Popiſh leiturgie, that they excluded the reading of Scripture.

3 Lodovicus Vives lib. 2. de corrupt. actib. giveth this teſtimonie of their legend: Quàm indigna divis & hominibus ſanctorum hiſtoria, quam neſcio cur auream Legendam appellent, cum ſcripta ſit ab homine ferrei oris, plumbei cordis : quid fœdius dici poteſt illo libro? &c. How unworthie a ſtorie both for God and men, which I ſee no reaſon, they ſhould call a golden legend, ſeeing it was made by a man of iron lips, and a leaden heart: what can be ſaid to be more filthie than that booke? &c. Yet out of this booke the greateſt part of the leſſons upon the Saints dayes were taken: Thus their leiturgie was filled with lies and fables.

4 Lindanus lib. 3. de interpret. ſcriptur. c. 3. reporteth theſe words of Agobertus Biſhop of Lions Antiphonarium correximus, amputatis, quæ ſuperflua, levia, falſa, blaſphema, ridicula, phantaſtica multa videbantur : We have corrected the Antiphonary, cutting off many things that ſeemed ſuperfluous, light, falſe, blaſphemous, ridiculous, phantaſticall, &c. Is not here a goodly bedrowle of the vertues and ſigular qualities of their holy leiturgie? and theſe are the complaints of their owne ſide: and therefore wee can judge no leſſe, but that their Popiſh prayers and ſongs are ridiculous, blaſphemous, ſuperſtitious, &c.

The third Part, of the manner of their Church ſervice.

CONcerning their Church muſicke, and the ſinging of their ſervice, wee have ſhewed our opinion before, where we entreated of the Canon of the Maſſe: We do not condemne the commendable, uſe of ſinging in the Church, which ſerveth to many good purpoſes, but we only would have the abuſe removed: the chiefe faults committed in Popiſh Church-muſicke are theſe.

1 The yrkeſome length and tediouſneſſe thereof, produced with their multiplicitie of unedifying ſongs and leſſons: which abuſe hath beene much complained of in time paſt: Opuſcul. tripartit. lib. 3. cap. 1. In multis Eccleſiis faciunt lectiones adeo prolixas in matutinis, quod ferè nullus audiat totas matutinas, & ſi qui remanent ibi, dormiunt: In many Churches they make their leſſons ſo long at morning ſervice, that few tary the whole: and they that ſtay, fall aſleepe.

2 Their ſongs are ſet forth in an unedefying tongue, contrarie to S. Pauls rule, 1 Cor. 14. But of this matter we have already intreated at large, Controv. 1. appendic. ad tertiam quaſtionem: ſo that we need not to handle it againe here.

3 They ſing that which is not to bee ſung, as the leſſons and lectures out of Scripture, and praiers, which are to bee ſaid, and not ſung: as Hierome ſaith; Non decet orantem canere: hee that praieth muſt not ſing: praefation. lib. 2. in Habacuck.

The Apoſtle alſo diſtinguiſheth praier and ſinging, Is any afflicted? let him pray: is any merry? let him ſing. Iam. 5. 13.

Concil. Bracarenſ. 1. 30. Placuit, ut nihil veteris Teſtamenti poetice compoſitum in Eccleſia pſallatur: That no part of the old Teſtament ſhould be ſung in verſe. The decree is againſt the ſinging of leſſons. Other corruptions and imperfections in their ſinging ſervice, we have noted before, in the treatiſe of the canon of the Maſſe, whither we referre the Reader. See alſo before in the firſt controverſie, in the queſtion of the vulgar edition, and uſe of Scripture in divine ſervice.

The fourth part of the perſons that are bound to the Canonicall houres.

The Papiſts.

THis dutie, ſaith Bellarmine, belongeth onely to Monks, and thoſe which are of the Clergie. 93 Error.

Argum. 1 Chron. 15. 16. David ſpake to the cheiſe of the Levites to appoint certaine of their brethren to ſing with inſtruments of Muſicke. As the Levites were bound in the time of the law, to ſing the ſongs of the Church, ſo onely are the Monks and Clergie now. 1 Chron. 15. 16.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. FIrſt, the argument followeth not, becauſe the Levites then were deputed to the office of ſinging, that therefore the Clegie is onely bound to doe it now: for that legall diſtinction betweene the Prieſts and the people, is now taken away: And Chriſt hath made us all Kings and Prieſts now, to offer up the ſpirituall ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving. Apoc. 1. 6. Secondly, the Levites did not only ſing the ſongs of the Church, but they as more skilfull men, were appointed to moderate the voice of the people, who did ſing together with the Levites: All Iſrael (not the Levites onely) brought up the Arke with the ſound of inſtruments, Let all the people ſay, ſo be it, and praiſe the Lord. 1 Chron. 15. 28. cap. 16. 36. Thirdly, your Monks either are, or ought to be no Prieſts, but lay men; and are not therefore of the Leviticall order, and yet you permit them to ſing Pſalmes: why may not other lay men doe the like? Fourthly, we grant that all things ſhould be done in the Church in order: and therefore that it is the office of the Miniſter to moderate the aſſemblies of the people in their Chriſtian exerciſes of giving of thanks, and praier: But notwithſtanding the people may joyne with their Paſtor, both with voice and conſent of heart, in the common Pſalmes and praier, ſo that all things may be done decently and in order.

Argum. The people in Davids time did uſe to praiſe God together with the Levites, 1. Chron. 16. 36. In Nehemiah his time, at the dedication of the Temple, the people praiſed God together with the Levites, chap. 12. 31. I appointed two great companies to give thanks, and the one went on the right hand of the wall, &c. And in theſe companies were the people, verſ. 38. halfe of the people was upon the wall. The Jeſuite alſo brought in Davids example, who praiſed God ſeven times a day, for the warrant of his canonicall houres: But David was neither Monke nor Prieſt: wherefore the office of praiſe and thankſgiving belongeth not onely to ſuch. 1 Chron. 16. 36. Nehem. 12. 31. verſ. 38.

And for further evidence: 1. that the whole congregation had their part in the publike praiers and ſuffrages, Iuſtinus ſheweth: Wee riſe together, and ſend up our praiers: So alſo Nicephorus writeth of Theodoſius the younger, that when tota eccleſia fecit ſupplicationem fecit pro ſerenitate, when the whole congregation praied for faire wether, Theodoſius went before in ſinging of Pſalmes, &c. ἀνιστάμεθα κοινῇ πάντες ϗ εὐχὰς πέμπομεν Apolog 2.

2 The ſame was the uſe in the African Church as Tertulliam witneſſeth, Coimus in catum & congregationem, ut ad Deum quaſi manu facta precationibus ambiamus orantes: Wee come together into the congregation, that as with a band we compaſſe God with our praiers. &c. which place Franciſcus Zephyrus in his meditations thus expoundeth, Ut multiplicibus ex uno veluti impetu preeib. Deum propitium reddamus: that we may propitiate God, with multiplicitie of praiers as with one brunt. Apolog. adverſ. Gentes.

3 Confeſſ. of Wittemberg. c. 27. They condemne that uſe of the Popiſh Church: To appoint a ſpeciall kind of Prieſts to chaunt out canonicall houres, -- and that in ſome places in the night and in the day without any intermiſſion, new ſingers taking very often one anothers courſe, &c. Harm. ſect. 15. pag. 477.

4 Gregorie ſpeaketh generally to all Chriſtians: Stude quaſo, & creatoris tui verba meditare, diſce cor Dei in verbis Dei: Studie, I pray thee, and meditate the words of thy Creator, learne the mind of God in the words of God, &c. it belongeth then to all the people of God, to be familiarly acquainted with the holy prayers and Pſalmes in Scripture. Lib. 4 Epiſt. 40.

The ſecond part of faſting, the particulars whereof follow.

The Papiſts.

94.Error. FIrſt, they that hold the holy time of Lent, (as they call it, as though any time in their ſenſe were holier than another) is an Apoſtolike tradition, warranted by the example of Moſes, Elias, and our Saviour Chriſt, that faſted 40. daies, *Rhemiſt.Matth.4.ſect.2.Bellarm.lib.2.de bon.operib.cap.*14. To the ſame purpoſe the Doway gloſſemen: *annot.in biblio.p.*934.

Bellarmine further ſheweth ſeven cauſes of the inſtitution of Lent.

1 That Chriſtians may ſolemnly repent for the ſinnes of the whole yeere.

2 That they may be prepared to receive the Communion at Eaſter.

Matth.9.15. 3 To fulfill that ſaying of Chriſt, Matth.9.15. When the Bridegrome ſhall be taken away, then ſhall they faſt.

4 That they may be prepared to celebrate the feaſt of Chriſts paſſion and reſurrection.

5 That they might faſt and pray, for ſuch as were newly converted to the faith, which were baptized at Eaſter.

6 That wee might conſecrate by faſting unto God the tenth part of our life, for 36. daies are the tenth of the yeere.

7. That hereby we ſhould imitate Chriſt, ſo neere as we can, that faſted 40. daies and 40. nights: *Bellarm.cap.*16.

The Proteſtants.

1 Anſ. FIrſt, ſhall it then ſuffice a man once in the yeer to repent for his ſins? Is not the Lords praier daily to be ſaid, wherein we pray for remiſſion of ſins, which cannot be obtained without repentance? Secondly, or was it Lent, when Peter exhorted the people to publike repentance? Act.2.38. Act. 2. 38. Repent and bee baptized. Thirdly, Quid enim differas, ut plura peccata committas? Why ſhould you deferre your repentance, to commit more ſinnes, ſaith *Ambroſe de pœnit. lib.2.c.*11. This therefore could be no cauſe of the inſtitution of Lent.

2 In the Primitive Church they received the Communion often, even every Lords day at the leaſt: Act.20.7. Acts 20. 7. The firſt day of the weeke, (which is the Lords day) they came together to eat bread. Saint Ambroſe: Accipe quotidie, quod tibi quotidie proſit: qui non meretur quotidie accipere, non meretur poſt annum accipere: Receive that daily, which thou haſt uſe of daily: hee that is not fit to receive daily, is not fit after a yeere: de ſacram. lib. 5. c. 4. If Lent were inſtituted upon this occaſion, it was no Apoſtolicall inſtitution: for then the Communion was miniſtred often, and not onely at Eaſter.

3 Firſt, that ſaying of Chriſt was ſpoken onely to his Apoſtles, that enjoyed his carnall preſence. Secondly, if it bee largely taken, then the Montaniſts did come neerer to the ſenſe, that obſerved the Lenton faſt ſtraight after Chriſts aſcenſion. Thirdly, or if they will expound the taking away of the Bridegrome, of Chriſts death, by this reaſon they ſhould not faſt before the celebration of the paſſion, but after.

4 Firſt, by this reaſon, we muſt have a Lent alſo before the Nativitie, and another before Pentecoſt, ſeeing theſe alſo are great feaſts, and a preparation ought to goe before. Secondly, this proveth Lent not to bee Apoſtolicall, ſeeing the feaſt of Eaſter was not then uniformely obſerved, nor many yeeres after. Thirdly, the Sabbath was as great a feſtivall as any beſide, being immediatly inſtituted of God: yet one day of preparation ſufficed for that.

5 Firſt, we have now no Catechumeni, or Converts from Paganiſme: therefore by this reaſon, the Lenton obſervation ſhould ceaſe, having no uſe that way. Secondly, neither did the Apoſtles deferre the baptiſme of Converts till Eaſter, but baptized them as occaſion ſerved: Act. 2. 38. S. Peter Act.2.38. ſaith at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, Repent and be baptized, &c. Wherefore this reaſon ſheweth that Lent was not Apoſtolicall.

6 Firſt, if 36. daies be the tenth of the yeere, why do you obſerve 40. daies for the Lenton faſt? Secondly, theſe fellowes will ſet God to ſchoole, that he ſhould rather have taken the tenth day for the Sabbath, than the ſeventh; ſo ſtrict they are in tithing of daies. Thirdly, not the tenth day, but every day of our life ought to be conſecrate to God; as Ambroſe ſaith of Iob: Sanctus Iob quotidie pro filiis offerebat ſacrificium: Holy Iob every day offered ſacrifice for his ſonnes: *de ſacram. lib.*5.*c.*4.

7 Firſt, *Ambroſe ſerm.*23. Quadrageſima quadraginta duos dies habet, &c. Lent hath 42. daies according to Moſes 42. manſions: ſerm. 34. He deriveth this obſervation from Noahs flood, quia tot dierum ſpacio pluvia defluxerunt: becauſe ſo many daies the raine was in falling, &c. If this be ſo, then is it not grounded upon the imitation of Chriſt. Secondly, Moſes faſted 40. daies, and Elias; yet none in the old law did inſtitute a faſt upon this example: neither are wee to ground the like upon Chriſts miraculous abſtinence now. Thirdly, that faſting of our Saviour Chriſt, and the holy Prophets was miraculous, and no more to be imitated, than Chriſts walking on the ſea, or raiſing of the dead, as Auguſtine ſaith: Non tibi dicit, ſed eris diſcipulus meus, &c. Hee ſaith not, thou ſhalt not be my diſciple, unleſſe thou walke upon the ſea, or raiſe the dead, — but learne of mee, becauſe I am humble and meeke: enarrat. in Pſal. 9. Againe he ſaith, Non ergo, quia Chriſtus ſtatim poſt baptiſma jejunavit, tanquam regulam obſervationis tradidiſſe credendus eſt, ſed plane illo exemplo docuit jejunandum eſſe, quando forte acriore luctamine cum tentatione confligitur: In that Chriſt faſted after his Baptiſme, it is not to bee thought, that hee gave us a rule to obſerve, but taught us by his example, that then we muſt faſt, when we are more ſtrongly tempted: de tempor. ſer. 157.

George Marſh holy Martyr thus witneſſeth: Let the faſting of Chriſt while he was tempted in the wilderneſſe, be unto us an example of ſober living, not for the ſpace of fortie daies, (as the Papiſts do fondly fanſie of their owne braine) but as long as we are in the wilderneſſe of this wretched life.

Further, that the obſervation of Lent was no Apoſtolike tradition, it appeareth, becauſe it was not uniformely kept of the Church a long time after them: for as Ireneus witneſſeth, ſome faſted one day, ſome two daies, ſome fortie houres day and night: but if it had beene neceſſarily injoyned and preſcribed by the Apoſtles, ſuch varietie of cuſtome would not have ſprung up; at the leaſt, not have beene ſuffered in the Church. Againe Epiphanius ſaith, that the Wedneſdaies faſt was an Apoſtolike tradition; as likewiſe to obſerve the feaſt of the ſix daies of Eaſter, with bread, ſalt, and water: which obſervations are not kept amongſt the Papiſts themſelves, yet they have as good teſtimonie of antiquitie to be Apoſtolike traditions, as the Lent faſt. Thirdly, in Auguſtines time, there was no neceſſary enforcement for every man to keepe Lent: Si aliquis (ſaith he) jejunare non poteſt, eleemoſyna ſine jejunio bona eſt: If any man be not able to faſt, almes without faſting is good and profitable: Serm. de tempor. 62. Wherefore ſeeing the Lent faſt was then voluntarie, it is evident that it was not an Apoſtolike preſcription, which ſhould have bound all men neceſſarily.

That Lent is no Apoſtolicall tradition, it further appeareth, both becauſe of the uncertaine preſcript of the time, as alſo the diverſitie of the manner in keeping the ſtrict time of Lent.

As touching the firſt, it was decreed: Concil. Aurelianenſ. 4. can. 2. Ut quadrageſima æqualiter ab omnibus teneatur, non quinquageſima, aut ſexageſima: That fortie daies ſhould be obſerved for Lent, not fiftie, or threeſcore. Agathenſ. can. 12. Ut omnes in quadrageſima exceptis diebus dominicis jejunent: That every man ſhould faſt fortie daies, excepting the Lords daies. Gregorie the firſt, Quadrageſimali jejunio 4. dies addidit, to the fortie daies faſt added foure daies more. Par. 3. diſt. 5. c. 16. Teleſphorus Biſhop of Rome decreed, Ut 7. hebdomadas plenas ante paſcha omnes clerici à carne jejunent: That Clegie men ſhould faſt ſeven whole weekes before Eaſter, that is, 49. daies. Diſt. 4. c. 4. Concil. Triburienſ. can. 58. They which had committed murther, were enjoyned thrice in a yeare to faſt forty daies, before Eaſter, before S. Iohn Baptiſts day, and before the Nativitie. And thus wee ſee ſome faſted fortie daies, ſome fortie ſaving the ſix Lords daies, ſome 44. ſome 49. ſome 120. daies, that is, three Lents.

Further, thus it is extant in their owne decrees: Diſtinct. 4. c. 6. Gregor. Sacerdotes à quinquageſima propoſitum jejunandi ſuſcipiant: The Prieſts muſt begin to faſt from the 50. day: contr. par. 3. diſt. 3. c. 6. Quadrageſ. non quiquageſ. teneatur.

Diſtinct. 76. c. 8. Quadrageſima jejuniis contriſtaremur: We muſt ſorrow with the faſt of fortie daies. Ambroſ. ſerm. 23. Quadrageſima quadraginta duos dies habet; Lent hath 42. daies.

Diſt. 76. c. 10. Poſt paſcha, &c. After the Paſch to Pentecoſt, they that will may faſt: quia Antonius, Paulus, & cæteri patres his diebus in eremo leguntur abſtinuiſſe, neque ſolviſſe abſtinentiam, niſi tantum die dominico: Becauſe Antonie, Paul, and other fathers are read to have faſted theſe daies, neither to have looſed their faſt, but only upon the Lords day, &c. Here is another Lenton faſt from the Paſch to Pentecoſt tolerated.

Par. 3. diſt. 5. c. 16. Gregor. Sex dies dominici de abſtinentia ſubtracti, &c. Six Lords daies are taken from the faſt, and ſo there remaine but 36. and to fil up the number of fortie daies he borroweth foure daies from the weeke before.

Ibid. c. 25. Quadrageſimam abſtinentia celebramus, cùm bene vivimus, &c. We keep the Lenton faſt, when we live well: ex Auguſtin. By this decree there ſeemeth to be no neceſſitie of the Lenton faſt at all. And this difference we find for the time of Lent.

The like diverſitie is to be ſeene in the manner of the obſervation: Liberius decreed, that the huſband all Lent long ſhould abſent himſelfe from his wife. Concil. Triburienſ. can. 35. That no Iudge ſhould keepe aſſiſes in Lent time: Yet the contrarie is practiſed even among the Papiſt: Toletan. 10. cap. 1. Quadrageſima nihil convenit, de ſanctorum ſolennitatibus celebrari: That no Saints daies ſhould be kept in Lent: Yet the Annunciation falleth in Lent, which they make a feſtivall of our Ladie, Nicolaus 1. de bellis, can. 4. That all Lent time they muſt abſtaine from war. Salegunſt. ad cap. 19. Ut dum pænitens quadrageſimam jejunet, non migret à loco ad locum: That while the penitent man keepeth his Lent, he ſhould not travell from place to place.

Beſide: Cod. lib. 3. tit. 12. leg. 6. Tempore quadrageſima criminales cauſa non agitanda: In Lent time criminall cauſes muſt not be handled.

Cauſ. 22. qu. 5. c. 17. Non jurandum a ſeptuageſima: From Septuageſima Sunday till Eaſter, no man muſt ſweare.

Cauſ. 33. qu. 4. c. 3. Diebus jejuniorum nullus conjungatur uxori: No man muſt in the faſting daies have companie with his wife.

C.8.Non nuptias celebrare : It is not lawfull to celebrate marriage.

C.9.Nec natalia martyrum : Nor the Saints dayes.

C.11.Nec convivia facere : Nor to make feaſts in Lent.

Part.3.diſt.1.c. 50. Non niſi veſpertina hora jejunium ſolvant : The faſt muſt not be looſed till the evening.

Thus by thoſe uncertainties it may appeare, that the Lenton faſt is an humane invention, rather than an Apoſtolicall inſtitution : for then it ſhould have remained alwaies the ſame, without any addition, or alteration : the contrarie whereof we have ſeene.

Lib.7.c.19. Lib.5.c.21. Lib.2.de primat.pag.73. Sacranus elucidar.error.27. De religione Muſcovitar.

And further, 1. What was the practice of the Eſterne and other Churches, and how variable touching the obſervation of Lent : Sozomen ſheweth, how that in the Weſt, in Libia and Egypt they obſerved ſix weekes of faſt : at Conſtantinople, and the regions about, ſeven : in ſome places but three weekes before Eaſter ; in ſome but two. And Socrates ſaith, becauſe there was not mandatum ſcriptum, no written precept of this matter : the Apoſtles cujuſvis voluntati reliquerent liberum, left it free to every ones mind, &c. Nilus the Greeke Archbiſhop ; rehearſeth the 55. canon of the ſixth generall ſynod, which condemneth the uſe of the Romane Church in faſting Saturdaies in Lent, and reviveth an old Eccleſiaſticall canon ; that if any clergy man faſted either upon the Lords day, or Saturday, one onely excepted, he ſhould be depoſed. And to this day the Greeke Muſcovian Church doth condemne the Romane Church for faſting Saturdaies in Lent. Ioannes Faber writeth, that the Muſcovites have, as it were, foure Lenton faſts in the yeere, ſeven weeks before Eaſter, and in June to the feaſt of S. Peter ; in Auguſt to the feaſt of the aſſumption of Mary, and from the 10. day of November untill the Nativitie.

Adverſ.Pſychios.

2. Tertullian ſheweth what was practiſed in the Affricane Church : Duas in anno hebdomadas Xerophagiarum, nec totas, exceptis ſcilicet Sabbatis & dominicis offerimus : We conſecrate two weeks in a yeere of eating dry things, and not them whole neither, the Saturdaies and Lords daies being excepted, &c.

Villamont.c.7.

The Æthiopians obſerve fiftie daies before Eaſter, and likewiſe 50. daies after Eaſter, and as many after Pentecoſt.

Harm.ſect.16. pag.481.

3 Latter confeſſ. of Helvetia. c. 24. The faſt of Lent hath teſtimonie of antiquitie, but none of the Apoſtles writings ; and therefore ought not, nor cannot bee impoſed upon the faithfull. And to this purpoſe they alleage out of Irenaus, how ſome faſted one day, ſome two, ſome fortie daies, &c.

Pag.511. Sect.17.p.536.

Confeſſ. of Sweveland, cap. 7. they alleage out of Chryſoſtome. Chriſt doth not ſay that hee will have his faſt to be followed, howbeit he might have proponed theſe 40. daies unto us, &c. Saxonie, artic. 20. The fourth error is the opinion of neceſſitie, for ſome do write, that the faſting of Lent is neceſſary. They condemne not the obſervation of the Lenton faſt ſimply, but think it not to be held as neceſſary. And ſo in ſome reformed Churches, Lent is obſerved as a thing indifferent, not for religion, but as a politick conſtitution, for the benefit of the Common-wealth, in ſparing the bread and increaſe of cattell.

4 Melchior Canus a learned Popiſh writer granteth that the Pope may diſpenſe with the Lenton faſt : and ſaith directly, that poterit contrarius populi mos inſtituta hujus generis abrogare, that the contrarie cuſtome of the people may abrogate ſuch inſtitutions, and he giveth inſtance of Lent, &c. It is therefore neither of divine nor Apoſtolike inſtitution.

95.Error. Acts 13.3.

2 A Second abuſe in their faſting, is to appoint preſcript times, neceſſarily to faſt in, as in Lent, on Friday, Saturday, and upon Ember daies, which are preſcribed for the foure ſalemne times of giving orders : And this alſo they ſay, is an Apoſtolike tradition, Acts 13. 2. They faſted and prayed, and laid their hands upon them, Rhemiſt. ibid. Bellarm. lib. 2. de bon. operib. in particul. cap. 17. 18.

Zachar.8.19.

2 Bellarmine alſo groundeth the foure quarters faſts upon the example of the Jewes, Zach. 8. 19. that faſted in the fourth, fifth, ſeventh, and tenth moneths : but Chriſtians ſhould not bee inferiour to them in faſting.

Acts 27.9.

3 Likewiſe, *Act.*27.9. where S. Luke ſaith, ſayling was now jeopardous, becauſe the faſt was paſſed : Bellarmine would have this underſtood not of the faſt of the Jewes, but of the ſolemne faſt of the Chriſtians in the tenth moneth : *Bellarm.c.*19.

4 Other faſts alſo he urgeth, as the faſt of Advent, the faſt in rogation weeke, the Vigill faſt, or on Saints eeves, as very ancient, and commendable, and fit ſtill to be retained, *cap.*20. 21. 22.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. 1. FOr prayer and faſting to be uſed at ſuch times as Miniſters are ordained, wee doubt not but it is an Apoſtolike tradition, becauſe we find it written in the Acts of the Apoſtles : but it was faſting from all meat and drinke, which the Apoſtles uſed, not abſtinence from fleſh onely, as upon your Ember dayes. Neither doe you obſerve thoſe daies of faſt for any ſuch purpoſe : for your Ember daies are kept amongſt you, though there bee no orders given in the whole dioces.

Zachar.7.5.

2 It is not fit that Chriſtians ſhould imitate the ſuperſtitious faſts of the Jewes : ſuch as theſe were not commanded of God, but invented and taken up by themſelves : as the Prophet Zacharie reproveth them, *Zach.*7.5. When ye faſted and mourned in the fifth and ſeventh moneth ; did ye faſt unto me ?

2 Againe, thoſe faſts were taken up among the Jewes upon ſpeciall occaſions: the faſt of the fourth moneth, becauſe then the Citie was broken up: of the fifth, when the Temple was deſtroyed: of the ſeventh, when Gedaliah was ſlaine: of the tenth, when the Citie began to be beſieged. But ſeeing that the Chriſtians have no ſuch occaſions, as theſe were to the Jewes, they have no reaſon to keepe the like faſts. 3 Origen to this point ſaith well: Paulus dicit, &c. Paul ſaith, If thou wilt obſerve any one of the obſervations of the law, thou art ſubject to the whole law: Qui ergo obſervat jejunia, aſcendat ter in anno ad Ieruſalem: He therefore that will obſerve their faſts, let him goe up thrice a yeere to Jeruſalem: Hom.9.in Levitic.

Jerem.52.12.
Jerem.52.4.

3 S. Luke deſcribeth the ſolemne faſts of the Jewes, which was about October, when as ſayling began to be jeopardous; as both Chryſoſtome and Oecumenius doe interpret it: And whereas Bellarmine ſaith, that S. Luke wrote an hiſtorie for the Chriſtians, not for the Jewes: it is true, but yet hee diſtinguiſheth the times by the feaſts of the Jewes: as *Act.*20. he nameth Pentecoſt: yea, hee refuſeth not by way of deſcription to uſe the Heathen names, as of Caſtor and Pollux, which was the badge of a ſhip. The ordinarie gloſſe referreth it to the faſt of the ſeventh moneth, when Gedaliah was killed, or the faſt of the tenth moneth in Januarie, when the captives in Babylon underſtood of the deſtruction of the Temple: but this latter cannot be, for ſayling beginneth to be jeopardous long before January. Lyranus, underſtandeth it of their faſting in the ſhip, which made them unfit to labour in the ſhip: but the words following, becauſe the faſt had now paſſed, will not beare this ſenſe, which ſeeme to note rather the time of the yeere, wherein that ſolemne faſt was, than their preſent diſtreſſe, for ſo the faſt was not paſſed: for they continued faſting ſtill: the better ſenſe is, that the Apoſtle meaneth the ſolemne faſt of the Jewes about the midle of September, which anſwereth to our October, preſcribed in Leviticus, for then winter aproached, & the ſeas began to be dangerous: as Beza obſerveth well out of Vegetius: from the third day before the Ides of Novem. (which is the 11.day) unto the ſixth of the Ides of March (which is the 10. day) maria clauduntur, the ſeas are ſhut up: Lyranus reaſon is but weake, that moſt were Gentiles, which were in the ſhip, who obſerved not thoſe faſts: for S. Luke writing the ſtory, obſerveth not what they did in the ſhip, but what was the generall faſhion of his nation.

Act.28.11.
Acts 29.7.
Levit.23.13.

4 As touching theſe ſet times of faſt there hath been great diverſity and uncertainty in the Church, whereby it appeareth to be a meere human conſtitution.

Concerning the foure ſolemne faſts of the yeere: 1 at the firſt there weare but three: Calixtus made them foure, *diſt.*76.*c.*1,2. They were appointed to be celebrated; the firſt weeke of March, the ſecond of June, the third weeke of September, the fourth weeke of Decem. ex Synod. Moguntin. diſt. 76.*c.*2. 3. After this another rule was made, Synod. Salegunſtad, that if the Calends of March fell out upon Friday, Saturday, Sunday, the quarter faſt ſhould be kept the ſecond weeke of March: and ſo upon the like occaſion, the third weeke of June, the fourth weeke of September, &c. 4. Vrbanus concil. Placentin. taketh a new order, that the firſt time ſhould be in the beginning of Lent, the ſecond in Pentecoſt weeke, *diſt.*76.*c.*4. 5. Eliberin. c. 23. Iejunia per ſingulos menſes placuit celebrari, exceptis diebus Iulii, Auguſti, ob eorundem infirmitatem, &c. Faſts muſt be kept every moneth, except July, Auguſt, which are but faint moneths. 6. *Concil. Gerundenſ. c.*2. Sequenti die poſt Pentecoſten, & calendis Novembris per triduum jejunetur: Let them faſt the day after Pentecoſt, and in the Calends of November for three daies ſpace. 7. Turonn. c. 18. Poſt quinquageſimam Monachi tota hebdomada jejunent, poſtea uſque ad calendas Auguſti ter in Septimana, &c. After Pentecoſt the Monks muſt faſt a whole weeke; and then till the Calends of Auguſt thrice in a weeke; September whole; in November thrice in a weeke; in December till the Nativitie every day. 8. Matiſconenſ. 1. 9. A feria S. Martini uſque ad natalem, ſecunda, quarta, & ſexta jejunent: From S. Martins day (which is the 11. of November) untill the Nativitie, let them faſt, Monday, Wedneſday, Friday.

If all theſe times be laid together, we ſhould doe nothing elſe but faſt all the yeere long: Thus it falleth out, that when men leave the ſimplicitie of truth, and certaine direction of the word to follow their owne inventions, they erre infinitely, and wander they know not wither.

5 Preſcript and ſet times of civill abſtinence from ſome meats, for the benefit of the Commonwealth, as your Lent and Imber daies, are ſtill retained in England, and no otherwiſe, wee condemne not: But to appoint ordinarie times of neceſſarie and religious faſting, without ſpeciall cauſe, was of the ancient Church accounted hereſie in Montanus, *Euſeb. lib.*5.*cap.*18.

This alſo was the practice of the Church of God in the old Teſtament, upon ſpeciall occaſion, not at ſet and ordinarie times, to injoyne publike faſting, as the Prophet ſaith, Blow the Trumpet in Sion, ſanctifie a faſt, call a ſolemne aſſemblie: which ſheweth that their publike faſts were not uſuall and ordinarie, but eſpecially ſanctified, and ſolemnely proclaimed.

Joel.2.15.

6 As for the fixed and ſet faſting daies in the weeke, in Auguſtines time, onely the Churches of Rome kept the Saturdaies faſt, all the Eaſt Churches, & many of the Weſt obſerved it not. And whereas ſome alleaged, that Peter faſted upon Saturday, being the next day, which was the Lords day, to encounter with Simon Magus, Auguſtine ſaith, it was opinio plurimorum, the opinion of many, quam tamen falſam eſſe perhibent pleriq; Romani: yet many of the Rom. hold it but for a fable. And ſo he generally concludeth, concerning preſcript daies of faſting: Quibus diebus non oporteat jejunare, & quibus oporteat, præcepto Domini vel Apoſtolorũ non invenio definitũ: Upon what daies we ought to faſt, upon what daies not, I find it not defined by any precept given by our Lord or any of the Apoſtles, Epiſt. 86.

Concil. Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 4. Eccleſia liberum facit quolibet tempore quibuſlibet veſci, modò id vel charitas, vel neceſſitas ſuadeat, adhibito tamen utriuſque medici ſi preſto ſint, aut ſaltem alterius, i. animæ conſilio : The Church giveth libertie to eat all things at all times, where charitie, or neceſſitie requireth, with the councell of both Phyſitions, or at the leaſt of the phyſition of the ſoule: Ergo, preſcript times of faſt by this Councell are not allowed, where all things at all times are lawfull to bee eaten.

7 And concerning the Saturdaies faſt, it is directly forbidden in the ſixth generall Trullane Councel can. 55. Si quis inventus fuerit in ſancto dominico vel ſabbata jejunans, ſi Clericus deponatur : If any man faſt the Lords day, or the Sabbath day, if he be a Clergie man, let him be depoſed; if a lay man, let him be put from the Communion.

Likewiſe, can. Apoſtol. 65. jejunans diem dominicum aut Sabbatum, uno tantum dempto, deponitor : He that faſteth the Lords day, or Saturday, one day onely excepted, let him be depoſed.

How dare then Innocentius contradict the Apoſtles Canons, thus decreeing? epiſt. 1. c. 4. Sexta feria & ſabbato perpetuo jejunandum eſſe; Friday and Saturday muſt be kept continually faſt.

Honor. 3. doth alſo contradict this decree: That if the day of the Nativitie fall upon Friday, it ſhould not be kept faſt: decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 46. c. 3. how then doth Innocentius decree ſtand, perpetuo jejunandum, that we muſt faſt Friday for ever?

Galath.4.10.

8 It is evident, that this preſcription of faſting daies is contrarie to the doctrine of the Apoſtle: Galath. 4. 10. Ye obſerve daies, moneths, times, yeeres: ſo they faſt certaine daies every weeke: and certaine moneths every quarter, and certaine times every yeere, as in Lent: and they obſerve alſo for yeeres the yeere of Jubile.

1 Origen well ſaith, Hom. 9. in Levitic. Si vis jejunare ſecundum Chriſtum, omne tibi tempus aptum eſt totius anni : If thou wilt faſt according to Chriſt, all the time of the whole yeere is fit, &c. And Hom. 10. in Levitic. Eſt certe libertas Chriſtiana per omne tempus jejunandi non obſervantia ſuperſtitione, ſed virtute continentiæ : It is Chriſtian libertie to faſt at any time, not of a ſuperſtitious obſervation, but of a vertuous continencie.

Libro adverſ. Pſychicos.

2 Tertullian ſaith: The Law and the Prophets, were unto Iohn. De cætero indifferenter jejunandum ex arbitrio, non ex imperio novæ diſciplinæ pro temporibus & cauſis uniuſcujuſq;, &c. Afterward it was indifferent to faſt, as men would, not by any command of the new diſcipline, as every ones time & occaſion ſerved, neither did the Apoſtles impoſe any yoke of certaine faſts to be kept of all in common,--cum fides libera in Chriſto, ne Iudaicæ quidem legi abſtinentiam quorundam ciborum debeat, ſemel in totum macellum ab Apoſtolo admiſſa, &c. Seeing faith being free in Chriſt, doth not owe ſo much to the Jewiſh law, as to abſtaine from certaine meats, being admitted by the Apoſtle whollie into the ſhambles, &c.

3 Confeſſ. of Sweveland. cap. 8. They alleage out of Chryſoſtome thus, Faſting is good, but let no man be compelled thereunto.

Catharinus ſect. de precept. jejun adverſ. Cajetan.

4 Cajetanus, their learned Cardinall doth hold, In eccleſia primitiva libera fuiſſe jejunia : that in the primitive Church faſting was free, and not tied to preſcript times.

Hierom alſo: Vtinam omni tempore jejunare poſſimus, &c. I would we might faſt at all times, as the Apoſtles did in Pentecoſt, and upon the Lords day: diſt. 76. c. 11. This ſuperſtitious addicting of times and daies to faſt, miſliked theſe fathers.

The holy Martyrs have witneſſed this truth: Thomas Loſeby, Henry Ramſey, Thomas Thirtell, and others, put to death, for ſaying, that the appointing of daies for faſting and abſtaning from fleſh upon faſting daies, and eſpecially in the time of Lent, is not allowable by Gods word, but is hypocriſie, and that men ought to have libertie at all times to eat all kinds of meat : Fox pag. 1975.

Fox.pag.867.

3 A Third abuſe in popiſh faſting, is the difference that they make betweene meats and drinks: as the forbidding of fleſh-eating upon faſting daies for more holines, and the eating of egges, butter, and cheeſe in Lent: as it was decreed at Lucerna in Helvetia, anno 1524. abſtinence alſo from ſome meats upon certaine daies for religion, is warranted by the Rhemiſts; as God prohibited Adam the eating of ſome fruits in Paradiſe for obedience, and in the law for ſignification, Annot. 1 Tim. 4. ſect. 6.

Bellarmine being here charged, that the Papiſts differ very little from the old Heretikes the Tatianes and Manichees, which condemned the eating of fleſh as uncleane in it ſelfe; would thus excuſe the matter.

Firſt, they condemne not fleſh abſolutely, becauſe out of Lent they allow it. Secondly, and in Lent to thoſe that are ſicke. Thirdly, and though ſome Monks, as of Bennets order and the Carthuſians doe altogether abſtaine from fleſh, no man is compelled to be of that order; neither doe they judge or condemne others that eat fleſh, Bellar. cap. 4.

Anſw. Firſt, that which the Manichees counted alwaies uncleane, the Papiſts in times prohibited hold to be uncleane: what elſe moved B. Stokeſlie to cauſe poore Frebarnes pigge to be buried in Finſburie field, for the which his wife longed? See afterward Err. 99. they are therefore halfe Manichees. Secondly, neither did the Manichees compell any to bee of their ſect: and as Auguſtine ſaith Auditores ſuos permittunt carnibus veſci : They allowed their diſciples to eat fleſh: cont. Adimant. cap. 15.

*cap.*15. as the Carthuſian Monks allow others. Thirdly, this ſheweth they count fleſh uncleane, becauſe they uſe other delicate meats with wine and ſpices, which doe more provoke luſt, than fleſh doth: as Auguſtine writeth of ſome: Ipſa vaſa, in quibus cocta carnes, &c. They feare as uncleane the veſſels wherein fleſh is ſod, but they feare not the immoderate filling of their bellie. Serm.57.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. FIrſt, now Antichriſt ſheweth himſelfe in his colours, making it as lawfull for him, to forbid the uſe of ſome meats for religion, now under the Goſpell, when God hath made them all lawfull and free, as God himſelfe might forbid the uſe of ſome, for obedience in Paradiſe, or ſignification in the Law. Secondly, S Paul calleth it the doctrine of devils, to command to abſtaine from meats, 1 Timothie 4.3. Againe, Let no man condemne you in meat and drinke, Coloſſ. 2.16. The Rhemiſts anſwer, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in the firſt place againſt thoſe heretikes, that condemned meats as evill by creation, ſuch were the Manichees: and in the ſecond, againſt the Judaicall obſervation of meats. But they onely prohibit the uſe of ſome meats for the chaſtiſing of the bodie. 1 Tim.4.3. Coloſſ.2.16.

Anſw. Firſt, not onely the Manichees and other heretikes preferred ſome meats before other, as more holy, but even the Papiſts alſo in the preſcript times of their faſts doe command to abſtaine from meats for pietie and religion: and therefore they are counted moſt holie amongſt them that never eat fleſh. And Durand teſtifieth, that fiſh in interdict daies, is rather uſed than fleſh, becauſe fleſh and not fiſh was accurſed in the daies of Noah. Yea they command abſtinence from meats under paine of damnation: what is this elſe, but with the old heretikes to condemne the creatures of God themſelves? Secondly, the popiſh prohibition of meats, is no leſſe ſuperſtitious, than was the Jewes: For they prohibited ſuch meats alſo, as by the law were counted uncleane, as to eat beaſts that died alone, or were torne with beaſts, or ſtrangled, or touched any uncleane beaſt, as likewiſe they injoyned penance to them that did eat or drinke, where a dogge or cat had lapped, or a mouſe had been drowned, and ſuch like, Fulk, annot. 1 Timoth. 4. ſect. 6. Durand.lib.6. de jejuniis.

Thus Pope Zacharie giving inſtructions to Boniface, forbiddeth him to eat, Ciconias, & Lepores, Storkes, and Hares or Conies: and as touching Lardum, Larde or Porke, hee giveth councell, that it ſhould not be eaten, prinſquam ſuper fumo ſiccetur, aut igne coquatur, before it be dried in the ſmoke, or boyled with fire.

So Synod. Trullan, can. 67. Damnamus eos, qui cujuſcunque animalis ſanguinem aliqua arte condiunt, & ſic comedunt: We condemne thoſe, that doe dreſſe the blood of any beaſt by arte, and ſo eat it. A grave decree for a Councell to forbid the eating of puddings. Vormatienſ. can. 65. Si porci cadaver manducaverint, carnes eorum comedere non licet, uſque dum macerantur per annum: If ſwine chance to eat a carion, their fleſh muſt not be eaten, till they have been dried a yeere.

I pray you how farre are they now from the ſuperſtition of the Jewes? Nay they goe beyond them: for the legall difference of meats for ſignification, was inſtituted of God for thoſe times: but this ſuperſtitious diſtinction of meats under the Goſpell, which giveth us the free uſe of all the creatures of God, which are ſanctified by the word and prayer, 1 Tim. 4. 5. is brought in by Antichriſt, who is an enemie unto God. 1 Tim.4.5.

3 Neither doe they abſtaine from fleſh and other meats for chaſtiſing of the fleſh: for they permit the uſe of all other meates upon their faſting daies, that may provoke luſt, fleſh onely excepted, as the eating of ſpices: and other daintie and delicate confections, the drinking of wine, and all kind of fiſh. Even like as Auguſtine reporteth of the Manichees, that would drinke no wine, nor eat fleſh: but in ſtead of wine, they had Pomorum nonnullorum expreſſos ſuccus vini ſpeciem ſatis imitantes, atque id etiam ſuavitate vincentes: The ſweet liquor of pleaſant fruits like to wine in colour, but excelling it in ſweetneſſe: and for fleſh, they had their ſtrange and exquiſite fruits, with great varietie of diſhes, ſeaſoned and ſtrawed with pepper. This was the Manichees faſt: and this is the popiſh cuſtome in their faſtings at this day. De moribus Manich. lib. 2. cap. 13.

Hereof Hierome thus complained: ad Neopotian. Audio quoſdam aquam non bibere, nec veſci pane, ſed ſorbitiunculas delicatas non calice ſorbere, ſed concha: I heare how ſome will drinke no water, nor eat bread, but yet drinke not out of a cup, but in a ſhell more delicate ſuppings.

Decret. 30. *c.*13. Siquis carnem manducantem ex fide cum religione: If any man condemne one eating of fleſh in faith, with religion, let him be accurſed, &c. But the Papiſts condemne one eating fleſh in Lent: Ergo.

Decret diſtinct. 41. *c.*1. Fieri poteſt, ut ſine aliquo vitio cupiditatis ſapiens precioſiſſimo cibo utatur, &c. It may ſo fall out, that a wiſe or godly man may uſe a moſt precious meat, without any vicious luſt, and affect ſinne in eating courſe herbes, &c. Sanius quiſque maluerit piſce veſci more domini, quam lenticula, &c. A man were better to eat fiſh as Chriſt did, than Lentiles with Eſau, &c.

*Cabilonenſ. ſub Carolo, can.*35. Ille magis parſimonia ſervire cenſendus eſt, qui ſibi non ſolum quarundam rerum perceptiones, ſed delectationes corporis penitus interdicit: He is thought to be more given to parſimonie, which doth not onely refraine from receiving ſome things, but even from the pleaſures of the bodie. Concil. Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 5. Admonendus eſt populus, cum jejunandum erit non minus prolixa & ſumptuoſa illa piſcium fercula, quàm carnium vitanda; bellaria item illa, magis, quam carnes inflammantia: The people muſt bee admoniſhed, that when they faſt, they ought no leſſe to refraine from the long and ſumptuous ſervices of fiſh, as from the fleſh diſhes, and from thoſe junkets, that doe no leſſe inflame than fleſh. But our adverſaries are far of from keeping theſe rules in their faſts.

George Marſh Martyr, thus witneſſeth: In this point doth our ſuperſtition exceed the ſuperſtition of the Iewes, when we abſtaine from one thing, and fill our bellies with another: Fox pag. 1570.

Lawrence Staple perſecuted becauſe he uſed to eat egs on Friday, and thought it was no great offence unto God, pag. 1043.

Now if our adverſaries forbeare ſome meats for chaſtiſement of the body, why might it not bee as lawfull to eat butter, and egs, in the time of Lent, as upon other faſting daies: but that they make difference of the times, as one being holier than another, and ſo alſo a difference of meats, ſome being more agreeable to holy times, than other?

Wherefore to conclude this point: civill abſtinence from fleſh, as for policie ſake, and the better maintenance of the Common-wealth, that there ſhould be a vent for fiſh, as well as for fleſh, and that every man might live of his trade and calling: as alſo for the health of the bodie, to abſtaine from hurtfull meats: as likewiſe to keepe a temperate and ſober diet, and to take heed of ſurfetting and drunkenneſſe: theſe kinds of abſtinence, in making difference of meats, we miſlike not: but for piety or religions ſake to diſtinguiſh them, it is too too great ſuperſtition.

Our arguments further out of Scripture againſt the difference of meats, are theſe.

Matth.15.11. 1 Matth. 15. 11. That which goeth into the mouth, defileth not the man.

1 Cor.10.25. 2 1 Corinth. 10. 25. Whatſoever is ſold in the ſhambles, eat ye, asking no queſtion for conſcience ſake.

Coloſſ.2.20. 3 Coloſſ. 2. 20. If yee be dead with Chriſt from the ordinances of the world, why are ye burthened with traditions, touch not, taſte not, handle not?

1 Timoth.4.3. 4. 1 Timoth. 4. 3. Forbidding to marrie and commanding to abſtaine from meats, the Apoſtle calleth the doctrine of devils: Ergo, a difference of meats for religion or conſcience ſake is ſuperſtitions.

1. Bellarm. Meats properly defile not the ſoule, but by reaſon of the concupiſcence joyned with them; as in gluttonie, drunkenneſſe and diſobedience.

Contra. 1. In gluttonie, drunkenneſſe, the concupiſcence commeth from within that defileth, namely the unſatiable greedineſſe of the fleſh: otherwiſe it is not the quantitie or qualitie of the meat which entreth that defileth. 2 Likewiſe diſobedience proceedeth from the heart, comprehended under evill thoughts, Matth. 15. 19. Out of the heart proceed evill thoughts: but diſobedience to ſuperſtitious and unlawfull precepts is no ſinne; ſuch as are theſe in commanding abſtinence from meates for religion. Matth.15.19.

2 Yet S. Paul forbiddeth fleſh offered to idols to be eaten, if it offend the conſcience of our weak brother, much leſſe would he have the Church-faſt broken, to the great offence of others, Bellarm.c.8.

Contra. 1. Not the breaking of ſuperſtitious lawes, but the obſerving rather doth miniſter offence: ſtill he beggeth the thing in queſtion; that the ſuperſtitious inhibiting of eating of fleſh is a lawfull conſtitution of the Church. 2 If then fleſh may be ſafely eaten at all times, but where our brothers conſcience is offended, it is not ſimply unlawfull: neither doe wee denie, but that in this Chriſtian libertie, reſpect is to be had to our brothers weakneſſe: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Why ſhould our libertie be condemned of anothers conſcience? 3 Hereupon wee inferre that there ought to be no other reſtraint of eating of fleſh for religion, but the conſcience of him that may be offended. 1 Cor.10.29.

3. 4 In both theſe places the Apoſtle condemneth thoſe which did forbid fleſh, as uncleane of it ſelfe, as though by the very handling thereof they were defiled, Bellarm.ibid.reſponſ.ad 3.5.

Contra. 1. In the firſt place the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch, as with a ſhew of holineſſe refuſed to taſte meat: but there is no ſhew of holineſſe, it is meer prophaneneſſe abſolutely to condemne meats, and a plaine doctrine of devils, therefore the Papiſts that place holineſſe in not touching or taſting of fleſh, and would not ſeeme ſimply to condemne them, are here ſignified. 2 In the ſecond place the Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all that forbid meats for any doctrine or religion: whenas they make it unlawfull, to receive them with thanksgiving, and refuſe them. 1 But thus doe the Papiſts forbid meats for religion and doctrine, ſo that the creature of God is refuſed: Ergo. 2 The Apoſtle maketh but two impediments of not receiving and eating meats: Want of faith and knowledge; Want of thankeſgiving: but with them it is not lawfull for beleevers and ſuch as give thanks, to receive Gods creatures: therfore they are theſe forbidders. 3 Againe the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the laſt times, and of ſuch as ſhould make a generall Apoſtaſie from the faith: this doth moſt fitly agree to the now preſent popiſh Church: the old hereticks the Tatianes and the Manichees, were above a thouſand yeeres agoe, and never any hereticks ſwarved more univerſally in the whole bodie of religion from the faith, than they doe. 1 Tim.4.1. verſ.3.

1 Origen ſhall conclude, Abſtinere à cibis quos Deus creavit ad percipiendum cum gratiarum actione, acceptum eſſe non poteſt Deo: To abſtaine from meats which God hath created to be received with thankeſgiving, cannot be acceptable to God: homil.9.in Levitic.

Auguſtine: Non propter porcum, ſed propter pomum mortem primus homo invenit; & Eſau primatus ſuos non propter gallinam, ſed propter lenticulam perdidit: The firſt man found death, not for eating fleſh, but fruit: Eſau loſt his birthright not for capons, but for lentil: tract. 73. in Ioan. Ergo, there is no difference to be made of meats for religion.

Tertullian here is a plentifull witneſſe, that religion is not to be placed in abſtinence from meats: Qui per eſcas Dominum colit, prope eſt, ut Dominum habeat ventrem ſuum--cibus verus fides certa --Deus ſola gaudet fide noſtra, ſola innocentia-- quæ habitant non in ventre, ſed in animo: He that worſhippeth the Lord by meats, is not farre from making his bellie his Lord: the true meat is a right faith,—God only is pleaſed with our faith, innocencie,—which dwell in the minde, not in the bodie.

Epiſtol. de cibis Judaicis.

2 Ieremie the Patriarch alleageth to this purpoſe Baſil: Neq; illi, qui non comedunt, meliores ſunt comedentibus, ſi ipſum ſolum comedere ſpectes, neq; iterum illi qui comedunt, deteriores, &c. Neither they which eat not, are better than they which eat, if you only reſpect eating, neither are they which eat, worſe than thoſe that eat not.

Baſil, artic.* 10. ſect. 4. No man can forbid thoſe things, which God hath permitted; therefore we thinke, that it is not by any meanes forbidden to receive meats with thankeſgiving, &c. Bohemia, c. 18. What is to be thought of the choice of meats, everie one may learne out of the doctrine of Chriſt,—That which goeth into the mouth, defileth not the man, &c.

4 Caſſander, one of their owne writers, ſpeaking againſt the ſtrict prohibition of eating of fleſh, ſaith: Tolerabilius exiſtimo, ut ſexcenti veſcantur carnibus citra neceſſitatem, quam ut unus hac ſuperſtitione periclitetur de vita, I thinke it more tolerable that ſix hundred eat fleſh, where no neceſſitie is, than that one by this ſuperſtition ſhould be in danger of his life.

De officio vir. perfect p. 159.

Lindanus, another of their writers thus complaineth of their faſts: Iejunia noſtra, quæ in vini copia natant, &c. Our faſts, which doe ſwim in plentie of wine, and varietie of fiſh, were unknowne unto the ancients, and ſeeme intolerable, &c. It is a groſſe ſuperſtition to abſtaine from fleſh meats, and to uſe wine, and other delicates, which doe more inflame.

Panopl. lib. 3. cap. 11.

The Papiſts.

Fourthly, their religious kind of faſting they hold not to be a genarall abſtinence from all meats and drinks, but onely from ſome certaine kinds, as from fleſh, and wine, as Timothie refrained from drinking of wine, and inſtead thereof uſed water, 1 Timoth. 5. 23. Rhemiſt.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. First, for chaſtiſing of the body, it is lawfull to abſtaine either wholy for a time, or in reſpect of the quantitie or qualitie of the meats, which may more provoke carnall luſts, not in the prohibition of the whole kind, as the Papiſts doe of all fleſh, be it never ſo groſſe or ſmall in quantitie. Likewiſe it is lawfull for chaſtiſing of a mans body to abſtaine from any kind, as of wine, fruits, ſpices, fleſh, ſo that the uſe of them be not forbidden, as though in the very abſtinence there were religon. Daniel abſtained from pleaſant and laſcivious meat to be the better prepared for that heavenly viſion; Timothie refrained the drinking of wine, to keepe his body in ſubjection: but neither of them placed any religion herein; for he afterward by the advice of the Apoſtle did drinke wine: and ſo Auguſtine in the like caſe ſaith, Quanto honeſtius eſt, ut qui &c. How much more honeſt a thing is it, that he which for the infirmitie of his ſtomacke cannot drinke water, ſhould uſe wine moderately? Serm. 157.

Secondly, but the true and properly religious faſt of Chriſtians, is a generall abſtinence from all meats and drinks, during the time of ſuch faſting: Eſther. 4. 16. Nehem. 9. 4. Where the manner of their faſt is deſcribed: how the law was read unto them foure times in the day, and as oft did they worſhip the Lord and confeſſe their ſinnes. It was the cuſtome of the Church alſo in Auguſtines time, in the dayes of faſt, not to abſtaine onely from fleſh, or ſome certaine kind of meat, as the Papiſts uſe, but altogether to continue faſting till the even. Rogo vos (fratres) (ſaith he) ut in iſto ſacratiſſimo tempore, exceptis diebus dominicis, nullus prandere præſumat: I pray you brethren, that in this holy time none of you preſume to dine at all, except it be upon the Lords dayes, de tempor. ſerm. 66.

Eſther. 4. 16. Nehem. 9. 4.

So likewiſe was it concluded, Concil. Aurelianenſ. 4. can. 2. quadrageſima ab omnibus æqualiter teneatur: ſed neque per ſabbata abſque infirmitate quiſpiam ſolvat quadrageſimale jejunium, niſi tantum die dominico prandeat: Let the Lent or 40. dayes faſt be kept indifferently of all, and let no man, no not upon the ſaturdayes (unleſſe for infirmities ſake) breake his lenton faſt, unleſſe hee take his dinner upon the Lords dayes onely. Their faſt then upon other dayes, was continued from morning till night, without taking their dinner: Ergo, they that will keepe a true religious faſt, if they are able, ought for the time wholy to abſtaine.

Bellarmine here ſeemeth to conſent with us, propounding this propoſition to prove, unicam in jejunio refectionem, &c. That there ſhould be but one refreſhing in a faſt, and that to be ſupper, cap. 2. this he taketh upon him to confirme by Scripture, as Judg. 20. 26. They faſted all that day till the Evening: 2 Sam. 3. 31. David would eat no bread till the Sunne went downe: he alleageth alſo to the ſame purpoſe divers teſtimonies of the fathers: thus farre he agreeth with us, but afterward hee turneth cat in pan (as we ſay) and alloweth the contrary practice in the popiſh Church, that uſe to take their dinner in their faſts: But Auguſtine flatly reproveth this abuſe; Vidiſti alium indicto publico jejunio velle prandere, cum dilectione admone: Thou ſeeſt another, that a publike faſt being injoyned, will take his dinner; admoniſh him in love, de tempor. ſerm. 202.

Judg. 20. 26. 2 Sam. 3. 31.

George Marſh holy Martyr : We never reade that the Jewes ever tooke it for a faſt to abſtaine from fleſh, and to eat fiſh, or white meat, Fox pag. 1570.*col.*2.

And yet further : 1. it appeareth to have been a generall cuſtome in the Greeke Church, in their ſolemne faſts to abſtaine from all kind of meat untill the ninth houre, which was about three in the afternoone, as Epiphanius teſtifieth. Lib.3.Tom.1. hæreſ.75.

2 Tertullian ſaith, Exceptio eduliorum quorundam, portionale jejunium eſt ; The excepting of certaine meats, is but a faſt in part, &c. and he ſaith, they doe dimidiam gulam Deo immolare, but offer unto God halfe their throat or gut, &c. when as there is not a whole abſtinence but in part. The Papiſts.

Fifthly, they erre, in affirming faſting to be a meritorious worke, Rhemiſt. 1. *Corinth.*15.*verſ.*32. and immediatly and properly a part of Gods ſervice, *Bellarm. lib.*2.*de bon. operib.c.*11.

Bellarmime thus reaſoneth out of Scripture :

Luc.2.3. 1 *Luc.*2. 3. Anna ſerved the Lord with faſting and prayer night and day.

Rom.12.1. 2 Rom. 12.1. I beſeech you brethren, give your body a living ſacrifice acceptable to God, &c. which is your reaſonable ſervice of him. Faſting then, by the which the body is mortified, and made a ſacrifice, is a ſervice acceptable to God.

1 Sam.7.6. 1 King.21,27. 3 1 *Sam.*7.6. The people faſted and prayed, and God was pleaſed, 1 *Reg.*21. Ahab by his faſting did mittigate Gods wrath: the Ninivits by their faſting appeaſed Gods wrath : Ergo, faſting is ſatisfactorie and meritorious, *Bellarm.cap.*11.

1 Cor.9.27. 1 Cor.7.5. 1 King.8.30. Anſw. Firſt, we doubt not, but that faſting is a worke acceptable to God, being referred to the right end, as to chaſtiſe and humble the bodie, 1 Cor. 9. 27. and to make our prayers more fervent, 1.*Cor.*7.5. But otherwiſe there is no holines or vertue in faſting of it ſelfe; neither is it by the worke wrought of any merit or worthineſſe : For our prayers, which are a more principall worke, than faſting is, yet of themſelves by any worthineſſe in them, are not regarded of God: for Salomon ſaith, When thou heareſt, have mercy, 1 King. 8. 30. It is of the Lords mercy, that our prayers are heard, not of any worthineſſe in them.

Now for our further anſwer in particular : 1 Anna her ſerving of God, conſiſted chiefly in her prayer, upon the which her faſting waited as an handmaid, to make it more fervent.

1 Timoth.4.8. 2 We denie not, but that faſting is a very good meane to helpe to mortifie the fleſh, and to make it ſerviceable to God, and ſo an exerciſe by faith acceptable to God: but it followeth not, that immediatly and properly it is a part of Gods ſervice, which conſiſteth in the inward worſhip : the Apoſtle ſaith, bodily exerciſe profiteth little, that is, of it ſelfe without faith and godlineſſe, it is not avayleable.

3 Firſt, beſide the faſting of the people, they ſhed teares in ſuch abundance, that they are ſaid to have drawen water : they alſo confeſſed their ſinnes : their prayers and teares made their faſting acceptable : but they were ſo farre from ſatisfying God, that for all this they were afraid, and deſired Saul to crie unto God for them.

1 King.21,25. As concerning Ahab, how could he ſatisfie or merite, being a man ſold to worke wickedneſſe, 1 *King.*21.25. and ſo without faith ? his temporall repentance was rewarded with a temporall reward : this was Gods mercie, not of his merite.

Jonas 3.10. It was not the act of faſting in the Ninivits, but their true repentance joyned with it, that pleaſed God, Jonas 3. 10. God ſaw their workes, that they turned from their evill wayes, &c. Neither did their repentance ſatisfie : for they were fearefull and doubtfull, *verſ.*9. Who can tell if God will turne ? it was therefore Gods acceptance, they have no confidence in their repentance.

The Proteſtants.

Our contrary arguments, that faſting is not a worke meritorious or ſatisfactorie, nor properly the ſervice of God, out of the Scripture are theſe.

Iſay 58.5. *Arg.*1 Iſay 58.5. Is this ſuch a faſt, that I have choſen, that a man ſhould afflict his ſoule for a day ? &c.

Joel 2.13. 2 Ioel 2. 13. Rent your hearts, and not your cloaths : it is not then the affliction of the fleſh, but the contrition of the heart that God requireth.

1 Tim.4.7.8. 3 1 Tim. 4. 7. 8. Exerciſe thy ſelfe to godlines, for bodilie exerciſe profiteth little, godlines is profitable to all things.

Luk.18.12. 4 *Luk.*18. 12. The Phariſee alleaging his faſting is not juſtified.

Coloſſ.2.23. 5 *Coloſſ.*2.23. Saint Paul calleth the religion, which is in not ſparing the bodie, ἐθελοθρησκίαν a voluntary worſhip, deviſed of man.

1 Bellarmin. The Lord doth not ſimplie reject faſting, but onely ſuch a faſt, as is not joyned with pietie and juſtice : *c.*12.*reſp.ad.*1.

Contra. You have anſwered well : for if faſting without godlines and juſtice profite not, then is it not in it ſelfe meritorious, nether hath any force, but by the faith and true contrition of the heart :

juſtice it ſelfe, and true contrition, which give ſtrength to faſting, are not meritorious, much leſſe is faſting it ſelfe.

2 The renting of the garments is not ſimplie forbidden, but when it is not accompanied with the contrition of the heart, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. Neither doe we ſay that faſting is forbidden ſimply, but that in it ſelfe it is the leſſe principall, and without the devotion of the heart not at all accepted, and therefore it hath no merit, having no life, nor force of it ſelfe. Contrition of the heart meriteth not: for David ſacrificing a contrit heart unto God, Pſal. 51.17. yet prayeth for mercy, verſ. 1. Ergo, much leſſe doth faſting merit, which is quickened by the devotion of the heart. Pſal. 51.17.

3 By bodily exerciſe either may be underſtood faſting without almes or mercy, or the exerciſe of the body: ſuch as champions uſed in their fight: which was unprofitable to attaine any thing in the next life, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. By godlines cannot properly almes be underſtood, or any other externall or bodilie action: for the Apoſtle oppoſeth godlines to bodily exerciſe: but that which is contrary or oppoſite to bodily, is ſpirituall. 2 Yet admitting this expoſition, faſting cannot be meritorious, ſeeing it hath no power without almes, which neither are themſelves meritorious: with ſuch ſacrifice indeed the Apoſtle ſaith, God is pleaſed Hebr. 13. 16. but offered unto God through Chriſt, verſ. 15. 3. What need had Saint Paul to give Timothie warning to take heed of bodily exerciſe, being ſo weake, and full of infirmities, that he giveth him councell afterward to drinke wine? 1 Tim. 5.23. by bodily exerciſe then, he underſtandeth all externall ſervices, and outward ceremonies, not tending to edifying by faith, 1 Tim. 1.4. which alſo include ſuperſtitious phariſaicall faſting. Hebr. 13.16. verſ. 15. 1 Tim. 5.23. 1 Tim. 1.4.

4 The Phariſee was not juſtified becauſe he thought to be juſtified by his faſting, but becauſe hee boaſted of his works and deſpiſed others, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. The Phariſee is not onely rejected for his diſdaine and contempt to the poore Publican, but for his hypocriſie in ſetting forth his owne righteouſneſſe, which notwithſtanding hee thanketh God for after a ſort. Firſt, the occaſion of the Parable doth inſinuat ſo much, verſ. 9. He ſpake this Parable unto certaine that truſted in themſelves, that they were juſt and deſpiſed others: they truſted to be juſt toward God by their works, and alſo deſpiſed their brethren: here are two faults, both which the Phariſee was infected with. Secondly, this appeareth by the contrary in the Publicane, who pleadeth for mercy, as the other ſtood upon merit. Thirdly, ſo Ambroſe expoundeth, Verecundia prætulit Publicanum, qui ne oculos audebat levare ad cœlum: Modeſtie preferred the Publicane, who durſt not lift up his eyes to heaven: Offic. 1. c. 18. The Publicans humilitie was toward God, in not preſuming to lift up his eyes to heaven; therefore the Phariſees pride was toward God in boaſting of his works. Luk. 18.9.

5 1 Will worſhip is not oppoſed to that which is not written, but to that which is not grounded upon reaſon: for though it be not commanded, if it be reaſonable, it is no Will worſhip. 2. The Apoſtle reproveth them for their immoderate faſting, not yeelding neceſſary things to the fleſh. 3. They did abſtaine of a ſuperſtitious opinion, in abhorring fleſh as evill and uncleane in it ſelfe, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, verſ. 22. Which are after the doctrines, and commandements of men: ſo that it is a Will worſhip which is after mans, and not Gods commandement: therefore all worſhip not preſcribed in the word, is Will worſhip: and this Will worſhip had a ſhew of wiſdome, and ſo of reaſon, yet was a voluntary ſervice.

Secondly, this is not the cheefe thing that is reprehended, the not ſparing of the fleſh (for herein, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, conſiſted their ſhew of wiſedome) but for that they followed the doctrines of men, and neglected the commandement of God, concerning the internall worſhip: and the not ſparing of the fleſh, is expounded, the not ſatisfying of the fleſh, which of it ſelfe is not ſo evill a thing: beſide many of their Monks and Heremits have offended this way, in pinching and pining their bodies, by their immoderate faſting to death, ſee before pag. 351.

Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of thoſe which of Jewiſh ſuperſtition, rather than heathen prophanenes abſtained from meat. Firſt, there had bin no ſhew of wiſdome, in condemning the creatures of God ſimplie. Secondly, he calleth them ςοίχεια, the elements of the world, verſ. 20. which the Apoſtle expoundeth to be the ceremonies of the Jewes, Galath. 4.9. 3. verſ. 17. they were ſuch ceremonies, as where ſhadowes of Chriſt: but theſe were the Jewiſh, not heathen obſervances. Thirdly, hee ſaith, verſ. 20. δογματίζεσθε, ye are burdened with traditions: which traditious, δόγματα he ſaith were faſtened to Chriſts Croſſe, verſ. 14. which were the traditions of the law, not of the Gentiles. Galath. 4.9. c. 3.17. Coloſ. 2.14.20.

1 Auguſtine ſaith very well, Si volumus bene jejunare à cibis, ante omnia jejunemus & à vitiis— Quid prodeſt, pallidum eſſe jejuniis, ſi odio & invidia liveſcas? What doth it help to faſt from meat, if we faſt not from ſin? What availeth it to be pale and wan with faſting, if thou fretteſt with hatred and envie? de tempor. ſerm. 64. Ergo, the externall or outward act of faſting of it ſelfe is little or nothing worth.

Ieremie Patriarch of Conſtantinople, ſpeaking of faſting and other ſuch exerciſes, ſaith: Quod gratis per Chriſtum peccata, & non propter aliqua merita & juſtitias noſtras, nobis remittantur, confiteri debemus, &c. We muſt confeſſe, that our ſinnes are freely remitted for Chriſts ſake, not for any our merits or righteouſnes, &c. And to this purpoſe he alleageth Baſil, citing that place of the Apoſtle, eſca nos Deo non commendat, meat doth not commend us unto God. Cenſur. orient. cap. 21. 1 Cor. 8.8.

3 Confeſſ. of Wittemberg. c. 17. We thinke that faſting is profitable, not to this end, that either by the merit Harm. ſect. 16. pag. 501.

merit of it worke, it might purge ſins before God, or apply the merit of Chriſt to him, that doth faſt, but that by ſobriety it may bridle the fleſh, &c. Sweveland, artic. 10. We muſt faſt, that we may the better pray and keepe the fleſh within compaſſe of it duty, and not before God to merit any thing for the ſame.

Pag.514. 4 Synod. Moguntin. cap.47. Non exiſtiment Chriſtiani ſola carnis abſtinentia ſe Deo gratos eſſe cum meminerint primos homines, qui carnem nondum guſtaverant, ob vita nequitiam diluvio deletos: ſed cum abſtinentia carnis, ceterorum ciborum moderationem & perpetuam ſobrietatem conjungant: Let not Chriſtians thinke, that they are accepted of God, onely for their abſtinence from fleſh, when they may remember, that the men of the old world, that taſted no fleſh, were for the wickedneſſe of their life deſtroyed in the flood: but let them joyne with their abſtinence from fleſh, the moderate uſe of other meats, and the perpetuall ſobrietie of their life.

[This truth the Martyrs have ſealed, that our faſting, nor yet any thing elſe that we doe, meriteth at Gods hand, George Marſh Martyr, holdeth it to be Jewiſh to thinke, that we doe God great pleaſure when we faſt, pag.1570. In this faith died Iohn Warne, that we obtaine nothing at Gods hands through our works, pag.1581.*col.*1.

S. Hierome ſaith, Cave ne ſi jejunare caperis, te putes, eſſe jam ſanctum: hac enim virtus adjumentum eſt, non perfectio ſanitatis: providendum eſt ne cum licita contemnas, hoc tibi illicitorum ſecuritatem faciat: Take heed, when thou beginneſt to faſt, that you thinke not your ſelfe to be holy: this vertue is a helpe, it is not the perfection of health: take heed, leſt in contemning things lawfull, you be ſecure in uſing unlawfull: ad Celantiam: Ergo, faſting is not meritorious.

The Papiſts.

99.Error. SIxthly, and laſtly, they grievouſly offend in their faſtings, in laying ſo ſtreight and hard a yoke upon mens ſhoulders, as charging them under paine of damnation to keepe their faſting daies, making it deadly ſinne, yea, hereſie to tranſgreſſe them, as one Lawrence Staple was troubled and perſecuted, Anno 1531. becauſe in Lent having no fiſh, he did eat egges, butter and cheeſe: Nay they were ſo cruell, that hardly they ſuffered women in childbed to have any fleſh in their houſes, as Anno 1532. (Fox p.1043.) Two yong girles were conſtrained to abjure, becauſe they were found upon Saint Peters even eating broath made of mutton, their mother lying in childbed. How was poore Frebarne toſſed to and fro, and brought into great danger, becauſe a Pigge was found in his houſe in Lent time, for the which his wife longed?

Argum. That Eccleſiaſticall lawes enjoyning faſts for religion doe ſimply bind in conſcience, Bellarmine would thus prove out of Scripture.

Jerem.35.14. 1 Ierem. 35. 14. The Rechabites are commended for keeping the inſtruction of Ionadab their father, not to drinke wine?

Heſter.9.22. 2 *Heſter.*9.22.Mordecai inſtituteth a new faſt to be obſerved for ever.

Zachar.8.19. 3 *Zachar.*8.19. There is mention made of foure faſts; of the fourth, fifth, ſeventh, tenth moneths, which were not commanded of God.

Act.15.29. 4 Act. 15. 29. Abſtinence from ſtrangled and from blood is injoyned by the Apoſtles to be obſerved of all the Church; *Bellar.c.*7.

1 Anſw. Firſt, the inſtitution of Ionadab was according to the law of the Nazarits, preſcribed Numb. 6. that were to drinke no wine nor ſtrong drinke by Gods precept, and therefore it did binde the Rechabites in conſcience: but now there is no ſuch law of abſtinence given by Chriſt under the Goſpell, and therefore the argument followeth not. Secondly, neither did the Rechabites hold themſelves ſo bound in conſcience, but that by neceſſitie they might bee diſpenſed with: for (Jerem.35.10.) one of their fathers precepts was, to dwell in tents, verſ. 10. yet becauſe the hoaſt of the Aſſyrians was in the land, for that time, they came and dwelt in the citie.

Heſter.4.16. 2 Firſt, we read of a feaſt inſtituted yeerely to be celebrated by Mordecai, not of a faſt. Secondly, yet we doubt not but that the Magiſtrats may injoyne a publike religious faſt, as Heſter did, chap. 4. 16. which is not a prohibition from fleſh meat, but a generall reſtraint of all meat, not for ſet and ſtinted times, but upon extraordinarie occaſion. This maketh nothing for their eccleſiaſticall injunctions, for the perpetuall reſtraint of ſome kinde of meat onely.

Zachar.7.5. Zachar.8.19. 3 Firſt, thoſe faſts mentioned in Zacharie are reproved by the Prophet, Zach. 7. 5. Did ye faſt unto me? Secondly, *Zach.*8.19. He ſaith onely that the faſts ſhall be turned to joy and gladnes: which is no approbation of them, but onely a declaration and promiſe, that the like calamities ſhall not fall upon them, as before, by occaſion whereof they tooke up thoſe faſts: ſuch were the ſacking of the citie, and deſtruction of the temple. Thirdly, in their faſts they abſtained wholy from all meat, weeping and ſeparating themſelves, Zachar. 7. 3. (Zachar.7.3.) and their eating and drinking is oppoſed *to their faſting, verſ.*6. what is this to popiſh faſting, which is not a totall abſtinence, but from ſome kind onely?

4 Firſt, Eccleſiaſticall governors have not like authority now to make lawes to bind the conſcience, as the Apoſtles had. Secondly, they did not inhibit things ſtrangled for any religion in the abſtainer, but for the cōſcience of others, namely the Jewes that might be offēded: which we hold to be the only religious reſtraint of not eating. Thirdly, this conſtitution of the Apoſtles was but to endure for a time: how doth this then warrant a perpetuall yoke of abſtinence for religion to be laid upon the Church?

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, no poſitive law not grounded upon Scripture, can ſo bind any man, that in the breaking thereof hee ſhall ſinne deadlie, and of this ſort is the faſt of Lent and other daies for religion, which were ordained without warrant of Scripture: Lambert ad articul. 17. pag. 1110. Civill and politike lawes for the reſtraint of fleſh at certaine ſeaſons, made by the godly and wiſe Magiſtrate for the benefit of the Common-wealth, not for any religion, are in conſcience to be obeyed ſo farre forth, as we by the law of God are bound in conſcience to obey the Magiſtrate in all lawfull things: but ſimply they doe not bind the conſcience in reſpect of the thing commanded. Seeing the reſt of the Sabbath being commanded of God, might yet upon neceſſary cauſe bee broken, how much greater libertie ought the people to have had in the obſervation of theſe dayes which were only enjoyned by men? yet was it counted an heynous ſin, to eat fleſh upon a day interdict, and a ſmall offence or none to violate the reſt of the Sabbath?

Secondly, S. Paul could ſee no ſuch neceſſitie of faſting and abſtinence, when he willeth Timothie to drinke wine, and no longer water, for his infirmitie ſake, 1 Tim. 5. 23. But if there were religion in faſting and abſtinence, it ought not to be intermitted for bodily health.

1 Tim. 5. 23.

Further, the Apoſtle calleth theſe the precepts and commandements of men, Touch not, taſt not, handle not; which things periſh with the uſing, Coloſſ. 2. 21. they concerne not the conſcience: but Gods preceps in religious matters doe not periſh with the uſing: but in the keeping or breaking thereof, the conſcience is either accuſed, or excuſed.

Coloſſ. 2. 21.

S. James alſo ſaith, Jam. 4. 12. There is but one lawgiver, that is able to ſave and to deſtroy: Ergo, men have no power to make lawes to bind mens conſciences, either to ſave them by keeping thereof, or deſtroy them by breaking.

Jam. 4. 12.

Canon. Apoſtol. 68. Si quis impediatur imbecillitate corporis, non tenetur jejunare quadrageſimam: If any bee hindred by the weakneſſe of their body, they are not bound to keep the Lenton faſt. Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 4. Eccleſia liberum facit quolibet tempore quibuſlibet veſci, modo id vel charitas, vel neceſſitas ſuadeat: The Church giveth libertie at all times, to eat all manner things, if charity or neceſſity require. Synod. Moguntin. cap. 47. Tempora jejunandi, prout ſalubritati corporum & animarum expedire videbatur, ab eccleſia ordinata: The times of faſt were ordained by the Church, as it was thought meet for the health of body and ſoule. Men therefore are not bound to faſt, if thereby their health bee empaired: for no man ever hated his owne fleſh, as S. Paul ſaith.

1 In Auguſtines time there was no ſuch ſtrict neceſſitie of faſting: Qui jejunare non prævalet, in domo ſua præparet, quod accipiat: He that is not able to faſt, let him prepare in his houſe for his owne eating. And againe, Si poſſibilitas non fuerit jejunandi, ſufficiat eleemoſyna ſine jejunio: If a man have not poſſibilitie to faſt, in ſtead of faſting, it ſhall ſuffice to give almes: ſerm. de tempor. 62. What is become now of your Lent and Ember dayes, which you preſcribe as neceſſary to be kept of all?

2 Chryſoſtome ſaith: If thou muſt not faſt, yet thou mayeſt abſtaine from ſinnes, and this is not the leaſt thing, nor much differing from faſting, but fit to overthrow, even the furie of the devill: cited in the confeſſion of Wittemberg. artic. 18.

Hom. 11. in c. 2. Geneſ.
Harm. ſect. 16. pag. 502.
Ibid.

3 Confeſſ. of Wittemberg. artic. 18. Uſe of faſting in time paſt was free, and there is a worthy ſaying among the auncient fathers: the difference of faſting, doth not breake off the agreement of faith: Sweveland. c. 8. we had rather leave the place, time, and manner both of praying, as alſo of faſting to the arbitrement of the holy Ghoſt, than to preſcribe them by certaine lawes, eſpecially ſuch, as cannot be broken without ſome ſacrifice of amends, &c.

Harm. ſect. 16. pag. 511.

4 They themſelves give great libertie in freeing divers ſorts of people from faſting: as firſt infirmity of bodie excuſeth, as in the ſicke, or of complexion and conſtitution of body, or of age, as in them which are under 21. yeeres of age, or of ſexe and condition, as in women great with child, or that give ſucke. 2 Povertie freeth from faſting, as in beggers. 3 Corporall labour, as in husbandmen, occupied in plowing, ſowing. 4 Pious offices excuſe, as in Preachers, Pilgrimes, Husbands in rendring their mutuall debt to their wives, &c. To this purpoſe Tolet their Cardinall: faſting then by their owne rules is not to be urged with ſuch ſtrict neceſſity, yea under paine of damnation.

Inſtruct. ſacerdotal. de fine jejun.

The third part, of Almes-deeds.

The difference betweene our adverſaries and us, is chiefly in theſe two points: firſt, concerning the fruits and benefits, that come by giving of almes. Secondly, of the manner.

The first queſtion, of the fruits of Almes-deeds.

The Papiſts.

First, Bellarmine ſaith that almes deeds are meritorious; they doe merit eternall life.

Argum. Matth. 25. Receive the kingdome prepared for you: for when I was hungry you gave mee meat, &c. Bellarm. cap. 4. lib. 3. de bonis operib. in particular.

Matth. 25.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. First this place proveth not that almes-deeds merit heaven: but it rather ſheweth, that Christ in mercie crowneth the charitable works of his children: heaven is given though not for their good works, yet according to their goods works: this kingdome was prepared for them before the beginning of the world, before they had yet done any almes deeds: therefore they could not merit that which was prepared for them, and given them, before they had done any good thing.

Rom. 6.23. Luke 17. Argum. Rom.6.23. Life eternall is the gift of God through Chriſt: If it be a franke gift, then is it not merited. No man can merit by doing that which was his dutie to doe: Luke 17. Doth the maſter thanke his ſervant, becauſe he did that which was commanded unto him, I trow not? If the maſter be not bound to thanke his ſervant, becauſe he did no more than his dutie, much leſſe is the Lord bound to reward us. But all our almes deeds, and whatſoever elſe, that we do, are but of dutie. Ergo.

1 Auguſtine ſaith: Ne putetis fratres, quia facienda ſunt quotidie adulteria, & quotidianis eleemoſynis mundanda ſunt, ad illa ſcelera majora non ſufficiunt eleemoſyna ut illa mundent: Thinke not brethren, that yee may commit adulterie daily, and by daily almes be cleanſed, Almes are not ſufficient to purge thoſe great ſins, de 10. Chord. cap. 11. If almes are not availeable to purge our ſins, much leſſe to purchaſe heaven for us.

In Pſal. 143. 2 Baſil ſaith: Non quod dignus ſum, ſed propter benignitatem tuam, &c. Not that I am worthy, but for thy mercie, &c. he did not thinke, that there was any merit in any worke of his.

Harm. ſect. 15. Pag. 475. 3 Wirtemberg. artic. 18. What need was there, to the taking away of our ſins, of Chriſt his paſſion and death, if ſins might be taken away by the merit of almes?

In Iob lib. 9. c. 14. 4 Gregory, Biſhop of Rome ſaith: Ad vitam non ex meritis, ſed venia convaleſco: I grow unto life, not by merits, but by pardon and mercie, &c. then one groweth not by the merit of his almes, or any other worke.

The Papiſts.

121. Error. Almes deeds are a diſpoſition unto the grace of juſtification proceeding from Gods motion, and by his ſpeciall help.

Prov. 15. 28. Argum. 1. Prov. 15. 28. By mercy and faith ſins are purged.

Luke 11. 41. 2 Luke 11. 41. Give almes, and all things are cleane unto you.

Luke 19. 8. 3 Luke 19. 8. When Zacheus had ſaid, halfe of my goods I give to the poore, Chriſt ſaith unto him, This day is ſalvation come to thy houſe.

Act. 10. 4. 4 Act. 10. 4. The Angell ſaith to Cornelius, Thine almes and thy prayers are come up into remembrance before God: ſend therefore to Ioppa, and call for one Simon. Cornelius by his almes obtaineth faith: Bellarm. lib. 3. de bon. operib. cap. 45.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. First, there is no ſuch text in the Hebrew, nor yet in the old Latine copie: as may appeare by the annotations in the margent of the vulgar Latine upon this place: yet admit the reading: it is faith working by almes that purgeth ſins, and not almes it ſelfe.

Luke 11. 39. 2 Our Saviour is to be expounded by the verſe going before, Luke 11. 39. Ye make cleane the outſide of the cup, &c. but the inward part is full of ravening, &c. Our Saviour then teacheth them how to make the inſide of the platter cleane alſo from covetouſnes by the contrary vertue of liberality: he ſpeaketh not of cleanſing the heart before God, but how to cleanſe their outward acts before men, and to make amends by their almes for their greedie ravening. In like ſort Daniel adviſed the King to breake off his ſin of mercileſſe crueltie by almes and charity, Dan. 4. 24. So then covetouſneſſe is cleanſed or broken off by almes and mercy, as drunkenneſſe and ſurfetting by abſtinence. This expoſition Bellarmine himſelfe miſliketh not, cap. 3. object. 1. Againe, Origen expoundeth it thus: Like as Chriſt ſaith here, give almes of that which is within, τὰ ἐνόντα, ſo Mat. 23. 26. he ſaith, cleanſe firſt the inſide of the platter: that is, (ſaith he) the heart: Qui facit eleemoſynam ut gloriam ab hominibus conſequatur, &c. Hee that giveth almes to get the glory of men, doth cleanſe the outſide of the cup, &c. & quicquid boni fecerit homo non ex conſcientia munda, &c. And whatſoever a man doth not of a good conſcience before God, he cleanſeth the outſide of the cup, but inwardly he is full of evill, Hom, 25. in Matth. So in this ſenſe our Saviour ſheweth in what manner the Phariſees ſhould give almes, with a cleere and ſincere conſcience, and ſo the heart being cleane, all their outward acts ſhould be cleane. This place then maketh nothing for juſtification by almes before God.

Matth. 23. 26.

3 First, Chriſt ſignifieth, that ſalvation was come to the whole houſe and family of Zacheus, becauſe he himſelfe was already the child of Abraham. Secondly, before this Chriſt had looked upon Zacheus as he looked upon Peter, and called him firſt, and inſpired him with grace. So Hierome well interpreteth: Chriſtus Zacheum latentem in arbore, quaſi in peccatorum tenebris obumbratum ſollicitè ut ovem perditam requirit aſpectu, & venire cunctantem vocat: Chriſt doth carefully ſeeke Zacheus as a loſt ſheep with his ſight, lying hid in the tree as in the darknes of ſinners, and fore-ſlowing to come he calleth him: de duob. filiis. Zacheus almes then was a fruit of his calling already begun, not a preparation to his calling.

Act. 10. 2. Iam. 5. 15. 4 Neither was Cornelius without faith: for he feared God, and prayed continually, Act. 10. 2. But prayer is a fruit of faith; Iam. 5. 15. The prayer of faith: From this faith proceeded his almes, which was afterward encreaſed and confirmed by the preaching of Peter.

Heb. 11. 6. Heb. 13. 15. Tit. 1. 15. Argum. But that almes being without faith, are no diſpoſition or preparation to juſtification is evident: firſt, Hebr. 11. 6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God. Secondly, Heb. 13. 15. By Chriſt we muſt offer up our ſacrifices, by the which God is pleaſed. Thirdly, Tit. 1. 15. Unto the pure all things are pure? And our hearts are purified by faith, Act. 15.9. Wherfore almes are impure, if the heart be not firſt purified and cleanſed by faith. Fourthly, Rom. 3.24. Wee are juſtified freely by grace: Gratis per gratiam: If gratis, freely, then our works as almes deeds are no preparation, motive, or inſinuation thereunto, for then it ſhould not be freely.

Act. 15. 9.
Rom. 3. 14.

And whereas Bellarmine ſpeaketh of almes having Gods ſpeciall help, this is no other but the help of grace and faith, that is, Gods ſpeciall aſſiſtance; as S. Paul ſaith, Our abilitie or ſufficiencie even to thinke that is good, is of God; Ambroſe alſo ſaith: Plene & veraciter confitenda eſt gratia Dei, de cujus hoc primum munere eſt, ut auxilium ipſius ſentiatur: Fully and truly the grace of God muſt be confeſſed, of whoſe gift this is firſt, that his help is felt or perceived: Ambroſ. epiſtol. 84.

Anſw. FIrſt, the authority of this booke, being not Canonicall, bindeth us not. Secondly, almes deliver from death, and ſuffer not to goe into darkneſſe: that is, thereby we find favour among men, and are preſerved from danger: So Toby expoundeth himſelfe: Thou layeſt up a good ſtore for thy ſelfe againſt the day of neceſſitie, verſ. 9. that is, other men, which were before by him relieved, ſhall now in the time of his neceſſitie ſuccour him: and not ſuffer him to periſh in penurie and darkneſſe. So alſo Eccleſiaſticus, lay up thy almes, They ſhall keep thee from affliction, chap. 29. 12. They ſhall keep a mans favour, verſ. 13. They ſhall fight for thee againſt thine enemie, better than the ſhield of a ſtrong man: This it is then to be delivered from death, and darknes, namely from outward perill and danger among men: if theſe Apocryphall books doe yet aſcribe more unto almes deeds, as making them availeable to redeeme our ſins, which is contrary to Scripture, we doe refuſe them.

The Proteſtants,

Anſw. OVr Saviour Chriſt biddeth us not in this place in giving our almes to propound, and ſet before us the praiſe and reward of God; but only to take heed of the praiſe of men, and to ſhun the ſame by giving in ſecret: the praiſe or reward at Gods hand followeth upon this ſimplicitie and the ſinglenes of heart in giving of almes: but we muſt doe well for conſcience ſake, not only for hope of reward: although we grant that our almes deeds are well pleaſing and acceptable unto God through Chriſt: Hebr. 13. 16. Hebr 13.16. With ſuch ſacrifice God is pleaſed: Yet wee ought to doe them of duty, without any other reſpect.

But now if in giving almes we reſpect the reward at Gods hands, then doe wee it not of conſcience, nor for the Lords ſake, but for the rewards ſake.

The Papiſts.

104. Error. LAſtly, the Rhemiſts charge us very untruely, to be enemies to good works: and moſt ſlanderouſly affirme of us, that we condemne them as uncleane, ſinfull, hypocriticall; in c. 2. to the Romans, ſect. 3. and it is the generall accuſation of the Papiſts againſt us, that we preaching only faith, have deſtroyed good works, and ſlaked mens charity and devotion thereunto.

The Proteſtants.

THis is an uncharitable ſlander, and a moſt falſe accuſation, that the doctrine of faith is a deſtruction of manners: or that we, preaching juſtification only by faith, do hinder good works: for firſt, for the doctrine it ſelfe, though we affirme, that faith only juſtifieth; yet we alſo urge good works as neceſſary fruits, and lively teſtimonies of our faith. Secondly, concerning our ſelves; wee doe continually call upon the people to ſhew their faith, by their works: we ſay with S. Paul, that they, which have beleeved in God might be carefull to ſhew forth good works, Tit. 3. 8. and let ours alſo learne to ſhew forth good works for neceſſary uſes, that they be not unfruitfull: verſe 14. Yet the ſame Apoſtle aſcribeth juſtification to faith only without works, Rom. 3. 28. Wee alſo ſay with Hierome, Inter Chriſtianum & Gentilem non fides tantum debet ſed vita diſtinguere; & diverſam religionem per diverſa opera monſtrare: Betweene a Chriſtian and a Gentile, not faith only, but our life muſt make a difference; and we muſt ſhew a divers religion, by divers and differing works, Hieron. ad Celantiam. Thirdly, that it may appeare to all the world, how ſhameleſſe theſe men are in forging untrue reports of us, I will by particular inſtance of ſome ſpeciall charitable works, done under the Goſpell, and eſpecially within theſe fiftie yeeres ſince the beginning of the happy reigne of our late renowned Soveraigne, briefly ſhew, that the doctrine of faith hath not been among us unfruitfull. But it ſhall not bee done in this place, I will reſerve this Catalogue of theſe charitable works for the end of this Treatiſe of the Controverſies: both becauſe I will not interrupt this buſineſſe, and hinder the Readers courſe, and beſide, for that I had not received ſufficient information in the particulars of theſe Chriſtian works of charity, when the Printer was come unto this place: I ſay therefore here with Tertullian: Si cui minus quid hic egiſſe videamur, ſperet reſervatum ſuo tempori: If here I ſeeme to any man to have performed too little, let him thinke it reſerved for a fitter time and place, &c. lib. 1. *cont. TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE THOMAS EARLE OF EXETER LORD BVRGHLEY, KNIGHT OF THE MOST noble order of the Garter, of his Majeſties moſt honorable privie Counſell:

And to the right Honourable Sir Iulius Cæſar, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and of his Majeſties moſt honourable privie Counſell, Grace and peace.

RIght Honourable, I am bold to joyne your Honors together in the Dedication of this part of my booke, who are both joyntly admitted to the Counſell of State, and in whom there is a joint and like affection, both in zeale to religion, and love to learning: whom then God and the King have as it were coupled together, the one by the ſame bond of pious devotion, the other by the like honour of prudent conſultation, I thought it not fit in this worke to disjoyne and ſever: that here I may uſe Ambroſe words: Quemadmodum illic omnia fuere vobis communia, ita hic jus dividuum neſciatis: as in all things you have there a communion, ſo here you ſhould know no diviſion.

In obit.Satyr.

Your late ſingular bountie (Noble Earle of Exceter) to Clare Hall in Cambridge, doth ſhew your Chriſtian care for the encreaſe of learning, and propagation of religion: you have no need of that caveate which one giveth to rich and noble men, Cave dives, ne in te crubeſcant tuorum majorum merita: Take heed thou rich man, leſt thy anceſtors merits, bee not obſcured and abaſhed in thee: your Honour hath herein equalized, if not exceeded your worthy anceſtors: But I ſay rather with the ſame father thus writing of a noble Earle, that had built a Church: The Centurion excuſed himſelfe, that hee was not worthie that the Lord ſhould enter under his roofe: Ecce dignus eſt comes noſter, ſub cujus tectum hodie ſalvator ingredietur: Behold our Earle is worthie under whoſe roofe our Saviour will enter: ſo Chriſt will vouchſafe in his poore members releeved by your honours gift, to enter under the roofe of that College, which is by your provident care ſo liberally maintained: and ſo I ſay againe with Ambroſe in the ſame place: Sapiens, qui ſicut comes imperatoris ita comes Chriſti eſſe deſiderat: He is truly wiſe, who as he is a Count of the Empire, ſo deſireth to be a Peer of Chriſts.

And to your honour likewiſe (Right Honourable Sir Iulius Cæſar) give mee leave thus much to ſay, that as your affection to religion, love to learning, hatred of ſuperſtition, hath rightly honoured you, ſo you proceed every way to adorne your eminent calling: you I know will approve of that ſaying, Prærogativam generis ſimilitudo morum magis ſibi vendicat, quàm ordo majorum, The congruitie of manners not the petegree of aunceſtors hath the prerogative of noble birth: your ſingular devotion to learning appeareth herein: that you would have your ſonne the heire of your poſſeſſion, to take upon him that excellent [a] profeſſion of the law, by the which your H. hath aſcended that ſcale of honour, to the which the Lord hath advanced you: for it is indeed, a worthy calling, and by the Imperiall conſtitutions much extolled: The Emperour Leo maketh profeſſors of the lawes, not inferior to Captaines, which defend their countrey by their ſword: Non minus provident humano generi quàm qui prælïis patriam ſalvat. The Emperour Anaſtaſius dignifieth advocates after the diſpoſition of their office, with the title and honour of Earles, jubemus comitis perfrui dignitate.

dignitate. Herein your Honors example, may abaſh and make aſhamed many in theſe daies both of the Eccleſiaſticall function and other, who divert their ſonnes to other profeſſions, than they themſelves were increaſed by: The Lord hath exalted your Honour to this eminent place, to make triall of your faithfull ſervice, and happie ſhall you be, if therein you approve your ſelfe to God and his Church, as we truſt: God hath made you of the number of thoſe which are able to doe good, not which need good to be done unto: You remember the ſaying of our bleſſed Saviour, Happie is the ſervant whom his Maſter, when he commeth ſhall find ſo doing.

τῶν εὐποιεῖν δυναμένων, οὐ τῶν εὐ παθεῖν δεομένων: Agapet.

Now to both your Honors joyntly give me leave to ſay this one word: That you in your honourable places, labour to maintaine and patronize the truth and ſinceritie of faith, impugned by Papiſts, contemned by Atheiſts, neglected of many worldlings both in Court and Countrey: of whom (I feare me) that complaint of the Apoſtle may be taken up: All ſeeke their owne, and not that which is Ieſus Chriſts. Tertullian ſaith well: Quis non libentiſſime tantum habeat pro vero erogare, quantum alii pro falſo? Who will not willingly beſtow ſo much for the truth, as others do for that is falſe? Popiſh religion hath found many Princes and great men in the world to countenance it, many martiall men to fight for it, many ſubtill wits to defend it: And ſhall the truth find fewer friends? God forbid: Wee muſt all then ſet our hands to the Lords work: your Honors by your power and authoritie to maintaine it, we Divines and Preachers by our pens and tongues to publiſh it, all good Chriſtians are bound to love and receive it: Goe on then and proſper in your honourable courſe. Advance religion, expell ſuperſtition, execute juſtice, releeve the oppreſſed, heare the cries of the poore: think it no loſſe but gaine, whatſoever coſt or labour is beſtowed upon the truth, Lucrum eſt pietatis nomine facere ſumptum. Pardon, I beſeech you my boldneſſe, that thus write: I may here ſay againe with Tertullian, Non tantus ſum ut ego vos alloquar, veruntamen gladiatores perfectiſſimos, non tantum magiſtri & præpoſiti, ſed etiam idiotæ, & ſupervacuè quique adhortantur de longinquo: I am no body to ſpeak to you, yet the moſt excellent champions are exhorted not onely by their skilfull maſters, but by the ſimple ſtanders by, and called unto a far off: I end with that ſweet promiſe of our bleſſed Saviour pronounced to all his faithfull ſervants: Be faithfull unto the death, and I will give thee the crowne of life: Amen.

THE TWENTIETH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE.

WE have now, through Gods gracious aſſiſtance, entreated of all thoſe queſtions, wherein we diſſent from our adverſaries, both as touching all the offices of Chriſt, his Propheticall office, Kingdome and Prieſthood: as likewiſe concerning the benefits purchaſed by the death of Chriſt, the benefits of our redemption and ſalvation. Now, in the laſt place we are to proſecute ſuch matters in queſtion betweene us, as doe concerne the natures of Chriſt: and this treatiſe containeth three Controverſies. Firſt, of the humane nature of Chriſt. Secondly, of his divine nature. Thirdly, of them both conſidered together.

The firſt part, of this Controverſie, concerning the humane nature of Chriſt.

THis part is divided into theſe queſtions. Firſt, of the ubiquitie of the humanitie of Chriſt. Secondly, whether he increaſed in wiſdome. Thirdly, whether he ſuffered in ſoule. Fourthly, whether he deſcended into hell. Fifthly, concerning the place of hell.

The firſt queſtion, of the ubiquitie of the bodie of Chriſt, whether his humanitie be every where.

The Papiſts.

THey doe ſeeme in words mightily to impugne this opinion of the Ubiquitaries, as they are called, which doe erroniouſly hold, that the humanitie of Chriſt is every where, as his Deitie is, and that the proprieties of one nature are really imparted unto the other: whereupon it followeth, that the humanitie of Chriſt is every where, becauſe it is verily united, and made one perſon with the Godhead in Chriſt. This opinion the Papiſts would be thought to deteſt and abhorre: and Bellarmine beſtoweth great paines by ſundrie arguments to confute it: as by divers places of Scripture, Math. 28. He is riſen, he is not here: Jeſus ſaid, Lazarus is dead, and I am glad for your ſakes, that I was not there, Ioh. 11.4. Ergo, Chriſt as he is man, is not every where. Againe, the opinion of the Ubiquitaries doth overthrow the article of Chriſts aſcenſion: for if Chriſts bodie be every where, as they hold, he can neither aſcend nor deſcend, Bellarm. de Incarnat. verbi. lib. 3. cap. 11.12.

1. Error.

John 11.4.

The Proteſtants.

IT is true Catholike and ſound doctrine, that the human & divine nature are truly united in Chriſt, and doe make but one perſon, or hypoſtaſis, neither by confuſion of the natures, nor converſion of one into the other, but by unitie of perſon: for as the bodie and ſoule make one man, ſo God and man is one Chriſt. And the better to underſtand this myſterie, we muſt ſet downe theſe three poſitions.

1 Though the two natures in Chriſt be ſo united, that they make but one perſon, yet neither the natures are confounded, nor yet the proprieties: but as Chriſt is both God and man, ſo there is in him a double power, will, and underſtanding, one human and created; the other divine and uncreated.

2 By reaſon of this union, all the excellent graces of the ſpirit in the higheſt degree, and above meaſure, are given and beſtowed upon the humanitie of Chriſt, Ioh. 3.34. but ſuch notwithſtanding, as deſtroy not his human nature, but are qualities created, as his humanitie alſo was created.

3 There is alſo a mutuall communication of the proprieties of both natures each to other though not really in reſpect of the natures: So we ſay in Concreto, in the concrete, that is, taking the whole perſon of Chriſt, that Chriſtus homo, that is, the man Chriſt is omnipotent, is every where: and Chriſtus Deus, that is, Chriſt being God, dyed for us, was buried, roſe againe: but in the abſtract it is great blaſphemie to ſay; that the Godhead of Chriſt dyed, was buried, or roſe againe, or that the humanitie of Chriſt is omnipotent, or in every place.

The Ubiquitaries now hold, that there is a reall communication of the proprieties of both natures: and therefore doubt not to ſay, that the fleſh and bodie of Chriſt is every where in all places at once.

The Papiſts in outward ſhew are enemies to that opinion: but in deed, and in truth, as it ſhall now appeare, they are not farre off from being in the ſame error.

Firſt, the ſame arguments which they urge againſt the Ubiquitaries, doe returne upon themſelves: for although they will not ſay, that Chriſts bodie is every where, yet they hold that it may be in a thouſand places at once, yea and more too, if the Sacrament be at once in ſo many places celebrated: for Chriſts bodie they hold to be really and corporally in the Sacrament. But thoſe places alleaged, He is riſen, he is not here, and the reſt doe prove that Chriſt can be but in one place at once. This their opinion alſo is againſt the article of Chriſts aſcenſion, and abiding in heaven till the day of judgement: for if the ſame bodie wherein Chriſt ſitteth in heaven, be in the Sacrament; either when he is preſent in earth, he is abſent in heaven, contrarie to the Scripture, Act. 3.21. which ſaith, The heavens muſt containe him till that all things be reſtored: or elſe, if he be in both places at once, they muſt needs make his bodie infinite, and ſo deſtroy the nature of his humanitie, which can bee but in one place. If they ſay, it is another bodie and fleſh, which Chriſt by his divine power maketh to be preſent in the Sacrament, that were much more abſurd: for then Chriſt ſhould have many bodies, and other fleſh than that which was borne of the Virgin Marie. We ſee then they are not farre off from the opinion of the Ubiquitaries.

Revel. 14. 4.

Secondly, the Rhemiſts doe approve that argument, whereby Hierome proveth that the Saints may every where bee preſent at their bodies and monuments: They follow the Lambe, whitherſoever hee goeth, Apoc. 14. 4. but the Lambe is in every place: therefore they that be with the Lambe Chriſt, be preſent every where. Whereupon it followeth, that the Lambe Chriſt in humanitie muſt be every where: for how can he be preſent elſe in innumerable places at once, where any reliques or monuments of Saints are? Neither can they excuſe this ubiquitarie preſence of the humanitie of Chriſt and the ſoules of Saints, by their agilitie and celeritie: becauſe they can quickly paſſe from one place to another: for if they muſt be preſent at their monuments, whenſoever they are called upon, they muſt of neceſſitie be often in many places at once: for in one and the ſame inſtant, men may reſort to their monuments which are in divers places farre aſunder. Thus they are driven not onely to grant an ubiquitie or omnipreſence of the humanitie of Chriſt, but even of Saints alſo: which thoſe whom they call Ubiquitaries would never grant.

Thirdly, the bodie of Chriſt is viſible and palpable now in heaven, and hath a place according to the quantitie of his bodie: Bellarmine confeſſeth as much, cap. 12. But that bodie which is in the Sacrament hath none of theſe properties, it is neither ſeene nor felt, neither hath a place according to the quantitie of a bodie, for they cloſe it up in ſmall round cakes. Wherefore deſtroying theſe properties of the humanitie of Chriſt, they may as well, and doe in effect, take away the other, namely, the being of Chriſts bodie in one place: for it is as proper to the bodie of Chriſt to be ſeene and felt, as to be in one place at once.

Fourthly, Bellarmine granteth, being urged with that argument, that Chriſts ſoule was in Paradiſe after his paſſion, and therefore not in hell: he confeſſeth, that it was not impoſſible that Chriſts ſoule ſhould be in two places at once, lib. 4. de Chriſti anima, cap. 15. Yea he ſaith, that Chriſt may, if he will, turne all the world into bread, and the bread ſo made convert into his fleſh; and ſo his bodie may be as well in every place of the world, as now it is in the Euchariſt, lib. 3. de incarnat. cap. 11. What great odds now, I pray you, is there betweene the opinion of the Ubiquitaries and of the Papiſts? but that they ſay, that the bodie of Chriſt is every where ordinarily by the power of the Godhead: the other ſay, his fleſh is in many places at once by a myracle. The one ſaith, Chriſts bodie actually is in every place: the other ſaith, it is actually in many places at once, and may be in all places, if Chriſt will: which is true in reſpect of his omnipotent will, if Chriſt would deſtroy his bodie: but wee are ſure Chriſts will cannot be contrarie to it ſelfe, to deſtroy his owne bodie. We confeſſe then with Hierome: Stultum eſt illius potentiam unius corpuſculi parvitate finiri, quem non capit cœlum, & tamen qui ubique erat in filio hominis totus erat: in omnibus locis verſabatur, cum Thoma in India, &c. It is a fooliſh thing, that the power of Chriſt ſhould be determined in the ſmalneſſe of a little bodie, whom the heaven is not able to receive: and yet he that was every where, was all and whole in the ſon of man: in all places he was converſant, with Thomas in India, Peter at Rome, with Andrew in Achaia, Paul in Illyricum, &c. tom. 4. Marcell. All this we acknowledge to be true of Chriſt as he is God, according to his owne promiſe made to his diſciples, I am with you to the end of the world, Matth. 28.20. But to imagine Chriſts bodie to be in all places, or many places at once, is to limit his power and preſence within the compaſſe of his bodie, which Hierome here ſaith is a fooliſh matter.

And further, that Chriſts bodie is neither in all places, nor in more places at once preſent at the ſame time: this further evidence we have.

4 Bellarmine confeſſeth, that both Thomas, and other Schoole-men doe thinke, Non poſſe unum corpus eſſe in duobus locis localiter; That one bodie cannot be in two places at once locally, &c. The Maſter alſo of the Sentences ſaith well: Chriſtus ubique totus eſt, ſed non totum; totum ad naturam refertur, totus ad hypoſtaſin; Whole Chriſt is every where, but not wholly, whole is referred to his perſon, wholly to his natures, lib. 3. diſtinct. 23. liter. e.

Lib. 3. de Euchar. c. 3. ſect. quidem tamen.

The ſecond queſtion, whether our Saviour Chriſt did verily increaſe in knowledge and wiſdome, as he was man.

The Papiſts.

CHriſt, they ſay, in the very firſt creation of his ſoule, and from his conception, was endued with the fulneſſe of all wiſdome, grace, and knowledge; neither can he be ſaid properly to have increaſed in any of theſe gifts.

2. Error.

1 Chriſt was anoynted from his mothers wombe; and then the ſpirit of God was upon him: for the Angels that appeared to the ſhepherds call him Chriſt, Luk. 2. 11. And S. John ſaith, The word was made fleſh, full of grace and truth: Therefore even then he had received all abundance of grace and knowledge, Bellarm. de Chriſti anima, lib. 4. 2.

Luk. 2. 11. John 1. 11.

Anſw. 1. We grant, that our Saviour was the Jeſus and the Chriſt even from his Nativitie: not that then hee actually ſtraightwayes entred into thoſe offices, or received plenarie power of all the graces of the ſpirit in his humanitie, but becauſe he was even from his mothers wombe conſecrated and appointed thereunto: for it no more followeth, becauſe he is called Chriſt, that he then had his actuall anoynting fully, than that, becauſe he was called Jeſus from his Nativitie, he had actually performed our redemption. The full anoynting of the ſpirit was fulfilled in his Baptiſme, when the holy Ghoſt came downe in the likeneſſe of a Dove: and then beginning to preach, in his firſt Sermon at Nazareth, hee ſhewed the accompliſhment of the prophecie of Eſay, The ſpirit of the Lord is upon me, &c. Luk. 4. 18.

Luk. 4. 18.

2 Neither do the words of John import ſo much, as they gather: The word was made fleſh, and dwelt amongſt us, full of grace and truth: which is not to bee underſtood onely of the very firſt aſſuming of the fleſh, but of the dwelling of the word in the fleſh among us, and ſo appeared to be full of grace and truth. As it followeth, John 1. 16. Of his fulneſſe have we received grace for grace: this receiving of the fulneſſe of Chriſt, was not performed in his infancie, but afterward by his holy doctrine and preaching, and the Apoſtle ſaith, That when he aſcended up on high, he led captivitie captive, and gave gifts unto men: Epheſ. 4. 8. Wee denie not but that this fulneſſe of grace was in Chriſt in his firſt incarnation, yet after increaſed and made more full in his human nature.

John 1. 16. Epheſ. 4. 8.

3 But leſt there might be here any miſtaking: we muſt thus diſtinguiſh of the graces and gifts which were conferred upon the humanitie of Chriſt, that they are of three ſorts, habituall and infuſed, actuall and manifeſted, experimentall, that is, by experience had and obtained. We grant, that the habituall graces were infuſed in as great fulneſſe in the firſt inſtant of Chriſts bleſſed conception, as at any time afterward: like as the ſoule commeth into the bodie furniſhed with all the habituall faculties and powers thereof: and ſo Chriſt increaſed not in theſe gifts: but in reſpect of the manifeſtation and declaration, theſe gifts and graces increaſed, when as they were produced more and more into act, the organes of the bodie being fitted thereunto: and in reſpect of his experimentall knowledge alſo Chriſt verily increaſed: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Though he were the Son, yet learned he obedience, through the things which he ſuffered.

Heb. 5. 8.

Argum. 2. Chriſt was the Son of God in his very incarnation, and even then was the humanitie perfectly united to the Godhead: therefore immediately upon this union and conjunction of both natures in one perſon, muſt needs follow the fulneſſe of grace in the human nature. Againe, Adam was created in perfect wiſdome, therefore much more the ſecond Adam. Bellarmine, cap. 4.

Anſwer. 1. If preſently upon the uniting of the two natures together, it had beene neceſſarie that the human nature of Chriſt ſhould have received whatſoever by the preſence of the divine nature was to bee conferred upon it, then Chriſt ſtraight-wayes muſt alſo both in bodie and ſoule have beene glorified: for it cannot be denied, but that as the bodie of Chriſt after the reſurrection received more glorie than before; ſo alſo his ſoule being the other part of his humanitie, was more glorified, rified. By this it is evident, that the humanitie received not at once the fulneſſe of all grace and glorie in the firſt uniting of the Godhead.

2 Adam was created perfect in bodie and ſoule: and if Chriſt therefore ought to have his fulneſſe of the gifts of the ſoule in his nativitie as Adam had his in the creation, why ought he not alſo to have had a perfect bodie, as Adam was created withall? Wherefore as it was no diſhonour to Chriſt to grow up in ſtature of bodie, ſo neither was it to increaſe in the gift of the minde.

Againe we confeſſe, that Chriſts ſoule in his perfect growth was farre more excellent than Adams in his perfection of creation. 3 In the firſt inſtant of his conception we doubt not alſo, but it exceeded in heavenly grace all the ſoules that ever came into the bodie by nativitie; yea and Adams ſoule likewiſe, if it had beene ſent into the like bodie. 4 And the like equivalent perfection being admitted in Chriſts ſoule, proportionable to the excellencie thereof: yet as Adams ſoule ſhould have increaſed, if he had not fallen; ſo Chriſts ſoule being moſt perfect in that infantile eſtate might and did receive a greater fulneſſe.

Argum. 3. Firſt, Chriſt created his owne ſoule. Secondly, he himſelfe by his divine power infuſed knowledge and grace into it: therefore at the firſt he gave unto it the very fulneſſe and perfection of knowledge. Thirſtly, Chriſt is the head of men and Angels, therefore he had a moſt wiſe ſoule, it is not fit that the head ſhould be leſſe wiſe than the members, Bellarm. c. 4.

Anſw. 1. Wee denie not but that Chriſt, if it had pleaſed him, could have created himſelfe a moſt perfect ſoule that ſhould not have received afterward any acceſſion of knowledge: but it pleaſed him to bee herein like unto us, that as hee grew up in ſtature of bodie, ſo likewiſe to increaſe in the inward graces. 2 As he created himſelfe a ſoule; ſo likewiſe hee made his owne bodie: as hee infuſed grace to his ſoule; ſo he did give life to his fleſh: yet it followeth not, that Chriſt did or was to make at the firſt incarnation a perfect bodie to himſelfe. 3 We acknowledge notwithſtanding the ſoule of Chriſt in his growth and perfection to have beene moſt wiſe, and exceeding the wiſdome of the ſoules of any of his members: for God gave not him the ſpirit by meaſure, Iohn 3.34. as others have.

The Proteſtants.

THat Chriſt was even from his birth and firſt conception perfect God, and perfect man; wee doe aſſuredly beleeve, and that in the very incarnation, the divine and human nature were united together. Alſo we grant, that the Lord Chriſt might have created to himſelfe a ſoule full of all wiſdome and knowledge, as he might have made himſelfe a perfect bodie: but ſeeing it pleaſed him to be borne of a woman, and firſt to dwell in the bodie of an infant, we doubt not to ſay, as the Scripture teacheth us, that he alſo increaſed in wiſdome.

Heb. 2. 17.4. Argum. 1. He was in all things like to his brethren, onely ſin excepted, Heb. 2.17.4. 15. Ergo, he grew up and increaſed in knowledge, according to the manner of men, which may be done without ſin.

Bellarmine anſwereth, he was like us in all things which concerned the perfection of nature, and the worke of redemption: for if he ſhould have beene like us in all things; then could he not have beene borne of a virgin, nor free from the rebellion of the fleſh, *Bellarm. c.*5.

Contra. 1. He did not take upon him the perfection onely, but the imperfections alſo of our nature, ſuch as he might receive without ſin, as in the bodie, hunger, thirſt, wearineſſe; in the ſoule, ſorrow, feare, &c. 2 It was requiſite even to the worke of our redemption, that he ſhould be like us in every
Heb. 2. 17. reſpect both in ſoule and bodie without ſin: *That he might be mercifull, and a faithfull high Prieſt in things concerning God, Heb.*2.17. 3 From this ſimilitude of Chriſt with us, ſin is excepted, *Heb.*4.15. and ſo both the cauſe of ſin which is originall corruption, and therefore Chriſt was to be borne of a virgin, and the effects of ſin, as is the rebellion of the fleſh; which could not any way be faſtened upon Chriſt being free from ſin.

Argum. 2. The Scripture ſaith plainly, which cannot lie, that Jeſus grew up and increaſed in wiſ-
Luk. 2. 52. dome and ſtature, Luk. 2. 52. And leſt they ſhould anſwer, that this increaſing was onely in the opinion of men, it followeth, And in favour with God and men: hee increaſed in wiſdome, ſtature and favour, not onely in ſhew before men, but in truth before God: and as verily and indeed he grew up in ſtature, ſo alſo in wiſdome.

Argum. 3. Chriſt teſtifieth of himſelfe, that neither the Angels nor the Son of man, as he is man, Mark. 13. 32. knoweth of the day or houre of his comming to judgement, but the father onely, Mark. 13.31. Ergo, Chriſt as he was man had not once all fulneſſe of knowledge. Bellarmine thus expoundeth this place, Filius dicitur neſcire, quia non ſciebat ad dicendum aliis; The Son is ſaid not to know becauſe he knew it, not to reveale it to others, but to keepe it ſecret to himſelfe.

Anſw. Firſt, then by the ſame reaſon, the Angels doe know it alſo: but that they are charged not to declare it to men: for the text ſaith, that neither the Angels, nor the Son of man knoweth the time. Secondly, in this ſenſe alſo the Father might be ſaid not to know it: for neither hath he revealed it to any. Laſtly, although we do affirme according to the Scripture, that the child Jeſus did increaſe in the gifts of the minde, as he did in the ſtature of his bodie; yet we do put great difference betweene him, and all other children that ever came into the world: for as his conception and birth were not after the common manner; (for hee was conceived by the holy Ghoſt, and brought forth without travell and labour: as Auguſtine ſaith, Nec concipiendo libidinem; nec pariendo perpeſſa eſt dolorem;

In conceiving ſhe felt no carnall deſire; in bearing ſhe ſuffered no paine, De 5. Hereſ. cap. 5.) ſo likewiſe, the holy and bleſſed babe, in the conſtitution both of bodie and ſoule excelled the common condition of all other infants: for as he was void of originall ſinne, ſo he was without the effects and fruits thereof, which doe ſhew themſelves in Children: for neither ſuffered he the like pangs and infirmities in bodie, being in his infancie, as other children doe, that are vexed and tormented in body: neither was he ſubject to the unreaſonable and brutiſh motions of the minde, which are in children. Therefore Auguſtine ſaith, Quam ignorationem nullo modo crediderim fuiſſe in infante illo, &c. Which ignorance of minde, I cannot thinke to have been in that infant, in whom the word was made fleſh; lib. 2. de peccator. merit. & remiſſione c. 29. And what ignorance and infirmitie he meaneth, afterward he expreſſeth, Cum motibus irrationabilibus perturbantur, nulla ratione, nullo imperio— cohibentur: When their brutiſh and unreaſonable motions come upon them, they are ruled neither by reaſon, nor any other government, ibid. Theſe infirmities both in body and ſoule we deny to have been in Chriſt: and yet we doubt not to conclude, that, as Chriſt grew in ſtature of body; as Auguſtine ſaith, Mutationes aetatum perpeti voluit ab ipſa exorſus infantia: He paſſed through the ages of mans life, beginning with his infancie: ibid. So likewiſe, as the Scripture ſaith, he increaſed in wiſedome, Luke 2.52. Luk. 2.52.

The teſtimonie of Cyril is here moſt notable, De incarnat. Domini cap. 12. Deus verbum humanitatem ſuam more ſuo proficere permittebat: & quaſi paulatim divinitatis ſuae voluit gloriam declarare, & cum corporis aetate ſua extendere: corporale quidem augmentum, & profectus gratiae & ſapientiae humanitatis magis menſurae conveniat: ipſum deum verbum per ſuam naturam perfectiſſimum confitemur, non egenum profectus, ſapientiae vel gratiae: God the word ſuffered his humanity to grow, and by little and little, as the age of his body increaſed, ſo it pleaſed him to ſhew foorth his divine power: the growth of the bodie, and his increaſe in grace and wiſedome belong to his humane nature: as he was God hee was moſt perfect, and needed no increaſe. Hence wee gather this argument: As Chriſt increaſed in bodie ſo in gifts of the minde, but he verily did grow in bodie. Ergo.

S. Ambroſe: Senſu hominis profecit, ſicut ſcriptum eſt, & Ieſus proficiebat aetate & ſapientia, profectus aetatis, profectus ſapientiae, ſed humanae; aetas non divinitatis, ſed corporis eſt: Ergo ſi proficiebat aetate hominis proficiebat ſapientia hominis: ſapientia autem ſenſu proficit, quia à ſenſu ſapientia: ſenſus ergo proficiebat humanus, ſenſum ergo ſuſcepit humanum: Hee increaſed in the ſenſe or underſtanding of man, as it is written, Ieſus increaſed in age and wiſedome: the increaſe of age, is the increaſe of wiſedome, but humane; for age is not of the divinitie, but of the body: therefore if he increaſed in the age of man he increaſed in the wiſedome of man: but wiſedome increaſeth by ſenſe, for wiſedome is of the ſenſe: wherefore humane ſenſe increaſed in him, and he tooke upon him humane ſenſe: lib. de incarnat. c. 7. Ambroſe thinketh, that Chriſt verily increaſed in wiſedome, not in the opinion of men onely, as the Maſter doth gloſſe upon him: lib. 3. diſt. 13. liter. E. His reaſons are theſe: Firſt, he excepteth nothing from increaſing but his divine nature, then all the reſt increaſed. Secondly, as he increaſed in ſtature of body, ſo likewiſe in wiſedome. Thirdly, his wiſedome increaſed as his ſenſe and experience increaſed; which was verily and indeed, not in opinion onely, Hierome: Virginitat. Laus. Dominus noſter, qui nobis vivendi exemplum reliquit, proficiebat non aetate tantum corporea, ſed ſapientia & gratia, &c. Our Lord who left us an example of living, did increaſe not onely in his bodily age, but in wiſedome and grace, before God and men, &c. Here alſo are three reaſons; Firſt, Chriſt increaſed to give us an example: but we muſt not increaſe onely in opinion. Secondly, he increaſed not onely in body, but in ſoule. Ergo, he increaſed in ſoule. Thirdly, before God and men: but there is no increaſing before God in opinion onely.

Origen alſo upon theſe words, Ieſus increaſed in wiſedome and ſtature, Luk. 2.52. Quis eſt hominum? &c. There is no man, but doth increaſe in ſtature, this is no great matter to be written of Chriſt: therefore underſtand aetate animae proficiebat, he increaſed in the ſtature of his ſoule: whereupon the Apoſtle underſtanding this ſtature to be underſtood of the inward man, writeth: Untill we all meet together to a perfect man, to the meaſure of the age of the fulneſſe of Chriſt, Epheſ. 4.13. Hom. 12. Levit. He doubteth not to affirme, that we muſt increaſe and grow in the inward man, as Chriſt did: Ergo, hee did verily and in truth increaſe.

Now to conclude this point: there are divers wayes whereby Chriſt may bee ſaid to increaſe in knowledge and other gifts of the minde: 1. Per novi habitus acceſſionem, by the acceſſion of a new habite: as when one of ignorant, becommeth skilfull and attaineth unto knowledge: ſo Chriſt increaſed not, being in his firſt conception both God and man, and his bleſſed ſoule illuminated in that inſtant by the uniting to the Godhead. 2. By a mentall ſeparation, as Damaſcene ſaith: ſo Chriſt aſſumed our humanity, which in it ſelfe conſidered, is ignorant, ſervile, and ſo apt to encreaſe: but conſidered in Chriſt as united to the Godhead, his humanity is none of theſe. 3. In reſpect of the manifeſtation toward us, and our opinion, Chriſts graces increaſed: So Damaſcene, and before him Nazianzene. 4. The gifts of the minde may be ſaid to increaſe, per productionem, & dilatationem, by the production and dilating thereof, as Tertullian ſaith, like as, cum maſſa auri in laminam laxatur, when a maſſe of gold is beaten into a thin plate, it is made greater, Per dilatationem, non per adjectionem; dum extenditur, non dum augetur, by the dilatation thereof, not by any adjection, while it is extended rather, than increaſed: and ſo crementa animae reputanda, non ſubſtantiva, ſed provocativa, the increments of the ſoule are not ſubſtantiall, but by way of provocation and production: and in this ſenſe alſo Chriſt increaſed in wiſedome. 5. As the maſter is ſaid in diſcipulo proficere, to increaſe in his ſcholar, when he increaſeth: ſo Chriſt may be ſaid to increaſe, becauſe he maketh us increaſe. Clictou. annot. in Damaſc. lib. 3. cap. 22. but this is not ſo fit here. 6. And beſide theſe, there is another increaſing in graces, and that is, per acquiſitionem, by an experimentall getting and acquiring of knowledge, which is two waies: either, per inventionem, by ones owne invention and obſervation; or, per diſciplinam, by diſcipline and inſtruction of others: this increaſe of experimentall knowledge was in Chriſt the firſt way, not the ſecond, for he came to be the teacher of others. and not to learne of any. And that Chriſt thus verily increaſed, this further evidence we have.

3. The learned writers of the reformed Churches doe herein concurre, that Chriſt verily increaſed in wiſedome and knowledge: as *Luther in homil. 1. Dominic. poſt. Epiphan. 3. Error.

THey ſay, Chriſt came out of his mothers wombe, the clauſure not ſtirred: as he paſſed thorow the doores when hee came in to his diſciples, the doores being ſhut, Iohn 20. 19. and as he paſſed thorow the ſtone, ariſing out of the Sepulchre, Rhemiſt, annot. Iohn 10. ſect. 2. Bellarm. de Eccleſ. lib. 4. cap. 1. ſect. quartus error.

3. p. q. 35. act. 6.

Argum. Thus they would proove their aſſertion: 1. Thomas thus reaſoneth; Becauſe Marie did bring forth without paine, therefore her wombe was not opened, Quia dolor parientis cauſatur ex apertione meatuum: The griefe of a woman in travell is cauſed by opening of the wombe. 2. Becauſe Mary remained a Virgin in that holy birth; and ſo they make it all one, virginitatem amittere, and vulvam ſeu matricem aperire, to loſe the virginity, and to open the wombe. [a] Bellarm. [b] Maldonate Ieſuit. [c] Gregor. Valent. And before them [d] Thomas.

Anſw. 1. It followeth not, that becauſe Mary brought forth without paine, that therefore her wombe was not opened in the birth: for Tertullian, who holdeth the latter, as ſhall bee afterward ſhewed, affirmeth alſo the other, that ſhe brought foorth, Non ſubita dolorum concuſſione, not with the ſudden pangs of griefe: and that puniſhment, to bring forth in ſorrow, was laid upon woman, being now in tranſgreſſion: ſo that where the conception is without ſinne, the birth ſhall be without griefe, as it was onely in Chriſt. So [e] Bonaventure, to whom [f] Pererius ſubſcribeth, ſaith, that if man had knowne woman in the time of his innocency, fuiſſet ibi clauſtrorum apertio, non tamen pœnalis paſſio, there ſhould have beene an apertion of the wombe, but no painefull paſſion.

2. The apertion or opening of the wombe is one thing, the amiſſion or violation of the virginity another: for otherwiſe, both Theophylact, Origene, Tertullian, Ambroſe, ſhould be charged with the hereſie of Helvidius, that Mary continued not a virgine, who all are of opinion as preſently ſhall bee ſhewed, that the wombe of the virgine was opened in the birth: Nay, if they will beleeve their owne Ianſenius, Chriſts opening of the wombe was ſo farre, from empairing the integrity of his mothers virginity, that it did rather argue the holineſſe of the birth: As, ſaith hee, with Ambroſe it is proper to Chriſt to open the wombe of his mother, (becauſe in other births the man firſt openeth the wombe) ſo alſo that which followeth (he ſhall be called holy unto the Lord) is peculiar to Chriſt; ſolus enim ipſe verè ſanctus, &c. for he onely was truly holy among the firſt borne, whereas many other are moſt wicked.

The Proteſtants.

1. IT can never bee proved, that Chriſts body came either thorow the wood of the doores, or thorow the ſtone of the Sepulchre, or clauſure of his mothers wombe. And concerning the laſt, the Scripture is evident to the contrarie, where it is ſaid, that our Saviour Chriſt was preſented to the Lord, according as it is written: Every male that firſt openeth the matrix, &c. Luk. 2. 29.

Luk. 2. 29.

But to this place a double anſwere is made: firſt, that the opening doth not here ſignifie the uncloaſing of the wombe, but onely exitum prolis, the comming foorth of the childe out of the wombe, ſic [a] Thomas. 2. The Virgine Mary was not ſubiect to this law, &c. yet obſerved the cuſtome of other women. So the [b] Doway men.

[b] Annot. in Levit. 12. 1.

Contra. 1. It is ſtrange, ſeeing the words directly are, Every male, that firſt openeth the matrix, that the opening here ſpoken of, ſhould not ſignifie the opening of the matrix. 2, And the text is as direct, that Marie did herein, as it was commanded in the law; Marie therefore was ſubject to this law: yea, their owne Ianſenius, as he is alleaged before thinketh, that this law ſpecially had reference to Chriſt, becauſe he onely among all the firſt borne, was truly holy.

Luk. 2. 24.

2. We grant, that both the birth of Chriſt, his riſing out of the grave, his comming in, the doores being ſhut, was ſtrange and miraculous, becauſe one ſubſtance gave place to another for a time, and after the paſſing of his body, the place remained whole and ſhut as before: but not in the very inſtant of paſſing. The red ſea gave place to the Iſraelites while they paſſed, and cloſed together againe: ſo did the priſon doores open miraculouſly to the Apoſtles, Act. 5. 19. An incredulous Iew ſeeing the eare of Malchus ſo ſoone healed, would not have thought that Peters ſword went betweene it and his head, as we are ſure it did: So we ſay concerning the birth of Chriſt, that the place gave way while he paſſed, and cloſed up afterward againe as before. Againe Auguſtine ſaith, Spatia locorum tolle corporibus, nuſquam erunt, & quia nuſquam erunt, nec erunt: Take away ſpace of place from bodies, and they ſhall be no where; and if they be no where, then are they not at all: Epiſt. 57. &c. And againe, Tolle corpora ipſa qualitatibus corporum, non erit ubi ſint, —ſi moles ipſa corporis auferatur non erit ubi qualitates ſint: And take the bodies from the qualities, and they ſhall be no where, —and if the quantity or bigneſſe of the body, be it great or ſmall, be taken away, the qualities ſhall be no where, ibid. But the Papiſts in ſaying that Chriſt went thorow the very ſubſtance and corpulency of things, doe take away from his body his proper place, and conſequently the quality and corpulencie thereof: for two ſubſtances cannot be in one place; and therefore they deſtroy the nature of his body.

Act. 5. 19.

And yet further concerning this point: 1. Theophylact upon theſe words, Luk. 2. 23. Every man child, that firſt openeth the wombe, &c. writeth to this purpoſe, that ipſe ſolus aperuit vulvam matris ſuæ, cùm aliis aperiat vir uterum: He onely opened the wombe of his mother, where as to others the man openeth the wombe.

Luk. 2, 23.

2. To the ſame purpoſe Origene: Omnium mulierum non partus infantis ſed coitus viri vulvam reſerat, &c. In all other women, not the birth of the infant, but the companie of the man openeth the wombe, &c. but Chriſt onely opened his mothers wombe. But before him Tertullian is herein a pregnant and evident witneſſe: Virgo quantum à viro, non virgo quantum à partu, —Etſi Virgo concepit, in partu ſuo nupſit, non nupſit; ipſa patefacti corporis lege —quis propriè vulvam adaperuit, quam qui clauſam patefecit? —agnovit adaperta vulva nuptialem paſſionem, &c. She was a Virgin in reſpect of man, not a virgine in the birth, —although ſhe conceived a virgine, in the birth ſhe was as married, and not married, by the manner of opening the body, —who more properly opened the wombe, than he that opened it being ſhut? —ſhe felt the nuptiall paſſion of opening the wombe, &c.

3. Bucer, and Molineus in 3. part. union. Evangel. affirme according to the Scriptures and the ancient writers, that Chriſt in his birth opened the wombe of Mary: ſee alſo before error 2. the conſent of the reformed Churches, that Chriſts body retained the properties and dimenſions of a naturall and humane body, whereof this is one, that one body cannot penetrate another body, without the making of ſome way, and opening of a paſſage.

In 3. part. Vnion.

4. The Romaniſts are here of divers opinions: ſome thinke that it belonged to a glorious body, to enter the doores being ſhut: it is ſhewed, (ſaith Gregory) that his body, was ejuſdem naturæ ſed alterius gloriæ, of the ſame nature, but of another glory; then by this opinion before Chriſts body was glorified, it had not that property to enter thorow without a paſſage: ſome thinke that Chriſts body from his birth was endued dono ſubtilitatis, with the gift of ſubtilitie, that is, thinneſſe, to be able to paſſe thorow another body: but this opinion is refuſed of Thomas: who thinketh that Chriſts bodie in the birth paſſed thorow the wombe not opened, by a miracle: and yet, as forgetting himſelfe, he ſaith, that Chriſt before his paſſion, permittebat carni ſuæ agere & pati, quæ propria, &c. Did ſuffer his fleſh to doe and ſuffer according to the property thereof: but it is contrary to the property of a body, to glide, as it were, thorow another. B. Rhenanus ſeemeth to approve the former ſentence of Tertullian; and therefore in their Index expurgat. they haue left out that clauſe: ſo alſo Ianſenius ſeemeth to concurre with Theophylact and Origene, as they are before recited:

Gaii decret. Iacuit in ſepulchro, & revoluto lapide monumenti tertia die caro reſurrexit: He lay in the grave, and the third day, the ſtone being rolled away, his fleſh roſe againe, &c. This decree ſaith, that Chriſts body went not thorow the ſtone, but the ſtone was firſt removed.

Ianſen. Concord. Evang. cap. 10.

But this matter I have entreated of at large before, Controverſ. 13. err. 17. argum. Pap. 2. whither I referre the Reader.

The third queſtion, whether Chriſt ſuffered in ſoule.

FIrſt, before I come to the handling of this queſtion in the ſeverall parts thereof, I will lay open the ſlanderous and malicious accuſations, which the Papiſts charge this opinion with, and eſpecially one Frier Feuardentius, that hath directly of this argument written againſt Maſter Calvine, that worthie Miniſter of Chriſt of bleſſed memory. And againſt this Frier, together with Bellarmine and the Remiſts, I purpoſe to deale ex profeſſo, in this queſtion. If any other from amongſt our ſelves have therein written ſomewhat diverſly from the common opinion, I leave them to their owne beſt thoughts: and being deſirous to maintaine peace, and not to increaſe domeſticall contentions, I ſay with Hierome writing to Auguſtine: Non audeo ſcribere contra Epiſcopum communionis meæ.

Error ſeu falſ. 5.

Firſt then, he chargeth Calvine and others, as though they ſhould denie Chriſts prayer and requeſt in the garden to be holy, juſt, righteous: Fevard. de Chriſto patiente. p. 415. p. 418. Firſt, Maſter Calvine himſelfe confeſſeth, Affectus in Chriſto vitio caruiſſe: That Chriſts affections were without fault, being framed to the obedience of God: in cap. 11. Ioan. verſ. 33. And Chriſt tooke upon him mans affections, but without any diſorder. Secondly, where M. Calvine then is alleaged to ſay, Chriſtum votum correxiſſe, that Chriſt did correct his vow, which he brake into through griefe; and, inconſideratè effluxiſſe, and that it came from him inconſiderately: in cap. 12. Ioann. verſ. 27. though this ſpeech ſeeme ſomewhat hard, yet he is to be expounded by himſelfe, and not his words to be ſo much preſſed, as his meaning to be accepted: for Calvine is farre from charging Chriſt, with any imperfection or corruption in his deſire: but doth interprete himſelfe, that Chriſt prayed, ex ſenſu carnis, from the ſenſe of his humane nature, and of a meere humane deſire, which may without ſinne wiſh to eſcape griefe and trouble, conditionally ſo it may ſtand with Gods will, as here our Saviour prayeth. Thirdly, Maſter Beza may very well explicate Maſter Calvines meaning: whoſe words and ſenſe cannot be miſliked, where he ſaith, that theſe words of our Saviour, Yet not my will, &c. are not a correction, but the explication of the condition: neither doth this ſhew a repugnancie or contrariety of Chriſts humane will, and Gods, but onely a diverſity: Bez. annot. in 26. Mat. v. 39. As Damaſcene well ſaith, ἐν ἐναντιώσει γνώμης, ἀλλ' ἐν ἰδιότητι τῆς φύσεως: Chriſt prayed not with a contrary will, but proper to his humane nature: lib. 3. de fide. cap. 14.

Secondly, Calvine is charged to ſay, that Chriſt had forgotten, that hee was ſent to bee the Redeemer of the world, and that hee refuſed to accompliſh the worke of our redemption: Fevard. p. 423. 426.

Maſter Calvines words are theſe, that Chriſt through the vehemencie of his agonie remembred not, or thought not upon the heavenly decree: Vt non reputaret in ipſo momento, &c. That hee did not thinke in that moment, that he was ſent, hac lege, with this condition to be the Saviour of the world: in cap. 26. Matth. c. 39. And againe in the ſame place: Mediatoris officio defungi, quantum in ſe eſt, renuit: He refuſeth, as much as in him lieth, or in his humane nature, to doe the office of a Mediatour.

Firſt, I here ſay with Auguſtine, if Maſter Calvine ſhould ſeeme to any ſomewhat to exceede in termes: Nunquam errari tutiùs exiſtimo, quàm cùm amore nimio veritatis & rejectione falſitatis erratur: I thinke a man cannot erre more ſafely, than in the too much love of the truth, and rejecting of falſehood.

Secondly, Maſter Calvine is very farre himſelfe from charging Chriſt with any ſuch forgetfulneſſe or unwillingneſſe: for thus he ſaith: Quia non deſtitit mundi eſſe ſervator, &c. Becauſe hee never ceaſed to be the Saviour of the world, he was alwayes endued with an heavenly power to the fulfilling of his office: neither can it be, that he ſhould forget thoſe, which doe commend their ſalvation unto him: in Luc. 23. 43. how then could he be forgetfull of himſelfe, and his owne office?

Thirdly, Maſter Calvine further expoundeth himſelfe in theſe words: firſt, he ſaith, In ipſo momento, in that very moment onely, and, quantum in ſe eſt, in reſpect of his humane nature, Chriſt praied, that the cup might paſſe, his humane nature now fully ſhewed it ſelfe: ſo that this paſſion in Chriſt proceeded onely from his humane infirmity; and it was but for a moment, Chriſt in that very inſtant remembring himſelfe: Iohn 12. 27. What ſhall I ſay? Father ſave me from this houre, but therefore came I into this houre.

Fourthly, S. Auguſtine ſaith as much: Hæc humana voluntas erat proprium aliquid & privatum orans: This was his humane will, praying now for ſomewhat proper and private to himſelfe, par. 1. in Pſal. 32. If it were private that he praied, then it was beſide the publike office of the Mediatorſhip. And againe, Pſal. 93. Oſtendit hominis voluntatem, & ſi in illa voluntate permaneret jam pravum cor oſtendere videretur: He ſhewed the will of a man, and if he had continued in that will, his heart had not been aright. So then Auguſtine affirmeth, that for a moment Chriſts humane will deſired ſomething private: Calvine ſaith no more.

Damaſcene alſo ſaith, that Chriſts humane will, τῆς φυσικῆς ἀσθενείας πειρασθεῖσα, being firſt tempted of his naturall infirmity, νευρωθεῖσα, was afterward ſtrengthened by his divine will, and received courage againſt death: lib. 3. de fid. c. 18. Wherefore Fevardent. ſheweth his Frierly cavilling ſpirit, in wreſting that as ſpoken of Chriſt abſolutely as he was the Mediatour, which onely brake foorth from his humane infirmity, yet without ſinne; and maketh that to be as a ſetled diſpoſition in Chriſt, which was but a momentanie paſſion.

Error ſeu falſ. 6.

Thirdly, he chargeth Calvine, as though he ſhould ſay, that the bodily death of Chriſt profited nothing: and therefore he taketh upon him to prove, that the bodily death of Chriſt did much further the ſalvation of mankind: which no man is ſo impious to deny.

Firſt, theſe are Calvines words: Nihil actum erat, ſi corporea tantum morte defunctus fuiſſet: Nothing had been done, if Chriſt had onely performed a bodily death: lib. 2. Inſtitut. c. 16. ſ. 10. He denieth not the profitable and neceſſary uſe of the bodily death; but ſaith it was not availeable alone without the ſoule. The Frier himſelfe ſaith in effect as much: Dial.5.p.452. Tales fuerunt pœnæ, quæ non tantum ſecundum corpus, &c. Such were the paines which Chriſt not only ſuffered for us according to his body, which without the ſoule is altogether impaſſible, but in the ſoule alſo.

Secondly, Damaſcene ſaith, ἡ ψυχὴ παθητὴ οὖσα συμπάσχει τῷ σώματι. The ſoule being paſſible doth ſuffer together with the body, lib.3.de fid.cap.26. If then the body without the ſoule is impaſſible, and the ſoule doth ſuffer with the body, why is Calvine blamed for ſaying, that Chriſts bodily death onely had not been availeable?

Thirdly, Maſter Calvine himſelfe euery where magnifieth the bodily death of Chriſt: as hee is alleaged by Fevard. Quiſquis nutritiam ſibi eſſe cupit Chriſti carnem, &c. He that deſireth the fleſh of Chriſt to be his nouriſher, muſt conſider the ſame offered upon the croſſe, as the price of our reconciliation: in Luc.c.22.verſ. 16. How then is he not aſhamed to charge him with ſo notorious a lye, as though he held the bodily death of Chriſt altogether unprofitable?

Fourthly, Fevardentius ſlandereth Calvine, as though hee ſhould ſay, Chriſtum omnia reprobis & damnatis debita ſupplicia pertuliſſe: That Chriſt did beare all the puniſhments due unto the reprobate: p.443. And thereupon inferreth, that whereas theſe foure are the puniſhments of the reprobate: 1. That they ſhall for ever want the viſion or ſight of God. 2. They ſhall for ever bee perplexed with the horror of a guilty conſcience. 3. By their owne fault, they are deprived of all the gifts of the ſpirit. 4. In ſtead of vertues, they are defiled with all wickedneſſe: p.446. 447. Hee would by Calvines ſentence force all theſe upon Chriſt. Error ſeu falſ.7.

Contra 1. Though in ſome ſenſe Chriſt may bee ſaid to have ſuffered the paines of the damned, though not all, nor in that manner, as they ſuffer them; yet, becauſe the Scripture ſo ſpeaketh not, I coulde wiſh, for feare of offence, that ſuch phraſes had beene forborne: that neither the adverſary ſhould have catched any advantage thereby, nor the weake conſcience taken offence.

2. That Chriſt notwithſtanding did beare ſome puniſhments due unto the reprobate, as deſertion for a while and dereliction, the Scriptures (we ſee) doe warrant it.

3. Whereas Calvin ſaith: Vt dependeret omnes, quæ ab illis expetendæ erant, pœnas, &c. that hee might pay all puniſhments to bee required of them: *Inſtitut.lib.2.c.16.ſect.*10. he meaneth, as Auguſtine in the like caſe expoundeth the word (omnis, omnia) not ſingula generum, but genera ſingulorum, not every paine in particular, but in generall: as by all puniſhments, the kinds of all puniſhments are underſtood, that is in the body, and ſoule, though not every particular puniſhment in the boby and ſoule.

4. Calvine himſelfe excepteth the manner: Excepto, quod doloribus mortis, &c. It muſt bee excepted, that Chriſt coulde not bee held in the ſorrowes of death, as the reprobate are: ibid. The puniſhment then, which Chriſt did beare, and the reprobate ſuffer, differ in the perpetuity: wherefore the Frier impudently doth object the two firſt puniſhments produced, which doe include a continuance and perpetuitie for ever.

5. Calvine according to the Scriptures profeſſeth, that Chriſt in all his actions and puniſhments was immaculate and without ſinne: ſuch puniſhments then of the reprobate, as are not ſuffered without ſinne of the which ſort are the two laſt rehearſed, Chriſt by the ſentence of Calvine is to be freed: ſo then none of thoſe foure puniſhments can be faſtned upon Chriſt in Calvines judgement: ſo that the Frier is ſent away here with a flea in his eare.

Fifthly, he objecteth, that Calvine ſhould affirme, that Chriſt doubted of his eternall ſalvation: Error ſeu falſ.8. Theſe are Calvines words, *Inſtitut.lib.2.c.16.ſect.*12. Some will cry out againſt me, as though I did great injury to Chriſt: Quia minimè conſentaneum fuerit eum de animæ ſalute timere: Becauſe it is not convenient, that he ſhould feare the ſalvation of his ſoule: *Fevard.p.*458.

Firſt, Maſter Calvine is flat of a contrary judgement, that Chriſt never doubted his ſalvation, neither did his faith faile: in ejus diro crucitatu illæſa fuit ejus fides: in his greateſt perplexity his faith was not violated: fixa ſtetit fides ejus in corde, his faith ſtood firme in his heart: in c.27.Mat.ver.46. He might be aſhamed therefore to preſſe Calvines words againſt his owne meaning.

Secondly, timere, to feare, is not dubitare, to doubt: for feare may proceed from the infirmity of nature without ſinne, but doubtfulneſſe ſpringeth of diffidence or diſtruſt. And here Damaſcene helpeth us with a very good diſtinction of feare: There is δειλία φυσική, a naturall feare; and a feare, ἐξ ἀπιστίας, that proceedeth of diffidence or diſtruſt: the firſt was in Chriſt; as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.5.7. Hee was heard in that he feared; but not the ſecond: Damaſ.de fid.lib.3.c.23.

Thirdly, why doth not the Frier open his throte againſt Ambroſe, who doubteth not to ſay of Chriſt: Dubitatio illa nos firmat, ne tu ſi ceperis dubitare deſperes: His doubting doth ſtrengthen us, leſt thou, when thou beginneſt to doubt, ſhouldeſt deſpaire: de incarn.c.4.

Sixthly, another lye wherewith the Frier ſlandereth Calvine is this, that he ſhould ſay, that Chriſt was, re ipſa peccator, a ſinner indeed: non tantum noſtrorum, ſed propriorum peccatorum reum, not guilty onely of our ſinnes, but of his owne. p.462. Error ſeu falſ.9.

Firſt, Calvine onely ſaith: Oportuit eum ſiſti ad Dei tribunal, ut cunctorum noſtrorum maleficiorum reum: Hee was to ſtand before Gods judgement ſeat, as guilty of all our ſinnes. Hee tooke upon him our perſon, and undertooke our ſinnes; as the Prophet ſaith, Iſai.53.6. God hath laid upon him the iniquity of us all: And the Apoſtle ſaith, He was made ſinne for us, that knew no ſinne, that we ſhould be made righteouſneſſe in him. As we are ſinners in our ſelves, yet made righteous by imputation of his righteouſneſſe: ſo Chriſt being righteous in himſelfe, was a ſinner for us, and in our perſon by imputation of our ſinnes. This is neither heroſie nor blaſphemie.

Secondly, Damaſcene hath a diſtinction to this purpoſe: that there is [illegible], an appropriation naturall and perſonall; the naturall appropriations in Chriſt are ſuch, as he received together with our nature: the perſonall, which agreed not to him, but as he tooke upon him our perſon, as to be forſaken, to bee accurſed, lib. 3. de fid. cap. 25. ſo Chriſt in our perſon ſtood as guilty before God.

Error ſeu falſ.10. Seventhly, he challengeth Calvine to ſay, Quod Chriſtum Deus exhorreret, deteſtaretur, &c. That God hated, deteſted and abhorred Chriſt: Fevard. pag. 468. Calvine ſaith not ſo, but thus; Species Chriſto objecta eſt, quaſi Deo adverſo, &c, It ſo ſeemed unto Chriſt (for that moment) as though God were his adverſary, in c.26. Matth. Now it is one thing for God to be an enemie indeed, another to bee felt and feared for a time as an enemy: Iob complaineth in the bitterneſſe of his ſoule of Iob.19.11. God, *He counteth me as one of his enemies, Iob.*19.11. Though Iob ſo feared, yet neither was God his enemie, nor he as one of Gods enemies, but beloved of God: ſo Chriſt was alwayes the beloved Sonne of God, yet in that inſtant, the puniſhment of our ſinnes lying upon him, he felt the wrath of God as of an enemie. 2. This is agreeable to the Apoſtle, who ſaith, that Chriſt upon the croſſe hath ſlaine ha- Epheſ.2.16. *tred in himſelfe, Epheſ.*2.16. but otherwiſe, how hath he ſlaine it, but by bearing it for us? 3. Beda ſaith, 3. ad Galat. Quid mirum ſi maledictum eſt deo, quod odit Deus, &c. No marvell, if that bee curſed of God, which God hateth: Chriſt then undergoing the curſe and malediction, did beare alſo the hatred. 4. Here then theſe conſiderations are neceſſary, 1. that Chriſt was not wholly or finally accurſed, hated or forſaken of God, but ex parte, in part, and for a time: 2. that it was rather in Chriſts ſenſe and feeling, than in Gods rejecting of him: 3. that Chriſt in himſelfe was alwayes beloved and bleſſed of God: he ſtood onely accurſed for us by reaſon of our ſinnes laid upon him: as Auguſtine ſaith, Benedictus in juſtitia ſua; maledictus ob peccata noſtra: Bleſſed in his innocencie, curſed for our iniquity, lib. 14. *contr. Fauſt. ad c.*12.

Error ſeu falſ.11. Eightly, he belieth Calvine to ſay, Patrem reipſa filium ſuum, cùm pateretur, deſeruiſſe: That the father did truely and indeed forſake his ſonne, when he ſuffered, pag. 472.

Calvine ſo ſaith not: his words are theſe, Alienationem Dei mente concepit, ſicut ſenſus dictabat: He conceived in his minde, that he was alienated from God, according to his preſent ſenſe and feeling: in c. 27. Matth. verſ. 46. Nec verò fictè conqueritur ſe à patre derelictum: Neither doth he fainedlie complaine that he was forſaken of God, *Inſtit. lib.*2.*c.*16. ſect. 12. It is one thing to be indeed forſaken finally and totally of God; another ſo to thinke and conceive for the time: David ſaid in his haſte, Pſalm.31.22. I am caſt out of thy ſight, Pſalm. 31. 22. Yet was he not caſt wholly out: for it followeth, Yet thou heardeſt the voyce of my prayer: So Beda witneſſeth in 15. Marc. Vt homo loquitur meos circumferens metus, quod in periculis poſiti à Deo nos deſeri putamus: He ſpeaketh as a man bearing about in himſelfe our feare; becauſe being in danger, we thinke wee are forſaken: the ſame ſaith Calvine, and no otherwiſe, that Chriſt truely complained in his owne ſenſe, that he was forſaken of God; yet God in his eternall purpoſe never did forſake him.

Error ſeu falſ.12. In the ninth place, the Frier objecteth, that Calvine ſhould affirme, that Chriſt deſpaired: *pag.*480. Calvines words are theſe: Abſurdum videtur elapſam Chriſto deſperationis vocem, &c. It may ſeeme abſurd, that a voice or word of deſperation fell from Chriſt: the anſwere is eaſie, that this deſperation proceeded from the ſenſe of the fleſh, in cap. Matth. 27.

Firſt, Frier Fevardentius needed not to have taken ſuch exception againſt Calvine for theſe words, ſeeing his fellow Frier Verus hath the like: nay, he ſaith more, Non ſolum ſupplicium à nobis meritum, verum etiam deſperationem noſtram in ſe tranſtulit: Chriſt did not onely take upon himſelfe our deſerved puniſhment, but alſo our deſperation: And againe, Vt deſperationem deſperatione, mortem morte, infernum inferno vinceret: That he might overcome deſperation with deſperation, death by death, hell with hell. lib. 4. *in Matth.*27.

Secondly, he reporteth M^r^. Calvines words otherwiſe than they are: for thus he writeth Sed abſurdum videtur Chriſto elapſam eſſe deſperationis vocem: ſolutio facilis eſt quanquam ſenſus carnis exitium apprehenderet, fixam tamen ſtetiſſe fidem ejus in corde, qua Deum preſentem intuitus eſt, de cujus abſentia conqueritur: It ſeemeth abſurd, that a voice of deſperation ſhould fall from Chriſt: the ſolution is eaſie; although the ſenſe of the fleſh did apprehend deſtruction, yet faith was fixed in his heart, whereby he did behold God as preſent, of whoſe abſence he complaineth. And againe, Diſcrimen notavimus inter naturæ ſenſum, & fidei notitiam, &c. We have noted a difference betweene the ſenſe of nature, and the notice of faith: ſo that nothing hindreth, but that Chriſt both in his minde might conceive an alienation of God, according to his common ſenſe, and yet together by faith, did hold or retaine God to be mercifull: Thus we ſee, how maliciouſly this Frier clippeth and culleth, changeth and turneth Calvines words, contrary to his owne minde; he is farre from aſcribing deſpaire unto Chriſt; but onely affirmeth that he was tempted of the infirmity of his fleſh: Cum deſperatione luctatus eſt, non tamen victus, neque enim qui deſperati ſunt poſſunt Deum appellare ſuum: he did wraſtle with deſpaire, but was not overcome; for they that are deſperate cannot call God, their God, *in Matth.*24.*v.*46.

Damaſcene affirmeth as much, that Chriſt was tempted of his naturall infirmity, but ſtrengthened by the divine will: and theſe were φυσικῆς δειλίας τὰ ῥήματα, the words of his naturall feare or infirmitie, *lib.3. de fid.c.*18. And though from us ſuch words cannot proceed without ſinne, yet wee muſt ſo thinke of the integrity of Chriſts nature, that he had the very force and fulneſſe of humane affections, yet without corruption, though we be not able to judge of it: as Auguſtine ſaith, that we cannot judge de moribus ſanctorum, of the manners of the Saints by our ſelves, Sicut de ciborum ſuavitate febrientes judicare non ſinimus, we doe not ſuffer thoſe that are ſicke of fevers, to judge of the taſte or ſweetneſſe of meates: *contr. Fauſt.lib.22.c.*48. If we muſt not meaſure the acts of the Saints by our owne, how much more unable is the corruption of our fleſh to comprehend the perfection of Chriſts humane nature: So then it is evident, that this is but a frierly tricke, and a lowd lye, that either Calvine or any other Proteſtant beſide chargeth Chriſt with deſpaire.

Error ſeu falſ. 13.

In the tenth place this doctrine is charged with a great abſurdity, or rather blaſphemie, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer the death of the ſoule or the ſecond death: *Fevard.p.*453.*lin.*3. which is contrary to the Scriptures: which every where teſtifie of Chriſt, 1. That he is life, and gave life to the world, *Ioh.*1. 3. how then could he dye the death of the ſoule? Fevard. 297.*l.*19. 2. It is alſo contrary to reaſon: for ſeeing as the departure of the ſoule is the death of the body; ſo the departure of God is the death of the ſoule: as Auguſtine ſaith, Deus amiſſus mors animæ, anima emiſſa mors corporis: God being loſt is the death of the ſoule, the ſoule being ſent out is the death of the body, &c. *de verb. Domin.ſerm.*5. Chriſt being perſonally united to God, could not dye the death of the ſoule, *Fevard.pag.*474.*l.*19. Thirdly, the fathers make but two deaths of the ſoule: the firſt is ſinne in this life, the other damnation in the next, but neither of theſe agree to Chriſt. Auguſtine ſaith, *Epiſtol.*99. Certè anima Chriſti, nullo mortificata peccato, vel damnatione punita eſt, &c. Surely the ſoule of Chriſt was neither mortified with ſinne, nor puniſhed with damnation; for which two cauſes the death of the ſoule is underſtood: and Fulgentius ſaith, Anima Chriſti inferni doloribus non torquebatur: Chriſts ſoule was not tormented in hell, *Fevard.pag.*357.*lin.*26.

Ioh. 1. 3.

1. Contra. Firſt, we willingly give conſent to theſe Scriptures, reaſons, and fathers, that Chriſt cannot bee ſaid in any ſuch ſenſe to dye the death of the ſoule, either by ſinne or damnation, either by a voluntary or neceſſary ſeparation from God: therefore all that labour may be ſpared, to accumulate reaſons, or multiply teſtimonies of fathers, to free Chriſt from ſuch death of the ſoule, which without blaſphemy cannot be affirmed of Chriſt.

Secondly, though the concluſion be granted, yet the premiſſes are too weake to enforce it: firſt, it followeth not, Chriſt is life in his ſoule: Ergo his ſoule died not: as it is no conſequent, Chriſts body giveth life, Ergo, it died not: the contrary rather is inferred, that Chriſts fleſh by dying, gave life to the world, Ioh. 6. 51. Secondly, it is no good argument, Chriſts ſoule was never ſeparated, but perſonally united unto the word, Ergo, it died not: for his body was alwayes perſonally united to the ſoule ὑποστατικῶς, though not τοπικῶς, as Damaſcene ſaith, *cap.*27. Hypoſtatically, though not locally: ſo likewiſe was the body alwayes perſonally united to the Godhead, even then, when it lay in the grave, yet the body died.

Ioh. 6. 51.

Thirdly, neither doe we much preſſe or urge this phraſe of ſpeech, that Chriſt died the death of the ſoule. Firſt, becauſe we finde it not ſo evidently uſed in Scripture. Secondly, and we have other phraſes as fit to expreſſe the ſufferings of Chriſt in ſoule. Thirdly, for that it may give occaſion of ſtumbling to the weake, and of gaineſaying and exception to the contrary minded.

Laſtly, yet notwithſtanding, becauſe ſome in defence of this truth have ſo ſpoken and written, I will briefly ſhew in what tolerable ſenſe Chriſt is affirmed to dye in the ſoule: and that there is another death of the ſoule, than either by ſinne or damnation.

Firſt, as the body is not ſaid onely to dye, when the ſoule departeth from it, but when it is preſſed with dangerous and deepe afflictions, which threaten death: ſo in like ſenſe the ſoule may be ſaid after a ſort to dye, not onely, when it is finally ſeparated from God, but perplexed and troubled with the horror and feeling of Gods wrath and indignation. The firſt is proved by Saint Paul, 1 *Cor.*15.31. He there ſaith, I dye daily: that is in reſpect of his great afflictions and perſecutions, that threatned death: otherwiſe the body by the ſeparation of the ſoule dieth but once, and not daily: Thus Chriſt then in ſome ſort is affirmed to dye in ſoule, not in any ſeparation made betweene his ſoule and God, but in the feeling and fearing of Gods indignation, which in the reprobates is the forerunner of their finall ſeparation.

1 Cor. 15. 31.

Secondly, whereas the Lord threatneth Adam thus: In the day that thou eateſt thereof, morte morietmini, ye ſhall dye the death: *Gen.*2.17. This muſt be underſtood of the death of the ſoule: as Felix ad.epiſtol. ad Petrum Antiochen. expoundeth it; *Adam quo die comedit ex ligno in ipſo ſecundum animam mortuus, nam ipſius corporis mors poſt.*930.annos contigit; Adam the ſame day he did eate of the tree, died according to his ſoule; for the death of his body followed 933. yeares after: and this death of the ſoule which Adam incurred, was not his ſinne, but cauſed by it, for his diſobedience in eating was puniſhed by this death: this death of his ſoule was a puniſhment of the firſt death by ſinne: And S. Ambroſe well noteth this difference betweene, morte mori, and vita mori: vita moritur, qui vivit corpore, ſed actu moritur ſuo, He in living dieth, that liveth in body; but dieth in his act or worke: as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Tim. 5.6. She that liveth in pleaſure, is dead while ſhe liveth: but to dye the death is to dye both in body and ſoule: *de paradiſ.c.*9. Neither was this death of the ſoule, whereinto

Geneſ. 2. 17.

1 Tim. 5. 6.

Adam fell, actuall condemnation for ever; for Adam was not condemned but ſaved by faith in Chriſt: Ergo, by this death of the ſoule, a third kinde is ſignified, namely, the feare or debt, horror or danger of the proper death of the ſoule, which is condemnation: yet of Chriſts ſoule no ſuch death can be affirmed, by the feare, doubt, horror, debt, or danger of damnation, as it may bee of ours, but onely by the feeling and fearing of Gods wrath and indignation: as is ſhewed before, and ſtill I affirme, that Chriſts ſoule in any ſenſe is very improperly ſaid to dye.

Thirdly, this threatning of Adam, Thou ſhalt die the death, was truly performed in Chriſt: but if this death to Adam threatned be the death of the ſoule, and not of the body, as I have proved, becauſe Adams bodie died not in that day, &c. how coulde the death of Adams ſoule be truly performed in Chriſts bodie? ſo that this maketh a ſtrong argument, to prove a kinde of dying in ſoule in Chriſt: that death which was to Adam threatned, Chriſt ſuffered: I thinke this will bee confeſſed; that it was truely performed in Chriſt, but not in his body, Ergo, in his ſoule: And ſo it followeth in the epiſtle of Felix before alleaged: Itaque Deus donum dimidiatum non fecit, ſed totum ſimul Adam ex virginis utero ſumpſit, ut etiam perditum totum ſalvum faceret: God gave not halfe a gift, but hee tooke whole Adam of the virgins wombe to ſave the whole, that was loſt: the reaſon thus ſtandeth: to redeeme the whole, Chriſt muſt die in the whole, for he tooke the whole to redeeme the whole; if it had not beene needfull to die or ſuffer in the whole, he needed not to have taken the whole: but Chriſt redeemed the whole, Ergo, he died in the whole. Thus then it appeareth, how both without feare of ſinne or damnation, a kinde of death may be affirmed to have beene ſuffered by Chriſt in his ſoule: which phraſe of ſpeech notwithſtanding upon the reaſons before alleaged, I wiſh rather to be more ſparingly uſed, or rather altogether forborne and diſcontinued.

Thus have I ſhewed what untrue accuſations this holy truth of the ſufferings of Chriſt is charged with, and how it is againe diſcharged: for we neither affirme; 1. That Chriſt prayers in the Garden were unjuſt or unholy, but ſober, temperate, godly, onely ſhewing his humane deſire to eſcape death, yet conformable to his Fathers will. 2. Or that Chriſt was forgetfull of his office. 3. Or that his bodily death profited not. 4. Or that Chriſt ſuffered all the puniſhments of the damned and reprobate. 5. Or that Chriſt doubted of his ſalvation. 6. Or that hee was verily and indeed a ſinner. 7. Or that God indeed hated, and deteſted Chriſt. 8. Nor yet that Chriſt was indeed forſaken of God. 9. Nor that Chriſt deſpaired. 10. Nor that hee ſuffered the true and proper death of the ſoule. Theſe ten ſeverall chalenges, whereby they practiſe to make this doctrine odious, I have anſwered: and all thoſe blaſphemies, which they would faſten upon us, and Chriſts holy cauſe, wee wipe them off, as Paul did the Viper, without any hurt to our cauſe, no more than the Viper did to the Apoſtles hand.

Wherefore, that the truth may appeare to the ſight of all men of underſtanding, I will ſpeake of every thing diſtinctly, and divide this queſtion of Chriſts inward ſufferings into theſe conſiderations following.

1. Whether the bodily paſſion of Chriſt were ſufficient for the redemption of the world.
2. Of the feare and aſtoniſhment of Chriſt, and the cauſe thereof.
3. Whether he ſuffered properly and immediately in ſoule.
4. Whether he ſuffered the ſorrowes and paines of hell.

And to this queſtion is adjoyned as an appendix, whether hell fire and torment bee onely corporall.

5. Whether Chriſt ſtood before God, as guilty of our ſinnes in our perſon.
6. Whether in Chriſt there were any horror or perplexitie of conſcience for the ſinne of the world which he bare.
7. Whether Chriſt in Gods juſtice ought to have dyed for us as our ſurety.

Hereunto is added as an appendix, whether Chriſts blood were given to the devill as a price for our redemption.

8. Whether Chriſt felt the wrath of God in his ſoule.
9. Whether he truly complained as forſaken of God.
10. Whether he did beare the curſe of God in his ſoule.

The firſt part, whether the bodilie death of Chriſt were ſufficient for mans redemption.

The Papiſts.

14. Error. THis is ſo affirmed by the Rhemiſts: Annot. Mat. 27. ſect. 3. Bellar. c. 8. de Chriſtianim. arg. 1. Fev. dialog. 5. de Chriſto patiente. p. 439. The leaſt droppe of blood, the leaſt teare, the leaſt grone in Chriſt had been ſufficient in reſpect of the dignity of the ſufferer: Fevard. p. 450. they reaſon thus.

Epheſ. 1.7. Coloſ. 1.20. Heb. 9.12. Argum. 1. The Scripture every where aſcribe our whole redemption to the death, and blood of Chriſt: Epheſ. 1.7. We have redemption through his blood. Coloſſ. 1.20. Hee hath ſet at peace through the blood of his croſſe, &c. Heb. 9.12. Chriſt by his owne blood entred once into the holy place: and every where the Scripture ſetteth forth the death and blood of Chriſt: Ergo, that onely was ſufficient, without any other ſuffering: Bellarm. ibid. argum. 1. Fevard. p. 441.

Anſw. 1. If theſe places be literally preſſed, for the ſufficiencie of Chriſts blood only, firſt then all his ſufferings before in his life, his hunger, thirſt, buffetings, reproches, ſlaunders were ſuperfluous. Secondly, then his fleſh alſo ſhould bee excluded, which is not his blood: for *his fleſh is our meate, his blood our drinke, Ioh.*6.55. Thirdly, ſeeing Chriſt ſhed not onely blood upon the croſſe but water: as S. Iohn ſaith, he came by water and blood, 1 Ioh. 5.6. if blood bee ſtrictly taken, then the water was ſpilt in vaine out of his ſide: wherefore by the blood of Chriſt by a figurative ſpeech, the reſt of his painefull ſufferings both in body and ſoule are inſinuated.

1 Ioh.5.6.

2. For if blood be taken ſimply, we ſhall finde, that it was no part of his death, for his ſide was pearced after he had given up the Ghoſt, yea after he had ſaid, it is finiſhed, that is, the worke of our redemption: Ioh. 19.30,34. And ſo S. Ambroſe ſaith, Poſt mortem percuſſus eſt, non ante, ut exitus ejus voluntarius non neceſſarius videretur: He was pierced after death, not before, that his departure might ſeeme voluntary, not neceſſary. Indeed his croſſe was imbrued with his blood before, which the nayles forced from his hands and feete, and the thornes from his temples, and the whipping before from his ſide: but that blood which iſſued forth with water, which Saint Iohn eſpecially noteth, came out of his ſide after the ſurrendring of his ſpirit: which was the moſt notable part of his bodily ſufferings as Origene ſaith: Petra niſi fuiſſet percuſſa non dabat aquai, ſic percuſſus Chriſtus in cruce novi teſtamenti fontes produxit: Vnleſſe the rocke had been ſmitten, it had yeelded no water, and Chriſt being ſtricken, brought forth the fountaines or ſtreames of the new Teſtament: Hom. 11. in Exod.

Ioh.19.30,34.

3. Neither is this unuſuall in Scripture: by one part to expreſſe the whole: as when the word is ſaid to be made fleſh, Ioh. 1.14. the ſoule is underſtood: for Chriſt tooke not a ſoule without a body. Likewiſe Heb. 10.5. A body thou haſt ordained: certainely a body with a ſoule alſo; and hee tooke the ſeed of *Abraham, Heb.*2.16. that is both humane fleſh and ſoule: and he was made of the ſeed of David according to the fleſh, Rom. 1.3. The Apoſtle hereby expreſſeth the whole humane nature of Chriſt: In like manner in the death of Chriſts body, ſuffering of his fleſh, ſhedding of his blood, even the paſſions of his ſoule are comprehended.

4. Wherefore, as in theſe places alleaged, we reade the blood of Chriſt, or the blood of the croſſe ſo other where in more generall tearmes the Apoſtles call it the dying of Chriſt. 1 *Cor.*4.10. the ſufferings of Chriſt, 1. *Pet.*4.13.

5. S. Ambroſe giveth this reaſon, why the ſoule of Chriſt is ſignified by the blood; Caro ſalvatoris pro ſalute corporis, ſanguis pro anima noſtra effuſus eſt: ſanguis enim pro anima, ſicut præfiguratum eſt in Moſe. in 1 Cor. 11. The fleſh of our Saviour for the ſaving of the body, his blood was ſhed for our ſoule: for the blood is the life or the ſoule, as was prefigured in Moſes: for ſo it is written, *the blood is the life, Geneſ.*9.4. *Levit.*17.14.

Levit.17.14.

6. Firſt, that the blood of Chriſt in Scripture is ſaid to redeeme, cleanſe, ſanctifie us, &c. it is evident: but by blood, we muſt underſtand the other ſufferings and parts of Chriſt, as I have ſhewed before: if blood alone ſufficed, what did Chriſts fleſh? what did the water, whereby Chriſt came, and not onely by blood, 1 *Ioh.*5.8. or Chriſts ſpirit, which he ſurrendred unto God, are they excluded? Secondly, Chriſts blood we confeſſe in Gods omnipotencie to have beene ſufficient to redeeme us, though but one droppe had been ſhed; but it ſo ſtood not in the decree and purpoſe of God: wherefore from his power to his will, from his omnipotencie to his ordinance, from that he can doe, to that which he will doe, the argument followeth not.

1 Ioh.5.8.

7. Neither is an unregenerate ſoule onely called by the name of fleſh in Scripture, as Bellarmine imagineth, *lib.*5. *de ſtat. peccat. c.*7.2. For of Adam and Eve it is ſaid, before ſinne entred, or the ſoule was unregenerate, or corrupted, they two ſhall bee one fleſh, Geneſ. 2. 24. which ſignifieth not onely a conjunction of body, which is in wicked couples, but an unity of ſoule and affection: and where S. Paul ſaith, *We are members of his body, of his fleſh, and of his bones, Epheſ.*5.30. ſpeaketh the Apoſtle of the unregenerate part? Likewiſe, where the Scripture ſaith: Videbit omnis caro ſalutare Dei: All fleſh ſhall ſee the ſalvation of God, Luk. 3.6. S. Auguſtine proveth by this place, that the ſoule is comprehended under the name of fleſh, lib. 83. qu. 80. And it is evident, that the regenerate and faithfull are here underſtood: for the unbeleevers and unfaithfull cannot ſee the ſalvation of God. Ambroſe alſo thus expoundeth theſe words of Chriſt, the ſpirit is ready, the fleſh is weake: Vt in ſpiritu Deum, in carne hominem ſignificaret: To ſignifie God in the ſpirit, and man in the fleſh: in 8. ad Rom. Chriſts whole humanity then is ſignified by fleſh.

Geneſ.2.24.
Epheſ.5.30.
Luk.3.6.

8. It is evident, that by Chriſts fleſh, in Scripture his whole humanity, and ſo conſequently his ſoule is expreſſed. Firſt, the Apoſtle thus teſtifieth, *Rom.*1.3. Chriſt was made of the ſeed of David according to the fleſh, and declared mightily to be the ſonne of God, touching the ſpirit of ſanctification, &c. Here whole Chriſt is deſcribed unto us as God and man: the ſoule then of Chriſt is comprehended under the name of fleſh, or elſe it is excluded, and ſo the Apoſtle ſhould ſet before us an unperfect Chriſt: But it will be here objected, that, if the ſoule be here comprehended under the name of fleſh, it would follow, that the ſoule is derived ex traduce, from the parents, becauſe Chriſt is ſaid to be made of the ſeed of David according to the fleſh. Hereunto I anſwere: 1. that Origen indeed by reaſon of this doubt, will not have Chriſts ſoule comprehended under the terme of fleſh, but thinketh it to be underſtood in the next clauſe, touching the ſpirit of ſanctification, by the holineſſe thereof alwayes adhering to the ſpirit. 2. But I rather allow Beza his judgement, who thinketh the whole humanity of Chriſt conſiſting of ſoule and body to be here ſignified, and yet he will have onely the body and fleſh of Chriſt to be aſſumed and taken of the Virgin.3. Chriſt then is ſaid to be made of the ſeed of David according to the fleſh, that is in his ſoule and body, but not after the ſame manner; his fleſh he received of the Virgin Mary, which came of David, originaliter, originally and materially: his ſoule onely occaſionaliter, as by the occaſion of the body: his fleſh being conceived in and of the Virgine Mary, then was his bleſſed ſoule infuſed into that holy body ſo conceived; ſo alſo, whereas Saint Peter ſaith, he was put to death concerning the fleſh: both body and ſoule are here implied, yet not to dye in the ſame manner: the body died properly and verily, the ſoule occaſionally only, (that I may ſo ſpeake) being diſſolved from the body by the death thereof; ſo that whereas in another place I ſeeme to deny, the ſoule of Chriſt to be underſtood under the name of the fleſh; in either of theſe places given in inſtance; I meane in reſpect of the manner onely: that the ſoule is not ſo comprehended under the name of fleſh, as to have the like beginning with it in the one place, or the like end in the other: ſo that the ſubſtance of the ſoule is included, but not the quality, propertie, or manner of the beginning, or end thereof: Therefore a certaine caviller needed not to have objected herein temerity and inconſtancie, or groſſe contradiction, if he had as friendly weighed my meaning, as he would have his owne words in the like caſe conſtrued. Auguſtine, where the Scripture ſaith, The word was made fleſh; by fleſh, underſtandeth the whole nature of man conſiſting of body and ſoule: A parte totum, carne nominatâ intelligitur homo, By a part the whole, the fleſh being named, man is underſtood, &c. *de civit. Dei. lib.*14.*c.*2. And yet he is of opinion, that Chriſt had not his ſoule from Adam by propagation, ne per illius hominis inobedientiam peccator conſtituatur: leſt that he by the diſobedience of that man, might alſo be ſuppoſed to be a ſinner: *de Geneſ. ad liter. lib.*10.*c.*18. Like as then theſe two in Auguſtines opinion, without any contradiction may ſtand together, that Chriſt was made fleſh of David, both in reſpect of his body and ſoule, and yet his ſoule was not derived by propagation from David; ſo is the contradiction before objected healed, as hath been ſhewed: under fleſh then in this place the ſoule is alſo underſtood in reſpect of the being, but not of the like beginning.

Lib.14.de civit.Dei.c.2. Rom.3.20. Galath.3.11. Heb.2.14.

Secondly to proceed, in other places likewiſe is the ſoule underſtood by fleſh, as Auguſtine giveth inſtance in that place. Rom. 3.20. by the workes of the law ſhall no fleſh be juſtified: that is, no man, as the Apoſtle himſelfe expoundeth it: by the workes of the Law ſhall no man be juſtified, &c. Likewiſe, *Heb.*2.14. For as much as the children were partakers of fleſh and blood he alſo himſelfe tooke part with them: tooke he part with them in the fleſh only, and not in the ſoule alſo? Thirdly, where it is ſaid, the word was made fleſh, the ſoule is not only here by conſequence implied, but properly in the ſignification included. 1. The Apollinariſt hereticks confeſſed humane fleſh in Chriſt, and denied him an humane ſoule, ſupplying it by his divine ſpirit; they therefore tooke this conſequent not to be neceſſarie: wherefore it is more ſafe to affirme here an incluſive ſignification, than an excluſive implication onely of the ſoule, becauſe of the hereſie of the Apollinariſts, as we reade of one Euſtathius, a Monothelite hereticke, condemned in the Councell, of Chalcedon act. 1. who affirmed: Hominem non aſſumpſit Chriſtus ſed carnem aſſumpſit, &c. Chriſt tooke not man, but tooke onely fleſh.

Phil. 2.7.

2. Saint Paul doth very well expound the Evangeliſts meaning, when he ſaith, *Chriſt being in the forme of God, &c. tooke upon him the forme of a ſervant, &c. and was found in ſhape as a man, Phil.*2.7. This is that which the Evangeliſt ſaith, The word was made fleſh, that is, man, and dwelt among us.

3. Thus the Fathers expound by fleſh in this place the whole humane nature: *Cyrill. de incarnat. Unigenit. c.*23. Carnem accipiens ex muliere exiit homo idem ſimul & Deus: Chriſt taking fleſh of the woman, came forth man, and the ſame alſo God. Athanaſ. in 9. can. Epheſin. ſynod. Confitemur unum Chriſtum filium Dei ſecundum ſpiritum, filium hominis ſecundum carnem: We confeſſe one Chriſt the Sonne of God in the Spirit, the ſonne of man after the fleſh. *Ambroſ. in Pſal.*119. upon theſe words: Particeps ſum omnium timentium te: I am partaker with all thoſe that feare thee: Chriſtus habet participes carnis, quia carnem ſuſcepit, &c. Chriſt hath us partakers of his fleſh, becauſe hee tooke fleſh; partakers of Baptiſme, becauſe he was baptized, &c. In all theſe places by the fleſh the Fathers underſtand the whole humanity of Chriſt.

*Arg.*2. The true ſacrifice for ſinne was ſhadowed and foreſhewed by the ſacrifices of the Law: but thoſe ſacrifices onely foreſhewed a bodily and bloody ſacrifice: Ergo, the true ſacrifice for ſinne was made by the body and blood of the Redeemer. So reaſoneth *Bellar. arg.*3. *Fevardent. p.*439. *artic.*9.

1. Anſw. Firſt, the propoſition if it be generall is falſe: for all the true ſacrifice for ſinne and every part thereof was not, neither could be ſhadowed forth by the ſacrifices, they onely ſignified the viſible part, which they were apt to expreſſe: the inviſible part by the viſible ſacrifices of beaſts could not be deſcribed; as the blood of the propitiatory ſacrifice muſt be the blood of the Sonne of God: this the ſacrifices could not point at, nor yet the inviſible ſufferings of the ſoule. If the propoſition bee not generall, then the argument concludeth not conſiſting all of particulars. 2. Wee grant alſo the concluſion, if it be but particular, not of the whole true ſacrifice, but of a part; for wee confeſſe that the blood of Chriſt was a part of the true ſacrifice, but not the whole: chuſe then, which you will: if the propoſition be generall, we deny it; if particular, it concludeth not.

Levit.16.8.

2. Secondly, wee deny the aſſumption: 1. For in the ſacrifices of the Law there may bee found ſomewhat, which may repreſent the ſufferings of Chriſt in ſoule: as Levit. 16.8. there were two hee goates preſented unto the Lord, the one of them was ſacrificed, the other ſent into the wilderneſſe, verſ. 21. The ſcape-goate may ſignifie Chriſts ſoule, which died not upon the croſſe as his bodie did. 2. Againe, the holocauſts or burnt offerings which were wholy conſumed and burnt upon the Altar, may betoken the whole and abſolute offring of Chriſt in ſoule and body.

Thirdly, though the ſcape or live goate were not ſacrificed to death, yet was he preſented before the Lord, verſ. 8. reconciliation was made by him, verſ. 10. the iniquities of the people laid upon him, verſ. 21. So although Chriſts ſoule died not, as his body, yet was it in the proper ſufferings thereof a meane of reconciliation together with the body.

Fourthly, What though ſome of the Fathers expound the ſcape goate to be the wicked of the people? yet all are not of that minde, neither the ſame alwaies hold that ſenſe. 1. Origen thus expoundeth, Hom. 9. Levitic. Si ira aſcendit in cor tuum, ſi invidia, &c. paratus eſto, ut abjicias in eremum: If anger riſe into thy heart, if envie, caſt it forth, and ſend it as the ſcape goate into the deſart, &c. Hee expoundeth the ſcape goate not to bee wicked men, but carnall affections in good men. 2. It is maniſeſt that the ſcape goate was a figure of Chriſt: for as the ſinnes of the people were put upon the head of the goate, verſ. 21. ſo God did lay upon Chriſt the ſinnes of us all, Iſai. 53. 5. and the prieſt by this ſcape goate did make reconciliation: wherefore it is but wreſted to ſignifie the wicked: wee muſt take heed that the Fathers fanſies leade us not from the evident ſenſe of Scripture. 3. Origen himſelfe that is alleaged applieth the ſcape goate unto the croſſe of Chriſt, Hom. 9. in Levitic. In eo quod dicitur, quia affixit cruci ſua poteſtates, ſortem in eis apopompai complevit, & tanquam homo paratus abduxit in eremum: In that it is ſaid, he faſtened the powers to his croſſe, &c. hee fulfilled in them the lot of the ſcape goate, and as a man ready or prepared carried them into the wilderneſſe. Thus Origen referreth the accompliſhment of that figure of the ſcape goate to the croſſe of Chriſt: who in reſpect of his bodie that died, was not ſo properly that homo paratus, that ready meſſenger: Ergo, in reſpect of his ſoule.

Fifthly, in what ſenſe the ſacrifice of the croſſe is called an holocauſt, Saint Cyprian ſheweth ſerm. de paſſion. Sine hoc holocauſto poterat deus tantum condonaſſe peccatum, &c. God without that holocauſt might have forgiven ſo great ſinne, &c. And elſewhere hee giveth the reaſon, why he calleth it an holocauſt: Chriſtus totum effudit ſpiritum in cruce ut nos reſpiraremus, quicquid erat humoris aquei reliquum expreſſit ut nos ablueremur, quicquid reſederat in corde ſanguinis emiſit, ut nos confirmaremur: Chriſt did ſhed forth his whole ſpirit upon the croſſe, that we might be refreſhed, the water that was left in his body he ſent forth, that we might be waſhed: the reſidue of his blood came forth, that wee might be cleanſed, &c. lib. de duplici martyr. Thus Chriſt then made an holocauſt or whole ſacrifice of himſelfe, both in his Spirit and in his Blood.

Argum. 3. The Sacraments of the Goſpell doe ſet forth unto us the memoriall of Chriſts paſſion: but they repreſent not the ſuffrings of Chriſts ſoule, but onely the paſſion of his body: Ergo, his bodily paſſions were ſufficient, Bellarm. cap. 8. lib. de Chriſti anima, argum. 3. Fevardent. pag. 440. artic. 11.

Anſw. Firſt, for the propoſition, if Chriſts paſſion be taken for the effect of Chriſts croſſe in the remiſſion of ſinnes, it is true, that the ſame is ſealed unto us and ſet forth in the Sacraments: but if by Chriſts paſſion all the neceſſary parts, circumſtances and concurrences of Chriſts croſſe bee implied, the propoſition wanteth his due waight: for therein is not repreſented the Godhead of Chriſt, which was the onely upholder of his croſſe: nay, all the viſible parts of the croſſe are not expreſſed in the Euchariſt; as the water, which iſſued out of Chriſts ſide. 2. The viſible parts then of Chriſts croſſe are repreſented by the elements, and in theſe viſible parts ſpirituall graces and effects: the inviſible power of his Godhead and the ſpirituall ſufferings of his ſoule cannot ſo well by terrene elements bee deſcribed.

Secondly, for the aſſumption; 1. it is not true that the body and blood of Chriſt onely are repreſented in the Euchariſt: for the body and blood of Chriſt is not ſet before us as dead fleſh or blood without a ſoule: for Chriſt dieth now no more, Rom. 6. 9. If then the life and ſoule of Chriſt is ſignified together with his body and blood, why not the ſuffrings alſo of the ſoule? 2. Saint Ambroſe (whom I alleaged before) ſheweth how the ſoule is reſembled by the blood: Sanguis pro anima, ſicut transfiguratum eſt in Moſe: the blood is taken for the ſoule, as is was prefigured in Moſes: in 11. 1. ad Corinth. 3. And therefore it is called calix ſanguinis, the cup of his blood: and by the cup is ſignified not onely the bodily ſufferings of Chriſt, but his ſoules ſorrowes: as when he prayed to his father, that the cup might paſſe, he did not meane onely his bodily death, but his ſpirituall agonie alſo.

Rom. 6. 9.

Thirdly, the argument may be returned thus: In Baptiſme is ſealed unto us the true propitiation for our ſinnes: in Baptiſme is ſealed onely the blood of Chriſt ſhed for us ſignified by water: Ergo, the blood of Chriſt onely without his fleſh or body is the true propitiation. What other anſwere can here be made, than the ſame which was given before, that either all the circumſtances and concurrences of Chriſts paſſion are not ſet forth in Baptiſme, but the effects onely, or that by one part of the croſſe the reſt are expreſſed?

Argum. 4. The Rhemiſts ſeeme to frame an argument from the nature of a teſtament: Chriſts death (ſay they) was neceſſary for the full confirmation, ratification and accompliſhment of the new teſtament: Annot. in Heb. 9. verſ. 20. where if their meaning be, that Chriſts death was neceſſary to the confirmation of the teſtament, and that without it could not be ratified, we willingly yeeld: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, a teſtament is confirmed when men are dead, Heb. 9. 17. But if they will further preſſe this ſimilitude, and reaſon thus: A mans death is ſufficient to confirme his teſtament, without any other ſufferings in ſoule, therefore Chriſts bodily death was ſufficient to confirme his teſtament: we doe then further anſwere as followeth.

Great difference between Chriſts Teſtament and others.

Anſw. Firſt, ſimilitudes muſt not bee forced to agree in every point, as in this example there is great difference betweene the teſtaments of men, and the teſtament of Chriſt: firſt, the reaſon why mens teſtaments ſtand, is given in the law, Quia aliud velle non poſſunt; Becauſe they can now will no more; Conſtantin. Cod. lib. 1. tit. 5. l. 1. but Chriſt is able to will ſtill. Secondly, it is a rule in law, that Scripta voluntas diſpoſitivè valet, non enunciativè: A written will is of force in diſpoſing, but not in affirming, Diocleſian. Cod. lib. 3. tit. 38. leg. 10. that is, whatſoever is affirmed in a will, is not alwayes received; but whatſoever is bequeathed or diſpoſed, ſtandeth: but it were blaſphemie to ſay that Chriſts teſtament doth not hold affirmatively. Thirdly, by the law a will ſtandeth not ſi liberos preterierit in tabulis, if a man doe paſſe by his ſonnes in his will, and bequeath them nothing, Cod. lib. 6. tit. 12. leg. 1. Alexander. yet Chriſt in his teſtament rejected the Iewes, and received the Gentiles: yet who will ſay, that his will herein ſtandeth not? Fourthly, if any man did contra leges teſtari, aut iuri publico derogare, did make a will contrary to the publike lawes, it was of no force, Diocleſian. Cod. l. 6. tit. 23. leg. 13. But Chriſts teſtament did derogate and abrogate the ceremoniall lawes of Moſes, yet notwithſtanding remaineth in force. Fifthly, the Apoſtle ſaith, the will of men is of no force, as long as hee that made it is alive, Heb. 9. 17. but Chriſt now liveth, and henceforth dieth no more, Rom. 6. 9. yet his teſtament is in force, though much be preſumed in the world againſt it; as Auguſtine ſaith: Mortuus ſine ſenſu jacet, & valent verba ipſius; ſedet Chriſtus in cœlo, & contradicitur teſtamento eius: in Pſal. 21. A man lieth dead without ſenſe, and his laſt words ſtand; Chriſt ſitteth in heaven, and yet his teſtament is contradicted, &c. Sixthly, in ſome caſes by the Civill law a will unwritten prevailed againſt a will written: Cod. lib. 3. tit. 36. leg. 5. Alexander. If a man in his teſtament, did bequeath or award his ſervant to bonds, and afterward change his minde, licet non ſcripſerit, valebit, although he wrote it not, it ſhall ſtand: but nothing that is unwritten ought to be received againſt the written teſtament of Chriſt. In theſe and many other ſuch points, Chriſts teſtament and mans teſtaments doe differ: they therefore muſt be made to agree onely, wherein the Apoſtle compareth them, that as touching the death of the body, it is neceſſary for the confirmation both of mens teſtaments and Chriſts: but as concerning the ſpirituall paine of the ſoule the reaſon is not alike, there is no cauſe or neceſſity thereof toward the conſtitution of a mans will, as there was in Chriſt toward the finiſhing of the ſacrifice of the new teſtament.

Heb. 9. 17.
Rom. 6. 9.

Secondly, the Apoſtle concludeth, that no death, but of the body, is neceſſary for the confirmation of a teſtament: which wee grant, and further acknowledge that Chriſt onely died properly in his bodie: the proper death of the ſoule (which is either by ſinne or damnation, in the finall ſeparation of Gods favour) Chriſt died not: ſuch a death and damnation of the ſoule who is ſo blaſphemous to attribute to Chriſt? in confuting that, which no man denieth, labour may well be ſpared. And therefore as Hierome ſaith, Non poſſum te exiſtimare victorem, niſi adverſarium videro vulneratum: Hee cannot have the victory, that doth not wound the adverſarie, Apolog. ad Pammach. Therefore theſe darts, which they caſt in the ayre, Fevard. pag. 453. peirce not our cauſe, neither can thoſe ſtrokes wound the body, that touch it not.

Heb. 9. 18.

What conditions are required toward the making of a teſtament.

Thirdly, the Apoſtle by this ſimilitude onely inferreth, that without the death of the body a teſtament is not ratified: as verſ. 18. neither was the firſt ordained without bloud: So without Chriſts death the new teſtament could not bee confirmed: doth it therefore follow that nothing elſe is required? Many things beſide the bodily death muſt concurre to make a mans teſtament: firſt, he muſt be ſana mentis, of a ſound and perfect minde; and therefore a mad man, except he have dilucida intervalla, ſome intermiſſion of his fits, cannot make a will, Cod. lib. 6. tit. 22. leg. 9. Secondly, Pupillus non poteſt teſtari: A pupill, that is under the government of others, cannot make a will: ibid. tit. 21. leg. 12. Iuſtinian. Thirdly, Filius familias non poteſt: A ſonne that is under his father cannot: ibid. tit. 22. leg. 11. Fourthly, Si teſtes non fuerint in conſpectu teſtatoris, &c. If the witneſſes be not in the ſight of the teſtator, the will is not good, Cod. lib. 6. tit. 23. leg. 9. Diocletian. Fifthly, Si compulſus ſit teſtari, &c. If a man be compelled to make a will, it is not good, lib. 6. tit. 34. leg. 1. Sixthly, Mutus non poteſt, niſi ſciat ſcribere: A dumbe man by the Civill law cannot make a will unleſſe he can write, lib. 6. tit. 22. leg. 10. Iuſtinian. Theſe conditions and many beſide, are required as neceſſary for the conſtitution of wils: ſo that the death of the body is not onely ſufficient to adde ſtrength to a will, though without it, it ſtandeth not in force. In like manner without the death of Chriſts body the new teſtament was not ratified, and yet not onely by it: the innocencie of Chriſts birth, the righteouſneſſe of his life, his obedience in his ſuffrings upon the croſſe muſt concurre with his death to eſtabliſh the new teſtament. Wherefore the argument followeth not, the new teſtament was confirmed by Chriſts bodily death: Ergo, he ſuffered not the terrors of ſoule.

Fourthly, if this reaſon conclude any thing, it taketh away all compaſſion, ſorrow, and affection in the ſoule of Chriſt, (which they themſelves grant, Fevard. p. 452. lin. 25.) as well as the terrors of conſcience: for if the bodily death bee ſufficient for the eſtabliſhment of the teſtament, then the ſoule neede not any way to be affected at all. So then they may here ſay as Hierome, though not in the like caſe: Noſtra contra nos dimicat armatura: our owne weapons doe fight againſt us: ad Ioann. Hieroſolymitan.

Argum. 5.

Arg. 5. Chriſt was more effectuall to ſaue us, than Adam to condemne us, Feuard. p. 383. cauſ. 4. & 454. lin. 10. But Adams fleſh by the which ſinne entred, was ſufficient to deſtroy us: Ergo, ſo muſt Chriſts fleſh be to redeeme us.

2. Againe, the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 5. 19. As by ones mans diſobedience many are made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous: This obedience of Chriſt was in his death, Feuard. ibid. Ergo, by the obedience of Chriſt to death we are made righteous.

Rom. 5. 19.

1. Anſw. Firſt, the aſſumption is falſe, if it be underſtood ſo, that Adams fleſh onely infected his poſterity: firſt, it would follow hereupon, that the fleſh is the ſeat of ſinne, which is a popiſh error, and maintained by Bellar. de ſtat. peccat. lib. 5. c. 7. vid. ſupra contr. 18. qu. 4. par. 5. Diſeaſes and other outward infirmities are the infection of the bodie, but ſinne is properly the infection of the ſoule: for ſeeing ſinne is a ſpirituall evill, and the fleſh but a terrene and earthly veſſell, how can it be, that ſinne ſhould be propagated onely by the fleſh?

2. The Scriptures are contrary: Adam begat a childe in his owne likeneſſe after his owne image: was this image in the bodie onely, and not in the ſoule alſo? whereby is underſtood, that Adam begot a ſonne in the like ſinfull and corruptible ſtate? Which are borne not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, &c. Where is the fleſhly will, whereof men are borne, but in the ſoule? That which is borne of the fleſh is fleſh, that which is borne of the ſpirit is ſpirit: By fleſh here is ſignified the unregenerate part both of the ſoule and body: whatſoever then is fleſhly and carnall in us, whether in ſoule or body, is borne of the fleſh: and ſo ſinne propagated by them both.

Geneſ. 5. 3.
Ioh. 1. 13.
Ioh. 3. 6.

3. Object. Then it will follow, that the ſoules of men, as well as their bodies are derived from their parents, if originall infection be propagated by both.

Anſw. Firſt, I ſay with Auguſtine thus writing to S. Hierome of this very matter: Illa de animarum novarum creatione ſententia ſi hanc fidem fundatiſſimam non oppugnat (i. de originali peccato) ſit & mea; ſi oppugnat, non ſit & tua: This ſentence of the creation of new ſoules, if it doe not impugne this grounded faith, (that is, of originall ſinne,) let it be my opinion alſo, if it doe, let it not be yours neither: Epiſt. 28. So I ſay, that if it did neceſſarily follow, if ſoules bee created of God; that pollution ſhould come onely by the fleſh, I had rather leave that uncertainetie, than go againſt a certaine truth: for what were this elſe, but to extenuate originall ſinne, and in effect to make it no ſinne at all; ſeeing it is the ſoule, not the fleſh, that ſinneth: as the Prophet ſaith, The ſoule that ſinneth ſhall dye.

whether the ſoule be propagated from the parents.
Ezech. 18. 20.

Secondly, neither is it neceſſary to grant, that ſoules ſhould be derived from the parents, if ſinne bee propagated both by the body and the ſoule: S. Auguſtine ſheweth how, lib. 3. de liber. arbitr. c. 20. Quod ſi ſigillatim in ſingulis fiunt animæ, convenientiſſ. eſt, ut malum meritum prioris eſſet natura ſequentis, ut bonum meritum ſequentis natura prioris ſit: Though that every ſoule ſhould ſeverally be made in the body, yet it is moſt convenient, that the evill merit of the firſt man ſhould be the nature of the ſecond, as the good merit (that is vertue) of the ſecond is the nature of the firſt, &c. that is, like as the image of grace renewed in Adams poſtery, is the ſame that Adams nature was before his fall: ſo the evilneſſe in Adam corrupted, is become the nature of his corrupt poſterity.

The Maſter of the ſentences is not here to be refuſed: Ipſius carnalis concupiſcentiæ cauſa non eſt in anima ſola, nec in carne ſola, ex utroque enim fit, &c. The cauſe of carnall concupiſcence is not in the ſoule alone, nor in the fleſh alone, but is made of them both, lib. 3. diſtinct. 17. b.

Like as a fountaine ſpringing up in clay ground, preſently receiveth of the nature of the ground: this claywater is neither of the fountaine, for there is no clay, nor of the earth alone, for there is no water, but joyntly from them both: ſo is the ſoule corrupted at the very firſt conjunction with the body: the ſinne is not in the ſoule, which is created pure, nor in the fleſh, which is not capable of ſinne, but it ſpringeth forth of the conjunction, and commixtion of them both.

4. How is it like, that Adams fleſh ſhould onely infect his poſterity; ſeeing it was not the fleſh, that firſt infected himſelfe? as Magiſter ſententiar. thus reporteth out of Auguſtine, liq. 2. diſt. 32. liter. E. Non fuit corruptio corporis, quæ aggravat animam, cauſa primi peccati, ſed pœna; nec caro corruptibilis animam peccatricem fecit, ſed peccatrix anima carnem corruptibilem fecit: The corruption of the fleſh, which preſſeth downe the ſoule, was not the cauſe of the firſt ſinne, but the puniſhment: neither the corruptible fleſh made the ſoule ſinfull, but the ſinfull ſoule made the fleſh ſubject to corruption, &c. Sinne then entred into Adam by his ſoule firſt, and then his fleſh: and ſo doth it enter upon his poſteritie.

Secondly, 1. though the croſſe and paſſion of Chriſt did chiefly ſhew the obedience of Chriſt: For he learned obedience by the things which he ſuffered, Heb. 5. 8. yet his obedience to his Father was ſeene through his whole life: as Iohn 4. 34. My meate is, that I may doe the will of him that ſent me. 2. Chriſts obedience is ſet againſt Adams diſobedience: As then Adams diſobedience ſignifieth the whole maſſe of corruption in him; ſo Chriſts obedience betokeneth all his juſtice and righteouſneſſe. 3. So the Apoſtle expoundeth it himſelfe, Rom. 5. 18. calling it the juſtifying of Chriſt. 4. And though his obedience in his death were onely inſinuated, where was this obedience, was it not in his will, when he ſaith, Not my will, but thine be done? and he ſubmitteth himſelfe to drinke of the cup, not onely to taſte of the bodily death, but to endure all ſorrowes beſide, that ſhould be laid upon him.

Chriſts obedience muſt be conſidered not onely in his death, but in his whole life.
Heb. 5. 8.
Ioh. 4. 34.
Rom. 5. 18.

S. Ambroſe evidently declareth his mind of this matter, De vocat. Gentium lib. 1. c. 3. inde (ex hominis prævaricatione) Multiplex corporis animique corruptio; inde ignorantia, difficultas, &c. From mans tranſgreſſion proceedeth the manifold corruption of ſoule and body, as ignorance, hardneſſe of underſtanding, curæ inutiles, ſacrilegi errores, &c. vaine cares, ſacrilegious errors: if ignorance, error be propagated from Adam, then is not this propagation onely by the fleſh, which is not ſubject to ignorance, error; but the ſoule only: Origen alſo thus witneſſeth, hom.8. in Levit. Audi Davidem dicentem, in iniquitatibus conceptus ſum, oſtendens, quod quæcunq; anima in carne naſcitur, iniquitatis & peccati ſorde polluitur: Heare David ſaying, I was conceived in iniquitie, ſhewing that any ſoule whatſoever is borne in the fleſh, is polluted with the filthineſſe of iniquitie and ſinne. The ſoule then in the very firſt birth is polluted, and ſo the corruption is ſpread as well by the ſoule as the body.

Argum.6. The leaſt teare, the leaſt groane, the leaſt drop of blood in Chriſt had been ſufficient, becauſe of the excellencie of the perſon of the ſufferer: how much more his whole painefull paſſion in his body? Fevardent, p.450.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not; the Sonne of God was able with his blood onely to redeeme vs, Ergo, he thought good ſo to doe: he had been able without his blood, or death at all, in his omnipotent power to have ſaved us; but it ſeemed not good unto him ſo to doe.

Secondly, if Chriſts blood onely did it, then were theſe ſorrowes of his ſoule, which you confeſſe he felt, ſuperfluous: if they were not in vaine, his teares, his heavineſſe, his groanes; then his blood onely, without theſe, redeemed us not.

Thirdly, Bernard reporteth this to have been the Error of one *Abaillardus, epiſt.*191. Cur redemit nos per ſanguinem, cùm potuit per ſermonem? Why did hee redeeme us by his blood, when hee might have done it by his word? Bernard anſwereth, Quid prodeſt, quod nos inſtituit, ſi non reſtituit? What had it availed us, if he had given us inſtitution, but not reſtitution? &c. In like ſort is it now urged; What needed Chriſt to redeeme us by his ſoule, ſeeing he did it in his body? we may alſo anſwer, Quid prodeſt ſi nos reſtituit, ſi non plenè reſtituit? What had it availed us, if he reſtored us, but fully had not reſtored us?

Fourthly, wee grant, that Chriſt in reſpect of his great power, might have redeemed us not onely without his ſufferings in ſoule, but in body alſo: as Maſter Calvin ſaith, Potuit nos Deus verbo, aut nutu redimere; God might have redeemed us with his word, yea, with a becke: in 15. Ioan. verſ.13. But this was not agreeable to Gods juſtice; who had otherwiſe determined, that his Sonne ſhould pay, by his ſuffering, the full price of our redemption: and therefore the Prophet Eſay ſaith, 53.10. The will of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand. And here Origen hath a very good diſtinction, Quod ad potentiam Dei omnia poſſibilia, quod ad iuſtitiam Dei poſſibilia ſolum, quæ iuſta ſunt: In reſpect of Gods power, all things are poſſible; in reſpect of his juſtice, thoſe things are onely poſſible, that are juſt: in Matth. tract.35. So in reſpect of Gods power, Chriſt needed not to have ſuffered, but in his body; nor yet in that neither: but in regard of his juſtice, it was not poſſible, but that Chriſt in himſelfe ſhould beare the whole and entire puniſhment due unto our ſinnes.

Laſtly, whereas the Fathers do moſt worthily amplifie the bodily ſufferings of Chriſt, and the death of his fleſh, denying that he died in ſoule, and to this purpoſe they may eaſily be produced: Our anſwer is this: 1. That concerning the death of the ſoule, we willingly condeſcend, that it is not to be admitted in Chriſt. 2. If the Fathers urge the blood of the Croſſe, and the offering of Chriſts fleſh, they muſt be underſtood according to the phraſe of the Scripture, which by one part ſetteth forth the reſt: and Chriſts blood is eſpecially mentioned, becauſe it was the moſt viſible and conſpicuous part of his paſſion. 3. Yet not one of the Fathers can be brought forth, which denieth Chriſt ſuffering in ſoule. 4. Nay, they do witneſſe and teſtifie for the ſame as Cyril ſaith, Neceſſe erat cum ſuo corpore adunatam ei animam dolere, ut dum timebat paſſiones ſubditam cervicem Deo ſubmitteret: It was neceſſarie that his ſoule ſhould be grieved with the body, that while he feared his paſſions, he ſhould ſubmit his necke unto God, de incarnat. unigen. c.7. If Chriſts blood ſtrictly taken had ſufficed, the griefe of the ſoule had not been neceſſarie. And if it be anſwered, that he meaneth the griefe of the ſoule, ariſing from the ſuffering of the body: I ſay further, 1. That if it were ſo, yet this griefe is ſomewhat elſe beſide his blood, which was before affirmed to be ſufficient: a ſufficiencie is without the neceſſitie of other things: but he ſaith there was a neceſſitie of the griefe of the mind: Ergo, without it there was not a ſufficiencie. 2. He meaneth a deeper griefe, feare, and ſuffering, than ariſing from the ſuffering of the body: he feared his paſſions; but the paſſion of his bodily death he feared not; that had been great weakneſſe:

Heb.5.7.

and he was heard in that he feared, Heb.5.7. but in reſpect of his bodily death, that it might paſſe, he was not heard: therefore it was a greater griefe and feare that perplexed his minde.

The Proteſtants.

THat the bodily death of Chriſt was not the whole ſuffering and ſacrifice of his Croſſe; neither in reſpect of Gods juſtice, the whole and full price of our redemption; though in reſpect of Gods power, leſſe might have ſufficed; thus we ſhew it:

*Argum.*1. That which Chriſt tooke, he offered: Chriſt tooke not the body or fleſh of man only: Ergo, he offered not his body onely.

Anſw. If any thing be here denied, it will be the propoſition, which is further thus confirmed.

First, the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.2.14. For as much as the children were partakers of fleſh and blood, hee tooke part with them, that he might deſtroy through death, &c. and that he might deliver all them, which for feare of death were all their life long ſubiect to bondage: From this place I reaſon thus: That which

Heb.2.14.

Chriſt by his death delivered us from, hee tooke part with us in: but hee delivered us not onely from the death of the bodie, but from the feare and bondage of the ſoule: Ergo, herein hee tooke part with us.

Secondly, they are Saint Ambroſes words, Hoc obtulit Chriſtus, quod induit: Chriſt offered that, which hee tooke or put on, de incarnat.c.7. Ergo, hee offered not his fleſh onely, becauſe hee tooke it not alone.

Thirdly, he giveth this reaſon in the ſame place: Qua erat cauſa incarnationis, niſi ut caro, qua peccaverat per ſe redimeretur? What cauſe was there of his incarnation, but that the fleſh, that had ſinned, ſhould be redeemed by it ſelfe? The reaſon ſtandeth thus: 1. That which Chriſt tooke of mans nature, hee tooke to redeeme by ſuffering in it: but Chriſt tooke not onely the fleſh of man, but his ſoule: Ergo, he redeemed mans ſoule, by ſuffering in it. 2. That part of man which had ſinned, muſt be redeemed by it ſelfe: not mans fleſh onely, but his ſoule alſo had ſinned: Ergo, not the fleſh onely, but the ſoule muſt be by it ſelfe redeemed.

Argum. 2. The ſecond reaſon I take out of Cyprian; and it is framed thus: That which Chriſt offered upon the Croſſe, he ſuffered in: Chriſt offered not his body onely: Ergo, he ſuffered not in bodie onely.

First, the propoſition or firſt part is proved by the Apoſtle, Heb.9.25.26. Not that hee ſhould offer Heb.9.25.26. himſelfe often, &c. for then he muſt have often ſuffered: So then there is no offering of Chriſt without ſuffering: and therefore he is ſayd to have offered a ſacrifice for ſinnes. Heb. 10.12. But a ſacrifice is Heb.10.12. not offered without ſuffering: for the ſacrifice was firſt killed, and then offered.

Secondly, S. Cyprian prooveth the aſſumption, as I have alleaged him before, lib. de duplic. Martyr who applieth that place of Iohn, There are three that beare record in earth; the ſpirit, water, and blood; unto the oblation of Chriſt upon the Croſſe: Triplex à Chriſto teſtimonium accepimus, &c. We have 1. Iohn 5.8. received a three-fold teſtimonie from Chriſt; of the ſpirit, water, and blood: Totum effudit ſpiritum, &c. He did ſend forth his whole ſpirit, that we might be refreſhed; the water, that we might be waſhed; the blood that was left, that we might be confirmed: So there was nothing in Chriſt, that was not powred out upon the Croſſe; his ſoule firſt and ſpirit, then all the moiſture and blood left in his bodie: Chriſt then offered not his bodie onely upon the Croſſe: for he further ſayd, Father, into thy hands I commend my ſpirit: Ergo, he ſuffered not onely in body.

Argum. 3. That which Chriſt tooke of our nature, hee ſanctified in himſelfe, Heb.2.11. Hee that Heb.2.11. ſanctifieth, and they which are ſanctified, are all of one: Our reaſon then ſtandeth thus: that which Chriſt ſanctified in himſelfe, hee ſanctified by ſuffering in it: So ſaith the Apoſtle, Heb.2.10. that Chriſt was conſecrate through afflictions: and by the ſame meanes did Chriſt ſanctifie himſelfe whereby we are ſanctified: Iohn 17.19. For their ſakes doe I ſanctifie my ſelfe, that they alſo may bee ſanctified: But wee are ſanctified by Chriſts oblation upon the Croſſe, Heb. 10.14. With one offering hath Heb.2.10. he conſecrated for ever them that are ſanctified. The propoſition then is true, that Chriſt was ſanctified by his ſuffering and offering upon the croſſe, but both his body and ſoule was ſanctified: Ergo, hee Iohn 17.19. ſuffered not in bodie onely, but both in bodie and ſoule. This reaſon and every part thereof is grounded Heb.10.14. upon Scripture.

Argum. 4. Chriſt offered the true ſacrifice of himſelfe in the true tabernacle: his bodie alone is not, but bodie and ſoule both are this true tabernacle: Ergo, he offered himſelfe a ſacrifice not in bodie onely, but both in body and ſoule.

Firſt, the propoſition is affirmed by the Apoſtle, Heb.8.2. that Chriſt is a miniſter of the true tabernacle, Heb.8.2. that is, by the offering of himſelfe, who is both the Prieſt, the ſacrifice, and tabernacle.

Secondly, the aſſumption is thus proved: firſt, his humane nature is called the true tabernacle, becauſe it is not to be ſhifted or changed, as the old tabernacle was, but to remaine for ever: and in this ſenſe, though the fleſh of Chriſt was the true tabernacle, becauſe it was incorruptible, yet his ſoule more properly: for his fleſh was layd aſide, and put off by death, but his ſoule remained with him ſtill: herein then it was the true tabernacle indeed, being eternall and immortall. Secondly, Heb.9.11. It Heb.9.11. is called a tabernacle not made with hands, which God pight and not man, Heb.8.3. This more proper- Heb.8.3. ly agreeth to his ſoule: for though his fleſh was borne of a Virgin, and ſo brought foorth without the helpe or hands of man, in reſpect of the common birth; yet received hee his fleſh of his mother, overſhadowed by the holy Ghoſt: but his ſoule was immediatly and wholly ſent from God, and ſo this tabernacle was not at all pight by man. Thirdly, that is the true temple and tabernacle, wherein the holy Coloſ.2.9. Ghoſt dwelled bodily, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Col.2.9. In him dwelleth the fulnes of the Godhead bodily: but the Godhead dwelt not onely in Chriſts body, but in his ſoule: Ergo, both made this holy temple, and true tabernacle. Fourthly, to this purpoſe Auguſtine thus reſembleth the holy ſoule of Chriſt, he calleth it vas unguenti, the veſſell of the holy oyntment, of the ſpirit: & tanquam ferrum ignitum; and as an yron red hot, in every part thereof receiveth the fire: ſo was the fulnes of the Godhead in the ſoule of Chriſt, de Trinitat. unitat. cap.3. It followeth then, that ſeeing not the body and fleſh of Chriſt onely make the true tabernacle, but his ſoule alſo, and that in the true tabernacle, the true ſacrifice of atonement was offered, that Chriſt offered not this ſacrifice in his body onely.

Argum. 5. If the bodily ſufferings of Chriſt had beene ſufficient, then his other ſufferings in his ſoule had beene ſuperfluous; as the heavineſſe of his ſoule, where hee ſaith, My ſoule is heavy unto death, Matth.26.38. his ſighes and grones. Iob, 11.38 *his feare, Heb.*5.7. But theſe and the like paſſions in Chriſt, were not ſuperfluous: for the Prophet ſaith, Iſay 53.11. He ſhall ſee of the travell of his ſoule: Ergo, his bodily ſufferings were not alone ſufficient.

Argum. 6. We will reaſon ex confeſſis: it is granted by the reſt, that Chriſt alſo beſide his bodily ſufferings had inward feare and griefe: Bellarm.cap. 8. reſponſ. ad argum. 3. Vt redemptio eſſet copioſa, voluit etiam pœnam mœroris, & timoris ſubire: That the redemption might be the more full, Chriſt would undergoe the paine of griefe and feare. Fevardentius thus confeſſeth p.455. Tantam concepit de his triſtitiam, &c. Chriſt conceived ſuch ſorrow and griefe for the ſins of the world, vt omnem vere reſipiſcentis animæ pœnitentiam exuperaverit, &c. that he exceeded all the griefe and ſorrow of a ſoule truely penitent. Againe, Tanta animi pœnitudine dolet, vt par ei nemo unquam fuerit: He was ſo much grieved in his ſoule, as that no man was ever equall to him. Theſe ſorrowes in Chriſts ſoule, were neither bodilie nor yet procured by his bodily paines, being occaſioned by the ſinnes of the World: This being then their owne confeſsion, how can they aſcribe our redemption wholly to the bodily ſufferings of Chriſt, unleſſe they will make thoſe other afflictions of Chriſt either fained, or ſuperfluous, which farre be it from any Chriſtian heart to thinke?

Argum. 7. The Fathers judgement againſt the ſole bodily ſufferings of Chriſt, I have alleaged before: as Cyrill reſp. ad argum. 7. Ambroſ. argum. 1. Cyprian. argum. 2. and ſo I will conclude this place with another ſentence of Cyprian: Sine hoc holocauſto poterat deus tantum condonaſſe peccatum, ſed facilitas veniæ laxaret habenas peccatis effrenibus, quæ etiam Chriſti vix cohibent paſſiones, &c. God could have forgiven us our great ſinne without this holocauſt, or whole burnt offring: but then the facilitie of pardon would have let loſe the raines unto unruly ſinnes, which are hardly reſtrained by the paſſions of Chriſt, &c. Out of this ſentence I obſerve firſt, that Cyprian calleth Chriſts ſacrifice an holocauſt, an whole ſuffering, which could not be of one part only, but of both: for that is not whole, which wanteth a part. Secondly, he granteth, that God in his infinite power could have found out forgiveneſſe of ſins by ſome other meane, but it pleaſed him otherwiſe: that by the manifold paſſions, which were layd upon Chriſt for our ſinne, we ſhould be bridled from committing the ſame.

τὸ ἀπρόσληπτον, ἀθεράπευτον: Damaſ. lib. 3. cap. 16. πάντα ἀνέλαβεν, ἵνα πάντα ἁγιάσῃ: Ibid. cap. 20.

Beſide theſe teſtimonies of Cyprian and Cyrill of the South Church. Of the Greeke Church, Damaſcene alſo thus witneſſeth: that whole Chriſt, tooke whole man, To give ſalvation to the whole: (for what was unaſſumed of Chriſt, was uncured.) Chriſt then by his ſuffering, gave ſalvation to our ſoule and bodie, by ſuffering in both: againe he ſaith, Chriſt tooke all (our paſſions and ſorrowes) to ſanctifie all: but he ſanctified our paſsions by his ſufferings; it will then follow, that he ſuffered the very inward paſsions of the ſoule.

Harm. ſect. 6. pag. 99. Harm. p. 1. c. 4.

The ſame is the confeſsion of the reformed Churches. French confeſſ. artic. 14. Chriſt tooke upon him our nature, that he might ſuffer both in bodie and ſoule. Belgia. artic. 21. Chriſt being juſt, ſuffered in ſoule and bodie for the unjuſt, in ſuch ſort, that feeling the horror of thoſe puniſhments that were due unto our ſinnes, he did ſweate water and blood, &c.

3. p. q. 46. ar. 5. Lib. 10. de Trinitat. 3. p. q. 46. art. 6. Artic. 7.

Their ſeraphicall Doctor Thomas Aquine is a plentifull witneſſe in this point: For theſe three poſitions of his, that Chriſtus ſuſtinuit omnes paſſiones, that Chriſt ſuſtained all paſsions: as Hilarie ſaith, that Chriſt conſummaſſe ſe omne humanarum genus paſſionum teſtatur, teſtifieth he had finiſhed all kind of humane paſsions, when he ſaid, It is finiſhed: and that Chriſtus paſſus eſt ſecundum totam animam. Chriſt ſuffered in his whole ſoule: and that dolor paſſionis Chriſti, &c. The griefe of Chriſts paſſion exceeded all griefes, &c. Theſe three aſſertions of his will conclude the inward and proper ſufferings of Chriſts ſoule: for otherwiſe in reſpect of his bodily ſufferings, the Martyrs might ſeeme to have ſuffered more, as Laurence, that was broyled on a grediron, and Vincentius, whoſe fleſh was torne off with fleſh-hookes: as it is in the ſame place objected. So then we conclude;

1. If what Chriſt tooke of the nature of man, he offered upon the croſſe;
2. If Chriſt ſuffered in all that which hee offered;
3. If that by his ſufferings he ſanctified the whole nature of man;
4. If in the true tabernacle of body and ſoule he offered the ſacrifice;
5. If all other griefes and ſorrowes, which Chriſt endured in his ſoule, ſhould be ſuperfluous;
6. Seeing it is confeſſed by the adverſarie part, that Chriſt had greater ſorrow in his ſoule, than ever any man had;
7. The fathers likewiſe ſet forth the holocauſt or whole offering of Chriſt: Then it doth neceſſarilie follow, that Chriſts ſufferings and ſmart in his fleſh onley wrought not our redemption; which though in themſelves, in reſpect of Gods great power, had beene ſufficient, yet it ſo ſtood with Gods juſtice and everlaſting purpoſe, that his ſonne in his owne perſon, ſhould make a full ſatisfaction both in his body and ſoule for our ſinnes.

The ſecond part, of the feare and aſtoniſhment of Chriſt, and the cauſe thereof, that it proceeded from the very feare and feeling of Gods wrath, which Chriſt did beare and indure for our ſinnes.

The objections and contrary arguments anſwered.

The Papiſts.

First, their opinion is, that the feare and agonie of Chriſt proceeded not from any feeling of Gods 15.Error.
wrath or indignation, but humani ſenſus mortem exhorreſcentis affectum, &c. effundebat; But hee onely ſhewed the affection of humane ſenſe fearing death: Fevard. p. 430. ſic Bellarm. cap. 8. reſp. ad argum. 6. They reaſon thus.

Argum. 1. There are other cauſes of Chriſts heavineſſe, feare and agonie: Firſt, the rejection of the Iewes. Secondly, the diſperſion of the Apoſtles, Bellarm. reſp. ad argum. 8. Thirdly, the lamentation for mans ſinne: Omnem verè reſipiſcentis animæ pœnitentiam exuperavit: He went beyond or exceeded the greateſt repentance of the ſoule that may be, Fevard. pag. 455. Fourthly, the ſeverity and juſtice of God upon him the Redeemer of the world, Fevard. p. 456. lin. 13. Fifthly, he feared death in his humane ſenſe, Fevard. p. 430. Ergo, Chriſts feare and agony ariſing of theſe cauſes, cannot bee aſſigned to any other.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not: theſe were the cauſes of Chriſts agonie: Ergo, the other was not: for they may all ſtand well together: that the conſideration of theſe forenamed cauſes might 1.
moove Chriſt; and yet the feeling of Gods heavie wrath and diſpleaſure for ſinne moove and trouble him much more.

Secondly, that Chriſt was heavy for the rejection of the Iewes, and diſperſion of his Apoſtles, though it be granted for reverence to the Fathers; Hilarie, Ambroſe, Hierome, that ſo thinke; yet it concludeth 2.
not againſt us: firſt, at other times thoſe thoughts for the Iewes, and his Apoſtles troubled Chriſt;
as Matth. 23.37. he prophecieth with griefe of the deſolation of Ieruſalem: Ioh. 11.17. he had commended Matth.23.37.
his Apoſtles to the protection and keeping of his Father: ſo that though they ſhould be diſperſed Ioh.17.11.
by his death, yet he knew they ſhould be gathered together againe, and ſtrengthened: as hee ſaith of Peter, I have prayed for thee, that thy faith faile not, Luk. 22.32. Chriſt therefore for that matter Luk.22.32.
was ſetled. Secondly, but now it is evident, that Chriſt is properly touched with ſome inward object: in that he prayed the cup might paſſe from himſelfe: how could either the rejection of the Iewes, or the diſperſion of his Apoſtles be this cup? Thirdly, hee prayeth that that houre might paſſe from him, Marke 14.35. but neither the rejection of the Iewes, nor the diſperſion of his Apoſtles fell out in that Mark.14.35.
houre or inſtant. Fourthly, Chriſt was heard in that he feared, Heb. 5.7. but he was not heard in this, that the Iewes ſhould not be rejected, nor his Apoſtles diſperſed. Ergo, this was not that he feared.
Fifthly, though the Fathers conceit here be admitted, it concludeth not againſt us: for none of them affirme, that Chriſt onely was troubled for theſe cauſes pretended.

Thirdly, Chriſts ſorrow and lamentation for ſinne by way of compaſſion or commiſeration, cauſed 3.
not this agonie: firſt, for ſo he wept at other times for the ſinne of the Citie, Luke 19.41. hee wept onely drops of water, not drops of blood, as now: but if it had bin the ſame cauſe, it would have then brought forth the ſame effect. Secondly, Chriſt ſpeaketh here of an houre, to the which this griefe was peculiar: but to ſorrow in compaſſion, was at all houres and times in Chriſt, and ought to bee alwayes in Chriſts members. Thirdly, if Chriſt onely had ſorrowed for the ſinnes of other in compaſſion, what needed hee to have beene comforted by the Angell? Luke 22.43. the object therefore of this griefe Luk.22.43. was inward. Hee ſorrowed not now by way of compaſſion, but he ſorrowed for ſinne by way of appropriation, our ſinnes were now as appropriated to his perſon, and this godly ſorrow for ſin, among other effects in the ſoule, hath feare and puniſhment, 2. Cor. 7.11. then conſequently in the ſoule of 2 Cor.7.11.
Chriſt, there was feare and chaſtiſement for our ſinnes, now his by imputation, which is the ſame thing we affirme.

Fourthly: firſt, if the preſence of the Majeſtie of God were the cauſe of Chriſts feare and agonie in his prayer, why did not the like agonie fall upon him at other times, when he preſented himſelfe before the Majeſtie of God in prayer? Secondly, and Chriſt being innocent, juſt, and perfect, what cauſe had hee to tremble in the preſence of God in reſpect of himſelfe, ſeeing that the Saints his members have ſuch confidence to ſtand forth boldly in Gods preſence? Iſay 8.18. Behold (ſaith the Prophet) here Iſay 8.18. am I, and the children which thou haſt given me. Thirdly, Chriſt feared then and trembled before God as a judge, ready to execute wrath againſt ſinne: Gods wrath then is cauſe of this agonie, which is the very point by us maintained.

Fifthly, if Chriſt feared his bodily death and corporall affliction above his ſtrength, hee feared more than Saint Paul, 1. Cor. 10.13. God is faithfull, which will not ſuffer you to be tempted above that you are 1 Cor.10.13.

able. If Chriſt feared the ſeparation of the ſoule from the body by death, he ſhould have ſhewed himſelfe weaker than his members. Auguſtine ſaith, Paulus ſervus exultat, cupio diſſolvi, &c. Chriſtus imperator triſtis eſt : Paul the ſervant deſireth to be diſſolved, and to be with Chriſt; and is Chriſt the Captaine heavy? in P*ſal.* 93. And as for the ſeparation of the humanity from the Divine nature, if any man ſay Chriſt feared it, he is in a great error: for the body ſtill lying in the grave was hypoſtatically united to the Godhead, as Damaſcene ſoundly ſaith, ἡ θεότης ἀχώριστος ἀμφοτέρων διέμεινε: The divinity remained inſeparable from them both: de fid. lib. 3. c. 27. He never feared therefore the diſſolution of the unitie of his perſon.

Argum. 2. If the ſenſe and feeling of Gods wrath was the cauſe of Chriſts agony, they muſt ceaſe with the agonie; for the cauſe remaining, the effect alſo muſt continue: but his agonie ended in the garden, his helliſh ſorrowes (you ſay) endured upon the croſſe: Ergo, they were not the cauſe. And if the things which Chriſt afterward ſuffered, as his whipping, piercing of his hands and feete, and death it ſelfe did not amaze or aſtoniſh Chriſt; how much leſſe did the feare and griefe thereof perplex him in the garden, which were but ſupplicia praludia, but forerunners only of his ſufferings that followed: Fevard. p. 424, conſ. 4.

Anſw, Firſt, Chriſts feare in the garden proceeded not from the expectation of his bodily ſufferings that followed, but as they were accompanied with the wrath of God: that which then he feared and trembled at, he afterward felt in his ſoule, namely the wrath of God: and upon the croſſe he was no leſſe perplexed, but indeed more vehemently touched in ſoule, when he cried out he was forſaken, than before in the garden. And as Chryſoſtome well ſaith, Chriſtus pluribus in morte vexatus doloribus, quàm omnes tragœdi ſcribere poſſunt, expiravit: Chriſt being vexed with more ſorrowes in his death, than all tragicall writers can deſcribe, gave up his Spirit: Hom. 31 in Matth.

Secondly, for further anſwere to the argument: firſt, the propoſition followeth not, that the cauſe ſhould ceaſe, when the effect ceaſeth; the cauſe indeed leaveth working, when the effect ſtaieth; but it hath ſtill a being: Like as in the body vexed with tertian or quartan fevers, there is an intermiſſion of the fits for a time, yet the ſame cauſe ſtill liveth and raigneth in the body, which when it beginneth to worke againe, the fits are renued; ſo is it in the vexation and agitation of the minde. Secondly, 1. for the aſſumption, we ſay that there was in Chriſt an intermiſſion of that inward perplexity and vexation of his ſoule; that ſore fit and agony being paſt, which was afterward revived upon the croſſe. 2. The griefes and comforts of the ſoule doe ebbe and flow, compared in this behalfe to the waves of the ſea, Pſal. 42. 4. P*ſalm.* 42. 4. when one is lift up by the wave he ſeeth the comfortable light; when he is caſt downe, Iob 19. 11. 25. he beholdeth nothing but darkeneſſe. 3. This was Iobs caſe: firſt in griefe he complaineth, Iob 19. 11.
he counteth me as one of his enemies : then againe he receiveth ſtrength, verſ. 25. I know my redeemer liveth : after this his ſoule is caſt downe againe; Iob 30. 21. Thou turneſt thy ſelfe cruelly againſt mee.
Iob 30. 21. The condition of a perplexed ſoule deſcribed 4. Auguſtine very fitly thus reſembleth this matter, writing upon theſe words of the P*ſalme* 10. Palpebra Dei : The eye-lides of God doe examine the ſonnes of men: Interdum clauſis Dei oculis exercentur ut quærant ; interdum apertis illuminantur ut gaudeant : Sometime they are exerciſed or troubled, when God ſhutteth his eyes, that they may ſeeke; ſometime they are illuminat with his open eyes, that they may rejoyce, &c. As is then the ſhutting and opening of the eyes; ſo ſometimes the ſoule is obſcured with griefe, ſometimes lightened with joy. In Chriſt then as the agony ceaſed, ſo there was an intermiſſion of the inward terror that cauſed it.

Argum. 3. Chriſts anſwere to Caiaphas, his prayer for his enemies, his promiſe to the theefe upon the croſſe, his commending of his ſpirit to God, do ſhew that Chriſt was not all this while aſtoniſhed: ſic Bellarm. lib. 4. de Chriſti anima cap. 8. argum. 2. & Fevardent. p. 425. 6. Thus they conclude that Chriſt was not amazed or aſtoniſhed at all with the feare and feeling of Gods wrath.

Anſw. Firſt, there is none that affirmeth, that this amazing or aſtoniſhment of Chriſt continued ſo long together, from the beginning of his agonie to the end of his paſſion. M. Calvine ſaith only, In ipſo momento non reputabat : In that moment he did not bethinke himſelfe, in 26. Mat. verſ. 39. Saint Act. 2. 24. Peter giveth a reaſon, Acts 2. 24. that it was impoſſible that Chriſt ſhould be held of the ſorrowes of hell, as their vulgar Latine readeth.

Secondly, the anſweres then of Chriſt at his examination, condemnation, ſuffering, do ſhew that he was not then as a man amazed or aſtoniſhed: for in the beginning of his agony in the garden he was afrighted and perplexed; but this his aſtoniſhment continued not in that meaſure, he eftſoones recovered himſelfe: As Origen writeth, Non ſcriptum eſt quia pavit, vel triſtatus eſt, ſed capit pavere : pii guſtant tantùm dolorem, impii guſtant tantùm fidem,
Heb. 6. 5. Heb. 6. 5. It is not written, that hee was afraid or ſorrowfull, but began to be afraid: the godly only taſte griefe, the ungodly only have a taſte of faith: in Matth. tract. 35.

Thirdly, neither neede it ſeeme ſtrange, that our Saviour ſo ſoone correcteth, or rather directeth his naturall infirmity, ſaying, not my will, &c. for as Auguſtine ſaith, Si in illa voluntate permaneret, utique pravum cor oſtendere videretur : If Chriſt had continued in his firſt will or deſire, hee had ſhewed an heart not aright, in P*ſal.* 93. Therefore it became Chriſt forthwith to ſubmit his naturall infirmity to Gods will and pleaſure, being free from all ſinne and diſobedience. Alſo Damaſcene confeſſeth, that Chriſts will was firſt [illegible], tempted of his naturall infirmity, and by and by ſtrengthened by the divine will.

Fourthly, the children of God are often ſoone recovered from the gulfe of griefe : as Iob in the ſame place chap. 19.11.25. as I even now alleaged, is an example of comfort, and diſcomfort. David with the ſame breath ſaith, I am caſt out of thy ſight : And againe, Thou heardeſt the voyce of my prayer, when I cryed unto thee, Pſal 31.22. If the members of Chriſt ſo ſoone overcame thoſe brunts of griefe; it is no marvell if Chriſt were (though not altogether rid) yet eaſed of it and refreſhed. Yet notwithſtanding, if it be granted that this perplexitie of Chriſt did hang upon him ſtill in ſome meaſure, from the beginning of his agonie untill his death, as Origen ſeemeth to thinke : Non ſemper, ſed uſque ad tempus mortis in me eſt, ut cum mortuus fuero peccato moriar & univerſa triſtitia: This heavineſſe is not alwayes in me, but unto the time of death, that when I am dead to ſin, I ſhall be dead to all ſorrow, Hom. 35. in Matth. All this being admitted, yet Chriſt might both pray in faith, and confidently commend his ſoule unto God, and make wiſe anſweres unto his perſecutors : Firſt, his faith failed not in his agony, though his carnall ſenſe were affrighted and aſtonied, and therfore he might and did effectually pray. Secondly, the vehement fits of his agonie were ſometime ſlacked and intermitted, and as the terme of the law is, though in another kind, as men naturally diſquieted in their mind, may have dilucida intervalla, lightſome ſeaſons, when they come to themſelves, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 22. leg. 9. So Chriſt in this ſupernaturall aſtoniſhment, had ſome ſpaces of intermiſſion. Thirdly, this agonie and combat which hee had with the wrath of God, did not make him the more unfit in his carriage to men; but that hee might and did exhort his Apoſtles, reproove and refute his adverſaries: like as Iob, though he complained of the terrours of God in his ſoule, Iob 6.4. yet knew well how to anſwere the deceitfull and comfortleſſe objections and oppoſitions of his friends; ſo Chriſt in this agonie having to doe with God, not with men, though toward God he were aſtoniſhed in his ſenſe, his faith ſtill remaining ſound; yet toward men he was notwithſtanding moſt readie and expert in his heavenly anſweres and oracles.

Iob.6.4.

1. Argum. 4. Firſt, Chriſts prayers were meritorious : Precibus & meritis patrem nobis caeleſtem propitium reddidit : By his prayers and merits he made his father well pleaſed with us. But what merite could there be in his prayer if he were aſtoniſhed ? Fevard. p. 421. conf. 12. lin. 4.

2. Secondly, Quae conſtantia, &c. What conſtancie, fortitude of minde, if through feare and aſtoniſhment Chriſts memory failed ? Fevard. p. 423. conf. 2. lin. 7.

But Chriſt ſhewed in his agonie, faith, conſtancie, fortitude, obedience : Ergo, he was not aſtoniſhed.

3. Thirdly, if Chriſt feared his Fathers wrath, then hee doubted : ſo Fevardentius inferreth upon Calvines words, that becauſe he ſaith, Chriſtum timere, that Chriſt did feare, therefore hee doubted, page 458.

4. Fourthly, Saint Peter ſaith, Chriſt ſuffered for us, leaving for us an example that we ſhould follow his ſteppes, 1. Pet. 2.21. but it were hard for us, if Chriſt were aſtoniſhed with feare, and ſo beſide himſelfe, therein to imitate him : this place of the Apoſtle is urged by the Frier, p. 361. conf. 4. lin. 4.

1.Pet.2.21.

1. Anſw. Firſt, 1. if Chriſt had continued ſtill amazed and affrighted, and not eft-ſoone recovered himſelfe, the firſt argument might have ſome colour, but the ſhortneſſe of that brunt nothing hindered his meritorious working. 2. It was a meanes rather to increaſe his merit, in that hee yeelded not to this naturall feare and infirmity, but in wreſtling againſt it, and ſubduing his humane will to Gods will, his obedience became meritorious. 3. Yet I further boldly ſay, that even this feare and aſtoniſhment of Chriſt being without ſinne, and all other his naturall infirmities, of hunger, thirſt, wearineſſe in the bodie, feare, griefe, with the like in his ſoule, were meritorious : as Hierome well ſaith, Manifeſtum ei eſſe poterit, qui Evangelia ſollicita mente perlegerit, quomodo & cibus & potus eius & deambulatio, & univerſa quae geſſit in corpore ſalutem hominum procurarint: It may be manifeſt to him that carefully readeth the Goſpell, how that Chriſts meate and drinke, his walking, and all which he did in his body, did procure our ſalvation, tom. 4. de fil. prodig. 4. Chriſt amazed, aſtoniſhed, merited not indeed for himſelfe, neither did he at any other time elſe : but for us even then and there he merited.

2. Secondly, 1. there was no diſtempered humour in Chriſt; but even in his agony, his heart was ſetled, his faith firme, and fixed, without any diſtruſt or deſpaire. 2. It is untrue, that there can bee no faith, obedience, conſtancy, fortitude, while a man is in a traunce or aſtoniſhed; for Peter ſhewed both, Act. 10. when he fell into a traunce : Firſt his faith, verſe 14. I have never eaten any thing uncleane : his obedience, verſe 15. in that he reſted notwithſtanding in the anſwere of God, ſubmitting himſelfe thereunto. 3 Chriſt continued not in this aſtoniſhment long, but preſently plunged out of it : and therefore all his prayer-while, hee was not in this traunce; but as on the one ſide hee was aſſaulted in his humane ſenſe with feare and griefe; ſo he recovered himſelfe by his faith, and encountred with that brunt of ſorrow : ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that Ieſus for the joy that was ſet before him, endured the Croſſe : Heb. 12.2. And Cyprian thus witneſſeth, Sanguineo ſudore madeſiens, noſtrae naturae in ſe expreſſit imbecillitatem, ne nos in deſperationem caderemus, ſi quum omnia mortem praeſentem intentant, horrorem naturae ſenſerimus, &c. Chriſt dropping with his bloody ſweate, did expreſſe the imbecillitie of our nature, leſt we ſhould fall into deſpaire, if we feele the horrour of nature, when all things threaten preſent deſtruction, de duplic. Martyr. Chriſt then felt our ſorrowes, but fainted not, he was diſtreſſed, but deſpaired not, vexed, but not vanquiſhed.

Act.10.14.15.

3. Thirdly, the argument followeth not, neither is it true, that feare is more intolerable in Chriſt than doubting. 1. Damaſcene uſeth a good diſtinction of feare, lib 3.*de fide c.*23. that there is δειλία φυσικὴ, and παρὰ φύσιν, a naturall feare, ſuch as this was in Chriſt to decline death; and a feare unnaturall which proceedeth from diffidence or diſtruſt, which was not in Chriſt: all feare hath not diſtruſt, but all doubting is joyned with diſtruſt and diffidence; therefore there may bee feare naturall, where neither ſin is nor diſtruſt. Marke 14.33. 2. The Scriptures teſtifie of Chriſt, that he began to be afraid, Mark 14.33. ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι, but doubtfulneſſe or diſtruſt is no where mentioned to have been in Chriſt, therefore the one was in Chriſt, and not the other, 3. Origen ſaith, Proprium eſt omnis hominis primum quidem nolle pati aliquid doloris: It is proper to every man, firſt not to be willing to ſoffer any griefe, &c. *In Mat. Tract.*35. Chryſoſtom. Neque nolle mori carnem reprehenſio: Neither is it to be reprehended, if the fleſh be unwilling to die: Ex Epiſtol. Agathon. ad Conſtantin: Thus theſe Fathers doubt not to aſcribe unto Chriſt a naturall feare, and deſire to eſcape ſorrow, without ſin or doubtfulneſſe.

4. Fourthly, whereas the reaſon is thus framed: Chriſt in his ſufferings is to bee imitated of us; but in his aſtoniſhment and amazednes, he is not to be imitated, or in that he was beſide himſelfe: Ergo, hee was not in any of his ſufferings ſo aſtoniſhed or beſide himſelfe.

Anſ. 1. It is deviſed onely by them, not affirmed by us, that Chriſt in his agonie was beſide himſelfe, which is nothing elſe, but to bee mad: wee affirme onely according to the Scripture, that Chriſt began to be amazed, and with feare to be aſtoniſhed: Mark. 14.36. So the word ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι there uſed, Marke 14.36. ſignifieth. 2. Chriſt is not to be imitated in all parts of his ſuffering, neither can bee: for who is able to beare ſuch a heavy burthen of Gods wrath and diſpleaſure, as he did, which cauſed him to be aſtoniſhed? Chriſt is to bee imitated, wherein he may be imitated of us, as he himſelfe ſaith, Learne of mee, for I am humble and meeke: ſo Auguſtine ſaith, *In Pſalme.*90.præfat. In quo imitaturi ſumus Chriſtum, nunquid hoc à nobis exigit, ut talia miracula, qualia ipſe fecit, faciamus, &c. Wherein are we to imitate Chriſt, doth he require of us to doe ſuch miracles as he did? &c. he ſaith, Learne of me, for I am humble and meeke. If Chriſt be not to be imitated in his miracles, then not in his aſtoniſhment: for ſo to be aſtoniſhed as he was, and not faile in faith, was a great miracle. 3. Yet we have here in Chriſt, that which is worthy and fit to be imitated of us, namely his ſubmiſſion and obedience: that though his naturall deſire carried him one way, yet he ſubdued it to the will of God, ſaying, not my will, but thy will be done: as Auguſtine ſaith: Statim fac, quod ideo fecit, ut te doceret, non quod ego volo, &c. Doe ſtraightway as he did, to the end to teach thee, not that I will, &c.

Argu. 5. Hilarie may be objected, as he is alleaged by the Maſter of Sentences, *Lib.*3, diſt, 15, *tit.*9. Nec fieri poteſt, ut timor eius ſignificetur in verbis, cuius fiducia continuatur in factis: It cannot be, that his feare ſhould be ſignified in word, whoſe fiduce is continued in fact, *Lib.*10. de trinitat. Hilarie ſeemeth to exempt Chriſt from all feare and infirmitie, in his bloodie ſweate and agonie; rather aſcribing the drops of blood to his power and divine omnipotencie, than to his naturall infirmitie.

Anſ. 1. Peter Lombard in the ſame place bringeth in this anſwere, Neceſſitas timendi non fuit in Chriſto. There was not the like cauſe and neceſſitie of feare and griefe in Chriſt, which is in us, and ſo hee ſaith Hilary is to bee underſtood, not denying feare to be in Chriſt, but the like cauſe of feare. 2. It is true, that it was not infirmitie in Chriſt, but power to ſtand out in this agonie, and to ſtrive againſt it, even unto blood, but yet the beginning of it proceeded of feare: Damaſcene ſaith, that our naturall paſſions were in Chriſt κατὰ φύσιν, ὑπὲρ φύσιν: according to nature, and above, or beyond nature: according to nature, in that he had them; but above nature, in that he governed and moderated them: *Lib.*3. *de fide.c.*20. So Hilarie ſaith, Non ſecundum natura conſuetudinem geſſit, &c. Hee did it not after the cuſtome of nature: for he did governe and execute them above nature. 3. But otherwiſe, that his naturall feare and infirmitie gave beginning to this agonie: Ambroſe teſtifieth: Audi utramque vocem & carnis infirma, & ſpiritus prompti: pater, ſi poſſibile, tranſeat calix, hæc carnis eſt vox: non quod ego volo, habet devotionem ſpiritus: Heare both voyces, both of weake fleſh, and of the readie ſpirit: Father, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſſe, this is the voyce of fleſh; not that I will, here is the devotion of the ſpirit. *Lib.*4. in Luc.

The truth Confirmed.

The Proteſtants.

CHriſt through the very feare and feeling, ſight and ſenſe of Gods heavie wrath and diſpleaſure againſt our ſinne layd upon him, was in an exceeding great agonie, and therein his humane nature for a while was ſo amazed and aſtoniſhed, that in that moment, he wiſhed to ſhunne the cup prepared for him for the worke of our redemption; yet ſo, that he preſently conformeth his will and deſire, to the will and pleaſure of God.

Heb.5.7. Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt when hee prayed in the dayes of his fleſh, With ſtrong cryes and teares, was heard in that he feared, but he was not heard nor delivered from his bodily death, Ergo, it was not that which he feared: and ſo conſequently it was the heavy wrath of God in his ſoule which he feared.

Anſw. 1. Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt was heard in that which he deſired, namely, that the will of God might be done in his death, or that he might be delivered from death by his reſurrection: reſp. ad argum. 6.

2 It may alſo be anſwered, that Chriſt was heard in that he feared, and delivered from his feare: he felt not then that which he feared: ſo then if he feared Gods wrath, he was delivered from it before he felt it: Fevard. to this effect. p. 464. cont. 4. lin. 11.

3. It will be anſwered that εὐλάβεια, muſt be expounded, not feare, but reverence: and ſo Bellarmine affirmeth, that Chryſoſtome, Theophilact, Oecumenius do ſo interpret this place, that Chriſt was heard, pro ſua reverentia, for his reverence to his Father, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. Bellarmine confeſſeth, that this prayer of Chriſt, which the Apoſtle ſaith he made with ſtrong cries and teares, is the ſame which the Evangeliſts make mention of, when Chriſt was in his agonie in the garden: Bellar. ibid. Firſt, but that prayer proceeded from griefe and feare: for his words ſhew his griefe, My ſoule is heavie to death; his geſture, in ſweating drops of blood declareth his feare: yet Chriſt neither grieved at, neither feared the ſucceſſe of his paſſion, that Gods will ſhould not bee done in it, or his releaſe from death by his reſurrection: Ergo, in theſe things, at this time, and in this Prayer, he was not heard. Secondly, the ſumme of his requeſt is, that the cup might paſſe, which petition he limiteth indeed with ſubjection to Gods will; but the paſſing of the cup, cannot be referred to the reſurrection: neither is the paſſing of the cup, the performing of Gods will in the not paſſing of the cup: this were to expound one contrary by another. Thirdly, that thing againſt which Chriſt praieth, made him heavie, but neither the redemption of man by his death, nor the hope of the reſurrection could make him heavie, but rather joyous, as the Apoſtle ſaith, He endured the croſſe for the joy Heb.12.2.
ſet before him: Heb. 12.2. Theſe were not then the ſubject of his petition at this time, though I deny not, but Chriſt continually did pray, both for the finiſhing of our redemption, and the perfecting of the ſame by his reſurrection: Wherefore ſeeing Chriſt was delivered from his feare, but not from death, therefore death he feared not: as Hierome ſaith, Erubeſcant, qui putant ſalvatorem mortem timuiſſe, & paſſionis pavore dixiſſe, &c. Let them bluſh at it, that thinke our Saviour feared death, and though this feare ſaid, My ſoule is heavie, &c. In Matth. 26.

Secondly, that fearing is a kinde of inward feeling in the ſoule. 1. the Scripture confeſſeth, 1 Ioh. 4. 1 Ioh.4.18.
18. Feare hath puniſhment, κόλασιν: there can be no paine or puniſhment without feeling: Luk. 22.44. Luk.22.44.
conſtitutus ἐν ἀγωνίᾳ, being ſet or pitched in an agonie: an agonie is not without feeling. 2. This is that which Bernard ſaith, that Chriſt had in his life, actionem paſſivam, an action paſſive; and in his death paſſionem activam, a paſſion active: ſo was this paſſion of feare active, working a ſenſe and feeling in Chriſts ſoule. 3. But feare goeth before griefe, and the ſame thing is not felt which is feared, eſpecially where there is a deliverance from the thing feared. Anſw. 1. Neither doe wee ſay that Chriſt felt the ſame meaſure of Gods wrath, which he feared: for Chriſt might feare to be left comfortleſſe, and to be forſaken of Gods helpe in that combate: from this feare he was delivered, for he was ſupported and upheld in this terrible aſſault, that he did not ſincke downe in it. 2. So S. Paul prayed, that the meſſenger of Satan, the pricke of his fleſh, might be taken from him, which he obtained not, but a ſupply of grace was given him, whereby he ſhould ſtand faſt in that tentation, 2. Cor. 2 Cor.12.9.
12. as Saint Paul was heard, not by removing of the temptation, but by giving of grace to overcome it: ſo Chriſt was aſſiſted with the preſence of Gods power, the abſence whereof hee feared and from this feare hee was heard and delivered, but not from all ſenſe and feeling of Gods wrath in his ſoule.

Thirdly, concerning the uſe of the word εὐλάβεια. 1. Wee deny not, but that both in Scripture and prophane authors, the word is taken for a religious warineſſe, and reverence. 2. In like manner, it muſt be granted, that it is alſo uſed to ſignifie feare, both in Scripture, and eccleſiaſtical and prophane writers: Act.23.10.
firſt, in the Scripture, Act. 23.10. εὐλαβηθεὶς, timens; the Tribune feared leſt Paul ſhould have been pul- Heb.11.7.
led aſunder, &c. Heb. 11.7. Noe fearing, prepared the Arke: what or for whom the tribune feared, it skilleth not; we onely ſhew the uſe of the word, that it cannot be here tranſlated reverence but feare: wee grant alſo that Noah his feare was joyned with faith, but Chriſts much more; a feare it was notwithſtanding, though not diſtruſtfull.

3. Nazianzene reckoneth εὐλάβειαν, feare, among the infirmities of Chriſt, orat. 2. de filio: And Theodoret alſo followeth the ſame ſenſe upon this place.

4. And for prophane writers, Plutarch in Pericle teſtifieth that εὐλαβεῖτο, he feared the people, when hee ſpake unto them. Sophocles ſaith εὐλαβοῦμαι πεσεῖν, I am afraid to fall. 5. The circumſtance of the place alloweth this ſenſe: for both before mention is made of his teares, and prayers, and verſ. 8. Hee learned obedience by the things which hee ſuffered: which doe argue his feare rather than reverence. 6, The vulgar Latine in the two places before alleaged tranſlateth the word εὐλαβηθεὶς, timens, fearing, and our vulgar tranſlation allowed with priviledge readeth in this place, he was heard in that hee feared: the firſt ought to move the Papiſts; the other ſhould prevaile with Proteſtants, who are not ſuddenly to depart from the received tranſlation.

Argument. 2. If the feare of the death of the body had ſo aſtoniſhed Chriſt, and caſt him into ſuch an agony, hee ſhould have ſhewed himſelfe weaker than many of his members, the Martyrs, that went boldly without feare to their death: Ergo, it was not the feare of bodily death, that troubled him.

Anſw. 1. This is the difference betweene the feare of death in Chriſt, and others: they doe feare of neceſſity, but Chriſt timuit, quia voluit, feared willingly: and therefore at other times, when hee thought upon his paſſion, as at the inſtitution of his laſt Supper, he feared not, becauſe then he would not: but now in the garden he beginneth to feare, quia voluit, becauſe he would ſo doe, Bellar, reſp, ad argum. 3.

2. If Martyrs feare not death, it is becauſe God giveth them greater comfort; this benefit they receive from Chriſt, Bellarm. ibid.

3. Chriſtus, ut copioſa eſſet redemptio, &c. Chriſt to make our redemption more full, would alſo take upon him our feare, Bellarm. ibid. Chriſt then had greater cauſe to feare, in reſpect of his perſon and office being appointed to be our redeemer.

Contra. 1. Firſt, in ſome ſenſe it is true, that all Chriſts affections were voluntary, in reſpect of his voluntary aſſuming of our fleſh: as Auguſtine ſaith, Hos humana infirmitatis affectus ſicut ipſam carnem infirmitatis humana & mortem carnis humana, non humana conditionis neceſſitate, ſed miſerationis voluntate ſuſcepit: Theſe affections of humane infirmity like as fleſh it ſelfe and death, Chriſt tooke, not by neceſſity of humane condition, but by the willingneſſe of his compaſſion, in Pſal. 87. but after Chriſt was incarnat, as it was neceſſary hee ſhould have our fleſh; ſo it was neceſſary he ſhould have the infirmities and affections thereof without ſinne: but as Peter Lombard ſaith, Hanc neceſſitatem habuit, non ex neceſſitate conditionis, &c. Chriſt had this neceſſity of retaining our affections, not of the neceſſity of his condition, but willingly: it was now then a neceſſity in Chriſt, which at the firſt was voluntary, lib. 3. diſt. 16. liter. a.

2. Another difference betweene Chriſts affections and ours is this; in us they are violent, and immoderate; in Chriſt they were ſo temperate and ordered, that he alwayes ſubmitted them to the will of his Father: ſo that not the having of them, but the moderating of them was voluntary in Chriſt: So Hierome ſaith, Verè contriſtatus eſt, ſed non paſſio ejus dominatur anima: He truly ſorrowed, but the paſſion did not rule over his ſoule, in Matth. 26.

3. Otherwiſe the affections of Chriſts ſoule were as neceſſary, as the infirmities of his body, as hunger, thirſt, ſleepe: elſe Chriſt ſhould not have been like us in all things, if hee had not been ſubject to the ſame infirmities without ſinne: and this were to make Chriſts agony to be in ſhew only: what needed he to pray againſt this cuppe, to ſweat drops of blood, to be comforted of the Angell, if he had been acceſſary to his owne grieſe, and might of himſelfe as man have avoided them?

2. Secondly, as Chriſt gave power to his members to dye boldly, ſo much more had hee power himſelfe to be emboldned againſt the feare of death. 2. Whereas the Martyrs were armed with his example of patience againſt death; now ſhould they have been diſarmed with his example of feare and weakeneſſe, if he had feared onely the death of the body.

3. Thirdly, 1. Chriſt had no greater cauſe in himſelfe to feare bodily death, nor ſo great as others have, becauſe he was without ſinne, and ſo death to him was without ſting; for the ſting of death is ſinne: but no man elſe, though never ſo perfect is without ſinne. 2. In reſpect of us and our redemption, as Chriſt had greater cauſe, &c. ſo had he greater ſtrength to beare it.

4. Heb. 5. 7. Fourthly, the fathers have allowed and approved this argument, Theodoret upon that place Heb. 5. 7. If bleſſed Paul feared not death, but deſired to bee diſſolved, &c. how did God the Word feare death? Auguſt. expoſit. in Pſal. 93. Nullo modo formidaret moriturus, quod non formidavit Paulus in fine ſeculi reſurrecturus, cupio diſſolvi, &c. Chriſt knowing that he ſhould riſe after the third day, in no wiſe would feare that which Paul feared not, being to riſe againe not before the end of the world; I deſire to diſſolved, &c. for then the ſervant ſhould be better than the Maſter.

Argum. 3. Our third argument is taken from the prayer of Chriſt in the garden, Matth. 26. 39. O my Father, if it bee poſſible, let this cuppe paſſe from mee; nevertheleſſe not as I will but as thou wilt. Matth. 26. 39.

1. Firſt, here Chriſt prayeth for a thing, in reſpect of Gods decree not poſſible, that the cuppe might paſſe from him: and therefore afterward hee ſaith, verſ. 42. If this cuppe cannot paſſe away from mee, &c.

2. Secondly, he prayeth for that, which was not granted, that the cuppe of death and ſorrow prepared for him might paſſe.

3. Thirdly, hee prayeth in his humane and naturall deſire ſomewhat diverſly from Gods will; yet with ſubmiſſion of his will unto the will of God: what elſe could cauſe Chriſt in this manner to pray againſt his cuppe and croſſe, but the exceeding feare and feeling of Gods heavie wrath, and irefull indignation, wherewith he was ſo amazed at the firſt and aſtoniſhed, that in his humane weakeneſſe hee was carried (his divinity now hiding and repreſſing it ſelfe) to deſire the paſſing of that cuppe, which he was to drinke of, for the redemption of mankinde.

1. Mark. 14. 36. Heb. 5. 7. Anſw. Firſt Fevardentius anſwereth, that it was not impoſſible with God to ſave his ſonne from death, and to redeeme the world without his death or croſſe; for Chriſt ſaith, Mar. 14. 36. All things are poſſible to thee. And Heb. 5. 7. the Apoſtle ſaith, He offered prayers to him, that was able to ſave him from death. p. 418.

Secondly, againe he ſaith, Chriſtum rem impoſſibilem, &c. That Chriſt did not aske a thing impoſſible: Vel abſoluta voluntati repugnantem, or repugnant to Gods abſolute will: Fevardent. ibid.

confutat. 2. So then, hee ſeemeth thus to take this clauſe, If it bee poſſible, that is, agreeable to thy will.

Contra. Firſt, we deny not, but in reſpect of Gods abſolute power, it had been poſſible for Chriſt not to have died, and man ſome other way to have beene ſaved; and ſo the places alleaged are to be underſtood: but in reſpect of Gods juſtice, which could no other way bee appeaſed, than by the death of his Sonne, it was not poſſible: thus the Scripture ſpeaketh, Act.4.12. There is given no other name under heaven, whereby we muſt be ſaved: Revel. 5.3. No man in heaven was able to open the booke but the Lambe. Saint Ambroſe bringeth in this diſtinction of things impoſſible: Aliud ſecundum naturam: Some things are impoſſible in nature, but ſo nothing is impoſſible to God, Matth. 19.26. Aliud per definitionem immutabilis conſilii: Some things are impoſſible in reſpect of the decree of Gods immutable counſell, as *Heb.6.*18. It is impoſſible that God ſhould lye, *lib.4.de fide.c.*3. and in this ſenſe it was impoſſible, that Chriſt ſhould not dye, becauſe God had ſo determined: and Origen upon this place, Quod ad potentiam Dei omnia poſſibilia; quod ad juſtitiam Dei poſſibilia ſolùm, quæ juſta ſunt: In reſpect of Gods power, all things are poſſible, in reſpect of his juſtice, thoſe things are onely poſſible, that are juſt: *In Matth. tract.*35. Their owne Thomas alſo here thus diſtinguiſheth: that ſimplie it was not impoſſible to God to redeeme man, without the death of Chriſt, but ſuppoſita praſcientia, Gods preſcience being preſuppoſed, it was impoſſible, becauſe he had ſo determined, *part.3 .qu.46. art.*3.

Act.4.12. Revel.5.3. Matth,19.26. Heb,6.18.

Secondly, that the poſſibility expreſſed in the firſt clauſe of Chriſts prayer, hath no reference to Gods will, it thus appeareth: firſt, Chriſt ſaith in generall, *all things are poſſible unto thee, Mark.*14.36. but if no more be poſſible to God, than he will; then it would follow, that he can doe no more than he doth, or will doe, which is a great error. Secondly, if this were the meaning, if it bee poſſible, that is, ſtand with thy will, what needed that limitation, or explanation following, yet not my will, ſeeing he had expreſſed ſo much before? Thirdly, in reſpect of Gods will, it was impoſſible the cup ſhould paſſe: as our Saviour ſaith, *verſ.*43. If this cup cannot paſſe away from me, but that I muſt drinke it, thy will be done: how could the ſame thing be both poſſible and impoſſible in regard of Gods will? Fourthly, Chriſt was not ignorant of the will of God, and therefore knew well enough that it was not poſſible, neither ſtood with Gods will, that the cup ſhould paſſe: this clauſe therefore, if it be poſſible, cannot be referred to the will of God, but rather to his power.

Mark.14.36.

2. Secondly, it is replied, that Chriſt obtained that he asked: firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 5.7. he was heard. Secondly, our Saviour ſaith to his Father, *Ioh.*11.42. *Thou heareſt me alwayes: Fevard.p.*464. *con.*4. Thirdly, Origene thinketh, that the cuppe of Gods everlaſting wrath did paſſe both from Chriſt and us, and ſo in that behalfe he obtained that he deſired: Orig. in hunc locum.

Heb.5.7. Ioh.11.42.

1. Contr. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, hee was heard in or from his feare: Chriſt in his humane infirmity (his divine power for the time withdrawing it ſelfe) feared a greater meaſure of Gods wrath, leaſt hee ſhould have been left alone in it; from this feare he was heard and delivered. So then the cup of Gods wrath paſſed not from him, as in the beginning of his prayer his humane will tempted (as Damaſcene ſaith) of his naturall infirmity deſired, but from the manner and meaſure thereof which he feared.

2. Secondly, Chriſt was indeed alwayes heard of God, ſo was he in this place: for though hee was in that moment ſtirred in his humane deſire to wiſh the eſcaping of that cuppe (for it is a naturall inſtinct, and not in it ſelfe ſinfull, to wiſh to decline every thing that is hurtfull) yet he limiteth this deſire, and ſquareth his will to his Fathers: ſo that this was the ſumme of his prayer, that howſoever his humane deſire wiſhed to eſcape that cup, yet he was contented Gods will might ſtand: and ſo it did, and thus Chriſt was heard: though not in the ſudden wiſh of humane infirmitie, yet in the adviſed requeſt of his filiall conformitie.

3. Thirdly, Origen indeed hath ſuch a conceit: Expediebat omnibus, ut tranſiret calix ab eo propterea quod biberat eum ſalvator: It was expedient for all men, that the cuppe ſhould paſſe from Chriſt, becauſe he dranke of it: ſo he thinketh, that the cuppe of Gods everlaſting wrath paſſed from Chriſt and us, by his drinking of it. This is contrary to the Scripture: *If this cup cannot paſſe, but that I muſt drinke of it, thy will be done, Matth.*26.42. Chriſts meaning was then, that the cup might ſo paſſe, that he might not drinke of it: how then could it paſſe by his drinking and taſting of it: Secondly, Chriſt feared not eternall vengeance after death, and ſo everlaſting deſtruction: it were not farre from blaſphemie ſo to affirme: but he was heard in that which he feared: Ergo, herein he was not heard, neither did he deſire the cup to paſſe in that ſenſe, in the appeaſing of Gods everlaſting wrath, which was indeed an effect of Chriſts croſſe, but not of that part of his prayer in the garden, for the paſſing of the cup: though in the explanation, limitation, and condition of his prayer I doubt not but that effect is comprehended.

Match. 26.42.

Object. If Chriſt neither feared the death of the body, nor everlaſting death; what then did hee feare?

Anſw. I ſay with Cyprian: Metus ille infirmitatis humanæ communem exprimebat affectum, ut difficultas extremi exitus timeretur: That feare of humaine infirmity did expreſſe a common affection, that the difficulty of the laſt end ſhould be feared, ſerm. de paſſion. So then Chriſt feared not the end of his life, but the difficulty thereof, that is, the bitterneſſe of his Fathers wrath, and the anguiſh of ſoule, that was joyned with death. To this purpoſe the ordinary gloſſe upon the third to the Galathians:

lathians : Inſipiens honorificentia, Chriſtum à maledicto, quod morti coniunctum eſt, ſeparat : it is a fooliſh honouring of Chriſt to exempt him from the curſe, which was ioyned with death, &c. So then it was Gods wrath and curſe, which did concurre with Chriſts bodily death, which did ſo afflict and perplex his ſoule.

Fourthly, that Chriſt in his humane deſire wiſhed for ſomewhat, that was not granted ; Chryſoſtome teſtifieth : Neque nolle mori carnem reprehenſio eſt, quia hoc natura eſt, ipſo autem, quæ natura ſunt, omnia ſine peccato oſtendit : Neither is it reprehenſible to ſhun death, becauſe it is of nature, but Chriſt ſhewed all that is of nature without ſinne : Ex epiſt. Agathon. ad Conſtantin. Chriſt then in Chryſoſtomes judgement would in his humane deſire have eſcaped death (though it was not that onely or chiefely which he feared, but as the ſenſe of Gods wrath for ſinne concurred with it) yet did hee not eſcape death. Athanaſ. is alſo cited in the ſame place : Humana voluntas propter infirmitatem carnis refugiebat paſſionem, divina prompta erat : His humane will becauſe of the infirmity of the fleſh refuſed the paſſion, his divine will was ready.

Thirdly, it is replied that Chriſt prayed not contrary to Gods knowne will : Firſt, Chriſt prayed in faith, and was moſt aſſured his prayer ſhould take effect, *Fevard. p.464. conſ.4. lin.*13. Therefore not againſt the knowne will of God. Secondly, he prayed the ſame prayer thrice, which had beene a voluntary ſpurning againſt Gods will, if hee had prayed againſt it. Thirdly, hee taught his Apoſtles to pray aright, and reproved the ſonnes of Zebedee, You know not what yee aske: much more doth he pray himſelfe aright : *Fevard. p.421. conſ.*11. Fourthly, if he prayed directly contrary to the will of God, he had ſinned : but his prayers were juſt and pure : *Fevard. p.419. conſ.*7.

Contra. Firſt this reply is altogether impertinent : Firſt, we ſay not, that Chriſts will or prayer was contrary to Gods will, but divers onely from it. Secondly, his whole prayer was not contrary, or divers or different, but onely the ſhort motion in the beginning of his prayer was ſomewhat divers. Thirdly, though Gods will were knowne unto Chriſt, yet in this moment, wherein he ſtood amazed and aſtoniſhed, ſeeing his divine power and knowledge, by the which Gods will was revealed unto him, did now withdraw and repreſſe it ſelfe, how could it otherwiſe be, but that this knowledge and revelation of Gods will, was for the time as ſuſpended alſo, and not objected to Chriſts humane ſenſe, being now fully poſſeſſed of this agonie?

Of Chriſts praying in the garden for the paſſing of the cup, how to be underſtood.

Secondly, for anſwere to the arguments. Firſt, notwithſtanding the diverſitie of deſires in Chriſts humane will, yet he prayed in faith, in that he ſudmitted his will in all obedience to his Fathers. Secondly, he might repeate the ſame requeſt of his naturall deſire thrice, becauſe ſo long his agonie continued, without any repugnance to Gods will, ſtill remembring the ſame condition, in ſubmitting his naturall deſire to his fathers heavenly will. Thirdly, the prayer of the ſonnes of Zebedee was raſh and ignorant, becauſe it was not conditionall nor limited, but humorous and diſordered ; failing both in the occaſion, which was ambitious; and the manner, which was peremptory and abſolute : but Chriſt prayed from the feeling and neceſſity of his humane infirmitie, and with the moſt obedient condition of his fathers will : and therefore his prayer ſo begun, and ſo ended and limited, was neither raſh nor ignorant. Fourthly, firſt he prayed not contrary to Gods will, but a divers thing he asked, yet with a ſubordination to Gods will. Secondly, it is not ſinne for the naturall affection to deſire to decline that which is hurtfull or contrary unto life : as Origene ſaith, whom I alleaged before : Proprium eſt omnis hominis fidelis primum nolle pati aliquid doloris, &c. It is proper even to every faithfull man, to be unwilling to ſuffer any trouble, Tract. 35. in Matth. So it was no more ſinne in Chriſt in his humane ſenſe to deſire to ſhun griefe and trouble, than it was for him, being hungry, to covet to eate of the fruit of the figge tree, where was no fruit but leaves, Mark. 11. 13. Thirdly, but it will bee objected, that Chriſt knew Gods will to the contrary, and therefore ſhould have ſinned in making any ſuch repueſt.

Mark. 11. 13.

Anſw. Firſt, I ſay with Auguſtine : Si in illa voluntate permaneret, &c. If Chriſt ſhould have ſtaied in that minde or will, then his heart might have ſeemed not to be aright, expoſit. in Pſal. 93. Wherefore the preſent moderation of his humane deſire, and the ſubmiſſion of it to Gods will, doe free our Saviour from all corruption. Secondly, ſome doe give this ſolution : Non ideo petiit, ut impetraret, &c. He did not therefore aske to obtaine, for he knew God would not doe it : ſed ut membris formam præberet, but to give his members an example how to ſubmit their will and deſire to Gods : Sic Magiſter. lib. 3. diſt. 17. liter. c. Thirdly, I anſwere, that in this very moment Chriſts humane infirmity being aſtoniſhed with this vehement object of griefe, and all amazed, did not turne it ſelfe to conſider of Gods ſecret will and decree herein : Like as Moſes and Paul knew very well, that they were both Gods elect ones, and could not finally periſh : yet in the exceſſe of their zeale, beſide this their knowledge, they wiſh one to be raſed out of the booke of life ; the other to be anathema, that is, accurſed for the people of Gods ſake, Exod. 32. 33. Rom. 9. 3. Did Saint Paul ſinne againſt his owne knowledge, who having firſt ſaid, that nothing could ſeperate him from the love of God in Chriſt, Rom. 8. 38. preſently in his great zeale wiſheth to be ſeperated from Chriſt? If this were no ſinne in the member, how could it be in the head? Further, we muſt conſider now of Chriſt as a perfect man (his Godhead now not ſhewing it ſelfe) and that as Damaſcene ſaith, he tooke upon him ἀγνοοῦσαν φύσιν, a nature of it ſelfe ignorant, but that it was by the conjoyning of the divine nature enriched with the knowledge of future things, lib. 3. *de fide. c.*21. Whereupon our Saviour doubteth not to confeſſe himſelfe

Exod. 32. 33.
Rom. 9. 3.
Rom. 8. 38.

himſelfe, as hee is man, ignorant of Gods ſecret will, Mark. 13. 32. what inconvenience then is it to grant, that Chriſt as man (the light of his divine knowledge for a time withholding the beames thereof) being plunged in his agonie in his humane ſenſe, did either preſently not know or not remember his Fathers ſecret determination concerning his drinking of this cup? Mark.13.32.

Thirdly, that Chriſt prayed at the firſt for ſomewhat not obtained, and that he deſired and willed a divers thing from his Fathers will in that inſtant; the Fathers doe thus teſtifie: Auguſt. Hæc humana voluntas erat proprium aliquid & privatum volens: This was his humane will, willing ſomewhat proper and private, in Pſal.32.part.1. Hieronym. in Marc.14. Hic oſtendit humanam voluntatem, quæ propter infirmitatem carnis recuſat paſſionem, & divinam, quæ prompta eſt perficere diſpenſationem: Here he ſheweth an humane will, which becauſe of the infirmity of the fleſh, refuſeth the paſſion, and a divine will, which is ready to performe the diſpenſation. Origen. tract.35. in Matth. Hæc voluntas, quam dicit, non ſicut ego volo, &c. This will, which he ſaith, not as I will, is not according to his divine and impaſſible ſubſtance, but his humane and infirme. Chryſ. ex epiſt. Agath. ad Conſtant. Si in divitate dictum eſt, aliqua eſt contradictio: ſi de carne, nullum eſt ſcandalum: If it be ſaid of his divinitie, there is ſome contradiction; if of his fleſh, (not as I will, &c.) there is no offence. Theſe fathers tooke this as a pregnant place to prove two wils in Chriſt, his divine and humane, againſt the Monotholite heretikes: if Chriſt had then two wils, hee had two deſires, and one divers from the other: it is evident then, that Chriſt in his humane deſire wiſhed ſomewhat diverſly from his divine, yet without ſinne, becauſe he eſt-ſoones ſubmitted his humane affection to the divine diſpoſition.

Argum. 4. That Chriſt was exceedingly amazed and aſtoniſhed being in his agony, the Scripture evidently teſtifieth: he began ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι καὶ ἀδημονεῖν, to be aſtoniſhed with feare, and to faint or fail away in his ſoule: for ſo the words ſignifie: what elſe could bee the cauſe thereof, than the preſent ſenſe, which he had in his ſoule, of the wrath and indignation of God againſt ſinne? what elſe cauſed him to pray ſo earneſtly, to ſweate drops of blood, to be all amazed, to need to be comforted of the Angell? the feare of bodily death could not doe it, Chriſt was not ſo weake and infirme: if it were not the ſenſe of bodily danger, it was the feeling of ſpirituall griefe and terror of ſoule, which procured it.

Anſw. Firſt, the expiation of the ſinnes of the world before God, whoſe juſtice was to be ſatisfied, and the contemplation and beholding of the ſame in the ſoule of Chriſt, cauſed this great heavineſſe in Chriſt, and in ſuch meaſure, ut par ei nunquam fuerit, that no man was ever like him, Fevardent. p.455. lin.37. So then the preſence of Gods Majeſtie, and the pitifull beholding of mans miſery, did thus aſtoniſh him.

Secondly, the conſtant continuing of the ſame prayer three ſeverall times, with intermiſſion of time Fevard. 486. conf. 8. lin. 11. and admonition to his Diſciples, proveth he had not forgotten himſelfe, Fevard. p.425. conf. 5. lin.8.

Thirdly, this religious aſtoniſhment, though it might for the preſent ſuſpend all other thoughts in our Saviour, yet is there no need it ſhould deprive him of underſtanding, ſenſe and memory, Fevard. p.425. conf. 6. lin.4.

Contra. Firſt, 1. If the piety of Chriſt, or preſence of Gods Majeſtie had thus aſtoniſhed Chriſt, why was he not at other times aſtoniſhed, when he came into Gods preſence? as Ioh. 17. 13. he ſaith in his prayer, now I come unto thee: Ioh.17.13. and piety there was alwaies in Chriſt: if the ſame cauſe, why not the ſame effect? 2. What cauſe had Chriſt to feare the Majeſty of God in himſelfe, being the dearely beloved Sonne of God, moſt juſt, righteous, holy, but onely as our pledge and ſurety, preſenting himſelfe in our perſon, to anſwere our debts? 3. And if commiſeration of humane miſery had ſtricken into him this aſtoniſhment, it muſt 1. follow, that either he was without commiſeration at other times, which were blaſphemy to ſay; or that his commiſeration wrought not in him this proper effect, namely aſtoniſhment, which were great raſhneſſe to avouch. 2. When Chriſt wept over Ieruſalem, foreſeeing their utter deſolation for ever, why did not this commiſeration then alſo aſtoniſh him? 3. And where Chriſt prayed to bee delivered from that houre, Mark. 14. 35. Mark.14.35. will they tye Chriſts piety and charity, which they ſay was now the cauſe of this aſtoniſhment, onely to this houre? Wherefore theſe were not the cauſes now: for at other times they could not have wanted the ſame effects.

Secondly, 1. his repeating of his prayer thrice, his admoniſhing of his Apoſtles, doe prove that he had not forgotten himſelfe, we grant; neither doe we ſo affirme, as it is underſtood; that Chriſt had cleane forgotten and was beſide himſelfe: he was not ſo amazed or aſtoniſhed, but that he had ſome intermiſſion and breathing time, and comforts mixed with his tentations: neither yet ſo confounded, as that he either forgot piety in his obedience to God, or charity and pitty in warning his Diſciples. 2. The repeating of his prayer thrice for the paſſing of the cup, his praying to bee delivered from that houre, the comforting of the Angell, doe ſhew a continuance of the agonie and aſtoniſhment: and the text ſaith, he was γενόμενος, conſtitutus, ſet or ſetled in an agonie, Luk. 22. 44. Luk.22.44. you muſt then either grant no agony or aſtoniſhment at all, or elſe continue it all the while of his prayer, as the Evangeliſts doe: but yet there was ſome intermiſſion of the agonie fits, and the infirmity as Ambroſe calleth it, or tentation of his fleſh, as Damaſcene) had their entercourſe: ſo it continued, but not alwayes in the ſame meaſure or degree of working, as hath beene ſhewed before: par.2. reſ.2. & 4. ad 3. arg. papiſtar. this then is not contrary to that which is affirmed before, that all his prayer while he was not in that trance: that is in the ſame meaſure and degree without intermiſſion. ibid. reſp.2. artic.3. ad 4. arg.

Thirdly, there is no need, notwithſtanding Chriſt were amazed and perplexed with the feare of Gods judgements, and ſo caſt into a moſt vehement agonie, that he ſhould be deprived of ſenſe, underſtanding, or memorie: 1. If his memory in one point were not extinguiſhed, but over-ruled or overcaſt with the vehement ſenſe of his preſent agonie, muſt he therefore be wrapped in a totall confuſion or oblivion? 2. In the middeſt of theſe ſtormes he had ſome comfortable blaſts; and though death and hell were before his ſenſe, yet he was quickened and revived in his ſpirit. 3. Moſes and Paul raviſhed with zeale, wiſhed they might be caſt-awayes; yet at other times their ſalvation was manifeſtly revealed unto them: ſhall we conclude therefore that they wanted ſenſe, underſtanding, memory? Thus (I truſt) are thoſe objections anſwered.

Argum, 5. Laſtly, I will produce the teſtimony of the Fathers, that Chriſt was not thus aſtoniſhed for feare of the death of the body: Hilarie lib. 10 de Trinitat. Anne timuit mori, qui armatis obvius prodit, &c. pungenda carnis metu triſtis eſt, cuius attactu caro poſt cadem ſanatur? Did he feare to die, which came againſt the armed troups? was he ſorrowful for the pricking of his fleſh, who by his touch healed the eare that was ſmitten off? Aug. in expoſit. in Pſal. 93. Si ſciret ſe poſt triduum reſurrecturum, nullo modo formidaret moriturus: Chriſt did not feare to die, being to riſe againe the third day. And againe, in Pſal. 100. Non vere ille timebat mortem, qui poteſtatem habuit ponendi animam, &c. Hee could not verily feare death, that had power to lay downe his ſoule, and to take it up againe.

Again, Hilarie ſaith, Triſtis eſt anima mea uſque mortem, nunquid aiit triſtis eſt anima propter mortem? aliud eſt uſque, aliud propter id metuere: My ſoule is heavy unto death; doth he ſay my ſoule is heavy for or becauſe of death? it is one thing to feare till death, another becauſe of death: c. 31. in Matth.

Ambroſe: Non propter mortem, ſed uſque ad mortem: quia eum conditio corporalis affectus, non formido mortis offendit: Not becauſe of death, but unto death, for the condition of his corporall or naturall affection, not the feare of deadly afliction doth offend him, in Luc. 12. And our country-man Beda uſeth the very ſame words, in 14. Marke.

Some other of the Fathers affirme, that Chriſt non timuit infernum chaos, & torrentes flammas, that Chriſt feared not the infernall gulfe, or the ſcorching flames, Hilarie lib. 10. de Trinitat. Bellarm. reſp. ad argum. 7.

We willingly graunt that Chriſt feared not hell fire, nor everlaſting deſtruction: thoſe authorities preſſe not us, but rather helpe our cauſe: for if Chriſt neither feared temporall, nor everlaſting death,

Heb. 5. 7. as theſe Fathers witneſſe, and the Apoſtle ſaith he feared, Heb. 5. 7. what then remaineth, but that hee feared the cup of Gods wrath mixed with death? And as Cyprian ſaith before cited, Difficultatem extremi exitus: The difficultie or hardneſſe of his laſt paſſage, that is, in reſpect of Gods wrath tempered with it.

Harm. ſect. 6. pag. 108. Vnto theſe fore-cited teſtimonies of the Eaſt and South Church, I will adde the conſent of the reformed Churches, Saxony. artic. 3. There was ſo great love in the Sonne toward us, that he derived unto himſelfe this true and exceeding great anger. Scotland. artic. of Chriſts death and paſſion: He ſuffered not onely the cruell death of the croſſe, — but alſo for a ſeaſon the wrath of his Father, &c.

Part. 3. q. 46. art. 6. Thomas their oracle thus acknowledgeth: Doloris interioris cauſa fuit primo peccata omnia humani generis, pro quibus ſatisfaciebat patiendo, &c. The cauſe of his inward griefe was firſt all the ſinnes of mankinde for the which he ſatisfied by ſuffering, which he aſcribed as unto himſelfe, &c. If then all our ſinnes were laid upon Chriſt as his owne, how did he not alſo undergo for the time the burthen of his Fathers wrath, which was due unto our ſinnes, which Chriſt bare.

This then is the ſumme: firſt, that ſeeing Chriſt was ſaved from that he feared, yet was he not ſaved from death; ſecondly, ſo he ſhould have been weaker than many Martyrs, that were not afraid of the death of the body; thirdly, ſeeing he was ſo aſtoniſhed being in his agony, that he prayed for the paſſing of the cup, which was neither paſſible, nor granted; fourthly, and was ſo aſtoniſhed with feare, that his ſoule fainted within, his body did ſweat blood without; fifthly, ſeeing the Fathers confeſſe, that this agonie proceeded not from any feare of bodily ſufferings: it followeth that the feare and feeling of his Fathers wrath thus troubled his ſoule. And thus much of this ſecond part or argument, of the cauſe of Chriſts agony and aſtoniſhment in the garden.

The third Part, whether CHRIST ſuffered properlie and immediatly in ſoule.

The Obiections anſwered.

The Papiſts.

16. Error. THeir opinion is, that Chriſt did not ſuffer in ſoule properly, but either, ex corporis conjunctione & condolentia: His griefe proceeded, from the coniunction and fellow-feeling with the body, Fevardent. p. 454. or elſe from the commiſeration and compaſſion that he had for the ſinnes of his myſticall body: for the which, tanta totius cordis pœnitudine dolet, ut par ei nemo unquam fuerit: He did ſo grieve throughout in his heart, that no man was ever like unto him, p. 455. So he concludeth, pœnas peccatis debitas in corpore portaſſe, &c. igitur non in anima, that he bare the puniſhment due to our ſinnes in his bodie, and not in his ſoule, p. 448. To the like purpoſe Bellar. Defixit mentem in omnia tormenta im- dentia: He fixed his ſoule to behold all the torments ready at hand, lib. 4. de Chriſti anima, cap. 8 reſp. ad argum. 3. otherwiſe he confeſſeth no ſuffering in Chriſts ſoule. Let us ſee their arguments.

Argum. Fevard. thus reaſoneth: Firſt, 1 Pet. 2. 24. He bare our ſinnes in his body on the tree. Secondly,
S. Paul ſaith, God forbid that I ſhould rejoyce but in the croſſe of the Lord Ieſus, Galat. 6. 14. And 1.
1 Cor. 2. 2. I eſteemed not to know any thing among you ſaving Ieſus Chriſt and him crucified: but his 2.
ſoule was not crucified. Thirdly, our Saviour ſaid, It is finiſhed, Ioh. 19. 30. Ergo, if all his ſufferings were finiſhed upon the croſſe, there remained nothing to be ſuffered afterward, Fevard. p. 448. 8. 450. 12. 3.

Anſw. Firſt, this place maketh rather againſt them: for the Apoſtle ſaith directly, he bare our ſinnes:
the fleſh properly is not ſaid to beare ſinne, but the ſoule. Secondly, neither can ſinne be here taken for 1.
the puniſhment of ſinne only, but for ſinne it ſelfe: for S. Peter expoundeth the Hebrew (נשא naſah) uſed by the Prophet Iſay 53. 4. as the Septuagint doe by the Greeke, φέρει, ἀνήνεγκε, which ſignifieth to beare: ſo Matthew ſaith ἔλαβε he tooke our ſins and infirmities, Matth. 8. 17. as the Hebrew word is uſed, Math. 8. 17.
1 Sam. 17. 34. and S. Iohn 1 Ioh. 3. 5 ut tolleret, ἄρῃ, that he might take away ſinnes: in which ſenſe alſo 1 Sam. 17. 34. the Hebrew is taken, Amos. 6. 10. Wherefore if Chriſt ſo bare our ſinnes, as Peter ſaith, that he tooke 1 Ioh. 3. 5.
them upon him, as Matthew expoundeth, and tooke them alſo away as S. Iohn inferreth; then he did not onely beare the puniſhment, but the ſinne alſo: for he did not take away, nor take upon him the puniſhment onely, but the ſinne alſo. Thirdly, neither can the word ἁμαρτία, ſinne, uſed by S. Peter, ſignifie properly the puniſhment of ſin: for S. Iohn ſaith, that ἁμαρτία, is ἀνομία: that ſinne is tranſgreſſion, &c.
1 Ioh. 3. 4. and the Septuagint uſe both theſe words, expounding the one by the other: Iſay 53. 5. Hee 1 Ioh. 3. 4.
was wounded for our ſinnes, and broken for our iniquities: ſinne therefore doth no more betoken the Iſay 53. 5.
paine of ſinne than tranſgreſſion, ἀνομία. Fourthly, the prophet ſaith, He hath taken our infirmities or ſinnes, and carried our ſorrowes, Iſai. 53. 4. the puniſhment or effect of ſinne, the ſecond clauſe of the ſentence expoundeth by ſorrowes or diſeaſes: ſo that unleſſe we will make a ſuperfluous repetition of the ſame thing, in the firſt clauſe, ſinne it ſelfe, the cauſe of theſe ſorrowes, muſt be contained: and the phraſe alſo giveth this ſenſe: for our ſinnes נשא, he tooke, our ſorrowes and diſeaſes, ἐβάστασεν, bajulavit, he did carry or beare, as S. Matthew expoundeth. Fifthly, S. Peter himſelfe joyneth together, the obedience, and ſprinkling of the blood of Ieſus, 1 Pet. 1. 2. the one in his ſoule, the other in his body; and 1 Pet. 1. 2.
therefore it is farre from the Apoſtle to exclude the merit of Chriſts ſoule by his obedience and ſuffering.
Sixthly, it will be objected, that the Apoſtle ſaith, he bare our ſinnes in his body upon the tree, and with his ſtripes μώλωπι, we are healed: which ſignifie the ſtripes of his body.

Anſw. Firſt we grant hee bare our ſinnes upon the tree of the croſſe, for that was the very Altar 1.
where this ſacrifice was offered, the field where this battle was fought, and the very theater where Chriſt was to play the Redeemers part. 2. and in his body, for his ſoule was not out of 1. his body, when he ſuffered: 2. and the body was the inſtrument of the ſoule: 3. and the viſible part of his ſufferings, and therefore namely expreſſed: 4. or elſe by a Synecdoche in the body the other part is ſignified: Heb. 10. 5.
as where the Scripture ſaith, a body thou haſt given me, Heb. 10. 5. hee received not a body Heb. 10. 10.
without a ſoule: 5. otherwiſe, when the Apoſtle ſpeaketh diſtinctly he expreſſeth both parts; Heb.
10. 10. By the which will we are ſanctified by the offring of the body of Ieſus: we are ſanctified both by the obedient will of Chriſt in his ſoule, and by the offring of his body.

2. The word ſignifieth properly, livorem, the blewneſſe or ſcarres remaining after ſtripes and wounds, Prov. 20. 30. wherein a figure muſt be admitted; by one part the whole being expreſſed: Prov. 20. 30.
otherwiſe if Chriſts ſcarres and ſtripes of his fleſh only healed us, then his blood, and death ſhould be excluded: And it is no unuſuall thing in Scripture, to attribute wounds and ſtripes to the ſoule; as Luk. Luk. 2. 35.
2. 35. A ſword ſhall pierce thy ſoule: And 1 Cor. 8. 12. τύπτοντες, beating or wounding their conſcience: 1 Cor. 8. 12.
there is no reaſon to the contrary, but that ſtripes may be taken in the ſame ſenſe here. Thus S. Ambroſe:
Sicut mors ejus mortem abſtulit, livor ejus vulnera noſtra ſanavit: ita mœror ejus, mœrorem noſtrum abolevit: As his death tooke away ours, his ſtripes healed our wounds: ſo his griefe aboliſhed ours, lib. 2. de fid. c. 3.

Secondly, 1. By the croſſe of Chriſt all Chriſts ſuffrings whatſoever are ſignified: 1 Cor. 1. 17. leſt the croſſe of Chriſt ſhould be of none effect: all the effectuall ſuffrings of Chriſt are contained in the croſſe 2.
S. Peter ſo underſtandeth Chriſts ſuffrings, 1 Pet. 2. 21. Chriſt ſuffered for us, &c. 23. when he was reviled, 1 Pet. 2. 21.
reviled not againe, &c. but all his revilings were not incident to his croſſe properly. 2. Yea in Chriſt crucified we underſtand not onely his body launced and whipped, but his ſoule alſo with ſorrow pierced:
and S. Paul muſt be ſo underſtood: whereby (ſaith he) the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world: S. Paul was not crucified and mortified in body onely to the world, but in ſoule and affections:
ſo was alſo Chriſt crucified. 3. S. Ambroſe affirmeth the ſame, lib. 5. in Luc. Mens mea in Chriſto crucifixa eſt: My minde and ſoule was crucified in Chriſt: He ſaith not by Chriſt only, that is, by the power of his croſſe our ſoule is crucified, but in Chriſts perſon our humane ſoule, which hee tooke together with our body, was crucified: as the ſame Ambroſe ſaith in Luc. 22. Suſcepit animam meam, ſuſcepit corpus meum: He tooke my ſoule, he tooke my body.

Thirdly, 1. This place urgeth not us: for we affirme not, that Chriſt ſuffered any thing in ſoule after his death, all his ſufferings in ſoule and body were performed upon the croſſe. 2. It rather maketh 3.
againſt them: for ſeeing it was needfull that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer for us both in body and ſoule; as the Apoſtle ſaith, He tooke away the hand-writing of ordinances that was againſt us, which was contrary to us *and faſtened it to the Croſſe, Coloſſ.*2.14. If he faſtened to the croſſe whatſoever decree was againſt us and contrary to us, then the decree againſt our ſoules, as well as againſt our bodies: then it will follow, that if Chriſt faſtened not to his croſſe this decree againſt our ſoules, which muſt be by ſuffering in his ſoule, then he was to ſuffer ſomewhat afterward. Let the Fryer take heed of his owne net, our foote is not entangled in it.

1. John 1.14.

*Argum.*2. Firſt, *Gen.*3.15. The ſeed of the woman ſhall breake thy head, but thou ſhalt bruiſe his heele: Fevardentius expoundeth this, by that place Iohn 1 14. The word was made fleſh: So his meaning ſeemeth to be this, that that part onely, which was of the ſeede of the woman, namely the fleſh of Chriſt, was onely bruſed of the Serpent, *Fevard.p.*276.*conf.*8.*lin.*17.21.

2. Secondly, none of the Prophets did write ſo of Chriſt, that he ſhould ſuffer the anger of God in his ſoule, *Fevard.p.*440.*lin.*3.469.*conf.*1.*lin.*8. So he thinketh, that the Prophets and Patriarkes beleeved the bodily ſufferings of Chriſt onely, and by that faith were ſaved.

3. Thirdly, *Heb.*10.12. With one offering hath he conſecrated for ever them that are ſanctified: with one offering, that is, of his bodie and blood, not with two offerings, of bodie and ſoule, Fevardent. p.449. *conf.*10.*lin.*6.

1. Anſw. Firſt, 1. Similitudes and allegories doe not conclude certainly in every point, but wherein the compariſon ſtandeth: as here the ſimilitude is taken from the nature of Serpents, that being trode upon, doe bite and ſting the foote againe of him that preſſeth them: this ſimilitude holdeth ſtrongly for the victory of Sathan, to the which end this promiſe is made to our parents: but if we apply it to other purpoſes, we ſhall ſtraine it too farre.

What is meant by bruiſing of the heele. Gen.3.13.

2. Some by Chriſts heele doe underſtand his members; as *Origen.hom.*4.in P*ſal.*36. Ille noſtrum obſervat calcaneum, cui utique nunquam oportet nos undam prebere plantam, ſed ſemper eſſe debemus calceati pedes in preparatione Evangelij: He doth obſerve our heele, to whom we muſt not offer our ſelves bare-footed, but ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpel of peace, &c. This I take to be the proper meaning of Chriſts heele.

Pſal.49.5. Iob 13.26.27.

3. S.Hierome alſo giveth a good expoſition of this place: *Tradition.in Geneſ.tom.*4. Quia noſtri greſſus prepediuntur à colubro, dominus conteret Satanam ſub pedibus: Becauſe our goings are hindred by the Serpent the Lord ſhall tread downe Sathan under our feet, &c. By our footſteps may be underſtood our ſinnes and infirmities which give advantage to the tentation of Sathan: and this expoſition is agreeable alſo to the Scripture, P*ſal.*49.5. Why ſhould I feare, when, iniquitas calcaneorum circundabit me. The iniquitie of my heeles doth compaſſe me? And Iob 13.26.27. he calleth peccata adoleſcentia veſtigia pedum. The ſinnes of his youth the print of his heeles. In the firſt place the ſame Hebrew word is uſed, in the next the ſame ſenſe of the word is retained.

Pſal.89.51.

4. This place alſo may be expounded by the like, P*ſal.*89.51. Probro afficiunt veſtigia: They ſlander the footſteps of thine annointed. Whereby is ſignified the continuall practice of Sathan and his Miniſters, to ſlander the profeſſion of the Goſpel of Chriſt, whereby Chriſt is knowne and diſcerned in the world, as by the prints of his feete: All theſe expoſitions are ſound, and conſonant to the Scripture, and not much varying the one from the other: whether of theſe wee take, this place maketh nothing for the collection enforced.

Exod.33.23.

5. Or if we doe apply it to Chriſts perſon, why may not his whole humanity be here comprehended, which is the inferiour part to his Godhead: and ſo this place may be expounded by that Exod. 33.23. where Moſes ſaw poſteriora dei, the backe parts of God: Origen ſaith, Noviſſima pars hominis pes: A mans foot is his laſt or hinder part, in 17. Matth. and ſo expoundeth this of Chriſts being in the fleſh, when Moſes ſaw him in the mount. And Auguſtine likewiſe underſtandeth his fore-parts to be his face of majeſtie, wherein he is equall to God: his backe-parts, becauſe he appeared in the end of the world, *lib.*3.*de Trinitat.c.*17. So then by Chriſts heele or back-parts, his whole humanity may be implyed, which is but as his backe and meaner parts, in reſpect of his divine Majeſtie.

John 14.30.

6. And this ſenſe the text it ſelfe giveth, and the force of the ſimilitude: for like as that part is bitten of the Serpent, wherewith he is troden upon; ſo Sathan aſſailed that part in Chriſt, wherewith he was overcome: but he overcame him not only with his fleſh, but with the juſtice & innocency of his ſoule: as Chriſt ſaith, *Ioh.*14.30. The Prince of this world commeth, and hath nought in me. And as Auguſtine ſaith: Nihil ei extorquens extorſit violento dominatu, ſed ſuperans eum lege juſtitia. Chriſt did not wreſt any thing from him by violent ſubduing, but overcame him by the law of juſtice, *de liber.arbit. lib.*3.*cap.*10. Wherefore as Chriſt by the innocencie of his ſoule, together with his holy and obedient fleſh ſubdued Sathan: ſo he ſeeketh to bite and vexe him in the ſame. Whether this text then be underſtood of Chriſt or his members, or both, the argument propounded concludeth not.

2. Pſal.18.5. Iſay.53.10.11.

Secondly, the Fathers of the law and the Prophets beleeved not only the bodily death, but the ſpirituall and ſoule ſuffrings of Chriſt: as David prophecying of Chriſt, ſaith, P*ſal.*18.5. The ſorrowes of hell compaſſed me: but the Prophet Iſay of all other ſaith moſt plainely, *Iſai.*53.10. He ſhall make his ſoule an offering for ſinne: verſ.11. He ſhall ſee of the travell of his ſoule, and ſhall be ſatisfied: and therefore as Auguſtine ſaith: Eadem fides & in illis, qui nondum nomine, ſed reipſa fuerunt Chriſtiani, & in iſtis, qui non ſolum ſunt, ſed vocantur. Moſes veteris teſtamenti miniſter, hæres novi: The ſame faith was in them, which not yet in name, but indeed were Chriſtians, and in theſe, which not only be, but are ſo called. Moſes was a miniſter of the old teſtament, but an heire of the new, &c. *contr.*2.*epiſt.*Pelag.3.1.

Thirdly,

3. Thirdly, 1. Chriſts ſacrifice conſiſting both of body and ſoule, is but one entire ſacrifice: as in the holocauſt and burnt offring of the law there were diuers parts of the ſacrifice, yet but one whole ſacrifice. 2. Where the Apoſtle exhorteth that we ſhould offer up our bodies, θυσίαν ζῶσαν, a living ſacrifice, Rom. 12.1. doth he meane our bodie without a ſoule? yet he calleth it a ſacrifice, one, not many. 3. Wheras it is objected, that the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, what one ſacrifice he meaneth, namely of his body, Heb. 10.10. ver. 19. By the blood of Ieſus we may be bold to enter: ver. 20. He hath prepared a way by his fleſh. I anſwere: firſt, Chriſts body, fleſh and blood, are not all one, his fleſh & blood are divers parts of his body: then as by theſe ſeverall parts named by themſelves we underſtand the reſt; by blood, his body and fleſh; by fleſh, his blood and body: ſo what letteth, but that in theſe ſpeeches all other neceſſary parts of his ſuffering may be comprehended? Secondly, the Apoſtle doth chiefly ſtand upon the externall part of Chriſts ſuffering, as the offering of his body, ſhedding of his blood, becauſe it did more fitly anſwere to the blood of Buls and Goats, and the ſacrifice of beaſtes, whereof the Apoſtle entreateth, chap. 9.10. Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in more generall termes: Chriſt offered himſelfe. Heb. 9.24. Chriſt was offered, ver. 28. If Chriſt, if himſelfe, how Chriſt without a ſoule, how himſelfe without a ſoule? if Chriſt then being both God and man, is but one, as Leo ſaith, Unus atque idem in utraque forma Chriſtus: One and the ſame Chriſt in both formes & natures, epiſt. 81. ſo likewiſe his body and ſoule being parts of the ſame nature, doe make but one ſacrifice.

Rom. 12.1.
Heb. 10.10. 19.20.
Heb. 9.24, 28.

Argum. 3. 1. Chriſt neither taſted nor ſuffered the death of the ſoule, as Auguſtine ſaith: Quod anima fuit mortificatus Ieſus, quis audeat dicere cum mors animæ non ſit niſi peccatum? Who dare ſay that Chriſt was mortified in his ſoule, ſeeing the death of the ſoule is nothing but ſinne? therefore he was mortified in the fleſh, quia ſecundum ſolam carnem mortuus, becauſe he died only in the fleſh, epiſt. 99.

2. The Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ. 1.7. We have redemption through his blood, even forgiveneſſe of ſinnes: Fevard. p. 442. conf. 15. lin. 11. 1. Iohn 1.7. The blood of Ieſus Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſin, Fevard. p. 441. conf. 13. lin. 5. If the ſhedding of the blood of Chriſt be the juſt and full redemption of all ſins, what need the ſufferings of his ſoule?

Epheſ. 1.7.
1. Iohn 1.7.

3. Chriſt ſuffered wrongfully, 1. Pet. 3.18. He ſuffered, the juſt for the unjuſt. Fevard. 448. But he could not ſuffer the death of the ſoule wrongfully, becauſe it is Gods immediate action: Ergo, he died not in ſoule.

1. Pet. 3.18.

4. All Chriſts ſufferings were voluntary: Ioh. 10.18. No man taketh away my life, I lay it downe of my ſelfe. Fevard. p. 448. conf. 10. lin. 8. but the death of the ſoule he did not willingly ſuffer, becauſe it is an alienation from God, which cannot be without ſinne.

Iohn 10.18.

5. Chriſt is the Lambe which was ſlaine, Apoc. 5.9. Fevard. p. 441. conf. 13. lin. 15. but his ſoule was not killed of the Iewes: Ergo, he was not crucified in ſoule, neither died any other death, beſide the death of the body, Fevard. 440. lin. 4.

Apoc. 5.9.

6. The Prophet ſaith, The ſame ſoule that ſinneth ſhall dye, Ezech. 18.20. God in ſpirituall puniſhments, doth not puniſh one for another, Bellarm. lib. 2. de amiſſ. grat. c. 8 arg. 5. Therefore Chriſt was not ſpiritually puniſhed in his ſoule for us.

Ezech. 18.20.

1. Anſ. 1. We moſt willingly confeſſe, that Chriſt in Auguſtines ſenſe died not the death of the ſoule: we approve that ſentence of his: Mors domini noſtri non fuit in anima, ſed in carne ſola: mors noſtra non in carne ſola, ſed in anima; in anima propter peccatum, in carne propter pœnam peccati: ille vero, quia peccatum non fecit, nec habuit in anima, non eſt mortuus niſi in carne tantum: igitur ſimpla eius mors profuit dupla noſtra, &c. The death of our Lord was not in his ſoule, but in his fleſh only; our death is not in our fleſh only, but in our ſoule alſo; in our ſoule becauſe of ſinne, in our fleſh for the puniſhment of ſinne: but he becauſe he did no ſinne, neither had any in his ſoule, died but in his fleſh onely, therefore his ſimple death was profitable to our double death, &c. ſerm. 18. 1. c. 5. 2. But it followeth not, Chriſt dyed not in ſoule: Ergo, he ſuffered not in ſoule: or he dyed not this death of the ſoule by ſinne, or damnation; Ergo, he cannot be ſayd any wayes to have dyed in ſoule. But I will forbeare to uſe this phraſe of Chriſts dying in ſoule, though it may have a tolerable ſenſe, as I have ſhewed before, reſp. ad 10. calumniam. Yet Auguſtine ſeemeth to mee not to deny a ſenſe of death in Chriſts ſoule, his words are theſe: firſt, having affirmed, that Chriſt deſerved not hell fire: Quia hæc mors non conditionis eſt, ſed criminis: For this death is criminall, not conditionall. Hee then propoundeth this objection: Sed inquies, mortem dei filius & in anima non pertulit, nec in majeſtate ſenſit? You will ſay, the ſonne of God, did he not ſuffer & feele it in the majeſtie (thereof) death in his ſoule? Et ſenſit & pertulit, ſed participatione morbi alieni non proprietate vulneris ſui: He did both feele and beare it, but by the partaking of anothers diſeaſe, not by the propertie of any wound or infirmity in himſelfe, Contra Felician. cap. 18. But whatſoever Auguſtines judgement was herein, wee ſimply denie the argument: for it followeth not, Chriſt dyed not in ſoule: Ergo, he ſuffered not in ſoule.

2. Secondly, 1. I have ſhewed before how the Apoſtle is to be underſtood, when he maketh mention of the blood of Chriſt: part. 1. reſp. ad argum. 1. that by one part the reſt are ſignified: for if blood be taken ſtrictly, then Chriſts fleſh is excluded, and beſide his blood, there iſſued out alſo water: all theſe were neceſſary parts of Chriſts paſſion: the Apoſtle then ſo ſpeaketh of one part, as he doth not except or ſeclude the reſt. 2. It is uſuall in Scripture, by the fleſh, to comprehend the whole man not unregenerate only, but regenerate: as Ambroſe interpreteth theſe words of Chriſt, The ſpirit is ready the fleſh is weake, Matth. 26.41. Ut in ſpiritu deum, in homine carnem ſignificaret: That hee might ſignifie God in the ſpirit, man in the fleſh. But for more full anſwere, I referre the reader to that place before remembred.

How God was the author of Chriſts ſufferings.

3. Thirdly, 1. concerning the death of the ſoule, which could not without injurie be inflicted upon Chriſt, I anſwere, that this queſtion is altogether impertinent, and the argument ſuperfluous: for wee affirme not any ſuch death in the ſoule of Chriſt. 2. Yet we are bold to avouch, that God was the author of the afflictions of Chriſts ſoule: ſo the Prophet ſaith, Iſay 53.4. He was plagued and ſmitten of God: *Act.*2.23. He was delivered up by the determinate counſell of God. Yea even the terrors and inward afflictions of Gods children proceede from God: Iob 6.4. The arrowes of God are in me, and the terrors of God fight againſt me. 3. Yet God is not unjuſt, neither injurious, in giving unto his ſonne this cup to drinke: 1, Becauſe Chriſt willingly offered himſelfe to undertake this puniſhment for us: Pſal. 40.7. Then ſayd I, Loe I come, I deſire to doe thy will O God. 2. Becauſe God layd upon him the iniquitie of us all, Iſay 53.6. he being the ſuretie for our ſinnes, was in juſtice to ſatisfie the debt. 3. Becauſe God herein intended the redemption of mankinde, not having a pleaſure in the death of his ſonne; as Origen well ſaith of the tentation of Iob: Non delectabatur, ut Iob torqueretur, ſed ut diabolus vinceretur: God was not delighted, that Iob ſhould be tormented, but that Sathan ſhould bee conquered, in 2.cap.Iob. 4. The ſame objection may be made as well concerning Chriſts ſufferings in bodie, for God alſo was the author of them; as where the Prophet ſaith, *Smite the ſhepheard, Zach.*13.7. yet the Evangeliſt ſaith in Gods perſon, I will ſmite the ſhepheard. Matth 26.31. Evangeliſta auſus eſt Prophetæ verba ad dei transferre perſonam: The Evangeliſt is bold to referre the Prophets words to the perſon of God, Hieron. ad Pammach. Whether God were the author mediatly or immediatly in reſpect of juſtice, there is no difference: the Iudge that decreeth unjuſt things, and the writer or executor thereof are alike guiltie of injuſtice. Iſay 10.1. Woe unto them that decree wicked things, and write grievous things: wherefore if the ſufferings of Chriſt in ſoule were uniuſt in reſpect of Gods decree, his ſufferings in bodie ſhould be ſo likewiſe; which wee confeſſe notwithſtanding in reſpect of the malice of Sathan, and the Iewes which procured them, and the innocencie of Chriſts perſon to have bin moſt wrongfull and iniurious.

Pſal.40.7. Iſay 53.6. Zachar.13.7. Matth.26.31. Iſay 10.1.

4. Fourthly, 1. ſuch a death of the ſoule, as bringeth with it a ſeparation from God, Chriſt neither ſuffered willingly, nor unwillingly: we denie any ſuch death of ſoule to have beene in Chriſt; and therefore all the objections, which preſſe this abſurditie, are altogether impertinent. 2. Concerning ſuch paſſions in ſoule as we affirme Chriſt to have endured, we anſwere as of the ſufferings in his bodie; that he did beare them both willingly: for though in his humane and naturall deſire without ſinne, he wiſhed the paſſing of the cup, yet conforming his will unto Gods, he was obedient and willing: this the Scripture teſtifieth, that Chriſt prayed, that the cup might paſſe, which ſheweth a will in him to have eſcaped it: but yet he ſubmitteth himſelfe to his Fathers pleaſure: *not as I will, but as thou wilt. Matth.*26.39. Thus the Fathers doe note two wills to have bin in Chriſt when he made this requeſt. Athanaſ. Humana voluntas propter infirmitatem carnis refugiebat paſſionem, divina prompta erat: The humane will for the infirmity of the fleſh, refuſed the paſſion; the divine will was ready: ex epiſt. Agathon. ad conſt. Origen. Cæpit trepidare, & mæſtus eſſe, non quia trepidaverit deitas, ſed quia carnis infirmitatem oſtendit: He began to feare and to be ſad, not that his diety trembled, but becauſe hee ſhewed the infirmity of his fleſh: lib.3. in Iob. The Latine fathers ſpeake more diſtinctly. Hieron. in 14. Marc. Hic oſtendit humanam voluntatem quæ propter infirmitatem carnis recuſat paſſionem, & divinam quæ prompta eſt perficere diſpenſationem: Here he ſheweth an humane will, which becauſe of the infirmity of the fleſh refuſeth the paſſion; & a divine, which was ready to fulfill the diſpenſation. Ambroſ. Sciat vitam in voluntate eſſe hominis, quia mortem timemus; paſſionem autem Chriſti in voluntate divina ut pateretur pro nobis: Know, that life is in the deſire and will of man, becauſe we feare death; but the paſſion of Chriſt in the divine will, that he might ſuffer for us, *lib.2. de fide.c.*3. Thus we ſee, that although Chriſt would not die in his humane infirmity, yet he was moſt willing in his obedient conformity. *Peter Lombard. lib.*3. *diſt.*27.b. uſeth to this purpoſe a good diſtinction, which ſafely may be received: that as there is in man duplex affectus, rationis & ſenſus; a double affection or deſire, of ſenſe and reaſon; ſo likewiſe was there in Chriſt, ut mentis affectu vellet mori: He was willing to die in the affection of his mind, ſenſualitatis affectu nollet; but in his ſenſuall affection unwilling, as hee ſheweth out of Auguſtine in the example of Peter, to whom Chriſt ſayd, Iohn 21.18. When thou art olde, thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thy hands, and another ſhall gird thee and lead thee whither thou wouldeſt not: whereupon Auguſtine thus writeth, Ad illam moleſtiam nolens venit, ſed volens eam vicit: Peter came unwillingly to this trouble, but he willingly overcame it: and this affection not to be willing to die, is ſo naturall, ut eum Petro nec ſenectus abſtulerit: that it left not Peter in his old age: the like affection and deſire he ſheweth to have beene in Chriſt, when he ſayd, Let this cup paſſe, &c.

Matth.26.39. Two willes in Chriſt. Iohn 21.18.

5. Fiſthly, 1. the argument followeth not, the Iewes crucified not Chriſts ſoule: Ergo, hee was not crucified, or did not ſuffer in ſoule: for the Iewes onely crucified the externall fleſh of Chriſt: but God gave him the cup of inward ſorrow to drinke: and therefore he prayeth his Father, that the cup might paſſe, he prayeth to him to remove it, that had prepared it; *Rom.*8.32. God is ſaid to have given his owne ſonne to death. Auguſtine: Ille quanti te æſtimat vide, qui proprio filio non pepercit: See how much hee eſteemed thee, who ſpared not his owne Sonne: in Pſalme 143. 2. This argument may bee retorted; for if Chriſt ſuffered no more, than the Iewes inflicted upon him; then hee ſuffe-red nothing at all in ſoule, neither by compaſſion nor commiſeration; which is on the contrary part affirmed.

Sixthly, 1. The Prophet ſpeaketh not onely of ſpirituall, but of corporall puniſhments, that this is the perpetuall rule of Gods juſtice, that one ſhall not be puniſhed any way for anothers ſinnes: for ſo was the Proverbe among the Iewes; Our fathers have eaten ſowre grapes, and our teeth are ſet on edge, Ezech. 18.2. They complaine not of ſpirituall and eternall puniſhment, but of thoſe outward calamities, which they ſuffered: ſo then, neither are children puniſhed temporally for their parents ſinnes, unleſſe they continue in the ſame; for then God will viſite the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, to the third and fourth generation of them, that hate him, as it is in the ſecond Commandement; if both the Fathers and the children be alike haters of God: So Auguſtine ſaith, Malorum imitatio facit, ut non ſolum ſua, ſed eorum quos imitantur, merita ſortiantur: The imitating of the evill, cauſeth that they only are not partakers of their owne, but of their deſerts, whom they imitate, in Pſal. 108. Good children of wicked parents, if they bee chaſtiſed, it is not a judgement for their fathers ſinnes, to puniſh them, but Gods loving correction to admoniſh them. In this ſenſe then, Chriſt who needed not by any correction to be admoniſhed, ſhould not for us, no not corporally have beene puniſhed. 6.

How children are puniſhed for their fathers ſinnes.

2. The ſame ſoule that ſinneth ſhall dye: This rule alſo holdeth in Chriſt, for his ſoule died not; the ſufferings of ſoule we admit, but not everlaſting death, whereof the Prophet ſpeaketh: for that death of the ſoule which followeth the ſinne of the ſoule, is everlaſting death; but Chriſts ſoule as it was free from ſinne, ſo was it from everlaſting death, or the feare thereof. Thus Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Mortibus corporum legimus quoſdam mortuos propter non ſua, ſed aliena peccata, ubi magis eſt in dolore cordis plaga viventium, quam in reſolutione carnis pœna morientium; — animarum verò morte alius pro alio non plectitur: By the death of the body we read that ſome have dyed, not for their owne but others ſinnes, where it was rather a plague of the living in the griefe of their heart, than a puniſhment of the dead in the reſolution of their fleſh, but in the death of the ſoule none dieth for another: cont. adverſ. leg. lib. 1. c. 16. This death of the ſoule then Chriſt died not.

3. The Prophet alſo ſaith, The ſonne ſhall not beare the iniquity of his father, &c. but every man ſhall beare his owne iniquity: who ſeeth not, that the prophet maketh exception of the perſon of the Mediator: for the Scripture teſtifieth of him, that he bare our iniquities, Iſai. 53.11. therefore as he bare our ſinnes in himſelfe, ſo alſo in Gods juſtice, hee was to beare the puniſhment for the ſame: then according to this rule, the ſame ſoule, that ſinneth ſhall dye: ſo becauſe man had ſinned, the man Chriſt taking upon him the ſinnes of mankinde, was puniſhed: Thus Origen writeth according to the Scriptures; Chriſtus ſine dubio, pro peccato, quod ex nobis ſuſceperat, quia peccata noſtra portavit, carnem incontaminatam obtulit hoſtiam; Chriſt without doubt, for ſinne, which hee tooke of us, becauſe hee bare our ſinnes, did offer up in ſacrifice his undefiled fleſh, Hom. 3. in Levit. As Chriſt then tooke upon him our ſinnes; ſo he alſo anſwered the puniſhment.

Argum. 4. The Scripture ſheweth evidently, that our ſoules are redeemed by Chriſts blood, 1 Ioh. 1.7. The blood of Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſinne: Fevard. p. 441. conſ. 13. lin. 5. The ſoule is cleanſed as well as the body, Heb. 9.14. The blood of Chriſt doth purge our conſcience from dead workes. Fevard. pag. 442. conſ. 16. lin. 8. The conſcience is a member of the ſoule, Revel. 5.9. Thou haſt redeemed us by thy blood, ſay the bleſſed Saints in heaven, whoſe bodies remaine in the earth: Fevard. p. 441. conſ. 13. lin. 13.

1 Ioh. 1.7.
Heb. 9.14.
Revel. 5.9.

Anſw. 1. All this being admitted, that our ſoules are redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, we feare not the conſequent, as preſently followeth to be ſhewed; the places of Scripture alleaged directly prove the ſame; ſaving that the collection out of the laſt place may be excepted againſt: for thoſe 24. Elders doe not deſcribe the ſtate of the Saints in heaven, but repreſent the Church militant on earth, whoſe converſation notwithſtanding is in heaven: this firſt the text giveth, 1 verſ. 10. Wee ſhall raigne on the earth, that is, by their faith and vertue, it is not ſaid in heaven. 2. They are ſaid to be Kings and Prieſts; which Chap. 1.6. is expounded of the living. 3. And indeed the office of our ſpirituall Prieſthood in preſenting our prayers unto God, is more fit and proper for this life, than for the next; in the which, though we deny not, but the ſaints doe ſing continually to the praiſe of God, as the Angels doe, Apoc. 4. 8. and doe make their requeſts unto God, for the accompliſhing of his Kingdome, Apocal. 6. 10. yet the prayer of faith, which is the ſpeciall object of our ſpirituall Prieſthood, Iam. 5.15. is onely incident to this life, for the which faith onely ſerveth. 3. And indeed verſ. 9. they ſeeme to ſpeake of the whole number of the elect, redeemed out of every kindred and people.

Revel. 5.10.

Revel. 4.8.
c. 6.10.
Iam. 5.15.

The Fathers alſo thus expound this place, of the faithfull in earth: Beda upon the 10. verſe. Here is more plainly declared, that the beaſts and Elders are the Church, which is redeemed by the blood of Chriſt and gathered of the nations. Alſo he ſheweth in what heaven they are, ſaying: They ſhall raigne upon the earth. Haymo ſaith all the Elect are Kings, becauſe they ſuffer not the tyranny of vices to riſe up in themſelves, &c. while they doe this by the law of vertue they raigne as it were upon the earth.

2. We grant, that our ſoules are redeemed by Chriſts blood, but it doth not follow, that they are not redeemed by his ſoule alſo, and therefore that his ſuffring in ſoule ſhould be ſuperfluous: for by the ſame reaſon you might conclude againſt Chriſts fleſh: our ſoules and bodies are redeemed by Chriſts blood: Ergo, not by his fleſh: and ye may as well inferre out of theſe and ſuch like places, that Chriſt had no ſoule, as that he ſuffered not in ſoule, becauſe the Apoſtles ſtill make mention of blood.

3. Cyrill ſaith, Carnem ſuam in redemptionis pretium pro omnium carne depoſuit; & animam ſuam ſimiliter pro omnium anima in redemptionis preciū conſtituit: Chriſt yeelded his fleſh the price of redemption for our fleſh, and his ſoule the price of redemption for our ſoule, de rect. fid. ad Theoſ. Cyrill ſpeaketh not of the ſympathie of the ſoule of Chriſt, with his ſuffering fleſh, for all this is but caro pro carne, his fleſh given for our fleſh: but he inſinuateth ſuch proper paſſions of the ſoule, as are the price of redemption for our ſoules: hee ſpeaketh of the price of redemption in the ſoule, and in the fleſh, not of one and the ſame price, and therefore not of one kinde of paſſions: though in effect and in the whole all is but one price and one redemption, yet there are divers parts and members of it.

4. We ſay then, that though in the uſe and application of Chriſts ſacrifice we ſpeake diſtinctly, that Chriſts ſoule was given for our ſoule, his fleſh for our fleſh, as Cyrill ſaith; thereby to ſet forth the proportion of Gods juſtice, which muſt be ſatisfied with the price both of body and ſoule, for the redemption of our body and ſoule: yet we doe not ſever nor divide the power and vertue of Chriſts ſacrifice, but aſcribe the redemption of our body and ſoule joyntly and equally to the ſacrifice of his body and ſoule. After the like manner in the Euchariſt, by way of application we ſeverally and diſtinctly receive the ſignes and pledges of Chriſts body and blood, namely the conſecrated bread and wine, the vertue notwithſtanding whereof is one and the [a] ſame.

[a] There is the ſame ſpirituall efficacie of Chriſts body and blood, yet a divers ſacramentall uſe and application.

The contrary part confirmed, that Chriſt ſuffered properly and immediatly in his ſoule, and not by way of compaſſion or fellow-feeling only with his bodie.

Argum. 1. THat which Chriſt aſſumed or tooke of our nature, he aſſumed to this end, to ſuffer in it, and by ſuffering to ſave and redeeme it.

But hee tooke the whole nature of man, both bodie and ſoule: Ergo, he ſuffered in both: it will be here anſwered, that his ſoule ſuffered but by way of compaſſion and ſympathie only with his body, Bellarm. Fevard. ubi ſupra.

Contra. This naturall or compaſſionate ſuffering of Chriſts ſoule, did not properly make to that part of our redemption, which was to be performed by his ſoule, neither was abſolutely neceſſary to make Chriſts fleſh to have life and ſenſe: ſeeing the deity of Chriſt could have given life, ſenſe and feeling to the fleſh, inſtead of a ſoule: as Felicianus the Arrian objected to Auguſtine, Cur filii Dei habitus inſtar animæ communis animam ejus non animaret? Why might not the habite or ſonne of the Sonne of God, inſteed of a common ſoule animate or quicken his fleſh? Cont. Felician. c. 13.

1. It is not here affirmed, that the compaſſion of the ſoule with the body, did not properly belong to our redemption ſimply, but to that redemption which was to be wrought by the ſoule. 2. And by way of ſuppoſition, becauſe it was not abſolutely neceſſary, that the ſoule ſhould be given to the body only, to give life and ſenſe unto it: becauſe as the Arrians objected, Chriſts deity might have beene inſteed of the ſoule: and we ſee that there may be ſenſe and feeling in the body, without a reaſonable ſoule: the motion and feeling belongeth to the ſenſitive faculty, not to the intellectuall part: And to this purpoſe Iodocus Clictoveus, a writer of their owne uſeth this diſtinction, that, Anima non fuit medium neceſſitatis, ſed congruitatis uniens deitatem cum carne: That Chriſts ſoule was not a meane of neceſſity, but onely of congruity, to unite the Godhead with the fleſh; Enarrat. in lib. 3. *de fid. Damaſ. c.*27.

I will further confirme and ratifie our argument thus. Firſt, the aſſumption is evident, and need no proofe, that Chriſt tooke upon him both our ſoule and body: the Apoſtle ſaith, In all things it became him to be like unto us, Heb. 2.17. Therefore he had both body and ſoule, as we have. Secondly, concerning the propoſition, That what Chriſt tooke of our nature, he tooke it, by ſuffering in it properly and immediatly to redeeme us: firſt, it is confirmed by Scripture: Chriſt tooke part with them, that he might deſtroy through death, him that had power of death, &c. That he might deliver all them, which for feare of death, were all their life time ſubject to bondage: Hence I reaſon thus, that, wherein Chriſt delivered us, he tooke part with us in, he delivered us from feare of death: Ergo, he did therein communicate with us: but this feare was the proper and immediate paſſion of the ſoule, namely the feare of death, and Gods anger. And the text giveth this ſenſe; Becauſe the feare of this death kept them in bondage: but the feare onely of the bodily death doth not bring us into ſuch bondage: ſo it is expounded in the ſong of Zachary: That we being delivered from the hand of our enemies ſhould ſerve him without feare: This then is a ſpirituall feare, from the which Chriſt did deliver us: Ergo, hee did communicate with us in this feare: for the Apoſtle ſaith; In that, wherein he ſuffered and was tempted, he is able to ſuccour us, verſ. 18.

verſ.15.14.
Luk.1.74.

Object. If Chriſt could deliver us from nothing, which he ſuffered not, then he doth not deliver us from eternall death, which he ſuffered not.

Anſwer. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of Chriſts divine power, and abſolute ability, but of the poſſibility of his condition: that wherein he ſuffered, he is able to ſuccour us by the feeling of our infirmities, wherewith hee touched, and by the experience which hee had in his owne fleſh: ſo the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, *Heb.*4.5. We have not a Prieſt that could not be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Secondly, though Chriſt neither felt nor feared everlaſting death, yet he both felt and feared his Fathers wrath and diſpleaſure that cauſed it: and ſo he was not altogether without experience and feeling of our infirmities in that behalfe.

Object. If the feare that Chriſt delivered us from, be the feare of everlaſting damnation; this Chriſt never feared: and therefore he did not therein partake with us.

Anſw. It is not neceſſary, that Chriſt ſhould partake with us in every part and ſpeciall kinde of our infirmities, and in the ſame manner: but it was ſufficient that he taſted of them in ſuch meaſure and degree, as became the dignity of his perſon, and condition, being without ſinne: and ſo we affirme, that though he feared not everlaſting death actually in himſelfe, yet hee feared and felt the wrath of God, which ſtriketh into us a feare of damnation. Thomas here reſolveth well, giving this anſwere to a place of Hilary, Intelligendum eſt quantum ad omnia genera paſſionum, non quantum ad omnes ſpecies: It muſt be underſtood according to all the kindes of ſuffrings in generall, not in particular, &c. 3. part. qu. 46. 5.

4. The Fathers alſo doe thus ſtrengthen our argument. Auguſt. Si totus homo periit, totus beneficio ſalvatoris indiguit, &c. Si ſolum carnem aſſumpſit, anima pœnæ addicta — primæ tranſgreſſionis ſine ſpe veniæ remanſit: If whole man periſhed, whole man needed a Saviour, Chriſt therefore tooke whole man, body and ſoule: if he had taken onely fleſh, the ſoule ſhould remaine addict to puniſhment of the firſt tranſgreſſion without hope of pardon, cont. Felician. c. 13. By the ſame reaſon Chriſt muſt alſo ſuffer properly in ſoule, becauſe not by taking our ſoule, but by ſatisfying in his ſoule, our ſoule is delivered.

Damaſcene: πάντα τούτων πάθη ἀνέλαβε, ἵνα πάντα ἁγιάσῃ, He tooke all our paſſions or affections, to ſanctifie them all in himſelfe: but Chriſt was ſanctified and conſecrate by his death, Heb. 5. 9. and ſo doth hee conſecrate us, Heb. 10. 14. With one offering hath hee conſecrated for ever them that are ſanctified: Ergo, by his offering of our ſoule, and ſuffering in our ſoule, hath he conſecrated our ſoule and affections.

Heb. 5. 9.
Heb. 10. 14.

Ambroſe: Suſcepit affectum meum, ut emendaret: He tooke my affection to amend it, &c. Now he hath amended it, in that he conſecrated it by his offering, Heb. 10. 14. Illud pro nobis ſuſcepit, quod in nobis amplius periclitabatur: He hath taken that for us, which was moſt in danger in us, &c. that is, our ſoule, as he expoundeth it, de incarnat. c. 7. But Chriſt hath not otherwiſe delivered us from the danger, but by entring into the danger for us: this danger of the ſoule is the feare and feeling of Gods wrath.

Argum. 2. Whereby Adam, and wee ever ſince doe moſt properly commit ſinne, by the ſame hath Chriſt the ſecond Adam made ſatisfaction properly for our ſinne: but Adam and wee all doe properly commit ſinne in our ſoules, our bodies being but the inſtruments: Ergo, Chriſt by and in his ſoule hath properly made ſatisfaction.

Firſt, 1. the propoſition is confirmed by the Apoſtle, Rom. 5. 19. As by one mans diſobedience we are made ſinners; ſo by the obedience of one, many ſhall be made righteous: Chriſt then ſatisfied for us by the ſame wherein Adam diſobeyed, and Chriſt obeyed, that is in his ſoule: for obedience belongeth to the ſoule, as Agatho epiſt. ad Conſtantin. upon theſe words, Phillip 2. 8. He became obedient unto death: Quis non intelligat obedientiam humanæ competere voluntati: Who doth not underſtand, that obedience doth belong to the humane will?

Phillip 2. 8.

2. It will be objected, that Chriſt ſatisfied only by his bodily death, Fevard. p. 400. lin. 4. and therefore not by his ſoule, becauſe it dieth not: I anſwere, all Chriſts painefull labours in his life, his hunger, faſting, tentations, whippings, mockings, were meritorious and ſatisfactory for our ſinnes: without death indeede the ſatisfactory ſacrifice was not accompliſhed, but not onely by the very paſſion of death; for then the reſt ſhould have beene ſuperfluous: and this to bee the Apoſtles meaning, appeareth by the verſe following, verſ. 16. Where a teſtament is, there muſt be the death, &c. He ſheweth only a neceſſity of death, that without death the Sacrifice was not perfected.

All the ſufferings of Chriſt in his death and life ſatisfactory.

3. That there is a kinde of dying in the ſoule, when it is pierced with griefe, beſide the death of the ſoule either by ſinne or damnation, is not diſagreeing to the Scripture: Simeon ſaith to Mary, Luk. 2. verſ. 35. A ſword ſhall pierce through thy ſoule: As then the body dieth, being pierced with a ſword; ſo the ſoule may be ſaid to dye or languiſh, when it is pierced with griefe: what elſe is crucifying, but dying? but the ſoule is ſaid to be crucified, as S. Paul ſaith, Gal. 6. 14. I am crucified to the world, when as yet his body was alive: So Ambroſe doubteth not to ſay, Mens mea in Chriſto crucifixa eſt: My ſoule was crucified in Chriſt, lib. 5. in Luc. that is, Chriſt in his ſoule was crucified: which hee calleth our ſoule, becauſe he did aſſume our ſoule and body: as elſe-where he ſaith, Mea eſt voluntas, quam ſuam dixit, mea eſt triſtitia quam meo ſuſcepit affectu: It is my will, which he calleth his; it is my heavineſſe, which he tooke with my affections, lib. 2. de fid. c. 3. Yet was it properly and perſonally Chriſts ſoule and will, but ours by community of nature.

Luk. 2. 35.
Galath. 6. 14.

Secondly, for the aſſumption, 1. Howſoever it be admitted, that the body is the inſtrument of the ſoule, both in ſinning and ſuffring, yet the concluſion is this; that becauſe ſinne is committed in the ſoule principally and properly, therefore the ſatisfaction muſt bee made in the ſoule principally and properly: if this concluſion be granted, wee have that we would: for the bodily paines affecting the ſoule, are not the proper paſſions of the ſoule; neither is the ſoule ſaid to ſuffer properly, when the bodie ſuffereth, but by way of compaſſion and conſent. 2. We graunt, that in the proper and immediate ſufferings of the ſoule, the body alſo is affected: as when Chriſt was in his agonie in the garden, his whole body was therewith ſtirred and moved, and that it did ſweat drops of blood: but it is one thing, when the griefe beginneth immediatly in the ſoule, and ſo affecteth the body, & when the paine is firſt inflicted upon the body, and ſo worketh upon the ſoule: there the ſoule ſuffereth properly and principally, of which ſufferings we ſpeake; here neither properly nor principally, which is not the thing in queſtion. 3. It is not the reaſonable ſoule, that is affected with the body; for it is a ground in Philoſophie, (that the ſoule ſuffereth not) but onely the ſenſitive part: but the griefe that we ſpeake of, which is ſatisfactorie for ſinne, muſt be in the very reaſonable ſoule, where ſinne taketh beginning: and ſo Ambroſe ſaith, upon theſe words of Chriſt, My ſoule is heavy to death; Ad rationabilis aſſumptionem animæ, & naturæ humanæ refertur affectum: It is referred to the aſſumption of the reaſonable ſoule, and humane affection, de incarnat. cap. 7.

2. We confeſſe, that in the tranſgreſsion, both Adams ſoule and body did properly ſinne: yet not in every act of the tranſgreſſion: for Adam committed ſome ſinnes, wherein the body was no inſtrument; as namely pride and infidelitie: as Ambroſe ſaith, Non Evam cibus flexerat, non mandatorum deſtituerat oblivio ſed promiſſi honoris ambitio illecebroſa decepit: The meat did not turne Eve, nor the oblivion of the commandements did not overtake her, but the ambitious deſire of the honor, which was promiſed, deceived her, lib. 4. in Luc. Againe, Peccatum Adæ non longè ab idololatria, prævaricatus eſt, ſe hominem putans Deum: The ſinne of Adam was not farre from idolatry, he ſinned, thinking that hee being man, might be God: in 13. Luc. Theſe ſinnes of pride and infidelitie began in the ſoule, and had their determination there: in the committing of thoſe ſinnes, the bodie had no part: indeed with the eare they heard the ſuggeſtion of Sathan, but it was no ſinne, till in their mind they had conſented unto it: wherefore ſeeing the firſt ſinne committed was properly and wholly in the ſoule, for the ſame the ſoule muſt properly and wholly ſatisfie.

3. Then, becauſe ſinne tooke beginning from Adams ſoule, the ſatisfaction alſo muſt beginne in Chriſts ſoule: as Ambroſe ſaith, Incipio in Chriſto vincere, unde in Adam victus ſum: I begin there to win in Chriſt, where in Adam I was overcome, lib. 4. in Luc. then it followeth, that the ſufferings of Chriſts ſoule tooke beginning there, and were not derived by ſympathie from the ſtripes and paine of the bodie. Wee inferre then that therefore Chriſts ſoule had proper and immediat ſufferings, beſide thoſe which proceeded from the ſympathie with the body, and all Chriſts ſufferings were ſatisfactory: Ergo, Chriſt did ſatisfie for our ſinnes properly and immediatly in his ſoule.

Iſay 53. 10. Matth. 26. 38.

Argum. 3. The Prophet Iſay ſaith, 53. 10. He ſhall make his ſoule an offering for ſinne: Ergo, Chriſt offered his ſoule, as well as his body. Againe, our Saviour himſelfe ſaith, Matth. 26. 38. My ſoule is verie heavy unto death. It was not the bodily death, which Chriſt feared; for then he ſhould have beene weaker then many Martyrs: therefore his ſoule was verily and properly ſtricken with heavineſſe, not with the beholding of the bodily torments onely.

Iohn 10. 18.

Anſ. 1. It will be here anſwered, that ſoule in the Prophet is taken for life; as Iohn 10. 17. I lay downe my ſoule, that is, life, Fevard. p. 440. conſ. 10. lin. 8.

Pſal. 16. 10. Iob. 33. 22. Luke 12. 50. 1. Pet. 2. 24. Iohn 11. 33.

2. Chriſt, though he feare death, is not weaker then the Martyrs: for they are rid from feare, becauſe God doth miniſter greater comfort unto them: Sed Chriſtus timuit, quia voluit, Chriſt did not feare of neceſſity, but willingly, for it was in his power not to have feared: And ſo Auguſtine ſaith, Eum non infirmitate, ſed poteſtate turbatum: That Chriſt was troubled not through infirmitie, but by his omnipotency and power, Bellarm. reſp. ad argum. 3. lib. 4. c. 8.

Contra. 1. That, anima, ſoule is taken for life we grant; as Pſal. 16. 10. Thou wilt not leave my ſoule or life in grave, &c. And Iob 33. 22. His ſoule draweth to the grave, and his life to the buriers, yet in this place of the Prophet, it muſt be underſtood properly for ſoule: 1. as it may appeare by the next verſ. 11. He ſhall ſee of the travaile of his ſoule, and be ſatisfied. Here the ſoule muſt be underſtood properly, and the travaile of Chriſts ſoule is not the inſtruction of his life, but his ſuffering upon the croſſe, as it followeth, he ſhall beare their iniquities: this was the travaile of his ſoule upon the Croſſe in bearing our iniquities. Againe, he ſhall be ſatisfied, which was fulfilled, when he ſayd, conſummatum eſt: it is finiſhed; before his death he was not ſatiſfied, but longed continually for the finiſhing of our redemption upon the Croſſe: Luke 12. 50. I muſt be baptized with a baptiſme, and how am I grieved till it be ended? 2. The Prophet alſo maketh immediat mention of Chriſts knowledge: verſ. 11. By his knowledge he ſhall juſtifie many: but knowledge is an adjunct properly of the ſoule, not of the life. verſ. 11. He ſhall beare their iniquities: verſ. 12. He bare the ſinnes of many: this was not onely in his body, but in his ſoule; as Saint Peter expoundeth, He himſelfe bare our ſinnes in his body. 1. Pet. 2. 24. that is, his ſoule bare our ſinnes in his body.

1. Whereas Auguſtine ſaith, He was not troubled through infirmitie: he expoundeth that place Chriſt ἐτάραξεν ἑαυτὸν, troubled or ſtirred himſelfe when he came to Lazarus grave, that is, was moved in compaſſion toward him: there is great difference betweene that trouble of Chriſts ſoule, and this heavineſſe; there hee ſtirred himſelfe to compaſſion, here he is ſtirred of God; that paſsion proceeded of his pitie and love unto man, this is cauſed by the feare and expectation of Gods wrath. There are paſsions ordinary and naturall, as of love, pitie, which the [a] heart raiſeth, and againe alayeth; there are paſsions extraordinary and beyond nature, as when God caſteth darts & terrors into the ſoule, Iob 6. 4 and theſe the heart hath no power of: wherefore Auguſtines ſentence cannot be applied to this agonie of Chriſt.

[a] Not ſimply as having an abſolute power herein of it ſelfe, but comparatively in reſpect of the extraordinarie paſsions which it hath leſſe power of: as the Wiſe-man ſaith, The preparations of the heart are in man but the anſwere of the tongue is from the Lord. Proverb. 16. 1. not that the preparation of the heart is ſimply in mans power, but more then the other.

2. Or it is true which Auguſtine ſaith, even of theſe extrordinary paſſions of Chriſt, which ſhewed not his humane infirmitie onely, but his divine power, in that hee ſubdued theſe paſſions of his humane nature, and ſubjected them to the will of his father: ſo that as Damaſcene well ſaith, *lib.3.de fide.c.*20. Our affections were in Chriſt two wayes, κατὰ φύσιν, ὑπὲρ φύσιν, according to nature, and above nature: naturally hee deſired the cup might paſſe; ſupernaturally hee was contented with his fathers will.

3. That Chriſt procured this ſorrow to himſelfe, is to make him acceſſary to his owne death: his humane will was, to have the cup paſſe; how then is it true, timuit quia voluit, he feared, becauſe hee was willing to feare? he feared, becauſe it was proper to our humane nature to feare, which he tooke, as Auguſtine himſelfe ſaith: Ex quo homo, ex hoc & infirmus; ex quo infirmus, ex hoc & orans: As hee was man, he was weake; as he was weake, he prayed, *Pſal.29.præfat.in enarrat.*2. And if he had not feared and beene perplexed indeede, what neede the Angell to have beene ſent to comfort him? Luke 22.43. Wherefore as Ambroſe well ſaith: Scias vitam eſſe in voluntate hominis, quia timebat pati, paſſionem in voluntate divina, &c. Know that life was in his humane deſire, becauſe hee feared to ſuffer, but death in the heavenly will to ſuffer for us, *lib.2.de fide.c.*3. Wherefore notwithſtanding any thing alleaged by Bellarmine, there yet appeareth no difference betweene the feare of Chriſt and his members, nor any prerogative in the head above the members, if Chriſt had feared onely the death of the body: See before for a more full anſwere, part.2.argum.2.replicat.ad Bellar.

*Argum.*4. The Apoſtle ſaith, *Philip.*2.7. Chriſtus ἑαυτὸν exinanivit, Chriſt did emptie or evacuate himſelfe: And as Tertullian expoundeth contra Marcion,lib.5.exhauſit, he drew out himſelfe, or was exhauſt: which is agreeable to the Propheſie of Daniel 9.26. Meſſias ſhall have nothing. Hence wee conclude, that if Chriſt were exhauſt upon the Croſſe, if nothing was left him, that he ſuffered in body and ſoule, that there was no part within or without free from the croſſe, but all was emptied and powred out for our redemption. Philip.2.7.

Againe, Heb·9.14. Chriſt through the eternall ſpirit offered himſelfe to God: whatſoever was in Chriſt, did either offer, or was offered, his eternall ſpirit onely did offer: Ergo, his whole humane nature both bodie and ſoule was offered. Thus Origen witneſſeth in theſe words, Vide quomodo verus pontifex Ieſus Chriſtus adſumpto batillo carnis humanæ, & ſuppoſito igni altaris, anima ſine dubio illa magnifica, cum qua natus eſt in carne, adjecto etiam incenſo, qui eſt ſpiritus immaculatus, medius inter vivos & mortuos ſtetit. &c. See how our true Prieſt Ieſus Chriſt taking the cenſor of his humane fleſh, putting to the fire of the altar, that is, his magnificent ſoule, wherewith he was borne in the fleſh, and adding incenſe, that is, an immaculate ſpirit, ſtood in the middeſt betweene the living and the dead, Hom.9.in Levit. He maketh Chriſts ſoule a part of the ſacrifice. Heb.9.14.

Argum. 5. Chriſts love unto man in ſuffering for him, was in the higeſt degree and greateſt meaſure that could be: as the Lord ſaith, Iſay 5.4. What could I have done any more for my vineyard that I have not done unto it? But if Chriſt had given his body onely, and not his ſoule for us, he had not done for us all he could, and ſo his love ſhould greatly be empayred, and diminiſhed: Ergo, he gave his ſoule alſo together with his bodie to be the full price of our redemption. Iſay 5.4.

1. It will be anſwered, that Chriſt ſaith, Iohn 15.13. *Greater love hath no man then this, when one layeth downe his life for his friends, Bellarm.lib.1.de baptiſ.cap.*6. And the Apoſtle ſaith, God commended his love toward us, that when we were ſinners, Chriſt dyed for us. *Rom.*5.7. *Bellarm.lib.*4.*de Chriſt. anima.cap.*8.*argum.*1. Chriſts love is ſet forth in his death. A greater love there cannot be than this: Ergo, his ſoule ſuffered not, for that ſhould have beene a greater love. Iohn 15.13. Rom.5.7.

2. Chriſt was the more beloved of God, for giving his life for us; Iohn 10. *Therefore doth my Father love me, Fevard.p.*470.*conſ.*3. Then conſequently he did not loſe his fathers love, in giving his ſoule for us, and bearing his fathers wrath. Iohn 10.17.

Contra. 1. If that ſentence of Chriſt be applyed ſtrictly to himſelfe, this ſenſe cannot hold: for firſt Chriſt dyed for his enemies, *Rom.*5.10. therefore this is not ſimply the greateſt love for a man to dye for his friends, it is a greater love for one to dye for his enemies. Againe, Moſes wiſhed to bee raſed out of the booke of life, *Exod.*32. Paul to be accurſed for the Iewes ſake, *Rom.*9.3. As Hierome ſaith, Pro charitate Chriſti nolit habere Chriſtum: For the love of Chriſt he will not have Chriſt, *Algaſ.qu.*9. This was a greater love, then to lay downe the bodily life onely: but a greater love could not be in the members then in Chriſt. 1. Rom.5.10. Exod.32.32. Rom.9.3.

2. Firſt then the text muſt be underſtood according to the ſubject of the ſentence: Chriſt ſpeaketh of his friends, and toward friends there cannot bee a greater love then to die for them, ſo that here the greatneſſe of Chriſts love conſiſteth in the thing which is done, not in the perſons for whom it is done: for in that conſideration Chriſts love hath farre exceeded, in that hee dyed for us being ſinners, and his enemies, as the Apoſtle there ſheweth. Secondly, by anima ψυχή, life or ſoule in this place, if it be aplyed to Chriſt, it is not neceſſary to underſtand the bodily life onely, but the whole ſtate of man: as where Matthew ſaith, *chap.*16.26. What would it profit a man to winne the whole world, and loſe (animam) his ſoule or life? Saint Luke ſaith, If hee looſe himſelfe, Luke 9.25. ſo that a mans ſoule or life is taken for himſelfe, that is, the whole man. So where Saint Iohn ſaith, that Chriſt layd downe Matth.16.26. Luke 9.25.

1.John 3.16. Epheſ.5.2. Acts 2.27. his life for us: S.Paul writeth thus: he hath loved us, and given himſelfe for us. Thirdly, what reaſon is there, that anima, properly ſignifying the ſoule, ſhould bee taken for the bodie? which interpretation of the word, Bellarmine refuſeth and condemneth as coacted. Acts 2.27. Thou ſhalt not leave my ſoule in grave, Bellarm. lib.4. de Chriſt. anim. c.12. loc.4.

3. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, that Gods love is commended herein, that he dyed for us, that is, as Saint Iohn ſaith, Herein we have perceived love, that Chriſt dyed for us, 1.Iohn 3.16. *and chap.*4.9. In this [illegible] appeared, or was made manifeſt Gods love toward us: So that indeed by Chriſts bodily death being conſpicuous and viſible (his other ſufferings being inviſible and not apparant) the love of Chriſt was made manifeſt. 2. By the death of Chriſt all other concurrents and adjuncts of his croſſe are ſignified, his ſtripes, rebukes, blood, ſorrow, grieſe, and whatſoever concurred either in his bodie or ſoule appertaining to, or accompanying his death: for by all theſe the love of Chriſt was expreſſed.

2. Iob 30.21. Pſal.31.22. Iſay 53 12. Secondly. 1. neither doe we affirme, that Chriſt loſt his fathers love or favour, by entring into that agonie: Iob, when he complained in the anguiſh of his ſoule, that God was his enemie, Iob 30.21. and David when he ſaid, *I am caſt out of thy ſight, Pſal.*31.22. had they then loſt Gods favour? 2. Nay, this travaile and labour of Chriſts ſoule was moſt acceptable unto God, Iſay 53. verſe 12. Therefore I will give him a portion with the great, becauſe he hath powred out his ſoule unto death, &c. and bare the ſinnes of many.

Thirdly, we ſee then notwithſtanding theſe doubts and objections, that the force of this argument remaineth inviolable; that the ſuffering of Chriſt in ſoule together with his body, doth more fully and amply commend and ſet foorth unto us the love of God, ſeeing now, as the Prophet ſaith, He could not doe any thing more for us, which he had not done: So I conclude with that ſaying of Ambroſe, in Luc.c. 22. Minus contulerat, ſi meum non ſuſcepiſſet affectum: debuit dolorem ſuſcipere, ut triſtitiam vinceret, non excluderet: He had beſtowed but little, if he had not taken mine affection: he ought to take my ſorrow, to overcome my heavineſſe, and not to exclude it.

Beſide the teſtimonies of the Fathers, diſperſedly alleaged before in our ſeverall arguments and anſweres, theſe alſo doe witneſſe with us for the ſuffering of Chriſt both in ſoule and body.

Ambroſe: Chriſtus ex nobis ſuſcepit, quod proprium offerret pro nobis, ut nos redimeret: Chriſt hath taken of us, which he ſhould offer as proper for us, to redeeme us, de incarnat. cap.6. Againe, Quicquid induit, obtulit: Whatſoever Chriſt tooke of us, he offered, de incarnat. c.6. Ergo, he offered bodie and ſoule, for he tooke both.

*Concil. Hiſpalenſ.2.c.*13. upon theſe words, My ſoule is heavy: Anima paſſionibus obnoxia, divinitas libera: His ſoule was ſubject to paſſions, his divinity was free, &c. If nothing were free but his divine nature, then his ſoule was ſubject to the proper and immediate paſſions thereof.

Hierom: Perſpicuum eſt, ſicut corpus flagellatum, ita animam verè doluiſſe, ne ex parte veritas, ex parte mendacium credatur in Chriſto: It is evident, that as his bodie was whipped, ſo his ſoule was verily and truly grieved, leſt ſome part of Chriſts ſuffering ſhould be true, ſome part falſe, in 53. cap. Iſaia: Ergo, Chriſts ſoule as properly and truly ſuffered as his body: the ſoule had her proper grieſe, as the body had whipping: the whipping then of the body was not the proper grieſe of the ſoule.

Fulgentius: Totus homo ſemetipſum tradidit, & totus homo ſemetipſum obtulit: Whole Chriſt gave himſelfe, and whole Chriſt offered himſelfe: ad Thraſimund. lib. 3. Ergo, hee offered his ſoule, not onely to ſuffer by way of compaſſion with his body, as it may be anſwered: but he offered it as a ſacrifice, and ſuffered all paſſions whatſoever incident to the ſoule, as the ſame author expoundeth himſelfe: Quia totum hominem Deus ille ſuſcepit, ideo totius hominis in ſe paſſionis in veritate monſtravit, & animum quidem rationalem habens quicquid fuit infirmitatis anima ſine peccato ſuſcepit, & pertulit, &c. Becauſe this God tooke whole man, therefore he ſhewed in truth in himſelfe, the paſſions of whole man; and having a reaſonable ſoule, what infirmitie ſoever of the ſoule without ſinne, he tooke and bare: *ad Thraſimund. lib.*3. If Chriſt then did take and beare all the paſſions of the ſoule without ſinne, then the proper and immediate grieſe and anguiſh thereof, and not the compaſſion onely with the bodie.

To theſe places may bee added the teſtimonies of the Fathers before alleaged: as of Ambroſe, reſponſ. ad 1. argum. part. 1. *art.6. & part.*2. Of Auguſtine, argum. 1. *art.*4. Of Damaſcene and Ambroſe againe ibid. Of *Origene argum.*4.

Harm.p.99. ſect.6. Hereunto I will adde the conſent of the reformed Churches: French confeſ. Chriſt did ſuffer both in bodie and ſoule, and was made like unto us in all things, ſinne onely excepted.

3.Par. qu.46. artic.5. Thomas granteth that Chriſt ſecundum genus, paſſus eſt omnem paſſionem humanam, in generall ſuffered all humane ſufferings: as in his ſoule, heavineſſe, feare, &c.

Now then to conclude: 1. If whatſoever Chriſt tooke of our nature, he tooke to this end, to ſuffer in it properly and abſolutely. Argum. 1. If wherein Adam properly ſinned, Chriſt properly muſt make ſatisfaction, Argum. 2. If Chriſt was heavy in ſoule, verily and indeed, and gave his ſoule for our ſinne, Argum. 3. If he exinanited and emptied himſelfe, and offered his whole humanitie, *Argum.*4. If Chriſts love ſhould be thereby obſcured and empayred, if he with-held to give his ſoule for us; *Argum.*5. Many of the Fathers alſo affirming the ſame, that Chriſt was crucified in his ſoule, that hee gave his ſoule a price of redemption for our ſoule: who can then doubt of this, but that that Chriſt verily, properly, immediatly, ſuffered in his ſoule in all the proper paſſions thereof, as he endured paines and torments in his fleſh?

The fourth Part, whether CHRIST ſuffered in his ſoule upon the Croſſe the torments of Hell.

The Obiections anſwered.

THe Rhemiſts call it blaſphemy, that Chriſt in his ſoule ſuffered the paines of hell upon the Croſſe: annot. in 2. act. ſect. 11. Bellarmine alſo denieth: Chriſtum petuliſſe dolores inferni: that Chriſt did beare the ſorrowes of hell, lib. 4. de Chriſti anima. c. 8. reſp. ad argum. 5. Fevardentius agreeth with them, Chriſto non fuiſſe certamen cum inferni doloribus: That Chriſt in his death, had no combat with the ſorrowes of hell. p. 448. 8. Art. 17.

Obiect. 1. The bodily ſufferings and paſſions of Chriſt, were ſufficiently meritorious, and efficiently ſatisfactorie for our redemption; therefore ſuch infernall ſufferings are ſuperfluous: Fevardentius to this effect. p. 448. 8. and to this purpoſe they doe amplifie Chriſts bodily paines in this manner: he had a moſt pure, tender, delicate body, and a moſt quicke, lively, and feeling ſoule, ſo that the hurts and wounds, which ſeeme but light unto us, were moſt grievous and ſharpe to him: to adde then any other ſufferings to theſe, were to diminiſh and empayre the glory of them, Fevard. p. 453.

Anſw. 1. We doe alſo magnifie and extoll the holy and painefull ſufferings of Chriſt as much as they, and doe glory in them; and with the Apoſtle doe reioyce in the croſſe of Chriſt. Galath. 6. 16. Galath. 6. 16. And we meditate upon the grievous torments, which Chriſt endured for us in his fleſh; as Auguſtine doth thus excellently deſcribe them: Intuere dulcem natum toto corpore extenſum, cerne manus innoxias pio manantes ſanguine, — candet nudatum pectus, rubet cruentum latus, tenſa arent viſcera, decora languent lumina, regia pallent ora, procera rigent brachia, crura pendent marmorea, &c. Behold the ſweete ſonne ſtrained in his whole body, ſee his holy hands ſtreaming with blood, — his white naked breaſt appeareth, his ſide is red with blood, his bowels are pent with ſtraining, his beautifull eyes doe languiſh, his princely countenance waxeth pale, his comely armes are ſtiffe, his marble legges hang downe: lib. 1. meditat. c. 6. tom. 9.

2. As we doe behold the manner of his ſuffering, and the greatneſſe of his paine, ſo we acknowledge the price, merite, and efficacie thereof: we doubt not to ſay with S. Ambroſe, Chriſtus ille Naboth qui vineam ſanguine defendit: Chriſt is that Naboth, that defended his vineyard with his blood: Adhort. ad virginem: with S. Hierome, Flammea illa romphaa cuſtos paradiſi in Chriſti ſanguine extincta eſt: That fiery blade, the keeper of Paradiſe, is extinct in Chriſts blood. Epitaph. Nepotian. with Bernard, Chriſtus perfoſſo latere, tanquam conſciſſo ſacco pretium affudit redemptionis: Chriſts ſide being opened, as out of a treaſure bagge, iſſued the price of our redemption: but this extolling of the ſufferings of his body, is no derogation to the holy conflicts of his ſoule: neither doth the argument follow: Chriſt ſuffered in body: Ergo, his ſoule ſufferings were ſuperfluous.

3. We grant, that the leaſt paine of Chriſts body, and the leaſt drop of blood had beene ſufficient, in reſpect of Gods power, and the dignity of Chriſts perſon, to have redeemed us, as it is in your owne law confeſſed: extrav. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 2. Clement. 6. Gutta ſanguinis modica propter unionem ad verbum pro redemptione totius humani generis ſuffeciſſet: The leaſt drop of Chriſts blood for the union of Chriſt to the word, had ſufficed for the redemption of whole mankind, &c. One drop of Chriſts blood how ſufficient. As then the leaſt drop of blood had bin ſnfficient, if God had ſo purpoſed, yet was not therefore the great ſtreame of blood, that came from him ſuperfluous: ſo neither doth the ſhedding of his blood with other paines in his fleſh, being in themſelves of great ſufficiencie, exclude the neceſſitie of his ſorrowes in ſoule: for it pleaſed God by the death of his Soune, not to ſhew ſo much his abſolute power whereby he could have ſaved us without his death, but his unſpeakeable love in giving his Sonne for us. Rom. 8. 32. Rom. 8. 32. and the fulneſſe of our redemption, in that Chriſt left nothing undone, that could be done for us, Iſay. 5. 4. Iſay 5. 4. So that Chriſt now having payed the full price of our redemption, both in his body and ſoule, we may boldly ſay with the Prophet, Apud eum copioſa redemptio: With him is plenty of redemption, or a plentiful redemption, Pſalme 130. 7. Pſalm. 130. 7.

Obiect. 2. In hell theſe things are to be conſidered: firſt, inward and outward darkeneſſe: ſecondly, lake of fire and brimſtone: thirdly, fire unquenchable. Fevard. 444. conſ. 2. Fourthly, the worme and pricke of conſcience: fifthly, malediction; ſixthly, deſperation: Fevard. 446. conſ. 5. Seventhly, ſecond death and deſtruction of bodie and ſoule for ever: Fevard. p. 453. lin. 3. But Chriſt felt none of theſe puniſhments: Ergo, he ſuffered not the torments of hell.

Anſw. In this queſtion of Chriſts ſuffering hell ſorrowes, that we may walke ſafely & without offence, this firſt muſt be premiſed, that theſe ſufferings & ſorrowes be no otherwiſe attributed to Chriſt, than as they may ſtand with the dignitie and worthines of his perſon, the holines of his nature, and the performance of the office and worke of our redemption: What paines of hell Chriſt was freefrom. firſt then for the ſoule of Chriſt to ſuffer in the locall place of hell, to remaine in the darkeneſſe thereof, and to bee tormented with the materiall flames there, & eternally to be damned, was not for the dignity of his perſon, to whom for his excellency and worthines, both the place, manner, and time of thoſe torments were diſpenſed with. Secondly, finall rejection, and deſperation, with the worme of conſcience for his owne ſinne, agreeth not with the holineſſe of his nature, who was the immaculate Lambe, and therefore we doe not aſcribe them to him. Thirdly, deſtruction of body and ſoule, ſecond death; could not fall upon Chriſt, for this were to have deſtroyed the worke of our redemption, if he had beene ſubiect to deſtruction.

2. For the worme, of conſcience, though Chriſt in himſelfe being moſt holy and harmeleſſe, was free from it, yet as bearing our perſon, and taking upon him our iniquities, he was not exempted, no not from our griefe and ſorrow for ſinne; ſo the Prophet ſaith, he was a man full of ſorrowes, Iſai. Iſay.53.3. Pſal.59.5. 53.3. And he was ſmitten and plagued of God. verſ.4. Hierome alſo doubteth not to apply theſe words, Pſal.59.5. My faults are not hid from thee unto Chriſt: Hoc ex perſona Chriſti dicitur, ſi ille, qui peccatum non fecit, pro nobis doluit, & peccata noſtra portavit, quanto magis nos debemus vitia noſtra confiteri: This is ſpoken in the perſon of Chriſt, if he that did no ſinne, ſorrowed for us, and bare our ſins, how much more ought we to confeſſe our ſinnes, &c. he affirmeth Chriſt to have ſorrowed for our ſinnes, as confeſſing them to be his owne.

3. Firſt, rejection with deſperation, and finall malediction could not be faſtened upon Chriſts ſoule: yet the Scripture teſtifieth; that hee was forſaken of God for the preſent in his ſenſe and feeling, ſo Galath.3.13. complaining upon the croſſe, and that he was made a curſe for us, Galat. 3.13. Chriſt then was, as the Scripture ſaith, forſaken, that is, rejected of God and accurſed. Secondly, but here divers neceſſary con-How Chriſt is ſayd to have bin forſaken of God. ſiderations muſt be had: firſt, that Chriſt in the holineſſe of his owne nature was never accurſed, or rejected, but alwayes beloved of God: but as now our perſon was appropriated to him, and as he ſtood a pledge and ſurety for us to pay our debt, ſo he was for the time reiected & accurſed. And to this purpoſe Damaſcene hath a good diſtinction, which I have before remembred: that there are [illegible] two kinds of appropriations in Chriſt [illegible] one naturall and ſubſtantiall, the other [illegible] perſonall or habituall: to the firſt belong all the properties of the humane nature, which Chriſt verily tooke with his fleſh: of the ſecond ſort are thoſe, which are attributed to Chriſt, as bearing our perſon, in which reſpect he aſſumed to himſelfe our dereliction and malediction. *Damaſcene lib.3. de fide.c.*25. Secondly, as Ambroſe hath a diſtinction of election: that ſome are elected, Non de praeſcientia ſed de praeſenti juſtitia. Not of Gods preſcience, but of their preſent juſtice, Ambr. in 8. ad Rom. So likewiſe we may ſay of Chriſts reiection, that he was never reiected in Gods preſcience, but according to the preſent ſenſe and feeling which was in his ſoule. Thirdly, thus then the contrary arguments may be anſwered: firſt, that this reiection of Chriſt, neither enforceth a deſperation, ſeeing Chriſt was ſupported by the innocency of his owne ſoule, nor yet a ſeparation from the unity of the Godhead, ſeeing this reiection was not finall: ſo that as Chriſts body was without life in the grave, yet not hypoſtatically ſeparated from the Godhead, ſo his ſoule was a while without feeling of Gods favour; yet ſtill united in perſon to the Godhead. Secondly, Chriſt thus being made a curſe for us, was not therefore made unable to bleſſe us; but the Apoſtle inferreth a contrary concluſion, that Chriſt hath redeemed Galath.3.13. us from the curſe of the Law, being made a curſe for us: becauſe he was accurſed for us, we are bleſſed through him.

4. Concerning hell flames: firſt, in that they are not eternall in Chriſt, the worthines of his perſon obtained: for his temporall enduring of hell ſorrowes was as effectuall and meritorious, as if they had beene perpetuall.

Obiect. And why I pray you may not the dignity of his perſon diſpenſe with the ſufferings of the ſoule altogether, and that his bodily torments only might be accepted? *Fevard.p.*450.*com.*13 *lin.*7.

Anſw. Firſt, the dignity of his perſon did beare him out in that, which was not meete for him to ſuffer, nor fit in reſpect of our redemption: for if he ſhould have ſuffered eternally, our redemption could not have beene accompliſhed: but for him to ſuffer in ſoule as he did in body, was neither derogatorie to his perſon, nor preiudiciall to his worke. Secondly, by the ſame reaſon by the dignity of his perſon he ſhould be exempted alſo from his bodily ſufferings, and ſo ſuffer nothing at all: ſo then the dignitie of his perſon was ſo farre forth diſpenſed with, as yet Gods iuſtice and equitie in the full redemption of man muſt be ſatisfied.

Whether all hell flames are materiall. Secondly, 1. For hell flames, though we deny not, but they ſhall be materiall, though after a ſpirituall manner to worke upon the immortall and never dying bodies of the damned; yet it muſt needs be confeſſed, that all the flames and fire of hell are not corporall and materiall: As that fire was not wherin the rich man was tormented, as Auguſtine ſaith to this effect, Talem fuiſſe flammam quales oculi, & c. qualis lingua. It was ſuch a flame, as the eyes, as the finger, &c. *lib.*21. *de civitat.c.*10. 2. That Chriſt felt in his ſoule the fiery flames of Gods wrath, which may be called the flames of hell, it need Pſal.89.46. Matth.3.12. Luke 11.50. Iſay.6.7. not ſeeme ſtrange, ſeeing the Scripture reſembleth the wrath of God unto fire, *Pſal.*89.46. Shall thy wrath burne like fire? and as Chriſt baptized with the ſpirit and fire, *Matth.*3.12. ſo it was fit he himſelfe ſhould be ſo baptized firſt, Luke 12.50. S. Ambroſe to this purpoſe applyeth that place, Iſay 7.6. where the Prophets lips were purged with a coale from the altar: Chriſtus velut carbo ſecundum carnem exuſſit peccata noſtra: Chriſt as a coale in his fleſh burned up our ſinnes. And againe, Sicut habes in Zacharia, nonne hic titio eiectus ab igni, & ille erat Ieſus indutus veſtimentis ſordidis: As you have in Zacharie, is not this a firebrand taken out of the fire? and this was Ieſus clothed with filthie rayment, *Lib.*1. *de ſpirit.c.*0. Thus Chriſt was firſt as a brand himſelfe, touched or ſcorched with the fire of his Fathers wrath, and then as the coale from the altar he alſo purgeth us.

Thus then we feare not to confeſſe with the Scriptures and fathers, that Chriſt bearing our ſinnes in himſelfe upon the croſſe, did feele himſelfe during that combate, as rejected and forſaken of God, and accurſed for us, and the flames of his fathers wrath burning within him: ſo that to the honour of Chriſts paſſion we confeſſe, that our bleſſed Redeemer refuſed no part of our puniſhment, but endured the very paines of hell ſo farre, as they tended not neither to the derogation of his perſon, depravation of his nature, deſtruction of his office.

Thus alſo is Fevardentius further anſwered, who maketh theſe foure the puniſhments of the reprobate. 1. They ſhall for ever want the viſion or ſight of God. 2. They ſhall ever be perplexed with the horror of a guilty conſcience. 3. They are deprived of all the gifts of the ſpirit. 4. In ſtead of vertues they are defiled with wickedneſſe. pag. 446. Of theſe foure, the firſt is a diſhonour to Chriſts glorious perſon, wherein he is perpetually united to God, and ſo cannot ever want the viſion of God: the ſecond ſhould bee an hinderance to the worke of our redemption: for hee could not ſave us from our ſins, if he were guilty of his owne: the two laſt cannot be committed nor had without ſinne, and therefore are a diſgrace to the holineſſe of his nature; wherefore none of theſe puniſhments, without blaſphemie, can be layd upon Chriſt.

Object. 3. Firſt, none in this life are in the true paines of hell: Ergo, neither Chriſt, Bellarm. lib. 4. cap. 8. argum. 3.

2. Hell paines are not meritorious, but Chriſts paſſions and ſufferings are meritorious: Ergo, hee ſuffered not the paines of hell; Fevard. p. 421. conf. 12. lin. 3. 4.

3. Hell paines are everlaſting, there is fire that never goeth out or is extinguiſhed, Fevard. p. 444, conf. 2. lin. 9. Ergo, Chriſt was not in thoſe flames.

4. Chriſt was mightier than hell, he looſed the ſorrowes of hell: Ergo, hee was not tormented in hell: Fevard. p. 475. lin. 3. ex Fulgent.

Rom. 8. 17.

5. The Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 8. 17. If we ſuffer with him, we ſhall be glorified with him: we by partaking with Chriſt in the like paſſions, ſhall attaine to be fellowes with him in his Kingdome, Rhemiſt. annot. in hunc locum: Muſt we ſuffer then the paines of hell, before we can attaine heaven?

6. S. Peter ſaith, Chriſt ſuffered for us, leaving us an example to follow his ſteppes: this place is urged by Fevard. pag. 361. 5. If Chriſt then muſt be imitated of us in all things, then in his hell-ſufferings.

7. Chriſtus eſt purior cunctis angelicis choris: Chriſt is purer than all the company of Angells: Fevard. pag. 454. lin. 12. if Chriſt were not free from Hell, how can they be; ſeeing hee was perſonaliter unitus, perſonally united to the Godhead, pag. 474. lin. 20. as the Angels are not: and if the elect members of Chriſt are ſure they ſhall not fall from their election, and ſo conſequently not come into Hell, much more Chriſt, &c. Fevard. p. 483. conf. 3.

8. There is no goodneſſe, charity, vertue, in Hell, therefore Chriſt full of all grace and vertue, could not be there, Fevard. p. 447. conf. 6.

Heaven and Hell in part in this life.
Epheſ. 2. 6.
2 Cor. 12. 4.

Anſw. 1. The argument followeth not, men in this life cannot feele the true paines of Hell, Ergo, not Chriſt: for who but Chriſt did beare the iniquities of men? as the Prophet ſaith, Iſay, 53. 6. Fecit in eum concurrere peccata omnium: God made all our ſinnes to runne together as in an heape upon him: who then but Chriſt could feele and ſuffer the true puniſhment of ſinne in this life? 2. The true paines, though not the full paines of hell may be felt in this life; as likewiſe the true, though not the full joyes of heaven: firſt, for the joyes of heaven, the Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ. 2. 6. He hath made us ſit together in the heavenly places in Chriſt Ieſus: What is this elſe, but even while we liue, by faith to poſſeſſe the very joyes of heaven? So Paul, not yet out of his body, was taken up into Paradiſe, 2. Cor. 12, 4. whereof Hierome thus writeth: Paulo in tertium cœlum patuit aſcenſus, quem neq; ignea illa romphaa ab aditu Paradiſi potuit excludere: A way was open for Paul to aſcend into Paradiſe, whom the fiery blade could not ſhut out, ad Marcellam. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Tu ſi vis, cœlum eris; ſi vis eſſe cœlum, purga de corde tuo terram: Thon mayeſt be heaven, if thou wilt; purge earth out of thy heart, and thou ſhalt be heaven, in Pſal. 96. Wherefore even a man while he liveth, may feele the true joyes of heaven.

If the ſoule may in this life have a taſte of the true joyes of heaven, then conſequently it may bee perplexed with the true ſorrowes of hell, though not in that manner nor meaſure: for if horrible deſperation, and a comfortleſſe conſcience of ſinne belong to the true paines of hell, what did Cain want of the feeling of hell torments, when he ſaid, His ſinne was greater than could be forgiven, Gen. 4. 13. Auguſtine ſaith, Iudicis tribunal in mente tua, ſedet ibi Deus, adeſt accuſator conſcientia, tortor timor: The Iudges tribunall ſeat is in thy ſoule, God ſitteth there as Iudge, thy conſcience is the accuſer, feare is the tormentor: in Pſal. 57. If then in the ſoule there be a Iudge; an Accuſer; a Tormentor; there is alſo a true taſte of the torments of hell.

2. 1. The leaſt paines, which Chriſt ſuffered for us, and the leaſt labour in travell, which hee endured, were meritorious; his hunger, thirſt, faſting, wearines, whippings, buffetings, were in reſpect of the worthines of his Perſon meritorious, much more the ſufferings of his ſoule. 2. Hell torments in themſelves are not meritorious, nor yet the ſhedding of mans blood; yet in Chriſt, becauſe of the holines of his Perſon, both the one and the other were full of merit: As Bernard well anſwered to the like objection: Nunquid mors innocentis filii tantum placuit deo? Did the death of his innocent Son ſo much pleaſe God? Non mors, ſed voluntas placuit ſponte morientis: non requiſivit deus ſanguinem innocentis filii, ſed acceptavit oblatum, non ſanguinem ſitiens, ſed ſalutem, quia ſalus erat in ſanguine: Not the death, but the will of him that died of his owne accord, was acceptable; God required not the blood of his innocent ſonne, but accepted it being offered; not thirſting for blood, but for mans ſalvation, which was in his blood, *epiſt.*191. As then theſe three things, the perſon of Chriſt being the ſonne of God, his obedience in being willing, his end and intention to ſave mankind, made his blood acceptable and meritorious: ſo alſo in the foreſaid reſpects, his ſoule merited by the ſuffering and paſſions thereof. 3. Neither by theſe ſufferings was the Vnion to the Godhead ſeparated, but the fruition only a while ſuſpended. 4. And it is not thankworthy, ſimply to wiſh to be ſeparated from God; but with a charitable affection to wiſh ſuch a ſeparation, was no doubt acceptable in Paul: who as Hierome ſaith, Pro charitate Chriſti nolit habere Chriſtum. For the love of Chriſt would not have Chriſt: but in Chriſt it was truely meritorious.

3. 3. 1. The paines of hell, which Chriſt ſuffered, though they were not infinite in time, yet were they of an infinite price and value, for the dignitie of the perſon that ſuffered them, his abundant charitie whereby he ſuffered them, the great utilitie for the which he ſuffered them, namely the ſalvation of man. 2. Otherwiſe infinitely in time Chriſt was not to ſuffer: as Ambroſe well ſaith upon theſe words, Rom.5.6. *Rom.*5.6. Chriſt dyed, ſecundum tempus, in time, or according to time: Tempora in mundo ſunt, vbi oritur & occidit ſol; huic ergo tempori mortuus eſt; vbi autem tempus non eſt, ibi non ſolum vivus ſed victor repertus eſt: Times are in the world, where the Sunne riſeth and ſetteth, unto this time he dyed: but where there is no time, there he was found not onely living, but conquering, in 5. ad Roman.

4. 4. 1. Chriſt was not bound of Satan, though he encountred with Satan; neither was he weaker than hell, becauſe he entred into hell, but mightier, becauſe he overcame hell: and as hee deſtroyed Heb.2.14. death by his death, *Heb.*2.14. ſo he vanquiſhed hell by his hell, which he ſuffered in ſoule. 2. Chriſt Matth.10,29. did by his death enter into the *ſtrong mans houſe to ſpoile his goods, Mat.*10.29. And as Ruffinus ſaith in the ſymbole, which goeth under his name: Chriſtus non damno aliquo patitur, ſed ut rex carcerem ingreſſus ut ſolvat catenas in carcere fuiſſe dicitur, ſed non ea conditione, qua cæteri; illi ut pœnas ſolverent, hic ut pœnas abſolveret: Chriſt ſuffered not to any loſſe, but as a King entring into priſon to looſe the chaines, is ſaid to have bin in priſon, but not with that condition, that others are; they are there to pay debt, he to releaſe them of paine and debt, &c. So Chriſt by entring into death and hell for us, hath releaſed us of our paine, and payed our debt, though not as they, which are condemned to hell.

5. 5. Bernard well noteth three things in Chriſts death: In Chriſti paſſione tria ſpecialiter convenit intueri, opus, modum, cauſam: It behoveth us ſpecially to conſider in Chriſts paſſion the worke, the manner, the cauſe, ſerm. de paſſion. In the cauſe he was innocent, in the manner patient, in the worke excellent: in his innocencie and humilitie we muſt ſuffer as he did, that is, not to ſuffer as evill doers, but Matth.5.10. for righteouſnes ſake, *Matth.*5.10. We muſt ſuffer patiently, as he did, who being reviled, reviled not 1.Pet.2.23. againe, 1.*Pet.*2.23. but in the worke of redemption, for the which he ſuffered in body and ſoule, wee cannot ſuffer as he did; unleſſe you will make men redeemers of ſoules: nay, who can endure the like bodily ſufferings as he did in every reſpect? wherefore in this behalfe we are not required by the Apoſtle to ſuffer with Chriſt, neither is it poſſible.

6. 6. 1. The ſame anſwere may ſerve for the next objection: for the Apoſtle in the ſame place ſheweth wherein Chriſt was an example to us in his innocencie, there was no guile in his mouth, 1.*Pet.*2.23 in his patience, *he reviled not againe, verſ.*23. 2. To the ſame effect the ſame Apoſtle exhorteth us to be partakers of Chriſts ſuffrings, that is, not to ſuffer as evill doers, 1.*Pet.*4.15. 3. S. Auguſtine ſheweth wel, wherein Chriſt is to be imitated: Non dixit Chriſtus, diſcite à me mundum fabricare, aut mortuos ſuſcitare, ſed diſcite, quia mitis ſum: Chriſt ſaid not, learne of me to make the world, or to raiſe the dead; but learne of me, becauſe I am meeke, *de ſanct. virginit. c.*35. To redeeme the world, is no leſſe a worke than to make the world: & therefore unleſſe Chriſt had bid us to learne of him to redeeme the world, how doth it belong to us to imitate his meritorious and ſatisfactory ſufferings both in body and ſoule? 4. Yet we have ſomewhat alſo even in Chriſts ſoule-ſufferings to imitate: that as hee being plunged as it were in the depth of hell, and in the floods of ſorrowes, yet was not ſwallowed up of the gulfe of deſpaire, but ſtill truſted unto God, ſaying, My God, my God: ſo we likewiſe ſhould bee confident in our trouble of mind. And to this point alſo Auguſtine ſaith well: Chriſtus exemplum ſanis ad permanendum, infirmis ad convaleſcendum, morituris ad non timendum, mortuis ad reſurgendum: Chriſt is an example to the whole to continue, to the weake to grow in ſtrength, to the dying not to feare, to the dead to riſe againe, *de Trinitat.*7.2.

How farre and wherein Chriſt is to be imitated
2.Pet.4.13.

7. 7. 1. It followeth not, Chriſt is united into one perſon with God, therefore he did not ſuffer the paines of hell: for by the ſame reaſon hee ſhould not have ſuffered in body: the union of his perſon could have preſerved him from the one ſuffering and the other, and no man compelled him to underIohn,10,17.18. take this difficult worke, but his owne unſpeakeable love unto mankind: ſo he ſaith, *Ioh.*10.17. Therefore doth my father love me becauſe I lay downe my life. verſ.18. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it downe of my ſelfe: If the ſonne of God had beene conſtrained to ſuffer, and for himſelfe, then both men and Angels might feare; but as Bernard (before alleaged) ſaith: voluntas ſponte morientis, placuit deo: The willingnes of him that died, pleaſed God: who offered himſelfe to be the redeemer of the world; *Pſal.*40.7. Then ſayd I, Loe I come.

2. We need not marvell, that the ſonne of God doth beare for us the brunt of hell, who was able to ſubdue it; we might rather have muſed and marvelled, if either men or Angels had entred into the combat, who muſt needs have yeelded unto it. Auguſtine heere well ſaith: Mirum eſſe non debet à Deo factum miraculum, mirum eſſet ſi homo feciſſet, magis gaudere quam mirari debemus, quia dominus noſter homo factus eſt, quam quod divina inter homines fecit; plus eſt enim ad ſalutem noſtram, quod factus eſt propter homines, quam quod fecit inter homines: It need not ſeeme ſtrange to us, that God did a miracle, it were ſtrang if man had done it, we ſhould rather rejoyce & not marvell, becauſe our Lord was made man, than that amongſt men he did divine things; it is more to our ſalvation, that he was made for men, than that he did make ſuch things among men. Tract. in Evangel. Ioan. 17. We need not then aske the queſtion, how Chriſt ſuffered the paines of hell, and did other great workes for us, but rather rejoyce, that God became man for our ſakes to doe ſuch things for us.

3. The Saints of God need not feare hell, becauſe Chriſt felt it, but they by his hell-ſorrows are delivered from hell: let them rather looke to this danger, that would make us beleeve, that the hell-ſorrowes of the ſoule haue not yet by ſuffering them, bin ſatisfied for: for ſeeing they muſt be endured, and you ſay Chriſt hath not endured them for us, this will rather ſtrike into the minde a feare of hell, that theſe ſorrowes remaine yet to bee ſuffered, than the meditation of Chriſts hell in his ſoule, whereby our ſoules are delivered. Wherefore the Saints need not feare hell flames, becauſe they were kindled in Chriſts ſoule, but to be bold againſt them, becauſe Chriſt in his ſoule hath quenched them: ſo that now, as the Apoſtle ſaith, there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus, Rom. 8.1. And as Saint Ambroſe well ſaith: Ille flevit, ne tu homo diu fleres; lacryma illa nos lavant, fletus illi nos abluunt, dubitatio illa nos firmat, ne ſi tu ceperis dubitare, deſperes: He wept, that thou O man ſhouldeſt not long weep: thoſe teares waſh us, thoſe weepings cleanſe us, his doubting doth ſtrenghthen us, leſt thou, when thou beginneſt to doub, ſhouldeſt deſpaire, *lib.2. de fid. cap.*4. By Chriſts ſufferings then in body and ſoule we are delivered from the like.

4. And in that Angels are freed from hell flames, it is the favour of the Creator, and in ſome ſort alſo the benefit of the Redeemer of the world: ſome Angels fell by their ſinne, for whom the lake of fire is prepared, the reſt doe ſtand by grace: for as we utterly reject the erronious conceit of Origen upon theſe words, *Col.*1.20. To ſet at peace, through the blood of his croſſe, the things that are in earth, and the things in heaven: who thinketh that Chriſt, pro cœleſtibus hoſtia oblatus eſt, was offered a ſacrifice for the celeſtiall ſpirits in heaven, hom. 1. in Levit. neither doth Auguſtine fully touch the point, applying the redemption of man to the Angels in theſe two reſpects: firſt, he ſaith, Ruina illius Angelica detrimenta reparantur, Becauſe the ruins and decaies of the Angels are made up, by the redemption of men. And againe a little before, Cum eis redit in gratiam: The Angels are become our friends by the redemption, *Enchirid. c.*61. So we doubt not to ſay, though the Angels are not redeemed as we are by Chriſts death, for he tooke not the nature of Angels, *Heb.*2.17. yet the benefit thereof for the ſurety and preſervation of their ſtate extendeth unto them. As Ambroſe well ſaith, Aliter eget miſericordia angelus, aliter homo; angelica natura eget miſericordia, ne poſſet errare, & averſa à ſe Dei gratia, labatur in vitium; homo propter contractorum ſeriem peccatorum miſericordiam Dei quærit: The Angell needeth mercie one way, man another; the Angelicall nature needeth mercy, leſt it may erre, and if Gods grace turne from them, fall into ſinne; man ſeeketh for mercie for ſinnes already contracted, *ſerm.*8. in Pſalme 119. Likewiſe Bernard: Qui hominibus ſubvenit in tali neceſſitate, ſervavit angelos à tali neceſſitate, &c. Hee that helped man in ſuch neceſſitie, ſaved the Angels from the like neceſſitie; hee that in his love to men made them ſuch, that they ſhould not continue ſuch, by the like love hath given to the Angels not to bee ſuch. lib. de diligend. deo. In that the elect Angels then are ſure to bee preſerved from hell, they are therein beholding to the bountifull Redeemer, who as hee hath delivered us from thence; ſo hee preſerveth and keepeth them from comming thither.

Coloſ.1.20.

How the Angels receive benefit by the Redeemer of the world.

Heb.2.17.

8. 1. In the locall place of the damned, which is properly called hell, there is neither holineſſe, vertue, goodneſſe; but thither we ſend not the ſoule of Chriſt: who notwithſtanding he felt the ſorrowes of hell in his ſoule, even the very ſenſe of his fathers wrath againſt ſinne, yet his faith failed not, neither did he loſe his confidence, but in that inſtant, when he complained he was forſaken, he with full truſt and aſſurance ſayd, My God, my God. 2. Then as the joyes of heaven may be truly, though not fully felt in this life, ſo may the paines of hell: and thus Chriſt in his ſoule while he lived felt them, without any decay or empayring of his holy vertues. Wherefore to urge us with the inconveniences, that accompanie the locall place of hell, and the very ſtate and condition of the damned, is too injurious, ſeeing none doth, or hath ſo affirmed.

And further to explaine our meaning, as touching the joyes of heaven and torments of hell in this life: firſt, a feare of hell which is everlaſting deſtruction, or any griefe proceeding from that feare, wee are farre off from imagining to have beene in Chriſt: yet this preſent hell which he had in his ſoule, in labouring under the heavy burden of our ſins and Gods wrath due to the ſame, we affirme that he felt it and feared it, as the Apoſtle ſaith, *he was heard in that he feared, Heb.*5.7 Secondly, we deny alſo this disjunction, that in this life all that is perceived in heaven, is either the hope thereof, or the joy ariſing upon that hope: for then it would follow, that there is no joy of heaven preſently had but in hope. An equality between the ioyes here felt, & eternall bliſſe to be afterward poſſeſſed, no man is ſo void of ſenſe to affirme: and yet according to the Scripture we ſay, that we have more joy than in hope only: our Saviour ſaith, *Ioh.*14.23. If any man love me, &c. my father will love him, and we will come un- to him, and dwell with him: where there is a dwelling, there is a preſent poſſeſſion; as Auguſtine then ſaith, Cœlum (inquit Deus) mihi ſedes eſt, anima juſti ſedes ſapientiæ — qui (i. juſti) facti ſunt cœlum, Heaven (ſaith the Lord) is my ſeate, the ſoule of the righteous is the ſeate of wiſdome — the juſt then Prov.15.15. are heaven, in Pſalm. 121. The wiſe man ſaith, A good conſcience is a continuall feaſt, Prov. 15.15. where a feaſt is, there is good cheere preſent, and not hope or expectation only. In ipſo homine lætitia quædam conſcientiæ paradiſus eſt: In man the joy of the conſcience is a paradiſe; Auguſt. lib. 12. de Geneſ. ad liter. c. 34. Thirdly, wherefore as the joy of heaven may in ſome meaſure, not in hope onely, but in preſent feeling be perceived in this life: ſo alſo there may be a lively ſenſe of hell, as I have ſhewed before, reſp. ad artic. 1. of this third generall argument or objection. And ſo Origen ſaith, anſwering to a queſtion, how God doth now ſhew vengeance upon devils: Super omnia tormentorum genera eſt, cum videant aliquem verbo Dei operam dare, in hoc eorum flamma eſt, in iſto uruntur incendio: It is beyond all torments when they ſee any man occupied in Gods word, this is their flame, and in this fire they are burned, Hom. 27. in Levitic.

Object. Chriſt never did forget, that he was the Emmanuel, that God ſaid unto him, thou art my beloved Sonne, that all that which his Father had, was his; he could not then be out of Gods favour, Fevard. p. 486. conf. 7. and ſo conſequently not in hell, unleſſe you will ſay the joyes of heaven are in hell: and ſo Chriſt ſhould be both in heaven and hell at once.

Anſw. 1. In the locall place of heaven and hell it is not poſſible for any neither to bee at once, nor yet at ſundry times ſucceſſively: for there is no paſſing from heaven to hell, or from hell to heaven: Luk.16.26. Luk. 16.26. They which wold go from hence to you cannot, &c. 2. Concerning the ſpirituall ſenſe of heaven and hell, though in one and the ſame inſtant they are not in the ſoule, yet many times in a very Pſalm.31.22. ſhort ſpace the one doth ſucceed the other: as Pſal. 31.32. the Prophet ſaith in his griefe of heart, I am caſt out of thy ſight; and yet reviveth againe immediatly, and ſaith, Yet thou heardeſt the voyce of my prayer when I cryed. 3. Chriſt was never deſtitute of faith and hope of this joy propoſed; but the ſenſe and feeling thereof was for a while ſuſpended in his ſoule, while he wreſtled with hell: for like as S. Paul by Phillip. 3.20. faith alwayes had his converſation in heaven: Phil. 3.20. yet ſometime he minded the neceſſary things of this life; as Hierome ſaith, Putaſne Apoſtolum Paulum eo tempore, quo ſcribebat, penulam affer tecum, &c. de cœleſtibus cogitaſſe myſteriis, & non de his, quæ uſui communis vitæ neceſſaria ſunt; Doe you thinke the Apoſtle Paul at that time, when he wrote, Bring my cloak with thee, &c. did thinke of heavenly myſteries, and not of thoſe things, which were neceſſary for the uſe of the common life, lib. 3. adverſ. Pelagian. though by faith Pauls ſoule was in heaven, yet in his preſent ſenſe hee intended worldly neceſſaries: ſo the ſoule of Chriſt being in the preſent ſenſe and feeling of hell ſorrowes, though his faith and hope languiſhed not, might have ſome intermiſſion of the joy conceived; like as the ſoule liveth, when the body is aſleepe, yet worketh not, as when the body is awaked, to attend upon the operation of the ſoule: So Auguſtine fitly compareth Chriſts ſuffering upon the croſſe to ſleep, Dormienti Chriſto in cruce facta eſt conjux Eccleſia de latere: While Chriſt ſlept on the croſſe the Church his Spouſe was made out of his ſide, Pſal. 56. So though the preſent hope and feeling of this joy ſlept as it were in Chriſt, yet was it not extinct: it was intermitted, not ſubverted; ſuſpended, not excluded, ceaſing for a while in feeling, but not dying in being. And thus farre for the anſwer of theſe obiections.

The queſtion confirmed, that CHRIST in Soule ſuffered the paines of hell.

Before I produce our arguments, I will firſt declare our opinion: Firſt, this holy truth of Chriſts ſufferings, is either ignorantly miſtaken, or elſe wittingly charged with ſome things that no man holdeth. 1. That we ſhould affirme, that Chriſt ſuffered in his ſoule the whole paines of the damned in hell: and all the puniſhments due to the reprobate, Fevard. p. 443. This we ſimply denie, and it is a great wrong to lay it to our charge; I have anſwered this cavill before, in the beginning, Err. 7. 2. It is ſuppoſed, as though we ſhould ſend Chriſts ſoule to the locall place of torment, and upon this ſuppoſition we are urged with the helliſh darkeneſſe, and fiery flames, and endleſſe torments, which are adjuncts to the locall place of the damned, not conſequents of the hell, which Chriſt ſuffered in ſoule, Fevard. p. 444. conf. 2. 3. It is conceived, as though wee ſhould enwrap Chriſts ſoule within thoſe paines of the damned, which are not endured without ſinne, as deſperation, indignation, finall rejection, Fevard. pag. 446. conf. 5. Farre be it from us to have any ſuch meaning.

Secondly, for the further declaration of our minde, wee affirme hell paines in Chriſts ſoule, with theſe three conditions: that there be neither indignity offered to his heavenly perſon; injury to his holy nature; nor impoſſibility to his glorious worke: all ſuch paines of hell then, as Chriſt might have ſuffered, his perſon not diſhonored, his nature with ſinne not defiled, his worke of our redemption not hindered; we doe conſtantly beleeve accordingly by our bleſſed Saviour to have been ſuſtained.

Thirdly, becauſe it is expected that leaving generall and ambiguous termes, we ſhould expreſſe in particular, what ſorrowes of hell our meaning is to aſcribe unto Chriſts ſufferings; I will alſo, for full ſatisfaction in that behalfe, deſcend to ſome ſpeciall points.

In hell then wee conſider: 1. the neceſſary adjuncts: 2. the effects: 3. the puniſhment it ſelfe. The inſeparable adjuncts and neceſſary members of hell are theſe. 1. The place, which is infernall.

2. The time, perpetuall. 3. Darkeneſſe unſpeakeable. 4. The miniſters and torments, the ſpirits and divels irreconciliable. 2. The effects are chiefly theſe two: Firſt, the deprivation of all vertue, grace, godlineſſe: Secondly, the reall poſſeſſion of all vice, impiety, blaſphemy. All theſe we doe remove as farre off from the holy Soule of Chriſt, as Heaven is from Hell; the Eaſt from the Weſt; darkeneſſe from light. 3. The puniſhment of Hell it ſelfe conſiſteth in theſe foure: Firſt, there is an horrible ſight and guilty conſcience of ſinne: as Origene ſaith, Quandam veluti ſcelerum hiſtoriam vident ante oculos ſuos expoſitam: They ſee as a certaine ſtory of their ſinnes ſet before their eyes: this is the worme that dieth not, Mark. 9.44. Secondly, they feele the moſt juſt wrath of God lying upon them for their ſinne; hereof is their weeping, Matth. 8.12. Thirdly, there is cruell indignation in them, horrible outcries, blaſphemy, fretting for the horrible torments, which they ſuffer: hence proceedeth the gnaſhing of their teeth. Matth. 8.12. Fourthly, they lye tormented in endleſſe paine, without all hope or comfort: and this is the fire, that never goeth out, Mark. 9.44. So then theſe foure; a fearefull impreſſion of ſins, comfortleſſe dereliction, horrible indignation, endleſſe deſperation; that is, the worme not dying, weeping, gnaſhing of teeth, the fire never going out; doe make up the juſt meaſure of the torments of Hell: The two laſt of theſe, impatient indignation, violent deſperation, Chriſt muſt needs be freed from, who both patiently endured his Fathers correction, and confidently expected his deliverance, and reſtitution: the other two were in Chriſt, though not as in the reprobate; impreſſion of ſinnes, not his owne, but ours laid upon him, and griefe for the ſame; and dereliction or rejection for the time of his feeling. Firſt, the adjuncts of Hell Chriſt is freed from for the dignity of his Perſon: it was not fit, that the Sonne of God, the Heire of Heaven, ſhould bee ſhut up in Hell, or that hee ſhould ever be tormented, who is never from Gods preſence ſequeſtred, or that the light of the world ſhould be cloſed up in darkeneſſe: or he that bindeth the ſpirits, to be bound of them. Secondly, the effects or rather defects of Hell, the neceſſity of the worke of Chriſt doth exempt him from: for if he had beene either void of grace, or poſſeſſed with vice, he could not have beene the Redeemer of the world: for the want of vertue, he could not have redeemed others; for the preſence of ſin, he ſhould have beene redeemed himſelfe. Thirdly, from fretting indignation, and fearefull deſperation, the piety and ſanctity of his nature doth preſerve him: who being without ſinne, could neither by indignation diſpleaſe his Father, nor by deſperation deſtroy himſelfe.

A deſcription of the torments of Hell.

Mark. 9. 44.
Matth. 8. 12.

Matth. 8. 12.
Mark. 9. 44.

What ſorrowes and paines of Hell, chriſt was freed from.

Fourthly, thus then we doubt not to deliver our opinion, that our bleſſed Saviour, as in himſelfe he bare all the ſinnes of the Elect; ſo he alſo ſuffered the whole puniſhment of body and ſoule in generall due unto us for the ſame, which we ſhould have endured if hee had not ſatisfied for it: and ſo conſequently we affirme, that he felt the anguiſh of ſoule, and horror of Gods wrath, and ſo in ſoule entred into the torments of Hell for us, ſuſtained them and vanquiſhed them.

Thus that reverend Paſtor and Miniſter of Chriſt, in honour of Chriſts paſſion hath written, Cum iram Dei ſibi propoſitam videret, quatenus ad ejus tribunal totius mundi peccatis oneratus ſe ſiſtebat, neceſſe illi fuit, profundam mortis abyſſum exhorreſcere: When he ſaw the wrath of God ſet before him, preſenting himſelfe before Gods tribunall, loaden with the ſinnes of the whole world; it was neceſſary for him to feare the deepe bottomleſſe pit of death: Calvin. in Matth. 26. v. 39. And againe: Cum ſpecies Chriſto objecta eſt, quaſi Deo adverſo jam eſſet exitio devotus, horrore correptus eſt, quo centies cuncti mortales fuiſſent abſorpti, ipſe autem mirifica ſpiritus virtute victor evaſit: Such an object being offered to Chriſts view, as though God being ſet againſt him, hee were appointed to deſtruction hee was with horror affrighted, which was able an hundred times to have ſwallowed up all mortall creatures; but he by the wonderfull power of his ſpirit eſcaped with victory, Calvin. in Matth. 27. v. 46.

To the like effect, that excellent learned man, hath maintained the truth in the name of the whole Church of England, in his anſwere to the Rhemiſts: What diſhonour was it to our Saviour Chriſt, to ſuffer that, which was neceſſary for our redemption, namely, that torment of Hell, which we had deſerved, and which the Iuſtice of God required, that he ſhould endure for our redemption: or rather what is more to the honour of Chriſt, than that he vouchſafed to deſcend into Hell for us, and to abide that bitter paine, which we had deſerved to ſuffer eternally: and what may rather be called Hell, than the anguiſh of ſoule, which he ſuffered, when hee being yet God, complained that hee was forſaken of God? Fulk. in 2. Act. ſect. 11. This is delivered by this worthy Diuine, as the opinion of the Catholike Church of God, and the true teachers thereof: as may appeare in the title to the booke. Therefore accordingly wee confidently affirme, that Chriſt in ſoule deſcended into Hell for us, and endured the bitter paines and torments thereof, which we had deſerved and ſhould otherwiſe have payed, if he in his owne Perſon had not ſatisfied for them.

Fifthly, we will remove certaine doubts which may here ariſe, becauſe it is objected, that the ſoule ſufferings of Chriſt ſhould have diſſolved the union of his Perſon, Fevar. p. 474. lin. 21.

1. As the ſenſe of damnation and ſeparation in David, when hee complained he was forſaken of God, Pſal. 22.1. And caſt out of his ſight, Pſalm. 31.22. did not extinguiſh grace or faith in David; much leſſe did they in Chriſt. 2. And we doe diſtinguiſh in Chriſt, Inter ſenſum naturæ & fidei notitiam, Betweene the preſent ſenſe of his nature, and the knowledge of faith: as that learned interpreter ſaith, Calvin. in. 27. Matth. v. 46. That Chriſts faith and hope failed not, though in his naturall ſenſe and feeling hee was perplexed, 3. His ſoule tormented with ſorrow, was no more ſeparated from the Godhead, than his body yeelding to death.

Pſal. 1. 322.

2. Deeper in deſpaire and ſinfull aſſaults we confeſſe others to have beene than Chriſt: but ſuch a ſpectacle of all fearefull and unſpeakable torments in body and ſoule endured without ſinne never was, as Chriſt: we muſt not ſo extenuate Chriſts ſufferings, which were a ſatisfaction for all mens ſinnes, as to make other mens temptations equall to them. This were a great injurie to his paſſion, and notable unthankfulnes in us to make ſo light account of them.

Chriſt ſuffered more in ſoule, than by way of compaſſion only.

3. Firſt, Chriſt ſuffered that hell, which we ſhould, which was more then the paines of hell metaphorically taken. 2. And hell paines were due unto us otherwiſe, than by contemplation of them; we ſhould not have knowne or pitied them in others, but felt them in our ſelves: and Chriſt by way of pitty and piety prayed for them that crucified him; Father forgive them, they know not what they doe, Luke* 23.34. But when he complaineth, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me, here is more than contemplation, or commiſeration of others; for he ſpeaketh of himſelfe, & from his own feeling. Thirdly, if. 1. Chriſt ſuſtained Gods wrath, as you ſay, then he felt the aſſaults of ſorrow in his ſoule, there was more than an offer or attempt only: 2. When Sathan tempted Chriſt in the deſert, he did not conquer him by repelling him at the firſt, but by fighting with him, and entring into the liſts as it were with him, he ſubdued him. 3. And the Apoſtle ſaith, He ſuffered when he was tempted, Heb.*2.18. He was not only aſſaulted with temptation in his ſoule, but encountred with; not tempted onely but ſuffered: yet we grant; that ſome temptations Chriſt wreſtled with, and repelled at the firſt, not faſtening at all upon him, ſuch as were accompanied with ſinne: Cum deſperatione luctatus eſt: As he wreſtled with deſperation, but was not overcome: Calvin in Matth.27.v.46. But ſuch ſorrowes of ſoule which he ſuſtained without ſinne, he was not onely aſſaulted, but for the time poſſeſſed with, as the Prophet ſaith: he was, Vir dolorum, a man of ſorrowes, and had experience of our infirmities: and as the Septuagint do well tranſlate it ἄνθρωπος ἐν πληγῇ ὤν, ϗ εἰδὼς φέρειν A man ſet in the plague, and knowing how to beare, &c. Chriſt then had in his ſoule actuall experience of our ſorrowes. 5. Neither do we ſay that Chriſt ſuffered the ſame paines, which the damned doe, for they ſuffer them not without ſinne and deſperation: nor in the ſame manner, for they ſuffer them eternally: but with theſe two exceptions of iniquitie and eternitie, we ſay that Chriſt endured more in his ſoule, than ever any ſoule in the world did or could doe.

Luke 23.34.

Heb.2.18.

Sixthly, though we miſlike not Calvins ſenſe, where he ſaith, Chriſtus diros in anima cruciatus damnati & perditi hominis pertulit: Chriſt ſuffered in his ſoule the horrible torments of a damned and forlorne man: Inſtitut.lib.1.c.16.ſect.10. yet we will forbeare to uſe this phraſe, becauſe the Scripture ſo ſpeaketh not, and leaſt the weake might take offence at it: yet the Scripture uſeth words equivalent unto them, for what elſe, is derelictus, deſertus forſaken, then damnatus, perditus, for the time to be forlorne and as damned? but this we confidently deliver as agreeable to the Scriptures, that ſinne and perpetuitie ſet apart, Chriſt more ſharpely and vehemently felt Gods wrath than any man ever did or ſhall, yea, wee except not the very reprobate and damned. Firſt, becauſe the Scripture ſaith, that God layd upon him the ſinnes of us all, Iſay 53.6. than all the ſinnes of the world concurring together muſt needs bring with them a greater horrour, than the ſinnes of one man. Secondly, Chriſt was more able to beare this burthen, than all men in the world, though their ſtrength were joyned together: ſo that he alone was able to tread the winepreſſe of Gods wrath, Iſay 63.3. Thirdly, Chriſts hell-ſorrowes were meritorious, and fully ſatisfactory for our everlaſting puniſhment, and therefore in greatnes were to exceede all other, as being anſwerable to Gods juſtice, but no mans ſufferings beſide have merit or ſatisfaction.

Iſay.53.6.

Seventhly, that it may appeare, how Chriſt ſuſtained the wrath of God, felt the ſorrowes of hell, and was as forſaken of God, yet without ſinne, there are foure conſiderations neceſſary to be remembred, as the Fathers have obſerved them.

1. Chriſt is now ſet before us as a meere man, his divine power repreſſing and withdrawing it ſelfe: as Ambroſe ſaith, when Chriſt had cryed out, that he was forſaken, Evidens manifeſtatio conteſtantis Dei ſeceſſionem divinitatis & corporis: An evident manifeſtation of God conteſting the departure of the divinitie and his bodie: in Luke 22. he meaneth not a ſeparation of the union of the Godhead, but an intermiſſion onely of the operation.

Certaine conditions to bee conſidered in Chriſts ſoule-ſufferings.

2. Chriſt muſt be conſidered, as now having taken our perſon upon him, who in himſelfe was holy, harmeleſſe, innocent, yet now for us preſented unto God as a pledge for our ſinne: as Ambroſe ſaith, Pro me & in me doluit, qui pro ſe nihil habuit, quod doleret; For me and in me he ſorrowed, that had nothing to ſorrow for in himſelfe, lib.2.de fid.c.3.

3. Wee muſt make a difference betweene the aſſurance of faith in Chriſt, and the ſenſe of his humane nature: who at the ſame time when he complained in his humane ſenſe, yet was firme and ſtable in faith: as may appeare in that he ſaid, My God, my God; which ſheweth his confidence: So Ambroſe againe ſaith, Senſu hominis dixi animam meam eſſe turbatam; ſenſu hominis eſurivi; ſenſu hominis rogavi: In the humane ſenſe and feeling I ſayd, My ſoule is troubled, in humane ſenſe I was hungry, I prayed &c. de incarnat.c.7.

4. We muſt not meaſure Chriſts actions according to our owne affections: to imagine, that becauſe we in temptations are diſtempered, that Chriſt therfore in this agony could not be ſetled: as Auguſtine fitly uſeth this reſemblance: Quemadmodum ſolet accidere, ut quando tranſeuntes nubes per obſcura noctis intuemur, earum caligine ſic acies noſtra turbetur, ut in contrarium nobis ſydera currere videantur, &c. Like as it falleth out, when wee ſee the cloudes gliding in the ayre in a darke night, they doe obſcure our ſight, that we thinke the ſtarres goe a contrary way, de diverſ. ſerm. 15. So the darkenes of our mindes, and corruption of our nature is the cauſe, that we judge amiſſe of Chriſts holy actions, meaſuring them by our ſelves. Theſe foreſaid reſpects then being obſerved, and Chriſt in his manner conſidered, there can follow no inconveniencie, in attributing to Chriſts ſoule the ſorrowes of hell, But I have ſtayed too long in the explanation of our opinion: the arguments now follow.

Pſalm. 18. 5. Pſal 88. 3. Pſal. 86. 13.

Argum. 1. Pſal. 18. 5. The ſorrowes of hel, circumdederunt me, did compaſſe me round about, Pſal. 88. 3. My ſoule is filled with evils, and my life draweth neere to hell. Pſal. 86. 13. Thou haſt delivered my ſoule from the nethermoſt hell. In theſe places the Prophet ſpeaketh in the perſon of Chriſt: and the Papiſts doe admit, that the Hebrew ſheol, is here taken for hel properly and not for the grave: therefore againſt them and in their ſenſe theſe places doe ſtrongly conclude for the hel-ſorrowes or ſufferings of Chriſt.

Pſal. 86. 13. Pſal. 124. 7.

1. For the further ſtrengthening of this argument, firſt we do not ſay, that Chriſts ſoule was oppreſſed or vanquiſhed of hell, but yet it was more than attempted or aſſaulted onely, for hee ſaith, thou haſt delivered my ſoule from hell, Pſal. 86. 13. therefore before he was in the ſorrowes of hell, out of the which he was delivered, as the Prophet ſaith, Pſal. 124. 7. Our ſoule is eſcaped as a bird out of the ſnare of the fowler, the ſnare is broken and we are delivered. If the bird had not beene in the ſnare, what neede the ſnare to be broken to deliver the bird?

Pſal. 18. 43. 50.

2. Firſt, in theſe Pſalmes there are evident propheſies of Chriſt: as Pſal. 18. 43. Thou haſt made me head of the heathen, a people whom I have not knowne ſhall ſerve me: verſ. 50. Great deliverances he giveth to the King, and ſheweth mercy to David and his ſeed for ever: this everlaſting ſeed of David is to be referred to Chriſt. Secondly, but becauſe it may be objected, that although ſome places are underſtood of Chriſt, yet it followeth not that theſe ſhould: I anſwere, that the very place alleaged, Pſal. 88. 3. is by the Fathers applied to Chriſt: as that in the next verſe, Liber inter mortuos, free among the dead, Auguſtine applieth to Chriſt: epiſt. 99. And S. Ambr. Liber inter mortuos, qui mortis vincula neſcivit, non captus ab inferis, ſed qui operatus ſit in inferno: Free among the dead, which knew not the bands of death, he was not captived of hell, but wrought in hell, lib. 3. de fid. c. 3. He knew not the bands of death, to be held of them, or ſo to be bound as his vertue be hindred. I alleage this teſtimony onely to ſhew, that the Fathers underſtood this text of Chriſt, not medling here with their opinion of Chriſts locall deſcent to deliver the Patriarkes.

Pſal. 88. 3.

3. Firſt, neither can this place be underſtood of the locall place of hell: for he ſaith, Pſal. 88. 3. My ſoule is filled with evils: verſ. 15. Thy terrors have I ſuffered from my youth: but the Fathers, that hold a locall deſcent of Chriſts ſoule into hell, doe cleere him of all ſuffering there: as Auguſtine writeth thus, Eos dolores ipſum ſolviſſe credimus, quibus ipſe teneri non poterat, ſed quibus alii tenebantur: Wee beleeve he looſed thoſe ſorrowes, with the which he could not be held, but wherewith others were held, epiſt. 99. Wherefore if neither the locall place of hell be here underſtood, nor yet the materiall grave, which is no place for the ſoule; it remaineth, that this pit, grave, darknes, depth, hell (for all theſe names it hath) be referred to the ſorrowes of Chriſts ſoule: as Ambroſe againe expoundeth the third verſe: Anima mea repleta malis, anima mea utique, non divinitas: My ſoule is filled with evils, my ſoule, not my divinity, lib. 3. de fid. c. 3.

Act. 2. 24.

Argum. 2. Another place, which I urge againſt the Papiſts, is Act. 2. 24. where we reade thus, as their vulgar Latine text tranſlateth: Solutis doloribus inferni: The ſorrowes of hell being looſed, for it was impoſſible he ſhould be holden of it: the Greeke hath the ſorrowes of death, but I preſſe them with their owne and onely authentike tranſlation, the ſorrowes of hell being looſed: but Chriſt felt not the ſorrowes of hell after death; Ergo, he felt them in his ſoule, while he lived.

Anſw. Firſt, Chriſt looſed the ſorrowes of hell, not becauſe he was held or caught of them, but leſt he might be caught: like as the ſnare of the hunter may be ſaid to be broke, leſt it might catch or entangle, not becauſe it hath already taken.

2.

2. Chriſt is ſaid to have looſed the ſorrowes or bands of hell, wherewith others were held, and not himſelfe, Bellarm. lib. 4. de Chriſti anima c. 8. reſp. ad argum. 5.

Matth. 7. 8. Pſal. 124. 7.

Contra. 1. The firſt expoſition is contrary to the text that followeth, verſ. 27. Thou wilt not leave my ſoule in hell: If Chriſts ſoule be not left or forſaken in hell, yet it followeth it was in hell. 2. The word, κρατεῖσθαι, to be holden: betokeneth properly, a faſt or ſure holding, as Matth. 7. 8. Ye hold faſt the tradition of the elders: ſo that the meaning is not, it was impoſſible he ſhould be caught, but not held, bound or detained. 3. The phraſe of the Scripture is otherwiſe, Pſal. 124. 7. Our ſoule is eſcaped as a bird out of the ſnare of the fowler, the ſnare is broken and we are delivered; the eſcaping is out of the ſnare, as the bird is firſt taken, and then delivered. 4. Origene alſo ſo expoundeth upon theſe words, Cantic. 2. 10. Ariſe my love, Surrexi à mortuis fractis mortis januis & inferni vinculis diſſolutis: I roſe from the dead the gates of death being broken, and the bands of hell looſed, &c. The bands of hell were looſed, as the gates or barres of death broken: but the gates of death were broken, not before Chriſt entred into death, but after he had yeelded to death: ſo then were the bands of hell looſed after they had faſtened upon Chriſt.

2. 1. The ſecond expoſition is contrary to the very words: it was impoſſible for him (hee ſaith not for other) but for himſelfe to bee held of them. 2. In the next verſe, 25. the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe ſaying, David ſaith concerning him, &c. he ſpeaketh of Chriſts perſon, and not of any other.

3. The Apoſtle giveth this as a reaſon, why God raiſed up Chriſt, looſing the ſorrowes or bands of death: for him then the bands were broken, who was raiſed up againe: but Chriſt was onely raiſed up againe.

Argum. 3. That the whole puniſhment of body and ſoule which was due unto us, Chriſt our redeemer was in generall to ſuffer and ſatisfie for, in his owne perſon; But the torments and terrors of hell, and the vehement ſenſe of Gods wrath, are that puniſhment which did belong to the ſoule: Ergo, Chriſt did ſuffer the terrors of hell.

Anſw. If Chriſt ſuffered the whole puniſhment of hell due unto us: then darkeneſſe, Foward. p. 444. conſ. 2. lin. 10. damnation, malediction, deſperation. 446. conf. 5. ſecond death and deſtruction for ever. p. 453. lin. 3.

How Chriſt bare our whole puniſhment both of ſoule and body.

Heb.2.17.

Heb.4.15.

Contra. 1. The whole puniſhment implieth the whole kinde or ſubſtance of the puniſhment, not al the circumſtances, and the very ſame manner; the whole puniſhment then is the whole kinde of puniſhment, that is in body and ſoule which Chriſt ought to have ſuffered, though not in the ſame manner and circumſtance: neither for the place of hell, locally; nor for the time, eternally; nor for the manner, ſinfully. The firſt of theſe excludeth utter darkeneſſe, which is an unſeparable adjunct of the place of hell; the ſecond freeth Chriſt from eternall damnation; the third doth cleere him from deſperation, which cannot be committed without ſinne. 2. And in making theſe exceptions do we otherwiſe ſpeake, than the Scripture doth, which ſaith, Heb. 2. 17. It became him in all things to be made like his brethren; will you here take the Apoſtle ſhort, and inferre, he was therefore like us in ſinne? therefore give us leave to expound our meaning, as the Apoſtle doth, Heb. 4. 15. He was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne. So then like as, when we ſay, Chriſt tooke our whole nature, which is a true Catholike ſaying, and uſed of the Fathers: Totum hominem Deus ille ſuſcepit: God tooke whole man, Fulgent. ad Thraſimund. lib. 3. we meane not, that he tooke our ſinfull nature: ſo in this ſaying, Chriſt was to ſuffer our whole puniſhment, all ſuch puniſhments as cannot be ſuffered without ſinne, as deſperation, finall reprobation, are manifeſtly excepted.

Act.2.24.

3. If you will allow us this exception of ſinne in Chriſts ſatisfactory ſacrifice, I truſt you will diſpenſe alſo with the perpetuity, which includeth an impoſſibility: for the Apoſtle ſaith, it was impoſſible, that Chriſt ſhould be held of the ſorrowes of death, Act. 2.24. and the reaſon is, becauſe Chriſt was without ſinne, and therefore could not for ever be held in deaths bondage: If then where there is no iniquity, there can bee of puniſhment no perpetuitie, you muſt alſo yeeld us this ſecond exception of perpetuity, becauſe of Chriſts holineſſe and piety.

Matth.25.41.

Luk.16.26.

2 Pet.2.4.

Epheſ.2.2.

Of the place of hell.

Where the divils hell is.

2 Pet.2.4.

Luk.8.31.

4. For the third exception of the place of hell: firſt, the holineſſe of Chriſts perſon doth exempt him, becauſe it is prepared onely for the devill and his angels, and the everlaſtingly accurſed, Matth. 25.41. Secondly, if Chriſt by his innocencie is freed from the perpetuity, ſo is he alſo from the very place and obſcurity, becauſe they that are there never come from thence, Luk. 16.26. Thirdly, it is alſo a queſtion worth the asking, where the fire of hell ſhould bee; whether the place make hell, or rather the wrath and abſence of God doth not cauſe it; and whether the divels be not in hell? S. Peter ſaith, they are caſt downe to hell, and kept in chaines of darkenes, 2 Pet. 2.4. and S. Paul calleth the devill, the prince that ruleth in the ayre, Epheſ. 2. 2. the ayre then is the devils hell. So Bernard ſaith, In pœnam ſuam diabolus locum in aëre iſto medium inter cœlum & terram ſortitus eſt, &c. The divel for his puniſhment is allotted to have his place in the ayre in the midſt betweene heaven and earth, in Cantic. ſerm. 54. And Auguſtine before him thus expoundeth S. Peter: Mali angeli, &c. quamvis pœnaliter hunc infernum. i. caliginoſum aërem tanquam carcerem acceperint: The evill angels are reſerved in chaines of darkenes for the day of judgement, as S. Peter ſaith, though even now they have their priſon, penally, this infernall and darke ayre, de natur. bon. cap. 32. Yet neither Auguſtine, nor we doe thinke, but that the divels are appointed to a futher puniſhment at the day of judgement: ſo the Apoſtle expreſſeth 2 Pet. 2.4. So the divell himſelfe feareth and expecteth: Luk. 8.31. The ſpirits deſire, not to be ſent into the deepe. Thus much Auguſtine confeſſeth: Diabolo mors alterius generis præparatur in æterno igne tartari: Another kinde of death is prepared for the divell in everlaſting fire, lib. 4. de Trinitat. c. 13. Yet thus much wee have gained, that, ſeeing this ayre is the divels preſent hell, hell may bee in this world and therefore it is neither impoſſible, nor improbable, that the croſſe was Chriſts hell.

Iſai.53.11.

Coloſſ.2.21.

5. Like as Chriſt then is ſaid to beare all our iniquities, Iſai. 53.11. (all is not there expreſſed: but who doubteth, that he bare all and not onely ſome) ſo is hee truly ſaid to beare all our puniſhment: but he bare our ſins without ſin, neither was hee to beare them for ever, nor to carry them downe to hell with him; in all which manner wee ſhould have borne them, but to faſten them onely to his croſſe, Coloſſ. 2, 11. ſo give us leave to ſay, he did beare all our puniſhment, though not as wee ſhould have borne it, that is, ſinfully, eternally and helliſhly; but to finiſh all upon the croſſe, and in ſuch ſort, as Gods juſtice was ſatisfied, his perſon not diſgraced, nor his holineſſe defiled, and yet mans ſalvation fully perfited.

6. And leſt this phraſe of ſpeech, that Chriſt ſuffered whatſoever we ſhould have ſuffered, might be thought onely now to be taken up; Saint Hierome long before hath ſo ſpoken and written: Factus eſt pro nobis maledictum, ut nos liberaret à maledicto, quod enim nos pro noſtris debebamus ſceleribus ſuſtinere, ille pro nobis paſſus eſt, &c. He was made a curſe for us, to deliver us from the curſe: for that which we ought to have ſuſtained for our ſinnes, hee ſuffered for us, in Iſai. cap. 53. And it followeth:

Ex quo perſpicuum eſt ſicut corpus flagellatum, &c. ita animam verè doluiſſe: By the which it is manifeſt, as his body was whipped, ſo his ſoule was truly grieved, &c. But it will be here ſaid unto us, that Hierome ſaith not, Chriſt ſuffered all, that was due to our ſinnes.

Anſw. 1. As though an indefinite propoſition is not for the moſt part equivalent to an univerſall, though it have not the note of univerſality: as when we ſay, men are mortall, it is evident, that wee meane all: but it is not ſo properly ſaid, men are good, wiſe, &c. becauſe theſe ſpeechees are particular, all are not ſo. Yea the Scripture ſo uſeth to ſpeake, Ioh. 1.29. Behold the Lambe of God that taketh away the ſinne of the world; I hope all ſinne be underſtood: for there is no ſinne for the which Chriſt died not: Mark. 16.16. He that beleeveth, &c. I hope the meaning be, omnis qui credit, every one that beleeveth, though the note be not expreſſed. Ioh.1.29. Mark.16.16.

2. Saint Hieromes meaning is plaine, that Chriſt ſuffered all: for hee was made that by ſuffering, which we are delivered from, as his firſt words do import; but we are delivered from the curſe both of body and ſoule: Ergo. 2. He ſheweth in the latter part of the ſentence, that he meaneth all both the whipping of the body, and true griefe of the ſoule: and ſo I hope this teſtimony is cleared.

Hilary is yet more evident: The onely begotten Sonne of God to finiſh the Sacrament of his death, conſummaſſe ſe omne humanarum genus paſſionum teſtatur, doth teſtifie, that hee had finiſhed every kind of humane paſſions, when he ſaid, it is finiſhed: lib. 10. de Trinitate. And Tho. Aquine confeſſeth, as he is cited before, that Chriſt, ſecundum genus, in generall ſuffered every humane paſſion, 3. pag. qu. 46. art. 5.

Argum. 4. The Prophet Iſay ſaith, he carried our ſorrowes, Iſai. 53.4. that is, all: Ergo, he did beare the ſorrowes of hell. Iſay 53.4.

For the further explication of our meaning, and ſtrengthening of this argument: though the Prophet doe not put to the ſigne all, yet Matthew doth, that beſt knew the Prophets meaning, Mat. 18.16. He healed all that were ſicke, that it might be fulfilled, &c. hee tooke our infirmities and bare our ſickneſſes: If Chriſt fulfilled the Prophet in healing all ſickneſſes, then the Prophet ſpake of all. And againe, Matth. 4.23. He healed every diſeaſe, and every ſickneſſe: not ſome but all. Matth.18.16. Matth.4.23.

2. Chriſt indeed bare theſe ſorrows for us, but they were his ſorrowes, not ours; as the words following doe well declare, he was wounded, &c. were not the wounds of his body his? ſo were the ſorrowes. 2. If they were our ſorrowes, not his, then our owne ſorrowes redeeme us, which I thinke is no good doctrine. 3. Ambroſe indeed ſaith, Doles Domine Ieſu non tua ſed mea vulnera; quid mirum quod pro omnibus doluit, qui pro uno flevit, &c. Thou lamenteſt Lord Ieſus not thy wounds, but mine (that is ſinnes) no marvaile if he grieved for all, that wept for one, lib. 2. de fid. c. 3. The occaſion of Chriſts griefe was the wound of our ſins: but the griefe was his owne: as the griefe was his owne when he ſorrowed for Iudas, ſo was it, when he grieved for all. And againe in the ſame place he ſaith, Mœror eius mœrorem noſtrum abolevit: His griefe did aboliſh ours: He maketh a manifeſt difference betweene Chriſts griefe and ours: therefore Chriſts griefe in property was not ours, &c.

3. Whereas Feuardentius by theſe ſorrowes underſtandeth onely the infirmities of the body, as hunger, thirſt, wearineſſe, &c. p. 415. lib. 1. I anſwere, 1. The Septuagint tranſlate, [illegible] He bare our ſinnes. 2. If he refuſe the Septuagint, let him take Hieromes expoſition, Si ille qui peccatum non facit pro nobis doluit & peccata noſtra portavit, &c. If he which did no ſinne, grieved for us, and bare our ſinnes, how much more we, lib. 2. adver. Pelag. 3. If Hierome content him not, Peters interpretation cannot be refuſed, who following the Septuagint in the ſame words and ſenſe ſaith, Hee bare our ſinnes in his bodie, &c. 1. Pet. 2.24. But hee will ſay, what is this to the purpoſe? Yes very much, for if the Apoſtle interpreteth ſinnes, where the Prophet ſaith ſorrowes, what are they elſe but the ſorrowes of Chriſts ſoule for our ſinnes? 4. If by ſorrowes wee underſtand infirmities, I hope the infirmities of the ſoule ſhall have place heere, as well as the infirmities of our bodies, ſeeing Chriſt tooke all our infirmities, as Matthew expoundeth: and ſo ſaith Fulgentius, Animam rationalem habens, quicquid fuit infirmitatis animæ ſine peccato ſuſcepit & pertulit: Chriſt having a reaſonable ſoule, did take alſo and beare without ſinne, whatſoever infirmitie of the ſoule: lib. 3. ad Thraſimund. If then he bare all the infirmities of the ſoule, then the internall ſorrow and ſoule ſufferings for ſinne.

Argum. 5. I will adde ſome teſtimonies of the fathers; Origen maketh Chriſts hell upon the croſſe: Vnumquodque peccatorum, ob quæ Chriſtus iturus ad inferos, portæ ſunt inferorum: Every ſinne, for the which Chriſt was to goe into hell, are the gates of hell, Tract. 1. in Matth. But I truſt no man will ſay that Chriſt after his death went into hell to ſuffer for our ſinnes. Againe, Ille dominabatur noſtri, donec daretur ei pro nobis redemptio anima Ieſu, decepto videlicet, & exiſtimanti, quaſi poſſet dominari eius, & non videnti, quod non poterit ſuſtinere in tenendo eam tormentis: data autem anima eius in redemptionem pro multis non manſit apud eum, cui fuerat data; propter hoc dicit propheta, quoniam non derelinques animam meam in inferno: The devill had rule over us, till the ſoule of Chriſt was given him for our redemption; hee being deceived, and thinking that he might alſo beare rule over it, and not perceiving, that he could not endure to hold it long in torment: but Chriſts ſoule being given to be a redemption for many, did not ſtay with him, to whom it was given; and for this the Prophet ſaith, Thou wilt not leave my ſoule in hell, Tract. 12. in Matth. Hence Origene affirmeth, that Chriſts ſoule was tormented in hell, which was not after his death: Ergo, it was while he lived: the reſt that Origene ſaith, that Chriſts ſoule was given as a price of our redemption to the devill, and by him tormented, ſeemeth ſomewhat hard, and to that end I alleage him not, but onely to prove the hell torments of Chriſts ſoule, which is here affirmed.

S. Ambroſe thus witneſſeth: Quæ erat cauſa incarnationis, niſi ut caro, quæ peccaverat, per ſe redimeretur: quod peccaverat igitur, hoc redemptum eſt: non eſt ergo immolata divinitas Chriſti, quia non peccaverat divinitas Chriſti: hoc obtulit Chriſtus quod induit; induit autem, quod non habuit: What other cauſe was there of Chriſts incarnation, but that the fleſh, which had ſinned, might be redeemed by it ſelfe; therefore Chriſts deity was not ſacrificed, becauſe it had not ſinned: Chriſt offered that which he tooke, hee tooke that which he had not: de incarnat. c.6. Though he give an inſtance only of the fleſh, yet his reaſons doe alſo hold for the ſoule. Firſt, that which was to be redeemed, was redeemed by it ſelfe, the fleſh by the fleſh: Ergo, the ſoule by the ſoule. Secondly, whatſoever had ſinned, was to bee ſacrificed: Ergo, the ſou'e alſo which properly ſinneth, the divine nature onely is excepted. Thirdly, whatſoever Chriſt tooke that he had not before, was offered: but he tooke a ſoule as well as fleſh: Ergo.

Bernard: Non derelinques animam meam in inferno: infernus quidem & carcer animæ, rea conſcientia eſt: Thou ſhalt not leave my ſoule in hell: the hell and priſon of the ſoule is a guilty conſcience, in aſſumpt. ſerm. 4. He maketh the griefe of Chriſts ſoule his hell. Againe, Sunt gradus in aſcendendo & deſcendendo; in deſcendendo primus gradus à cœlo uſque ad carnem, ſecundus ad crucem, tertius ad mortem: ecce quouſque deſcendit, nunquid amplius potuit? poterat jam certè dicere rex noſter, quid ultrà debui facere & non feci? There are degrees in aſcending, and deſcending: the firſt degree in Chriſts deſcending was from heaven to the fleſh; the ſecond to the croſſe, the third to death: behold how farre he deſcended, could he deſcend any more? ſurely our King might have ſaid, what could I have done more, and I did it not? ſerm. parv. 18. He maketh the whole deſcenſion of Chriſt to be finiſhed before and in his death: therefore in his ſentence Chriſts ſoule deſcended into hell upon the croſſe, or not at all.

But it will be objected againe out of Bernard where he ſaith: Semel ille deſcendit (ſ. ad inferos) non ſanguis, ſed anima, cum corpus penderet exanime ſuper terram: Hee once deſcended to hell, not his blood, but his ſoule; while his body did hang without life upon the earth, Cantic. 75. I anſwer: firſt, this word (exanime) doth not alwayes ſignifie dead, but aſtonied, or halfe dead, as we ſay, exanimatus metu, aſtonied or halfe dead for feare: ſo Chriſts body might be ſaid to be as dead, in that long ſilence upon the croſſe, his body being as exanimated with the grievous tortures of his ſoule: I had rather ſo take Bernard, than to make him ſpeake contraries. Secondly, he ſaith againe, Qui traduxit aereas poteſtates & affixit cruci ſuæ, claret quia ſuper infernales officinas poteſtatem accepit: Which did traduce the ayrie powers and faſtened them to his croſſe, it is cleere that he received power over the infernall regions, &c. in die aſcenſ. ſerm. 2. If Chriſt then did triumph and conquer the infernall powers and [illegible] upon the croſſe, what other cauſe can be aſſigned of his deſcenſion, unleſſe wee will ſay, he went thither to delivered the Patriarkes? but Auguſtinus thinketh, that Abraham and the Prophets were in ſinu Abrahæ, in the boſome of Abraham, and not in hell, epiſt. 99. Thirdly, and if it be granted that Bernard being carried away with the error of that time, to thinke that Chriſt went downe locally to hel to deliver the Patriarks, yet he may very wel hold the ſpiritual deſcending of Chriſt to hel by the ſuffrings of his ſoule, as I have ſhewed: ſeeing the locall deſcenſion was not to ſuffer, but to conquer.

To theſe teſtimonies may be adjoyned thoſe which are diſperſedly alleaged before: as firſt, of Ambroſe, argum. [illegible] artic. 4. ſecondly, Origen argum. 2. artic. 1. thirdly, Fulgentius argum. 3. artic. 1. fourthly, Auguſt. argum. 3. artic. 4. fifthly, Hierome arg. 3. artic. 6. ſixthly, Ambroſ. argum. 4. artic. 2. Athanaſius alſo is an evident witneſſe for us: who having made mention of Adams double puniſhment and the ſentence given againſt his body, that it ſhould returne to duſt, and againſt his ſoule, thou ſhall dye the death, proceedeth further thus: Ac proinde opus fuit illo ipſo judice, qui hoc decretum tulerat, ut ipſe per ſe ſententiam ſolveret ſub ſpecie condemnati, incondemnatum ſe, ſyncerumque à peccatis oſtendens, ut hominem Deo reconciliaret, hominemque totum libertatem vindicaret: And therefore it was needfull that the ſmae Iudge, which made the decree, ſhould by himſelfe diſſolve the ſentence under the ſhew of a man condemned, ſhewing himſelfe uncondemned and ſincere from ſinne, to reconcile man unto God, and reſtore whole man to liberty, de incarnat. Chriſti. If Chriſt, ſub ſpecie condemnati, under the ſhew of a man condemned, muſt reſtore whole man to liberty, and diſſolve the whole ſentence given both againſt mans body and ſoule: but he could not preſent himſelfe as a man condemned in ſoule, in the locall place of hell, (for there he ſuffered not) it followeth then that hee ſhewed himſelfe as a man condemned in ſoule upon the croſſe.

Object. It will be anſwered, that Athanaſius ſaith not he was condemned in ſoule, and that we doe wreſt him againſt his minde ſeeing he maniſeſtly affirmeth Chriſts locall deſcenſion.

Contr. 1. That muſt bee Athanaſius meaning, that he was as a man condemned in ſoule: for there he was as a man for us condemned, where in himſelfe he was uncondemned and free from ſinne: but Chriſts innocencie was in his ſoule, therefore there was the condemnation chiefly.

2. He by himſelfe looſed the ſentence to reſtore whole man: as by himſelfe he looſed the ſentence for the body by being condemned and ſuffring in the body: ſo by himſelfe to looſe the ſentence againſt the ſoule, he muſt ſuffer alſo and be as condemned in ſoule.

3. Wee grant Athanaſius doth hold the locall deſcenſion otherwhere; that nothing hindreth the ſenſe here: for that deſcenſion was not to ſuffer, but to conquer: but this deſcenſion and ſuffering is of a man in ſhew condemned: for like as the body of Chriſt ſuffered upon the croſſe, yet afterward triumphed over death in the reſurrection; ſo he might thinke, that Chriſts ſoule though ſuffering upon the croſſe, might notwithſtanding afterward make a more full conqueſt of hell.

Beſide the teſtimonies of Origen, Athanaſius, Fulgentius of the South Church before alleaged; may be joyned that ſaying of Chryſoſtome the great Patriarke of the Greeke Church: Christus plurib. in morte vexatus doloribus quàm omnes tragœdi ſcribere poſſunt, expiravit: Chriſt being vexed with more ſorrowes than all the tragedians in the world can expreſſe, gave up the Ghoſt: homil. 31. in Matth. but what are thoſe ſorrowes that no tongue or penne can expreſſe, other than the deepe griefe of the ſoule, and as it were the ſorrowes of a kinde of hell for the time in the minde.

French confeſſ. artic. 14. That he might ſuffer both in ſoule and body, and be made like unto us in all things, &c. The ſorrowes then of hell, which take hold many times of the righteous, Chriſt was not free from, that he might be like unto his members. Harm.ſect.6. Pag.99.

Cuſanus their Cardinall doubteth not to ſay, Illam pœnam ſenſus conformem damnatis in inferno pati voluit: That paine of ſenſe conformable unto the damned in hell, hee would ſuffer to the glory of his father, &c. Excitat. lib. 10. ex ſermon. qui per ſpiritum ſanctum ſeipſum obtulit, &c.

The concluſion of all is this, that ſeeing the Prophet David before ſpake of Chriſt, that the ſorrowes of hell did compaſſe him about, argum. 1. and that Chriſt looſed the ſorrowes of hell, wherewith hee could not be held, argum. 2. and it was neceſſary that Chriſt ſhould ſuſtaine the whole puniſhment of body and ſoule due unto us, argum. 3. ſeeing alſo Chriſt bare all our ſorrowes, argum. 4. and the Fathers herein together witneſſe with the Scriptures: it remaineth that Chriſt entred in ſoule into hell, and ſuſtained the very ſorrowes thereof for us upon his croſſe, in ſuch manner as is before declared.

An appendix concerning the Fire of hell, whether it bee onely materiall and corporall.

The objections anſwered.

B*Ellarmine* uſeth this as a ſpeciall argument, againſt Chriſts ſuffering in ſoule the ſorrowes of hell becauſe that hell is not in this life, neither can the flames thereof be kindled here, Bellarm. lib. 4. c. 8. argum. 5. And againe, he taketh upon him to prove that hell fire is corporall; and ſo hee imagineth his Purgatory fire to be, which onely worketh upon ſoule, lib. 2. de Purgat. c. 11. So that he ſeemeth thus to thinke, that hell fire, which ſhall torment mens ſoule and bodies is corporall onely and materiall: and that the ſenſe of Gods wrath is no part of the ſorrowes of hell, lib. 4. de Chriſt. anim. c. 8. argum. 5. Artic. 18.

Object. 1. Hee reaſoneth thus from the Scripture: In every place the puniſhment of the wicked is ſaid to bee fire, and that the Lord ſhall judge them, and puniſh them with fire, which muſt be taken properly, where no abſurdity followeth: and therefore the fire of hell is corporall, lib. 2. de Purgat. c. 11.

Anſwere. 1. Some places of Scripture doe deſcribe the manner of Gods comming to judgement, which ſhall be with fire conſuming the heavens, the earth and the mountaines: which wee deny not, but that the world at the day of judgement being a materiall ſubſtance, ſhall be conſumed with materiall and corporall fire: as Hierome ſaith. Igneus dominus totus adveniet: The Lord ſhall come all firy, de ſanct. divin. legis. And Ambroſe: Teneamus hic poſiti humilitatem, ut cum unuſquiſq; noſtrum venerit ad judicium Dei, ad illos ignes, quos tranſituri ſumus, dicat, Vide humilitatem meam: Let us hold faſt humility, that when every one commeth to judgement, to thoſe fires, which we muſt paſſe thorow, he may ſay, Behold my humility, ſerm. 20. in Pſal. 119. All this we grant: but it followeth not, becauſe the fire of that day ſhall be materiall, burning but for a time, and conſuming things corporall, that therefore hell fire tormenting ſpirits as well as bodies, ſhall onely be corporall.

2. Other places make mention of hell fire, but whether it is corporall or ſpirituall they ſhew not: the mentioning of brimſtone together with fire, Revel. 21. 8. doth no more proove it to bee corporall, than, where the Prophet deſcribing hell ſaith, the burning thereof is fire and much wood, Iſay 30. 33. we may imagine that hell fire is kindled with wood. 2. The prophet ſheweth in the ſame place what this brimſtone is, The breath of the Lord like a river of brimſtone doth kindle it. Revel. 21. 8. Iſai. 30. 33.

3. We grant a corporall and materiall fire in hell, but not onely, neither are all hell flames corporall, but as Bernard ſaith: In carne cruciabuntur per ignem, in ſpiritu per conſcientiæ vermem: They ſhall in their fleſh be tormented with fire, in the ſpirit by the worme of conſcience, Meditat. c. 4.

Object. 2. Here divers Fathers alſo are alleaged to prove the fire of hell to bee corporall and materiall; as Gregory, Auguſtine: Bellarm. lib. 2. de purg. cap. 11.

Anſw. Firſt, Gregory in flat termes calleth it ignem incorporeum, incorporall fire: but it is anſwered that Gregory is falſified: incorporeum, incorporall, being put for corporeum, corporall: for he ſaith afterward, that this fire doth corporaliter urere, burne corporally. And Bellarmine doth further anſwere, that it is, mendum ſcriptorum, the fault of the writer, lib. 2. de purgat. c. 11.

*Contra.*1. If Bellarmines copie, and our copies, and conſequently all bookes of Gregorie, have incorporall, how is it like to be the writer or Printers fault? it is ſtrange that there ſhould be no true corrected copie of Gregory. 2. We may rather ſay, that corporaliter comming after, is crept in for incorporaliter, incorporally. 3. If Bellarmine alleage Gregory for purgatory fire, how can it ſerve for hell fire, ſeeing the one they imagine to be temporall, the other is eternall? 4. Admitting Gregory to be corrupted, yet he is farre from affirming all hell fire and flames to be corporall.

3. 1. Auguſtine, as he is alleaged by *Bellarmine, lib.*21. *de civitat. dei cap.*10. doth ſhew indeed how incorporall ſpirits after a mervailous manner may be afflicted with the paine of corporall fire: but he is farre from thinking, that there is no paine or fire in hell but materiall and corporall: nay hee concludeth the contrary, and thinketh it to be more likely, that the body ſhould be afflicted with fire, the ſoule with a kinde of ſorrow as it were a worme, &c. ſo that by no meane any man thinke the bodies in hell to be ſuch, that they ſhall not be touched with the paine of fire. 2. Auguſtine himſelfe thinketh elſewhere, that the ſoules of Lazarus and the rich man, were not in loco corporali, in any corporall place, *de Geneſ. lib.*8. *c.*5. and that the fire wherein the rich man was tormented, was no more corporall, than his tongue or finger, *lib.*21. *de civit. dei, c.*10. and he reſolutely concludeth, Subſtantiam inferorum non eſſe corporalem, ſed ſpiritualem: That the ſubſtance of hell is not corporall, but ſpirituall, *lib.*12. *de Geneſ. c.*32. And he proveth, that there is an hell by this experiment, becauſe many being terrified in their dreames, metuunt ne rurſus dormiant, are afraid to ſleepe againe, ibid. But this ſheweth hell to be rather a ſpiritall paine, than a corporall. Wherefore Auguſtine is farre from limiting hell to a corporall fire or paine, making the chiefe part and ſubſtance thereof ſpirituall.

The Queſtion confirmed.

That the flames of hell fire are not onely materiall and corporall.

THat as the bodies of the damned and reprobate ſhall be tormented in hell; ſo it is not unlike but they ſhall burne even with a materiall fire unquenchable, it is very probable: though it be not fit that we ſhould too curiouſly ſearch into theſe ſecrets, which the faithfull ſhall never have experience of. Auguſtine ſaith well: Melius eſt dubitare de occultis, quam litigare de incertis: It is better to doubt of unknowne things, than to ſtrive for uncertaine, de Geneſ. ad liter. lib. 8. c. 5. It is ſufficient for us to know that hell fire is prepared for the devill and his angels, and the damned company. And I doubt not to ſay with Ruffinus: Siquis negat diabolum æternis ignibus mancipandum, partem cum ipſo æterni ignis accipiet, ut ſentiat, quod negavit: If any man denie that the divell ſhall be ſubjected to everlaſting fire, he ſhall receive part of everlaſting fire with him, that he may feele that, which he denied, &c. But what manner of fire this ſhall be, it is not ſo evident: yet we are moſt ſure, that as hell paines ſhall work upon the ſoule, ſo there is a ſpirituall fire and torment, wherewith the ſame ſhall be afflicted: which if it be proved, then one of the chiefeſt arguments faileth them, which is urged againſt the hell-ſorrowes, which Chiſt felt in his ſoule upon the croſſe.

Iam.3.6.

*Argum.*1. S. Iames ſaith, that *the tongue is a fire, which ſetteth on fire the courſe of nature, and is inflamed or ſet on fire of hell, Iam.*3.6. Such as is the fire, ſuch is the flame, the evilneſſe of the tongue is a fire-brand, or flame of hell fire; it is not a corporall or materiall flame; no more is that fire of hell, wherewith it is inflamed.

Mark.9.44.

Againe, our Saviour thus deſcribeth hell; *Where the worme dyeth not, and the fire goeth not out, Mark.*9.44. Beſide fire, there is the perpetuall gnawing worme of the conſcience. So Bernard well expoundeth: Duo mala ſunt vermis & ignis, altero roditur conſcientia, altero concremantur corpora: There are two evils, the worme and fire; with the one the conſcience is bitten; with the other, bodies are burned, par. ſerm. 16.

Luk. 16.23,24.

*Argum.*2. The rich man is ſaid to be in hell torments, and to bee tormented in the flame, Luk. 16. 23,24. but this was no material fire, no more than his finger was materiall, or the drop of water which he craved: ſo much Auguſtine confeſſeth, *lib.*21, *de civitat. dei. c.*10. And that this was a ſtory done, and not a ſimilitude borrowed, S. Chryſoſtome teſtifieth: Parabolæ ſunt, ubi exemplum ponitur, tacentur nomina: Thoſe be parables, when the example is ſet downe, and the names concealed, &c. But in this place, ſi verus eſt Abraham, verus eſt Lazarus, as there is a true Abraham; ſo there is a true Lazarus, &c. Hence then I conclude, that there is a fire of hell, not materiall.

Matth.25.41.

*Argum.*3. The everlaſting fire of hell is prepared for the devill and his angels, *Matth.*25.41. The divels are ſpirits, and cannot properly be tormented with corporall fire: Ergo, their proper puniſhment is ſpirituall.

Though it be granted, as Auguſtine ſeemeth to inſinuate, *lib.*21. *de civitat. cap.*10. that incorporall ſpirits may be afflicted with corporall fire, after a miraculous and extraordinary manner, as the ſoule is afflicted with the torments of the body, yet the force of this argument holdeth: for we ſpeake of the proper puniſhment of divels: 1. The ſoule though it ſuffer by way of ſympathie with the body, yet it hath a proper griefe beſide of its owne. 2. Divels can have no ſuch affliction by way of ſympathie, ſeeing they have no bodies to ſuffer by. 3. That God is able by his omnipont power to make ſpirits feele the paine of fire, wee grant; but becauſe he can doe it, therefore he doth and will, is but a ſilly kinde of reaſoning. 4. It is as uſuall for the body to ſuffer with and from the ſoule, as for the ſoule to be affected and afflicted with the body: the care and griefe of the ſoule doth ſooner weaken the body, than the ſickneſſe of the body doth diſtreſſe the ſoule: may not we as well reaſon from Gods power; that he is able to make a corporall ſubſtance, to feele an incorporall paine, and therfore even the bodies of the damned ſhall be tormented with an incorporall fire in hell? 5. But that the divels have a ſpirituall puniſhment beſide the corporall fire of hell (to yeeld ſo much for this time) it is thus evident; becauſe the divels are now in torment. S. Peter ſaith, they are in hell, and kept in chaines of darknes. 2 Pet. 2.4. in hell they cannot be without paine: but in fire they are not; for they are Princes of the ayre, as S. Paul ſaith, Epheſ. 2.1. there is their place; as Bernard ſaith, Elige tibi locum in aëre non ad ſedendum, ſed ad volandum, ut qui tentaſti concutere ſtatum aternitatis pœnam ſentias propria fluctuationis: Chuſe thy place in the ayre, not to ſit, but to flit, that as thou diddeſt try to ſhake eternity, ſo thou maiſt be now puniſhed with mutability: de 22. gradib. The devill then is in the ayre, and now in torment: but in the ayre is no fire, Ergo, he is in torment without materiall fire. Origen ſpeaketh to the ſame purpoſe, cited upon another occaſion before: that when the divell ſeeth a man given to ſtudy the word of God, in hoc eorum flamma eſt, in iſto uruntur incendio, here is their flame, and in this fire are they ſcorched, &c. The fire of envie then and malice, without any materiall flame, doth ſcorch the evill ſpirits.

Whether the divels ſhall be tormented with materiall fire in hell.

2 Pet. 2.4.

I omit here Origens reaſons againſt the corporall fire of hell: firſt, becauſe hell is full of darkeneſſe, and the propertie of corporall fire is to lighten or illuminate: but ſo ſhall not that fire in hell: Neſcio, ſi ille ignis, qui in futuro ſeculo incendit, habeat & aliquid, quod illuminet: I cannot tell (ſaith he) whether that fire, which ſhall burne in the next world, have any thing to give light with, Hom. 13. Exod. Secondly, he uſeth a better reaſon then this, grounded upon S. Pauls words, The things which are ſeene are temporall. 2 Cor. 4.18. Neceſſe eſt ergo ſi viſibilis ſit ignis ut ſit temporalis: It is neceſſary therefore, if fire be viſible, that it be but temporall, Tract. 34. in Matth. So he concludeth hell fire to be inviſible; if it be inviſible, then alſo incorporall: for it is the property of corporall fire to be viſible. But I urge not Origens reaſons, I only produce them: neither doe rely upon his judgement in this point, ſeeing Hierome noteth this to be one of Origens errors: Gehenna tormenta non ponit in ſuppliciis, ſed in conſcientia peccatorum: He doth not place hell torments in puniſhment, but in the conſcience of ſinne, Hieron. ad Avitum. But neither of them is to be excluded.

2 Cor. 4.18.

I conclude then with S. Ambroſe: Ibi erit ſtridor dentium, ſtridor dentium prodit indignantis affectum, eò quòd ſerò unumquemque pœniteat, &c. There ſhalbe gnaſhing of teeth, gnaſhing of teeth bewrayeth an angry affection, becauſe they repent too late, &c. in 12. Luc. Likewiſe Auguſtine, who reckoneth theſe among the puniſhments of hell: Vermis conſcientia, ignita lachryma, — dolor ſine remedio — abſentia Chriſti, quæ ſola — omnibus pœnis intolerabilior: The worme of conſcience, fierie teares, remedileſſe griefe, the abſence of Chriſt more intolerable, then all griefe beſide, de triplic. habitat. 1.2. Ergo, in hell, beſide corporall fire, there is ſpirituall torment: So alſo Theophylact underſtandeth the worme of a biting and gnawing conſcience: in Marc. 9. v. 44. ſo alſo our moderne interpreters doe expound that place, as Bucer, and Muſculus, in Matth. 8. v. 12. quos conſcientia mali cruciat, the conſcience of ſinne doth torment them: ſo ancient Ephrem, conſcientia ſua verberibus cruciati, tormented with the beating of their owne conſcience: lib. de extrem. judic. c. 4. and againe, whereas the Goſpell maketh mention of utter darkeneſſe, hee inferreth undoubtedly, ſunt etiam & interiores, there are alſo inner darkeneſſe.

Thomas agreeth, that this worme is ſpirituall, which he interpreteth to be remorſus conſcientia, the biting of the conſcience: ſupplem. 3. par. q. 97. ar. 2. ſo alſo Lyranus. annot. Marc. 9. 44.

The fifth part, whether Chriſt appeared before Gods tribunall, as guilty of our ſinnes.

F*Evardentius*, that cavilling Frier, having nothing to object againſt this poſition of Calvin; Oportuit Chriſtum ſiſti ad Dei tribunal, ut cunctorum noſtrorum maleficiorum reum: It was behoovefull that Chriſt ſhould ſtand before Gods tribunall as guilty of all our ſinnes, Inſtitut. l. 2. c. 16. ſer. 12. He inverteth, or rather perverteth the queſtion, and propoundeth to himſelfe to prove, that Chriſt was not re ipſa peccator, was not indeed a ſinner: confuting that which no man affirmeth.

Artic. 19.

Argum. Ioh. 1.29. Chriſt is the Lambe of God that taketh away the ſinne of the world: Ergo, he is no ſinner; for then he could not take away ſinne, Heb. 4.15. he was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne. Heb. 7.26. ſuch an high prieſt it became us to have, which is holy, harmeleſſe, undefiled. Fevard. p. 463.

Ioh. 1.29.
Heb. 4.15.
Heb. 7.26.

To this end Bernard is alleaged: Electe puer, &c. Holy childe, what haſt thou committed worthy of ſo great confuſion? truly nothing, Ego homo perditus, totius perditionis tua cauſa extiti: I, O man of perdition, was the cauſe of thy perdition, &c. ſerm. de paſſion. p. 465.

Anſw. Firſt, I anſwer the Frier, as Auguſtine did Petilian the Donatiſt, who impudently charged him with a cleane contrary matter: Quemadmodum ſi mihi diceres, quod ego Petilianus ſum, non invenirem, quomodo te refellerem, niſi aut jocantem riderem, aut ut inſanientem dolerem: hoc mihi nunc faciendũ eſſe video, ſed quia te jocari non credo, vides quid reſtat: Like as if you ſhould ſay to me, that I am Petilian, I could not finde how to refute you, but either to laugh at your folly, or to grieve for your phrenſie; ſo I muſt doe at this time, but becauſe the Frier jeſteth not, but is in good earneſt, you know what remaineth: cont. Petilian.2.38. Thus dealeth the Frier with Calvine, charging him with that he never held, as if he ſhould ſay to him, that he was Fevardentius, not Calvine, Auguſtine would have judged this either to be fooliſhneſſe or madneſſe in him.

Ioh.14.30.

2. I ſay with Hierome, Po*ſſum omnes propoſitionum rivulos uno veritatis ſole ſiccare*, I can dry up all thoſe allegations with the ſunne of truth: for we confeſſe Chriſt to be the unſpotted Lambe, to have beene tempted without ſinne, to be an holy and undefiled Prieſt: farre be it from us to thinke or ſpeak otherwiſe of Chriſt; he himſelfe ſaith: The Prince of this world commeth and hath nought in me: Iohn 14.30. And we confeſſe with Auguſtine, Iſte eſt agnus qui in altari crucis hoſtia viva Deo patri pro nobis in odorem ſuavitatis oblatus eſt: This is the Lambe, which was offered on the Altar of the croſſe a living ſacrifice unto God his Father for us to be a ſavour of ſweetneſſe. ſerm. de tempor. 150. But all this being confeſſed and granted, that Chriſt in himſelfe was the unſpotted and undefiled Lambe, it followeth not, but that for us and in our perſon he taking upon him our ſinnes, ſtood as guilty thereof before God.

The Queſtion reſolved.

CHRIST was in himſelfe moſt holy, moſt pure, moſt innocent, hereunto we moſt willingly ſubſcribe: yet notwithſtanding, he tooke upon him the burthen of our ſinnes, and made our debt his owne, and ſo as our ſurety preſented himſelfe as indebted for us, and in our perſon guilty of our ſinnes: this the Frier denieth, *p.*467.10. But we prove it thus:

Iſai.53.11.

Argum. 1. The Prophet Eſay ſaith, He ſhall beare their iniquities, Eſay 53.11. How otherwiſe could he beare them, but by laying them upon himſelfe?

Anſw. By ſinne the Prophet underſtandeth the puniſhment for ſinne, which Chriſt undertooke. *p.*467.10. Fevardent.

1 Pet.2.24.

Contra. 1. S. Peter otherwiſe expoundeth the Prophet, 1 Pet. 2. 24. who in his body bare our ſinnes, that we being delivered from ſinne ſhould live in righteouſneſſe: as he ſaith we are delivered from ſinne, ſo Chriſt bare our ſinnes, but we are delivered not only from the puniſhment of ſinne, but from ſinne it ſelfe to live in righteouſneſſe; Ergo,

2. The Prophet alſo expoundeth himſelfe: *God hath laid upon him the iniquity of us all: verſ.*6. here iniquity is taken for ſinne it ſelfe, as the fore-part of the verſe ſheweth, we like ſheep are gone aſtray, &c. and then it followeth, he hath laid upon him, &c. He ſpeaketh not of our ſmart, but of our fault, not of the terrors of our life, but the errors.

Pſal.69.5.

3. Thus Hierome alſo expoundeth the Prophet: upon theſe words, P*ſal.* 69.5. My faults are not hid from thee: Hoc ex perſona Chriſti dicitur, ſi ille qui peccatum non fecit, pro nobis doluit & peccata noſtra portavit, &c. This is ſpoken in the perſon of Chriſt, if hee, which did no ſinne, grieved for us, and did beare our ſinnes, how much more we? lib. 2. adverſ. Pelagian. Here Hierome ſaith that Chriſt ſo bare our ſinnes, as he did no ſinne himſelfe, and in ſuch ſort, that he counteth our ſinnes his.

2 Cor.5.21.

Argum. 2. 2 Cor.5.21. He made him to be ſinne for us, that knew no ſinne, that we might be the righteouſneſſe of God in him: the Apoſtle ſaith directly, that Chriſt was made ſinne for us, that is, our ſinne was imputed unto him.

Anſwer. By ſinne here is underſtood the ſacrifice for ſinne, or the puniſhment for ſinne, *Fevard. p.*467. ſo Auguſtine and Ambroſe expound it.

Contra. 1. Ambroſe indeed ſo expoundeth, but he excludeth not the other ſenſe, but ſaith he was offered both a ſacrifice for ſinne, and as a ſinner himſelfe: Chriſtus quoniam oblatus eſt pro peccatis, non immerito peccatum factus dicitur: Chriſt becauſe he was offered for ſinne, is ſaid not amiſſe to be made ſinne, &c. And againe, Chriſtus quaſi peccator occiſus eſt, ut peccatores iuſtificarentur apud deum: Chriſt was ſlaine as as a ſinner, that ſinners might be iuſtified before God: in 2. Cor. c. 5.

How Chriſt is ſaid to be made ſinne for us.

2. The text it ſelfe giveth this ſenſe, that ſinne is to be taken properly, he is made ſinne as he knew no ſinne: but he knew not ſinne properly, nor the puniſhment of ſinne: Ergo, he was made ſinne, not the puniſhment onely. Againe, as we are made righteouſneſſe before God, ſo is he made ſinne; but his righteouſneſſe is verily imputed to us: Ergo, our ſinnes are imputed to him: ſo then as we are ſinners in our ſelves, yet righteous by the imputation of his righteouſneſſe; ſo he being moſt righteous in himſelfe, is made ſinne by the imputation of our ſinnes.

Gal.3.13.

3. Hierom alſo thus expoundeth: Deus qui eum dicitur feciſſe maledictum, ipſe pro nobis eum fecit peccatum: God which is ſaid to have made him a curſe for us, hath made him alſo ſin for vs. in 3 ad Galat, As the Apoſtle then ſaith, he was made a curſe for us; Galat.3.13. ſo was he made ſinne: but he was not only made a ſacrifice or a puniſhment for our curſe, but the curſe it ſelfe; Ergo, ſo he was made ſin.

We doe not then ſay, that Chriſt was polluted, or defiled with our ſinnes, but onely reputed and taken for us and in our perſon as a ſinner: and thus in charity we are to underſtand them, that have ſomwhat here exceeded in termes, and not ſo to wreſt and turne their words, as though they did meane to blemiſh Chriſt with the leaſt touch of ſinne: for as Hierome well ſaith; Quid prodeſt vulneribus tuis, ſi ego fuero vulneratus,&c. What ſhall it helpe your wounds to ſee others wounded? apolog.3.adverſ. Ruffin. So it is no defence or excuſe of ones error, to ſee another erre. I finde that in the councell of Baſil.ſeſſ.22. this aſſertion of one Auguſtine Archbiſhop of Nazareth was condemned, who ſhould ſay, Chriſtus quotidie peccat, & ex quo fuit Chriſtus quotidie peccavit: That Chriſt daily ſinneth, and ever ſince Chriſt was, he ſinned dayly: quam aſſertionem pia fidelium aures ſine horrore audire nequeunt: Which aſſertion godly eares cannot heare without trembling, &c. although this Archbiſhop might have ſome tolerable ſenſe in this ſentence, yet becauſe the ſpeech was unuſuall and offenſive, it was miſliked: ſo, though Chriſt were in our perſon preſented unto God as guilty of our ſins by imputation, yet we wiſh that all hard and unwonted phraſes of ſpeech bee carefully avoyded, as to ſay Chriſt was the greateſt adulterer, blaſphemer, &c. becauſe all the ſins of the elect were laid upon his backe: it is ſufficient for us to ſay with the Apoſtle in generall, that Chriſt was made ſinne for us, and not to deſcend to pasticulars.

Chriſt is not to be counted a ſinner in particular.

So then I conclude this place with that ſaying of S. Hierome: Ieſus filius Ioſedech quod interpretatur juſtus Domini, ſacerdos magnus deſcribitur veſtibus ſordidis, qui peccata noſtra non fecit, & tamen peccata noſtra portavit &c. diciturq; ei poſt pugnam & victoriam, auferte veſtem ſordidam ab eo; ecce abſtuli à te iniquitatem, &c. Ieſus the ſonne of Ioſedech, which is interpreted the Lords juſt one, the high Prieſt is deſcribed with filthy garments, which did no ſinne, and yet bare our ſinne: and it is ſaid unto him after the fight and victory, take away the filthy garments from him; behold I have taken away thy ſinne, &c. thus Hierome expoundeth that place, Zach. 3.4. Where we ſee that our ſinnes which were as the filthie garments put upon Chriſt, are called his ſinnes. Zach.3.4.

Likewiſe where the Prophet Iſay ſaith, Vidimus eum & non habuit ſpeciem & decorem: We ſaw him, and he had neither forme nor beauty, Eſay 53.2. thoſe words Auguſtine expoundeth thus: Ecce pulcher ille & ſpecioſus præ filiis hominũ veniebat ad fœdam, ut faceret pulchram; dicam & hoc, quia in ſcripturis invenio, ipſe fœdus factus eſt, &c. Behold he that was the faireſt among the ſonnes of men came to her that was filthy to make her faire: yea I will ſay further, becauſe I finde it in Scripture, he himſelſe was made filthie, &c. in Pſal. 103. part. 1. What elſe was this filthines which Chriſt tooke, but the imputation of our ſinnes? for otherwiſe the injuries which were offered to his body made him more beautifull, in that they commended his patience, inſomuch that the Centurion confeſſed he was a juſt and a good man, *Luk.*23.50. And though the ſouldiers mocked him, when they cloathed him with purple, and ſet a crowne of thornes upon his head, and bowed unto him, yet they did ignorantly honour, whom they in their heart deſpiſed: and ſo Cyprian expoundeth that place, *Cantic.*3.11. Come forth yee daughters of Ieruſalem, and ſee the crowne wherewith his mother crowned him, of the crowne of thornes, which Ieruſalem Chriſts mother after the fleſh ſet upon him. Cyprian in Symbol. So likewiſe Saint Ambroſe: Illis licet defuit boni operis affectus, Deo tamen ſuus non defuit honor, quia ſalutatur ut rex, coronatur ut victor, ut Deus & Dominus adoratur: Though they in ſo doing had no devotion, yet God wanteth not his honor, for he is ſaluted as a King, crowned as a conquerour, worſhipped as God, in 22. Luc.

Luk.23.50.
Cantic.3.11.

Laſtly, where the Apoſtle ſaith, *Rom.*8.3. De peccato damnavit peccatum in carne: Through ſinne he condemned ſinne in the fleſh; Origen thus interpreteth: Chriſtus ſine dubio pro peccato, quod ex nobis ſuſceperat, quia peccata noſtra portavit, carnem incontaminatam obtulit hoſtiam: Chriſt out of doubt for ſinne, which he tooke of us, becauſe he bare our ſinnes, did offer his fleſh an undefiled ſacrifice. Hom.3.in Levit. And againe. Per peccatum ſuum.i.carnem in crucem actam in qua noſtra peccata ſuſceperat, nos credentes liberavit à peccato: By his ſinne, that is his fleſh put to the croſſe, wherein he had taken our ſinnes, he delivereth us beleevers from ſinne: Ibid. From this ſentence of Origen I gather, 1. that Chriſts fleſh is called ſinne, not becauſe it was a ſacrifice for ſinne, or was puniſhed for ſinne, but becauſe it tooke our ſinne. 2. that we are delivered from that ſinne, which Chriſt tooke, which was not the puniſhment of ſinne, but ſinne indeed. 3. that notwithſtanding the bearing of our ſinnes in his fleſh, yet it was an undefiled ſacrifice unto God. Rom.8.3.

Iuſtine Martyr thus alleageth the Prophet, the Lord delivered him up, ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις ἡμῶν, to our ſinnes; our ſinnes then were laid upon him. Confeſſ.Scotic. He ſuffered for a ſeaſon the wrath of his Father, which ſinners had deſerved, artic. of Chriſts death and paſſion: But Chriſt could not be ſubject to feele the wrath of God due unto our ſinnes, if he had not aſſumed our ſinnes. Dialog. cum Tryphon.

Thomas ſaith, that the head and the members are una perſona myſtica, one myſticall perſon, and ſo his ſatisfaction is the members, as his ſatisfaction is ours, ſo our ſinnes were made his: how elſe are the head and members one myſticall perſon. Pag.3.q.48. art.2.

The ſumme of all is this: that ſeeing all our iniquities were laid upon Chriſt, Argum. 1. Seeing he was made ſinne for us, *Argum.*2. He was clothed with our filthy rayments, Argum. 3. Hee became deformed and without beauty for us, *Argum.*4. He by his ſinne, that is his fleſh wherein hee bare our ſinne condemned our ſinne, Argum. 5. We doubt not to affirme and verily beleeve to our endleſſe comfort, that Chriſt was reputed before God, as guilty of all our ſinnes, which hee willingly undertooke, and ſo ſatisfied for them for ever.

The ſixth part, whether CHRIST were grieved and perplexed in his conſcience and ſoule for the ſinnes of the Elect, which were laid upon him.

The objections anſwered.

FEvardentius cannot in any caſe indure this, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer or feele any thing in his conſcience: Non in conſcientia ſua patiendo, p.449.10. but onely admitteth an exceſſive griefe in Chriſt, by way of contemplation in beholding the ſorrowes of the world: as having reckoned up in particular a great number of ſinnes, he concludeth thus: Hæc & alia totius mundi ſcelera illico expianda ſibi animo amplectens, &c. tanta totius cordis animique pœnitudine dolet ut par ei nemo unquam fuerit: theſe and other ſinnes of the whole world Chriſt beholding in his minde to be by him expiated, is grieved with ſuch penſiveneſſe of minde, as no man was ever like to him, p.455. So then by way of compaſſion and contemplation he doth acknowledge Chriſt to have beene grieved and not otherwiſe.

Heb.10.13.
Coloſ.1.20.

Argum. Speciall reaſons and arguments for this their opinion they have none, but ſuch as have beene before objected in generall againſt the ſuffering of Chriſt in ſoule: as Heb, 10.13. With one offring hath he conſecrated for ever, them that are ſanctified: Coloſſ. 1. 20. Pacifying by the blood of his croſſe, &c. Perfit reconciliation was wrought by the blood of his croſſe, and by one oblation, not many: Ergo, no ſuch griefe or perplexity was neceſſary, *Fevardent. p.449. conſ.*10.

Heb.9.26.
Heb.10.10.
19.10.

Anſw. 1. Though Chriſt ſuffered both in bodie and ſoule, yet was it but one ſacrifice, which the Apoſtle calleth the ſacrifice of himſelfe, Heb. 9. 26. for the ſoule and bodie made but one Chriſt, yet this ſacrifice had divers parts: as Heb. 10. 10. it is called the offering of his body, verſ. 19. his blood is mentioned, verſ. 20. he ſpeaketh of his fleſh; will ye make as many ſacrifices as were parts of Chriſts ſufferings?

Coloſ.1.22.

Chriſts ſide pierced after his death.

2. If yee urge blood ſtrictly, and aſcribe all unto the blood and nothing elſe, how will yee reconcile the Apoſtle in the ſame place, Coloſ.1.22. In the bodie of his fleſh thorough death: the blood is not his body, nor his fleſh. 2. The Apoſtle aſcribeth our reconciliation to his death: but his blood was ſhed after his death, as may appeare, Ioh. 19. Chriſt giveth up the ghoſt, verſ.30. and afterward his ſide is pierced, verſ.34. This is well noted bp S. Ambroſe, Poſt mortem percuſſus eſt non ante, ut exitus eius voluntarius non neceſſarius videretur: He was pierced after death, not before, that his death might ſeeme voluntary, in Luc.c.22. Wherefore ye are forced againſt your wils, by one part of the croſſe to underſtand the reſt, unleſſe you will exclude Chriſts blood. 3. If any man ſay, though Chriſts ſide were pierced after his death, yet he ſhed much blood before, when he was whipped, and pricked with thornes, and nayled to the croſſe.

1.Iohn 5.6.

Anſ. Though we extenuate not the leaſt drops of Chriſts blood; yet the blood which iſſued with water out of his ſide, is eſpecially obſerved by the Apoſtle, 1, Ioh.5.6. And Bernard ſaith, Perfoſſo latere in cruce veluti conſciſſo ſacco pecuniam quæ latebat in pretium noſtræ redemptionis effudit: His ſide being launced upon the croſſe, as if the treaſure bagge had bin opened, the money was powred out, that payed our price, *in natal. Dom. ſerm.*2.4. And where the Apoſtle ſaith, Ieſus came by water and blood, 1, Ioh.5.6. if blood be ſtrictly urged, then the water is excluded, which was alſo a neceſſary part of the ſacrifice: Chriſtus venit non in aqua ſolum, ſed in aqua & ſanguine: Moſes in aqua ſolum venit, unde & nomen habet, ſed non redemit: Chriſt came not in water onely, but in water and blood; Moſes came in water only, whereof he hath his name, but he redeemed us not, Bernard. ibid.

The ſoule comprehended under the word fleſh.

3. Some will ſay, we yeeld you that all Chriſts bodily ſufferings may figuratively be expreſſed by ſome one part or other, as by blood, fleſh, &c. but it were improper thereby to ſignifie the ſoule ſufferings. Anſw. Yet it is not unuſuall, by fleſh to underſtand the ſoule alſo, and ſo conſequently by the ſufferings of the one to inſinuate the paſſions of the other: as Auguſtine ſheweth againſt the Apollinariſts, Videbit omnis caro, &c. All fleſh ſhall ſee the ſalvation of God: where fleſh is taken for the whole man, yea for the man regenerate, for carnall men cannot ſee the ſalvation of God: *lib. qu.*83. *qu.*80. And againe, ſeeing it is evident in Scripture, that Chriſt had anguiſh in ſoule, when he ſaith, My ſoule is heavy unto death; they muſt comprehend this alſo under the blood of the croſſe, or elſe it is excluded: But Bernard for that excellently ſaith, Totum propter nos agebatur, ut non modo paſſio corporis ſed cordis affectio pro nobis faceret: all was done for us; that not only the paſſion of his body, but the affection of his heart ſhould make to our ſalvation, in die S. Andreæ ſerm. 1.

Galat.6.4.

4. By the Croſſe alſo of Chriſt, not the materiall tree onely, whereon he ſuffered, or the viſible torments which he endured, but the whole myſterie of our redemption, which by his chaſtiſements was puniſhed, is expreſſed: as S. Paul ſaith, he will not reioyce but in the croſſe of Chriſt, whereby hee was crucified to the world, Galat.6.14. It was not the materiall croſſe, whereby Paul was crucified, but the ſpirituall force and efficacie of Chriſts ſacrifice: So in the ſame place, verſ. 12. he ſpeaketh of ſuffering perſecution for the croſſe of Chriſt, that is, the Goſpel and faith of Chriſt: So alſo Auguſtine taketh the croſſe: Nemo poteſt tranſire mare huius ſeculi, niſi cruce Chriſti portatus; No man can paſſe through the ſea of this world, unleſſe he be borne up by the croſſe of Chriſt, &c. and afterward he expoundeth himſelfe, Crede in Crucifixum, & poteris pervenire: Beleeve in him that was crucified, and thou maiſt goe through, tract. 2. in Evangel. Ioan. Thus then I truſt it is evident; that neither the blood nor the wood of Chriſts croſſe doe aboliſh or diminiſh the bleſſed ſufferings of Chriſt in his ſoule.

The Queſtion Confirmed.

CHriſt in himſelfe being holy, innocent, undefiled was touched with no conſcience of ſin; as Auguſtine well ſaith, Inter iudicem iuſtum, & conſcientiam tuam, noli timere niſi cauſam tuam: Betweene the iuſt judge and thy conſcience, feare nothing but thy cauſe, in Pſal. 37. yet we doe beleeve to our great comfort, that as Chriſt in great compaſſion toward us, did aſſume and appropriate our ſinnes to himſelfe, making them as it were his owne; ſo he alſo in his ſoule and conſcience did travaile with exceeding griefe and ſorrow for our ſinnes, as for his owne.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 2. 17. It became him in all things to be made like unto his brethren: Heb. 2. 17. and Heb. 4. 15. He was tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne: If Chriſt then had experience of all our Heb. 4. 15.
tentations and ſorrowes, but without ſin; then of the trouble alſo and perplexity of conſcience, which is in us, but in him without ſinne: ſo Fulgent ſaith; Rationalem animam habens, quicquid fuit infirmitatis animæ ſine peccato ſuſcepit & pertulit, ut dum humana animæ paſſiones in anima quam accepit, vinceret, noſtras quoq; animas ab infirmitatibus liberaret. Having a reaſonable ſoule, whatſoever infirmity of the ſoule without ſin he tooke and bare, that while he overcame the paſſions of mans ſoule in his ſoule which he tooke, he might alſo deliver our ſoules from infirmities, ad Thraſim lib. 3. Damaſcene to the like effect: τὰ πάθη ὑπέμεινεν τὴν κατ᾽ αὐτῶν νίκην βραβεύων he endured our griefes, preparing for us the victory over them, de fid. orthodox lib. 3. c. 24. What aſſurance then ſhould we have, not to be ſwallowed up of griefe, when we are touched with conſcience of ſinne, but that Chriſt in himſelfe overcame theſe our tentations? And ſeeing S. Peter ſaith, that he bare our ſinnes. 1. Pet. 2. 24. And the Prophet ſaith, 1. Pet. 2. 24. that God layd upon him the iniquities of us all, Iſay 53. 6. how could our ſinnes be divorced and ſepa- Iſay 53. 6.
rated from their ſorrowes? if Chriſt then truly bare our ſins, he ſuſtained alſo the griefe of conſcience for them, which is the inſeparable companion of our ſinnes. Therefore as Origen ſaith, Quoniam ſemel aſſumpſerat hominem, utitur omnibus quæ ſunt in homine: Becauſe he once tooke upon him man, he uſeth all that is in man: homil. 13. in Matth. and S. Ambroſe: Minus mihi contulerat, niſi meum ſuſcepiſſet affectum: ergo pro me doluit, qui nihil habuit, quod pro ſe doleret: ſuſcepit triſtitiam meam, ut mihi ſuam lætitiam largiretur, debuit dolorem ſuſcipere, ut vinceret triſtitiam, non excluderet: He had done little for me, if he had not taken mine affection; therefore he was grieved for mee, who had nothing to be grieved for in himſelfe; he tooke my ſorrow to give me his ioy: he was to take my ſorrow to extenuate my griefe, not to exclude it: in 22. Luk. S. Ambroſe giveth three notable reaſons of our griefe in Chriſt: 1. becauſe if he had not taken all our affections, he had not done for us what he could. 2. He tooke griefe to give us ioy, but ioy of conſcience he giveth us: Ergo, he had griefe of conſcience. 3. No ſorrow in us is overcome, which was excluded from Chriſt, therefore if he had not the contrition and trouble of ſpirit, we have no hope to ſubdue it.

Argum. 2. That heavineſſe and griefe of ſoule, which Chriſt had upon the croſſe, and before in his agonie; at other times he had not: for the ſame griefe would have wrought the ſame effects, as to cauſe him to ſweat drops of blood, and to complaine of his forſaking: but Chriſt before did ſorrow in compaſſion and commiſeration, as when he wept over Ieruſalem: yea and Origen ſaith, that even now our ſinnes are a griefe to Chriſt: Salvator meus luget etiam nunc peccata mea, ſalvator meus lætari non poteſt, dum ego in iniquitate permaneo: eſt tam diu in mœrore, donec ego perſiſto in errore: My Saviour doth even now mourne for my ſinne: my Saviour cannot rejoyce, while I of ſinne make choice: he is in ſorrow, as long as I am in ſinne, Hom. 7. in Levit. Which is agreeable to the ſaying of the Apoſtle, Grieve not the ſpirit, Epheſ. 4. 30. But Chriſts ſorrow upon the Croſſe, was not that where- Epheſ. 4. 30. with he was touched before, and in ſome ſort ſince; Ergo, it was not a ſorrow onely in compaſſion or commiſeration.

Argum. 3. The Fathers are here very plentifull, beſide theſe teſtimonies alleaged: Firſt Hieronim. Pſa. 69. 5. Tu noſti inſipientiam, dominus & ſalvator, noſter ſub perſona aſſumpti hominis loquitur: Lord thou knoweſt my fooliſhnes; our Lord and Saviour ſpeaketh in the perſon of man, whom he tooke. If Chriſt doe confeſſe our ſinnes as his owne, then his heart could not be without the griefe of them: as Auguſtine ſaith, Quot habes in corde in compunctiones facinorum, tot habe illic punctiones confeſſionum: As many compunctions of ſinne as are in thy heart, ſo many confeſſions there ſhould be. in Pſal. 74.

2. Ambroſe ſeemeth to make this the cauſe of Chriſts long ſilence upon the croſſe: Illo ſilentio paſſionis ſuæ clamorem omnem in poſterum impiæ vocis abolevit: By the ſilence of his croſſe he aboliſhed all clamors and complaints of the voyce of ſinners, ſerm. 14. in Pſal. 119. As hee in ſilence mourned for our ſinnes, and felt the burthen, ſo hath he ſtayed for ever the deſperate outcryes and complaints of his members for their ſinnes.

3. Origen: Chriſtus ſacerdos eſt, qui comedit peccata populi; audi ſcripturam, deus noſter ignis conſumens: quid conſumit deus ignis, nunquid ligna aut ſtipulam? conſumit deus ignis humana peccata: ipſe peccata noſtra ſuſcepit & in ſeipſo tanquam ignis ea comedit & abſumit: Chriſt is the prieſt, which doth eat the ſins of the people: heare the Scripture, our God is a conſuming fire; what doth God the fire con-

ſume wood or ſtubble ? God the fire doth conſume mens ſinnes; he tooke our ſinnes, and in himſelfe as a fire did devoure and conſume them, Hom.5.in Levit.6. So Ambroſe againe ſaith, Chriſtus velut carbo ſecundum carnem exuſſit noſtra peccata: Chriſt was as that coale (taken from the altar, Iſay 6.) which in his fleſh, burned, or conſumed our ſinnes, lib.1.de ſpirit,c.9. And what this inward fire is, the Prophet David ſheweth, Pſal.39.3. My heart was hot within me, and while I muſed, the fire kindled. The inward griefe and trouble of ſoule in Chriſt was this fire, wherewith our ſinnes are conſumed.

Thus have we the teſtimonies of Origen, Fulgentius, of the Africane and South Church; Damaſcene of the Greek; Hierom, Ambroſe, of the Latine, for the inward griefe and trouble of Chriſt in his ſoule.

Harm.ſect.6. pag.108. The ſame is the confeſſion of ſome of the reformed Churches, Saxonie. artic.3. Chriſt derived unto himſelfe this true and exceeding great anger: but this great anger of God could not bee felt in Chriſts ſoule without exceeding griefe and horror for the time.

3.p.q.46.art.6. Thomas ſaith, Doloris interioris cauſa, &c. That the cauſe of the inward griefe of Chriſt, was firſt the ſinnes of all mankind which he aſcribed unto himſelfe, as it is in the Pſal.21.2. verba delictorum meorum, the words of my ſinnes: ſo alſo Lyranus upon that place, he calleth the ſins of the people his, becauſe of the affinitie of the head and members.

If then our Saviour Chriſt was tempted like unto us in all ſorts, ſinne onely excepted, arg.1. If together with our ſinne he bare the ſorrowes of ſinne, arg.2. If at other times he ſorrowed in compaſſion, and commiſeration, but upon the croſſe more, arg.3. If the Fathers affirme, that Chriſt hath taken our ſorrow to give us joy, that he hath in himſelfe as a fire conſumed our ſinnes, arg. 4. there remaineth no doubt, but that Chriſt verily in his ſoule was troubled and perplexed with ſorrow for our ſinnes.

The ſeventh part, that CHRIST by his death did fully ſatisfie the Iuſtice of God, and appeaſed his wrath in paying the ranſome for our ſinnes, which he tooke upon him together with the puniſhment thereof, in which reſpect he is truly ſayd to have dyed iuſtly, and as a debtor to the Law of Gods iuſtice for us.

The Obiections Anſwered.

Art,21. 1 OBject.1.Ezech.18.20. The ſame ſoule that ſinneth ſhall dye: from this place Bellarmine inferreth Iniquum eſſe, &c. That it is unjuſt that one man ſhould be puniſhed for another, tom.3.p.152.d. Ergo, it was not iuſt that Chriſt, though our ſurety, ſhould be put to death for us.

2. 2. Chriſt dyed for us of love, and moſt willingly without conſtraint he layd downe his life for us: No man taketh it away from me, Iohn 10. Fevard.p.427.lin.6. That which Chriſt then did of love, hee was not forced unto by law.

3. 3. Chriſt muſt not be conſidered onely as a faithfull ſervant, but as coequall unto God, &c. ſuch an one was our Mediatour, Fevard.p.378.conſ.3.lin.13.24. If Chriſt then as a ſervant or ſurety were bound by the law to dye, how could he be our mediatour?

4. 4. Chriſts ſatisfaction, was pluſquam ſufficiens, more than ſufficient, Fevard.p.382.conſ.3.lin.7. therefore he was not bound unto it by law.

1. Anſw. 1. Where the debt is but of money, the ſurety indeed, neither by Gods law or mans, is compelled to give life or ſoule: but where the debt is of body and ſoule, it cannot otherwiſe be payed in the law of iuſtice, but by giving body and ſoule. 2. In ſome caſes by the law of God the ſurety gave life for life; as the Prophet ſheweth to Ahab by this parable: A wan was taken in battell, and committed to another to keepe, under this condition, If he be loſt, thy life ſhall goe for his life, or elſe thou ſhalt pay a talent of ſilver: a price of equall value to his life, that went away: but in the application of this parable, the Prophet leaveth out the talent, becauſe God cannot be waged with money, and ſaith unto Ahab precisely, thy life ſhall goe for his life, 1.King.20.verſe 39 42. 1.King.20.39.

3. Firſt, as the Prophet ſaith, The ſoule that ſinneth ſhall dye: ſo he ſaith, every man ſhall beare his iniquitie: he may as well conclude, that Chriſt did not beare our ſinnes, as that he was not puniſhed for us in iuſtice. Secondly, as the wickednes of the wicked ſhall be upon him, ſo the righteouſnes of the righteous ſhall be upon him: If he will conclude from hence, that our wickedneſſe did not lye upon Chriſt, he muſt exclude the righteous alſo from the righteouſnes of Chriſt. I may ſay here with Hierome: De praeſenti compede utcunque erue pedem: You muſt eft-ſoones deliver your ſelfe of theſe doubts, & your feet from theſe fetters. Fourthly, yea you will ſay, this is ſoone done; for it is not inferred from hence that Chriſt did not beare our ſinnes and dye for the ſame, but not in iuſtice, as indebted, or bound unto it.

Rom.3.26. I anſwere, as it was juſt with God to iuſtifie us that are of the faith of Ieſus, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.3.26. ſo is it iuſt that Chriſt ſhould be condemned for our ſinnes: it is as much of iuſtice, that our ſinnes imputed to him, ſhould cauſe his death, as for his righteouſnes imputed to us to bring us to life. So Origene ſaith, Chriſtus ſine dubio pro peccato, quod ex nobis ſuſceperat, quia peccata noſtra portavit — carnem incontaminatam obtulit hoſtiam: Chriſt out of doubt for ſinne, which he tooke of us, becauſe he bare our ſinnes, offered his fleſh an undefiled ſacrifice, Hom. 3. in Levit. If then the bearing of our ſinnes cauſed the ſacrifice of Chriſts fleſh, how was it not iuſt? if it were not iuſt, it was no cauſe.

2. Firſt, who doubteth but that both Gods love and Chriſts love unſpeakeable appeareth in his death: as Auguſtine well ſaith; Angelus virga tetegit Petram & exiit ignis—ſic crux tetegit Chriſtum, & de Petra, quæ erat Chriſtus ignis exiit charitatis: The Angel touched the rocke with a rod, and fire came forth, *Iud.*13.19. ſo the croſſe touched Chriſt, and out of the rocke, which was Chriſt, the flame of charity iſſued forth, Ser. de temp. 108. but the argument followeth not, Chriſt died of love, Ergo, not in iuſtice, for love firſt cauſed him to ſubmit himſelfe to the law: & juſtice to pay our debt. 2. Like as the ſurety firſt of love and good will to his neighbour ſtriketh hands for him, and giveth his word: but then his word being once paſt, he is bound by law to pay the debt, and he cannot ſhift it, Then he is taken with the words of his own mouth, Prov.6.1.2. So Chriſt firſt of love undertooke for us, but this office of love being once undertaken, it is now performed and executed of debt. 3. This may bee further manifeſted by this inſtance: ſin in our firſt parents was voluntarie, but now in their poſterity it is neceſſary: he might have not ſinned if he would, but having once ſinned, he could not abſtaine though he would: he brought himſelfe and his poſterity voluntarily into neceſſary bondage: as S. Peter ſaith, Of whatſoever a man is overcome, to the ſame he is in bondage, 2. Pet. 2. 19. So Auguſtine: illi ſine peccato data eſt libera voluntas, & eam fecit ſervire peccato, horum cum fuerat voluntas ſerva peccati, liberata eſt per illum, &c. To Adam was given free will, which he made the ſervant of ſinne, but in us our will being the ſervant of ſinne is freed by him, that ſaid, if the Sonne make you free, then you are free indeed: *de corrept. grat. c.*12. We ſee then how that which in the election is voluntarie, is in the execution neceſſarie. 4. But a fitter example we cannot take, than from Chriſt himſelfe: for the firſt aſſuming of the humane nature to the Godhead was of grace; as Auguſtine ſaith: quod Chriſtus eſt unigenitus æqualis patri, non eſt gratia, ſed natura, quod autem in unitatem perſonæ unigeniti aſſumptus eſt homo, gratia eſt, non natura confitente evangelio, & gratia Dei erat cum illo: That Chriſt is the only begotten Son equall to his father, it is not grace but nature; but that man is taken into the unity of perſon of the only begotten, it is grace, not nature, the Goſpel confeſſing, the grace of God was with him: Tract. in Ioan. 77. But though the aſſuming of the humane nature was of grace, yet the union of the divine and humane nature is not by grace, as it was concluded, Concil. Conſt. in 5. *c.*4. Si quis dicit ſecundum gratiam factam unitionem verbi ad hominem, anathema: If any man ſay that the union of the word with man, is of grace, let him be accurſed, &c. the firſt aſſumption of mans nature was of grace, but the conjunction is not of grace, but by union of perſon: the worſhip now given unto the humanitie of Chriſt, is not given him of favour and grace, but due unto him becauſe of his perſon, as the Apoſtle ſaith, *Heb.*1.6. when he bringeth in his firſt begotten ſonne into the world he ſaith, let all the Angels of God worſhip him. In like manner Chriſts aſſuming upon him to pay our debt was of grace and voluntary, but now the performing thereof is of debt, and neceſſary. So then as the exalting of the humane nature in Chriſt, was in the firſt ſuſception, of benignitie, but now in the perſonall union and conjunction, is of dignity: ſo in the humbling of himſelfe to dye for us, he firſt ſhewed his free benevolence, and then ſubmitted himſelfe to iuſtice and patience.

How a thing at the firſt voluntary, afterwar is neceſſarie.

Prov.6.1.2.

2.Pet.2,19.

The union of the two natures in Chriſt not of grace though the firſt aſſumption of the humane nature were of grace.

Heb.1.6.

3.

1. That one may be both a ſuretie and a mediator, the example of Iudah ſheweth: who firſt was a mediator to his father, to intreate him to let Beniamin go with them, ſaying, ſend the boy with me, that we may riſe and goe, that we may live and not die: *Gen.*43.8. then he ſaith, ver.9. I will be ſurety for him, of mine hand ſhalt thou require him.

Gen.43.8.

2. Who can be a more effectuall mediator, than he that hath payed the debt, of whoſe faithfulnes the creditor hath already experience: as Paul to Philemon is a moſt efficient mediator for Oneſimus: becauſe he was a ſufficient ſurety: If he hath hurt thee, or oweth thee ought, put it upon mine accounts, I Paul have written with mine own hand, I will recompenſe thee: Philem. ver. 18. Then the Apoſtle boldly maketh his requeſt, ver. 20. yea brother let me obtaine this pleaſure of thee in the Lord. So the mediation of Chriſt is not empaired by his ſuretiſhip, but grounded upon it, his propitiation for our ſinnes is the ſtrength of his advocation: We have an advocate with the father, and he is the reconciliation for our ſins.

Philem.18.

3. Though other ſureties could not be mediators, it is otherwiſe with Chriſt, who is both God and man: as man, he is a ſurety and ſuffered for us; as God and man he is our mediator, & ſufficeth for us: his ſuffering and ſatisfaction doth only concerne his manhood: the Godhead did not ſatisfie, but was ſatisfied: therefore as he is a ſufferer & ſatisfactor for us, ſo he is not properly a mediator: to the which office both the nature of his humanity, and power of his divinity is required: as Bernard well ſaith; ſicut mediator, &c. as our mediator hath joyned together in one perſon his humanity and divinitie; ſo every one of his workes muſt of neceſſitie appertaine to one or other nature, &c. Ad hanc ſcilicet miſeriæ, ad illam pertinet potentia: quicquid ergo miſeria paſſus eſt, ex homine contraxit: quicquid potenter operatus eſt, à patre habuit: To his humane nature belongeth his miſerie; to his divine, his power and dignitie: what he ſuffered in miſerie, he had of man; what he wrought powerfully, he received of his father: ſerm. de verb. ſapient.

4. 1. The argument followeth not, he paid more then we did owe, Ergo, he paid not that which we did owe: rather the contrary followeth, he paid more, Ergo, he paid the leſſe: if a ſuretie in his great abundance will pay twenty thouſand, where the debt is but ten thouſand, is not the debt anſwered? He that giveth more than meaſure, preſſed downe, ſhaken together, running over, *Luk.*6.38. doth he not give meaſure? 2. Chriſt in reſpect of the efficacie, 1. of his croſſe, and 2. dignitie of his perſon, and 3. innocencie of nature, paied more than the law required: For 1. he only did not redeeme us, but hath endued us with righteouſnes, and ſo as the Apoſtle ſaith, grace ὑπερεπερίσσευσεν hath ſuperabounded, Rom. 5.20. 2. Neither could the law have required the ſonne of God to have ſuffered for us: and therefore as the Apoſtle ſaith, Herein appeared the love of God toward us, becauſe he ſent his only begotten ſonne. 1. Iohn 4.9. And he was not indebted any thing to the law in reſpect of his owne innocency: for as S. Peter ſaith, he did not ſinne, neither was there any guile found in his mouth: And ſo Auguſtine ſaith, Venit ille ſine debito, quia ſine ullo peccato, — & quæ non rapuerat exolvens nos à ſempiterno debito miſericorditer liberavit: Hee came without debt, becauſe without ſinne, and paying that he never tooke, mercifully hath freed us from our everlaſting debt, de diverſ. ſer. 8. Wherefore in reſpect of the manner and quality of Chriſts ſufferings, hee paid more than was owing, but for the ſubſtance of the debt, which was the whole puniſhment of body and ſoule, he payed the ſame which the law required. And if Chriſts ſatisfaction were more than ſufficient; if he ſuffered more than was requiſite: with what face can the Fryer denie that he ſuffered not in ſoule, which was neceſſarie to our redemption: There cannot be an exceeding where any thing is wanting.

And concerning the fathers which may bee objected, I anſwere, that they doe obſerve divers ends and uſes of Chriſts death, and alleage ſundry cauſes thereof: as Auguſtine ſheweth theſe, 1. Gods love appeareth, 2. the priviledge of humane fleſh, ſeeing our nature is coupled with the divinity, 3. the grace of God, without our merits, 3. we learne humilitie and obedience by Chriſts death, 5. and the reward of obedience, lib. 13. de trinitat. c. 17. And againe, Auguſtine further writeth thus in effect of this matter, &c. God could have armed an Angel againſt the devill: but it was meet that Chriſt ſhould undergoe this buſines, 1. leſt injury might be offered to God, if man ſhould bee redemed by another, then by whom he was created, 2. ſeeing Sathan did make himſelfe a God in earth: It behoved him to come, which ſhould worthily be worſhipped of every creature. 3. The iniury was offred to the ſecond perſon in the Trinity: For Satan next to God the Father would be worſhipped: ex utroq. mixtim. q. 113.

Cyprian alſo rendereth another reaſon; Sine hoc holocauſto poterat deus tantum condonaſſe peccatum, ſed veniæ facilitas laxaret habenas peccatis effrænibus, quæ etiam vix Chriſti cohibent paſſiones: God without this holocauſt could have pardoned ſo great ſinne, but the facility or eaſines of pardon would have given liberty to the raynes of ſinne, which Chriſts paſſions doe ſcarcely reſtraine: ſerm. de paſſi. Theſe fathers thus ayming and geſſing at the cauſes of Chriſts death, deny not, but it was neceſſary for Chriſt to die to pay our debt, and conſequently that it was iuſt ſo to be: as Auguſtine before ſaith: non alium oportuit venire: it behooved him and none other to come ex utroq. mixtim. qu. 113. And againe he ſaith to this effect: though God might have taken man otherwhere, then from Adams ſtock to bee the mediator: liberatum per eum oportuit qui non erat in crimine, quamvis eſſet ex genere: Yet man ought to be delivered by him, which was of the poſterity, though not in the ſame iniquitie. de trin. lib. 13. c. 17. whence commeth this oportet, it ought to be, or why muſt Adam be delivered by Adams ſeed, but that iuſtice ſo required, that man ſhould ſuffer for mans offence?

Obiect. But it may be thus further objected: if Chriſt died according to the iuſtice of the law, then the Iewes, together with Pilate and the high Prieſts, did but that which was iuſt; and ſo ſhould bee freed from the guilt of Chriſts blood.

Anſw. Auguſtine doth very well reſolve this queſtion: Facta eſt traditio à patre, facta eſt à filio, facta eſt à Iuda; una res facta eſt: ſed quæ res diſcernit, &c? quia hoc fecit filius & pater in charitate, Iudas in proditione: Chriſt was delivered by his father, by himſelfe, by Iudas: there is one act: how are they diſcerned? becauſe the father and ſonne did this in charity, Iudas in treachery: in Epiſtol. 1. Ioan. tractat. 7.

How Chriſt was delivered up by the determinate counſell of God.

Likewiſe Origen to the ſame effect; Deus tradidit Chriſtum propter miſericordiam in genus humanum, &c. Iudas propter avaritiam, ſacerdotes propter invidiam, diabolus propter timorem: God delivered Chriſt in mercy to man, Iudas of covetouſnes, the Prieſts for envy, the divell for feare. Tract. 35. in Matth. Wherfore though Chriſt were delivered up by the determinate counſell of God, and in reſpect thereof his death was iuſt and profitable: yet the inſtruments for the execution being malicious, are not excuſable, but their act againſt Chriſt was moſt uniuſt and damnable.

Matth.27.19.

Pilate not innocent.

Of Pilates wife and of her dreame.

2. The Iewes are ſo farre from excuſe, that even Pilate, who ſeemed to have ſome reverence of Chriſts perſon, and openly waſhed his hands, was not innocent. There is greater queſtion made of Pilats wife, which ſuffered many things in her dreame of Chriſt, and acknowledged Chriſt to be a iuſt man, and ſent word to Pilate to have nothing to doe with him, Matth. 27. 19. Some doe thinke that the devill, being in a great doubt what to doe, as he ſet the Iewes a worke on the one ſide to put Chriſt to death, ſo he cauſed a dreame to fall upon Pilates wife, therby to hinder Chriſts death; thus thinketh Rabanus in gloſſ. ordinar. Lyra, with others. But I rather approve Chryſoſtomes iudgement, and Theophylacts upon that place, who thinke, that this dreame was Gods worke: Factum eſt ſomnium non ut Chriſtus abſolveretur, ſed ut ſervaretur uxor: This dreame was wrought, not that Chriſt ſhould bee delivered, but Pilates wife ſaved. Likewiſe Auguſtine: In nativitate mundi uxor ducit virum ad mortem; in paſſione Chriſti uxor provocat ad ſalutem: In the creation or nativitie of the world, the woman bringeth her husband to death: in the paſſion of Chriſt the wife doth provoke the man to ſalvation, de temper. ſer. 121.

Howſoever it was with Pilats wife, who had a good perſwaſion of Chriſt, and was guiltleſſe of his death: yet Pilate could no way be innocent; he waſhed his hands in hypocriſie, but his heart was full of cruelty; as Cyprian well ſaith: Non excuſas, ſed accuſas, cauſam tibi facis cum Iudæis communem; illi ſe proditione, tu parricidio te condemnas; illi lingua, tu ferro occidis: Thou doeſt not excuſe but accuſe, thou art in the ſame cauſe with the Iewes; they by treachery condemne themſelves, thou by murther and crueltie; they kill him with their tongues, thou with the ſword, ſer. de paſſion. So Ambroſe: Pilatus ipſe iniquitatis ſuæ teſtis, qui ore abſolvit, corde condemnat; laverit licet manus, tamen facta non diluit: Pilate is a witneſſe of his owne iniquitie, which doth commend Chriſt with his mouth, and condemne him in his heart; he doth waſh his hands, but cleanſeth not his deeds, ſerm. 49.

Wherefore if Pilate who made ſome ſemblance of love and reverence toward Chriſt, was yet guilty of his blood, how much more worthy of condemnation were the Iewes, that with will, word and workes did perſecute him to death, and killed the Lord of life, Acts 3.15. And as Origen well ſaith: Quantum putas erroris fuit, ipſam principalem omnem vitam ream mortis pronounciare? How great an error was it, to pronounce the chiefe and principall life worthy of death? Tract. 35 in Matth. Acts 3.15.

The Queſtion Confirmed.

1. THat Chriſt in himſelfe was moſt holy, innocent, and juſt, and in that behalfe moſt wrongfully and undeſervedly put to death of the Iewes, we hold it blaſphemy not to acknowledge it: the Scriptures do teſtifie, that the Iewes denied the holy and iuſt one, and killed the Lord of life, Act. 3.14.15. And Auguſtine ſaith: Dominus mortem pro nobis indebitam reddidit, ut debita nobis non noceret: The Lord did pay for us an undue death, that due death might not hurt us, lib. 4. de Trinitat. cap. 13. Acts 3.14,15.

2. Againe, we moſt thankefully acknowledge in the death of Chriſt the moſt unſpeakeable love of Chriſt, 1. Ioh. 3.16. Herin have we perceived love, that he layd downe his life for us: which love of Chriſt Auguſtine thus deſcribeth, Divina charitas in Chriſto ad ignoſcendum, — inter opprobria ſecura, inter odia benefica, inter iras placida, inter inſidias innocens, &c. There was a divine charitie of Chriſt in forgiving, ſtedfaſt among taunts, bounteous againſt hatred, calme againſt rage, innocent though wronged, ſerm. 39. de tempor. 1. John 3.16. Chriſts exceeding love to mankinde.

3. Our bleſſed Saviour alſo moſt willingly offered himſelfe upon the croſſe for us, and was obedient to the will of his father: Heb. 5.8. Though he were the ſonne, yet learned he obedience. So Bernard ſaith, Non mors filij, ſed voluntas placuit ſponte morientis: Not the dying of his ſonne pleaſed God, but that he was willing, epiſt. 191. Heb. 5.8.

4. All this being confeſſed, that Chriſt was in himſelfe innocent, toward us loving and beneficient, in his death willing and patient: yet ſeeing hee as our ſurety payd our debts, it was iuſt before God, that as he in himſelfe bare our ſinnes, ſo he alſo ſhould pay the price and diſcharge the debt, and ſo anſwere his fathers iuſtice.

Argum. 1. S. Paul ſaith, Rom. 3.25.26. God hath ſet forth Chriſt to be a reconciliation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſnes by the forgiveneſſe of ſins which are paſſed, &c. to ſhew at this time his righteouſneſſe, that he might be iuſt, and a iuſtifier of him, which is in the faith of Ieſus: From hence I reaſon thus; imputation of ſinne is unto condemnation, as imputation of righteouſnes is unto iuſtification: but it is iuſt with God to iuſtifie us by the righteouſnes of Chriſt, therefore it was iuſt before God, that Chriſt for our ſins ſhould be condemned to death. Bernard thus giveth witneſſe hereto: Iuſtum eſt, ut reddat deus quod debet; debet autem, quod pollicitus eſt: It is iuſt, that God ſhould render that which he oweth; and he oweth what he promiſed, lib. de liber. arbiter. So then as it is iuſt with God to performe ſalvation unto us in Chriſt which he hath promiſed: ſo it was iuſt with Chriſt to pay that debt which he undertooke to be performed. Rom. 3.25.26.

Argum. 2. God decreeth no uniuſt thing: but he decreed the death of Chriſt; as S. Peter ſaith, hee was delivered up by the determinate counſell & foreknowledge of God. Act. 2.23. God did not only foreknow it, but decree and determine it: by the determinate counſell, ſaith the Apoſtle, ὡρισμένῃ βουλῇ, and therefore God is ſayd to ſend his ſonne to dye for us. 1. Ioh. 4.16. God then was the author of his ſons death, but he is not the author of evill things or uniuſt: therefore Chriſts death in reſpect of Gods decree was not uniuſt. Auguſtine ſaith well: Deus aliud fecit & ordinavit; aliud non fecit, ſed ordinavit: God did or decreed ſomewhat to be done, and diſpoſed and ordered it; ſomething hee doth not, but yet diſpoſeth and ordereth, in Pſal. 7. As in this caſe, the malice of the Iewes God decreed not, but hee diſpoſed of their malice to a good end: but the death of Chriſt he both decreed and diſpoſed. Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Peccatores in malis præſcitos tantum non prædeſtinatos, &c. Sinners are only fore-ſeene in their evill actions, not predeſtinate, contra Pelag. Hypognoſtic. artic. 6. But Chriſt was not only foreſeene to dye, but was predeſtinate thereto: Ergo, it was not evill. How God decreed Chriſt to die. Acts 2.23. 1. Iohn 4.16.

Arg. 3. If Gods iuſtice be fully ſatisfied, and his wrath deſervedly appeaſed by the death of Chriſt, it followeth that Chriſt died iuſtly: But the firſt is evident, becauſe Chriſt hath by his croſſe ſlaine the hatred betweene God and us, Eph. 2.16. and before he dyed for us, we were the children of wrath, Epheſ. 2.3. Ergo, Chriſt dyed in reſpect of our ſinnes to anſwere Gods iuſtice iuſtly. Epheſ. 2.16. Epheſ. 2.3.

The propoſition, which is onely doubted, is thus prooved: firſt, nothing can ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, but that which is iuſt: if Chriſts death then were not iuſt before God, Gods iuſtice could not bee ſatisfied by

Epheſ.5.2.

by it. Secondly, neither can any thing pleaſe God or appeaſe his wrath by way of ſatisfaction, but that which is iuſt: Chriſts death pleaſed God, it was a ſacrifice of a ſweete ſmelling favour unto God. Eph. 5.2. Thirdly, S. Paul ſaith Rom. 8.3. God ſpared not his owne ſonne: not to ſpare is of iuſtice, to ſpare is of love and mercie: it was mercy to us, but iuſtice in Chriſt, that he dyed for the redemption of our ſins. Fourthly, Bernard ſaith, Non potuit expiari, Adæ peccatum, niſi Chriſti morte: Adams ſin could not be expiated, but by the death of Chriſt, epiſt. 191. It could not be otherwiſe done, becauſe Gods iuſtice could not otherwiſe be ſatisfied: expiation then by death and blood belongeth to Gods iuſtice.

Rom.7.12.
Math.27.46.
Galath.3.13.
How Chriſt was accuſed for us.

Argu. 4. None are forſaken of God, or ſtand accurſed by the law uniuſtly: for God is iuſt, and the law is iuſt, holy, good. Rom. 7.12. But Chriſt was as forſaken of God in part in the inſtant of his paſſion: as he himſelfe complaineth, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Math. 27.46. he was alſo by the law made a curſe for us. Galat. 3.13. Ergo, Chriſt in reſpect of our ſins, in the ſight of God ſuffered iuſtly. Beda witneſſeth with us: Quid mirum ſi maledictum eſt deo, quod deus odit; niſi enim deus odiſſet peccatum & mortem noſtram, non ad eam ſuſcipiendam & delendam filium ſuum mitteret: What marvell if that be accurſed of God, which God hateth? for unleſſe God had hated ſinne and death, hee would not have ſent his Son to take it, and aboliſh it, in 3. ad Galat. Chriſt then ſtood as accurſed before God, becauſe he took upon him that which God hateth, namely our ſin, and death the fruit of ſin.

1.Timoth.4.8.
Iohn 11.50.

Argum. 5. Theſe three, utilitie, neceſſitie, equitie are inſeparable companions: that onely is profitable, which is good and iuſt; Theſe things are good and profitable, 1. Tim. 4.8. but Chriſts death was profitable; as Caiaphas propheſied, συμφέρει It is expedient, profitable for us that one man dye for the people, and the whole nation periſh not. Iohn 11.50. Chriſts death is then both neceſſary and profitable, and therefore both good and iuſt.

2.Theſ.1.6.

Obiect. The afflictions of the Saints are profitable to themſelves to correct them, to others for their example, yet are they not iuſt: as the Apoſtle ſaith, It is iuſt with God to recompence tribulation, to them that trouble you. 2. Theſſ. 1.6. If they which afflict Gods children are puniſhed iuſtly, then they did trouble them uniuſtly.

Pſal.119.161.
verſe 71.75.
Luke 23.41.

Anſ. The afflictions of the Saints, in reſpect of their perſecutors, are uniuſt: as the Prophet David ſaith, Pſal. 119.161. They have perſecuted me without a cauſe: yet he confeſſeth in reſpect of himſelfe toward God, that his afflictions were iuſt and good; ver. 71. It is good for me that I have beene afflicted, that I may learne thy ſtatutes: ver. 75. I know that thy iudgements are right, and that thou haſt afflicted me iuſtly, or in truth: So Chriſts death, in reſpect of the malice of his enemies and in his owne innocencie, was uniuſt, as the thiefe confeſſed, Luk. 23.41. We are righteouſly here, but this man hath done nothing amiſſe. But as Chriſt was our ſurety and bare our ſinnes, ſo it was iuſt that he ſhould ſuſtaine the puniſhment of them.

Luke 10.42.
Rom.7.12.
Heb.2.17.10.

Againe, that which is neceſſary is iuſt: for that which is neceſſary is good: Luke 10.42. One thing is neceſſary, Mary hath choſen the beſt part. So then, neceſſarium is optimum, the neceſſary thing is the beſt thing: and that which is good is iuſt: as Rom. 7.12. the law is ſayd to be δικαία, ἀγαθή iuſt and good, Chriſts death is neceſſary, Heb. 2.17. ὤφειλε, debuit, he ought to be like us in all things, &c. that he might be a faithfull high Prieſt: and verſ. 10. ἔπρεπε it became him: that which is neceſſary and comely is iuſt: Chriſts death was expedient, comely, neceſſary: Ergo, iuſt.

Gods iuſtice how ſatisfied by Chriſts death.

For the neceſſity and expediencie of Chriſts death the fathers doe thus teſtifie: Ambroſ. triſtis eſt, quia mori neceſſe eſt: he is ſad, becauſe it was neceſſarie he ſhould dye, in 22. cap. Luc. But in another place: Intellige non ex neceſſitate, ſed voluntariam Chriſti paſſionem: Vnderſtand that Chriſts paſſion was voluntary, not of neceſſitie, lib. 4. in Luc. So then Chriſts death was neceſſary, and it was not: it was not neceſſary, that is, violent or compulſory in reſpect of Chriſts obedience and willingneſſe; it was neceſſary in reſpect of Gods determination.

Againe, he ſaith, Quæ alia erat cauſa incarnationis, niſi ut caro quæ peccaverat per ſe redimeretur, quod peccaverat, ergo, redemptum eſt: What other cauſe was there of Chriſts incarnation, but that the fleſh which had ſinned, ſhould be redeemed by it ſelfe; that which ſinned therefore was redeemed, de incarnat. cap. 6. But this is the iuſtice of God, that the ſame that ſinned, ſhould be by it ſelfe redeemed.

Auguſtine thus ſheweth the expediencie and neceſſity of Chriſts death: Heliſeus inclinavit ſe ut ſuſcitaret puerum,—ſic Chriſtus humiliavit ſe factus obediens uſque ad crucem, quia parvuli eramus parvulum ſe fecit,— & os quodammodo ſuper os poſuit: Helyſa bowed himſelfe to raiſe the childe,—ſo Chriſt humbled himſelfe being obedient to the croſſe, and becauſe we were little ones, he made himſelfe a little one, and as it were layd his mouth upon ours, de tempor. 206.

Likewiſe upon theſe words, Pſal. 51.4. That thou maiſt overcome, when thou art iudged: Non eſt iudicatus deus pater, non eſt iudicatus ſpiritus ſanctus, non invenimus niſi ſolum filium in iſta carne iudicatum—vicit non de Pilato nec de Iudæis, ſed de diabolo, &c. The father was not iudged, nor the holy ſpirit, we find none iudged but the ſonne only in the fleſh,—he overcame not P*ilate*, nor the Iewes but the devill, &c. ſerm. de temp. 49. It was neceſſary then, that Chriſt ſhould be iudged by death, that hee might in being iudged, overcome.

Bernard ſaith excellently: Verbum dei, ut ad nos veniret, propria benignitas invitavit, miſericordia traxit, veritas, qua ſe venturũ prædixerat, compulit: The word of God to come unto us invited his own benignitie, he was moved by his mercy, compelled by his verity, whereby he foretold his comming, &c. die Pentecoſt. ſerm. 2. and this is his equity: So then in Chriſts death there is both neceſſity and equity.

1. Origen ſhall conclude, who thus writeth upon theſe words of Chriſt, Father if it be poſsible let this cup paſſe, Matth 26.39. Quod ad potentiam dei omnia poſſibilia,—quod ad iuſtitiam,—poſſibilia ſolum quæ iuſta ſunt*: In reſpect of Gods power all things are poſſible, in reſpect of his juſtice, thoſe things that are iuſt are onely poſſible, in Matth. tract.* 35. Therefore it was not poſſible for the cup to paſſe from Chriſt, becauſe it was not iuſt. Matth. 26.39.

2. Theodoret ſaith, that Chriſt, Peccatorum tanquam peccator mortem ſuſtinuit, peccati iuſtitiam coarguit. Chriſt as a ſinner did ſuſtaine the death of ſinners, and reproved a ſinne of juſtice, that it delivered that body unto death, which was not ſubject to ſinne. &c. Hence it is inferred, that although Chriſt in himſelfe conſidered dyed unjuſtly, yet taking upon him our ſinnes, it was fit, that as our Redeemer, he ſhould beare the puniſhment due thereunto. In 3. cap. ad Coloſſ.

3. Confeſſ. of Belgia, artic. 20. We beleeve that God, which is both perfectly mercifull, and perfectly iuſt, did ſend his Sonne to take that nature upon him, which thorow diſobedience had offended, that in the ſelfe ſame nature he might ſatisfie for ſinne, and by his bitter death and paſſion pay the puniſhment, that was due unto ſinne, &c. In Chriſts death then both Gods iuſtice and mercy appeared. Harm. ſec. 6. pag. 104.

4. As Thomas well declareth, In that God delivered Chriſt to death,—oſtenditur & Dei ſeveritas —& bonitas, &c. is ſhewed both the ſeveritie of God, which would not forgive ſin without puniſhment, as the Apoſtle ſaith, which ſpared not his owne Sonne; and his merite and goodneſſe, &c. in giving one to ſatisfie for us, when man could not ſufficiently ſatisfie for himſelfe. 3. p. q. 47. art. 3.

The ſumme is this: that if it be iuſt with God to juſtifie us by the imputation of Chriſts iuſtice, arg.* 1. if God decree no uniuſt thing, but he decreed Chriſts death, arg.* 2. if by Chriſts death Gods iuſtice be ſatisfied, his wrath iuſtly appeaſed, arg.* 3. if Chriſt were as forſaken of God in his death in part for our ſinnes, and accurſed by the law, but the law accurſeth none uniuſtly, arg.* 4. if that which bringeth true utilitie, and is joyned with neceſſitie, cannot be without equitie; but in Chriſts death were both utility and neceſſitie, arg.* 5. Then we conclude that Chriſts death, as he was our ſuretie, and tooke upon him our ſinnes, could not in the decree and counſell of God be uniuſt. If Chriſt then ſuffered according to Gods iuſtice, and died to ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, how could his death be unjuſt?

An Appendix to this part, that CHRISTS blood was not given as a price of our redemption to the divell.

The Queſtion Explained.

WEe grant, that God by the price of Chriſts blood delivered us from the power of Satan: but the price was not given to Satan, but payed unto God; Satan was but the miniſter of Gods Iuſtice, and as it were the Iaylor and tormentor that kept us in feare: and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt through death deſtroied him that had power of death, that is the divel. Heb. 2. 14. he had power of death no otherwiſe, than as Gods miniſter and executioner: by Chriſts death then we were delivered from Satans kingdome; and he was vanquiſhed upon the croſſe of Chriſt: as Origen ſaith, Triumphavit poteſtates in ligno crucis. He triumphed over the principalities upon the croſſe, &c. So he expoundeth Saint Paul, homil.* 17. in numer. Coloſſ. 2. 15. and Cyprian witneſſeth: Ubi ventum eſt ad ſanguinem deiectum eſt Satanæ regnum*: When they came to blood, Satans kingdome was deſtroyed, de duplic. martyr. So then Satan was not as compounded with, but confounded by Chriſts blood; not entreated, but defeated; not hired with wages, but required againſt his will, to let his priſoners goe: Chriſt gave nothing to him, but tooke from him, he waged him not, but wreſtled with him; he rendred nothing to him, but rent the captives from him. Art. 22. Heb. 2. 14. Coloſ. 2. 15.

Ruffinus thus inferreth: Non damno aliquo patitur Chriſtus, ſed ut rex carcerem ingreſſus, ut ſolvat catenas, &c. Chriſt ſuffered not to any loſſe, but as a King entreth the Iayle to loſe the chaynes: ſymbol. Ruffin. If Chriſt be the King, and death the priſon, and conſequently Satan having power of death the jaylor, how can the King give a ranſome to the jaylor?

Augustine thus witneſſeth: Neſcit diabolus quanta bona de illo fiunt, etiam cum ſævit, ſæviens intravit cor Iudæ, ſæviens tradidit Chriſtum, ſæviens crucifixit, &c. The divell knoweth not to what good his rage turneth, hee raging entred into the heart of Iudas, raging he delivered up Chriſt, and in his rage crucified him: and Chriſt being crucified, the world was redeemed, in Pſal.* 130. If Satan received a price to content him, how doth he rage againſt Chriſt to torment him? if he delivered him, then was he not delivered as a price to him.

S. Ambroſe alſo thus teſtifieth: Serpens primus crucifigitur recte, ut, quia primus apud deum peccaverat diabolus, primus crucis ſententia feriretur. The Serpent is firſt crucified upon the croſſe, and good reaſon, that becauſe the divell was the firſt that had ſinned before God, he ſhould firſt be ſtricken with the ſentence of the Croſſe, Ambr. ſerm.* 55. If Satan were crucified by the croſſe, he was not ſatisfied; if he were ſurprized by Chriſts blood, then was it not prized to him; if he were as ſold himſelfe thereby into captivity, how could we be bought from him and his captivity, it could not be both a compenſation of our debt unto him, and an obligation more ſurely to bind him: if Chriſts death were his confuſion, he did not then accept it as a condition.

If any of the Fathers have written ſomewhat diverſly from this, which is alleaged, as I deny not but ſome of them, as both Auguſtine and Ambroſe do ſpeake to ſuch effect, that Chriſts blood was accounted as a price to the devill for our deliverance, they muſt not be ſo underſtood, as though either God covenanted, or Satan was contented for that price to let us goe: but that Chriſts blood, was in regard of the efficacie thereof as a price; that we thereby were as fully and effectually delivered, as if we had bin out of Satans hand, by a great price given unto him, redeemed; otherwiſe if we take the fathers in this writing to ſpeake properly, we ſhall make them each to other, and to themſelves alſo contrary.

The Queſtion confirmed.

THat Chriſt by his death and the price of his blood hath delivered us from the power of darknes and hell, it is our holy faith, according to the Scriptures, Coloſ. 1.13. (Coloſſ.1.13.) This price was paid unto God to ſatiſfie Gods iuſtice, it was not given unto Satan: for God is the iudge, Satan is the jaylor, to whom the judge did deliver us becauſe of our ſinnes, Luke 12.58. (Luke 12.58.) the debt, wherein we ſtood bound, was unto our Lord and maſter, and he in juſtice delivered us to the jaylor, till we ſhould pay all that was due, Matth. 18.34. (Matth.18.34.) Chriſt came and payd our debt unto God, not to the devill: the debt being payd, the jaylor hath no longer charge nor power to keepe us in priſon.

Argum. 1. The price of our redemption was payd to our creditor to whom we were indebted: the devill is not our creditor; the Lord abſolutely denieth it. Quis eſt creditor meus, cui vendidi vos? Who is the creditor to whom I have ſold you? Iſay 50.1. (Iſay.50.1.) None is our creditor but God, and to him onely we are indebted, who onely is able to releaſe us of our debt, as we are taught to pray, Mat, 6.12. (Matth.6.12.) Forgive us our debts, ὀφειλήματα, therefore the price of our debts was onely paied to God.

2. The price which was rendered and offered for our redemption was given to him, to whom the ſacrifice of Chriſts blood was offered: for the Apoſtle maketh προσφορὰν, and θυσίαν an offering, tender, or oblation and a ſacrifice to be all one, Epheſ. 5.2. (Epheſ.5.2.) But Chriſt did give himſelfe a ſacrifice of ſweet ſavour to God, ibid. God forbid, that any man ſhould thinke, that Chriſts blood was ſacrificed to the devil: Ergo, it was not offered nor given as a gift or price to the divell.

3. Our Saviour Chriſt is compared to a victorious man, that bindeth the ſtrong man, which is the divell, & entreth by force into his houſe, and ſpoileth him of his goods, that is, delivereth them, whom Satan held as his owne proper goods as captives in priſon, Matth. 12.29. (Matth.12.29.) Chriſt entred by force, not by a price; by aſſaulting, not by aſſenting; by warre, not by wages; by fettering the ſtrong man, not by feeing him; by looſing our bands, not by giving any thing into Satans hands: as Auguſtine to this purpoſe is alleaged fitly by the Maſter of Sentences, lib. 3. diſt. 19. liter. a. Vnde nos diabolus tenebat, deletum eſt ſanguine redemptoris; non enim tenebat nos, niſi vinculis peccatorum noſtrorum; iſta erant catenæ captivorum: venit ille, alligavit fortem vinculis paſſionis ſuæ, intravit in domum eius. i. in corda eorum, ubi ipſe habitabat, & vaſa eius. i. nos eripuit: That wherewith the devill held us, was taken away by the death of Chriſt, he came and bound the ſtrong man with the bands of his death, and entred into his houſe, that is, our hearts, where he dwelt, and tooke away his veſſels or goods, that is, our ſelves, &c. Here is no price offered to Satan, but a force inferred; not any thing given to him but all taken from him. Vpon this ground he concludeth thus: Chriſtus ſe in ara crucis, non diabolo ſed Deo trinitati obtulit: Chriſt in the altar of the croſſe did offer himſelfe, not to the devill, but to God the Trinitie: diſt. 20. liter. c.

Origen ſaith: Diabolus tradidit Chriſtum per timorem, ne avelleretur (genus humanum) de manu eius per doctrinam ipſius: The divell delivered Chriſt for feare, leſt mankind ſhould be pulled from his hand by his doctrine, Tract. 35. Matth. The divell then expected no pay for mans liberty, but deviſeth by Chriſts death to keepe him ſtill in captivitie.

Auguſt. in this behalfe maketh Samſon a figure of Chriſt: Samſon adverſarios ſuos interemptus oppreſſit: ſic Chriſti paſſio interfectio facta eſt perſequentium: Samſon dying killeth his enemies: ſo Chriſts paſſion was the deſtruction of his perſecutors, ſerm. 107. And as the Philiſtims made themſelves ſport in Samſons miſery, which turned to their captivitie: ſo ſaith Auguſtine, Diabolus trophæo ſuo victus eſt —exultavit, quando mortuus eſt Chriſtus, & ipſa morte Chriſti victus eſt: The divell was overcome in his owne policie: he vaunted himſelfe, when Chriſt dyed, but he was vanquiſhed by his death, ſerm. 174. So then as Samſon gave no price to his enemies to be excluded, but uſed a practice wherby they were all concluded; he did not promiſe them any thing to content them, but prevailed by prayer in his death to confound them: ſo Chriſt gave not his blood to Satan to taſte for his delight, but to waſte his kingdome by our delivery; not to pay him wages for us, but to ſtay his raging againſt us.

Againe the author of the Sermons de ſanctis, under Auguſtines name ſerm. 28. compareth Chriſt to Tobias fiſh: Cuius jecore per paſſionem aſſato, fugatus eſt diabolus: By whoſe fleſh and liver as broyled upon the croſſe, the divell was chaſed away, &c. Chriſts blood then was given no more a price to the devill, than that fiſhes liver (if we admit the ſtory for verity, though not for authority) to the uncleane ſpirit: but I will ground no argument upon the Apocryphall ſtory of Tobias, but only ſhew the meaning of the Fathers.

Hierome doth more truly and fitly reſemble Chriſt to Ionas, death & the divell to the Whale: Dum aſſumpti corporis ſolicitaris illecebra, & avidis faucibus prædam putas, interiora tuo adunco dente confoſſa ſunt, ſunt, &c. O death, while thou art entiſed with the baite of his bodie, and thinkeſt to get a prey for thy greedy jawes, thy inward parts are pierced with the hooke, Epitaph. Nepotian. As Ionas was a prey, not a price to the fiſh to appeaſe the wind: ſo Chriſt, though Satan preyed and raged upon his body, was a price to God to aſſwage his wrath.

Iſychius ſaith: Chriſtus pro peccatis noſtris convenienter ſacrificium obtulit: Chriſt for our ſinnes did conveniently offer upon ſacrifice, &c. but ſacrifices are offered onely unto God: therefore the price of our redemption was paid only to him, to whom the ſacrifice of atonement was offered. So the confeſſion of Belgia, artic. 21. Chriſt offered himſelfe in our name before his Father, with a full ſatisfaction for the pacifying of his wrath. Thomas toucheth this point directly, thus determining, Quantum ad pœnam, homo principaliter obligatus erat Deo ut ſummo judici, diabolo ut tortori: In reſpect of the puniſhment, man was chiefly endebted unto God, as the chiefe judge; unto the divell, as the tormenter, &c. And ſo hee reſolveth: therefore Chriſt is ſaid to have offered his blood, the price of our redemption, non diabolo ſed Deo, not unto the devill but unto God.

To conclude: if then we are indebted only to God, not to the devill, arg. 1. if Chriſts body were onely given in ſacrifice to God, arg. 2. if Chriſt by his death did forcibly bnd the ſtrong man, arg. 3. then was not Satan hired as with a price to let his priſoners goe, neither was Chriſts blood counted as a ranſome to him for our deliverance.

The eight Part, that CHRIST in his ſoule did truly feele his Fathers wrath kindled againſt him for our ſinne.

Artic. 23.

FEvardentius denieth, that Chriſt had any ſenſe or feeling of Gods wrath in his ſoule, or that God did ſhew himſelfe as angry towards him for our ſinne, p. 469.

Matth. 3.17.

Argum. 1. Chriſt was alwayes the beloved Son of God, Matth. 3.17. God did not change in turning his love to hatred.

Joh. 10.17.

2. God loved him the more dearely for his obedience to death; hee was not therefore angry with him: Ioh. 10.17. Therefore doth my Father love me, becauſe I lay downe my life, p. 470.

3. If ye ſay God loved him as a Sonne, yet hated him as our ſurety, or became a ſervant for us: yee fall into Neſtorius hereſie, and ſo make two perſons of Chriſt, one beloved, another hated: if yee ſay, that God was not angry indeed, but Chriſt ſo perſwaded; you will coyne a new hereſie, that Chriſt had a falſe opinion of his Father: Fevard. p. 571.

How anger and love may ſtand together.

1. Anſw. 1. Gods temporall wrath upon Chriſt doth not either change or diſcontinue his everlaſting love: for with Chriſts perſon being holy, innocent, righteous, God was never offended: our ſinnes laid upon Chriſt were the object and matter of Gods wrath: a father that doth love his childe dearely, yet may be angry with his childes faults, and in his anger correct them. 2. Abraham loved Iſaac moſt dearely, Geneſ. 22. 2. God bid him take his onely ſonne Iſaac whom he loved: yet at Gods commandement he ſtretched out his hand to have killed him: verſ. 10. Abraham in this inſtant loved the perſon of his ſonne: yet in his holy anger and rage, hee would kill him: I thinke to kill is no fruit or effect of love. If Abraham then at the ſame inſtant retained a fatherly love toward Iſaac, and yet in an holy and juſt zeale would have killed him, why ſhould it ſeeme ſtrange that God not changing his everlaſting love toward his Sonne, yet was angry with our ſinnes which he ſuſtained? 3. Auguſtine well ſaith: Uſque adeò non omnis qui iraſcitur odit, ut aliquando magis odiſſe convincatur qui non iraſcitur: Many times hee that is angry is ſo farre from hating, or not loving, that hee is found rather to hate, which is not angry: in Matth. 16. Hee giveth an inſtance of a childe, which through his fathers lenity runneth in apparant danger of his life. I proove by this ſimilitude that as there may bee wrath in a father without a deſtruction of love; ſo Gods eternall love did ſtand inviolable toward Chriſt without any change, though his wrath appeared in the inſtant of Chriſts death, not ſhewing any alteration in God, but a diverſity of diſpenſation in Chriſt, who now ſuſtained our perſon.

2. The next objection hath the ſame anſwere, ſaving that it ſeemeth to affirme that Chriſt by his obedience to death purchaſed a greater meaſure of love to himſelfe, which is an errour: 1. Becauſe the love of God toward his ſonne being from everlaſting, was alwayes the ſame, neither increaſing nor decreaſing: for this were otherwiſe to make God mutable and changeable, which the Apoſtle denieth, James 1.17. if Gods love ſhould ſometime abate, and ſometime abound. Secondly, Chriſt did not merite any thing to himſelfe, but all for us: as Ambroſe well ſaith. Chriſtus non emerendæ gratiæ ſuæ cauſa, ſed noſtræ eruditionis gratia ieiunavit: Chriſt did not faſt to merite favour or grace to himſelfe, but onely for our erudition ſake: lib. 3. de fid. c. 2. The like may bee ſayd of all other actions of Chriſt: Chriſt obtained not an amplification of his love by his obedience, but a manifeſtation of it only: Chriſtus hoc natus accepit, ut poſt crucem manifeſtaretur, quid à patre, dum generaretur, accepit, non enim tunc accepit à patre, quando à creatura cœpit fieri: Chriſt in his birth received this, that after his death it might bee manifeſted, what he received of his father in his generation; for he did not then firſt receive it, when the creature began to worke it: Ambroſe in 2. Phil. Chriſts glory then, and Iohn 17.5. Gods love toward him was due unto his humanitie in his very firſt incarnation, by right of his Godhead, as our Saviour himſelfe ſaith, Iohn 17.5. Glorifie mee with that glorie, which I had with thee before the world was: This glorie was maniſeſted in time, which was due to Chriſts perſon before all time.

3. 1. Neither doth it follow, that we ſhould make two perſons in Chriſt, when we affirme that at the ſame inſtant God did both love him with an eternall love, and was angry with him with a temporall wrath: Auguſtine will teach you how this may be: Moſes famulus dei quomodo oderat peccatores cum pro eis orabat, quomodo non oderat cum eos occidebat: —ea namque perfectione ſic oderat iniquitatem, quam puniebat, ut diligeret humanitatem pro qua orabat: Moſes the ſervant of God, how did he hate the ſinners, when he prayed for them; how did he not hate them, when he killed them? with ſuch perfection he hated iniquitie, which he puniſhed, that he loved their humanitie, for the which he prayed, in Pſal. 138. So God in Chriſt loved his holines and innocency, but he was angry with our ſins and iniquity which were upon him: Here then are not two perſons, but one and the ſame perſon diverſly conſidered. 2. This then is no Neſtorianiſme: take you heed of Manichiſme, that you make not Chriſt to have done all things fantaſtically and in ſhew, while hee ſweateth drops of blood, complaineth that he was forſaken, as though God were throughly angry with him, and yet no ſuch matter. 3. Neither do we ſay that Chriſt was onely ſo perſwaded of his Father, that he was angry, but indeed hee was ſo for the time, and he verily in his ſoule felt it ſo to be. David was a man greatly beloved of God, whereof he hath his name, Pſal.38.3. yet he truly complaineth of Gods wrath, Pſalm. 38.3. There is nothing ſound in my fleſh, becauſe of thine anger: And how this may be, that God may be temporally offended with the Rom.11.28. Elect, that are eternally beloved, S. Paul ſheweth, Rom. 11.28. Concerning the Goſpell, they are enemies for your ſakes, but as touching the election they are beloved for the Fathers ſake: as the Iewes were temporally rejected; yet eternally in Gods counſell elected; ſo it is in this caſe, as S. Ambroſe well ſheweth: De præſenti Deus juſtitia judicat, non de præſcientia: God doth judge according to preſent juſtice, not according to preſcience: in 9. ad Roman. And he further declareth how ſome may be ſaid to be elected in reſpect of their preſent juſtice which are not in Gods preſcience: and ſo of the contrary, ſome may be for a time in Gods temporall wrath ſuſpended, to whom everlaſtingly ſalvation is intended: ſo Chriſt was eternally elected and dilected or beloved of God, but in reſpect of our ſinnes hanging upon him, he was for a time as forlorne and rejected.

4. Laſtly we muſt diſtinguiſh in Chriſt betweene the faith of his ſoule, and ſenſe of his fleſh: his faith alwayes apprehended Gods favour even in the midſt of his deepeſt torments, as hee ſaith, I ſet God alwayes before me, Pſal. 16.8. but in his preſent ſenſe hee felt and perceived the wrath of God: Our Saviour himſelfe doth warrant this diſtinction: ſaying of himſelfe, The ſpirit is ready, the fleſh is weake, Matth. 26.41. Vpon the which words Saint Ambroſe thus writeth: Matth.16.41. Audi utramque vocem & carnis infirmæ, & ſpiritus prompti (Pater ſi poſſibile eſt, tranſeat calix) hæc eſt carnis vox (ſed non quod ego volo) habes devotionem ſpiritus: Heare each voyce of a weake fleſh, and prompt ſpirit: Father if it be poſſible let the cup paſſe, this is the voyce of the fleſh, (but not as I will,) here is the devotion of the ſpirit.

The Queſtion Confirmed.

THat the wrath of God lay heavily upon Chriſt as our ſurety, and that as hee bare all our ſinnes, ſo he truly felt in his ſoule the wrath of God kindled againſt the ſame: thus we doe make it maniſeſt out of Scripture.

Iſay 53.4. Argum. 1. Iſai. 53.4. We judged him, as plagued, ſmitten of God, and humbled: but no man is plagued, or ſmitten but of God being angry: Ergo.

Anſw. 1. This ſmiting is referred onely to the temporall death of Chriſt by Hierome and others. 2. This might bee done without Gods anger: for as Abraham would have ſacrificed his ſonne without hatred or anger, he loved him ſtill: ſo God did ſuffer his Sonne to be ſlaine without anger. Bellarm. 4. de Chriſti anima. c. 8. reſp. ad argum. 1.

Contra. 1. It is evident, that the Prophet ſpeaketh not of Chriſts bodily death: for hee ſaid before in the beginning of the verſe, he bare our infirmities, that is as the Septuagint tranſlate ἁμαρτίας, ſinnes, whom S. Peter followeth, 1. Pet.2.24. 1 Pet. 2.12. But whence proceedeth the plague due unto ſinne, than from Gods wrath? Againe, his bodily ſufferings are more properly expreſſed in the next verſe: Hee was wounded for our tranſgreſſions.

2. Hierome doth ſo underſtand the Prophet: Factus eſt pro nobis maledictum, ut nos à maledicto liberaret; quod nos pro noſtris debebamus ſceleribus ſuſtinere, ille pro nobis paſſus eſt: ex quo perſpicuum eſt, ſicut corpus flagellatum, ita animam verè doluiſſe: Hee was made a curſe for us, to deliver us from the curſe: for what wee ſhould have ſuſtained for our ſinnes, hee ſuffered for us: whence it is maniſeſt that as his body was whipped, ſo his ſoule was truely grieved, in Eſai. cap. 53. It is therefore untrue which Bellarmine here affirmeth, that Hierome underſtandeth Chriſts bodily death onely.

3. Even the death of the body alſo ſheweth the wrath of God againſt ſinne, as the Apoſtle ſaith: Rom.5.12. That death entred by ſinne: Rom. 5.12. And the Prophet teſtifieth thus: When thou with rebukes doſt chaſtiſe man for iniquitie, thou makeſt his beauty conſume as a moth. Pſal.39.11. The mortalitie then of man doth proceed from the rebukes of God, and his rebukes declare his wrath: Chriſt then even in his bodily death alſo had experience of his fathers wrath againſt ſinne: though wee grant, that death in Chriſts death is vanquiſhed, and the ſting thereof extinguiſhed, 1.*Cor.*15.56,57. And as Ambroſe well ſaith, Chriſtus habet oleum lætitiæ, qui facit exultare morituros, mœſtitiæ ſætorem mortis abolevit: Chriſt hath the oyle of gladnes above his fellowes, which cauſeth men ready to die to rejoyce, and hath aboliſhed the ſtench, and extinguiſhed the ſting of death, *lib.1.de ſpirit.c.*8.

1.Cor.15.56.

4. Abraham in ſacrificing his ſonne did not ceaſe to love him; though in that very act, in his holy zeale, his fatherly affection was for a while ſuſpended: ſo a father notwithſtanding he loveth his child, may in his juſt anger correct him: as Auguſtine ſaith, Quanto melius eſt, ſi iraſceris & corrigis, quàm ſi non iraſcendo perire permittas? How much better is it, if you be angry and correct your ſonne, than by not being angry to ſuffer him to periſh, ſerm.16.in Matth. Like as then Abrahams holy rage againſt his ſonne, which was but in part and for a moment, doth not aboliſh the perpetuall and totall love to his child: ſo by this example we ſee how Chriſt was eternally and totally beloved of God, yet for a while and in part taſted of Gods wrath.

Of Abrahams ſacrificing of his ſonne.

Argum. 2. Iſay 53.5. The chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him: or παιδεία, the diſcipline of our peace, as the Septuagint reade: Chriſt then was to beare that diſcipline and chaſtiſement, which appertained to us, and whereby our peace is purchaſed: but Gods wrath was not otherwiſe appeaſed, but by ſatisfying it; he did not otherwiſe ſatisfie it, than by ſuffering, Heb.5.8. He learned obedience by the things, which he ſuffered: Ergo, he ſuffered and endured Gods wrath for us.

Iſay.53.5.

Anſw. If the whole chaſtiſement due unto us, was layd upon Chriſt: then hee muſt have bin puniſhed eternally in hell, for that was due unto us: if Chriſts temporall puniſhment did ſatisfie for our eternall in regard of the worthineſſe of his perſon; by the ſame reaſon his bodily ſufferings may ſuffice and ſatisfie for the death of our ſoules, *Bellarm.reſp.ad argum.*2.

Contra. 1. Chriſt was to ſuffer the whole puniſhment due unto ſinne, ſo farre as it became the dignitie of his perſon, and the neceſſitie of the worke: but if he had ſuffered eternally, neither could the worke of our redemption have bin accompliſhed, and his perſon ſhould have endured that, which him not beſeemed: and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith. *Heb.*2.10. It became him to be conſecrated through afflictions. Chriſt then was onely to paſſe thorow thoſe afflictions, which became him.

Heb.2.10.

2. It followeth not, becauſe Chriſt is exempted from that puniſhment which became not his perſon, that therefore he ſhould be freed from thoſe ſufferings alſo, which are no derogation unto him: wee attribute ſo much unto the dignity of Chriſt, as that wee aboliſh not the equitie of God: ſo farre with Chriſts perſon it muſt be diſpenſed, as that yet Gods iuſtice be ſatisfied: to ſuffer in ſoule, Gods iuſtice required, neither was Chriſts perſon thereby diſhonoured; therefore thoſe ſufferings he was to endure for us: as our Saviour himſelfe ſaith, Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things, and ſo to enter into his glory, Luke 24.25. Auguſtine well ſaith, Potuerat dominus noſter hoſtem humani generis ſola majeſtate proſternere, ſine incarnationis humilitate, ſine certamine paſſionis, ſed homo, &c. non violentia liberandus fuit, ſed miſerecordia redimendus, — iuſto igitur ordine &c. The Lord could have ſubdued the enemie of mankind onely with his majeſtie, without either the humilitie of his incarnation, or difficulty of his paſſion: but man which had made himſelfe guilty by his owne tranſgreſſion was not by violence to be delivered, but by mercy and indulgence to be redeemed, therefore in iuſt order, &c. *ſerm.*156. It was meete then and juſt, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer as he did for us.

Why Chriſt ſuffered as he did for man.
Luke 24.25.

*Argum.*3. Heb.4.15. Chriſt was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne: as Chriſts members are tempted, ſo was hee, but his members doe feele in their ſoules the terrors of conſcience, and have experience of Gods wrath: as Iob complaineth, Iob 6.4. The arrowes of God are in me, and the terrours of the almighty fight againſt me: and Pſalme 89.46. Shall thy wrath burne like fire? much more then did Chriſt feele the burthen of his fathers wrath, bearing all the ſinnes of the elect in himſelfe.

Heb.4.14.
Iob.6.4.

Anſw. If Chriſt muſt be tempted in all things like to us, then he muſt have beene burned, beheaded, torne in pieces: he ſhould have beene ſubiect to diſeaſes, as the gowte, the dropſie, the palſie, for all theſe are incident to his members, *Fevard.p.*445.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of temptations, which are for the moſt part ſpirituall, not of bodilie paſſions, therefore this anſwere is impertinent. 2. Yet becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere, *Heb.*2.17. It became him in all things to be made like his brethren: that is, both as touching his body and his ſoule: I anſwere againe: 1. that this clauſe in all things, is not to be underſtood of every particular paſſion, but of the generall kind: not that Chriſt ſuffered every particular maladie of the bodie, for that had beene impoſſible, but every kind of griefe, both of body and ſoule. 2. It is abſurd to obiect ſo many kinds of death, ſeeing it was impoſſible for Chriſt to have dyed often. *Heb.*9.25.28. 3. Neither was it comely for Chriſt to ſuffer all, that wee doe, in that manner and meaſure: whereof the Apoſtle maketh manifeſt exception: it became him, &c. in ſufferings not comely Chriſt was not to be like us. 4. Againe, ſinne is excepted, and in ſinne alſo the cauſe and effects thereof are comprehended: ſo then Chriſt could not be like unto us in our conception, which is the beginning and cauſe of ſinne: nor yet in our ſickneſſes and diſeaſes, which are the proper and immediat fruits and effects of ſinne: as it is in the Pſalme, There is no reſt in my bones, becauſe of my ſinne. Pſal.38.3.

How Chriſt was in all things like unto us.
Heb.2.17.
Heb.9.25.
Pſalme 38,3.

Heb.2.18.

3. The Apoſtle alſo giveth a reaſon, why it became Chriſt to be like us in his ſufferings and temptations: He is able thereby to ſuccour them, that are tempted, in that he ſuffered and was tempted, Heb.2. 18. Where the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of Chriſts abſolute power, whereby he is able without experience had of our temptations, to ſuccour us: but of his humane compaſſion, whereby he is able by his owne feeling to have pitie of us: and though hee ſuffered not in body every particular griefe as wee doe, as our diſeaſes and ſickneſſes, yet by the experience which he had in other of our infirmities, hee hath a feeling alſo of thoſe, and therein in his pitifull compaſſion is able to helpe: wherefore, that Chriſt might be able alſo to ſuccour us in his owne feeling, when we are vexed in ſoule with terrour of conſcience, and the ſenſe of Gods wrath, it became him in his owne ſoule to feele the like. And ſo I conclude with S. Ambroſe; Qui corpus ſuſcepit, omnia debuit ſubire quæ corporis ſunt, ut eſuriret, ſitiret, angeretur, &c. He that tooke a bodie, muſt undergoe all things belonging to the bodie, as to be hungrie, thirſtie, to be grieved: in 12. cap. Luc. As he here ſaith of Chriſts body, ſo likewiſe of his ſoule: Minus mihi contulerat, ſi non meum ſuſcepiſſet affectum, &c. He had done little for me, if he had not taken mine affection: and againe, Debuit dolorem ſuſcipere, ut vinceret triſtitiam non excluderet: He was to take my ſorrow to overcome it, not to exclude it: in Luc. 22. By this ſentence then, thoſe ſorrowes of ours, which Chriſt excluded from himſelfe, are not yet vanquiſhed nor overcome.

Bernard ſaith, Ut quos vivificavit mors tua, tua nihilominus trepidatio robuſtos, mœſtitia lætos, turbatio quietos redderet: That thoſe whom thy death quickened, thy trembling might ſtrengthen, thy heavines might cheare, thy troubles might quiet: in die S. Andr. ſerm. 1. Our peace then and quietneſſe of ſoule is purchaſed by the like trouble and terror in Chriſts ſoule.

Auguſtine alſo in this behalfe maketh Noah a figure of Chriſts paſſion, who was drunken and uncovered in his tent: ſo Chriſt, ſaith he, Calice paſſionis adeo factus eſt ebrius, ut ipſo tegmine corporis nudaderatur, &c. So Chriſt was drunken as it were with the cup of his paſſion, that he was left naked of the covering of his bodie: ſerm. 153. he expreſſeth but one effect of this ſpirituall drunkenneſſe; the Prophet ſheweth another, Iere. 23. 9. I am like a drunken man, for the preſence of the Lord: It is then the wrathfull preſence of God, which is the cauſe as it were of the ſpirituall drunkennes of the ſoule: when it taſteth ſo deepely of the cup of Gods wrath, that it is ſo raviſhed and overwhelmed, like as the bodie, when it is intoxicate with ſtrong drinke.

Queſt.9. in numeros.

Now then to conclude this point, 1. Theodoret ſaith: unde factum eſt, ut aliena peccata aſſumeret, cum propria non haberet, ille ſiquidem peccata noſtra tulit, & pro nobis afflictus eſt: Whereupon it commeth to paſſe, that Chriſt aſſumed our ſinnes, having none of his owne, for he tooke our ſinnes, and was afflicted for us, &c. if Chriſt tooke upon him our ſinnes, he of neceſſity alſo did undergoe the wrath of his father for us, which was due unto our ſinnes.

Adverſ. Prax.

2. Tertullian ſaith: Reliquit, dum non parcit, ſic reliquit, dum tradit: God left his Sonne in not ſparing him, hee left him in delivering him to death: but not to ſpare, to give up unto death are effects of wrath.

Harm. ſect. 6. pag. 108.

3. Confeſſ. of Saxonie artic. 3. He derived unto himſelfe, this true and exceeding great wrath.

Part. 3. q. 47. artic. 3.

4. Thomas confeſſeth, that Gods ſeveritie was ſhewed,—in not ſparing his Sonne, now ſeverity is not without wrath toward him, that is not, in that ſeverity, ſpared.

Wherefore, if Chriſt were ſmitten and plagued of God for our ſinnes, argum. 1. If the whole chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him, argum. 2. If he was tempted in all things like us, argum. 3. then it remaineth that out of all doubt, he felt the terrors of ſoule, and had experience of the wrath of God againſt our ſinne: for ſuch temptations are the members of Chriſt ſubject unto.

The ninth part, that CHRIST did truly complaine upon the Croſſe, that he was forſaken of God, and that he verily felt himſelfe in his ſoule for our ſinne, for the time, as rejected of God in part, though not totally or finally.

The objections anſwered.

Artic. 24.

F*Evardentius* thus objecteth and reaſoneth. If Chriſt were truly forſaken of God, it would follow that the hypoſtaticall union was diſſolved, and that Chriſt was perſonally ſeparated from God, for otherwiſe he could not be forſaken. Fevarden. p. 473. confut. 1.

Matth. 27. 54.

2. The Centurion notwithſtanding Chriſt ſo complained and cryed out, yet confeſſeth thus of him; this truly was the Sonne of God, he was a righteous man: Matth. 27. Farre off was he, from imagining Chriſt to be forſaken of God, Fevardent. p. 474. lin. 17.

3. Chriſt was alwayes moſt holy, innocent, iuſt, and therefore acceptable unto God, hee was not then rejected or forſaken, Fevardent. p. 474. confut. 3.

4. Out of Fulgentius, Divinitas Chriſti animam in inferno non deſeruit: Chriſts divinity did not leave his ſoule in hell: Ergo, his ſoule was not forſaken. Fevard, p. 474. lin. 32,

5. If Chriſt had verily been forſaken, then he ſo crying out ſhould have deſpaired, which were horrible blaſphemy to affirme, Bellarm. arg. 6. Fevard. p. 485. conf. 6.

6. Chriſt prayeth for them which crucified him, ſaying: Father forgive them, they know not what they doe. Luke 23.34. How could Chriſt pray unto God, or aſſure himſelfe to be heard, if hee were forſaken. p.488.conſ.12. Luke 23.34.

7. How could Chriſt promiſe Paradiſe to the thiefe upon the Croſſe, if he were himſelfe forſaken and not ſure of Paradiſe: Fevard.p.448.lin.32.

Anſ. 1. If Chriſt had bin totally and eternally forſaken, the perſonall union muſt have bin diſſolved: but upon this temporall and partiall reiection there followeth not a perſonall diſſolution or generall dereliction. 2. As the body of Chriſt being without life, was ſtill hypoſtatically united to the Godhead, ſo was the ſoule of Chriſt, though for a time without feeling of his favour: the dereliction of the one doth no more diſſolve the hypoſtaticall union, than the death of the other: if life went from the body, and yet the diety was not ſeparated in the perſonall conſociation, but only ſuſpended in operation: ſo the feeling of Gods favour, which is the life of the ſoule, might bee intermitted in Chriſt, and yet the divine union not interverted. 3. Auguſtine doth well ſhew, how this may be: when he ſaith, that Paſſio Chriſti dulcis fuit divinitatis ſomnus: The paſſion of Chriſt was the ſweete ſleepe of his divinitie. lib.de eſſent. divin. Like as then in ſleepe the ſoule is not departed, though the operation thereof be deferred: ſo in Chriſts ſleepe upon the croſſe, the Godhead was not ſeparated, though the working power therof were for a time ſequeſtred.

2. 1. The Centurion being a Romane underſtood not the language, wherein Chriſt complained, crying out, hee was forſaken, ſeeing the Iewes themſelves miſtooke his words, ſaying, hee called for Elias. Matth.27.47. 2. And the Evangeliſt evidently ſheweth, that not the hearing of thoſe words, but the ſeeing of the earth-quake and other things which were done, drew that confeſſion from the Centurion, that Chriſt was the Sonne of God. Matth.27.54. 3. Who denieth, but that notwithſtanding Chriſt truly complained he was forſaken, yet he was the Sonne of God ſtill? for the hypoſtaticall union was not hereby diſſolved, as I have anſwered to the firſt obiection: for like as the ſoule of Chriſt being parted from his body, was ſeparated only from it τοπικῶς not ὑποστατικῶς, locally, nor hypoſtatically: Damaſcene lib.3.de fid.c.27. The ſoule ceaſed working in the body, yet was not divorced in the perſonall being from the body: ſo the filiall union was not diſſolved, though the effectuall feeling were for a while diſcontinued. 2. Matth.27.47. The hypoſtatic union not diſſolved by Chriſts ſuffring in ſoule.

3. 1. It followeth not becauſe Chriſt was alwayes the beloved ſonne of God in himſelfe, that therefore he could not bee forſaken for a time in reſpect of our ſinnes, which he as our ſurety anſwered for: If they can tell mee, how theſe two can ſtand together, that firſt God ſhould promiſe as concerning David, his ſeed ſhall endure for ever, Pſal. 89.36. and yet the Church complaineth, thou haſt reiected and abhorred, and beene angry with thine annointed. Ibid.verſ. 38. then will I anſwere them how both theſe may be at once in Chriſt, dilection and dereliction? like as then the elect members of Chriſt may be forſaken not totally, or finally, but ex parte, in part, and for a time, and yet their election remaine firme ſtill; the ſame may be the caſe of our head, that he was ex parte derelictus, onely in part forſaken, and for a time, alwayes beloved for his owne innocency, but for us and in our perſon, as our pledge and ſurety, deſerted. 3. Pſal.89 36.48. The elect how for a time may be forſaken.

2. Auguſtine very well ſheweth, how one man may at the ſame time both love and hate another: Hominem deus fecit, prævaricatorem ſe ipſe fecit; ama in illo, quod deus fecit, perſequere in illo, quod ipſe ſibi fecit: God made man, and hee made himſelfe a ſinner, love that which God made, perſecute that which he made himſelfe. in Pſal. 100. So Chriſt in reſpect of his holineſſe and innocency the fruits and graces of the ſpirit, was beloved of God, but in regard of our ſinnes which were our owne workes, now layd upon Chriſt, as his owne, hee was as forſaken: ſee more for a fuller anſwere to this argument. part.8.reſp.ad obiect.1.et.3.

4. 1. Chriſt indeed was not forſaken finally neither his ſoule in hell, nor his body in the grave, and ſo is S Peter to be underſtood, Act.2.27. Thou wilt not leave my ſoule in the grave or hell: for like as Chriſts body was forſaken for a time in that it dyed, but not forſaken finally, becauſe it roſe from death: ſo his ſoule was forſaken in part while the terrors of God were in it, but not totally or generally, becauſe he ſubdued theſe ſorrowes of hell, wherewith he was compaſſed. 2. Saint Paul in the one ſenſe ſaith. 2. Cor.4.9. We are perſecuted, but not forſaken; that is, utterly, or finally: David in the other ſenſe complaineth, that hee was forſaken, Pſal.22.1. that is in part, and for a time in his owne ſenſe and feeling: And ſo Auguſtine well ſaith: Unuſquiſque pro peccatis neceſſario flagellatur, ſed ab eo, ſi Chriſtianus eſt, miſerecordia dei non diſpergitur: Every man is neceſſarily whipped for his ſinne, but he is not ſtripped of Gods mercy, if he be a Chriſtian, in Pſal.88.concion.2. So there are two kinds of dereliction or forſaking, one is for a time and in part; ſo the elect may be, and Chriſt was upon the croſſe forſaken: another which is totall, finall, and generall, and ſo neither Chriſt nor his members are forſaken. 4. Acts 2.27. 2.Cor.4.9. Pſal.22.1. Chriſt not forſaken totally, or finally.

5. 1. Neither doth it follow that Chriſt uttered words of deſperation, if hee had felt himſelfe indeed in his ſoule forſaken: for wee muſt diſtinguiſh betweene the faith of Chriſt, which was alwayes ſound and firme, and the ſenſe of his humane infirmitie, which cauſed him to complaine; ſo that in the deepeſt bottome of the anguiſh of his ſoule hee is upheld and ſuſtained by his faith, ſaying, My God, my God: whereby he ſheweth his ſingular confidence and truſt in God, notwithſtanding the preſent ſenſe of his wrath. 5. Chriſt complaineth he was forſaken without all deſpaire.

2. Bellarm. 1. If Chriſt did ſuffer the puniſhment of the damned and of hell, as Calvine affirmeth, then he alſo deſpaired: for deſperation is an eſſentiall part of the paine of hell. 2. This ſpeech of Chriſt it was either deliberate and adviſed, or indeliberate and unadviſed: if the firſt, then Chriſt verily deſpaired; if the ſecond, his paſſions were inordinate, which is not to be admitted.

3. Neither can it be imagined, that the firſt clauſe (my God, my God) ſhould be adviſedly ſpoken, and the other (why haſt thou forſaken me) to be unadviſedly uttered; was Chriſt ſo weake and inconſtant, that he could not continue foure words in faith?

4. And if the firſt words, my God, my God, are a correction of the other, then the correction goeth before the errour, which were abſurd. Bellarm. lib. 4. de anim. c. 8. arg. 6.

Contra. 1. Such puniſhment of hell, as Chriſt might endure without ſinne, we doubt not to aſcribe unto him: but deſperation is a deteſtable ſinne, and therefore farre from Chriſt: the Apoſtle teacheth us to make this exception, Heb. 4. 17. that Chriſt was tempted in all things as we are, ſinne only excepted: wherefore this is a meere cavill to obiect that, which is by the Apoſtle directly excepted. And Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Solus Chriſtus ſine peccato, peccati pœnam ſubire dignatus eſt: Only Chriſt without ſinne vouchſafed to undergoe the puniſhment of ſinne. contr. 2. Epiſt. Pelag. 44. Therefore no puniſhment which is neceſſarily accompanied with ſinne, can be faſtned upon Chriſt. Heb. 4. 17.

How our bleſſed Saviour at the ſame time ſheweth both his humane infirmitie and conſtancy of faith.

2. The whole ſpeech of Chriſt was adviſed and deliberate, and yet no deſpaire at all: in which deliberative ſpeech both he cryeth out in the feeling of his ſorrow, that it might appeare what he endured for us, and he alſo uttereth his faith and confidence, to teach us by his example to bee confident in our trouble. Damaſcene ſaith well for the firſt, μὴ ἐπὶ ἐλαττώματι φύσεως, &c ἀλλ' ἐπὶ ἐνδείξει ὑπάρξεως, that which was ſayd and done proceeded not from the fault or depravation of nature, but for the demonſtration of his true exiſtency and humanitie: lib. 3. de fid. c. 22. For the other S. Ambroſe ſpeaketh: Dubitatio illa nos firmat, ne tu ſi cœperis dubitare deſperes: His doubtfulneſſe doth ſtrengthen us, leſt thou, when thou beginneſt to doubt, ſhouldeſt deſpaire, lib. 2. de fid. c. 4.

3. 1. Neither doth the faith of Chriſt conclude it ſelfe within theſe words onely, My God, my God, but is continued throughout the whole ſenſe and ſentence: for at the ſame time Chriſt both ſheweth his humane infirmitie, and his conſtant fidelitie, his exceeding great paſſion and his excellent confeſſion. As Damaſcene ſaith: φυσικῶς ἀδυνατήσας, νευρωθεῖσα, his will was firſt tempted of his naturall infirmitie, and againe, νευρωθεῖσα, it was corroborate and ſtrengthned by his divine will. lib. 3. de fid. cap. 18. 2. Neither is this ſo ſtrange a thing, for nature and faith to appeare at once: as the Prophet David ſheweth in himſelfe, Pſal. 31. 22. I ſayd in my haſte, I am caſt out of thy ſight: here is Davids infirmitie; yet thou heardeſt the voyce of my prayer: here is his faith and ſtabilitie.

4. Neither doe we ſay, that one part of the ſentence is a correction of the other: but the whole ſheweth a ſingular moderation and direction by faith, of Chriſts naturall affection in the middeſt of his deepeſt paſſion: So the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 5. 8. that he learned obedience by the things which he ſuffered. And Auguſtine witneſſeth: Unde patefacit, quod et humanam habuit voluntatem, per quam obediit patri, & immaculatam ab omni peccato eandem voluntatem: Whereby hee ſheweth, that he had both an humane will, by the which he was obedient to his father, and the ſame will immaculate and free from all ſinne: ex epiſt. Agathon. ad Conſtantin. Hebr. 5. 8.

6. 7. Chriſt notwithſtanding this ſenſe of his dereliction, might and did both promiſe paradiſe to the thiefe, whereof he doubted not, and pray in charity for his perſecutors: for his faith, hope, and charity failed not in the deepeſt of his agonie: for though he felt Gods wrath in his humane ſenſe and infirmitie, yet his faith was ſtedfaſt in all godly conſtancie: and ſo as Ambroſe ſaith of the like requeſt of Chriſt, when he prayed that the cup might paſſe, &c. that there was both vox carnis & devotio ſpiritus, the voyce of the fleſh, and the devotion alſo of the ſpirit. In like manner in this place Chriſt ſheweth in the complaint his humane ſenſe, as alſo his godly confidence, Ambr. lib. 4. in Luc.

The Queſtion Confirmed.

That our bleſſed Saviour bearing our ſinnes in himſelfe upon the Croſſe, did verily feele Gods wrath in his ſoule, and truly complained in reſpect thereof, that he was forſaken of God; he himſelfe thus evidently teſtifieth.

Argum. Our Saviour cryeth out and complaineth upon the croſſe: My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Matth. 27. 46. Theſe words were uttered in truth, not in colour or ſhew: as Athanaſius ſaith: φύσει, καὶ ἀληθείᾳ οὐ δοκήσει τὰ πάντα ἐγίνετο, All things were done naturally and in truth, not in opinion, or ſhew, ad Apollinar. Ergo, Chriſt did feele himſelfe in his ſoule forſaken of God. Matth. 27. 46.

Anſ. 1. One anſwere is, that Chriſt ſpeaketh in our perſon, and not in his owne; to the which ſenſe ſome of the Fathers ſeeme to incline: as Damaſcene. lib. 3. de fid. c. 24. he ſaith he was forſaken, becauſe we were juſtly forſaken for our ſinnes.

2. But the moſt common anſwere is this, that Chriſt was forſaken in reſpect of his body and fleſh, which was yeelded up into the hands of the Iewes to kill and crucifie, and uſe at their pleaſure, and therfore Chriſt complaineth, that God would not deliver him: ſic Bellar. reſp. ad arg. 4. as if Chriſt in effect had thus ſayd: My God, which diddeſt deliver Noe from the flood, Abraham from Ur of the Chaldees, Iſaac from the ſword of his father, Iacob from the hands of his brother, Iſrael out of Egypt, Ioſeph out of priſon, David from Goliah, &c. why haſt thou left me without any helpe? ſic Fevard. p. 447.

3. To this purpoſe the Frier alleageth divers Fathers, as *Tertullian, Origene, Epiphanius, Cyrill, Hierome, Bernard, p.*479. Whoſe teſtimonies ſhall be examined afterward.

*Contra.*1. It is evident, that Chriſt ſpeaketh in his owne perſon, ſaying, Why haſt thou forſaken me? 2. As Origen ſaith, Non ſat eſt credere mentiri Chriſtum dicentem, quare, &c. It is not ſafe to beleeve that Chriſt lyed when he ſaid, why haſt thou forſaken me? *Tract.*35 in Matth. But if Chriſt had ſaid he was forſaken, and yet was not, it had beene an untruth. 3. As for Damaſcens ſentence, it is rejected by Iodocus Clictoveus in his enarrations upon that place. 4. And yet Damaſcene may very well be interpreted otherwiſe: for he ſaith that Chriſt thus ſpake, ἡμέτερον οἰκειούμενος πρόσωπον, having put on, aſſumed, or inhabiting our perſon: which is as he expoundeth himſelfe, cap. 25. ἀναδεχόμενος, receiving our perſon, that is, μεθ' ἡμῶν ταττόμενος, being ordained with us, that is, made like unto us: ſo then his meaning is, that Chriſt in our perſon, that is, in reſpect of his humanity taken from us, thus complained.

2. Neither can it be referred to the leaving of Chriſt in his bodily death and torments. 1. The ſenſe of theſe words muſt be derived from the 22. Pſal. verſ. 1. were the Prophet complaineth not ſo much of any outward affliction, but that he was without ſpirituall comfort, Why art thou ſo farre from my health, and the voyce of my roring? And to the like effect he prayeth, Pſal. 51.11. Caſt me not away from thy preſence, and take not thy holy ſpirit from me: verſ. 12. reſtore me to the joy of thy Salvation. To be caſt away then, or forſaken, is to be left comfortleſſe of Gods Spirit. 3 Pſalme 22.1. Pſal. 51.11. Chriſt not forſaken onely in reſpect of his bodily death.

2. If Chriſt ſhould have ſo cryed out, and, as the Prophet ſaith, rored, in reſpect of his bodily death, he ſhould have ſhewed himſelfe weaker, than many of his members, who were chearefull in the midſt of their torments, being inwardly comforted.

3. If this forſaking of Chriſt, were the leaving of him to the pleaſure of his perſecutors, it is likely that Chriſt would have uttered this voyce in the beginning of his paſſion, being now already nayled to the croſſe, for even then had they wrought their will upon him; but hee ſo cryed not till three houres after: and at the ninth houre being ready to give up the ghoſt, and having wreſtled all this while in his ſoule with the terrors of hell, and having felt the abſence of Gods favour within, as the world wanted the Sunne-light without, then he cryed out and complained, My God, my God, &c.

4. Neither doth the Scripture uſe to call this a dereliction, or deſertion, when a man is left to his perſecutors: as Saint Paul ſaith, we are perſecuted, but not forſaken, 2 Cor.4.9. 2 Cor.4.9.

5. In this complaint of Chriſt, the whole perſon of Chriſt conſiſting of both his natures is expreſſed, the one part or nature of Chriſt forſaketh, that is his Deity, the other is forſaken, namely, his humanity: then the ſoule of Chriſt is alſo in this inſtant forſaken, as well as his body: for it either forſaketh, or is forſaken: but not the firſt, for it was the Godhead onely that left him, not in eſſence but in ſenſe; not in being, but in feeling: Ergo, his ſoule was forſaken.

6. Neither did the perſecutors force Chriſts ſoule out of his body, that in that behalfe hee ſhould complaine as forſaken: for he laid downe his life of himſelfe, no man tooke it from him, Iohn 10.18. And as Ambroſe writeth upon theſe words, Emiſit ſpiritum, Hee gave up the ghoſt; Quod emittitur voluntarium; quod amittitur neceſſarium eſt: That which is emitted or ſent forth is voluntary; that which is amitted is neceſſary, *in Luc.*22. Ioh. 10.18.

7. Chriſt was forſaken, but in deeper degree and meaſure of feeling, yet without ſinne as his members doe often finde themſelves forſaken; but his members doe feele the terrors of conſcience, and for the time are as forſaken in their feeling: as it appeareth in David, Pſal.31.20. I am caſt out of thy ſight: In Iob 30.21. Thou art an enemie unto me, &c. Ergo, So was Chriſt forſaken: for as Ambroſe ſaith, Flagellatus eſt ipſe, ne nos flagellaremur: He was ſcourged, that we ſhould not be ſcourged, in Luc. 22. So he was forſaken, that we ſhould not be forſaken. Pſal.31.20. Iob 30.21.

1. Tertullian ſaith, Reliquit dum non parcit: God left his Sonne in not ſparing him, hee left him in delivering him, lib. ad Praxean. To this not ſparing belongeth the ſpirituall forſaking: this teſtimony is not againſt us. 3.

2. Origen ſaith, Derelictus fuit, comparatione gloriæ, &c. ad confuſionem: Hee was forſaken, comparing his glory which he had with his Father to this preſent confuſion upon the croſſe, *Hom.*35. in Mat. As though the dereliction of his ſoule doth not properly belong unto this confuſion.

Epiphanius ſaith: Non ſeparata deitate, &c. Chriſt did not thus cry out, as though his deitie were ſeparated, *contr. hereſ.*69. As though any man ſaith, that Chriſt was forſaken of his Godhead: this ſentence is improperly alleaged.

4. Cyrill: Opus erat ad fidem noſtram, &c. It was neceſſary to our faith, that Chriſt ſhould ſhew himſelfe a true man in his paſſion: and therefore leſt any man ſhould doubt, as a man hee crieth out, My God, my God: lib. 10. *Theſaur.c.*3. This teſtimony rather maketh againſt the Frier: for if Chriſt by thus crying out would declare himſelfe to bee a perfect man, who conſiſteth of body and ſoule, it muſt follow, that the whole man Chriſt complaineth, that hee was in his whole humanity forſaken.

5. Hierome ſaith: Chriſtus derelictus pro parte carnis: Chriſt was forſaken on the behalfe of his fleſh, in Pſal. 21. By fleſh he underſtandeth the whole humanity of Chriſt: as in the ſame place, Humanitas loquitur quomodo derelicta fuerit in Adam: His whole humanity ſpeaketh how it was forſaken in Adam: which was both in body and ſoule.

6. Bernard ſaith, Quadam ibi derelictio fuit, ubi nulla fuit in tanta neceſſitate virtutis exhibitio, nulla

oſtenſio majeſtatis: It was a kinde of dereliction, when in ſuch neceſſity there was no vertue exhibited, no majeſtie declared, ſerm. 5. de verb. Iſaia. This may be referred as well to the ſayling of inward comfort, as to the aſſayling of outward croſſes: for neither in the one nor the other, did the divine majeſty comfort, and vertue declare it ſelfe.

4. Now on the contrary ſide I will produce the Fathers teſtifying for the truth. 1. Origen: Forſitan videns peccata hominum, pro quibus patiebatur, dixit, &c. It may be that Chriſt ſeeing the ſinnes of men, for the which he ſuffered, cryed out, that hee was forſaken. And againe, Non exiſtimo humano more iſta dixiſſe propter calamitatem, qua eum comprehenderat in cruce: I doe not thinke that he ſaid thus after the manner of men, becauſe of the calamity, which faſtened upon him on the croſſe; Tract. 35. in Matth. Origen then maketh not the outward calamity of the croſſe, but the inward ſuffring for our ſinnes, the ground and cauſe of Chriſts dereliction.

2. Ambroſe: Quoniam delicta aliena ſuſcepi, etiam delictorum alienorum verba ſuſcepi, ut me derelictum à patre dicam: Becauſe I have taken other mens ſinnes, I have alſo taken the words of their ſinnes to ſay, I am forſaken of my Father, de incarnat. c. 25. This dereliction then of Chriſt proceeded from the conſideration of our ſinnes, which lay upon him. And againe, Dubitatio illa nos firmat, ne & ſi tu dubitare cœperis, deſperes: His dubitation is our confirmation, that in our doubting we fall not into deſperation, lib. 2. de fid. c. 4. He calleth the perplexity and dereliction of Chriſt in his ſoule, dubitation, or doubtfulneſſe: though to ſpeake properly Chriſt doubted not at all.

3. Hierome: Chriſtus ſic oravit in cruce, Deus, deus, quid dereliquiſti me? longe à ſalute meâ verba delictorum meorum, &c. Chriſt thus prayed upon the croſſe, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? farre from my health are the words of my ſinnes, lib. 3. adverſ. Pelag. Chriſts dereliction then was grounded upon our ſinnes, which he bare. Againe he ſaith, Deſpectus erat & ignobilis, quando pendebat in cruce, & factus pro nobis maledictum peccata noſtra portabat, & loquebatur patri, Deus meus, &c. He was deſpiſed and abuſed, when he hung upon the croſſe, and being made a curſe bare our ſinnes, and ſpake to his father, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me, &c. in Eſaiam, c. 53. the bearing then of our ſinnes, was the ground of this curſe.

4. Auguſtine: Non dedignatus eſt aſſumere nos in ſe, transfigurare nos in ſe, & loqui verbis noſtris, ut nos loqueremur verbis ipſius, hæc enim mira commutatio facta eſt, & divina peracta ſunt commercia, &c. He vouchſafed to aſſume our nature to himſelfe, to transfigure us in himſelfe, to ſpeake our words, that we might ſpeake his words: for a wonderfull commutation is made, and a royall or divine exchange effected, &c. in Pſalm. 30. As we then ſpeake with Chriſts words of ſpirituall comfort, ſo he ſpake our words in his ſpirituall diſtreſſe: and as wee in our trouble of minde complaine of the abſence of Gods comfort, ſo did Chriſt.

5. Hilary: Chriſtus cruci univerſa ea, quibus infirmabamur, affixit; ideo peccata noſtra portat & pro nobis dolet, &c. Chriſt did faſten to his croſſe all thoſe things univerſally, whereby we are weakened and troubled: therefore he bare our ſinnes, and was grieved for us, &c. c. 31. in Matth. If Chriſt faſtened all our infirmities in himſelfe to the croſſe, then alſo the ſenſe and feeling of deſertion and dereliction.

6. Beda: Ut homo loquitur meos circumferens metus, quod in periculis poſiti à Deo nos deſeri putamus: He ſpeaketh as a man bearing our feares, becauſe when we are in danger we thinke we are forſaken of God. in 15. Marc. If Chriſt then complained of deſertion and forſaking, as his members in their extremity uſe to doe: then was it the dereliction of his ſoule, which he felt, as his members in ſome meaſure uſe to feele.

Iranæus ſaith: Proprio ſanguine redimente nos Domino, & dante animam pro noſtris animabus, & corpore ſuo pro noſtris corporibus: Our Lord redeeming us, giving his ſoule for our ſoules, and his body for our bodies, &c. lib. 5. c. 1. Hence it will follow, that ſeeing he gave his ſoule and body for us, in bearing the curſe due unto us, that he bare the curſe both in his body and ſoule.

Harm. ſect. 6. pag. 104.

8. Confeſſ. of Belgia. artic. 21. Chriſt being juſt ſuffered in ſoule and body for the unjuſt, in ſuch ſort, that feeling the horrour of theſe puniſhments that were due unto our ſinnes, hee did ſweat water and blood, and at the length cryed out: My God, my God why haſt thou forſaken me, &c.

9. The ordinary gloſſe noteth upon theſe words, My God, my God, humana natura erat derelicta, ſed non Dei filius: The humane nature was forſaken, not the Sonne of God, &c. If the humane nature, then his ſoule, as well as the body: See Ferus alleaged in the next queſtion following, who underſtandeth this dereliction of the terror of the conſcience.

Wherefore ſetting apart all other devices and conjectures of men, I reſolve with Origen: firſt, that neither Chriſt complained in humility, that hee was forſaken of the deity: for then hee ſhould have complained untruly. Secondly, neither that in regard of the preſent darkenes he ſo ſaid, as ſome thinke. Thirdly, nor yet did he ſpeake in the perſon of the Iewes, which were rejected, that the Gentiles might be elected. Fourthly, nor yet did hee make this outcry by reaſon of his outward calamity upon the croſſe: all theſe conjectures Origen refuſeth, and concludeth rather, that Chriſt becauſe of our ſinnes which he bare, for the which he felt Gods anger, and himſelfe forſaken, thus cryed out and complained upon the croſſe, tract. 35. in Matth.

The tenth part, that CHRIST was verily made a curſe for us, and did beare both in his body, and ſoule, that curſe, which by reaſon of the tranſgreſsion of the Law was due unto us.

The objections anſwered.

AGainſt this poſition the Frier uſeth no ſpeciall arguments, but ſuch as were before produced againſt Chriſts feeling of the wrath of God. Artic. 25.

1. If Chriſt ſtood accurſed for us in his ſoule before God, then there would follow a diſſolution of his perſon from the unitie of the Godhead: but Chriſt ſemper ſine rapina ſe æqualem Deo, &c. alwayes without any robbery, or injury to God, tooke himſelfe to be equall to him, Fevardent. pag. 471. lin. 6.

2. Chriſt was alwayes beloved of God and in his favor: Ergo, not accurſed, Fevardent, pag. 470. confutat, 4.

3. If hee were accurſed, then alſo he deſpaired, and was damned, Fevardent. pag. 446. confutat. 5. lin. 5. 11.

Anſw. Theſe objections I have anſwered before, part. 8. reſponſ. ad object. 1. 2, 3. & part. 9. reſponſ. ad argum. 5. The ſumme of our anſwere was this: 1. That there is no more feare of the diſſolution of Chriſts perſon, for the ſpirituall curſe lying upon his ſoule, than for the externall, ſhewed in the death of his body. 2. Neither is the eternall love of God hereby diſcontinued or interrupted: for as I ſhewed, this dereliction or curſe, was not totall but partiall; temporall, not eternall: and Chriſt for his owne innocencie and holineſſe was alwayes beloved of God, but ſtood accurſed for our ſinnes: See our anſwere more at large, part. 8. reſponſ. ad object. 1, 2, 3. & part. 9. reſponſ. ad object. 1. 3. Neither upon the admitting of this curſe, ſhall either damnation or deſperation follow in the ſoule of Chriſt: though it were ſpirituall, yet was it not eternall: though there were a dereliction, yet no deſperation: though deſolation for a time, yet no damnation: it was painefull, yet not ſinfull: Chriſts ſoule was perplexed, yet his faith not perverted: hee was not onely upon the croſſe, but under Gods curſe for us; damnation and deſperation are the inſeperable companions of eternall and totall malediction: but ſo was not Chriſt accurſed; but in part and for a time. 1. The execration of his ſoule doth no more enforce damnation and deſperation, than the malediction of his body, which is granted. 2. Ieremie felt himſelfe under Gods wrath and curſe, when he ſayd, Woe is me, Ierem. 15. 10. and ver. 17. Thou haſt filled me with indignation, verſ. 18. My plague is deſperate, why art thou to me as a lyer? Ier. 20. 14. Curſed be the day wherein I was borne: yet Ieremie was neither damned, nor deſpaired. 3. We doubt not to aſcribe all our tentations to Chriſt, but without ſinne; therefore he muſt be freed from damnation and deſperation. As Bernard well ſaith, Suſcipiens pœnam, & neſciens culpam: hee taſted the ſmart, but tooke not the ſinne, ad milit. templ. c. 10. But for more full anſwere, I referre the reader to the ninth part, reſponſ. ad objectionem. 5.

How Chriſt was made a curſe for us without diſſolution of his perſon, or deſperation.

Ierem. 15. 10. 17.

Chap. 20. 14.

The Queſtion Confirmed.

THe Apoſtle in moſt direct words proveth the queſtion, when he ſaith, Gal. 3. 13. Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the Law, when he was made a curſe for us: as it is written, Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree: I ſay then with Ambroſe, Cur erubeſcam fateri, quod Apoſtolus non erubuit alta voce profiteri? Why ſhould I be aſhamed to confeſſe that, which the Apoſtle with a loud voyce hath profeſſed, that Chriſt was truly made a curſe for us? Galath. 3. 13.

Anſw. 1. Chriſt may be ſaid to be a curſe, that is, maledictionis remiſſio, becauſe he remitted or releaſed the curſe, Fevard. p. 377. confutat, 2. lin. 18.

2. He was accurſed onely in reſpect of his ignominious death, as Pſal. 22. 6. Opprobrium hominum, & abjectio plebis: I am a ſhame of men, and the contempt of the people. Fevard. p. 470. confut. 3. l. 11. Pſal. 22. 6.

Contra. 1. The firſt anſwer the Apoſtle remooveth, when he ſaith, Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the Law, when he was made a curſe for us: to bee made a curſe and to redeeme us from the curſe, are not all one; but the remitting of the curſe, is all one with the redeeming from the curſe: Ergo, the remitting of the curſe is not to be made a curſe. 2. Againe, the Apoſtle proveth Chriſt to be curſed, becauſe he hanged on a tree, as it is written, Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree, that is, he is indeed accurſed, not the curſe onely remitted. 3. The receiving of the curſe is one thing, the remitting another: firſt, Chriſt tooke the curſe upon himſelfe, and ſo tooke away the curſe: maledictio then, and the remiſſion of the malediction are two divers things.

2. That this curſe, wherewith Chriſt was accurſed for us cannot be referred to the externall death upon the croſſe, it appeareth by theſe reaſons.

Not the death of the croſſe, but the cauſe maketh it accurſed.

1. S. Hierome ſaith, Non quicunque pependerit in ligno, maledictus eſt a Deo, ſed qui propter ſcelus ſuſpenſus: not every one that hangeth upon a tree, is curſed before God, but hee that hangeth there for

for his ſinne: in 3. ad Galat. Like as if Haman had prevailed againſt Mordecha, and hanged him upon the gallowes which hee had made for him; Mordeche in his innocencie, notwithſtanding that ignominious death, ſhould not have ſtood accurſed: wherefore it was not the death of the croſſe, but our ſinnes hanging upon the croſſe, that derived this curſe upon Chriſt; this alſo is evident out of Moſes, that not the kinde of death, but the deſert of death made it ignominious, Deut. 21. 22. If a man have committed a treſpaſſe worthie of death, and be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree, &c. We ſee then that our ſinnes hanging with Chriſt upon the croſſe, made the ſame an accurſed death.

2. Chriſt was made that curſe, which hee redeemed us from, otherwiſe the Apoſtle had not reaſoned ſoundly, we are redeemed from the curſe, becauſe Chriſt was made a curſe; hee remitteth that curſe to us, which he received in himſelfe. Beda alſo ſaith, Chriſtus ſupplicium noſtrum ſine reatu ſuſcepit, ut ſolveret reatum, & finiret ſupplicium: Chriſt hath taken our puniſhment without guilt, to looſe the guilt, and end the puniſhment, in 3. ad Galat. What other puniſhment ended he, but that we tooke? but to us was due for the tranſgreſſion of the Law, the curſe both of body and ſoule: Ergo, the ſame curſe Chriſt tooke.

3. The words in Moſes are maledictus Deo, hee is curſed to God, that hangeth on a tree, but no death in it ſelfe is more ignominious than another before God, the ſhame thereof is externall, and concerneth men: Ergo, the curſe was not in the ignominious death: the ordinary gloſſe thus noteth upon theſe words: Non eſt hoc in contumeliam Domini, quid mirum ſi maledictus dicitur Deo, qui habet in ſe, quod Deus odit, i. peccatum: This redoundeth not to the reproch of God; for what marvell, if he bee ſaid to be accurſed to God, that hath in himſelfe that which God hateth, namely ſinne, in 3. Gal. it is not the manner of the death onely, that made it ignominious, but our ſinnes, which Chriſt bare.

whether Chriſt tooke upon him mans mortall nature.

4. Oecumenius upon this place thus writeth: we were ſubject to the curſe becauſe we had tranſgreſſed the Law; Chriſt was not ſubject, becauſe he had fulfilled it: Eam ergo execrationem ſuſcepit, cui obnoxius non erat, quum ſuſpenſus fuit in ligno, ut execrationem ſolveret, quæ adverſus nos erat: He therefore tooke that curſe, to the which hee was not ſubject, when hee hanged upon the tree, to looſe the curſe which was againſt us, in 3. ad Gal. From hence I reaſon thus: Chriſt tooke that curſe for us, which otherwiſe was not due unto him; but a poſſibility to dye, was incident and appertaining unto the humane nature of Chriſt, though he had not died for us, which notwithſtanding was impoſſible: Ergo, the curſe was not in Chriſts death onely. That Chriſt was by his owne nature ſubiect to mortality, 1. The Scripture teſtifieth; It became him in all things to be like unto us, Heb. 2.17. Ergo, hee was mortall as we are by nature. 2. S. Ambroſe giveth this reaſon: Quis exceptum ſe putet à conditione moriendi, qui non exceptus ſit à conditione naſcendi: Who can thinke himſelfe exempt from the condition of dying, that is not freed from being borne? in obit. Valentinian. Chriſt therefore being borne, had an aptneſſe in his nature to dye. 3. Damaſcene εἰ ἄφθαρτον τὸ σῶμα οὐχ ὁμοούσιον ἡμῖν: If the Lords body had beene immortall, it had not been of the ſame ſubſtance with ours: then it would follow ſaith hee, that Chriſt was not truly made man, and ſo conſequently we not truly ſaved: de fid. lib. 3. c. 28. 4. And Ambroſe againe ſaith: Chriſt was not exempted from death, Vt carnis quam ſuſceperat, legem non recuſaret: That he ſhould not refuſe the Law of the fleſh, which he tooke: In Luk. 22. Mors Chriſti communis ſecundum naturam corporis, ſpecialis ſecundum virtutem: Chriſts death was common in the nature of his body, but ſpeciall in reſpect of the vertue and power thereof: Ambr. ibid.

Chriſt ſhould not have died but for us.
Heb. 2.9.

Yet leſt I be here miſtaken, as though I did thinke, that Chriſt, if he had not died upon the croſſe, (if it had been poſſible) ſhould otherwiſe have died. I am farre from ſo thinking: for Chriſt had never taſted death but for us, Heb. 2.9. I onely ſhew that the law of mortality was in his fleſh by the nature thereof, which law notwithſtanding by his divine Spirit, ſhould have been ſuſpended and overruled. So that he was not, but in the caſe of our redemption, to have died. And here I willingly embrace Damaſcenes judgement. The fleſh of Chriſt τὸ κατὰ φύσιν θνητὸν ὑπάρχον ἐν αὐτῷ, was not by nature free from mortality, but yet ζωοποιὸς γέγονε, it was a quickning and living fleſh, and exempted from mortality by the hypoſtaticall union of the Godhead: de fid. orthod. lib. 3. c. 21.

Thus then I conclude with Auguſtine: Credo filium Dei mortuum eſſe non ſecundum pœnam iniuſtitiæ quam ex toto non habuit, ſed ſecundum legem naturæ, quam pro humani generis redemptione ſuſcepit: I beleeve that the Sonne of God died, not according to the puniſhment of unrighteouſneſſe, which he had not at all, but according to the law of nature, which he tooke for the redemption of mankinde. contra felician. c. 18. If death then and mortality were in Chriſts nature, and thereunto appertaining, but the curſe which he tooke, did not belong unto him, but to us onely for our ſinne; it followeth, that this curſe was not wholly in the death of his body.

Heb. 11.35.

5. That curſe which Chriſt did beare, he hath redeemed us from: but wee are not freed nor redeemed from ſhamefull and ignominious kinds of death: the members of Chriſt have been racked, ſtoned hewen aſunder, &c. Heb. 11.35.37. Ergo, the curſe which was laid upon Chriſt, was not in his ignominious death.

Heb. 12.2.

Obiect. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith: Heb. 12.2. That Ieſus endured the croſſe, and deſpiſed the ſhame, he referreth the ſhame to the manner of death upon the croſſe.

Anſw. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the ſhame of the croſſe, but not of the curſe. 2. Wee confeſſe that it was a ſhamefull and curſed death, but therein lay not the whole curſe. 3. To this ſhame belonged not onely the manner of death which Chriſt ſuffered, but in that hee was counted among tranſgreſſors. Iſay 53.12. and was put to death by the Iewes as a tranſgreſſor of their law: and ſo herein conſiſted the chiefe part of the ſhame and curſe of the croſſe, that he bare our ſins, and ſo was counted a tranſgreſſor for us.

Iſay.53.12.

Obiect. 2. But the Apoſtle proveth Chriſt to be made a curſe, onely becauſe he hanged upon a tree: the ignominie then of his death made the curſe.

Anſw. 1. We grant it was a curſed death, but therein the Apoſtle wholly and onely placeth not the curſe. 2. I ſhewed before out of Moſes and Hierome, that not the hanging of every one, but only of malefactors was accurſed: ſo that not the death, but the deſert, not the condition, but the cauſe, not the ſuſpenſion, but the tranſgreſſion made the curſe: and ſo Chriſt in this ignominious death was made a curſe by reaſon of our ſinnes that were layd upon him: and thus as he was made ſinne for us, and reputed a ſinner in our ſtead; ſo verily he felt Gods wrath and curſe in his ſoule, which was due to our ſinnes.

I will conclude with Auguſtine: Maledictus omnis, &c. qui benedictus in ſua iuſtitia, maledictus ob delicta noſtra: Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree, even every one, yea, the Sonne of God himſelfe,—who was bleſſed in his owne righteouſneſſe, but accurſed for our ſinnes: And before, hee thus writeth: rehearſing the Apoſtles words, that Chriſt was ſent in the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, Rom. 8.3. Illa de peccato eſt mors, &c. Becauſe death is of ſin, that fleſh, though of the virgine, yet was mortall, had the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, &c. And againe the Apoſtle ſaith, God made him ſinne for us. 2. *Cor.*5.20. Maledictum comes peccati: But malediction is the companion of ſinne or tranſgreſſion. *cont. Fauſt. Manich. lib.*14.*c.*5.6. If Chriſt then were accurſed for our ſinnes, if hee by nature of his fleſh were ſubject to mortalitie, if malediction were adherent to our ſinnes which he bare, then did not the curſe only conſiſt in his outward death: We confeſſe, that it alſo was part of the curſe, as *Auguſtine, ibid. c.*9. Mors ipſa ex maledicto eſt: Death is accurſed, becauſe it is the puniſhment of ſinne, but it was not the whole nor the greateſt part of that curſe, which Chriſt was made for us.

2.Cor.5.20.

Againe, he thus writeth upon thoſe words of the Apoſtle, Galath.3.13. Curſed is every one, &c. Chriſtus ex parte mortali pependit in cruce: quid niſi mors Domini in ligno pependit—quid pependit in ligno, niſi peccatum veteris hominis, quod Dominus—pro nobis ſuſcepit—in eius peccati & mortis figura Moſes in eremo—erexit ſerpentem—non igitur mirum ſi de maledicto vicit maledictum, de morte mortem, de peccato peccatum—hæc omnia in cruce triumphata ſunt, &c. Chriſt in his mortall part hung upon the croſſe: what but the death of our Lord hung upon the croſſe,—what but the ſinne of the old man did hang upon the croſſe, which the Lord undertooke for us? as the Apoſtle ſaith, hee made him ſin for us: for a figure of this ſinne and death, Moſes ſet up the Serpent in the wilderneſſe—therefore it is no marvell, if he overcome the curſe by a curſe, death by death, ſinne by ſinne: all theſe were triumphed upon on the croſſe: in 3.c. ad Galat. From this ſentence of Auguſtine I inferre: 1. That Chriſt did beare that curſe upon the croſſe, over the which he triumphed, but he triumphed over the whole curſe both of bodie and ſoule. 2. That as he ſubdued our death by his death, ſo our ſin by his ſin, now imputed to him, and our curſe by his curſe: ſo that, ſuch curſe as he redeemed us from, hee bare himſelfe. 3. Neither doth he ſay, that Chriſt was accurſed only in his mortall part, but did hang upon the croſſe in his mortall part, which we denie not, but there hanged alſo the curſe of death and ſinne.

Wherein the curſe layd upon Chriſt for us chiefly conſiſted.

2.Cor.5.21.

Iuſtine Martyr ſaith, that God would have Chriſt to receive the curſes wholly of all: if hee received all kind of curſes, then both in his ſoule and body.

[illegible] dial. cum Tryphon.

Confeſſ. of Scotland: Hee ſuffered not onely the cruell death of the croſſe which was accurſed by the ſentence of God, but alſo that hee ſuffered for a ſeaſon the wrath of his father, which ſinners had deſerved, &c. See the teſtimonie of ſome Romaniſts afterward produced.

Articles of Chriſts death and paſsion.

Thus I truſt it is evident that Chriſt did ſuſtaine in his ſoule, and not in his bodie onely, the wrath and curſe of God, which was due unto our ſinnes: and ſo by bearing our ſinnes, hath acquitted us thereof, and by enduring the curſe hath alſo freed us there-from: and ſo I end with that ſaying of Hierome: Iniuria domini noſtra gloria: The Lords injurie is our glorie: in 3. ad Galath. The more we aſcribe to Chriſts ſufferings, the leſſe remaineth of ours: the more painefully that he ſuffered, the more fully are wee redeemed, the greater his ſorrow was, the greater our ſolace, his deſolation is our conſolation, his croſſe our comfort, his annoy, our endleſſe ioy; his diſtreſſe in ſoule our releaſe; his calamity our comfort; his miſerie our mercy, his adverſitie our felicitie, and to conclude, his hell our heaven: And ſo our bleſſed Saviour, as Chryſoſtome ſaith; Pluribus in morte doloribus vexatus, quam omnes tragœdi ſcribere poſſunt, expiravit: Being vexed in his death, with more ſorrowes than all tragicall writers in the world can expreſſe, gave up his ſpirit: *hom.*31.in Mat. For this ſo infinite and unſpeakeable love of our Saviour, we can never be ſufficiently thankfull, who vouchſafed not only to die, but to enter into hell for us; not onely to offer his body to paine, but his ſoule to ſorrow for us; wounds to receive in his ſenſe, and terrors in conſcience; a croſſe in his body, and a curſe in his ſoule: the greater debt he payd, the greater our dutie: the more painefull his croſſe, the more fruitfull his death; the more thankefull his love, the deeper his wound, the more infinitely are we bound: the more excellent his patience, the more willing ought to be our obedience: and as Chryſoſtome well ſaith: Si per ſingulas dies pro eo moreremur, qui nos dilexit, non ſic meritum exolveremus: If we ſhould die every day for him, which hath ſo loved us, we could not be anſwerable to his merit. *hom.*19.in Matth.

The concluſion of all is this, that ſeeing the bodily ſufferings of Chriſt, in reſpect of Gods juſtice

1. were not ſufficient, part. 1. that Chriſts agonie in the garden was not cauſed by the feare of his bodily
2. death, but proceeded from the feare and feeling of Gods wrath, part. 2. and ſeeing our Saviour ſuffe-
3. red properly and immediatly in ſoule, and not by compaſſion onely or conſent with his body, part. 3.
4. if Chriſt did ſuſtaine the very torments of hell in his ſoule, as is proved, part, 4. and did appeare be-
5. fore God as guiltie of our ſinnes, part. 5, and was perplexed in his ſoule and conſcience for the ſame,
6. part. 6, if our Saviour by the juſtice of God was to die for our ſinnes, and by his death did ſatisfie his
7. juſtice, and appeaſe his wrath, part. 7, if in his ſoule hee verilie felt the wrath of God kindled
8. againſt our ſinnes, part. 8. and truely complained that hee was in that inſtant forſaken of God,
9. part. 9. and laſtly if hee were made a curſe for us in his body and ſoule, part. 10. It remaineth that
10. Chriſt did not only ſuffer in body for our ſinnes, but ſuſtained alſo in his ſoule ſuch puniſhment, vexation and ſorrow, as was due unto us, and which we ſhould have endured, if he had not as our ſurety in his owne perſon undertaken for us: ſo I conclude with Saint Ambroſe: Paſſionem in Chriſto plus veneror quam creationem, quia creati ad laborem ſumus, redempti ad quietem: I doe more honour Chriſts paſſion, than the creation; for we were created to labour, we are redeemed to reſt. ſerm. 14. in Pſalm. 19. And this queſtion have I of purpoſe travelled in, though not as I would, my leaſure not ſerving thereunto, and being ſo ſtraited, the Printer haſtening this worke, that I ſcarcely had a moneth to diſpatch this treatiſe: yet I have laboured to my power to ſet forth Chriſts holy ſufferings for us, that nothing be detracted there-from: and ſo I end with that ſaying of Origen: Non ſic mihi videtur inutilis, qui nativitatem Chriſti, ſtellam, &c. ſalutationem angelorum tacet, quam qui crucifixum eum abſcondit: He ſeemeth not to me to be ſo unprofitable, which doth conceale Chriſts nativitie, the ſtarre and ſalutation of the Angels, as he that doth hide Chriſt crucified. hom. 1. in Matth.

Laſtly, for the confirmation of this truth, that Chriſt ſuffered the wrath of God in his ſoule for us, I will produce. 1. The teſtimonies of our adverſaries themſelves. 2. The witneſſe of the holy Martyrs that died in this faith. 3. The conſent of the famous writers and confeſſors of the Church of England.

Firſt for our adverſaries: 1. Nicolaus Cuſanus a man of great account among them thus writeth: Illam pœnam ſenſus conformem damnatis in inferno pati voluit in gloriam dei patris ſui: That paine of ſenſe conformable or like unto the damned in hell he would ſuffer to the glory of God his father: Excitation. lib 10. ex ſerm. qui per ſpiritum ſanctum ſeipſum obtulit.

2. Ferus: Illa Chriſti derelictio pavor eſt conſcientia noſtra ob admiſſa peccata, quæ iudicium Dei & iram æternam experitur, & ſic afficitur, quaſi in perpetuum derelicta & reiecta à facie Dei eſſet: That dereliction of Chriſt is the trembling of our conſcience for ſinne committed, which feeleth by experience Gods judgement and eternall wrath, and ſo is affected, as if it were for ever forſaken, and rejected from the preſence of God, lib. 4. in Matth. c. 27. in illa verba: Deus meus, &c.

3. Durand. Præcipua cauſa fuit anima, &c. The chiefeſt cauſe of the effects of Chriſts croſſe was his ſoule. in 3. diſt. 22. q. 3. Bellarmine ſaith, not ſo: Sed præcipua cauſa fuit totum compoſitum. i. totius ille homo qui patiebatur: præterea eſto, fuiſſet anima præcipua cauſa, tamen etiam caro et ſanguis fuit cauſa: alioqui non vere diceretur, ſanguis eius emundat nos: The chiefe cauſe is the whole compound, that is, the whole man which ſuffered: beſide, be it, that his ſoule was the chiefe cauſe, yet his fleſh and blood was a cauſe, otherwiſe it ſhould not be truly ſaid, his blood doth clenſe us. 1. Ioh. 1. 7. Here by Bellarmines owne teſtimonie the ſoule of Chriſt (which muſt be by the ſuffering thereof) is the chiefeſt cauſe of our redemption. Bellarm. lib. 4. de Chriſt. anim. c. 15.

Secondly, the holy Martyrs have thus beleeved of Chriſts ſoule-ſufferings: Maſter Latimer Biſhop and Martyr: I beleeve verily for my part, that Chriſt ſuffered the paines of hell proportionably, as it correſpondeth and anſwereth to the whole ſinne of the world: And againe, I ſee no inconvenience to ſay that Chriſt ſuffered in ſoule in hell, I ſingularly commend the exceeding great charitie of Chriſt, that for our ſakes would ſuffer in hell in his ſoule: It ſetteth out the unſpeakeable hatred, that God hath to ſinne, &c. ſerm. 7. coram reg. Edvard. Here though Maſter Latimer ſeeme to thinke that Chriſt might ſuffer in the place of hell in ſoule, for the which we alleage him not: yet he giveth three effectuall reaſons, that it was neceſſary for Chriſt to ſuffer the paines of hell in his ſoule. 1. That his paines may be proportionable to the ſinne of the world. 2. To ſet forth Chriſts charitie. 3. And the great wrath of God againſt ſinne.

Iohn Warne holy Martyr hath alſo ſealed this truth: Chriſt ſuffering for our ſinnes did beare our deſerved condemnation, the paines of death, the taſte of abiection, the very terrours of hell, yeelding his ſpirit to his father, his bodie to be buried in the earth. Fox p, 1580. col. 2.

Thirdly for the confeſſors, and the confeſſion of our Church, this evidence we have.

1. The annotation in the great Bible called the Biſhops Bible, allowed publikely to be read in our Church: upon the 22. chapter of S. Luke, verſ. 44. thus teſtifieth: Hee felt the horror of Gods wrath and iudgement againſt ſinne.

2. And in the booke of homilies allowed publikely to be recited to the people. ſerm. 1. of the paſſion, it thus ſtandeth: Chriſt did put himſelfe betweene Gods deſerved wrath and our ſin, and rent the obligation, wherein we were in danger to God, and payd our debt. Our debt was a great deale too great for us to have paid; & without paiment, God the Father could never be at one with us: it pleaſed him to be the payer therof, and to diſcharge us quite. And againe afterward, He beſtowed himſelfe wholly for the ranſomming of us. If Chriſt then gave himſelfe wholly for us, & paied all our debt, wherof the chiefe part was the giefe and anguiſh of ſoule and ſenſe of Gods wrath, it was neceſſarie that Chriſt ſhould have ſuffered all theſe things for us.

3. In the Catechiſme authorized publikely to be taught, in the expoſition of the Creede upon the article of Chriſts paſſion, it is thus confeſſed: Chriſt ſuffered moſt painefull and ſhamefull death, ſuſtaining withall torments of mind more cruell, than any bodily death. And againe, Chriſt became our ſurety and pledge unto his father, to anſwere, pay, and ſuffer, whatſoever we did owe, and had deſerved.

4. Beſide this publike teſtimonie of our Church, the common defenders of the faith of the Goſpell, both, by writing and preaching, have thus taught; as D. Fulke, that worthy learned man, thus witneſſeth: It was the burthen of ſinne and the curſe of God due unto ſinne, which Chriſt tooke upon him, to deliver us from ſinne and the puniſhment thereof, and not only the bodily paine of death, that enforced him, that was God, to complaine, that he was forſaken of God. Annot. in Matth. 27. ſect. 3.

Againe, What is more to the honour of Chriſt, then that he vouchſafed to deſcend into hell for us, and to abide that paine, which we had deſerved to ſuffer eternally: and what may bee rather called hell, than the anguiſh of ſoule, which he ſuffered, when he being God complained, that he was forſaken of God? Fulke. in 2. Act. ſect. 11.

5. Maſter Fox that reverend godly writer, and faithfull preacher of the Goſpell, conſenteth with the reſt, & thus delivereth his iudgement: The torments which Chriſt ſuffered in ſoule and ſpirit, were the greateſt of all, when as he not onely in body decaying for weakeneſſe and bleeding, but in ſoule fainting with anguiſh and diſcomfort, began to cry with a loud voyce, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken mee. de Chriſto Crucifixo.

6. A zealous preacher of our Church, who had while he lived great experience of the caſes of conſcience, and an excellent grace from God to comfort ſuch as were afflicted, doubteth not to ſay, that Chriſt muſt ſuffer the very pangs and paines of hell for the leaſt ſinne that every man committed, ſeeing that even our leaſt ſinnes cauſed him to be accurſed, and in the extremity of griefe to cry, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? in his Meditations, pag. 215. ſet forth ſince his death.

Thus (I truſt) this point is thorowly cleared, that Chriſt ſuffered the very anguiſh and hell ſorrowes of ſoule for us, and taſted of the bitter cup of Gods wrath due unto our ſinnes, which otherwiſe wee ſhould have moſt deepely drunke of: here I will end this queſtion. And this I ſimply and unfainedly proteſt, that the love of ſeeking and ſearching out the truth hath drawne me into it, not the deſire of contention with any in our Church, much leſſe to oppoſe my ſelfe to the judgement of any reverend perſon, whom for their authoritie I honour, for their perſon I reverence, for their learned travells in the Church wee are much bound unto: from whom as I am unwilling to diſſent, ſo deſirous to learne. And ſo I conclude; moſt humbly craving in the bowels of Chriſt, that where I have ſayd the truth, I may bee received; where I doubt I may be reſolved; where I have well ſayd, I be not condemned; where I have ignorantly ſlipped, I may be pardoned. For I doe moſt willingly embrace that ſentence of Auguſtine: Aliquid aliter ſapere, quam res habet, humana tentatio eſt; in nullo aliter ſapere, quam res habet, angelica perfectio eſt: Otherwiſe ſometime to thinke, than the matter is, is an humane tentation; but in nothing to be deceived, is angelicall perfection: De baptiſ. 2. 5. If in this queſtion of ſoule-ſufferings, there be any difference of opinion in our Church, let not any man take offence thereat, for wee all doe conſent, that Chriſts death is alone ſufficient, neither doe we vary in any fundamentall point: they which doe free Chriſt from his ſpirituall ſufferings, doe it unto his honour, leſt by this meanes any deſperation, or doubting might bee faſtened upon Chriſts ſoule; they which affirme the ſenſe of Gods wrath in Chriſts ſoule, doe therein alſo ſeeke Chriſts honour, leſt any thing ſhould bee diminiſhed of his holy ſufferings. Seeing therefore wee all hold the ſame foundation, and tend to the ſame end, let us not either by writing or ſpeaking, nouriſh domeſticall contention; but be willing one to yeeld unto another in the truth, and every one ready to ſay with S. Hierome, Non ſolum te viciſſe exiſtimes, vicimus uterque, palmam refers tu mei, & ego tui erroris: utinam mihi ſemper ſic diſputare contingat, ut ad meliora proficiens, deſeram, quod male tenebam: Thinke not, that thou onely haſt overcome, we are conquerors both, you beare the palme and prayſe of my error, I of yours: I wiſh that I may alwaye a diſpute with ſuch ſucceſſe, that proceeding to the better, I may forſake that, which before I did not well hold: adverſ. Luciferian. But I have tarried too long in this queſtion: the next followeth.

The fourth Queſtion, whether CHRIST deſcended in ſoule into hell, to deliver the Patriarches.

The Papiſts.

THey do beleve that Chriſt according to his ſoule went down to hell, to deliver the Patriarches and all juſt men there holden in bondage till his death, Rhemiſt. Act. 2. ſect. 12. 26. Error.

Arg. 1. He that aſcended, is he that deſcended firſt into the loweſt parts of the earth, Epheſ. 4. 9. that is, into hell, the which is the loweſt place of the earth, Bellar. cap. 12. Epheſ. 4. 9.

Anſw. 1. The earth it ſelfe, in reſpect in the world, is the loweſt part, ſo that here one part of the earth is not to be compared with another: but the whole earth, in reſpect of the high heavens, hath the name of the lower parts: ſo is it taken, Pſal. 139. 15. Thou haſt faſhioned me beneath, or in the lower Pſal. 139. 15.

Philip.2.7.
Pſal.63.9.10.

parts of the earth : but David (I truſt) they will not ſay, was borne in hell, becauſe he ſpeaketh of the lower parts of the earth, conſul. Bez. in hunc locum. So that by the deſcending of Chriſt into the loweſt parts of the earth, is meant nothing elſe, but the loweſt and extreameſt degree of his abaſing and humiliation. Fulk. annot. in hunc locum : as S. Paul ſaith, that he made himſelſe of no reputation, and tooke upon him the forme of a ſervant. 2. Againe, the Prophet David ſaith, they that ſeeke his ſoule to deſtroy it, ſhall goe downe into the loweſt parts of the earth : which the Septuagint tranſlate, κατώτατα τῆς γῆς, infima terra, the loweſt parts: and S. Paul ſaith, in the comparative κατώτερα, the lower parts: As in the Pſalme therefore by the loweſt parts the Pſalmiſt underſtandeth the grave and deſtruction, as it may appeare, verſe 10. They ſhall be a portion for Foxes; ſo the Apoſtle by deſcending into the lower parts, doth ſet forth the loweſt degree of Chriſts humiliation, in death and the grave.

1. Contra. Bellarmine thus objecteth : 1. The inferiour part of the earth, ſignifieth not the whole earth, ſed unam partem, but one part of the earth, and that lower than the reſt : it doth not then betoken the ſuperficies, or upper part of the earth.

Epheſ.4.10.

2. 1. He deſcended (ſaith the Apoſtle) that he might fill all things, and therefore it was neceſſary that Chriſt ſhould truly deſcend to hell to deliver the Patriarches, as hee deſcended into the earth, to viſit all parts of his kingdome : that even the things alſo under the earth, that is, the infernall ſpirits ſhould bow the knee unto him, Bellarm. c.12. Loc.6.

1. Anſw. 1. The inferiour part of the earth being compared with it ſelfe, cannot ſignifie the whole earth : but being underſtood to be the inferiour part of the world, the whole earth may very well bee comprehended. 2. Where the Apoſtle ſaith in the plurall, inferiores partes, the inferiour parts, it is great ignorance to ſay, that hee meaneth, unam partem, but one part. 3. Origen thus expoundeth S. Paul to ſpeake of Chriſt.: Quaſi de ſuperioribus ad inferiora venientis : Comming from the ſuperiour to the inferiour or lower parts, Hom. 2. in Geneſ. And againe, Deſcendere deus dicitur, quando curam humanæ fragilitatis habere dignatur, &c. God is ſayd to deſcend, when he vouchſafeth to have care of humane fraiktie, which more ſpecially is to be underſtood of Chriſt, qui deſcendit non ſolum curare, ſed portare, quæ noſtra ſunt, who deſcended not onely to cure, but to beare, that which is ours, Hom.4. in Geneſ. Thus alſo Auguſtine teſtifieth : Cœleſtis illa habitatio angelorum—illa pars rerum ſuperna eſt ; hæc terrena—ſi illi comparatur, inferna eſt : cum enim & hîc ſunt mortui, ne mireris, ſi infernum dicitur : That celeſtiall habitation of the Angels is the ſuperiour part, this terrene life in reſpect of that, the infernall : for ſeeing here are alſo upon the earth, they which are dead, no marvell if it be infernall, in Pſal.85. Their owne Lyranus alloweth this interpretation : becauſe the parts of the earth are inferiour, reſpectu aliarum partium mundi : in reſpect of other parts of the world.

1. How Chriſt filleth all things Auguſtine well ſheweth : Nec tamen localem dei fingimus præſentiam, non mundum dimittens ad cœlos aſcendit, nec cœlum deſerens ad terram venit, ſed uno eodemque tempore totus totum implevit : Neither doe wee imagine a locall preſence of God, for hee went not to heaven leaving the world ; neither forſaking heaven came to the earth; but in one and the ſame time, he all and whole filled the whole, Cont. Felician. c.16. Chriſt then not by his locall preſence, but by his divine power filled all things.

2. 2. Neither is that place Philip.2.10. to be underſtood of Chriſts deſcenſion : 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh directly of Chriſts exaltation : verſe 9. Therefore God hath exalted him : but the deſcenſion belongeth not to Chriſts exaltation, as Origen ſaith : Si diligenter conſideremus, inveniemus, quia nunquam quis in ſanctum fere locum deſcendiſſe dicitur, neque ad vituperabilem conſcendiſſe : If we well conſider, we ſhall find, that one is not ſayd to deſcend to an honourable place, not to aſcend to a diſhonourable, Hom.15. in Geneſ. He thinketh then, that to deſcend belongeth not to honour, or exaltation. 2. S. Paul ſheweth, that this bowing of the knee unto Chriſt of all creatures ſhall chiefly bee accompliſhed in the day of judgement, Rom.14.11.12. where having made mention of bowing of the knee, he inferreth, verſe 12. ſo then every one of us ſhall give accounts of himſelfe unto God. 3. It is too great curioſitie to applie this place to the infernall ſpirits properly : for they are not yet under the earth as tyed to a certaine place, being by the Apoſtle called the princes of the ayre, Epheſ.2.2. the Apoſtle rather by this diſtribution, of things in heaven, things in the earth, and things under the earth, comprehendeth generally all creatures in the world whatſoever : as in the ſecond commandement wee are forbidden to make the likeneſſe of any thing to worſhip it, either in heaven above, in the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth. 4. To cauſe the infernall ſpirits to bow the knee to Chriſt, that is, to acknowledge his power, Auguſtine aſcribeth not to the preſence of Chriſts humanitie, but to the power of his divinity : Neque aliter eum video ſuſcitare potuiſſe carnem ſuam, ſi apud inferos prædicem velut abſentis dei non fuiſſe potentiam : Neither doe I ſee how otherwiſe Chriſt could have raiſed his fleſh, if we do thinke the power of his Godhead was abſent in hell : Act. cum Felician. c.17.

How all things are ſaid to bow the knee unto Chriſt.
Epheſ.2.2.

3. 3. All this being yeelded, that Chriſt by his deſcent into hell ſhaked the infernall powers, and triumphed over them, which is by ſome of our reverend fathers, and learned brethren, upon perſwaſion of divers reaſons and arguments affirmed, yet hath not Bellarmine obtained that he would, that Chriſt by his locall deſcent did deliver the ſoules of the Patriarches out of hell.

Acts 2.27.

Argum. 2. Act.2.27. Thou wilt not leave my ſoule in hell; nor ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption : this cannot be underſtood of the grave, for the grave is no place for the ſoule : and here the ſoule is oppoſed to the fleſh, that as his fleſh ſhould ſee no corruption, ſo his ſoule ſhould not remaine in hell : Chriſt therefore went downe in ſoule to hell, which was to no other end but to deliver the Fathers from thence, Bellar. ibid.

Anſw. This place is alleaged by Saint Peter, out of the ſixteenth Pſalme; from thence then the ſenſe of this place muſt be derived: firſt therefore wee ſhall ſhew, that neither the word (נפש nephesh) here tranſlated ſoule, can properly ſignifie the ſoule of Chriſt; nor the other word (שאול sheol) can bee tranſlated hell.

Firſt, this word nephesh is taken in Scripture for the life: Let us not ſmite his ſoule, that is, take away his life: and conſequently it ſignifieth ſometime the very bodie of the dead, wherein there was life, Levit.21.verſe.1.11. And that in this place, nephesh ſignifieth the life, it ſhall appeare by the like place: My life (חי chai) draweth neere to the grave or hell, (sheol) this place may very well interprete the other.

Levit.21.1.11.
Pſal.88.3.

Secondly, the other word (sheol) is not here underſtood hell. There are foure words commonlie uſed in the Pſalmes, expreſſing the ſame thing in effect which (sheol) doth: yet none of them all are applied to ſignifie hell: the firſt is (שחת shacath) fovea, the pit. What profit is there in my blood, when I goe downe into the pit? the ſecond (בור bhor) the lake: the third (קבר cheber) the grave: both theſe words are indifferently uſed for the ſame thing, *Pſal.*88.3. the word is (sheol) verſe 4.5. the other two words are alſo uſed, as expreſſing the former: And all theſe three doe containe a deſcription of death and of the grave: the fourth is (תהמות tehomoth) abyſſus terræ, thou wilt take me from the deepe of the earth. In all theſe places there is no mention made at all of hell, but only of the grave.

The Hebrew word sheol, alwayes ſignifieth not Hell.
Pſal.71.20.

Now that this place can have no ſuch meaning, as Bellarmine enforceth, thus wee ſhew it: firſt, this place is ſo applied to Chriſt, [a] as it muſt firſt bee true in David: well then, firſt they muſt make Davids ſoule to bee in hell then muſt it be in the loweſt hell, Pſal.86.13. Thou haſt delivered my ſoule from the neathermoſt hell (sheol) Now Limb. patrum is not the neathermoſt hell, but as they ſay, only in the brim of hell. Againe, S. Peter only applieth this text to the reſurrection of Chriſt, verſe 31. he knowing this before, ſpake of the reſurrection of Chriſt: But the reſurrection was only of the body of Chriſt, not of his ſoule: wherefore this place cannot be underſtood of the deſcending of Chriſts ſoule into hell, to deliver the Patriarches.

[a] Typically, though hyſtorically it onely agree to Chriſt and ſo is the contradiction healed which is objected: Loidoromaſt. cont. 15.

Contra. Bellarmine replieth: 1. That anima, the ſoule, cannot be here taken for the life of the body or fleſh: for that the Apoſtle expreſſeth afterward, *that his fleſh did ſee no corruption ver.*31. Wherfore unleſſe we admit a needleſſe repetition of the ſame thing, it was one thing for Chriſts ſoule not to be left in hell, another for his fleſh not to ſee corruption.

2. The Greeke word ᾅδης, alwayes ſignifieth hell, the grave never: *Bellar. c.*12. *loc.*4.

1: Anſw. 1. Where the Prophet ſaith, Thou ſhalt not leave my ſoule in hell, nor ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption: though the ſame thing be here expreſſed, it is no needleſſe repetition, when as, after the manner of the Scripture, the latter part expoundeth the former: for he ſheweth how his ſoule, that is, his [b] life or perſon, ſhall not be left in hell, becauſe his fleſh ſhould be delivered from corruption. 2. And that by ſoule, Chriſts perſon is to be underſtood it may appeare, as in the like ſenſe it is ſayd, Geneſ.46.26. The ſoules that went with Iacob into Egypt, and came out of his loynes: yet their ſoules came not out of Iacobs loynes: ſo then as Lyranus well ſaith, accipitur hic anima pro homine: Here the ſoule is taken for man: ponit partem pro toto, he putteth a part for the whole, gloſſ. interlin. Chriſts ſoule, that is, perſon, may bee as well ſayd to bee in the grave, as their ſoules to come out of Iacobs loines. And againe, Saint Peter by the holy one, expoundeth Chriſts fleſh: what is the holy one; but Chriſts ſoule or perſon? for holineſſe properly is not an adjunct of his fleſh onely, but of his perſon: as well then may ſoule be taken for the life, as the holy one for his fleſh. 3. Saint Peter ſaith, that the Prophet ſpake of Chriſts reſurrection which is of the bodie, not of the ſoule: as Auguſtine alſo ſaith; Primogenitus Chriſtus vocatur ex mortuis, quod primum illum ex inferni tenebris, in lucem reſurrectionis partus ediderit: Chriſt is called the firſt borne of the dead, becauſe the birth of the reſurrection did firſt bring him into the light out of the darkeneſſe of hell, *de temp. ſerm.*161. But Chriſt is ſayd to be the firſt fruits of the dead onely in reſpect of his body, not of his ſoule: Ergo, his ſoule deſcended not to deliver the Patriarkes out of hell.

[b] Who ſeeth not, that indifferently ſoule may be taken for the life or perſon: therefore here is no contradiction, as is objected. See further. *Loidorom. contrad.*5.
Geneſ.46.26.

2. That ᾅδης, only ſignifieth hell, the grave never, is an untrue and unlearned poſition: Geneſ.42.38. You ſhall bring my gray head with ſorrow to hell, where the Septuagint uſe the word ᾅδης. Did Iacob carrie his gray haires to hell? I thinke he left them in his grave. Ambroſe taketh the word ᾅδης to ſignifie, locum inviſibilem defunctis preparatum, an inviſible place prepared for the dead, &c. *de ver. mart. c.*7. hee ſeemeth to make it a generall word, to expreſſe the ſtate of the dead, whether in the place of joy or torment.

2. The marginall note of your owne vulgar Latine text thus obſerveth, *Geneſ.*37.35, upon theſe words, I ſhall goe mourning to my ſonne into hell, Non hic ſignificat locum pœnarum, ſed foſſam, vel ſepulchrum: It ſignifieth not here the place of puniſhment, which is hell, but the pit or the grave, &c. Who ſeeth not now this fellowes boldneſſe that denieth hell to be taken for the grave?

Geneſ.37.35.

3. If hell bee here taken properly; then it will follow that Chriſts ſoule was in the ſorrowes of hell: as the Vulgar Latine readeth, Actes 2. verſe 24. Having looſed the ſorrowes of hell, becauſe it was impoſſible hee ſhould bee holden of it: and ſo Origene ſeemeth to thinke, when hee ſaith; Data eſt ei anima Chriſti redemptio pro nobis decepto —— & non videnti, quia non poterit ſuſtinere in tenendo eam tormentis, &c. The ſoule of Chriſt was given (to the devill)

3.

to bee a redemption for us, hee being deceived and not perceiving, that he could not long hold it in torment,&c. and therefore it is ſayd, Thou wilt not leave my ſoule in hell,&c. Tract.12.in Matth. If Chriſts ſoule were tormented in hell, it muſt bee referred to his hell-ſufferings upon the croſſe, for after death he ſuffered not.

Argum. 3. The Apoſtle ſaith : Rom.10.7. Say not who ſhall deſcend into the deepe, that is, to fetch Chriſt againe from the dead: Here the deepe muſt be taken for hell, as the moſt oppoſite place to heaven : Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. 1. The Apoſtle taketh this place from Moſes, Deut 30.14. Say not who ſhall goe up to heaven for us, or goe over the Sea,&c, That which the Apoſtle tranſlateth the deepe, Moſes calleth the ſea, as Exod.15.5. The depths of the ſea covered them : the Apoſtle is not contrary to Moſes, nor yet divers from him in ſenſe, though they differ in words : if then you will find hell here, you muſt ſeeke for it in the bottome alſo of the ſea.

Pſalme 103.13. 2. Wee need not ſound the center of the earth to make an oppoſition to heaven : for heaven ſo high, and earth ſo low, are places oppoſite enough, as pſalme.103.13. As high as the heavens are above the earth.

3. The Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe : That is to bring Chriſt againe from the dead : the deepe then, whereof he ſpeaketh, is the place of the dead : but bodies onely die, ſoules die not : and therefore this deepe is not hell, where ſoules live in endleſſe torment.

4. Origene thus expoundeth this place : Paulus quoniam deſcenſionis Chriſti myſterium predicat profundum nominavit, quaſi de ſuperioribus ad inferiora venientis: Paul becauſe he doth ſet forth the myſterie of Chriſts deſcenſion, he nameth the deepe, as of one deſcending from the ſuperiour parts to the lower, Hom.2.in Geneſ. this deepe which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, he referreth to the earth, which is the deepe and lower part of the world, in reſpect of heaven.

5. Lyranus refuſeth their interpretations, which would have this underſtood of Chriſts deſcending to Limbus patrum, and giveth this ſenſe of theſe words, to fetch Chriſt from the dead, Id eſt dicere, quod non fuit mortuus : That is to ſay, he died not, and conſequently, roſe againe.

Arg. 4. Bellarmine urgeth other places to prove Chriſts deſcent to deliver the Patriarks : as that of Ionas, *Mat.*12.40. to the which ſee our anſwere in the appendix to this queſtion, error 27.*arg.*Papiſt.2.

Likewiſe he diſcourſeth at large of that place of S.Peter, 1.Pet.3.19.20. By the which he went and preached to the ſpirits in priſon, which were in times paſt diſobedient : See alſo our anſwere at large to this place before, in the *9.controverſ.1.queſt.argu.Papiſt.*3. Unto which our anſwere, I will here adde thus much further : that they can have no ſhew at all from this place, for the deliverance of the Patriarches out of Limbus : becauſe the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch as were diſobedient, and in their diſobedience
Ezech.18.22. died : for if they had repented of their diſobedience, they ſhould not be named after the ſinnes which they had committed, but ſhould live in their righteouſnes, which they had done, Ezech.18.22. to ſay then Luke 16.26. that Chriſt went downe to hell to deliver the damned ſoules, doth contradict the Scripture, Luk.16.26 They cannot come from thence to us: and S. Auguſtine doth count it contrary to the faith to ſay, by Chriſts deſcending to hell, homines, qui cum viverent, minime crediderunt, apud inferos credere, that the incredulous and unbeleevers in their life time, beleeved in hell.

The Proteſtants.

THat Chriſt our Saviour, by the vertue of his death, did overcome hell and the divell, we doe verilie beleeve, which may be called a deſcent into hell : that he alſo ſuffered the torments of hell upon the croſſe, and ſo deſcended into hell for us, to abide that bitter paine which we had deſerved to ſuffer eternally, wee doe alſo hold and teach : for what rather may bee called hell, then the anguiſh of ſoule which he ſuffered, when hee being God, yet complained that he was forſaken of God ? Furthermore, if deſcending into hell, be taken according to the Hebrue phraſe, For entring into the ſtate of the dead : ſo we alſo grant, that Chriſt deſcended into hell, *Fulke. Acts.2.ſect.*11. But for the deſcending of Chriſt deſcended into hell, after your ſenſe, to deliver the Patriarches from thence, when you can prove it out of Scripture, we will yeeld unto you.

Argum. 1. The ſoule of Chriſt which he committed into his fathers hands, was in paradiſe, where Luke 23.43. hee promiſed the thiefe ſhould be with him, Luke 23.43. How then could his ſoule bee three dayes in hell : as you affirme, from the time of his death to his reſurrection ? Fulke.Luke 11.*ſect.*4. Bellarmine anſwereth, that it was not impoſſible, that the ſoule of Chriſt ſhould bee in two places at once : *cap.*15. which is an anſwere not worthy to bee anſwered ; for who hath taught them ſo boldly to build their phantaſies upon Gods power, having no warrant nor aſſurance of his will ? May not the Ubiquitaries by the ſame reaſon prove the omnipreſence of Chriſts humanitie, becauſe he is able to make his ſoule and body to be in many places at once, as well as in two : and ſo conſequently by his power, which is infinite, as well in all places, as in many ?

Againe, it may be anſwered, that Chriſt was with the thiefe in paradiſe as he was God.

How the thiefe was with Chriſt in Paradiſe.

Contra. 1. The anſwere made by our Saviour to the thiefe, muſt be agreeable to his demand : now he made requeſt to Chriſt as man : Remember me, when thou ſhalt come into thy kingdome : the Godhead neither commeth nor goeth : and as he was God, hee was never out of his kingdome : ſo then as Chriſt was to enter into his kingdome, ſo was he with the thiefe, and the thiefe with him : but he entred into his kingdome in his humanitie : Ergo, in his humane ſoule he was that day with the theefe in paradiſe, and the theefe with him.

2. Chriſt ſaith not, This day I will be with thee , but thou ſhalt be with me in paradiſe : Chriſt is with us as God every where, as he ſaith, *Matth.*28.20. I am with you to the end of the world : when he ſpeaketh as God, he is ſayd to be with us : but when we are ſayd to be with him, his whole perſon is deſcribed : as S. Paul ſaith, I deſire to be diſſolved, and to be with Chriſt. *Phil.*1.13. But as Chriſt was God, even then he was with Paul : this difference is well noted by Bernard: Chriſtus nobiſcum eſt,&c. Chriſt is with us at all times to the end of the world ; but when ſhall we be with him ? when we ſhall be taken up and meete Chriſt in the ayre, *Serm.*16.*in Pſal.*91.

Phil.1.23.

3. And that Chriſts humane preſence in Paradiſe is to be underſtood, Bernard againe ſheweth thus writing : Factum eſt utique, quod promiſſum eſt, ipſo die quo compaſſus & corregnavit : That which was promiſed, was fulfilled ; for the ſame day that he ſuffered together, he raigned alſo together with Chriſt: *In ſolemnitate ſanctor. ſerm.*5. but the thiefe did not raigne together with him as God, for ſo the kingdome of God is not communicable to any. Lyranus alſo underſtandeth it of the preſence of Chriſts ſoule in paradiſe, where the ſoules of the fathers were : annot. in hunc locum.

Argum. 2. I will preſſe them with Durandi argument, one of their owne champions : the ſoules of the Saints were delivered in the very inſtant of Chriſts death : Ergo, Chriſt needed not to deſcend in ſoule to hell to deliver them.

Bellarmine anſwereth : firſt, though the price of redemption were payed in Chriſts death , yet the Patriarches were to expect Chriſts comming thither not of neceſſitie, but of congruitie. Secondly, Chriſt deſcended for other cauſes, and not onely to deliver the ſoules of the Patriarches , *Bellar.c.*15.*reſp.ad obiect.*2.Durand.

Contra. 1. As touching other cauſes of Chriſts deſcenſion, we are not now to deale : the queſtion is, whether hee deſcended to ſet the ſoules of the Patriarches at large, which if you cannot iuſtifie, we have that we would.

2. It is well yet that you holde the article of Chriſts locall deſcenſion to deliver the Patriarches to bee of congruitie, not of neceſſitie : but I pray you how can you make it an article of our faith, if it bee not neceſſary ?

3. You ſay the Patriarches were yet to expect Chriſts comming : and ſo your opinion is, that Chriſts ſoule ſtayed in hell till the third day, and then riſing againe, he brought with him all the ſoules of the fathers. Contr. 1. Had the thiefe then greater priviledge then any of the Patriarches and Prophets ? for he went to Paradiſe the ſame day Chriſt dyed: was heaven open for a thiefe and murtherer, though now a convert, and was it not open for Abraham the father of the faithfull, for Moſes , for David ? 2. If the Patriarches ſoules were looſed at Chriſts death, were they not to accompanie Chriſts ſoule into heaven, and to aſcend with it ? for Chriſt ſaith : where I am , there ſhalbe my miniſter alſo. Iohn 12,26. but Chriſts ſoule was in paradiſe the ſame day he ſuffered , as he ſayd to the thiefe, this day thou ſhalt be with me in paradiſe : and Ambroſe witneſſeth the ſame : Paradiſus non dixit, non eſt in me, quem regnare in ſe abſoluto latrone cognoverat : Paradiſe did not ſay hee is not in mee, whom it did know to raigne there by the abſolution of the thiefe : Exhortat. ad virgin.. If then Chriſt as man and in his ſoule was in paradiſe, ſurely all the Patriarches ſoules went up with him ; then Chriſt needed not to have deſcended to hell to deliver them : this I ſay, is their ſenſe, that hold the Patriarches then onely to be delivered, whom we affirme already to have bin in joy by faith in Chriſt to come : as now followeth in this next argument to be ſhewed.

The thiefe not in heaven before the Patriarches.

Iohn 12.26.

Argum. 3. Wee beleeve that the Patriarches and godly Fathers were in Heaven or Paradiſe , as well before the reſurrection of Chriſt as after : for in as much as they were iuſtified by faith in his blood, they received the ſame crowne and reward of righteouſneſſe that we do, being juſtified by the ſame meanes. This we have prooved more at large, *controv.*9.*queſt.*1. Wherefore ſeeing there were none of the Fathers in hell, which they call Limbus Patrum, to bee delivered , there was no ſuch cauſe why Chriſt ſhould deſcend into hell. Therefore hee deſcended not to deliver the Patriarches that remained in darkeneſſe. And here I would aske them a queſtion, from whence they thinke Moſes and Elias came, when they appeared talking with Chriſt in the mount, Matthew 17.3. will they ſay they came from hell a place of darkeneſſe, appearing in ſuch light and great glory ? but for Elias I know their anſwere already , that he came from the terreſtriall Paradiſe, where they imagne him to be kept, which I have ſhewed before to bee a meere fable, *pag.*745.*contr.*17.*qu.*3.*part.*2. What will they ſay for Moſes : if hee were not in Limbus, no more were the reſt of the Prophets: and to ſay that Moſes was fetcht from hell, and out of darkeneſſe to talke with the ſonne of God in light, I thinke they are not ſo abſurd to affirme. Chryſoſtome upon this place thus writeth : Voluit Petrus tria tabernacula facere,&c. Peter would have made three tabernacles for Moſes, Elias, Chriſt ; and ſo have ſeparated the law, the prophets, and the Goſpell : Ergo apparuit lucida nubes unum tabernaculum, quod tres ſimul texit : Therefore there appeared a bright cloude as one tabernacle , which covered all three,&c. If a cloud of brightneſſe were Moſes tabernacle, then your Limbus a dungeon of darkeneſſe was not at this time his tabernacle : and if he were not in Limbus , neither Abraham the father of the faithfull, nor the reſt of the prophets.

Matth.17.3. From whence Moſes and Elias came, when they appeared to Chriſt.

Argum. 4. They agree not among themſelves about this article of Chriſts deſcenſion , to deliver the Patriarches: Andradius ſaith, it cannot bee proved out of Scripture: but Bellarmine and our Rhemiſts doe bring their beſt arguments for it out of Scripture: they allenge alſo divers cauſes of his deſcenſion: the Romane Catechiſme rendereth two reaſons; one to ſet the Patriarches at libertie; the other to manifeſt the power and vertue of his death in hell: but that Saint Paul ſaith, was ſufficiently manifeſted and made knowne upon the Croſſe, Coloſ.2.15. Thomas Aquinas beſides theſe, addeth a third, that as Chriſt died for us to free us from death, ſo it was convenient that he ſhould deſcend into hell, to deliver us from the deſcenſion into hell: as though Chriſt by his death did not fully deliver us from eternall damnation. Some other hold, that Chriſt went thither to ſuffer the torments of hell, that hee might fully pay our ranſome by ſuffering the whole puniſhment due unto mankind. But this is a very groſſe and erronious opinion: for Chriſt ſuffered fully in body and ſoule vpon the croſſe, when he cryed, Conſummatum eſt, It is finiſhed: that is he had fully appeaſed the wrath of God by his ſufferings. Coloſ 2.15.

Durand a Popiſh writer of great account, thinketh that Chriſts ſoule did not deſcend into hell, Secundum ſubſtantiam, ſed per effectus quoſdam; in his ſubſtance, but by certaine effects: not ſubſtantially but effectually.

1. 1. This opinion of Durand, is thus impugned by Bellarm. 1. It would follow that Chriſts body deſcended into hell, as well as his ſoule, for the effects of Chriſts death, which wrought in hell, were performed by Chriſts fleſh, as well as his ſoule.

2. 2. If Chriſts ſoule deſcended but by the effects, ſo it was in Paradiſe, and thus Chriſts ſoule ſhould be in many places at once.

3. 3. Chriſts ſoule was three dayes in the heart of the earth, but the effects of the ſoule might bee ſhewed in hell in a moment, Bellarm.c.15.

1. Contra. 1. To them which hold the effectuall deſcent of Chriſt: it is no abſurditie to grant that the effects both of his bodie and ſoule wrought in hell. 2. Yea, the grave being taken for hell, Chriſts fleſh properly deſcended thither: as the marginall note of the vulgar Latine expoundeth theſe words of Iacob: I will deſcend to hell mourning to my ſonne, Geneſis 37.35. of his going to the grave.

2. 1. What letteth but that the efficacie and vertue of Chriſts ſoule, and the fruits of his death may be in many places at once. 2. You moſt abſurdly hold, that the ſubſtance of Chriſts ſoule may bee preſent in divers places in one inſtant.

3. 1. That Chriſts ſoule remained three dayes in hell, is contrary to the Scriptures: for his ſoule was in paradiſe in the day of his paſſion. 2. The effects of Chriſts death doe remaine ſtill: and Ambroſe doubteth not to ſay, Abyſſum opinione ſi penetres, illic quoq; videbis Ieſum operari: If you pierce hell in thought, you ſhall ſee Ieſus working there ſtill, lib.2.in 1.Luc.

Epiſt.99. Auguſtine ſaith plainely, that he knew not what good Chriſt wrought for the juſt ſoules that were in the boſome of Abraham, when he deſcended into hell: a quibus eum ſecundum beatificam praeſentiam divinitatis, nunquam video receſſiſſe: From whom I finde hee was never abſent or withdrew himſelfe by the bleſſed preſence of his divine power: Ergo, in his judgement Chriſt deſcended not to any ſuch end. And concerning the ſoule of Chriſt, hee writeth flatly: Si mortuo corpore anima (latronis) ad Paradiſum mox vocatur, quempiam adhuc tam impium credimus, qui dicere audeat, quoniam anima Salvatoris noſtri triduo illo corporea mortis apud inferos cuſtodia mancipetur? If the ſoule of the theefe ſtraightway being gone from the body, was called up to heaven: is there any man ſo wicked, to ſay that the ſoule of our Saviour was kept three dayes in the priſon of hell? cont.Felician, cap.15. By his ſentence then, the ſoule of Chriſt remained not three dayes in hell. And out of this place of Auguſtine this reaſon may be gathered: Chriſts ſoule went the ſame way after death, which our ſoules muſt goe, that are his members: but the ſoules of the faithfull goe preſently to heaven, as the ſoule of the theefe did, converted upon the croſſe; and as S.Paul ſaith of his ſoule, I deſire to bee diſſolved, and to bee with Chriſt.Philip.1.23, for what aſſurance have wee that our ſoules ſhall paſſe immediatly to heaven, if Phil.1.23. Concerning the teſtimonies of the fathers alleaged by Bellarmine for Chriſts deſcenſion in ſoule to deliver the Patriarches, I denie not, but that many of them doe ſo affirme, yet it was no generall received opinion among them, but divers of them did otherwiſe both ſpeake and write.

Cyprian in the ſymbole or Creed, which goeth under his name, thus writeth: Sciendum eſt, quod in eccleſia Romana ſymbolo non habetur additum, deſcendit ad inferna: ſed neque in Orientis eccleſiis habetur hic ſermo; vis tamen verbi eadem videtur eſſe in eo, quod ſepultus dicitur: It muſt bee knowen that in the Creed of the Romane Church, it is not added, he deſcended into hell, neither yet is this ſpeech uſed in the Eaſt Churches: yet the ſame ſenſe and force ſeemeth to be in that he is ſayd to be buried.

We may finde tenne ſeverall Creeds at leaſt rehearſed in the Councels, and in them this article of Chriſts deſcenſion omitted.

wiſe,*concil.Toletan.*1.*can.*21.9. In the ſymbole confirmed, Epheſin. 1.10. *Baracenſ.*3.in præfation. In all theſe places it is omitted.

Likewiſe in divers of Auguſtines ſermons: as ſerm. de tempor. 123.125.129. In the expoſition of the Creed no mention is made of Chriſts locall deſcenſion to hell,to deliver the Patriarches: and ſerm. 119.he ſaith: Cum confeſſi fuerimus eius paſſionem,confitemur & reſurrectionem: When we have confeſſed his paſſion, we confeſſe his reſurrection: If the Church had held it ſo neceſſary to beleeve the deſcent of Chriſts ſoule, for the releaſe of the Patriarches; eſpeciall remembrance ſhould be made therof in ſo many rehearſals and expoſitions of the Creed.

Yet was not the article of Chriſts deſcenſion ever denied in the Church, but not received generally in any ſuch ſenſe.

Diversway how Chriſt is ſaid to have deſcended to hell.

1. Some of them apply the deſcenſion to the ſuffring of Chriſts ſoule: as *Origen.Tract.*12 in Mat. data anima Chriſti in redemptionem pro multis, non manſit apud eam cui data eſt, propter hoc dicit Propheta,non derelinques,&c. The ſoule of Chriſt being given in redemption for many, tarried not with him,to whom it was given; as the Prophet ſaith,thou wilt not leave my ſoule in hell.

2. Sometime the ſame Origene doth interprete the deſcenſion of Chriſt: De ſuperioribus ad inferiora venientis: Comming from the higher parts of heaven to the lower parts of the earth, *hom.*2.in Geneſ.

3. Some other, by the deſcent into hell: underſtand the lying of Chriſt in the grave, as Hierome: Salvator in tantum ipſum corpus habuit poſt inferos in quò & crucifixus,ut manus perforatas oſtenderet: Our Saviour had ſo verily after hell, the body wherein hee was crucified, that hee ſhewed his pierced hands,*lib.*1.adverſ.Iovinian. But Chriſts body went not downe to hell,but only to the grave.

So Origene, Chriſtus deſcendit ad inferos ad mortuos,tanquam inter mortuos liber: Chriſt deſcended to hell to the dead,as free among the dead.*in Matth.*16. But the grave not hell is the place of the dead. Likewiſe Auguſtine: Ab inferis primogenitus eſt ex defunctis: He was the firſt borne of the dead from hell,*ſerm.de temp.*161.

4. Some referre Chriſts being in hell to his divinitie: as Chryſoſtome,non divido Chriſtum—uno atq; eodem tempore deſcendit ad inferos & cum latronis anima,&c. I divide not Chriſt, hee in one and the ſame time deſcended into hell, and with the ſoule of the thiefe entered into Paradiſe: *homil.*11.in Marc. And Ambroſe upon theſe words,Pſal.139.15. Subſtantia mea in inferioribus terra,&c. My ſubſtance was beneath in the earth: Quid obſtat quo minus illam divinam intelligas ſubſtantiam cum deus ubique ſit. What letteth but wee may underſtand his divine ſubſtance, ſeeing God is every where, as it is ſayd before, If I aſcend into heaven thou art there, If lie downe in hell thou art there. Pſal.139.8. So alſo Auguſtine expoundeth Chriſts deſcenſion of the preſence of his majeſtie: *Act.cum Felician.cap.*17.as I have ſhewed before. Pſal.139.8.

5. Some apply Chriſts deſcenſion to the fruits and effects of his croſſe: *Auguſtine,ſerm.*107.de tempor. Quid eſt portas inferni tollere niſi mortis imperium removere? What is it elſe to take away the gates of hell,but to remove the power of death.

6. Some doe metaphorically referre the deſcent into hell,to a troubled conſcience: as Bernard upon theſe words,*Thou ſhalt not leave my ſoule in hell,*Pſal.16.10. Infernus quidem, & carcer animæ rea conſcientia eſt: A guiltie conſcience is the hell and priſon of the ſoule, *in aſſumpt.ſer.*4. Againe he thus writeth: Sunt gradus in aſcendendo & deſcendendo: in deſcendendo primus gradus à cœlo uſque ad carnem,ſecundus ad crucem, tertius ad mortem: ecce quouſque deſcendit, nunquid amplius potuit? poterat iam recte rex noſter dicere, quid ultra debui facere, & non feci? There are degrees in aſcending, and deſcending: in deſcending the firſt degree is to the fleſh, the ſecond to the croſſe, the third to death: behold how farre hee deſcended,could hee deſcend any further? might not our King now truly ſay,what ought I to have done more, which I did not? *ſer.part.*18. Pſal.16.10.

Some of them I grant doe affirme Chriſts deſcenſion in ſoule to hell,to bring the Fathers ſoules from thence: but this was no generall opinion,nor expreſſe ſentence of the Church: as may appeare by this teſtimonie of Origene upon theſe words of Iob: Naked I came foorth, naked ſhall I returne, Iob.1.21. Nudus ibo illuc (inquit) quo illuc? illuc quo Adam abiit, quo ierunt priores mei: ubi tabernacula ſunt iuſtorum.&c. ubi eſt lux & vita, ubi eſt lætitia & exultatio, ubi Abraham ſinus, &c. angelorum chori, Chriſti regnum, æterni dei patris gloria & conſpectus: I ſhall returne thither? whither? even whither Adam went and all my forefathers: where are the tabernacles of the righteous, where is light and life, where is Abrahams boſome,the queere of Angels, the kingdome of Chriſt, the glory and ſight of the eternall father: in 1.cap.Iob. Now then,if in your Limbus there bee light and life, the companie of Angels,the preſence of God, the Kingdome of Chriſt; then will I grant, that the Fathers were there: but then they ſhould not have needed to be fetched from thence. And thus much of Chriſts locall deſcenſion into hell to ſet free the ſoules of the Patriarches. Iob.1.21.

Tertullian ſaith, aliud inferi, aliud Abrahæ ſinus, hell is one thing, as I take it, and Abrahams boſome another. And againe, Abrahams boſome hee defineth to bee *ſi non cæleſtem,ſublimiorem tamen inferis,*if not a celeſtiall place, yet higher then hell, &c. Chriſt then in his opinion deſcended not to hell to deliver the Patriarches. This was the judgement of the elder Africane or South Church. Chryſoſtome alſo thinketh Abrahams boſome to have beene a place of delight and reward, and of all joy where Lazarus was in deliciis in omni rerum affluentia, in delight in all abundance of all things Adverſ.Marcion.lib 4.

videte coronatum, &c. videte preminm, &c. See him now crowned, rewarded, &c. this place of reward, delight, where the righteous are crowned, cannot be hell:

Reſponſ. Ioan. Baſil. ad Rohit. cap. 12.

This was the iudgement of the ancient writers of the Eaſt and South Church; what thoſe moderne Churches doe now hold, is not much materiall; for in this and other points they are very erroneous, even our adverſaries being iudges. The Muſcovites doe hold, that all the righteous before Chriſt went downe to a place called Adam, that is hell, which they ſeeme to derive from Adam, becauſe all went thither for Adams ſinne, &c. And ſo they make all indeed to goe downe to hell before Chriſt, and ſeeme ignorantly to derive the Greek ἅδης of Adam, which cannot be, for then it ſhould bee Hadam not Adam.

Damianus a Goes de Æthiop. morib.

The Æthiopians, as their Biſhop Zaga Zabo delivereth their opinion, thinke that Chriſt deſcended to hell, pro anima Ada, atq; pro anima ipſius Chriſti, for the ſoule of Adam, and for the ſoule of Chriſt himſelfe which he tooke of the Virgin Mary, and ſo conſequently of Adam, &c. What thing can bee more abſurd, than to imagine, that Chriſt went downe to hell to deliver his owne ſoule.

Harm. ſect. 6. Pag. 95.

Pag. 97.

None of the reformed Churches doe hold, that Chriſt deſcended to hell to deliver the Patriarches: ſome of them doe thus explaine that article, underſtanding it of the deſcending of his bodie to the grave. Confeſſ. of Baſil. artic. of Chriſt: According to the fleſh, he was buried, deſcended into hell, and the third day he roſe againe from the dead: Bohemia cap. 4. Thoſe ſaving and wonderfull workes or affections of Chriſt according to the meaning of the holy Scriptures are by a ſtedfaſt faith to be beleeved and profeſſed; ſuch are his comming downe from heaven, his conception, birth, torments, death, buriall, reſurrection, aſcenſion unto heaven, ſitting at the right hand of God, and his comming againe from thence to iudge both the quicke and the dead: In theſe principall affections, as in a cheſt, wherein treaſure is kept, all thoſe wholeſome fruits of our iuſtification are layd up, &c. Here is no mention made of Chriſts deſcending to hell to deliver the Patriarches.

Gregor. de Valent. tom. 4. diſp. 1. q. 19. punct. 4. Maldonat. in Luc. 16. 23.

And for the teſtimonie of the Romaniſts, their learned Ieſuite ſaith, that Chriſtus omnes ſimiliter redemit ſive ante ſive poſt Chriſti adventum: That Chriſt redeemed all alike before and after his comming, &c. then why ſhould they before his comming go to Limbus rather than thoſe after. Another of their Ieſuites ſaith: Valde ſuſpicor per ſinum Abraha ſummum cœlum deſignari: I doe much ſuſpect, that by Abrahams boſome the higheſt heaven is deſigned: See alſo the judgement of Durand before defended againſt Bellarmine.

Now in the laſt place, becauſe the current opinion of the Fathers ſeemeth generally to ſtreame this way to carry, as it were, the bleſſed ſoule of Chriſt to the infernall parts for the deliverie of the Fathers under the Law, and it may ſeeme an hard courſe to refuſe them comming together with ſuch a joynt conſent: I will briefly ſhew the chiefe differences of opinion herein, and how farre wee may ſafely yeeld unto the ſentences of the Fathers.

Touching the place, where the ſoules of the Fathers were, there are foure opinions. Some thinke they were in a part of hell: ſome in a region of heaven; of each of theſe there are chiefly two different conceits. 1. Some are of opinion, that they were in a place of joy before the comming of Chriſt, which notwithſtanding, they ſuppoſed to be ſome inferne place: as Ireneus thinketh, that the ſoules of the Saints goe unto the ſuperior infernall place, lib. cont. heres. in fine. Chryſoſtome, as is before alleaged, thinketh that Abrahams boſome was a place of unſpeakable joy and delight, whither Lazarus was caried by the Angels: yea he maketh it a kind of Paradiſe, Paradiſus Lazari ſinus Abraha, Abrahams boſome was Lazarus Paradiſe: hom. 15. in Luc. tom. 2. And yet in the ſame Sermon hee ſaith, quod Abraham apud in inferos erat: that Abraham was yet in the infernall place: and Lyranus inclineth to this opinion, who thinketh that the Paradiſe, which Chriſt promiſed to the beleeving thiefe, was that beata fruitio, that bleſſed fruition, which the Fathers in Limbus had by Chriſts deſcending thither, annot in Luc. 23. 43. But it ſoundeth very harſh to make Paradiſe in hell: as Auguſtine well reſolveth, that the boſome of Abraham, being a place of reſt, non credenda eſt aliqua pars inferorum, is not to bee thought to be a part or member of hell: epiſt. 99.

Bellarm. lib. 2. de purgat. c. 7. ſect. quantum. Bellarm. lib. 4. de Chriſti anim. cap. 14 Hom. 27. in Matth.

2. Another opinion is, that the ſoules of the Fathers were ſhut up in a dungeon of darknes in a part of hell, as in a priſon, untill Chriſt did come and take them thence: and that they were damnati ad exilium temporale: damned to exile for a time: this is the poſition of the Romaniſts. But theſe are their owne groſſe conceits, that the ſpirits of the Fathers were exiled, baniſhed from Gods preſence, damned to hell; not one of thoſe 27. Fathers, whom Bellarmine produceth for Chriſts deſcention, doth affirme any ſuch thing: for how could this be, ſeeing they held the Fathers to be in a place of joy: Chryſoſtome ſaith, that Chriſt calleth the boſome of Abraham, regnum cœlorum, the Kingdome of heaven: and Auguſtine ſaith, it was felicitatis ſinus, a boſome of happineſſe. epiſt. 99.

[d] Commun. loc. Claſſ. 3. cap. 14. ſect. 21.

4. Some of the Fathers take Abrahams boſome to be no part of hell, but to belong rather to heaven, as [a] Tertullian and [b] Auguſtine before alleaged. [c] Vatablus hath the like opinion, that Abrahams boſome, whither he thinketh that Elias was taken up, was ſome place in the ayre: and Pet. Mart. much differeth not, that Abrahams boſome was a certaine receptacle of ſoules, [d] where they enioyed tranquilitie in the ſight of God: from whence [e] they accompanied Chriſt at his aſcenſion into the higheſt heavens: But here alſo is ſome difference.

4. Another opinion is, that the Fathers in the boſome of Abraham, were not exalted and advanced to an higher place of glory, but onely more illuminated, and increaſed with a new acceſſion of joy by the death of Chriſt, wherof they had a joyfull expectation. So Maſter Calvin ſeemeth to affirme gratia Chriſti manifeſtationem ad pios ſpiritus perveniſſe, that the manifeſtation of Chriſts grace came alſo unto the bleſſed ſpirits. Lyranus before produced, in part conſenteth, that the Paradiſe which was promiſed, was beata fruitio, the bleſſed fruition of Chriſts preſence, who deſcended to the place where the fathers were detained. And Baſil to the ſame effect: Chriſti fragrantiam myrrha ſpirat propter paſſionem: ſtacten vero, quod non inefficax manſit, — & deſcendit ad infernum — ut univerſa ſeipſo impleret: Chriſts paſſions giveth a fragtant ſmell like myrrhe: and the ſtacte is his deſcent to Hell to fill all things with himſelfe, ſeeing hee was not without efficacie, &c. the ſweete and odoriferous ſmell of Chriſts paſſion, and the efficacie thereof attained, and was extended, even to the bleſſed ſpirits departed.

Commenc. in 1.Pet.3.19.
In Pſalme 14.

Beſide this difference of opinion touching the ſtate, condition and place of the ſpirits of the fathers: there are ſome other diverſities in the writings of the fathers, which I will briefly touch, and then ſhew how they may be reconciled.

1. Some thinke that the fathers were not admitted by Chriſts comming to the celeſtiall Paradiſe, and region of eternall happineſſe; but were tranſlated to a place of joy, there to remaine untill the reſurrection, when their happineſſe ſhould be conſummated: as Tertullian ſaith, Eam regionem ſinum dico Abrahæ — refrigerium prabituram animabus iuſtorum donec conſummatio rerum reſurrectionem omnium, plenitudine mercedis expungat: That region, namely, Abrahams boſome, ſhall yeeld refreſhing unto the ſoules of the juſt, till all things be conſummate in the reſurrection, &c. The ſame is the judgment of Iuſtine Martyr; They only, except Martyrs, who, they thinke, goe ſtrait to Paradiſe: as Tertullian: Nemo peregrinatus a corpore ſtatim immoratur penes Dominum, niſi ex Martyrii prærogativa, paradiſo non inferis diverſurus: No man paſſing out of the bodie ſtrait-way remaineth with the Lord, but ſuch as by the prerogative of Martyrdome diverteth to Paradiſe, not to hell. Some other thinke they were conducted by Chriſt to Paradiſe, as Chryſoſtome ſaith: Crux Chriſti aperuit paradiſum: Chriſts croſſe opened Paradiſe, firſt to the thieſe, then to Abraham and the Fathers.

2. They diſſent about the difference betweene theſe three: Abrahams boſome, Paradiſe, Heaven. Some take Paradiſe and Abrahams boſome to be the ſame: as Auguſtine, Sinus Abrahæ paradiſus dici poteſt. The boſome of Abraham may be called Paradiſe: Chryſoſtome doth diſtinguiſh them; Abraham needum erat in paradiſo, &c Abraham was not yet in Paradiſe, becauſe Chriſt was not yet entred with the thieſe, &c. Some thinke Paradiſe and Heaven to be all one, as Auguſtine. ibid. Others doe diſtinguiſh them: and ſome of theſe make Paradiſe inferiour to the higheſt heaven, as Iuſtine Martyr thinketh, that the beleeving thieſe is reſerved in Paradiſe with the reſt of the Saints untill the reſurrection: when they ſhall have their conſummation in heaven. Others thinke Paradiſe to be higher than the third heaven, mentioned by S. Paul, 2. Cor. 12. as Ambroſe thinketh, that Paul was twice wrapt up, Hinc uſque in tertium cælum, deinde in paradiſum cœleſtem: From hence into the third heaven, and then into the celeſtiall Paradiſe.

Comment.in 2.Cor.12.

3. A third difference in opinion there is, about the continuance of that place called Abrahams boſome: ſome doubt, whether it doe now remaine: as Gregorie Nazianzen in his funerall oration of his brother Cæſarius ſaith, Thou art aſcended into heaven, thou doeſt reſt in Abrahams boſome, Si tamen aliquis nunc locus extat; If any ſuch place bee extant. Others thinke that Abrahams boſome ſtill is a receptacle of the ſoules of the righteous, as Tertullian cited before: and Chryſoſtome ſaith, Omnes in illius ſinum ire feſtinamus; All of us make haſt to goe unto Abrahams boſome.

Hom.15.in Luke.

1. Now then for the reconciling of theſe differences: touching the firſt, whereas ſome thinke the fathers to have bin in hell, ſome denying it: they muſt be underſtood to take hell, or the infernall place generally for the ſtate of the dead, whither goe good or bad: as Hilarie ſaith, Humana iſta lex neceſſitatis eſt, ut ſepultis corporibus anima ad inferos deſcendant: This is the law of humane neceſſitie, that the ſoules, the bodies being buried, ſhould deſcend to hell. So alſo Tertullian: Cur non putes animam & puniri & foveri in inferis interim ſub expectatione utriuſque judicii: Why ſhould you not thinke the ſoule to be both puniſhed and cheriſhed in hell in the meane time under the expectation of both judgements? but when the name of hell is taken ſtrictly for a place of puniſhment: they denie then Abrahams boſome to have bin in hell, as Tertullian ſaith, hell is one thing, Abrahams boſome another: and Auguſtine denieth it to be a part of hell. So then their opinion is, that Chriſts ſoule went unto that place of joy, where the fathers were, and did either exalt them to an higher place of glory, as our bleſſed Saviour ſaith, In my fathers houſe are many manſions: or did adde unto them an acceſſion of further joy, having accompliſhed the glorious worke of the redemption; in neither of which opinions is there any inconvenience to be feared: but that the fathers were redeemed from the thraldome and captivitie of darkenes with damnation, as the Papiſts hold, Proteſtants with the Fathers diſclaime.

2. And in affirming, that the fathers are not yet admitted to the preſence of God, they may be underſtood to meane the full fruition of glory, which the Saints ſhall not have till the reſurrection, when their ſoules and bodies ſhall be glorified together: and ſo much the Apoſtle inſinuateth, ſaying, God providing a better thing for us, that they without us ſhould not be made perfit. Which Auguſtine underſtandeth of that perfection, qua nobis perficiendis in fine promittitur, which is promiſed us to be made perfit in the end.

Heb.11.40.

3. And concerning the difference of Heaven, Paradiſe, and Abrahams boſome: either we may ſay with

Lib.12.de Geneſ.ad liter. cap.34.

Homil.15.in Luc.

with Auguſtine, Aliquid unum eſt diverſis nominibus appellatum, ubi ſunt animæ beatorum. It may be ſome one place called by divers names, where the ſoules of the bleſſed are; or elſe they meane onely the divers degrees of the glory in heaven, which may admit alſo without any inconvenience a diverſity of the habitations and manſion places of the Saints: as Chryſoſtome ſaith: Si martyrium fecerimus, ſtatim intrabimus paradiſum, ſi paupertatis—ſtatim in ſinum Abrahæ: If wee performe martyrdome, ſtreight we ſhall enter into Paradiſe, if we ſuſtaine poverty well, ſtreight ſhall we goe into Abrahams boſome, &c.

Lib.12.de Geneſ. ad liter. cap.34.

4. And Abrahams boſome may be ſayd both not to remaine, becauſe both the name is changed, and the quality and condition of that place: becauſe now there is no more an expectation of the Redemption accompliſhed by the death, and reſurrection of Chriſt: and yet it remaineth in reſpect of the ſubſtantiall part, the unſpeakeable joyes there abounding: as Auguſtine reſolveth well, Quanto magis poſt hanc vitam ſinus ille Abrahæ paradiſus dici poteſt, ubi jam nulla tentatio, &c. How much more may the boſome of Abraham after this life be called Paradiſe, where is no tentation, and where is ſuch reſt after the ſorrowes of this life. And thus have I ſhewed how the Fathers may be reconciled both among themſelves, and with us, in this intricate queſtion of Chriſts deſcenſion into the infernall parts for the delivering of the Fathers.

An appendix concerning the place of Hell.

The Papiſts.

27.Error.

THe place where damned ſpirits are tormented, they ſay, is about the center of the earth, the loweſt of all places, and nothing lower than it, Bellar. de Chriſti anima lib.4.cap.10.

Their Limbus Patrum, the place of darkenes, where the Fathers were before Chriſt, is, ſay they, in the higheſt part, and as it were the brimme of hell, Rhemiſt. Luke 16.22. Betweene theſe two places there is a great gulfe or ſpace, and there is Purgatory, Rhemiſt. Luke 16.ſect.8. Wherefore they conclude, Veros inferos eſſe loca ſubterranea: that the ſubterreſtriall and infernall places doe properly make hell, Bellar. cap.8. And ſo hell ſhould be properly a place of puniſhment: becauſe of the farre diſtance from heaven: whereas not ſo much the diſtance of place, as the abſence of Gods ſpirit, and loſſe of his favour, maketh it a place of horror and miſerie.

Arg. 1. Bellarmine proveth by the Greeke word ᾅδης, and the Hebrue (ſheol) that hell is a ſubterreſtriall place, becauſe thoſe words are taken for hell in the earth, Bellar. ibid.

Geneſ.37.35.

Contra. 1. This argument concludeth not, unleſſe he could prove, that thoſe words are alwayes taken for hell: the contrary whereof is evident, as Geneſ.42.38. You ſhall bring my gray head with ſorrow to (ſheol, ᾅδης) the grave: for his gray haires went not downe to hell, but reſted in the grave. Likewiſe this annotation is given in the margent of the vulgar Latine, Geneſ.37.35. In infernum, id eſt, foſſam, vel ſepulchrum, non hic ſignificat locum pœnarum, ſicut nec in aliis locis: Into hell, that is, the pit or the grave, he ſignifieth not here the place of puniſhment, nor yet in other places.

2. We grant that theſe words ſometimes are taken for hell, and then they only ſhew that there is an hell, but they enforce not the place.

Hell whether in the earth.

3. Thirdly, neither doe we denie, but that hell is an infernall place: but herein we differ from them. 1. That neither doe wee affirme, that the place cauſeth hell, but the abſence of Gods favour and preſence. 2. Neither dare we circumſcribe the place certainly, as they doe, making it to be about the center of the earth. 3. nor yet preſume we to make ſo many regions of hell, as they doe without warrant of the word.

Matth.12.40.

Arg. 2. Matth. 12.40. As Ionas was three dayes and three nights in the belly of the Whale; ſo the ſonne of man muſt be in the heart of the earth: but the grave is not in the heart, but the brimme of the earth: Ergo, we muſt needs underſtand that to bee hell, which is in the middeſt of the earth, Bellarm. cap.12.

Wherein Ionas was a figure of Chriſt.

Anſw. 1. This place cannot otherwiſe be applied, than to ſignifie the buriall of Chriſt, and his abode in the grave, and his riſing againe the third day: of his ſoule it cannot properly bee meant: for Chriſt ſaith, he will give them the ſigne of Ionas in himſelfe: but a ſigne is conſpicuous, viſible and apparant: how could then the deſcending of his ſoule bee a ſigne unto them, which they knew not, neither could ſee? But the laying of his body into the grave, and the remaining there to the third day, they were all eye-witneſſes of. Alſo there is great affinitie betweene the two Greeke words, σημεῖον, a ſigne which is there uſed. Matth. 12.40. and σῆμα which ſignifieth ſepulchrum, a grave, the one word being fitly derived of the other, what better, σημεῖον, then could he give them, than, σῆμα his owne grave or ſepulchre? Secondly, to be in the heart of the earth, is nothing elſe but to be within the earth, according to the Hebrue phraſe, as Exod. 15.8. The heart of the Sea, that is, within the Sea: ſo Chriſts body was in the earth, it lay hid as it were in the bowels of the earth. And thus Hierome applieth this figure of Ionas to the death and buriall of Chriſt: Ionam cetus excepit immerſum, non contigit devoratum, &c. ſic ſæva mors licet Chriſtum ſorbuerat crucifixum, tamen quem non invenerat reum, non potuit tenere damnatum: The Whale received Ionas drowned, but it touched him not, once devoured: ſo cruell death, although it ſwallowed Chriſt crucified, yet, whom it found not guilty, it could not hold is condemned: Epitaph. Nepotian.

3. This expoſition is againſt themſelues: for if Chriſt went downe to the very heart and middeſt of the earth, which is the center, then he deſcended to the place of the damned: for neither Limbus Patrum, nor Purgatory, are in the center or loweſt part of the earth by their opinion: but they themſelues hold the contrary: for they ſay, that Chriſt by deſcending deliuered ſoules out of the two vppermoſt hels, Limbus, and Purgatory, but not out of the nethermoſt hell, which is the place of the damned, Rhemiſt. Luke 16 ſect. 8. Alſo it ſhould follow of this their interpretation, that the ſoule of Chriſt was as long in hell, as his body in the graue, which is againſt the opinion of many Papiſts, and of ſome of the Fathers. Origen ſaith, Prima dies nobis paſſio ſaluatoris, ſecunda, qua deſcendit ad infernum: The firſt day we haue the paſſion of our Sauiour, the ſecond day hee deſcended to hell, Hom. 5. in Exod.

Argum. 2. Luk. 8.31. The diuels deſired Chriſt that he would not ſend them into the deepe: what is that elſe but the loweſt region of the earth, where hell is, which Saint Paul calleth the loweſt parts of the earth? Bellarm. Luke 8.31.

Anſw. 1. We deny not, but that God hath prepared, and that there is a place of vnſpeakeable torments ordained for the diuell and his angels, and all damned ſoules: but that this place ſhould be in the center of the earth, the places alleadged proue not. 2. The word abyſſus, tranſlated the deepe, is ſometime taken figuratiuely in a metaphore, as Rom. 11.33. O the deepeneſſe of the wiſedome of God, the word is, βάθος, not much varying in ſignification from abyſſus: ſo the place of their puniſhment may be ſaid to be a great depth, that is, a place of vnſearchable and vnſpeakeable miſery and horror. 3. Neither muſt this word abyſſus, of neceſſitie be referred to the earth, for there are abyſſi maris, the depths of the Sea, Exod. 15.8. as well as of the earth. And the ordinary Gloſſe vpon that place, Luke 8.31. vſeth a phraſe accordingly, that the diuels ſciebant ſe aliquando, in abyſſum mergendos, did know, that one day, they ſhould be drenched in hell. 4. And whereas Saint Luke ſaith, they entreated Chriſt not to be ſent into the deepe; Saint Marke reporteth it thus, They prayed him inſtantly, that he would not ſend them away out of the countrey. Then by conference of theſe two places, inſomuch that to be ſent into the deepe, was to be ſent out into remote places, as out of the world, not to be conuerſant among men: ſo the diuell is ſaid to be caſt into the bottomleſſe pit, where he was bound for a thouſand yeeres, which was not hell, for out of that he ſhall neuer be looſed; and afterward verſ. 10. the diuell is caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone, there to be tormented for euer: and the ordinary Gloſſe and Lyranus doe expound them, this deepe to be tenebroſa corda impiorum, the darkeſome hearts of the wicked, à conſortio fidelium, not to haue any commerce of the faithfull, ſo that this word abyſſus the deepe doth not neceſſarily imply, the loweſt region, or center of the earth. 5. Yet we deny not, but that hell may, and is moſt like to be in the earth, though it be meere curioſitie to aſſigne the certaine region or place of the earth, where it ſhould be. Rom. 11.33. Exod. 15.8. Mark. 5.10. Reuel. 20.3.

The lower places which Saint Paul ſpeaketh of, Epheſ. 4.9. may be either vnderſtood generally of the whole earth, which is pars mundi infima, the loweſt part of the world, or elſe of the great abaſing of Chriſt, from heauen to earth, being God to become a ſeruant: as alſo the graue of Chriſt was that lower part of the earth: for the Apoſtle ſaith in the comparatiue, κατώτερα not κατώτατα the lower, not the loweſt: and ſo your vulgar Latine tranſlateth, inferiora, not infima terræ: but hell is the loweſt part, the graue is ſaid to be the lower. Epheſ. 4.9.

The Proteſtants.

THat there is a locall place of torment prepared for the diuell and his angels, we doubt not, being ſo taught in the Scripture, Matth. 25.41. A place of darkeneſſe, 2. Pet. 2.4. Farre diſtant from the heauenly manſions of the bleſſed, Luk. 16.26. Neither doe we deny but that it may be in the earth, or whereſoeuer elſe it pleaſeth God: but whereſoeuer hell is, there is but one: that diuiſion of hell into three or foure regions, we vtterly condemne, as a meere deuice of man without Scripture: and this we ſay, that the place of hell cauſeth not the torment, but the wrath and curſe of God: for euen out of hell God may make a man to feele the torments of hell, as we doubt not but our Sauiour Chriſt did in part for vs and our redemption vpon the croſſe. Matth. 25,41. 2 Pet. 2. 4. Luke 16. 26. Not the place but Gods wrath cauſeth hell.

Argum. 1. It is poſſible to feele: the paine of hell in the ſoule, although not in the proper and appointed place of hell: as Iob complaineth, The arrowes of the Almightie are in mee, the venome thereof doth drinke vp my ſpirit, and the terrors of God fight againſt mee. And therefore he ſaith, his griefe was heauier than the ſand of the Sea, Iob 6.4. 14. Iob felt euen the hell of conſcience in himſelfe for the time: yea our Sauiour bare the burthen of his Fathers wrath vpon the croſſe, as we haue ſhewed before: Ergo, it is not the place that maketh hell. So Bernard ſaith: Infernus animæ rea conſcientia: The hell of the ſoule is a guilty conſcience, in aſſumpt. ſer. 4. Iob 6.4.14.

Argum. 2. Hell, as the Scripture defineth, is this, to be caſt into vtter darknes, there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, Mat. 25.30. 22.13. The darkneſſe cauſeth weeping and horrible gnaſhing of teeth, the vnſpeakable puniſhment both of body and ſoule: This darkneſſe is not the abſence of the light of the Sunne: for neither ſhall the Saints in heauen haue that light, becauſe they need it not, Apocal. 22.5. and it ſhall be a place of darknes to the damned angels, which haue no vſe of the Sunnelight: they alſo are reſerued in chaynes of darkneſſe, Iude 6. as they are no materiall chaines, ſo neither is it an outward darkneſſe onely, but the abſence of Gods fauour and the light of his countenance: as, Matth. 25.30. Apocal. 22.5. Iude 6.

the people are ſaid to haue ſit in darkeneſſe before the light of the Goſpell, by the preaching of Ieſus Matth.4. 16. Chriſt, did ſhine vnto them, Mat.4.16. But they much more ſhall be and are kept in darkneſſe, that are condemned to hell, where they feele nothing but the horror of Gods wrath, his eternall and endleſſe curſe, with vnſpeakable torments now in ſoule, and afterward both in body and ſoule, without all comfort or hope of refreſhing, vtterly excluded from the preſence of God: Wherefore it is not the place, but the wrath of God, and abſence of his ſpirit, that cauſeth ſuch endleſſe and vnſpeakable puniſhment.

*Argum.*3. As for your diſtinction of hell, the brimme wherof you ſay is Limbus Patrum; the middle part, Purgatory; the loweſt and neathermoſt hell it ſelfe, the place of the damned, in Auguſtines time it was not knowne: for firſt, that the boſome of Abraham was part of hell, he vtterly denieth: Apparet non eſſe membrum inferorum, tantæ illius felicitatis ſinum: That boſome of ſo great bliſſe can be no member or part of hell, *Epiſt.*99. Againe, Purgatory he ſometime vtterly refuſeth, acknowledging but two places: Heauen for the faithfull, Hell for the damned and vnbeleeuers. Tertium locum penitus ignoramus, imo nec eſſe in ſcripturis ſanctis inuenimus: A third place we are vtterly ignorant of, yea we find in holy Scripture, that it is not, Auguſt. Hypognoſt.

Moral. ad ſerm. 31. in 16 c. epiſt. ad Roman. Set. de defunct. in fin. 1. Chryſoſtome to this queſtion, where hell ſhould be, maketh this anſwer: Alicubi, quantum ego puto extra omnem hunc mundum--ne quæramus vbi ſit, ſed quomodo, illum fugiamus, &c. I thinke ſomewhere out of this world, let vs not enquire where it is, but how we may eſcape it. So Damaſcene ſaith, that the wicked, and ſinners are ἐν ἐσχάτοις, in the vtmoſt places, but where he defineth not.

Lib. de anim. p. 685. Baſil. 1562. 2. Tertullian refuſeth Plato his opinion of hell, that it was, Gremium terræ quò omnes labes mundialium ſordium confluendo, & ibi deſidendo exhalent, & quaſi cœno immunditiarum ſuarum aerem craſſiorem ſtipent, &c. The very lappe of the earth, whither all the filth of the world did runne, and there ſettle; and as with muddie vapors thicken and make groſſe the ayre, &c. It ſeemeth that Plato made hell in the very ſincke, channell, or center of the earth: But this is denied by Tertullian: Nobis inferi, non nuda cauaſitas, nec ſubdiualis aliqua mundi ſentina: To vs hell is not a bare concauity, or low and obſcure ſinke, &c. And then he addeth further; Sed in foſſa terræ & in alto vaſtitas, & in ipſis viſcerib. eius abſtruſa profunditas: But a vaſt place in the deepe trench of the earth, and a remote profundity in the bowels thereof, &c. He granteth it in the earth: but in what part he determineth not. So Auguſtine, whereas ſometime he had written of hell fire, In qua mundi vel rerum parte ſit futurus, hominem ſcire arbitror neminem, &c. But in what part of the world or nature it is, I thinke no man knoweth, vnleſſe the ſpirit reueale it: afterward in his retractations addeth only thus much, De inferis mihi videor magis dicere debuiſſe quod ſub terra ſunt, &c. Concerning hell I ſhould rather haue taught Retract. lib. 2. cap. 24. that they are vnder the earth, &c. He thinketh they are vnder the earth, but ſetteth not downe the region of the earth.

Comment. in Luc. 8.31. 3. Bucer vpon that place, Luk. 8.31. thinketh the meaning of that requeſt of the diuels not to be ſent into the deepe, to be in effect thus much, Se ex hoc orbe non depelli, That they ſhould not be expelled out of the world, and ſo all occaſion to be taken from them of doing hurt. So alſo Beza ſaith, that there is a certaine abyſſus, or bottomleſſe pit appointed for the diuels, amplius de iſtis quærere non expedit: to enquire further hereof is not expedient.

4. So Lyranus expounded that place, Mark. 5. 10. the diuels deſire Chriſt, not to ſend them out of Annot. in 2 Pet. c. 2. v. 4. that region, that is, extra hominum habitationem, out of the dwelling of men: which he maketh all one with the ſending into the deepe, Luke 8.3.

The ſecond part of this controuerſie, of matters which are in queſtion concerning the diuine nature of Chriſt.

28. Error. THis part of the controuerſie containeth three queſtions. Firſt, whether Chriſt be αὐτόθεος, God of himſelfe. Secondly, whether he be mediatour as God, or man, or as both. Thirdly, whether he haue by his deſerts purchaſed any thing for himſelfe.

The firſt part, whether Chriſt bee αὐτόθεος, God of himſelfe.

The Papiſts.

THey deny that Chriſt is αὐτόθεος, God of himſelfe; and affirme, that he had not onely his perſon, but his ſubſtance of his father: whereupon they are bold to charge Caluine with blaſphemy, for ſaying, that Chriſt is God of himſelfe as well as the Father, Rhemiſt. Ioh. 1. ſect. 3.

Argum. The Word was with God, to wit, the Sonne is with and of the Father, and not the Father of the Sonne: Ergo, the Sonne is God, with and of his Father, Rhemiſt. ibid.

1 Cor. 1. 30. Heb. 1. 3. Anſw. This place prooueth, that the Sonne of God, as he is the Sonne, is of God: for to be the Sonne of God, the Word, the wiſedome of God, 1 Cor. 1. 30. his image, Heb. 1. 3. doe belong vnto his perſon. So then,as he is the ſonne,the wiſedome of God,or the word,ſo he is of God, namely in reſpect of his perſon: but as the ſonne is God, he is of himſelfe, neither taketh he his eſſence but perſon onely of his Father.

The Proteſtants.

THat we may fully know the ſtate of this queſtion,we muſt firſt ſet downe certaine propoſitions: 1. We doe worſhip one eternall, omnipotent, and onely wiſe God, one and the ſame in power, eſſence,eternity: but three in perſon,the Father,the Sonne,and the Holy Ghoſt: there is the ſame nature, eſſence and deity of them all, though they be diſtinguiſhed in perſon: As there is one nature of the light,the heate thereof, and the ſhining brightneſſe, Lucis, ſplendoris, caloris, as Auguſtine putteth the example: which three differ among themſelues in property and quality,yet haue one and the ſelfe ſame nature and ſubſtance: God the Father is as the light, *Iam.*1. 17. God the Sonne is as the brightneſſe of his glory, *Heb.*1.3. God the holy Ghoſt is as the heate or fire, *Heb.*12.29. Thus theſe three are one in nature and eſſence, but three in perſon. James 1. 17. Heb. 1.3. Heb.12.29.

2. There is ſomewhat communicable to them all, as the God-head and diuine power and nature: Somewhat incommunicable, as the ſeuerall properties of the perſons: for it is proper only to the Father to beget, proper to the Sonne onely to be begotten, proper onely to the holy Ghoſt to proceed from them both. There is no eſſentiall difference in the Trinity: for there is one eſſence and diuine nature common to them all. But there is both a reall and rationall difference: The perſons differ one from another really, though not eſſentially. But the perſons differ only rationally or in reſpect, from the eſſence of the God-head: as the Father and the Son amongſt men differ not eſſentially, for they are both men. But they are really, verily, and indeed diſtinguiſhed: for it is one thing to be the Father, another to be the Sonne: yet from their owne eſſence their perſons onely differ in reſpect and relation, not verily, non re, ſed ratione: for as amongſt vs the Father is a man, the Sonne alſo is a man: but in one reſpect he is a father, and in another he is a man; ſo likewiſe of the ſonne, yet one and the ſame, is both father and man; one and the ſame is both ſonne and man: ſo is it in the Trinity. Now to the point of the queſtion, which we haue in hand. The Sonne therefore in the bleſſed Trinity is begotten of his Fathers eſſence, and hath the whole eſſence of his Father, not by propagation, partition, profluence, but onely by communication. The Sonne is not αὐτοϋιὸς, Sonne of himſelfe, becauſe he is Sonne of the Father: but he is αὐτόθεος, that is, very God of himſelfe. The eſſence or Godhead of the Sonne is of himſelfe, not of the Father: for it is one and the ſelfe ſame eſſence, which the Father hath. He is indeed, Deus de Deo, Lumen de lumine, God of God, light of light: but not as he is God, he is of God, but as he is the Son. It is one thing for the perſon of the Son to be begotten of the eſſence of the father, which we grant: another thing, for the eſſence of the Son to be begotten, which we muſt not yeeld to. So we conclude, that Chriſt as he is the Sonne, is of God the Father, as he is God, he is of himſelfe.

*Argum.*1. The eſſence of the Father is of himſelfe, not begotten of any: but the eſſence and deity of the Sonne is the ſame and all one with his fathers: Ergo, it is not begotten of any other. Againe, he is not God whoſe eſſence is not of himſelfe: therefore if Chriſts eſſence be not of himſelfe, he ſhould not be God.

*Argum.*2. Our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe ſaith, As the Father hath life in himſelfe, ſo he hath giuen to the Son alſo to haue life in himſelfe, Ioh.5.26. The Sonne hath then life in himſelfe: Ergo, he is God of himſelfe. Auguſtine vpon theſe words writeth: Non quaſi mutuatur vitam, nec quaſi particeps vita, ſed ipſe vitam in ſe habet, vt ipſa vita ſibi ſit ipſe: He did not as it were borrow life of his Father, neither is made partaker of life, but he hath life in himſelfe, he is life vnto himſelfe. *In Iohan.tract.*19. But leſt any man ſhould thus miſtake the words of the text, that becauſe the Father gaue to the Son to haue life in himſelfe, therefore he gaue him to be God: (for to haue life in himſelfe is to be God) Auguſtine thus expoundeth them: Dedit filio vitam habere in ſe, breuiter dixerim, genuit filium: He gaue to his Sonne to haue life in himſelfe, in few words, He begat his Son,&c. As if we ſhould ſay, the Father which hath life in himſelfe, that is, is God, gaue to his Sonne to haue life in himſelfe, that is, begat God the Sonne: he begat him not as he was God, or in reſpect of his diuine eſſence, but as he was his Son, in regard of his perſon: yet becauſe of the neere vniting and coniunction of the perſon with the Godhead and diuine power to haue life in himſelfe, which really cannot be diſtinguiſhed, but onely in reſpect, as we haue ſhewed: the father is ſaid alſo to giue vnto the Sonne to be God, and to haue life in himſelfe, not directly or properly, but obliquely and by a conſequent, becauſe his Son, whom he begat from all eternity, muſt alſo neceſſarily be God. John 5.26.

And that it cannot be the proper meaning, that God the Father gaue to the Son power to haue life in himſelfe, as he is God, or in reſpect of his diuine nature, &c. it appeareth by the words themſelues: for as the Father hath life in himſelfe, euen ſo hath he giuen to the Sonne: but the Father hath life in himſelfe, without beginning from any other: Ergo, ſo hath the Sonne.

There ſhould elſe be a contrariety and repugnancy in the ſpeech: for if Chriſt receiued life from his Father, he could not haue it in himſelfe. It muſt therfore of neceſſity be vnderſtood of the perſon in the Trinity, not of the diuine eſſence. And ſo we determine that it is true in the concrete, in concreto, if we ſay, Deus Pater genuit Deum Filium: God the Father begat God the Son, but not in abſtracto, Deitas Patris genuit Deitatem Filij, that the Godhead of the Father begat the Godhead of the Son. But in reſpect of his perſon onely as he is the Son the ſecond perſon in Trinity, ſo is he begotten and hath his beginning of God: but in reſpect of his diuine nature as he is God, he is begotten of none, but of himſelfe, as God the Father is.

Concil. Conſtantinop. 6. action. 6. ex epiſtol. Sophronij Hieroſolym. Perfectus deus eſt pater, perfectus deus filius, perfectus deus ſpiritus ſanctus, vnam eandemque ſingula quaque perſona inſeparabilem, indiminutam, & perfectam habet deitatem : The Father is perfect God, the Sonne perfect God, the holy Ghoſt perfect God: euery perſon hath one and the ſame vnſeparable, vndeuided and perfect deity. If Chriſt then be perfect God, he is God of himſelfe: for he is not perfect, that hath his being from another: and if he haue one and the ſame deity with his Father, then his deity hath no beginning from any other, for ſuch is his Fathers deity.

S. Ambroſe ſaith vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle: Qui ſolus habet immortalitatem, 1 Tim. 6 v. 16. Which onely hath immortality: Non ſepares patrem non ſepares filium, quia diuinitas patris, & filij vna eademque eſt : Doe not ſeparate the Father, nor the Sonne, becauſe there is one and the ſame diuinity of them both, de fid. lib. 3. c. 2. If there be one and the ſame diuinity of both, then the Son is God of himſelfe as the Father is.

Origen. ex apolog. Pamphil. doth count them in the number of heretikes, which doe affirme, that Chriſtus homo natus patris ſolum in ſe habuit deitatem : That Chriſt being borne man had onely his Fathers deity, &c. How farre then are the Papiſts from this hereſie, that affirme, that Chriſt is not God of himſelfe, and ſo conſequently, that he hath onely his Fathers deity?

Decr. part. 2 cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 29. Among other heretikes are rehearſed Ætiani, the Ætians, diſſimilem patri aſſerentes filium, which affirmed, that the Son was vnlike the Father: what doe they elſe affirme and teach, but that the Sonne is not God of himſelfe as the Father is?

οὐκ οὐσίας ὀνόματα ἀλλὰ τρόπου ὑπάρξεως.

Lib. de expoſition. fidei.

Adverſus Praxean Zaga Zabo apud Damianum à goes.

And yet for further euidence: 1. Iuſtine Martyr of the Greeke Church is an euident witneſſe: he ſaith, Vnus eſt Deus omnium in patre filio, & ſpiritu ſancto: That there is one God of all, in the Father, Sonne and holy Ghoſt, &c. And he addeth further, that theſe termes, vnbegotten, begotten, proceeding, (are not names of the eſſence, but onely the manner of ſubſiſting.) The diuine eſſence then in his opinion neither begetteth, nor is begotten.

2. Tertullian ſaith, ſpeaking of the Trinity: Vnus Deus, ex quo gradus iſti forma & ſpecies: There is one God, of whom are theſe degrees, and formes, &c. he meaneth, the perſons of the Trinity: the Deity then of the Son is not from the perſon of the Father: but the perſons iſſue out of one and the ſame Deity. The faith of the Africane Æthiopike Church at this day is: Quam quidem diuinitatem is (nempe filius) cum patre in Trinitate & vnitate ſemper habuit, & habet communem: Which divinity he (that is the Sonne) alwaies had common together with the Father (he ſaith not from the father) in Trinity and Vnity, and hath, &c.

3. Latter confeſſ. of Heluetia, c. 3. As touching their nature and eſſence, they are but one God, and the diuine eſſence is common to the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt, &c.

4. Peter Lombard is an evident witneſſe with vs, that God the father begat not the diuine eſſence, but the perſon onely of his Son. This poſition he hath, Diuina eſſentia non genuit diuinam eſſentiam : That the diuine eſſence begat not the diuine eſſence: which he prooueth by thſe three reaſons: Firſt, if the father begat the diuine eſſence, it would follow, that the Godhead or diuine eſſence ſhould be a relatiue, not a ſubſtance: for that which is begotten, is a relatiue to that which begetteth. And as Auguſtine ſaith: Quod relatiuè dicitur, non indicat ſubſtantiam: That which is relatiuely ſpoken, doth not ſhew the ſubſtance.

Secondly, then alſo the father ſhould beget himſelf, if he beget the diuine eſſence, which is himſelf.

Thirdly, ſeeing the father is God and a diuine eſſence, if he ſhould beget the Godhead and diuine eſſence, then by begetting he ſhould be God, and ſo that which is begotten ſhould be the cauſe of that which begetteth, whereas he that begetteth is the cauſe of that which is begotten.

Vpon theſe reaſons he concludeth, that diuina eſſentia nec genuit, nec genita eſt : that the diuine eſſence neither begetteth, nor is begotten, lib. 1. diſtinct. 5. a. b. c. And this ſentence is confirmed by Innocent. 3. decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 1. c. 2. Diuina natura nec eſt generans, nec genita: The diuine nature neither begetteth, nor is begotten.

And whereas we ſay, Deus de Deo, lumen de lumine, God of God, light of light: the meaning is this, not that the Godhead is begotten, but that the Son, which is God and light, is begotten of the Father God and light, not begotten as he is God, but as he is the Sonne, Magiſt. ibid. liter. f. So then not the ſubſtance or Godhead of the Sonne, but his perſon onely is begotten.

The ſecond part, whether Chriſt be our Mediatour, as he is man onely, or as he is both God and man.

The Papiſts.

29. Error.

THey doe teach that Chriſt onely exerciſed his Prieſthood and the office of the Mediatour, as he was man, not as he was both God and man, Rhem. Heb. 5 ſect. 4. His obedience, ſacrifice, prayer, ſatisfaction, entring into the heauens, was all performed by and in his manhood onely, ſecundum formam ſerui, as he was in the forme of a ſeruant, not ſecundum formam dei, as he was in the forme of God, Bellarm. de Chriſto, lib. 5. cap. 1.

*Argum.*1. If he were Prieſt as he is God, he ſhould be inferiour and not equall to God, and ſo be Gods Prieſt, and not his ſonne : for he to whom ſacrifice is offered, is greater than he that offereth it, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſw. It followeth not, that becauſe Chriſt is our Prieſt and Mediatour as God and man, that therefore he ſhould performe all the duties of the Prieſthood as he was God: al the parts of his prieſthood that required obedience, ſeruice, homage, ſubiection, as were his ſufferings and ſacrifice, hee exerciſed as man : but the authority of reconciling vs to God, he wrought both as God and man.

Argum. 2. There is one God, and one Mediatour of God and men, the man Ieſus Chriſt, 1 Tim. 2.5. Why ſaith the Apoſtle, The man Ieſus Chriſt, but to ſignifie, that according to his manhood onely he is our Mediatour, *Bellarm. cap.*3.

1 Tim.2.5.

Anſw. Firſt, you may as well conclude out of this place, that the Mediatour is onely man and not God, as that he is Mediatour onely as man and not as God : but if out of theſe words it may be proued, that the Mediatour is both God and man, as it neceſſarily followeth, (for how elſe can he be a Mediatour of God and men ?) it doth as well follow that he is Mediatour both as God and as man. Indeed the Apoſtle ſaith, The man Ieſus Chriſt, not God and man, for the one he had ſaid before, There is one God : in that ſpeech including our Sauiour Chriſt, who is one God with his father. Secondly, what S. Pauls meaning is, it appeareth in the next verſe, who gaue himſelfe a ranſome, v.6. As Chriſt therefore gaue himſelfe a ranſome, ſo is he Prieſt and Mediatour : but hee gaue himſelfe as hee was God ; as he was man, he was giuen: Ergo as God he is Mediatour. Thirdly, I will adioyne the anſwer of Eſpencaus a learned Papiſt : 1. That the Fathers by this very place doe prooue that Chriſt is God, not man onely, which could not be concluded from hence, if Chriſt were Mediatour as man onely, and not as God and man. 2. The Apoſtle addeth, The man Chriſt Ieſus : Quorum illud, nomen eſt hominis, non puri puti, ſed á deo vncti : Whereof the firſt is a name not of a very pure man, but annointed of God : Poſterius nomen dei hominis eſt : The latter is a name of one that is God and man, ſuch an one as ſhould ſaue the people from their ſinnes : *Eſpenc. lib, de Chriſt. mediat. c.*5.

The Proteſtants.

IN the office of the Prieſthood two things muſt be conſidered, a miniſtery, and an authority : in reſpect of the miniſteriall part Chriſt performed the office of his Prieſthood as man : but in reſpect of the authority of entring into the holieſt place, and reconciling vs to God, which was the principall part of his Prieſthood, he did performe it as the Sonne of God, as the Lord and maker of the houſe, and not as a ſeruant. And ſo we hold that Chriſt neither according to his humanity alone, nor his Godhead alone, but that whole Chriſt is a Prieſt, both as God and man.

*Argum.*1. S. Paul ſaith, God was in Chriſt, reconciling the world to himſelfe, 2 *Cor.*5.19. Ergo, Chriſt, as God, is our reconciler and Mediator. Againe, Chriſt as he is without father and mother, hath no beginning of his dayes, nor end of his life ; ſo is he a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech, *Heb.*7.3. but Chriſt as he is God hath no mother, as man no father : as he is God hath no beginning of dayes, and in his whole perſon no end of his life: therefore as God and man he is a Prieſt of Melchiſedechs order.

2 Cor.5.19.
Heb.7.3.

Bellarmine anſwereth to the firſt, 1. Euery one that reconcileth is not a mediator, though euery mediator be a reconciler. 2. It is one thing to be a mediator, an other to reconcile by a mediator ; God by the man Chriſt the mediator did reconcile vs to himſelfe, but it followeth not, that therefore he is our mediator as God.

Secondly, the place alleadged out of the Hebrewes, proueth that the perſon of our high Prieſt and mediator is diuine, but not that he is our Prieſt as he is God : he is both God and man, but he executeth his Prieſthood and Mediatorſhip onely as man, *Bellarm.c.*6. ad 2. & 3. Loc.

Cont. Firſt, 1. Though ſometime among men one may reconcile himſelfe without a mediator, yet there is no reconciliation with God without a mediator : wherefore it is very abſurd to deny this argument, Chriſt reconcileth vs as God and man, Ergo, he is our mediator as God and man: Againe the Apoſtle ſheweth wherein this reconciliation conſiſteth, in the not imputing of our ſinnes, 1 *Cor.*5.19. But the not imputation of our ſinnes, is a worke of the mediator. 2. Chriſt is both the reconciler as God and man, and the party to whom we are reconciled, as he is God : to bee a mediator, and to reconcile by a mediator, doe both agree vnto Chriſt : it followeth not then, we are reconciled to him as God, Ergo, not by him as God : for the Apoſtle ſheweth, that he reconcileth vs to himſelfe, and God doth beſeech you through vs, And I pray you in Chriſts ſtead : Chriſt then as God is our mediator, and doth as it were entreate vs to be reconciled.

1 Cor.5.19.

Secondly, Melchiſedech was a type of the eternall Prieſthood of Chriſt : *He is likened to the Sonne of God, and continueth a Prieſt for euer : Heb.*7.3. Chriſt cannot be a Prieſt for euer, but as he is God: and verſ.25. He is able perfectly to ſaue them that come vnto God by him : but he cannot perfectly ſaue, but as God : Ergo, he is mediator as God, *verſ.*28. The word of the oth, &c. maketh the ſonne Prieſt that is conſecrated for euer : Chriſt is a Prieſt after Melchiſedechs order as he is the ſon, but as the ſon he is God ; Ergo, as God he is our Mediator.

Heb.7.3.25.28.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul ſaith, The law was giuen by Angels in the hand of a Mediator, Galath. 3.19. But then Chriſt was God onely : Ergo, he is Mediator alſo as God. Bellarmine ſaith, that he is called Mediatour, becauſe that perſon was appointed afterward to bee Mediator. But the text is plaine, that he then actually performed the office of a Mediator, ſo much as pertained to his Godhead: for the Law was giuen in the hand of a Mediator, which kind of ſpeech ſheweth a preſent execution of the Mediatorſhip.

Bellarmine replyeth; if Chriſt were the Mediator before he was man, being then onely God, it would follow, that as God he was inferiour to God; for as he is a Mediator he is inferiour. cap. 8.

Anſw. 1. Chriſt in reſpect of euery part of his Mediatorſhip is not inferiour to God; but equall as he executeth his Mediatorſhip as God: He is inferiour onely as the man Mediator, not as God Mediator: as Theophylact expounded theſe words, Iohn 1.3 All things were made by it, ſaying: Patrem mediatore filio ad rerum creationem vſum non minore, ſed æquali: That the father vſed his ſonne as a mediator for the creation, yet not leſſe than the father but equall.

2. Auguſtine ſaith, Non mediator homo præter deitatem,—diuina humanitas, & humana diuinitas mediatrix: The man Chriſt is not mediator beſide his diuine nature;—the diuine humanity, and the humane diuinity, is the Mediatrix, hom. de ouib. c. 12. Ergo, Chriſt Mediator both as God and man.

Cyrillus lib. Apologetic. anathatiſ. 10. Quando dicis indignum eſſe deo, vt ſacrificet, aſtipulor & ego, ſcilicet, ſi ſolum ſit, & abſque carne verbum: Itaque vidi ipſum ſacrificantem ſecundum humanitatem, conſidentem vt deum: ſic beatus Paulus, Heb. 8.1. Where thou ſaiſt, that it is no meete thing for God to ſacrifice, I grant it, if the Word ſhould be by it ſelfe without fleſh: therefore I conſider Chriſt ſacrificing as man, but ſitting in the heauens as God, as bleſſed Paul ſaith: Heb. 8.1. We haue ſuch an high Prieſt, that ſitteth at the right hand of the throne of the Maieſty in heauen: Chriſt is our Prieſt, as he ſitteth at the right hand, &c. but ſo is he God, as this father ſaith, the firſt is here affirmed by S. Paul: Ergo, as he is God, he is our Prieſt.

Harm. ſect. 6. pag. 97. 3. Thus alſo our reformed Churches hold: Confeſſ. of Bohemia, cap. 4. Of theſe two natures—is made one indiuiſible perſon, one Chriſt, Emmanuel, our King and Prieſt, our Redeemer, our Mediator. Confeſſ. of Scotland, artic. of election: Becauſe the onely Godhead could not ſuffer death, neither could the onely manhood ouercome the ſame, he ioyned both together in one perſon, that the imbecility of the one ſhould ſuffer, and be ſubiect to death,—and the infinite and inuincible power of the other, to wit, of the Godhead ſhould triumph and purchaſe to vs life, &c. Their opinion is, that both natures concurred in the execution of the Mediatorſhip.

Bernard alſo writeth well of this point: Sicut mediator noſter duas naturas, humanitatem & diuinitatem coniunxit in vna perſona: ita ſingula eius opera, ad hanc ſiue illam neceſſe eſt pertinere naturam; ad hanc ſcilicet miſeria, ad illam pertinet potentia: As our Mediator ioyned two natures, the diuine and humane in one perſon; ſo all his workes belong to one of theſe natures: whatſoeuer he ſuffered was of man, his powerfull works were of his diuine nature: ſer. de verbis ſapientiæ. Chriſt therfore wrought ſome workes of his Mediatorſhip as man, ſome as God: but the whole office he executed as both.

Leo epiſt. 81. Qua ratione veritatem mediatoris impleret, niſi qua in forma dei æqualis eſt patri, & in forma ſerui particeps eſſet & noſtri: How ſhould he fulfill the verity of a Mediator, vnleſſe he were in the forme of God equall to his father, and in the forme of a ſeruant partaker with vs: Both theſe natures then belong not onely to the being but to the fulfilling of the Mediators office, not to the conſtitution onely, but to the execution alſo.

Eſpencæus a learned diuine of Paris of their owne ſide hath written a whole treatiſe of this matter, wherein he maintaineth this poſition, that Chriſt is not Mediator onely: Quà homo, ſed quà deus: As he is man, but as he is God. lib. de Chriſt. mediat. c. 5. And to this purpoſe he alleadgeth diuers fathers: as Cyrill: Non propter carnis ſolum diſpenſationem mediator vocatur, He is not called a Mediator onely becauſe of the diſpenſation of his fleſh: Theſaur. lib. 4. cap. 2.

To the ſame end he alleadgeth, Theophylact. c. 2. Theophylactus adeo de ratione mediatoris ſentit eſſe diuinam naturam, vt hinc Chriſti diuinitatem colligat ita: quod deus ſit, inde liquet, quod mediator ſit, &c. Theophylact doth thinke that the diuine nature belongeth to the manner of the mediation, in ſuch ſort that he thereby proueth Chriſt to be God: That he is God, it is euident, becauſe he is the Mediator.

To this purpoſe alledging many fathers both Greeke and Latine, c. 2.3.4. he concludeth with Auguſtine: Mediatorem inter nos & deum & mortalitatem habere oportuit tranſeuntem, & beatitatem permanentem, &c. It was neceſſary that the mediator ſhould haue, both tranſitory mortality, and permanent felicity, &c. lib. 9. de ciuit. dei. c. 15. And whereas in the ſame place it followeth; Non ob hoc mediator quia verbum ſed per quod homo: He is not a mediator, becauſe he is the Word, but whereby he is man: he anſwereth, that Auguſtines meaning is, that Chriſt was not our mediator as the word onely and ſimply, without our fleſh. c. 5. Thus this graue writer, one of their owne ſide is a plentifull witneſſe with vs againſt them.

The third part, whether Chriſt merited for himſelfe.

The Papiſts.

30. Errour. CHriſt, they ſay, by his paſſion and ſufferings, hath not onely merited eternall life for vs, but euen by his owne merite obtained his owne glorification, Rhemiſt. annot. Heb. 2.1.

*Argum.*1. *Philip.*2.9. He humbled himſelfe vnto the death of the croſſe, wherefore God hath alſo highly exalted him, and giuen him a name aboue all names: Ergo, Chriſt merited his exaltation, Rhemiſt, in hunc locum.

Phil. 2. 9.

Anſw. Firſt, this place ſheweth a ſequele of the exaltation of Chriſt after his humiliation, it maketh not one the cauſe of another, as our Sauiour himſelfe ſaith, *Luk.*24.26. Chriſt ought to haue ſuffered, and ſo enter into his glory. Secondly, the exaltation which the Apoſtle heere ſpeaketh of, is the ſame, which God chalengeth to himſelfe, Iſai. 45.22. Euery knee ſhall bow vnto me, and euery tongue ſhall ſweare by me. But it were moſt groſſe to affirme, that the diuine power and glory can be merited: Chriſt hath his diuinitie by nature, and not by merit. Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe expoundeth this place not of the purchaſe, but the manifeſtation onely of Chriſts glory: Chriſtus hoc natus accepit, vt poſt crucem manifeſtaretur, quid à patre, dum generaretur, acceperit; non enim tunc accepit à patre, quando à creatura cepit ſciri: Chriſt receiued this in his birth, that it ſhould be manifeſt after his croſſe, what he receiued of his Father in his generation; for he then did not receiue it of his Father when it began to be knowne of the creature, in 2. Philipp.

Luke 24. 26.

Iſai. 45. 22.

The Proteſtants.

IT is not in any wiſe to be thought, that Chriſt merited his glory, which is due to him in reſpect of his diuinitie: but that by the glorious worke of our redemption, he hath declared himſelfe, to be a perſon worthy of all honour and glory, Apoc.5.9. Thou art worthy to take the booke, &c. The place is ſo to be vnderſtood.

Apoc. 5. 9.

Argum. 1. If Chriſt had reſpect vnto himſelfe in his ſufferings, to gaine or merite any thing for himſelfe, his loue ſhould greatly be obſcured and darkened, which Saint Paul ſo greatly commendeth, in that he dyed for his enemies, *Rom.*5.10. For now ſhould not his loue be whole and entire towards vs, as though for our cauſe he onely had died. But it is now a deuided and halfe loue: for he died, as they ſay, partly to merit for himſelfe, partly to merit for vs. But the Scripture ſpeaketh cleane contrary, Ioh.17.19. For their ſakes ſanctifie I my ſelfe: he ſaith not, partly for their ſakes, partly for mine owne.

Rom. 5. 10.

Ioh. 17. 19.

Saint Ambroſe ſheweth, how that whatſoeuer Chriſt did, he did wholly for vs, not thereby to gaine any thing to himſelfe: 1. Concerning his faſting he ſaith. Chriſtus non emerendæ gratiæ ſuæ cauſa, ſed noſtra eruditionis gratia ieiunauit: Chriſt faſted not to merit fauour or grace to himſelfe, but for our erudition or inſtruction, *lib.*3. de fid. c. 2.

2. Nec ſibi ſua natiuitas profuit, ſed nobis: Neither did his birth profit himſelfe but vs, in 1. Coloſſ.

3. Chriſtus noſtri non ſui cauſa pauper factus: Chriſt became poore for vs, not for himſelfe, in 2. Cor. 8.

4. Chriſtus eſt mortuus pro nobis, ſed ille, vt prodeſſet nobis; noſtra autem mors non illi proficit, ſed nobis: Chriſt died for vs, he died to profit vs, but our death doth not profit him, but our ſelues in 8. ad Roman.

Thus we ſee that the 1. birth, 2. faſting, 3. pouertie, 4. death of Chriſt did not any waies aduantage himſelfe: but all was done for vs.

Argum. 2. All glory that Chriſt hath, was from euerlaſting due to his perſon, becauſe he is the eternall Sonne of God: as he himſelfe ſaith, Ioh. 17.5. And now glorifie mee with thine owne ſelfe, with the glory which I had with thee, before the world was: And this glory was due vnto Chriſt ſo ſoone as he was incarnate by the right of his Godhead, Heb. 1.6. When he bringeth in his firſt begotten Sonne into the world, he ſaith, Let all the Angels of God worſhip him. And the Rhemiſts themſelues confeſſe, in their Annotat. vpon theſe words, that ſtraight vpon Chriſts deſcending from heauen, it was the dutie of Angels to worſhip him. Ergo, he merited not his glorification by his death, which was due vnto him euen at his firſt incarnation.

Ioh. 17. 5.

Heb. 1. 6.

Argum. 3. If Chriſt merited his owne glorification, then he alſo merited the hypoſtaticall vnion, that his manhood ſhould be ioyned to his Godhead in vnitie of perſon; for his glory, maieſtie, and power giuen to his manhood, doth iſſue and ariſe from the vniting of his Godhead therewith in one perſon: but his humanitie deſerued not to be vnited to the Godhead: Nemo tam cæcus eſt, ſaith Auguſtine, *No man is ſo blind, that he dare ſay, that Chriſt by his well liuing merited to be called the Sonne of God, de corrupt. & grat. cap.*11. And he prooueth it out of the firſt of Luke, verſ.33. Therefore ſhall that holy thing be called the Sonne of God: not for any works going before, but becauſe the holy Ghoſt came vpon her. Wherefore the diuine glory which Chriſt hath, was not merited, but his owne it was from the beginning, which glory the humane nature in Chriſt is made partaker of, not for any merit, but becauſe it is vnited to the Godhead in the ſame perſon, through the abundant and vnſpeakeable grace and loue of God vnto mankinde, which of his free grace rather tooke vnto himſelfe the nature of men, than of Angels. Wherefore Chriſt by his perfect obedience and bleſſed ſacrifice, hath merited abundantly for vs, remiſſion of ſinnes, and eternall life: but by his merits he hath gained nothing for himſelfe: neither had he any reſpect to the bettering of his owne eſtate in his ſufferings, but onely to pay a ranſome for vs.

Saint Ambroſe further ſaith: Videtur donum patris, hoc eſt, eſſe filium, & nomen ſuper omne nomen, hoc eſt, eſſe Deum, &c. This ſeemeth to be the gift of the Father, that is, to be his Sonne; and that is the name aboue all names, to be God, in 2. ad Philipp. but the Godhead cannot be merited.

Againe he ſaith: Licet ſecundum carnem Chriſto ſedes ad dextram Dei à patre, generationis tamen ſuperna & aequalitatis potentia defertur: Although Chriſt according to his fleſh ſitteth at the right hand of his father, yet it is due vnto him in reſpect of his ſupernall generation, and equall power. lib. 5. de fid. c. 7.

Further he thus teſtifieth: Ad hoc natus eſt Chriſtus, vt faceret creaturam; nec enim ſibi natiuitas ſua proficit, ſed nobis, quia non eguit naſci; erat enim in Deo qui proceſſit de Deo: ſi ergo natiuitas prima ipſi non profuit, multo minus ſecunda: Chriſt was borne or begotten of God to this end, to make the creature: for his natiuity or begetting, did not profit himſelfe, but vs; becauſe he needed not to bee borne; for he was in God, that proceeded from God: and if the firſt and eternall birth did not profit him, much leſſe the ſecond. in 1. ad Coloſſ.

Thus Saint Ambroſe is very conſtant and reſolute in this point, that Chriſt gained nothing properly to himſelfe by his life or death: but all was done for vs.

Yet Chriſt may be ſaid in two reſpects to haue obtained ſomewhat to himſelfe, 1. becauſe the preeminence of the members doth redound to the honour of the head: and in this ſenſe Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Nos redemit, ſed ſibi acquiſiuit, &c. in his omnibus detrimentum nullum video diuinitatis, profectum operationis agnoſco, &c. Chriſt hath redeemed vs, but he hath alſo gotten to himſelfe: in all this I ſee no detriment of the diuinity, but a profiting in the worke of our redemption. ſerm. 20. in Pſal. 119. His meaning is, that Chriſt gained, in that he finiſhed the redemption for vs: he purchaſed nothing properly to himſelfe, but by way of communication, becauſe his members by his merit were redeemed. So then Chriſt merited not ſimply for himſelfe, but with relation vnto his members: and in that reſpect, as the head maketh one myſticall body with the members; ſo Chriſt alſo may be ſaid to merit for himſelfe, not conſidered a part, but together with his body: ſo is Tertullian to bee vnderſtood, Aſcenſum ſuum aedificat in coelos vtique ſibi & ſuis, &c. He doth build vp his aſcenſion euen to heauen for himſelfe and his, &c. Thus alſo our reformed Churches: as the confeſſion of Saxony, artic. of the remiſſion of ſinnes: Imputation of righteouſneſſe is giuen for the merit of Chriſt alone, and that Chriſt is effectuall in vs, and doth by his holy ſpirit quicken the beleeuers, ——and withall make vs heires of eternall life, &c. They in the merit of Chriſt conſider onely the benefit, that thereby ariſeth vnto vs. And ſo M. Caluine excellently ſaith, that ſuch was the ineſtimable loue of Chriſt toward vs, Vt ſui oblitus ſe ſuamque vitam nobis impenderit: That forgetting himſelfe, he beſtowed both himſelfe and his life for vs, &c. And againe, as often as the Scripture ſpeaketh of Chriſts death, fructum pretiumque illius in nobis ſtatuit: it ſetteth the fruit and price thereof in vs, &c.

Lib. aduerſ. Matcion. ex epiſt. 1. ad Theſſalonicenſ.

in 2 Philip. verſ. 9.

2. Chriſt by way of declaration or manifeſtation is ſaid to haue obtained his great name: not in that he merited his glory by his paſſion, which was due to his perſon: but by his obedience he declared himſelfe worthy of ſo great glory: thus Peter Lombard expoundeth that place of the Apoſtle, Phil. 2. 9. God hath giuen him a name aboue euery name, &c. Secundum tropum in ſcriptura creberrimum res dicitur fieri, quando innoteſcit, &c, manifeſtationem ergo illius nominis donauit illi Deus poſt reſurrectionem, ſed illam meruit per obedientiam paſſionis: According to a certaine figure of ſpeech often vſed in the Scripture, a thing is ſaid to be done, when it appeareth onely; ſo God gaue vnto Chriſt after his reſurrection, the manifeſtation of his name; but he merited it by the obedience of his paſſion, lib. 3. diſt. 18, lit. e. By his ſentence Chriſt merited not his glory, but the manifeſtation onely thereof, that is, was declared by the obedience of his death worthy all honour, which is that we affirme: for otherwiſe to ſpeake properly, as Peter Lombard in the ſame place ſaith: Habuit hoc nomen Dei filius, in quantum Deus ab aeterno per naturam; in quantum homo factus eſt, habuit ex tempore per gratiam: The Sonne of God had this name, as he was God eternally by nature; as he was made man, he had it temporally by grace, &c. If then he had it of grace, he properly did not merit it.

I will alleadge another graue teſtimony, of one of their owne ſide, Clichtoueus; ad Damaſcen. numerum. 83. Quae in Chriſto eſt diuinitas omnium princeps & dominatrix ſuae idem contulit humanitati, vt ratione vnionis ſit omnium etiam domina, &c. The diuinity, that is in Chriſt, Prince and ruler of all things, gaue the ſame vnto his humanity, by reaſon of the vnion, to be Lord of all things, &c. which rule and domination is ſaid to be giuen, when for and after his humility vpon the croſſe it was manifeſted vnto men, &c. We cannot haue a clearer euidence for this matter, as we haue heard, than from themſelues.

Et citat. Eſpenc. lib. de Chriſt. Mediator. cap. 10.

Concil. Epheſin. 1. can. 9. Si quis dicit quod Chriſtus pro ſe ipſe obtulerit oblationem, & non magis pro ſolis nobis, anathema ſit: If any man ſay, that Chriſt offered vp himſelfe for himſelfe, and not rather onely for vs, let him be accurſed. But if Chriſt merited heauen by his ſufferings, not onely for vs, but for himſelfe alſo, then had he part himſelfe in his owne oblation. Thus we want not here the teſtimony of the Greeke Church: Auguſtines opinion of the Africane Church is alleadged before, with the conſent of the writers of the reformed Churches, and of ſome popiſh writers: now I will put to the ſeale of the Martyrs.

Maſter Tindal holy Martyr hath ſealed this truth: Chriſt with all his workes did not deſerue heauen for himſelfe (for that was his already) but did vs ſeruice therewith, and neither looked for, nor ſought his owne profit; but ours, and the honour of God his Father onely: Fox p. 1247. vol. 2. articul. 7. Againe, he explaineth himſelfe thus: Ieſus Chriſt poſſeſſeth the kingdome of heauen by double right: firſt becauſe he is the Sonne of God, and very inheritour of his kingdome: ſecondly, becauſe he hath gotten it by his paſſions and death: of his ſecond right he hath no need, and therefore he giveth it all to them, that beleeve and truſt in him, pag. 1256. col. 2. articul. 30.

The third part of this controverſie, concerning the comming of Chriſt to iudgement: which appertaineth to his whole perſon, as hee is both God and man.

THis part of this controverſie hath two parts: Firſt, concerning the ſignes which muſt come to paſſe before his appearing. Secondly, of the time and manner of his appearing. The firſt part containeth three queſtions: Firſt, whether the Goſpell be already preached to the whole world: Secondly, whether Henoch and Elias ſhall come in the fleſh, before the day of iudgement. Thirdly, of the great perſecutions toward the end of the world.

The firſt Queſtion, whether the Goſpell be already preached throughout the world.

The Papiſts.

THey deny that the Goſpell hath bin already publiſhed to all nations of the world: for there are many great countries, which never heard of the Goſpell, as they affirme: but before the comming of Chriſt to judgement, they ſay, it ſhall be preached to the whole world, Bellarm. de Roman. pontif. lib. 3. cap. 4.

31. Errour.

Argum. 1. Matth. 24.14. Chriſt ſaith, This Goſpell of the kingdome ſhall be preached thorough the whole world, for a witneſſe unto all nations, and then ſhall the end come. The end of the world ſhall immediately follow the generall preaching of the Goſpell: which if it hath bin performed, it is moſt like to have bin done in the Apoſtles time, then the world ſhould have ended long agoe, Bellar ibid.

Matth. 24.14.

Anſw. 1. This word τότε, then, doth not neceſſarily imply an immediate conſequence or following of that, to the which this note of time is annexed: as Auguſtine well obſerveth, of the like phraſe uſed in the Goſpell, in illo tempore, at that time; as he giveth inſtance in the 14 of Matthew, verſe 1. and Marke 6.14. where both of them ſpeaking of Herod, what he ſaid, when he heard of the fame of Chriſt, uſe the ſame phraſe, yet ſet not downe things in the ſame order: and ſo he inferreth: Nulla facta neceſſitate, qua hoc etiam conſequenter geſtum eſſe intelligere cogeremur: There is no neceſſitie to compell us to underſtand this to have bin done next after, or conſequently in order. So alſo Chryſoſt. Non conſequentiæ temporum, neque præcedentium connexionis iſtud Tunc eſt: This word then, is not a note of the conſequence of time, nor connexion of things paſt, &c. as he ſheweth by the like phraſe uſed in the Goſpell: In thoſe dayes came Iohn Baptiſt: he noteth not the time immediatly following: for he ſpake of the birth of Chriſt, the comming of the Wiſe-men, the death of Herod; and Iohn Baptiſt came 30. yeeres after. So here, it is ſufficient to underſtand, that the Goſpell ſhall be preached to all the world, before the end come, not preſcribing the order of time: as Calvine well obſerveth, nullum tempus certum præfigit, he fixeth no certaine time: but ſheweth in generall, that the Goſpell ſhall be propagated, ante ultimum adventus ſui diem, before the laſt day of his comming. In the like manner our Saviour ſaith, Matth. 26. 64. ἀπ' ἄρτι, from this time, à modò, from henceforth yee ſhall ſee the Sonne of man ſitting at the right hand of the power of God: yet this, from henceforth, is not yet come. Hereof Origen thus writeth: Deo à conſtitutione mundi ad conſummationem ejus velut una dies: non mirum ergo, quod hic dicit ſalvator, à modo, ſpacium eſſe breviſſimum: Unto God from the conſtitution of the world to the end thereof, it is but as one day: no marvell then, if our Saviour ſay, from henceforth, counting it a ſhort ſpace, &c.

De conſenſ. Euangeliſt. c. 43.

Hom. 77. in 24. cap. Matth.

Tractat. 35. in Matth.

2. But ſeeing Bellarmine doth vrge this as an argument, that Antichriſt is not yet come, becauſe, before Antichriſts comming, the Goſpel muſt be generally preached: for the great perſecution vnder Antichriſt ſhall hinder all exerciſe of religion. Our further anſwer is this: 1. That it is no argument, that the Goſpell ſhall not be preached after Antichriſt is reuealed, becauſe of the great perſecution: for notwithſtanding the moſt grieuous perſecutions in the Primitiue Church vnder the Pagan Romane Emperours, yet the Goſpell was propagated and encreaſed ſtill. 2. I will not preſſe the interpretation of Chryſoſtome, Theophylact, Euthymius, Hilary, who interpret this place of the end and deſtruction of Ieruſalem, before the which the Goſpel was preached to moſt parts of the world: for our Sauiour immediately before hauing ſpoken of the whole earth, meaneth the end of the ſame. 3. For more full anſwer then, I ſay: that there are two generall preachings of the Goſpell: the one I will call, hiſtoricall, which was performed in the Apoſtles time, the ſound of their doctrine went into all the world: the other analogicall and complementall: that as the Goſpell was preached at the firſt by the Apoſtles, and their diſciples to the whole world, before the deſtruction of Ieruſalem: ſo before the finall end and diſſolution of the world, for a more full conuincing thereof, the Goſpell ſhall be reuiued againe, as we ſee in part hath beene performed already, in the preaching of the Goſpell, in this laſt hundred yeeres, and ſhall be more at the generall conuerſion of the Iewes: yet betweene theſe two generall preachings, there is great difference: 1. The Apoſtles were appointed by ſpeciall commiſſion to preach to the world: but in the other, we expect no ſuch calling of Apoſtles, but God ſhall ſtirre vp zealous Preachers and Paſtors. 2. Then they were furniſhed with gift of miracles, which ſhall not bee neceſſary now. 3. Then the Goſpell was preached to them, that neuer heard it; now it ſhall chiefely be reuiued, where it had been heard before. 4. Then the Goſpell preuailed againſt Paganiſme and heatheniſh Idolatry; now chiefely it ſhall fight againſt Antichriſtianiſme and falſe worſhip.

Of two generall preachings of the Goſpell.

Argum. 2. We ſee the Goſpell hath beene preached in great countries of late, which neuer heard the Goſpell afore, as it is thought, Rhemiſt. Matth. 24. ſect. 4.

Anſw. 1. They ſpeake doubtfully, they cannot tell: as it is thought, ſay they. 2. They meane the preaching of their Friers, in thoſe new found countries, which was not the preaching of the Goſpel, but of vile ſuperſtition, not to conuert the people to God, but to robbe and ſpoyle them, and make a prey of them, killing and ſlaying them without all mercy: read Benzo in hiſtoria noui orbis. 3. We deny not but that the Goſpell may be revived and renued in many countries, where notwithſtanding it was planted many yeeres afore: as this country of ours in ancient time called Britanny, was Fox pag. 106. firſt inſtructed in the faith by the preaching of Ioſeph of Arimathea, as Gildas ſaith: or as Nicephorus ſaith, by Simon Zelotes; yet after that, the foundation of the faith thus begun, it was confirmed afterward in King Lucius dayes, by the preaching of Fagane and Damiane, which at Lucius requeſt were ſent into the land from Eleutherius B. of Rome; and ſo may it come to paſſe in other countries: a ſecond preaching therefore taketh not away the former, but confirmeth and reviueth it. 4. And many countries may be inhabited now: which were not peopled in the Apoſtles time, and this notwithſtanding the Goſpell was preached then to the habitable parts of the world.

The Proteſtants.

That the Goſpell was in the Apoſtles time preached to all the knowne and inhabited nations of the world, ſo that once already the world hath beene generally called by the preaching of the word, it is euident by the Scriptures.

Acts 1. 8. Argum. 1. Our Sauiour ſaith to his Apoſtles, Yee ſhall be my witneſſes to the vttermoſt parts of the earth, Act. 1. 8. which is ſpoken to the perſons of the Apoſtles, not in them to all Paſtors and Preachers, as ſome expound it: for in the ſame verſe, there is mention made of the comming of the holy Ghoſt, and how firſt they ſhould begin to witneſſe at Ieruſalem: which things were indeed ſo accompliſhed in the Apoſtles.

Rom. 10. 18. Saint Paul alſo Rom. 10. 18. expoundeth that place of the Pſalme, Their ſound is gone forth into all the world, of the Apoſtles. And Coloſſ. 1. 6. The Word of truth is come to you, as it is to all the world, Coloſſ. 1. 6. and is fruitfull as it is among you: and ver. 23. The Goſpell hath bin preached to euery creature which is vnder heauen. Theſe places doe euidently proue, that the Goſpell was preached to all the world, euen in the Apoſtles time; neither can it be ſo vnderſtood, as Bellarmine imagineth; that the Goſpel was preached not in act, but in vertue, becauſe the Apoſtles did ſowe the ſeed, which ſhould afterward fructifie in all the world: or becauſe the fame of the Goſpell onely was ſpread ouer all the world. Bellarmi. lib. 3. de Roman. pontif. c. 4.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, It is come vnto the world, as it is alſo vnto you: but it was come actually to the Coloſſians, therefore it was ſo come alſo to the world. 2. He ſaith alſo, and is fruitfull, &c. but the fame or rumor only of the Goſpell could not be fruitfull, and the Apoſtle calleth it a preaching: but the carrying or ſpreading of a report, is not a preaching, which is effectuall and begetteth faith. 3. If by the fame of the Goſpell, he vnderſtand the preaching thereof at the ſecond hand, by ſuch as were the Apoſtles ſchollers, and ſo ſent forth by them: it is the ſame thing that we affirme, that in the Apoſtles time, though not by the Apoſtles perſons onely, all the knowne parts of the world heard the Goſpell.

Againe, ſeeing the Apoſtolicall calling and gifts is now ceaſed, neither are wee to looke that men ſhould be immediatly called from heauen, and the preaching of the Goſpell to all nations is an Apoſtolicall worke, for the which the Apoſtles alſo receiued the gifts of tongues: ſeeing now we haue neither Apoſtolike men, nor Apoſtolike gifts, we are not to doubt, but that this promiſe and propheſie of the univerſall preaching of the Goſpell, is performed already.

Argum. 2. It appeareth in Eccleſiaſticall hiſtories, that the Apoſtles diſperſed themſelves into all parts of the world, every where preaching the Goſpell. Thomas preached to the Parthians, Medes, Perſians, alſo to the Germanes: Simon Zelotes, in Mauritania, Africa, and in Britannia: Iudas, called Thaddeus in Meſopotamia: Marke, in Ægypt: Bartholomeus to the Indians: Andrew preached to the Scythians, Sogdians, Æthiopians: Hieron. catalog. ſcriptor. So that there were few or no knowne countries in the world, which heard not of the fame of the Goſpell.

But here we muſt put in certaine cautions: Firſt, that the Goſpell was to be preached in the habitable or knowne world: the word is οἰκουμένη which Hierome ſaith anſwereth to the Hebrew תבל tebel, Quam nos habitatum transferre poſſumus. Which we may tranſlate the inhabited world, tom. 4. epiſt. ad Cypriani. Many countries are inhabited now that were not habitable then, or at the leaſt not inhabited: wherefore it was ſufficient, that the people of the world heard of the Goſpell, howſoever afterward they were propagated into other vnknowne places. Secondly, as Auguſtine ſaith, Omnes gentes promiſſæ ſunt, non omnes homines omnium gentium: All nations were promiſed to heare of the Goſpel, not all the men and inhabitants of every nation. And ſo we doubt not but the Apoſtles did lay the foundation of faith through the whole world, and were firſt planters of the Churches in the moſt knowne nations. Thirdly, though it might be, that there were many barbarous nations in the Apoſtles time, to whom they themſelues preached not perſonally, yet the Goſpell might bee brought vnto them by thoſe, whom the Apoſtles ſent: as there were many Diſciples and Euangeliſts beſide the Apoſtles, which preached the Goſpell: at the leaſt the fame of the Goſpel might eaſily be brought to the more obſcure, barbarous, and vnknowne nations, from thoſe famous, large and populous countries, where the Apoſtles had laboured. Thus S. Ambroſe ſaith in 10. ad Roman. Vbique audita, & peruenit in omnem locum prædicatio nominis Chriſti, vbi enim præſentia hominis prædicantis defuit, ſonus tamen & fama peruenit, &c. Euery where is heard, and to euery place is come the preaching of the name of Chriſt: for where the preſence of the Preacher ceaſed, yet the ſound of the reporter encreaſed: as the report of the wonders done in Ægypt came vnto all nations, by the witneſſe of Rahab the harlot, &c. Thus then not by a generall fame onely of the Apoſtles preaching, but a particular report and relation of their doctrine, the name of Chriſt was publiſhed to all nations. Fourthly, the Goſpell in many countries was planted by the Apoſtles, which in ſhort time notwithſtanding might decay, and begin to be extinguiſhed: and afterward their plantings might be renewed, watered, and reuiued by others; and yet may the Apoſtles be the firſt planters. Wherefore according to our meaning wee nothing doubt, but that the Apoſtles ſowed the firſt ſeedes of faith throughout the world: and therefore it is not to be expected, that the Lord ſhould ſend ſuch another generall commiſſion to publiſh the Goſpell to the whole world. Fifthly, we meane not the Goſpell ſo to haue beene preached in the Apoſtles time to all the world, as though all nations were then conuerted, but quoad oblationem, in reſpect of the tender and offer thereof: many nations were afterward in diuers ages conuerted, and effectually called: then quoad efficaciam, , in reſpect of the effectuall preaching, in their conuerſion, ſo it is not neceſſary to hold the Goſpell then to haue beene preached to all the world: ſixthly, we grant, that ſome nations in the remote places of the world might haue beene ignorant of the Goſpel of Chriſt in the Apoſtles time: yet may the Goſpell be truly ſaid to haue beene preached to all the world, that is, to the greateſt, and moſt part of the world: though not particularly to euery nation, yet more generally was it then preached, than in any one age afterward: ſo that it may be truly affirmed, that the moſt generall and vniuerſall preaching of the Goſpell to the whole world was in the Apoſtles time.

That the Goſpell hath beene already preached to the whole earth, a notable experiment hereof we haue in the firſt Nicen Councell, where were aſſembled 318. Biſhops out of the chiefe Prouinces of the world: for Africa, there were preſent the Biſhops of Ægypt, Thebais, Lybia: for Aſia, there came ſome out of Perſia, Arabia, Armenia, Phrygia, Lydia: and ſome from all the Prouinces of Aſia minor: likewiſe out of the Iſles of Rhodes, Chius, Lemnos, Corcyra: for Europa, Hoſius, of Spaine, others out of France, Gotland, Myſia, Dacia, Achaia, Pannonia, Calabria, and from the Prouince of Boſphorus: And as Socrates ſaith, Sed etiam Perſa venit ad concilium Epiſcopus, verum nec Scythia defuit ex eorum choro: There came to the Councell a Perſian Biſhop, and there wanted not one out of Scythia. Thus then by the view of this ancient Councell it may appeare, that the whole world was in thoſe times lightned with the Goſpell.

Ex ſubſcriptione concil. Nicen. 1.

Hereof alſo Genadius thus reporteth, Catalog. ſcriptorum: Iacobus presbyter Niſibenæ nobilis Perſarum ciuitatis Epiſcopus vnus eorum fuit, qui in Nicena ſynodo Arrianam peruerſitatem damnarunt: Iacob, or Iames a presbyter, Biſhop of Niſibene a noble city of Perſia, was one of them which in the Nicen Synode condemned the Arrian hereſie.

Further, Saint Hierome thus teſtifieth: Catalog. ſcriptor. Creſcens in Gallijs prædicauit, &c. Creſcens preached in France, Queene Candaces Eunuch in Arabia Felix, and the Ile Taprobane: Pantenus was ſent by Demetrius Biſhop of Alexandria into India, being entreated thereunto by the Ambaſſadors of that nation, where he found, that Bartholomew had preached the Goſpell after Matthew, the which written in Hebrew letters he brought to Alexandria.

Againe he thus writeth: Iam & Ægyptius Serapis Chriſtianus factus eſt, &c. Now the Ægyptian God Serapis is become a Chriſtian: from India, Perſia, Æthiopia we daily receiue great troupes of Monkes: the Armenians haue laid aſide their quiuers, the Hunnes doe learne the Pſalter: Scythica frigora feruent calore fidei: The Scythian froſts doe glow with the heate of faith: the Getes bloody armies are become the tents of the Church. Hieron. ad Latan. and in his epiſtle ad Euſtochium, he maketh mention of the Britaines, of the Armenians, Indians, Æthiopians, of Cappadocia, Pontus, Syria, Meſopotamia, conuerted to the faith, cunctaque Orientis examina, and all the ſwarmes of the Eaſt.

Origen ſaith, ex apolog. Pamphil. Prædicatur ſermo iſte in omni orbe terrarum, &c. This Word is preached in all the world, Greekes, Barbarians, the wiſe and vnwiſe doe receiue the religion of Chriſt.

Saint Ambroſe: Nulla pars mundi ab Euangelio vacat Chriſti: & licet illa generalis vocatio non quieſcat, tamen iam iſta ſpecialis omnibus facta eſt communis: No part of the world wanteth the Goſpel of Chriſt: and although that generall calling (of the creatures) ceaſeth not; yet this ſpeciall is made common to all, lib. 2. de vocat. Gent. c. 10. It is euident then by theſe teſtimonies, that the world hath already generally beene lightned with the preaching of the word, ſo that a generall ſecond preaching is not to be expected.

And for further euidence, 1. of the Greeke Church, Chryſoſt. ſaith, ſpeaking of the preaching of the

Apoſtles,

Apoſtles: Ipſa terrarum orbis, ipſique fines terræ audiuerunt: The world of the earth, and the very ends of the earth haue heard. Damaſcene ſaith, that the Diſciples of Chriſt tooke aliue the whole compaſſe of the world by their preaching.

2. Tertullian, who liued not aboue an 100. yeeres after S. Iohn the Apoſtle teſtifieth, that in his time, Chriſti nomen & regnum vbique porrigitur, vbique creditur, &c. that Chriſts name and kingdome was extended euery where, and beleeued vpon. And againe he ſaith, Apoſtolos inſtitutores generis noſtri in totum orbem mitti per filium ſuum voluit: God would haue ſent by his owne Sonne the Apoſtles, the inſtitutors of mankind into all the world. Gregentius Archbiſhop of Tephra among the Homerites, bordering vpon the Æthiopians, who were conuerted to the faith about the 16. yeere of Iuſtinian the Emperour, anno 550. or thereabouts, ſaith, that the Apoſtles went into all the world, and preached the Goſpell: and he ſaith in the ſame place, that almoſt the whole world was become Chriſtian. Zaga Zabo an Æthiopike Biſhop confeſſeth thus, Apoſtoli per totum terrarum orbem prædicarunt verbum patris, The Apoſtles preached the Word of Father through the whole world.

3. Confeſſ. of Heluetia, c. 18. The Apoſtles did ſtay in no certaine place, but gathered diuers Churches through the world: which being conſtituted, there ceaſed to be Apoſtles, &c. Their meaning is, that the Goſpell was preached to the world, while the function of the Apoſtles continued: which being now ceaſed, there cannot be ſuch an vniuerſall preaching, as was by the Apoſtles.

4. Lyranus euidently ſaith: Patet quia viuente Petro, &c. It is euident, that Peter yet liuing, the faith was preached in the vniuerſall world, becauſe the knowledge of faith came to all the world: yet hee then, as he giueth inſtance of France, which was conuerted by Saint Sauinian, ſent thither by Saint Peter: yet he denyeth not, but that the Goſpell ſhould againe bee preached toward the end of the world, which we deny not, ſo that the preaching of the Goſpell in the Apoſtles time, be held to haue beene moſt vniuerſall: as is affirmed before.

The ſecond Queſtion, of the comming of Henoch and Elias before the day of Iudgement.

The Papiſts.

32. Error.

THeir common and receiued opinion is, that Henoch and Elias doe yet liue in their bodies in Paradiſe, and ſhall come in perſon to oppoſe themſelues againſt Antichriſt, and by their preaching to conuert the Iewes, Rhemiſt. Apocal. 11. ſect. 4.

Argum. Malach. 4.5. I will ſend you Eliah the Prophet, before the great and fearefull day of the Lord. Theſe are alſo the two witneſſes ſpoken of, Apoc. 11.3. which ſhall be ſlaine and riſe vp againe the third day: Ergo, Eliah and Henoch ſhall come before the day of the Lord, Bellarm. de Roman. pontif. 3.6. Eccleſ. 44.16. Henoch was tranſlated into Paradiſe to giue repentance to the Gentiles, that is, by his preaching: Doway Bible, p. 20.

Luke 1. 16. Matth. 11. 14. & 17. 13.

Anſw. Firſt, the propheſie of Malachy was fulfilled in Iohn Baptiſt, who came in the ſpirit of Eliah, as it is thrice in the Goſpel applyed: once by the Angell, Luk. 1.16. twice by our Sauiour Chriſt, Matth. 11.14. and 17.13.

Bellarmine ſaith, it is not properly vnderſtood of Iohn Baptiſt, but onely in an allegory. 1. Firſt, the Prophet ſpeaketh of the great and fearefull day of the Lord: but the comming of Chriſt was the acceptable time. 2. Secondly, Matth. 17.11. Chriſt ſaith, after Iohn had finiſhed his courſe, Elias certainely ſhall come. 3. Thirdly, he ſpeaketh there of the perſon of Helias that appeared with Chriſt in the mountaine. 4. Fourthly, Iohn Baptiſt did not reſtore all things, that is, by conuerting of all Iewes and heretikes, but Elias ſhall: Iohn therefore was not that Elias.

Matth. 3. 10. 12. Heb. 12. 26.

Apolog. for the oath of alleag. pag. 65.

Anſ. 1. Here Bellarmine bewrayeth his ignorance: As though the comming of Chriſt in the fleſh, as it brought comfort to the elect, and to as many as were ordained to ſaluation, was not alſo an haſtening of the Iudgement of God againſt the wicked: and therefore Iohn ſaith, The axe was laid to the roote of the tree, Matth. 3. 10. and that Chriſt came with his fanne in his hand, verſ. 12. The Apoſtle, Heb. 12 26. applyeth that ſaying of the Prophet; Once againe will I ſhake not onely the heauens, but the earth, to the preaching of the Goſpell. We ſee then in what ſenſe the firſt comming of Chriſt is called a fearefull and terrible day. And here I anſwer further with our Princely Eccleſiaſtes, that this terrible day may be vnderſtood of the day of Chriſts paſſion, when the Sunne was totally obſcured, the vaile of the Temple rent a ſunder,—the earth did quake, the ſtones were clouen: if that day were not a great and horrible day, I know not what to call a horrible day, &c. 2. Our Sauiour maketh anſwer to the Apoſtles queſtion: Why ſay the Scribes that Elias muſt firſt come? firſt deliuering their ſenſe, Elias muſt firſt come, but then he ſheweth his owne iudgement, correcting the erroneous ſenſe of the Scribes, verſ. 12. But I ſay vnto you, that Elias is come already. To this purpoſe alſo his Maieſty: Chriſt vſeth that word (venturus, to come) but in the repeating of their opinion, but interpreting it, that he was already come in the perſon of Iohn Baptiſt, &c. And whereas the vulgar Latine readeth thus: Mat. 11.14. This is Elias, qui venturus eſt, which is to come: The Greeke words ὁ μέλλων ἔρχεσθαι, ſignifie as well, which was, as, which is, to come, as Beza and Eraſmus well obſerue. 3. Neither is it neceſſary, becauſe Elias appeared a little before in perſon, that this ſhould be ſpoken of his perſon: and yet it was true alſo in that ſenſe, that Elias was come already, appearing vnto Chriſt in the mount. 4. And Iohn alſo reſtored all, that is, many, as the Scripture vſeth to ſpeake, Luk. 1.16. Many of the children of Iſrael ſhall he turne to the Lord their God. So Saint Paul hauing ſaid, Through the iuſtifying of one the benefit abounded toward all men to iuſtification, Rom. 5.18. in the next verſe it is read of all, he ſaith, by the obedience of one many ſhall be made righteous. 4. Luk. 1.16. Rom. 5.18.

Anſw. Secondly, by the two witneſſes, is vnderſtood the ſmall, yet ſufficient number of the true ſeruants of God, which ſhall witneſſe the truth euen in the cruell perſecution of Antichriſt: there is no mention made of Henoch or Helias. Auguſtine vnderſtandeth theſe two witneſſes of the two Teſtaments, as he is alleadged afterward. And if you will needs vnderſtand that literally, of their riſing againe, why not the reſt alſo, how fire ſhall proceed out of their mouthes to conſume the wicked, and they ſhall turne water into blood? The meaning is nothing elſe, but that God will alwayes haue faithfull witneſſes in his Church, which ſhall alwayes ſtand vp, in the ſtead of the Prophets and holy men gone before.

Saint Ierome writeth well of this matter: De Henoch & Elia, quos venturos Apocalypſis refert & eſſe morituros, non eſt iſtius temporis diſputatio, cum omnis ille liber, aut ſpiritualiter intelligendus ſit, vt nos exiſtimamus, aut ſi carnalem interpretationem ſequimur, Iudaicis fabulis acquieſcendum ſit, vt rurſus ædificetur Ieruſalem, & hoſtia offerantur in templo: Of Henoch and Helias, whom the Apocalypſe maketh mention ſhall come, and afterward dye, it belongeth not to this time to diſpute, ſeeing that whole booke muſt either ſpiritually be vnderſtood, as we thinke, or if we follow the carnall (or literall) interpretation, wee muſt reſt in Iewiſh fables, that Ieruſalem muſt be built againe, and ſacrifices offered in the Temple, Marcel. tom. 4.

Anſw. Thirdly, 1. That booke of Eccleſiaſticus is no part of Canonicall Scripture, and therefore preſſeth vs not. 2. They inſert and adde, that, which is not in the Greeke originall, was tranſlated into paradiſe: and the reſt of the words are not well tranſlated, which are truly rendred thus: an example of repentance to the nations, and ſo their owne Vatablus readeth. 3. And allowing their owne reading: will not the ſenſe ſtand well and cleerely enough? that Henoch was tranſlated, that by the example of his reward, the Nations might repent, and imitate his holy footſteps: as our princely Eccleſiaſtes. Apolog. p. 67.

Argum. I will adioyne another new found argument of our Doway men: whereas it is ſaid, 2 Chro. 21.12. There came a writing to him from Eliah the Prophet, &c. they inferre, that this Epiſtle was ſent from Eliah ſeven yeere after he was aſſumed or taken up, &c. And from whence then ſhould it be more like to be ſent, than from Paradiſe? 2 Chro. 21.12.

Anſw. Divers expoſitions are given of this place. 1. Some thinke that Eliſha is here called Elias, becauſe he had the ſpirit of Eliah reſting upon him: Bibl. Geneuenſ. annot. 2. Some, that the ſtory of Elias taking up is tranſpoſed, which might fall out under Iehoram: Pellican. 3. Or that Eliſhus might thus write by direction from Elias, before he was taken away. 4. But the beſt ſolution is, that Elias before his aſſumption did leave this propheticall letter to be delivered unto Iehoram, foreſeeing by the ſpirit of prophecie his cruell and wicked diſpoſition: as the man of Iudah ſpake of Ioſias by name, and Iſay of Cyrus, long before they were borne: And ſo it was meete that the wicked King ſhould be reprooved by him, that was now abſent, that would not endure the reprehenſion of any preſent: Iunius. But that letters ſhould be ſent from Eliah out of heaven, or paradiſe, is an idle conceit, as was that of the Epheſians, of the image of Diana, which they ſuppoſed came downe from Iuppiter. There was never any writing ſent from heaven, but the Decalogue graven by the finger of God in the tables of ſtone.

Of the epiſtle brought from Elias after his aſſumption, whence it was.

1 King. 13.2. Iſay 45.1.

Acts 19.35.

The Proteſtants.

Likeas the Phariſies deceived the Iewes with vaine expectation of Elias, and ſo hindred their beliefe in Chriſt: ſo the Papiſts would not have men to acknowledge the manifeſtation of Antichriſt, under this falſe pretence, that Henoch and Elias muſt firſt come before Antichriſt be revealed, which we doe hold as a Iewiſh fable and Popiſh dreame.

Argum. 1. This prophecie of Elias comming is properly fulfilled in Iohn Baptiſt, and therefore we are not to looke for any other accompliſhment thereof: neither now is there any Paradiſe remaining but heaven, 2. Cor. 12.4. And to affirme that Henoch and Elias went up to heaven in their bodies, before the aſcenſion of Chriſt, out of Scripture it cannot be prooved: it is evident that they were taken up alive into heaven,[a] but not that they continued alive.

That there is no paradiſe now but heaven, Ambroſe ſpeaketh evidently: Hic non vera, non magna ſalus eſt; tunc ſaluus ero, cum fuero in paradiſo, cum viuere cœpero inter electos Angelos: Here is no great nor true health; then I ſhall be ſafe, when I ſhall be in Paradiſe, when I ſhall live among the elect Angels, Serm. 15. in Pſal. 119. Againe, In paradiſum cœleſtem raptus eſt Apoſtolus, in quo latroni dixit dominus, &c. illic ubi & eſſe dicitur avita Ieruſalem mater noſtra. The Apoſtle was taken up into the celeſtiall Paradiſe, where the Lord ſaid to the theefe, &c. where Ieruſalem is ſaid to be the mother of us all, in 2. Cor. 12.

But into this celeſtiall paradiſe which is in the higheſt heaven Henoch and Elias aſcended not with their bodies: Chriſt was the firſt, that in his fleſh pierced the heavens, and aſcended in his whole humanitie. Origen herein is moſt reſolute: Offendatur, qui vult ex ſermone noſtro, ego cum omni fiducia aſſevero, quia ſicut ex mortuis primogenitus Chriſtus, ita primus carnem evexit in cœlum: Let him be offended that will with my ſpeech, I ſpeake it boldly, that as Chriſt was the firſt begotten of the dead, ſo he firſt carried his fleſh vp into heauen: ex apolog. Pamphil.

Argum. 2. The variety of opinions concerning the perſonall appearance of Henoch and Elias, declare that it is an vncertaine thing, and but deuiſed of men. Hilary ſaith, they ſhall be Moſes and Elias: Chryſoſtome granteth that Elias ſhall come, but not Henoch. Iuſtine thinketh that not onely Henoch and Elias are aliue, but all thoſe, whoſe bodies roſe at the Reſurrection of Chriſt. Hippolytus is of opinion, that Iohn the Diuine ſhall come with them, and ſome ſay Ieremy alſo, whoſe death is not read of, Fulk. Apocal. 11. ſect. 4. And thus it is no marueile, if men runne mad as it were in their fooliſh conceits, hauing no warrant for their opinions out of Scriptures.

The nation of the Iewes we grant, according to the manifeſt prophecy of S. Paul, ſhall in the end be conuerted: but not in ſuch ſort, by the perſonall preaching of Moſes and Elias: for the Apoſtle ſetting downe at large the myſtery of their calling, would not haue left out ſo neceſſary a thing.

Rom. 11.

Auguſtine by the two witneſſes, vnderſtandeth the two Teſtaments, the Old and the New. But he denyeth vtterly, that any ſhall riſe before the comming of Chriſt: as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. 15. 23. The firſt fruits is Chriſt. Then they that are Chriſts at his comming, but not before. Vnde (ſaith he) excluditur omnis ſuſpicio quorundam, qui putant hos duos teſtes duos viros eſſe, & ante aduentum Chriſti cœlum in nubibus aſcendiſſe: Their ſuſpition therefore, or opinion is vtterly excluded, which thinke theſe two witneſſes to be two men, which ſhould aſcend into heauen before the comming of Chriſt. Auguſtine we ſee is flat againſt them.

In Apoc homil. 8.

Saint Cyprian alſo ſaith: Nobis in ſpiritu & virtute Eliæ non alium quam Ioannem ſolum angelus & dominus Chriſtus inſinuat: The Angell and our Lord Chriſt inſinuate, that we ſhall haue no other in the ſpirit and power of Elias, but Iohn: de ſingular. Clericor. Therefore no other Elias was to come, but Iohn.

Ianſenius a popiſh Biſhop thus expoundeth that place: Eccleſiaſt. 48. 10. of Helias, That hee is appointed to reproue in his time, &c. That Eccleſiaſticus did write according to the opinion receiued in his time, that Elias ſhould come in his owne perſon before the Meſſiah, which was to be fulfilled, not in his proper perſon, but in him that ſhould come in the perſon and power of Elias, &c. This popiſh writer is a very good witneſſe againſt them.

Now in the laſt place, in this ſo difficult a queſtion, to what place Henoch and Elias were taken vp, and whether they yet remaine aliue in their bodies, what moſt probably may be held, I will briefely declare: firſt ſetting downe the diuers opinions which are embraced and receiued among Chriſtians concerning this matter: which are principally foure. 1. The common opinion of the Romaniſts is (as we haue ſeene before) that Henoch and Elias are kept aliue in Paradiſe, and ſhall returne in the end of the world, to preach againſt Antichriſt, and ſhall be ſlaine by him: which opinion is very improbable: 1. becauſe the terreſtriall Paradiſe was long ſince diſſolued in Noahs flood, if not before: and how could Henoch remaine there, who was tranſlated before the flood, ſeeing the waters exceeded the higheſt mountaines fifteene cubites, Gen. 7. 20. 2. How is it like, that their bodies being indued with a kind of immortality, ſhould returne into the world to dye againe. 3. The Helias that was to come, is expounded by our Sauiour to be Iohn Baptiſt, as is ſhewed before. 4. Indeed ſome of the Fathers in ſome of theſe points doe concurre with them, or rather goe before them: as Tertullian thus directly ſaith of Elias: Non ex deceſſione vitæ, ſed ex tranſlatione venturus eſt, nec corpori reſtituendus, ex quo non exemptus, ſed mundo reddendus, de quo eſt tranſlatus: He is to come not from being departed, but tranſlated from this life, not to be reſtored to his body, from the which he was not exempted, but to bee rendred to the world, from the which he was tranſlated, &c. yea he thinketh they ſhall dye: Nec mors eorum reperta, dilata ſcilicet: cæterum morituri reſeruantur vt Antichriſtum ſanguine ſuo extinguant: Neither is their death found regiſtred, but deferred: they are reſerued to dye, to extinguiſh Antichriſt by their blood, &c. But to theſe and the like teſtimonies this anſwer may be made. 1. That in the Fathers time Antichriſt was not reuealed: and therefore in that obſcure prophecy they might be miſtaken: as Ierome ſaith well: Semper obſcura eſt prophetia, quia alio tempore canitur, alio cernitur: A prophecie is alwayes obſcure, as being ſaid in one time, and ſeene in another. 2. They were deceiued in following the tranſlation of the Septuagint, who, Malach. 4. for Eliah the Prophet, reade Elia the Thesbite: and ſo Tertullian readeth in the place firſt alleaged. 3. Tertullian ſeemeth to contradict himſelfe: for in one place hee calleth Henoch and Elias candidati æternitatis, deſigned or elected to eternity. And againe elſewhere: Hominem tollere ad cœlum creatoris, exemplum eſt in Helia: To take vp man into the Creators heauen, an example we haue in Eliah. If Eliah be in heauen, and admitted to eternity, how can he be againe ſubiect to death? 5. So then, this opinion, to thinke that Eliah was onely hoyſed as it were vp in the ayre, vt portaretur in locum diſtantem, to be carried and let downe againe in ſome place farre diſtant; as Lyranus ſaith Abacuck was tranſported out of Chaldea into Iudea: is like to the conceit of the children of the Prophets, that the ſpirit had taken vp Eliah, and caſt him downe in ſome mountaine or valley: but Eliſha approued not that their imagination.

2. Another opinion is, that Eliah was taken vp into heauen in his body into the very place and ſeate of the bleſſed: of the which iudgement Ierome reporteth one Theodorus Heracleotes to haue beene: that Henoch and Eliah, ita vt erant in corporib. de terrena conuerſatione ad cæleſtia regna tranſlati ſlati ſunt: as they were in their bodies, were tranſlated from a terrene converſation, to the celeſtiall kingdomes: and to this opinion ſome of our new writers incline: but many reaſons make againſt it, 1. Our bleſſed Saviour ſaith, No man aſcendeth up to heaven, but he that hath deſcended from heaven, the Sonne of man that is in heaven: Chriſt then onely is yet aſcended. 2. The Apoſtle having made mention of Henoch among other faithfull, thus concludeth of them all; All theſe through faith obtained good report, and received not the promiſe, God providing a better thing for us, that they without us ſhould not bee perfect: Before Chriſt then none attained to perfect happineſſe in body and ſoule. 3. But the chiefeſt reaſon is taken from Chriſts prerogative: he was the firſt that entred into heaven in his whole humanity, and clothed our fleſh with immortality: as S. Paul ſaith, he was made the firſt fruits of them that ſleepe. But becauſe it will bee anſwered, that Chriſt was the firſt fruits of thoſe which roſe from death to life, but Henoch and Elias dyed not: let it be further conſidered, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally, of life to immortality: as in Adam all dye, euen ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made aliue: and then it followeth, euery man in his owne order, the firſt fruits is Chriſt, afterward, they which are of Chriſt at his comming: Chriſt then was the firſt in order of all Adams ſonnes, that liued to immortality. 4. This is the received opinion of divers Fathers, that Chriſt was the firſt, that carried up any fleſh to heaven, and clothed it with immortality: as Iuſtinus Martyr thinketh, that Chriſt onely is riſen to immortall life. Tertullian ſaith, A nobis arrhabonem carnis accepit, & venit in cœlum pignus totius formæ illuc quandoque redigendæ: ſecuræ eſtote caro & ſanguis, vſurpaſtis & cœlum & regnum Dei in Chriſto: Chriſt hath received of vs the token of the fleſh, and carried into heaven the pledge of the whole kind, which one day ſhall be brought thither: be ſecure O fleſh and blood, you poſſeſſe heaven and the kingdome of God in Chriſt, &c. And againe, he ſaith, Aſcenſum illum exinde complanatum veſtigijs Domini, & introitum exinde reſeratum viribus Chriſti: The aſcenſion into heaven, ſince then (when Chriſt aſcended) is made plaine, and as it were paved by the footſteps of our Lord, and entrance opened and vnlocked by the power of Chriſt, &c. That way then was not plained nor opened but by the footſteps of Chriſt. So Damaſcene ſaith, that Chriſt was the firſt fruits of the reſurrection, incorruption, and impaſſibility: not onely of the reſurrection, but of all immortality, and exemption and freedome from corruption: he then was the firſt in whom humane fleſh was made incorruptible.

3. Some thinke that Henoch and Elias are yet alive in their bodies, in ſome place of reſt, but not yet endowed with perfect immortality till the reſurrection of Chriſt, when they ſhall be changed according to that ſaying of the Apoſtle, we ſhall be changed: To this purpoſe Iuſtin Martyr: Vatablus hath a conceit not much vnlike, who thinketh, that Elias was taken up in body, not to Paradiſe, which was not yet opened, but into ſome place of reſt: namely, Abrahams boſome, which he would have placed rather in the ayre, then upon the earth: Peter Martyr alſo thinketh, that Henoch and Helias were carried to Abrahams boſome, where the Fathers expected the reſurrection of Chriſt: Vt poſtea cum illo reſuſcitato ſupra cælos attollerentur: That together with him being raiſed up, they ſhould be lifted up above the heavens, &c. and hee defineth Abrahams boſome to be a certaine receptacle of ſoules. In quo eis tranquillitas in conſpectu Dei conceditur; wherein they enioyed tranquillity in the ſight of God. In this opinion there is nothing improbable: ſaving that it is not like, if Henoch and Elias be yet in their bodies, that they ſhould remaine in the ayre. For Chryſoſtomes reaſon: becauſe ibi Satanæ habetur ſedes, There is the ſeate of Satan, who is called the prince of the ayre, not of the Saints.

4. The fourth opinion is, that Elias was taken up in his body into the ayre, which is called heaven in Scripture, and that there his body was reſolved into the elements: thus David Kimhi among the Hebrewes: and of the ſame mind ſeemeth Oecolampadius to have beene: and Borhaius, who thinketh that both Henoch and Elias dyed, becauſe of thoſe words of the Apoſtle, that death went over all men: And whereas it is ſaid, that Henoch was taken away, that he ſhould not ſee death: hee thinketh it to bee underſtood of his ſoule, not of his body, as where it is ſaid; hee that keepeth my word, ſhall never ſee death: But theſe reaſons conclude not. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, all ſhall not die, but all ſhall be changed: which is yet a kinde of death: as Henoch and Elias were changed. 2. Though that phraſe to ſee death, be ſometime underſtood of the ſpirituall death, yet it is alſo applyed to the temporall; as Simeon had a revelation, that he ſhould not ſee death, before he had ſeene the Lord Chriſt: and the reſt of the Patriarkes were priviledged as well as Henoch, not to ſee any ſuch death; but the Apoſtle noteth in ſo ſpeaking ſome ſpeciall priviledge that Henoch had more then the reſt, in being tranſlated not to ſee death. Maſter Calvin alſo ſeemeth to encline to this opinion: Nec dubitamus, quin exuendi ſint mortali & corruptibili carne, &c. Neither doe we doubt but that they ſhall put off their mortall and corruptible fleſh, to be renewed together with the reſt of the members of Chriſt unto bleſſed immortalitie.

Comment. in Heb. 11. v. 5.

Now I will briefly ſhew what I thinke of theſe ſeverall opinions: in the which I find ſome things very improbable, ſome things probable and yet uncertaine, ſome things certainely true, and not to be doubted of: of the firſt ſort are theſe points: in the firſt opinion. 1. That Henoch and Elias are kept in the terreſtriall paradiſe, becauſe it was long ſince diſſolved. 2. That they ſhall returne in the end of the world: for of Henochs returne there is no Scripture, and that concerning Helias returne was fulfilled in Iohn Baptiſt. 3. That they ſhall be killed by Antichriſt, or if they be in their bodies, by them downe againe: for the Scripture ſaith, that Henoch was tranſlated not to ſee death. 4. In the ſecond opinion, that they were taken vp in their bodies into the higheſt heauens, ſeeing the Scripture maketh Chriſt the firſt that was made aliue to immortality, 1 *Cor.*15.23. Gregentius reſolueth well, There is none bearing fleſhly clothing (Chriſt onely excepted) all are ſpirits there. 5. As improbable is it, that this place whither they are tranſlated ſhould bee in the ayre for the reaſon before alleaged. Of the next ſort are theſe points. 1. It is probable, that Elias may yet remaine aliue in his body, becauſe he was taken vp in his body. 2. That he went not to the higheſt heauens, but to Abrahams boſome, where the Fathers expected Chriſts comming: not that there is any happines out of heauen: but in heaven are many manſions, and diverſe degrees of glory. 3, Yet to what place their bodies were removed, remaineth undetermined. 4. I leaue it alſo as probable and diſputable, whether Elias body were diſolued, there is no Scripture for it, nor yet againſt it. Of the third ſort are theſe points. 1. That Henoch and Elias were priviledged not to ſee the common and ordinary death, but living in their bodies, were tranſlated. 2. And if they be ſtill in their bodies, yet it is certaine, they have not their full and perfect glory of immortality, till the comming of Chriſt: 1 *Cor.*15.21. and then all ſhall be changed, as Iuſtine Martyr alleageth out of the Apoſtle, in the third opinion before rehearſed; and they alſo among the reſt of the Saints ſhall appeare at Chriſts comming: And ſo I reſolve with Chryſoſtome in this matter, nos in eis contineamus, quæ Scripturæ tradunt: Let vs containe our ſelves in thoſe things which the Scriptures deliver. Now if any man further enquire which of the former opinions ſeeme to me more probable, though in ſo obſcure a matter I dare not certainely determine: yet I would encline to thinke with Peter Martyr, that Henoch and Elias as they were taken up, ſo remained in their bodies; But that foure ſpeciall reaſons doe move mee otherwiſe to thinke: 1. Becauſe there can be no cauſe rendred, why theſe two Henoch and Elias ſhould be priviledged to be glorified in their bodies, more then all the other holy Patriarkes, Prophets, Apoſtles: as Adam, Noah, Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob, Moſes, Eliſha, Paul, Peter, the bleſſed Virgin Mary, with the reſt who were not inferiour in holineſſe unto them. 2. There can be no end ſhewed of this glorified ſtate: the onely reaſon why they were taken up, was to be a type and figure of Chriſts aſſenſion, and of the immortality of our bodies, which ſhall be taken up into the ayre, and meet Chriſt at his comming, and ſo there remaine with him, as S. Paul ſheweth, 1 *Theſ.*4. But to demonſtrate this, the taking up alive in their bodies out of the world, & out of the ſight of men was ſufficient though they remaine not in their bodies: for theſe types ſerve for the inſtruction of mortall men in earth, not for the confirmation of the bleſſed Spirits in heaven, which need it not. 3. But a greater reaſon yet moveth me, that the place cannot be aſſigned, whither their bodies ſhould be tranſlated. In the region of the ayre they are not, that is the ſeat rather of evill ſpirits: not in the ſtarrie skye, which continually with a rapt motion is whirled about: and to what end ſhould the bodies of Henoch and Elias bee there alone: and to the higheſt heavens they were not taken up, for this prerogative muſt be reſerved for Chriſt to be the firſt, who in his whole humanity aſcended into heaven, as Doctor Fulke reſolveth: which is no new opinion: For Origen, as Pamphilus reporteth him, thus evidently writeth: De Elia ſcriptum eſt, &c. It is written of Elias, that he was taken vp as it were into heauen: of Henoch, that he was tranſlated, non tamen dictum eſt, quia aſcendit in cœlum: yet it is not ſaid that he aſcended into heaven, &c. and then followeth that ſentence recited before, Be he offended that liſt, I ſpeake confidently, that Chriſt was the firſt that carried fleſh into heaven: and then he addeth further, Denique novitate ipſa perterrentur cœleſtes virtutes, &c. The celeſtiall powers were aſtoniſhed at this novelty, for that which they never ſaw before: Nunc tandem carnem videbant aſcendiſſe in cœlum, Now they ſee (our) fleſh aſcending into heaven. 4. The fourth ſcruple that ſtayeth me is, for that no body beſide Chriſts is yet perfectly glorified, as the Apoſtle evidently ſheweth that Chriſt is the firſt, & then every one in his order at his comming, 1 *Cor.*15.23. So that Chriſt onely is yet glorified in his fleſh: as a reformed Church thus confeſſeth: which glory, honour and prerogative he alone (ſay they) amongſt the brethren ſhall poſſeſſe, till all his enemies be made his footſtoole: though Peter Martyr thinke that Henoch and Elias, Comitati ſunt in cœlum (Chriſtum) vna cum cæteris, did accompany Chriſt with the reſt of the fathers into heaven at his aſcenſion: But of this I dare not without Scripture reſolve any thing: onely this I hold to bee certaine, that if they are yet in their bodies, they haue not received their perfect glory, till the reſurrection. On the other ſide alſo, that Elias yet retaineth his fleſh there be ſome ſtrong objections: as 1. becauſe the Scripture plainly ſaith, that Elias went up by a whirlewind into heaven: which if it appeared ſo to be and was not, it ſhould ſeeme to giue way to the opinion of the Manichees, who made ſuch workes phantaſticall and in ſhew onely, as Auguſtine ſaith to Fauſtus, Illud de Helia vos negatis, quia omnia ſimulatis: you deny that of Helias, becauſe you feigne all things. 2. Becauſe it is euident in the Goſpell that Helias appeared vnto our bleſſed Sauiour in mount Tabor in his owne body: as Tertullian ſaith, that Moſes and Elias were ſeene, alter in imagine carnis nondum receptæ, alter in veritate carnis nondum defunctæ: the one in the image of his fleſh not yet received, the other in the truenes of his fleſh which yet had not died. But it ſeemeth to me, that theſe doubts may bee thus ſatiſfied. 1. The aſſumption and taking up of Elias in his body was in truth and indeed not in ſhew onely and appearance, which was the fanſie of the Manichees: his true body was taken up, not a likeneſſe only and ſhew of it: but what became of his body after it was taken out of ſight, that is the queſtion. 2. Tertullian is of that mind, that Helias had his true fleſh and not

Moſes, becauſe he thought that Helias ſhould returne againe into the world: As thus he ſaith of theſe two great Prophets in an other place: Alter informator populi aliquando, alter reformator quandoque: alter initiator veteris teſtamenti, alter conſummator noui: the one an informer of the people ſometimes, the other the reformer one day: the one the beginner of the old Teſtament, the other the finiſher of the new, &c. But ſeeing Moſes and Helias appeared both in the ſame manner, and at the ſame time, and were alike diſcerned of Peter; why ſhould it be thought that the one had his owne body, rather than the other? Concerning Moſes, the Scripture is euident that the Lord buried him; and this body, wherein he now appeared, was framed by the diuine power, as the bodies were wherein the Angels ſometimes were ſeene: as Gregentius excellently reſolveth: that God did faſhion unto Moſes ſoule, a body by his owne power, and ſo preſented it in mount Tabor, and by his right hand laid it downe againe, the like body by the power of God might be framed for Helias: But though I have ſhewed what is moſt probable concerning Helias fleſh, yet I will not reſolve upon either part as certaine, leaving every one to his beſt iudgement herein, alwayes provided, that the honour of Chriſts prerogative be preſerved, and the truth of Scripture without contradiction conſerved: and ſo I conclude here with Auguſtine: Quid de Helia factum ſcit neſcimus, hoc de illo tamen credimus, quod verax ſcriptura teſtatur: what is become of Helias we know not, yet we beleeve that of him, which the true Scripture teſtifieth.

THe moſt grievous perſecution (ſay they) that ever was, ſhall be vnder Antichriſt, who is not yet come, but ſhall be revealed toward the end of the world, and ſhall raigne vpon the earth three yeeres and an halfe, making great havocke of the Church of God, Bellarm. de Rom. pontif. lib. 3. c. 7.

Argum. Matth. 24. 21. There ſhall be then ſuch great tribulation in the world, as was not ſince the beginning of the world, neither ſhall be: Ergo, the greateſt perſecution toward the end of the world.

Matth. 24. 21.

Anſw. Firſt, it is plaine by the text, that this great tribulation is prophesied to come vpon the Iewes: for in the next verſe before he ſaith, pray that your flight be not in the winter: And then it followeth, there ſhall be then, or as Marke ſaith, In thoſe dayes there ſhall be ſuch tribulation, 13. 19. and in the 17. verſ: Woe ſhall be to them that giue ſucke in thoſe dayes: which muſt needs be underſtood of the deſtruction of Ieruſalem: for at the comming of Chriſt, there ſhall be one and the ſame caſe of all, whether of thoſe that give ſucke, or of thoſe that give none.

Secondly, it cannot be meant of the laſt tribulation in the world, becauſe the words are, that as there was none ſuch ſince the beginning of the world; ſo there ſhall be none ſuch after: Ergo, there ſhall be tribulation after, though none ſuch.

The Proteſtants.

OVr hope and truſt is, that the greateſt perſecution of the Church of God is overpaſt: becauſe the kingdome or rather tyranny of Antichriſt beginneth to decay, and we truſt ſhall more and more be ſhaken, till it come to vtter ruine.

Argum. 1. The Scripture telleth vs, that hard upon the end of the world there ſhall be great ſecurity, men ſhall ſay, Peace peace unto themſelves, 1 Theſſ. 5. 4. they ſhall eate and drinke, marry and be married, as it was in the dayes of Noah, Matth. 24. 38. And therefore Luke ſaith, 21. 34. Take heed you be not overcome of ſurfeiting and drunkenneſſe, leſt this day come upon you unawarres. For as a ſnare ſhall it come, &c. All this proveth, that there ſhall be rather generall ſecurity, as in the dayes of Noah, than generall tribulation. And there is greater danger of ſurfetting and wantonneſſe in time of proſperity and abundance, than in the dayes of perſecution.

1 Theſſ. 5. 4. Matth. 24. 38. Luke 21. 34.

And the text is plaine ſpeaking of warres, troubles and perſecutions, but the end ſhall not be yet, Mark. 13. 7. Wherefore it appeareth, that the troubles and perſecutions of the Church, ſhall be well ſlaked toward the end of the world.

Mark. 13. 7.

Argum. 2. Antichriſt, though he ſhall not vtterly be extinguiſhed before the comming of Chriſt, yet ſhall he be deadly wounded: and he ſhall begin to be iudged even in this world, Apoc. 16. 6. God ſhall giue them blood to drinke, Apoc. 17. 16. The tenne hornes, that is the kings of the earth, ſhall hate the whore and eate her fleſh. The Church of God ſhall reward her, as ſhe hath rewarded vs, and giue her double according to her workes, Apoc. 18. 6. By theſe places it is gathered, that Antichriſt ſhall have a great ouerthrow before the comming of Chriſt, who ſhall vtterly aboliſh him with the brightneſſe of his comming, 2 Theſſ. 2. 8.

Reuel. 16. 6. c. 17. 16. c. 18. 6.

2 Theſſ. 2. 8.

Antichriſt is already come, and hath raged a long time againſt the Church: The perſecutions of the heathen did neither continue ſo long, neither were in exquiſite cruelty and bitterneſſe to be compared to the outragious practiſes of the Antichriſt of Rome, and his adherents againſt the Church of God: which would fill a whole volume by themſelves, nay not one, but many and infinite volumes to be declared at large.

But Bellarmine here telleth us. 1. That the perſecution which we ſay the Biſhop of Rome hath raiſed againſt the Proteſtants, is nothing like to the perſecution of the heathen Romane Emperours againſt the Chriſtians, neither for number of martyrs, nor for diverſitie of moſt exquiſite torments.

2. 2. He is not aſhamed to ſay, that the Proteſtants have put more Papiſts to death in few yeeres, than they have killed Proteſtants.

3. 3. The perſecution of Antichriſt ſhall be notorious and manifeſt to all the world: as the perſecution of Nero, and Domitian were, we can tell when thoſe perſecutions began, and when they ended: but they cannot tell when the Pope began to perſecute, &c. Therefore his perſecution is not that, which Antichriſt ſhall raiſe.

4. 4. Antichriſt ſhall aboliſh the daily ſacrifice, and all worſhip of God, in the time of his perſecution: but ſo doth not the Pope. Bellarm. de Roman. pontif. lib. 3. cap. 7.

Anſw. 1. The number of Martyrs ſlaine by the tyranny of the Pope is no whit inferiour to the number of the ancient Martyrs if the time and place be conſidered: the heathen Emperours tyrannized for the ſpace of three hundred yeeres, and over the moſt part of the world which was under the Romane Empire: the Romiſh Popes have not practiſed their outragious crueltie ſo long, neither I truſt ever ſhall, neither is his popiſh juriſdiction any thing ſo large, as the Romane Empire was: theſe two things conſidered, our late bleſſed Martyrs, may compare in number, with thoſe of former time if they goe not beyond them.

For proofe heereof, I will produce three examples: the firſt of the perſecution of Calabria under Pope Pius 4. anno 1560. where in one towne 88. men had their throats cut, like calves and ſheepe, and an 100. women were decreed to be put to death: and 1600. more were apprehended and condemned: this Maſter Fox reporteth out of a certaine letter written by a Romaniſt to a friend he had in Rome. p. 942.

The ſecond example is of the perſecution of Merindol and Cabriers in France under King Francis: where eight townes in the country of Provence with the Inhabitants thereof, were utterly deſtroyed by mercileſſe Minerius: 500. women of Merindol were ſome raviſhed, ſome whipped and ſcourged, ſome ſold like cattell, ſome murthered: and at the ſame time a 1000. perſons of men, women, and children were put to death in Cabriers, Fox. p.953. ex Henrico, Pantal.

My third example is of the late maſſaere in France, anno 1572. when and where in Paris in three dayes, were ten thouſand Proteſtants cruelly murthered: in Lyons, Orſeance, Tholouſe, Roane in the ſpace of one moneth thirty thouſand moſt butcherly ſlaine. *Fox.p.*2153. Can any man now find any difference in number of holy Martyrs betweene theſe and the firſt perſecution? I thinke verily that the horrible outrages of cruell Popes and Papiſts, have exceeded the crueltie of the perſecuting Emperours.

Concerning the divers and exquiſite torments, whether the Papiſts have beene behind, I report me to the foreſaid recited ſtories: as in Calabria, where 88. had their throats cut by one executioner in one day: a Romaniſt deteſting the crueltie of the fact, thus writeth thereof: *I tremble and ſhake to remember how the executioner held his bloody knife betweene his teeth, with the bloody muffler in his hand, and his armes all in goare blood up to the elbowes, going to the fold, and taking every one of them, one after another by the hand, and ſo diſpatching them all, none otherwiſe than doth a butcher kill his calves and ſheepe, Fox. p.*642. What greater cruelty could Nero or Domitian have ſhewed?

In the ſacking of the towne of Calabria: they forced divers women to go into a barne full of ſtraw, and ſo ſet fire upon the houſe: the women that aſſayed to eſcape by the doore, which a ſouldier opened in compaſſion toward them, the tyrant Minerius commanded to bee hewen in peeces, opening the bellies of the women great with child, that the infants fell out, p. 952. O cruelty, and horrible butchery vnſpeakeable! Lord, thou haſt ſeene this wickedneſſe in the earth, and wilt iudge it in thy time.

At Lyons in the time of the Maſſacre all the priſons being filled full of Proteſtants, when the ſouldiers and butchers refuſed to bee inſtruments of ſo great villany, the cruell governour procured the beaſtly kennell-rakers and ſweepers of the ſtreets to goe into the priſons and hewe in peeces the ſilly innocent ſoules, that the ſtreetes from the priſons ſtreamed with bloud. ex hiſtor. maſſac.

I thinke more fearefull preſidents of beaſtly and inhumane cruelty cannot be ſhewed under thoſe barbarous tyrants of Rome.

2. Secondly, it is a moſt ſhameleſſe lye, that the Proteſtants haue put more to death, &c. I will give an inſtance of this realme of England, where in the ſpace of three yeares, in the late dayes of perſecution one bloudy butcher ſlaughtered twice ſo many innocent Proteſtants for the truth, as there have beene excuted Papiſts now theſe 50. yeares and more for treaſon: the Papiſts which have dyed by the ſword of Proteſtants, were either overcome in iuſt battell, or elſe condemned by iuſt lawes, not for their religion, but their rebellion, not for their profeſſion, but their practiſing againſt Princes.

Boner in three yeeres ſpace put 200. Martyrs to death. *Fox.p.*2043.

3. Thirdly, it is no hard matter for us to aſſigne the time when the Pope began his cruell rage, and Antichriſtian perſecution againſt the Church of Chriſt: for anno 1400. under the reigne of Henry the fourth wee find William Sawtre to have beene the firſt that was burned here in England for the faith of the Goſpell: and at that time Boniface the ſecond was Pope. *Fox pag.*518. And anno 1414. followed the condemnation of Iohn Hus in the Councell of Conſtance, pag. 624. So that it is now 200. yeare ſince the Antichriſt of Rome began his open perſecution: his malice againſt the ſeruants of Chriſt did ſhew it ſelfe long before; but about that time his tyranny was manifeſted to the world, and euer ſince hath encreaſed.

Fourthly, Antichriſt ſhall not prohibite all diuine worſhip, but all true ſeruice and worſhip of God: 4.
that like as Antiochus in his time, and afterward the Romanes cauſed the daily ſacrifice to ceaſe, and brought into the Temple the abomination of deſolation, Matth. 24. 15. that is, their prophane and idola- Matth. 20. 15.
trous ſacrifices: ſo hath the Antichriſt of Rome expelled the true ſpirituall ſeruice of God, and erected a new kind of idolatry, ſetting vp the abomination of deſolation, the blaſphemous Idoll of the Maſſe.

Thus then notwithſtanding, Bellarmines ſilly ſhiftes, wherewith as with figge leaues he would hide the filthy nakedneſſe of his holy Father, it is euident, that the greateſt perſecutions againſt Chriſts Church haue beene raiſed by that Antichriſt of Rome, which we truſt are well neere at an end, and that the Lord will giue a breathing time to his Church after the reuelation of Antichriſt: 1. This is the iudgement of ſome of their owne writers: as Lyra vpon theſe wordes of the Apoſtle, 2 Tim. 4. 9. They ſhall preuaile no longer, for their madneſſe ſhall be euident to all men: Potiſſimum implendum eſt Antichriſti tempore: cum retecta eius fallacia finaliter ad Chriſtum conuertentur: This ſhall be chiefly fulfilled in the time of Antichriſt, when as his falſehood being detected, all ſhall be conuerted to Chriſt.

And Eſpençaus ſpeaking of thoſe times after the reuelation of Antichriſt ſaith: O tempora tunc ad ſalutem facilia, felices quos tum naſci contigerit! O times eaſie to obtaine ſaluation in, and O happy men, that ſhall be then borne, in 2. ad Timoth. p. 79. liter. c.

2. Auguſtine ſaith, Prima perſecutio violenta fuit cum tormentis— altera fraudulenta eſt— per hereticas, tertia ſupereſt per Antichriſtum ventura, qua nihil eſt periculoſius, quia & violenta & fraudulenta erit: The firſt perſecution of the Church was violent with torments: the ſecond was by fraudulent heretikes: the third ſhall be vnder Antichriſt, the worſt of all, it ſhall be both violent and fraudulent, in Pſa. 9. This perſecution vnder the Popes of Rome, the Church of God endured a great while: who both dealt fraudulently, in poyſoning them with corrupt doctrine; and cruelly alſo, in puniſhing with ſword and fire the innocent members of Chriſt: wherefore ſeeing it is a plaine caſe, that Antichriſt is, and hath beene many a day reuealed to the world, and that the Church of God beginneth to haue ſome reſpite and liberty from his thraldome; we doubt not, but that the greateſt ſtormes of perſecution are ouerpaſt, if by our ſinnes we bring not backe againe the thicke and miſty cloud vpon vs.

3. True it is, that many of the Fathers doe ſpeake of great perſecutions toward the end of the world: but this their opinion was grounded vpon that other conceit of theirs; that Antichriſt ſhould rage three yeeres and an halfe before the comming of Chriſt: as Tertullian ſaith: Qui in finibus ſe- Lib. de Reſur-culi ſub vltima ira per Antichriſti vim exceſſerint, &c. Which in the end of the world vnder the laſt rect. p. 63.
wrath went out of the world by the violence of Antichriſt, &c. So Auguſtine thinketh, that theſe things ſhall fall out in order before in the end of the world: Heliam Theſbitem, fidem Iudaeorum, Lib. 10. de ciuitat. Dei.
Antichriſtum perſecuturum, Chriſtum iudicaturum: Helias the Theſbite, the faith of the Iewes, An- cap. 30. tichriſt ſhall perſecute, Chriſt ſhall iudge, &c. So Iuſtine Martyr, that toward the comming of Chriſt, Dial. cum that man of ſinne ſhall practiſe many things againſt Chriſtians: But he thinketh withall, that Anti- Tryphon.
chriſt was then at the doores: and all the ſpace from the Apoſtles, he calleth the latter time, and think- ἐπὶ θύραις ὄντα.
eth that they were then in the ſixth thouſandth yeere. Theſe teſtimonies doe make rather for vs, than Queſt. Orthodox. 71.
againſt vs: for all the Fathers concurre herein that the great perſecution of the world ſhall be vnder Antichriſt, who hath beene many yeeres reuealed to the world, and therefore this perſecution hath beene begun long ſince, and we truſt is toward an end.

the comming of Chriſt to iudgement, yet we profeſſe with the ſame reformed Church, as it followeth in their confeſſion: We condemne the Iewiſh dreames, that before the day of iudgement there ſhall be a golden world in the earth, and that the godly ſhall poſſeſſe the kingdomes of the world, their enemies being trod vnder foote, &c.

The ſecond part of this controuerſie, about the manner of Chriſts comming to iudgement.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. 1. TRue it is, that the Saints ſhall iudge the world, 1 Corinth. 6. 2. But onely Chriſt ſhall giue ſentence, Mat. 25. and is properly and onely the iudge of the world: for Matth. 25. 34. the Father hath committed all iudgement to the Son, Ioh. 5. 22. If all, then there is no part left for any other. The Apoſtles therfore and Saints are ſaid to iudge, as Chriſt ſaith of his word, that he will not Iohn 5. 22.

judge the unbeleevers, but his word ſhall iudge them in the laſt day, Ioh. 12. 48. That is, ſhall be a witneſſe againſt them, accuſe them, lay in matter of iudgement againſt them. So the word preached by the Saints upon earth, and practiſed in their lives, ſhall be the condemnation of the world. And not only ſo, but they ſhall be advanced to greater honour: They ſhall ſit in thrones and ſeats: that is, they ſhall not ſtand amongſt the wicked to receive ſentence, but ſhall meete Chriſt in the ayre, and be caught up in the clouds, 1. Theſſ. 4. 17. Yea, they ſhall in the ſight and beholding of the ungodly enter into the kingdome of God, Luk. 13. 28. But in any other ſenſe they cannot be iudges of the world: for ſhall we thinke, that Chriſt in that day ſhall neede under-officers and iudges, as Moſes did? Exod. 18. Auguſtine ſaith, Sancti ſedebunt cum domino attendere, qui fecerunt miſericordiam: The Saints ſhall ſit with the Lord, not to iudge, but to marke and attend, and to witneſſe, who have followed the works of mercy.

In Pſal. 121.

Saint Ambroſe thus teſtifieth: Stantibus angelis ad dextram, vel ſiniſtram domini quomodo ſedebunt homines ad dextram, vel ſiniſtram, &c. erunt ſicut angeli, non plus quam angeli: Seeing the Angels ſtand at the right hand and left of the Lord, how ſhall men ſit at the right hand or left? they ſhall be as the Angels, not more than the Angels, &c. And againe, our Saviour ſaith, Ioh. 17. 24. Pater, quos dediſti mihi, volo ut ubi ego ſum, & illi ſint mecum; ut ſint mecum, non ut ſedeant mecum; ubi ego, non quomodo ego, ut videant claritatem, non ut habeant ſed videant; ſervus enim videt, dominus poſſidet. Father, I will that they, whom thou haſt given me, be with me where I am: that they may be with me, not ſit with me; where I am, not as I am; to ſee my glory, not to have it: for the ſervant ſeeth, the Lord or maſter poſſeſſeth, lib. 5. de fid. c. 3. Here Ambroſe evidently teſtifieth, that the Saints ſhall not ſit with Chriſt to give ſentence and to iudge the world: But he further ſheweth in what ſenſe the Apoſtles are ſaid to ſit in ſeats: firſt, upon theſe words, Epheſ. 2. 6. He hath made us to ſit together in heauenly places with Chriſt: Agnoſco ſcriptum, ſed non ut homines ſedere ad dextram ſibi patiatur deus, ſed ut in Chriſto ſedere quia ipſe eſt eorum fundamentum, caput eccleſiæ, in quo communis ſecundum carnem natura, prærogativam ſedis cæleſtis emeruit, &c. I acknowledge it is ſo written, not that God doth ſuffer men to ſit by him at his right hand, but to ſit as in Chriſt, becauſe he is the foundation of all, and the head of his Church, in whom the common nature of man hath deſerved the prerogative of the heavenly ſeate, lib. 5. de fid. c. 7. Thus one way the Saints are ſaid to ſit in ſeats, that is, not in their owne perſon, but in Chriſt their head.

Iohn 17. 24.

Matth. 19. 28.

Secondly, upon theſe words, Matth. 19. 28. Ye ſhall ſit upon twelve thrones: Non ſedis ſuæ dixit Apoſtolis dari poſſe conſortium ſed alias illas eſſe ſedes duodecim, quas tamen non pro corporali conſeſſu, ſed pro ſucceſſu ſpiritualis gratiæ æſtimare debemus: He ſaid not he would give to his Apoſtles the fellowſhip of his ſeate, but other twelue ſeats, which we muſt eſtimate not according to the corporall ſitting, but after the ſpirituall profiting in grace, lib. 5. de fid. c. 3. By the twelve ſeates he underſtandeth an higher degree of glory, which ſhould be giuen to the Apoſtles.

1 Cor. 6. 2.

Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe thus writeth upon that place, 1 Cor. 6. 2. The Saints ſhall iudge the world: Iudicabunt ſancti hunc mundum, quia exemplo fidei illorum perfidia mundi damnabitur, &c. The Saints ſhall iudge the world, becauſe by example of their faith, the faithleſſe world ſhall be iudged, and ſo he ſaith afterward that the Angels ſhall be iudged. So likewiſe Origen: Omnis vita iuſtorum iudicabit tribus Iſrael, quæ non crediderunt: The whole life of the righteous ſhall iudge the tribes of Iſrael, that beleeued not, tract. 8. in Matth. In any of theſe ſenſes the Saints may be ſaid to iudge the world, but not as iudges to giue ſentence with Chriſt, as we haue ſeene.

Homil. 16. in 1. ad Corinth.

Further, 1. Chryſoſtome thus expoundeth that place of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 6 2. Know ye not, that the Saints ſhall iudge the world: Non ipſi ſedentes & exigentes rationem, abſit, ſed condemnantes: Not themſelues ſitting, and exacting an account, God forbid, but condemning, &c. as Chriſt ſaith of the Niniuites, that they ſhall riſe in iudgement with this generation and condemne it.

In Evang. Ioan. tract. 21.

2. Otherwiſe Chriſt properly ſhall be the only Iudge. Auguſtine: Hominibus in iudicio non apparebit niſi filius, pater occultus erit, &c. None ſhall appeare to men in iudgement but the Sonne, the Father ſhall be hid, the Sonne manifeſt, &c.

Heb. 11. 7.

3. So our Eccleſiaſticall expoſitors, Calvine, Pet. Martyr with others, interpret that place before alleadged, that the Saints ſhall by their godly example, faith, piety, iudge, that is, condemne the world, and leave them without excuſe, as it is ſaid of Noah, that by his faith he condemned the world: yet this phraſe to ſit on twelue ſeates, and to iudge the world, ſheweth the prerogative of the Saints in that day, that Chriſt ſhall honour them in the ſight of all the world, & recepturus tanquam aſſeſſores, and receive them as his aſſiſtants, Caluin, Beza, in Matth. 19. 28.

Homil. 30. in Evangel.
Hom. 11. in Evang.

4. Gregory ſaith: Vnigenitus Dei filius iudex eſt generis humani: The onely begotten Son of God is the iudge of mankind: and concerning the Saints, he ſaith. It ſhall be declared, what euery one hath done: Ibi Petrus cum Iudæa converſa apparebit, ibi Paulus converſum mundum ducens: There Peter ſhall appeare with Iudea converted, and Paul leading the world converted, and Andrew Achaia, &c.

Annot. in 1 Cor. 6. v. 3.

Lyranus ſaith, that the Saints ſhall iudge the world, approbando ſententiam iudicis: by approving the ſentence of the Iudge: and not otherwiſe.

The Papiſts.

2. THey are ſo bold as to appoint the place, where Chriſt ſhall appeare, namely, in the Eaſt: for his comming ſhall be as the lightening that ſhineth from Eaſt to Weſt, Matth. 24.27. Bellarm. de cultu ſanctor. lib. 3. cap. 3. 35. Error. Matth. 24.27.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, by that ſimilitude Chriſt onely ſheweth the ſuddenneſſe of his comming: therefore it muſt be preſt no further, than to that purpoſe for the which it ſerveth. Secondly, our Saviour ſaith plainly, that the kingdome of God commeth not with obſervation, Luke 17.20. either of time, or place. And therefore, when men ſay unto us, Behold heere, or behold there, we ought not to beleeve them, verſ. 23. As though they would point out Chriſts comming with the finger, either in the Eaſt or Weſt. Whereas Matthew therefore nameth the Eaſt and Weſt, in the ſimilitude of the lightening, Luke leaveth them out, ſaying, As the lightening ſhineth from one part of the heaven to the other, chap. 17.24. leſt we ſhould thinke any great matter to be in the nomination of thoſe parts. Luke 17. 20. Luke 17.24.

1. Auguſt. ſaith notably: Non ab Oriente veniet, nec Occidente: quare? quia Deus iudex eſt: ſi in aliquo loco eſſet, non eſſet Deus: quia verò Deus iudex eſt, non homo, noli illum expectare de locis: He will not come, either from the Eaſt, or from the Weſt: why ſo? becauſe God is iudge: if he were tyed to any place, he were not God: but becauſe God is iudge, and not a meere man, we muſt not looke for him from any place, in Pſal. 74.

Origen alſo of this matter thus writeth: Non in aliquo quidem loco apparebit filius dei, cum venerit in gloria ſua, in altero non apparebit, &c. The Son of God ſhall not appeare in one place when he commeth in his glory, and not in another: but as the lightening comming forth of the Eaſt; becauſe it filleth all places, appeareth in the Weſt; ſo when Chriſt commeth in his glory, he ſhall appeare every where, he ſhall be every where in all mens ſight, and they every where in his ſight: tract. 35. in Mat.

2. Chryſoſtome out of that place, Matth. 24.27. thus inferreth: Quomodo fulgur videtur — in momento temporum omnibus apparet, ſic adventus ille ubique ſemper ſplendere ſtatim videbitur: How is the lightning ſeene in a moment of time, it appeareth to all: ſo that comming (of Chriſt) ſhall preſently ſhine in every place, &c. He gathereth from hence only, that the comming of Chriſt ſhall be at once evident to all the world. Homil. 77. in Matth. 24.

3. So our new orthodoxall interpreters, Sicut fulgur conſpicuum, &c. As the lightning is conſpicuous to all the world, ſo &c. Pellican. Oſiander with others.

4. To the ſame purpoſe Lyranus: Though the comming of Chriſt in the fleſh, was hid, yet his comming to iudgement ſhall be manifeſt to all: He cannot finde out that curioſitie of the place, from whence Chriſt ſhall appeare. And that this is the meaning, is yet more evident out of Saint Luke: for he thus reporteth the words of our bleſſed Saviour: As the lightening that lighteneth out of the one (part) under heaven ſhineth unto the other (part) under heaven. He maketh no mention either of the Eaſt or Weſt. Annot. in Matth. 24.27. Luke 17.24.

The Papiſts.

3. THe Sonne of man ſhall appeare in the day of iudgement, with the ſigne of the Croſſe borne before him. Then ſhall the ſigne of the Sonne of man appeare in heaven, Matth. 24.30. that is (ſay they) the ſigne of the Croſſe, Bellarm. de ſanct. lib. 2. cap. 28. Rhemiſt. in hunc locum. 36. Error. Matth. 24.30.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, the ſigne of the Sonne of man in the heavens, is nothing elſe, but his conſpicuous and glorious appearing, who ſhall come in great glory, as a ſigne in the heavens to be ſeene of all the world. It cannot ſignifie any ſuch viſible ſigne as they imagine: for Mar. 13.26. Luk. 21.27. we reade thus: Then ſhall they ſee the Sonne of man. So then, the ſigne of the Sonne of man, is the Son himſelfe in his glorious appearing. And ſo Origen expoundeth: Sicut in diſpenſatione crucis ſole deficiente tenebræ factæ ſunt ſuper omnem terram, ſic & ſigno filij hominis apparente in cœlo deficiet ſolis lumen: Like as in the diſpenſation of the croſſe, the Sunne being eclipſed, darkeneſſe was over the face of all the earth: ſo the ſigne of the Sonne of man appearing, the Sunnes light ſhall faile, Tract. 30 in Mat. It is the glory of the Sonne himſelfe, and not of any other ſigne, which ſhall obſcure the Sunne light. Mark 13.26. Luke 21.27.

Secondly, it is great preſumption, ſo boldly to affirme, that it ſhall be the ſigne of the croſſe, having no Scripture for it. Other ſignes we finde, that Chriſt hath appeared with, as the ſigne of the Raine-bow, Apocal. 10. 1. with a two edged ſword, Apocal. 1. 16. with a booke in his hand, Apocal. 10. 2. We have better reaſon, that Chriſt may appeare with thoſe ſignes, by the which he hath ſometime ſhewed himſelfe, than they have for the ſigne of the croſſe. Revel. 10. 1. cap. 1. 16.

3. It is more like, that Chriſt at his comming ſhould ſhew the markes and prints of the nayles and ſpeare in his body, than the ſigne of the croſſe: for thoſe were felt and ſeene in his body after his reſurrection, ſo was not the other. But it is a bare coniecture, without any ground of Scripture, that the wounds are either now in heaven to be ſeene in the glorious body of Chriſt, or that they ſhall be beheld and looked upon in the day of iudgement. The wicked indeed ſhall behold him, whom they pierced: but it followeth not thereupon that he ſhould appeare as pierced. How is it poſſible, that either the body of Chriſt being perfectly glorified, ſhould ſtill retaine any ſpots or blemiſhes, or that they could bee eſpied in ſo glorious a body, which with the brightneſſe thereof ſhall obſcure the Sunne? Whether the prints of the wounds are yet to be ſeene in Chriſts body.

Eſpencæus (a writer of their owne) ſaith, that whereas ſome aſcribe this ſong to Bernard: Mæror

oſtendit filio pectus & vbera; filius patri latus & vulnera: That in heauen Chriſts mother doth ſhew her ſonne her breaſts and paps; Chriſt ſheweth his father his ſide and wounds, &c. that it is, contemplatio non tam ex ſcripturis, quam picturis deprompta, a contemplation taken not out of Scripture, but out of ſome picture, *de Chriſt. Mediator. c.*8.

1. Auguſtine giueth this iudgement: Sic voluit reſurgere Chriſtus, ſic voluit quibuſdam dubitantibus exhibere in illa carne cicatrices vulneris vt ſanaret vulnus incredulitatis: So it pleaſeth Chriſt to ariſe, and to ſhew in his fleſh vnto ſome that doubted, the skarres of his wounds, to heale and take away the wound of their incredulity or vnbeliefe. And againe he ſaith, Chriſtus cicatrices ſervavit in corpore, vt vulnus dubitationis ſanaret in corde: Chriſt kept the skarres in his body, to heale the wound of doubtfulneſſe in the heart, &c.

[illegible] lib. 4. de fid. orthod. c. 19.

2. Damaſcen ſaith, that Chriſt ſhewed ſome things after his reſurrection, not according to the nature of his body, but by a certaine diſpenſation, to make faith, that the ſame body was riſen that ſuffered, of which ſort were his ſcarres, the meate and drinke which he tooke: then it would follow hereupon, that as Chriſts glorious body now neither taketh meate or drinke; ſo neither doth it retaine thoſe ſcarres and prints of the wounds and nailes. This then being the cauſe why Chriſt ſhewed the prints of his fleſh, to confirme their faith that doubted, that cauſe now ceaſing, it is like alſo the other is diſcontinued: There are other reaſons alleadged by Beda beſide this, of the appearing of the wounds in Chriſts glorified body: as 1. that he may ſhew to his father, praying for vs, what kind of death he ſuffered for vs. 2. Vt redemptis inſinnet, &c. To inſinuate to them which are redeemed his mercy and loue toward them. 3. Vt iam iuſte damnentur impij, &c. To denounce to the wicked, how iuſtly they are condemned, &c. If theſe reaſons had their warrant out of Scripture, they might perſwade much: but being builded vpon bare coniectures, I leaue it as a thing coniecturall: as is alſo that conceit of Auguſtine, that the Martyrs in the reſurrection ſhall retaine in their bodies the marks of the wounds which they receiued for Chriſt, which will be a great glory vnto them. But this being more likely, that the markes of Chriſts wounds are yet to be ſeene, becauſe the Scripture teſtifieth, that he ſhewed them after his reſurrection, and yet it is vncertaine: much leſſe probable is it, that the ſigne of the Croſſe ſhall be carried before Chriſt at his comming.

Beda in Luc. c. 24.

Ex citat. Clictou. annot. in Damaſcen. lib. 4. c. 1.

3. Our Eccleſiaſticall expoſitors doe vnderſtand the ſigne of the Sonne of man, to be the Son of man himſelfe: Cœleſti potentia preditus, quaſi ſigno in ſublime erecto, &c. Being endowed with celeſtiall power, as with a ſigne he ſhall turne the eyes of all the world toward him. Caluin, ſo alſo Peter Martyr vnderſtandeth the Sonne, whoſe comming was prognoſticated by diuers ſignes.

4. As for other ſignes, which ſhall be as it were borne before Chriſt, there is great vncertainty among them that ſo hold: ſome thinke this ſigne ſhall be the ſigne of the Croſſe in mens foreheads, or a banner diſplaied before Chriſt in ſigne of victory. gloſſ. interlin. Lyranus thinketh, that it ſhall not be the ſigne onely of the Croſſe, but of the ſpeare, nailes, and other inſtruments of Chriſts death: or the ſcarres of the wounds in Chriſts body: Lactantius is of opinion, that before Chriſt deſcend to iudgement Cadet repente gladius è cœlo: A ſword ſhall ſuddenly fall from heauen, that the righteous may know, that the Captaine of the Lords hoſt is comming, &c. Zaga Zabo the Æthiopike Biſhop ſaith, that Chriſt ſhall beare the Croſſe before him, & in manu gladium, and a ſword in his hand: where ſuch vncertainty is, it maketh all to be ſuſpected.

2. This preſumption of theirs is flat oppoſite and contrary to Scripture, which ſaith, That the houre and day of Chriſts comming is not knowne to the Angels, nor to the Sonne of man, but to the Father onely, Mark. 13. 33. How then dare they preſume beyond the knowledge of Angels?

Mark. 13. 33.

Excitation. Eſpenſ. in 2. Tim. c. 3. p. 80.

I finde beſide, that two writers haue adventured very farre in this matter to ſet down the time and yeere of Chriſts comming: one is Cuſanus among the Papiſts: the other is Iohn Napier that learned gentleman of Scotland for the Proteſtants: the firſt thinketh, that the world ſhall end betweene the yeere 1700. and 1734. the other, that the finall conſummation is like to bee accompliſhed betweene the yeere 1688. and anno. 1700.

1. Cuſanus coniectures are theſe. 1. As Chriſt roſe againe in the 34. yeere of his age: ſo the Church of God ſhall riſe at the latter day in the 34. Iubile, which make 1700 yeeres.

2. 2. As after the firſt Adam, in the 34. Iubile there came a conſumption of ſinne by water: for the flood was anno. 1656. after the creation of the world: ſo in the 34. Iubile after the ſecond Adam, ſhall there be a finall conſumption of ſinne by fire.

3. 3. Dan. 12. 12. There ſhall be 1300. dayes, that is yeeres, from the going forth of the word, which was the firſt yeere of Cyrus, who was 559. yeeres before Chriſt: now ioyne both theſe together, and we come to the yeere after Chriſt 741. and ſo the world ſhall end at the yeere 1700. or before 1700.

4. 4. He taketh another coniecture out of Philo, that it was reuealed to Moſes, that at his death two times of the world were paſſed, from Adam to Noah the firſt, and from Noah to Moſes the ſecond; and two more were behind, the firſt from Moſes to Chriſt, which contained 1700. yeeres, the ſecond from Chriſt to the end of the world of the like continuance: vid Eſp. in 2. ad Timoth. pag. 80.

Contra. Some of theſe coniectures are vncertaine and conclude not, ſome are improper, ſome of them falſe: of the firſt ſort are the two firſt reaſons: 1. They are grounded onely vpon humane collections, not diuine conſtitutions; as to eſtimate the age of the world and continuance thereof by Iubilees: by Sabbaths and Iubilees we may make reckoning and account of times, but preciſely thereby to calculate how long the world ſhall endure, is an humane preſumption without any diuine preſcription. 2. Hereby it would follow, that the world ſhould end before anno 1700. in the middeſt of the laſt Iubilee, which is contrary to his owne opinion: for Chriſt dyed at 33. yeeres and an halfe, and the deluge came anno 1656. in the middeſt of the laſt Iubile.

Secondly, the third coniecture is improper, and hath beſide many vncertainties. 1. The Prophet ſpeaketh of 1335. dayes, not of 1300. onely. 2. The computation of theſe dayes muſt begin from the ſetting vp of the abomination of deſolation, Dan. 12. 12. which was in Antiochus Epiphanes raigne, who was ſome hundred yeeres after Cyrus. 3. I ſee not though all the yeeres be put together, how we come to anno 1700. but onely to the yeere 741. vnleſſe he adde 1000 yeeres more, which cannot be concluded from that place of Daniel. 4. I haue ſhewed before that this propheſie of Daniel was once already fulfilled in Antiochus raigne, and therefore a ſecond propheticall effect thereof is not to be expected.

Thirdly, the laſt coniecture is altogether vncertaine and falſe: for neither are there 1700. yeeres betweene Noah and Moſes death, nor yet 1000. yeere: and from Moſes to Chriſt, are not aboue yeeres 1400.

That learned and religious Gentleman of Scotland doth ground his opinion vpon better coniectures, yet vncertaine: as firſt, he alleadgeth the prophecy fathered vpon Elias, that the world ſhould continue 6000 yeeres: 2000 before the Law, 2000 vnder the Law, 2000 vnder the Meſſiah, which dayes for the elect ſake ſhall be ſhortened.

Secondly, he buildeth vpon that place of Daniel of 1335. dayes, taking ſo many yeeres, and beginning the account from Iulian the Apoſtata, who would haue made an vtter deſolation of Chriſtian religion, anno 365. which two numbers compounded make iuſt 1700.

Thirdly, he vrgeth that place, Apoc. 14. 20. how the blood ranne out of the winepreſſe 1600. furlongs: whereby muſt be vnderſtood ſo many yeeres: and the account to begin from anno 99. when this booke was written: ſo that this number will bring vs to anno 1699. Theſe with other more coniectures, that learned Gentleman hath, Propoſ. 14. in his booke vpon the Reuelation: which he vrgeth not as certaine demonſtrations, but as probable ſuppoſitions for his opinion: which I thinke he propoundeth not, as neceſſary to be followed, or certaine to be beleeued, but as probable to bee receiued, and as coniecturall further to be weighed and conſidered.

For otherwiſe the Scripture teacheth, that the very Angels know not the houre or day, that is, the time of Chriſts comming, Mark. 13. 32. how then are we able to ſearch it out? And if Daniel confeſſeth his ignorance concerning the ſecret of times, Dan. 12. 8. I heard it, but I vnderſtood it not: it were great preſumption for vs to ſeeke to comprehend that, which ſo great a Prophet apprehended not.

This we may know and remember, that many attempting to calculate the time of Chriſts comming, haue beene greatly deceiued, and ouertaken in their owne conceits.

Lactantius lib. 7. cap. 14. is of opinion, that the world ſhould laſt ſo many thouſand yeeres, as it was dayes in making: according to the blind tradition fathered vpon Elias. In the ſame errour are Methodius, Euſebius, Beda.

Gregory the great, Homil. 1. in Euangel. thought that in his time the day of iudgement was at hand, and that the ſignes of Chriſts comming were accompliſhed.

In Iuſtinian the Emperours time, there was a generall rumour, Mundum cum prole periturum: That the world ſhould preſently periſh with her children. And while all men were in expectation hereof, a certaine Captaine of the Emperours called Mundus, which is the Latine word for the world, being ſent into Italy againſt the Gothes, was ſlaine with his children, and ſo that blind perdiction tooke effect: ex procop. & Leonard. Aretin. de bell. Gothor. lib. 1.

Bullinger reporteth, that certaine Anabaptiſts were ſo ſure that the end of the world was at hand, that they wilfully waſted their goods, thinking they had enough for the time the world ſhould laſt, and ſo fell into extreame pouerty: cont. Anabap. lib. 2. c. 6.

And of late ſome confidently had written of the yeere 88. as though the world ſhould then haue ended. But all theſe have proved themſelues falſe prophets.

1. Wherfore in ſo great vncertainties, I thinke Auguſtines reſolution beſt, who thus writeth, epiſt. 78. De Salvatoris reditu, qui expectatur in fine, tempora dinumerare non audeo, nec aliquem prophetarum hac de re numerum annorum exiſtimo præfiniſſe, &c. Of our Saniours returne, which is expected in the end, I dare not number the times, neither doe I thinke that any of the Prophets did define the num-
Acts 1.7. ber of the yeers, but rather that to ſtand, which the Lord ſaith: It is not for you to know the times and ſeaſons, which the Father hath kept in his owne power, Act. 1. 7.

Againe, Auguſtine ſaith; Vtiliter latere voluit Deus illum diem, vt ſemper ſit paratum cor ad expectandum, quod eſſe venturum ſcit, & quando venturum ſit, neſcit: The Lord to great purpoſe would haue that day kept ſecret, that our heart ſhould be in continuall expectation of that, which it is ſure, ſhall come, but knoweth not when it ſhall come, In Pſal. 36. concion. 1. Quid ad te (ſaith he) quando veniet, ſic viue, quaſi hodie venturus ſit, & non timebis cum venerit? What is it to thee when he cõmeth? ſo liue as though he ſhould come to day, and thou ſhalt not be afraid when he cõmeth: ſer. 17. de diuerſ. ſer. 6.

Epiſtol. 72. And yet more euidently he thus writeth: De Salvatoris reditu, qui expectatur in fine, tempora dinumerare non audeo, &c. Of the returne of our Sauiour, which is expected in the end of the world, the times I dare not number, neither doe I thinke any of the Prophets to haue foreſeene the number of the yeeres, but that muſt ſtand, which the Lord ſaith: It is not for you to know the times and ſeaſons, which the Father hath put in his owne power, &c. Whereupon he inferreth, that not onely the day and houre is hid, as ſome doe cauill of thoſe words of our Sauiour, Marc. 13. 32. but euen the ſpace of Marc. 13. 32. times, quæ voluminibus tranſeunt, which paſſe by long revolution. &c. and ſo he concludeth; to count the times then, to know when the end of the world, or the comming of Chriſt ſhall bé, ſeemeth vnto me nothing elſe, quam ſcire velle quod ait Chriſtus, ſcire neminem poſſe, than to deſire to know that, which Chriſt ſaith, none can know.

2. Chryſoſtome rendreth two reaſons why the Lord hath kept ſecret the time of his comming, and will come as a theefe in the night: ne in malitiam ſeducamus, neve in ſegnitiem: leſt we ſhould ſeduce and deceiue our ſelues, either by maliciouſnes, or ſloathfulnes, &c. For if men did know the time of the end of their life, or of the world: if it were farre off, it would embolden them to euill, if at hand, it would diſcourage them from doing good, having ſo ſhort a time to liue.

3 Our Eccleſiaſticall expoſitors, as Caluine, Muſculus, Bucer, Bullinger, do ſo expound that place, Mat. 24. 36. that the time of Chriſts comming is not reuealed to any, no not to the Angels.

4. Lyranus agreeth: who giueth hereof theſe two excellent reaſons: becauſe a man can neither know that day by naturall reaſon, quia dependet ex ſimplici voluntate Dei, becauſe it dependeth ſimply on the will of God: nor yet by reuelation: for then it ſhould haue beene revealed to the Apoſtles, qui fuerunt maxime illuminati, who were moſt illuminated. And ſo he concludeth with that ſaying of Auguſtine vpon thoſe words, It is not for you to know the times and ſeaſons, which the Father hath put in his owne power: Omnium calculantium digitos reſoluit, qui hoc dicit: He ſtaieth the fingers of all calculators and caſters of numbers, that thus ſaith. It is then in vaine for any, to take vpon them to know the time, yeere, day, or houre of Chriſts comming: as the Romaniſts doe, which ſay, that Chriſt ſhall come 45. dayes after the deſtruction of Antichriſt.

Thus haue I through the Lords gracious aſſiſtance, now at the length finiſhed and brought to an end this long and tedious work, which I truſt ſhall not be ſo yrkſome to the Chriſtian reader, as it was weariſome and painfull to the fleſh, in the collecting and compiling thereof. and yet not ſo painefull, but that God hath made me able and willing to endure this, and greater paines, and that with comfort, for the good of his Church. As Auguſtine ſaith: Nullo modo oneroſi eſſe debent labores amantium, nam in eo quod amatur aut non laboratur aut ipſe labor amatur: The labours of louers are not grieuous, for in that which a man loueth and deſireth, either there is no labour at all, or elſe he loueth the very labour: de patient. cap. 21.

I excuſe not, whatſoeuer hath fallen out of my pen in this worke, if I haue failed any where in the manner of handling: But as for the matter handled therein, I truſt I haue throughout maintained the truth: in the proſecuting whereof, if ſometime I chaunce to miſſe, I ſay with Auguſtine: Nunquam errari tutius exiſtimo quàm cum in amore nimio veritatis, & reiectione nimia falſitatis erratur: I thinke a man can neuer more ſafely erre, than when he erreth in the too much loue of the truth, and the reiecting of falſehood.

I haue laboured in this worke, to ſet downe not onely the chiefe and principall, but euen the moſt, and in a manner all the controverſies of religion, betweene vs and the Papiſts, maintained this day: If De fide & operibus cap. 27. any thing be miſſing, I ſay againe with Auguſtine, Tale eſſe arbitratus ſum, cui mea reſponſio neceſſaria non fuiſſet. ſiue, quia ad rem de qua agitur, non pertinet. ſive quod tam leve eſſet, vt id quolibet redargui facillimè poſſet: I thought it to be ſuch, as vnto the which mine anſwer was not needfull, either becauſe it was not pertinent to the matter in hand, or elſe of ſo ſmall moment, that euery man might eaſily anſwer vnto it, De fide & operibus cap. 27.

I haue no more to ſay but this: If thou findeſt thy ſelfe any thing profited or helped (good Chriſtian Reader) by theſe ſimple labours of mine, giue God the praiſe, and I will praiſe him with thee: but one thing let me pray thee: Quiſquis legis nihil reprehendas, niſi cum totum perlegeris, atque ita forte minus reprehendes: Whoſoeuer readeſt in this booke, reprehend nothing, before thou haſt read the whole, and ſo perhaps thou wilt be more ſparing in reprehending. August.

The Lord give vs all grace to loue the truth, that they which know it, may continue and goe forward therein, as he againe ſaith, Perſeverate in eo, quod eſtis, proficite ad id, quod eritis: Perſevere in that you are, and proceed to that, you ſhall be: And they which as yet know it not, may ſeeke for it: Prou.13.23. and we all may embrace the Counſell of the wiſe man, to buy the truth, but in no wiſe to ſell it: that is, by all poſſible meanes to labour for it: and having attained thereunto, for no earthly reſpect, for feare or fauour to depart from it. The Lord God, Ieſus Chriſt, Iehovah, Emmanuel, our bleſſed Saviour and Redeemer, who is the way, the truth, and the life, give us of his heauenly grace, that we may walke obediently in his wayes, and conſtantly profeſſe his truth, that in the end he may bring vs to eternall life. Amen.

ſit omnis honor & gloria.

AN ADDITION, OR SECOND PART OF THIS FIFTH AND LAST CENTVRIE CONSISTING OF TWO SEVERALL CONTROVERSIES: THE FIRST, OF the Papall Iubile ſolemnized at Rome in the yeere, 1600. under the late Pope Clement 8. The ſecond, of the Popes Indulgences and Iubile Pardons.

The firſt controverſie of the Romane Iubile.

THis controverſie is divided into foure parts. Firſt, of the name and inſtitution of the Papall Iubile. Secondly, of the errors of time, in the Popes Iubile. Thirdly, of the end and purpoſe thereof. Fourthly, of the ceremonies and manner uſed in ſolemnizing this Iubile.

The firſt Part, of the Name and inſtitution of the Popes Iubile.

The Papiſts.

1. Error. FIrſt, concerning the derivation of the name, Bellarmine telleth us, that this word Iubile is not derived of the Hebrew יכל Iobel, which ſignifieth a trumpet: but of the word יברל Iebul, which ſignifieth the fruit of the earth, becauſe in this yeere of Iubile, the earth brought forth fruit of it owne accord without labour: lib. 1. *de Indulg.c.*1.

The Proteſtants.

*Contra.*1. THe Hebrew word, that ſignifieth a horne or trumpet, hath the very ſame points or prickes, and the ſame and juſt ſo many letters, as the word Iobel, that ſignifieth the Iubile: as may appeare by comparing, Levit. 25. 10, 11, 12. with Ioſua 6. 5. But the other word from whence he deriveth his Iubile, hath both more letters, and other points; ſo that the Iubile is more like to take denomination from (Iobel) that ſignifieth a trumpet.

Secondly, becauſe the yeere of Iubile was proclaimed with the ſound of a trumpet, Levit. 25. 8. and therefore by the blowing of the ſeven trumpets by the ſeven Angels, *Rev.*8. 8. ſome learned doe expound certaine great Iubilees of yeeres: every blowing of the trumpet containing five Iubilees, that is 245. yeeres: which make in all from Chriſt 1786. yeeres: not that the world ſhall laſt ſo long; for thoſe daies ſhall be ſhortned: ſo Iohn Napeire upon the Revelation, prop. 5. 10. Therefore it is moſt like that the Iubile being deſcribed, and proclaimed by the ſound of a Trumpet, hath his name from thence: and though in this place, not the word Iobel, but the Hebrew שיבר ſhophar be expreſſed to ſignifie a trumpet, Levit. 25. 8. yet elſe-where, we have that word uſed for a trumpet, as I have ſhewed before, Ioſua 6. 5.

Thirdly, the common phraſe of ſpeech in Latine, which uſeth the words, jubilare, jubilatio, for rejoycing, doth ſhew that the Iubile is derived from (Iobel) which ſignifieth a trumpet, wherewith they uſed to rejoyce: So Auguſtine upon theſe words, Pſal. 97. 4. Iubilate Deo, Sing unto the Lord: Gaudium veſtrum exprimat jubilatio, ſi non poteſt locutio: Let your jubilation or rejoycing, expreſſe your joy, if your ſpeech or locution cannot.

Fourthly, S. Hierome alſo approoveth this interpretation, that the word Iubile ſignifieth a trumpet, or comet: de interpretat. nominum.

The Papiſts.

2. Error. SEcondly, the Pope borroweth the Iubile of the Iewes: as Clement. 6. thus alleadgeth in his Bull: Quia annus quinquageſimus, in lege Moſaica, quam non venit dominus ſolvere, ſed ſpiritualiter adimplere, Iubilaus, &c. Becauſe the fiftieth yeere in the law of Moſes, which the Lord came not to looſe but to fulfill was appointed for the Iubile: and becauſe the number of fiftie in the old teſtament was honoured by the giving of the law in the new teſtament, by the ſending of the holy Ghoſt. *extrau. commun.lib.*5. tit. 9. Clem. 6.

The Proteſtants.

Contra. 1. WHo taught them to burthen the Church of God with Iewiſh ceremonies: as beſides this of the Iubile, they take from them the ſprinkling of holy-water, decr. par. 3. diſt. 4 c. 127. the conſecrating or hallowing of Churches, diſt. 1. ca. 11. Their anointing they haue from Moſes, decret, Greg. lib. 1. tit. 15. c. 1. gloſſ. and many ſuch other rites and ceremonies they do beg from the Iewes: contrary to the Apoſtle who calleth ſuch, beggerly and impotent rudiments, Gal. 4. 9. Whereupon the Ebionicke heretickes had their name, à paupertate, of their beggerlines, as their owne canons witneſſe, adding further: Hi ſemi Iudæi ſunt, qui ita Euangelium tenent, vt legem carnaliter ſeruent: Theſe are halfe Iewes, which ſo hold the Goſpell, as that they carnally alſo obſerue the law: cauſ. 24. qu. 3. can. 39. How much vnlike are the Papiſts, who in reſpect of the multitude of beggerly ceremonies, which they retaine may very well be called halfe Iewes, or halfe Ebionites?

2. Saint Paul ſaith, That Chriſt hath cancelled the hand-writing of ordinances, &c. and faſtened them to the croſſe, Coloſſ. 2. 14. And ſpeaking of holy dayes, new moones, and ſabbaths, he ſaith, they were but ſhadowes of things to come, but the body is in Chriſt. The Iubile then, which was the Sabbath of ſeuen yeeres, ſeuen times ſeuen yeeres being counted to a Iubile, was but a ſhadow: Chriſt then came to fulfill the law, the morall by reuiuing and eſtabliſhing it, the ceremoniall by accompliſhing and aboliſhing it: your owne law ſaith, Poſtquam vmbra legis euanuit, illuxit veritas Euangelij: After the ſhadow of the law had vaniſhed, the verity of the Goſpell hath ſhined forth, decret. Greg. tit. 47. lib. 3. c. 1. Innocent. 3. And that the Iubile was but a ſhadow, Bellarmine confeſſeth: Iubilæus Hebræorum typus & figura Euangelij: The Iubile of the Hebrewes was a type and figure of the Goſpell. de indulgent. lib. 1. pag. 5. then it followeth that the Iubile being a ſhadow is vaniſhed, and ought not to bee reuiued. Coloſſ. 2, 14.

3. As for the conſecration of the number of fiftie by the giuing of the law, and the comming of the holy Ghoſt, it maketh ſomewhat for the obſeruation of Pentecoſt, which is ſolemnized fifty dayes after Eaſter; but nothing at all for the Iubile which is vpon the fiftieth yeere, no more than it ſerueth for the keeping of the fiftieth weeke, or fiftieth moneth.

4. If they will haue a Iubile, which is the Sabbath of ſeuen times ſeuen yeeres, they muſt alſo obſerue the yeers of reſt euery ſeuenth yeere, according to the preſcript of Moſes law. And in the Iubile, the Land reſted, they did reape that, which did grow of it ſelfe, Leuit. 25. 11. If the like bleſſing they can ſhew vpon the earth in their yeere of Iubile, they ſhould haue ſome warrant to keepe it: So then according to S. Pauls reaſon; He that is circumciſed (or keepeth any one part of the law) is bound to keepe the whole law. If they then tie themſelues to celebrate the yeer of Iubilee, they are bound alſo to other points of the law: as Hierome well ſaith: Si carnalem interpretationem ſequimur, Iudaicis fabulis acquieſcendum ſit, vt rurſum ædificetur Ieruſalem, & hoſtiæ offerantur in templo: If we muſt follow a carnall interpretation, we muſt reſt in Iewiſh fables, Ieruſalem muſt be built againe, and ſacrifices offered in the Temple. Hieron. tom. 4. Marcella. Leuit. 25. 4. Galath. 5. 3.

The Papiſts.

3. CLement the ſixth was the firſt that anno 1350. inſtituted the Iubile of fifty yeeres, whereas Boniface the eighth appointed it to be ſolemnized, but once in an hundred yeeres; and ſo celebrated the firſt Iubile ann. 1300. Extrauag. commun. lib. 5 tit. 9. c. 1. 3. Error.

The Proteſtants.

Contra. By this it appeareth that the Popes Iubile is but a late invention: for if the firſt conſtitution of the Iubile made by Boniface had taken effect, they ſhould haue had but foure Iubilees in all: and according to the Bull of Clement the ſixth, there haue yet runne but onely eight Iubilees, ſo that this pontificall deuiſe is not yet aboue 300. yeere old: 1. If then the Church of God was gouerned 1300. yeere without a Iubilee, we muſt thinke it is not neceſſary now to be obſerved: for it is not like that Chriſt would ſo long a time have kept from his Church, ſuch a neceſſary invention. 2. If neither the Apoſtles, nor holy Martyrs, nor Doctors of the Church were inſpired, to find out ſo neceſſary and profitable an obſervation, it was great preſumption in Boniface and Clement to ſeeme to ſee more into the vtility and profit of the Church, than ſo many apoſtolike and propheticall men, that went before him. 3. Wherefore as Ieremie ſaith, We ought rather to aske for the old way, which is the good way, and walke therein. This is too new an invention, having no ground in Scripture, and being but lately taken vp, to winne any credit with the people of God 4. Auguſtine therefore well ſaith, as he is alleaged alſo, Diſtinct. 12. c. 1 Omnia talia, quæ neque ſanctarum ſcripturarum authoritatibus continentur, nec in concilijs epiſcoporum ſtatuta inveniuntur, nec conſuetudine vniverſalis eccleſiæ roborata ſunt, &c. ſine vlla dubitatione reſecanda exiſtimo: All ſuch things, which neither are contained in the authority of Scripture, nor eſtabliſhed in the Councels of Biſhops, nor confirmed by the cuſtome of the vniverſall Church, I iudge to be cut off, &c. But ſuch is this invention of the Iubile, neither warranted by Scripture, nor concluded in any ancient councell, nor yet practiſed of the vniverſall Church in time and place: for, the former ages of the Church, knew it not, and many Churches to this day receiue it not, and therefore by Auguſtines ſentence, it ought to be abrogated. Ierem. 6. 16.

The Papiſts.

4. THe Popes themſelues have very much varied ſince this new deuice of the Iubile was taken vp: it hath beene changed no leſſe than fiue ſeverall times. 1. Boniface the eighth did ap- 4. Error.

point the Iubile euery hundreth yeere, extran. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1. 2. Clemens 6. did abridge it to the 50. yeere. extrau. ibid. c. 2. 3. Vrbane the ſixth brought it to 33. yeeres. ex Balao. 4. Paulus 2. Sixtus the fourth limited the Iubiſe to 25. yeeres. extrau. commun. ibid. c. 4. 5. Iulius the ſecond did yet curtall the Iubile, and appointed it every tenth yeere, Robert Pont. Scotus propoſ. 2.

The Proteſtants.

Contra. 1. WE may now truly ſay of thoſe patrons of ſuperſtition, and their councels, as the Prophet ſaith of Pharaoh his counſellers: Errant in opere, vt ebrius in vomitu: They doe erre in euery worke, as a drunken man in his vomite. Their reſtleſſe and brain-ſicke inventions are never ſettled: and as Origen well ſaith: Vt errantium à via multæ differentiæ ſunt, &c. As when men erre from the high-way, they goe into many by-paths, tract. 27. in Matth. So falleth it out here, that theſe ſwarving from the truth, doe every one follow his owne way, and cannot agree together. 2. It is prettie ſport to ſee how the Popes doe curſe one another for altering their predeceſſors decrees: firſt Boniface the eight, having erected a Iubile every 100. yeere, doth ſhut up his Bull thus: Nulli hominum liceat hanc paginam noſtræ conſtitutionis, &c. infringere, ſiquis attentare præſumpſerit indignationem omnipotentis Dei, &c. noverit ſe incurſurum: Let no man dare to infringe this Bull of our conſtitution, which if he preſume to attempt, let him know he ſhall incurre the indignation of Almightie God, and of Peter and Paul, &c. extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1. Then commeth Clemens the ſixth, and infringeth this Conſtitution, and ſo ſtandeth under the Pope his predeceſſors curſe: and he reduceth the Iubile to 50. yeeres, impoſing the very ſame curſe and in the ſame words upon the violaters of his decree. ibid. c. 2. After him followeth Sixtus the fourth, who bringeth the Iubile to 25. yeeres, and ſo incurreth the former curſe annexed to Clemens the ſixth his conſtitution. ibid. cap. 4.

Iſay 19.14.

Thus theſe fellowes, that would terrifie all the world with their curſes, yet take them to bee but ſcare-bugges themſelves. Or if they thinke the Popes curſe to be any thing worth, how can they bleſſe others, that ſtand accurſed themſelves?

The Papiſts.

5. Error. SIxtus the fourth in his Bull thus decreeth: after he had recited the conſtitution of his predeceſſor Paulus the ſecond for the reſtraining of the Iubile to the 25. yeere: Quod anno domini 1474. proximè futuro, à vigilia nativitatis domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti, Iubilaus celebrari deberet, &c. That in the yeere of our Lord 1474. next comming from the vigile of the birth of our Lord the Iubile ſhould be celebrated: extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 4.

Confutat. THis Pope diſſenteth from all his predeceſſors, bringing the Iubile to the 24. yeere: for in the 1450. yeere the Iubile was kept according to the conſtitution of Clemens the ſixth, who reduced it to the 50. yeere, unto the which adde 24. and we have the foreſaid number of 1474. Thus as Saint Paul ſaith: 1. Tim. 1. 7. They underſtand not what they ſpeake, nor whereof they affirme: So uncertaine are theſe Popes in theſe new deviſes diſſenting one from another: like as Ambroſe ſaith, Non diviſus eſt Chriſtus, ſed qui eum dividunt, ipſi ſe ſcindunt: Chriſt is not divided: but they which divide him doe alſo divide themſelves. lib. 1. de fid. c. 4.

Confut. TO reckon the yeeres of our Lord, from the nativitie of Chriſt, and not from his conception. 1. is contrary to their owne doctrine: for the Rhemiſts confeſſe, That ſtraight upon Chriſts deſcending from heaven it was the dutie of Angels to worſhip him: annot. in 2. Heb. ſect. 2. Bellar. Super Chriſtum hominem nondum natum, ſed conceptum, ſpiritus ſanctus deſcendit: Vpon the man Chriſt, not yet borne but conceived, the holy Ghoſt did deſcend: de Chriſt. anima. lib. 4. c. 2. If Chriſt then deſcended from heaven in his conception, was then made man, and adored of Angels; what reaſon is there why the yeeres of the Lord ſhould not be accounted from that inſtant? 2. It is contrarie to their owne practice: for the Popes uſe to date their Bulls, Anno incarnationis, &c. the yeere of the incarnation of our Lord Paul. 2. extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 3. Sixt 4. ibid. But Chriſts incarnation began not onely in his nativitie, but from his firſt conception. 3. It is contrarie to the Scriptures, When he bringeth in his firſt begotten ſonne into the world, he ſaith, let all the Angels worſhip him. If Chriſt muſt bee worſhipped from his firſt comming into the world, which was in his conception, then from thence the account of time muſt begin, which is a part of externall honour and worſhip due unto him. 4. Iohn Baptiſt being in his mothers wombe three moneths before hee was borne, ſprang at the ſalutation of Mary, and ſo adored Chriſt, being but then conceived in his mothers wombe by the holy Ghoſt: in like manner ought we to adore the conception of Chriſt, and not to exclude it out of the reckoning. 5. Iob curſeth the night, wherein he was conceived, that it be not ioyned to the dayes of the yeere, nor come into the count of the moneths, but the time of Chriſts conception is bleſſed, and therefore it ought to come into the account of the moneths. Wherefore the yeere of the Lord is rather to begin from his conception, than from his natiuity.

7. Error.

Secondly, it is another of their errors in their account of time, that whereas the conception of Chriſt was three quarters of a yeere preceding his birth: yet they accounting from the Natiuity, doe write the ſame yeere of the Lord, a whole quarter before vs: as this preſent yeere they write 1613. at the natiuity laſt, and we begin the ſame yeere at the Annuntation laſt: ſo that they account ſooner by a yeere than they ſhould: for it being but 1613. from the conception of Chriſt the 25. of March laſt, according to the iuſt computation of the Church of England: it can be from his natiuity no more than 1613. at the feaſt of the birth of Chriſt next enſuing. This is a groſſe and apparant error.

8. Error.

Thirdly, the natiuity of Chriſt did fall neither in a Sabbaticall yeere, nor yet in the in the yeere of Iubilee: for it was the third yeere of the Sabbath of yeeres, and almoſt 20. yeeres from the yeere of Iubilee, which was in the yeere of the world 3910. and Chriſt was borne about the yeere 3930. Seeing then Chriſt was not borne in a yeere of Iubilee, from thence reckoning by euen fifties, the yeere 1600. could not be a yeere of Iubile: See Maſter Broughtons Concent of Scripture of this matter, whoſe labours in this kind haue beene moſt painefull, learned and profitable.

9. Error.

At what time of the yeere Chriſt was borne.

Fourthly, though it ſhould be granted, that the natiuity of Chriſt was incident into a yeere of Iubile: yet they miſſe againe, in the obſeruing the time of the yeere for Chriſts birth, and in taking the beginning of their Iubile: for Moſes Iubile, which they take vpon them to imitate, began in the tenth day of the ſeuenth moneth, Leu. 25. 9. If they anſwer, that they began their Iubilee from the time that Chriſt was borne in: ſome learned doe thinke, that he was borne in the moneth anſwering to our September, and that for theſe reaſons: Firſt, it is euident, that betweene the conception of Iohn, and the conception of Chriſt, there were ſixe moneths, Luk. 1. 16. In the ſixth moneth the Angel Gabriel was ſent, &c. But Iohn was conceiued in the fourth moneth, which anſwereth to our Iune: for in that moneth Zachary ſerued, being of the courſe of Abia, which was the eighth courſe, 1 Chr. 24. 10. (two of thoſe courſes ſeruing euery moneth) which courſes began at the firſt moneth, Niſan anſwering to our March, the beginning of moneths, Exod. 12. 2. Iohn then being conceiued in Iune, his birth muſt fall out nine moneths after about March; and ſo conſequently our Sauiour being conceiued ſixe moneths after Iohn, muſt be borne about September following.

1. Luke 1. 26. 1 Chro. 24. 10. Exod. 12. 2.

2. Againe, Chriſt preached three yeeres and an halfe: for he dyed according to Daniels prophecy, in the middeſt of a propheticall weeke of yeeres, which is three yeeres and an halfe: and when he began to preach, he was iuſt 30. yeere old, from the time then of Chriſts birth, to the time of his death, there muſt be halfe a yeere: So it doth probably follow, that Chriſt dying in the ſpring, muſt bee borne in the Autumne.

Dan. 9. 27. Luke 3. 23.

3. Of the popiſh reformation of the Calender.

3. They ſeeing their error, haue of late ſomewhat reformed their Calendar, bringing backe the feaſt of the Natiuity ten dayes from the 15. of December to the 25. day: but yet they haue miſſed the marke: for whereas it is found that the courſe of yeeres is altered from the ancient Iulian Calendar, by reaſon that for euery 130. yeeres a day is loſt, in reſpect of certaine minutes and ſeconds encreaſing euery yeere, beſide the ſixe odde houres, which are recompenſed euery leape yeere: one Aloyſius Lilius, anno 82. in Gregory the 13 his time, was authorized to reforme the Calendar: but being limited by the Papiſticall Clergy not to goe beyond the Nicen Synode, he was forced there to begin, which was from anno 328. and from thence counting a day for 130. yeeres, he brought backe the Calendar onely tenne dayes, whereas it was ſlipt thirteene dayes from the time of Iulius Caſar, who liued about 45. yeeres before Chriſt. Thus yet are they in error concerning the iuſt computation of time.

4. It will be here obiected, that though the Church of Rome hath not yet perfectly reformed their Calendar, yet they come neerer to the ancient Iulian computation, than the Church of England, that hath admitted yet no reformation of the Calendar. I anſwer: firſt, concerning the celebration of the natiuity of Chriſt, to vs it is no great matter, though we hit not the very ſame ſeaſon wherein he was borne: for his birth day may be as thankfully celebrated, as it is now kept, as if the very point of time were exactly calculated: we doe not ſo much reſpect the time, as the myſtery remembred therein: But to them it is very materiall to obſerue the very preciſe time, becauſe they begin their Iubile from thence: wherein, as I haue ſhewed they doe greatly miſſe. Secondly, yet we are not againſt a reformation of the Calendar, if it ſo ſeemed good to Chriſtian Princes, which may much better be performed, than they haue done it: who by altering and changing the ancient Feſtiuals, and Faire and Market daies, making them to come tenne dayes ſooner, haue brought a great confuſion and diſturbance into many common-weales. A more peaceable and ſafe way is found out, that if for the ſpace of 56. yeeres following, there ſhould be no leape yeere at all, wherein a day is added more, by this meanes (foureteene dayes being cut off, for euery leape yeere one) the computation would be reſtored to the ancient reckoning of the Iulian Calendar. Robert. Pont. propoſ. 5.

5. It wil be further obiected concerning the ſeaſon of Chriſts birth, that the fathers held, that he was borne when the dayes began to encreaſe, & therfore not in the Autumne, when they are ſtill in decreaſing: as Auguſtine ſeemeth ſo to allude in theſe words of Iohn Baptiſt: Illum oportet creſcere, &c. He muſt encreaſe, but I muſt decreaſe, Ioh. 3. 30. Naſcitur Ioannes ex quo dies incipiunt minui, iſte cum creſcere inciperent, &c. Iohn was borne, when the daies began to be leſſened, Chriſt, when they began to encreaſe, lib.83. queſt.58.

Anſw. 1. Any man may ſee that this collection is rather wittie than waighty, prety rather, than pithy : as in the ſame place the author alleaged (whoſoeuer it was) alludeth further thus : Iohn decreaſed, quia capite minuitur, becauſe he was cut ſhorter by the head : Chriſt encreaſed, quia attollitur in cruce, becauſe he was lift vp in the croſſe, and ſo made higher.

2. We may well thinke, that in Auguſtines time, which was about 400. yeere after Chriſt, they might well be ignorant of the time of Chriſts birth, ſeeing almoſt 100. yeere before in the Nicene Synode, and long before that, there was ſuch ſtrife about the celebration of the Paſch, ſome affirming that the Apoſtles kept it one way, ſome another : the Eaſt Church pretending a tradition from Saint Iohn to hold the Paſch the 14. day of the firſt moneth : the Weſt following a direction from Saint Peter, to ſolemnize it the firſt Lords day after the firſt Moone following the Equinoctium.

3. Neither are all the fathers of this mind, that Chriſt was borne in the daies encreaſing by ordinarie courſe of the Sunne : S. Ambroſe hath this ſuppoſition : Ex eo factum puto, vt nox decreſceret, &c. quia ſol præter conſuetudinem in hac feſtiuitate matutinus illuxit : Hence it was that the night was leſſened, becauſe the Sunne, beſide his vſuall courſe and cuſtome, did ſhine in the morning, becauſe of this feſtiuall : for if at Ioſua his prayer the Sunne ſtood ſtill in the day, cur non ad Ieſus natiuitatem feſtinus promoueret à nocte : much more becauſe of Chriſts natiuity, did he ſooner goe forward from the night, ſer.16. That the day then encreaſed, and the night decreaſed, when Chriſt was borne, Ambroſe thinketh it was extraordinary, beſide the vſuall courſe of the yeere at that time.

Dan.9.27.
Leuit.25.8.
Chriſt dyed in a Iubile yeere.
Eſay 49. 8.
Leuit.25.8.

Fifthly, ſeeing it is euident, that Chriſt died in a yeere of Iubile, it being the 28. Iubile in number, as is well obſerued in that learned Concent of Scripture. And the Prophet Daniel ſheweth that all the Sabbaticall yeeres determined at the death of Chriſt, in whom the true Iubile was accompliſhed, well called by the Septuagint, ἐνιαυτὸς ἀφέσεως, the yeere of remiſſion. This appeareth then to bee another great error in the Romane Iubile, becauſe they doe count from the yeere of Chriſts natiuity, which was no yeere of Iubile, and not from the yeere of his death, which was the true Iubile indeed, and concurring with Moſes Iubile : So the Prophet Eſay ſaith, propheſying of Chriſt : In an acceptable time haue I heard thee, and in the day of ſaluation I haue helped thee : This ἡμέρα σωτηρίας, day of ſaluation, is the ſame which the Septuagint tranſlate ἐνιαυτὸς ἀφέσεως, the yeere of remiſſion, which was the yeere of Iubile.

The third part, of the end and purpoſe of the Papall Iubilee.

CОncerning the intent, ſcope and end of this Popiſh deuice, we find it to be firſt blaſphemous : ſecondly, ſacrilegious : thirdly, ſuperfluous : fourthly, iniurious : fifthly, couetous.

The Papiſts.

11. Error.
The Popes Iubile blaſphemous.

FIrſt, their blaſphemy appeareth in this, that the Pope taketh vpon him to giue full remiſſion of all ſinnes to them, that viſite Rome in the yeere of Iubile perſonally : for theſe are the words of Clement.6. his Bull. Qui baſilicas Apoſtolorum, &c. perſonaliter viſitarent, ſi vere pœnitentes & confeſſi fuerint, ſuorum omnium pleniſſimam obtinerent veniam peccatorum : They which perſonally viſite the Apoſtles Churches Peter and Paul at Rome, if they bee truly penitent, and confeſſed, ſhould obtaine moſt full remiſſion of all their ſinnes : Extrau.commun.lib.5. tit.9.c.6.

The Proteſtants.

1 Iohn 1.7.
Remiſſion of ſinnes not had in viſiting Rome.

Contra. 1. THus they blaſphemouſly aſcribe full remiſſion of ſins to the viſiting of Rome, which is but a ſuperſtitious deuice of their owne, whereas the Scripture ſaith, The blood of Ieſus Chriſt purgeth vs from all ſinne : But the blood or body of Paul or Peter, are not the blood of Chriſt, neither to viſit Rome in perſon, is it the blood of Chriſt : therefore it is blaſphemy contrary to the Scripture to attribute remiſſion of ſinnes, to any other thing, than to the blood of Chriſt.

2. But they imagine, that this helpeth the matter, becauſe this clauſe is inſerted. if they be truely penitent, &c.

Anſw. 1. If then it be repentance that giueth remiſſion of ſinnes, what need they perſonally viſite Rome; a man may repent as well at home, as at Rome, nay, much better: for their licentious life there and euill example will hinder repentance rather, than prouoke vnto it. 2. True repentance they require not, but popiſh penance, which they make a ſatisfaction for ſinne, which ſhall neuer find remiſſion of ſinne. 3. But if they had, or preſcribed true repentance indeed, yet is it not a cauſe of forgiueneſſe of ſinne, but a conſequence onely thereof, and aſſurance of it to our owne ſoules, and a manifeſtation that we are cleare before God: As S. Paul ſaith, hauing deſcribed their true repentance and godly ſorrow, their care, feare, deſire, puniſhment, &c. In omnibus vos exhibuiſtis puros, &c. In all things yee haue ſhewed your ſelues pure in this matter. Their outward repentance did ſhew the inward cleering of their conſcience by faith before God.

3. Laſtly, S. Ambroſe ſaith vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle, Rom.3.24. Ye are iuſtified freely : Quia nihil operantes neque vicem reddentes ſola fide iuſtificati ſunt dono dei : Becauſe they working nothing nor rendring the like, are iuſtified onely by faith through the gift of God, in 3. cap. ad Roman. If by neither working nor rendring any thing, &c. then not by viſiting Rome, or going to celebrate the yeere of Iubile ſhall a man finde remiſſion of ſinnes, but by faith onely.

The Papiſts.

12. Error. SEcondly, the popiſh Iubile is inſtituted to the honour of Peter and Paul: as it is extant in the Bull of Boniface 8. Vt beatiſſimi Petrus & Paulus amplius honorentur: That the bleſſed Apoſtles Peter and Paul be more honoured, Extrau.tit.9.c.1. And in the Bull of Clement 6.ibid.c.2. Pro ipſorum memoria crebrius recolenda, & reuerentia à cunctis Chriſti fidelibus eis deuotius adhibenda: For the more often celebrating of their memory, and the more devotion of all the faithfull of Chriſt to be giuen vnto them.

The Proteſtants.

Confut. FIrſt, this is great ſacriledge, to giue that honour to the Apoſtles, who are but Chriſts ſervants, which is due vnto the Lord and Maſter himſelfe: The Lord ſaith, My glory will I not giue to another: Iſay 42.8. The ſame is the deſire alſo of the Saints, not vnto vs, not vnto vs, Lord, but vnto thy name giue the praiſe. Pſal.115.1.

2. The Iubile was at the firſt inſtitution conſecrated onely as holy vnto God: for as the ſeuenth Sabbaticall yeere was holy vnto God, and is called the Lords Sabbath, Leuit. 25.4. ſo ſeuen times ſeauen yeere, which was the yeere of Iubile, was holy to God, Leuit.25.12. it ſhall be holy to you: that is, in reſpect of your vſe, but holy to the honour of God. It is ſacriledge then to robbe God of his honour, and to conſecrate a Iubile vnto men. Leu.25.4.12. The Iubile was not inſtituted to the honour, but onely of the Lord.

3. Saint Hierome ſaith: Nos non dico martyrum reliquias ſed ne ſolem quidem aut lunam, non angelos, archangelos, non Seraphim, Cherubim, & omne nomen, quod nominatur in præſenti ſeculo & futuro, colimus, & adoramus, ne ſeruiamus creaturæ potius, quam creatori, qui eſt benedictus in ſecula: We do not onely not worſhip and adore the reliques of Martyrs, but not the Sunne or Moone, not Angels, Archangels, Seraphim, Cherubim, or any name named in this world or the world to come, leſt we ſhould ſerue the creature, rather than the creator. And againe, Quis, ô inſanum caput, aliquando martyres adoravit, quis hominem putavit deum? Who, ô mad braine, ever adored the Martyrs, or tooke man to be God? ad Riparium aduerſ. Vigilantium. Wherefore by Hieromes ſentence all reverence and divine adoration is to be giuen onely to the creator, the creature hath no part therein.

4. But what kinde of honour is due vnto Saints, is very well expreſſed, Synod. Mogunt. in cap.45. Sancti qui vitæ huius curſum beato fine clauſerunt, &c. non eo qui vero deo debetur, ſed eo ſocietatis & dilectionis cultu quo in hac vita ſancti homines, à nobis coli poſſunt: The Saints, which haue happily ended this life, may be worſhipped of vs, not with that worſhip which is only due vnto God, but by that worſhip of fellowſhip and loue, by the which holy men may be worſhipped of vs in this life, &c. But S. Peter and S. Paul, while they liued, would haue beene aſhamed to haue had Temples, daies, Iubile yeeres to be conſecrate to their name and memorie: Ergo, this honour is not due vnto them, now they are dead.

The Papiſts.

13. Error. THirdly, theſe are the words of the Bull of Sixtus 4. Verum quia poſtmodum, tam nos, quam idem Paulus prædeceſſor noſter, animarum ſaluti fidelium intenti, &c. devotarum perſonarum pulſati precibus diverſas indulgentias & peccatorum remiſſiones plenarias nonnullis eccleſijs, monaſterijs & pijs locis duximus concedendas: Becauſe as well we, as our predeceſſor Paulus, being intent vpon the ſalvation of mens ſoules, moued thereunto by the prayers of deuout perſons, have thought good to grant indulgences, and plenary remiſſions of ſinnes to certaine Churches, Monaſteries, and godly places: Extrau.commun.lib.5.tit.9.c.4.

The Proteſtants.

Confut. FIrſt, hence I inferre, that the Papall inſtitution of Iubilee is ſuperfluous, becauſe the Pope preſumeth to giue plenary remiſſion and full indulgence without a yeere of Iubile, and to other places than Rome. Secondly, if he can doe it, and will not, he is an enemy to the ſaluation of mens ſoules: for as it is in the Bull alleaged before: hauing an intent to the ſaluation of mens ſoules, he granted plenary indulgences to diuers places: then to deny to giue ſuch indulgences is to neglect and hinder the ſaluation of mens ſoules. Thirdly, it was appointed by the law of Moſes, that land, which was ſold and could not be redeemed, ſhould come out in the yeere of Iubilee, Leu.25.28. that bond ſeruants ſhould be ſet free in the yeere of Iubilee, ibid.verſ.40. If this plenary freedome and full reſtitution could haue beene obtained before, then the yeere of Iubile had been needleſſe: by the ſame reaſon the Popes Iubilee is ſuperfluous, ſeeing without it, plenary indulgence, if he liſt, may be had. Fourthly, therefore Saint Ierome ſaith well: Non audeo dei omnipotentiam anguſto fine concludere & coarctare paruo terræ loco, quem non capit cœlum; ſinguli quique credentium non locorum diuerſitatibus, ſed merito fidei ponderantur: I dare not ſhut vp Gods omnipotency in a ſmall roome, or include him in a little place, whom heauen cannot receiue: euery beleever, not by diverſity of place, but excellency of faith is to be meaſured, epiſt. ad Paulinum. It is not then neceſſary to viſit Rome in the yeere of Iubile, if Chriſt be preſent every where by faith to true beleeuers. The Popes Iubile ſuperfluous.

The Papiſts.

14. Error. FOurthly: this Papall indiction and promulgation of the Iubile is iniurious: for in the Bull of indulgence, the liberty of the Iubile is granted to thoſe onely, which doe either perſonally viſite the Apoſtles Churches in Rome, or are impediti in itinere, hindred in their iourney, or qui in via vel in urbe deceſſerint, which are dead in the way, or in the citie : Clement 6. Extrau. ubi ſupra.

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. First, if none be provided for in the Bull of Iubile but they that came thither, or would come, and are hindred, or dye in their iourney ; what ſhall become of thoſe that neither come thither, nor yet purpoſe it, will ye make them caſt-awayes? Alacke then for vs poore ſoules of England, what ſhall we doe? Is the holy father ſo mercileſſe, that he will ſend vs all to Purgatorie, becauſe we will not come to Rome to have our purſes picked, I would ſay purged? Secondly, if plenarie indulgence be onely had in the yeere of Iubile ; in what caſe are they that dye before the Iubile commeth? doe they dye in their ſinnes? how is not then this conſtitution moſt iniurious to many poore ſoules, that never offended the Pope their holy father? Thirdly, but S. Peter, the Popes maſter (though he be an vntoward ſcholler, that will follow his maſter never a whit) doth put vs in better comfort, that in euery nation, he that feareth God and worketh righteouſneſſe, is accepted with God, Act. 10. 35. whether he were at Rome, or not, whether he live to the yeere of Iubile or not. Fourthly, Saint Hierome alſo ſaith : Ne quicquam fidei tuæ deeſſe putes quia Hieroſolymam non vidiſti ; nec nos idcirco meliores exiſtimes, quòd huius loci habitaculo fruimur : Thinke not that any thing is wanting to your faith, that you have not ſeene Ieruſalem, or that wee are any thing better, becauſe wee are there, epiſt. ad Paulin. I thinke Rome is no more priviledged than Ieruſalem : a mans faith may be ſufficient to ſave him, though he have ſeene neither, nor yet deſired to ſee or viſite them.

The Popes Iubile how iniurious.

Act. 10. 35.

The Papiſts.

15. Error.

Fifthly, it is alſo evident, that the Popiſh inſtitution of the Iubile was rather for lucre of ſilver, than of ſoules ; that the end thereof is rather covetous, than religious ; of greedineſſe more than godlineſſe.

The Proteſtants.

First, 1. To what end elſe was their Iubile brought from 100. yeeres to 50. from 50. to 25. from 25. to 10. as I have before ſhewed, but onely becauſe they found the Iubile profitable, and ſought their owne gaine? 2. What elſe mooved Sixtus 4. to reverſe divers graunts of plenary indulgence, but as it is expreſſed in the Bull, Ne populorum concurſus ad eccleſias ante dictas retardari aut ipſius anni Iubilæi celebritas minui, vel intermitti poſſet, &c. Leaſt the concourſe of people to the ſaid Churches might be hindred, or the celebritie of the Iubile yeere empayred or intermitted, &c. and by this meanes their gaine ſhould decreaſe, and their advantage be diminiſhed : for that is the cauſe indeed, if they would ſpeake out, and not diſſemble the matter. 3. When as Clemens the 6. firſt reduced the Iubile to fiftie yeeres, anno 1350. there were numbred every day of ſtrangers going and comming to Rome five thouſand, and a thouſand poore people waiting daily at the Popes pallace for their pardons : Can it be thought otherwiſe but this was very beneficiall to the Pope? Calixtus the 3. is found to have left an hundred and fifteene thouſand ducates to his ſucceſſor, that he had ſcraped together by Pardons and Indulgences, ex Balæo, &c. Let all men now iudge, what maketh the Pope ſo earneſt in maintaining his Iubile. 4. I conclude then with Hierome, whoſe ſaying may very fitly be applyed to the Romane Clergie : Nunc ſub religionis titulo exercentur iniuſta compendia, & honor nominis Chriſtiani fraudem magis facit, quam patitur : plenis ſacculis morimur divites, qui quaſi pauperes viximus : Now vnder pretence of religion vniuſt gaine is exacted, and the honour of Chriſts name doth offer deceit rather, than ſuffer it, and many dye with full coffers, that while they lived made profeſſion of povertie, Hier. ad Ruſticum.

The Popes Iubile inſtituted for gaine.

The fourth part, of the manner of ſolemnizing the Popiſh Iubile.

IN this laſt and fourth part I doe obſerve theſe particular errors : that the manner it ſelfe obſerved in the Romane Iubile, is firſt ſuperſtitious : ſecondly, idolatrous : thirdly, ambitious : fourthly, ſcandalous : fifthly, ridiculous.

The Papiſts.

16. Error.

First, their ſuperſtition herein appeareth, in that they enioyne men in the yeere of Iubile to come onely to Rome to viſite the Churches of Peter and Paul, and of Saint Mary the greater, and the Laterane Church, which Conſtantine did erect to the honour of our Saviour, being baptized by Silveſter, and ſo healed of his leproſie : which Silveſter alſo did conſecrate with a new kinde of Chriſme : *Clemens 6. The Proteſtants.

Confutat. First, Pope Clement by his leaue coucheth heere three great untruths together : firſt, that Conſtantine was baptized by Silveſter : ſecondly, at Rome : thirdly, in the beginning of his Empire, while Silveſter was yet living : whereas he was baptized firſt by Euſebius : ſecondly, at Nicomedia : thirdly, in the 31. yeere of his raigne, Silveſter being dead long before : *Euſeb. lib. 4. de vit. Conſtantine when baptized, where, and by whom.

Secondly, that Silveſter did novo Chriſmationis genere, &c. with a new kinde of Chriſme dedicate the Laterane Church, it alſo ſavoureth. 1. It could not be a new kinde of Chriſme, ſeeing your forged

Fabian, epiſt. 2. before this maketh mention of Chriſme, and telleth vs, (if we will credit him vpon his word) that Ieſus poſt quam cœnauit, &c. diſcipulos docuit chriſma conficere, That Chriſt after he had ſupped, taught his Apoſtles to make Chriſme. 2. Their Chriſme ſeemeth to haue bin in no great account long after Syluesters time: for Ambroſe vpon theſe words, 2 Cor. 1. 29. God hath annoynted vs, doth thus interpret: Vnxit nos Deus, id eſt, dedit regiam honorificentiam, ſicut dicit Petrus: God hath annoynted vs, that is, giuen vs a kingly honour. as Peter ſaith, &c. He vnderſtandeth a ſpirituall annoynting: if he had thought any other kind of Chriſme or annointing neceſſary, he had occaſion here offered to ſpeake of it.

Thirdly, Rome is no more priuiledged than Ieruſalem, nor Italy than Iudea: but of theſe Chriſt ſaith, that the true worſhippers of God ſhall neither worſhip him at Ieruſalem, nor in that mountaine, &c. John 4. 21. If it be not neceſſary to goe to Ieruſalem to worſhip, neither is it to viſite Rome. And Moſes ſaith, Neither is it beyond the ſea, that thou ſhouldeſt ſay, who ſhall goe ouer the ſea for vs to bring it to vs? We need not then goe ouer the ſea to Rome to ſeeke Chriſt. Deut. 30. 13.

Fourthly, Ierome well ſaith; Illa expetenda eſt ciuitas, non quæ occidit prophetas, & Chriſti ſanguinem fudit, ſed quam matrem ſanctorum Apoſtolus clamitat: That City is to be deſired, not which killed the Prophets, and ſhed Chriſts blood, but which the Apoſtle calleth the mother of the faithfull. epiſt. ad Paulin. But Rome as well as Ieruſalem hath killed the Prophets and Apoſtles. And againe, Ierome in the ſame place to the ſame purpoſe alleageth theſe Scriptures: The ſpirit bloweth where it liſteth, The earth is the Lords, and the fulneſſe thereof. Deſyt tantum notus eſſe in Iudæa deus, in omnem terram exiuit ſonus Apoſtolorum: God hath ceaſed onely to be knowne in Iudea, the ſound of the Apoſtles is gone forth into all lands. Laſtly, concerning the City of Rome, Ierome doubteth not in his time to call it Babylon: Gaudeo cum in Babylone inuenitur Daniel, &c. I am glad that in Babylon is found Daniel, Ananias, Azarias, Miſael. tom. 4. epiſt. ad Principiam. Wherefore ſeeing the Lord biddeth vs come forth of Babylon, what reaſon haue Chriſtians to aſcend to worſhip in Babylon?

FIrſt, it is not ſafe nor lawfull to haue the image of Chriſt, as may appeare by theſe reaſons, firſt the ſeuenth councell of Conſtantinople thus reaſoned vpon theſe words of Chriſt, this doe in remembrance of me: Ecce viuificantis illius corporis imaginem totam, panis ſubſtantiam: Behold the whole image of that quickening body, the ſubſtance of bread. *ex ſynod. Whether it be ſafe to haue the Image of Chriſt.

3. Saint Ambroſe ſaith: In eccleſia vnam imaginem noui, hoc eſt, imaginem Dei inuiſibilis, &c. In the Church I know one onely image, that is, the image of God inuiſible, of the which the Lord ſaid, Let vs make man according to our image. That image whereof it is written: Chriſt is the ingrauen image of his perſon: orat. in Auxent. Then no viſible image of God or Chriſt is to be retained: which is made by it ſelfe as a repreſentation of Chriſt, vnleſſe it be for the ſetting forth of ſome hiſtoricall act of Chriſts: for then Chriſt is portrayed, not by way of any ſpeciall reſemblance, but with relation to the demonſtration of ſome thing acted.

Gen. 1. 26.

Secondly, if it be not lawfull to haue the image of Chriſt, much more vnlawfull is to worſhip or adore it: 1. it is contrary to the ſecond commandement to make the likeneſſe or image of any thing to fall downe and worſhip it. 2. The Angell, who is to be preferred before a dead image, would not ſuffer Iohn to worſhip him, but bid him worſhip God. 3, We haue the decree of a generall councell againſt the adoration of images, Conſtantinop. 7. ex Nicen. 2 action. 6. tom. 6. Qui imaginem ab hoc die ſibi auſus fuerit parare, vel adorare in eccleſia, &c. He that from henceforth dare prepare to himſelfe or adore an image in the Church, if a clergy man, let him be deſpoſed; if a lay man, let him be accurſed. Epheſ. 2.20.

Confutat. 1. THe Scripture ſaith, that Chriſt onely hath the Key of Dauid, which openeth; and no man ſhutteth, The adminiſtration and diſpenſation of the keyes is no more committed to Peter, than to the reſt: for Saint Paul ſaith, that the Church is built vpon the foundation of the Apoſtles, None are excepted, whereupon Saint Ierome ſaith, Eccleſia ex æquo fundatur ſuper omnes Apoſtolos: the Church is equally founded vpon all the Apoſtles. *aduerſ. Iouinian. lib.*1.

Matth.28.22. Epheſ. 4.16. Chriſt needeth no Vicar.

2. Neither Saint Peter, nor yet the Pope need to be Chriſts vicar, for he hath promiſed himſelfe to be with vs to the end of the world. And therefore by Saint Paul, our Sauiour is compared to the head, by whom all the body is coupled together. That as the head needeth no vicariall ſubſtitute in the body, no more doth Chriſt in his Church.

The Pope not Peters ſucceſſor.

3. Neither can the Pope challenge to be Saint Peters ſucceſſor, vnleſſe he ſucceeded him in life and doctrine: as Saint Ambroſe: Non habent Petri hæreditatem, qui fidem Petri non habent: They haue not Peters inheritance, that haue not Peters faith.

The Pope not greater then other Biſhops in their dioceſſe.

4. Howſoeuer it is, the Biſhop of Rome hath no more authority than other Biſhops haue, as S. Ierome ſaith; Vbicunque fuerit epiſcopus, ſiue Engubij, ſiue Conſtantinopli, ſiue Alexandriæ, eiuſdem meriti, eiuſdem eſt ſacerdotij, &c. potentia diuitiarum & paupertatis humilitas vel inferiorem, vel ſublimiorem epiſcopum non facit: Cæterum omnes Apoſtolorum ſucceſſores ſunt, &c. quid mihi profers vnius vrbis conſuetudinem, &c. Whereſoeuer a Biſhop is, whether at Eugubium, at Conſtanſtinople, or Alexandria, he is of the ſame worthineſſe, of the ſame prieſthood: the power of riches, and baſenes of pouerty make not an higher or inferior Biſhop: but they are all the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles, &c. what do you alleage the cuſtome of one City, ad Euagr. If then a Iubile were to be celebrated among Chriſtians, the Biſhop of Rome hath no more power to preſcribe the ſame, than other Biſhops haue in their dioceſſe: it is but a tricke of his ambitious humor, thus to perke aboue other his fellow Biſhops.

The Papiſts.

19. Error. The Popes Iubile ſcandalous in reſpect of the Iewes.

4. THe popiſh inſtitution of the Iubile is alſo ſcandalous to the Iewes, and is a cauſe to harden and confirme them in their blindneſſe. 1. For when will they learne to know Chriſt, and acknowledge the Meſſias to be come, when they ſee their owne ceremonious obſeruations yet to be in force, and the Iubile, which was a type of the true Iubile and yeare of remiſſion in Chriſt, to be ſo ceremoniouſly obſerued?

2. Saint Ambroſe writeth a vehement Epiſtle to Theodoſius, diſſwading him from repayring a Iewiſh ſynagogue, which was burnt, and amongſt other excellent perſwaſions he thus ſaith, Quomodo poterit nos Chriſtus iuuare, qui pro Iudæis aduerſus Chriſtum militamus: How can we thinke, that Chriſt ſhould helpe vs, which doe warre with the Iewes againſt Chriſt, *epiſtol.*29. And what is this elſe, but to fight for the Iewes againſt Chriſt, in ſeeking to nouriſh their obſtinacy by retaining and reuiuing of their ceremonies?

3. Saint Paul ſaith, 1 *Cor.*10.32. See that you giue no offence to the Iewes: Origen allo ſaith; Qui ſcandali conſcius eſt animam dabit pro anima eius, quem ſcandalizauit: Hee that is guilty of offence, ſhall giue his ſoule for his, whom he offended, *Hom.*10.in Exod. Looke to it then ye Romaniſts, that by your ſuperſtitious rites doe not onely offend the people of God, but doe obdurate the hard hearted Iewes, how ye will make anſwer for this your doing before the tribunall of Chriſt.

The Papiſts.

20. Error. The ceremonies of the Popes Iubilee ridiculous.

LAſtly the manner of their Iubile pompe, and oſtentation is ridiculous; as may appeare by theſe particulars.

1. The Pope going vpon the Natiuity eeuen, to the Chappell of the Apoſtolicall pallace, falleth downe vpon his knees before the ſacrament, powring incenſe vpon it.

2. Certaine waxe candels, are lighted, and giuen to the Pope and Cardinals weighing each three pound a peece, with the which they goe in proceſſion.

3. Then the Pope from thence is carried in his chaire vpon mens ſhoulders to Saint Peters gate, where he goeth vp into a higher ſeat.

4. The Pope ſtriketh three blowes vpon the gate with a golden hammer.

5. Then he pronounceth theſe verſes: Open vnto me the gates of iuſtice, &c. Lord I will goe into thy houſe, &c.

6. The Church gate being walled vp, then the maſons with tooles breake it downe, and ſpeedily all the people as in the twinkling of an eye, moued with deuotion doe carry away all the rubbiſh and morter.

7. Then the Pope ſaieth this verſicle: This is the day which the Lord hath made, let vs reioyce and be glad in it, &c.

8. Then the Pope prayeth thus: Lord, who by by ſeruant Moſes didſt appoint for thy people of Iſraell the yeere of Iubile and remiſſion of ſinnes, grant to vs thy grace, &c: happily to begin this yeere of Iubile, &c.

9. Then the Pope entring by the gate of the Church, is borne in his chaire by the officers to the high altar in Saint Peters Church.

10. Then he deſcendeth, and prayeth before the altar; then he aſcendeth into an other ſeate higher and more eleuated: ex libr. ceremoniar. ann. Iubilei, &c.

Confutat. 1. Where hath the Pope learned to worſhip a wafer cake or a peece of bakers bread? for if he thinke it is the body of Chriſt, he maketh S. Peter a lyar, who ſaith, Whom the heauens muſt containe, vntill the time that all things be reſtored. 2. Chriſt, wheresoeuer, is in his humanity to bee worſhipped of Angels, Heb. 1.6. Let all the Angels of God worſhip him: If you can ſhew vs, that euer Angels worſhipped the Bread in the Sacrament, we are ſatisfied. 3. As Chriſt ſaith, Me you ſhall not haue alwayes, that is, to annoint with oyle, as this woman now doth: no more haue wee now the Body of Chriſt to powre incenſe vpon it. 1. Acts 3.21. Prou.13.18. 1 Sam.3.3.

3. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, I will come into thine houſe in the multitude of thy mercies, and in thy feare worſhip toward thy holy temple: How much vnlike is the Pope to this kingly Prophet: he commeth to Gods houſe in feare and humility, the Pope is carried vpon mens ſhoulders: Dauid daunceth before the Arke going on foote, 2 Sam.6.16. the Pope diſdaineth to goe on foote, or to ride on horſe, but maketh men his vaſſailes, to take him vpon their backes. 3. Pſalm.5.7.

4. What meaneth this knocking thrice vpon the gate? 1. if it be but the gate of S. Peters Church, the Clarke or Sextin hath the keyes, which are at the Popes commandement, he need not knocke ſo often. 2. if it repreſent the gate of Paradiſe, he hath the keyes himſelfe, and may enter without knocking. 3. Or if the Angels keepe Paradiſe gate, as they did the terreſtiall Paradiſe with a fiery ſword; the Pope need not knocke as a ſuter, ſeeing he taketh vpon him to bee a commander of Angels: as Clement the ſixth in his Bull, ſaith thus: mandamus Angelis, &c. we command the Angels, &c. 4.

5. Firſt, if they be the gates of iuſtice, which you would haue opened, they are for the iuſt and righteous to enter into: I doubt then that the Pope with his Cardinals, and many of his retinue muſt ſtand by that ſuffer ſuch iniuſtice and vncleanneſſe to be committed vnder their noſes, being acceſſary vnto it themſelues, in ſpilling the blood of many innocent ſoules, robbing of mens purſes with their Iubilee illuſions, and ſuffering that Citty to abound with adultery and ſodomitrie. 2. How can hee ſay, I will come into thy houſe, when it is S. Peters Church, and conſecrated to his honour: but God will haue no partner in his houſe: And doe ye thinke that the gates of Gods houſe are open onely at Rome, and is the ſcala cœli there onely pitched, to climbe vp to heauen by? 5.

6. If Paradiſe gate be but mured vp with a maſons wall, what need the Pope be ſent for to make a way with his Iubile hammer: a maſon with his tooles may ſuffice to enter. 6.

7. And it is falſe that the Lord made that day or yeere of Iubilee, it was Boniface the eighth, not God, nor yet a good man, who firſt conſtituted the Iubilee euery hundred yeere after the example of the Roman heatheniſh playes, that were celebrated euery hundreth yeere; of this Pope it is ſaid, he entred like a fox, raigned like a lyon, dyed like of dog. 7.

8. Moſes indeed by Gods commandement erected a Iubile for the Iewes: if the Pope will alſo be a Iubile maker for Chriſtians, let him ſhew his warrant, as Moſes could: and if you imitate Moſes Iubilee of fifty yeeres, why doth Pope Clement the eighth, in his late Bull commend the hundreth yeere of Iubilee, which was no conſtitution of Moſes? 8.

9. And muſt the Pope be borne on mens ſhoulders in the Church, doth he enter in pride by the gate of humility: and vniuſtly making mens ſhoulders as aſſes backes, who are his brethren, to come in by the gate of iuſtice? 9.

10. And can he not be contented to be higher than men, riding vpon their ſhoulders, but he muſt alſo be higher than God ſitting aboue his Altar: what intollerable pride is this? the Angels, that would ſit in Gods throne were caſt downe; and this prince of pride, that will ſit higher than his maker aboue the Altar, muſt looke for a downe fall. 10.

It is well noted by Gregory vpon theſe words of the Lord ſpoken to Ezechiel: Stand vpon thy feete: Stans propheta viſionem ſpiritualem videt: The Prophet ſtanding doth ſee the ſpirituall viſion, hom.9. in Ezech. And the Prophet Dauid ſaith, The humble will he teach his way: Therefore it is not like that God will reueale his ſecrets to the Pope ſitting in the chaire of pride. Ezech.2.1. Pſalm.25.9.

Thus we ſee, with what ridiculous toyes and ſuperſtitious ceremonies the Pope beginneth, and endeth his yeere of Iubile; ſo that as Auguſtine well ſaith, as he is alſo cited in their owne decrees, Dict.12.c.12. Tolerabilior eſt conditio Iudæorum qui licet tempus libertatis non agnouerint, legalib. tamen Sacramentis, non humanis præſumptionibus ſubijciuntur: So that the condition of the Iewes is more tolerable, who though they knew not the time of liberty, yet are ſubiect to legall Sacraments, not humane preſumptions.

Let vs here ſee the iudgement and practice of other Churches concerning this Iewiſh institution of the Iubilee, and going in pilgrimage to Rome for that cauſe.

1. Gregory Nyſſenus doth by many forceable perſwaſions dehort from going in pilgrimage to Ieruſalem: Quid plus eſt habiturus, qui locos illos adit, What is he like to haue more, that goeth to thoſe places? as though the ſpirit of God be onely at Ieruſalem, and cannot come to vs? If there were more grace at Ieruſalem, Illic viuentium peccatum non tam frequens eſſet, They which liue there would not Orat. de iis, qui adeunt Ieruſal.

ſo abound in ſinne, &c. and ſo he concludeth, counſell the brethren, vt è corpore peregrinentur ad Dominum, that they goe in pilgrimage out of the body to the Lord, not out of Cappadocia to Paleſtina: All this may be fitly applyed againſt thoſe, which viſit Rome for the Iubile ſake: Rome is no more priuiledged than Ieruſalem, neither are they which liue there more holy, then were than the inhabitants of the other.

Elucidor. error. c.2. err.12. The rude Muſcovites are herein better aduiſed: they allow neither of indulgences, nor Iubiles, as Sacranus reporteth: and the reaſon is, as Faber writeth: Vt ne ſcintillam veteris & aboliti Iudaiſmi obſeruent, That they obſerue not any iot of aboliſhed Iudaiſme: whereof it is, that they will not ſuffer a Iew to remaine among them, though they would offer them millions.

Vid. Anton. 2. Antonius that ancient Egyptian Monke thus deliuereth his opinion of pilgrimages: Nulla nobis proficiſcendi neceſſitas imminet: in omni ſede terrarum conſtituta ſunt regna cœlorum: We haue no neceſſity to trauell, in euery land the kingdome of heauen is appointed, as the Lord ſaith in the Goſpell, the kingdome of God is within you, &c. Then the celebration of the Iubile is no cauſe to draw people to Rome, if at home the kingdome of heauen be open.

Decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 34. c.7. Iohn 4.23. 4. Innocentius 3. one of their moſt learned Popes, thus aduiſeth a certaine Biſhop, who had made a vow to goe to Ieruſalem: Iam impletum eſt illud verbum Dei dicentis: Now is fulfilled that ſaying of God: The houre commeth and now is, when neither in this mountaine, nor at Ieruſalem they ſhall worſhip my father, but the true worſhipper ſhall worſhip the Father in ſpirit: Whereupon he thus inferreth: Videri poteras, quod non minus in tua eccleſia, quam in orientali terra proficeres pijs orationibus: Thou mighteſt ſeeme to profit no leſſe by thy godly prayers in thine owne Church, than in the Eaſt countrey, &c. And by the ſame reaſon as well may a man ſerue God at home, as in going to ſee the Iubile at Rome. And concerning the inſtitution of the Iubile, their owne Maſſonius maketh couetouſneſſe the cauſe thereof, ſpeaking of the gold and riches, Quas pontifex populuſque Romanus illo Iubileo congeſſere, which the Biſhop (namely Boniface 8.) and the people of Rome gathered in that Iubile. And Binius ſaith of the ſame Pope, that he was, vir ſupra modum ambitioſus: A man ambitious beyond meaſure? Is it not like to be a faire child, that is begotten of two ſuch monſtrous mothers, couetouſneſſe and ambition?

And thus much of the firſt controuerſie of the Romane Iubile, and the ſeuerall parts thereof.

THE SECOND CONTROVERSIE, OF INDVLGENCES AND IVBILE PARDONS.

This controuerſie is deuided into eight ſeuerall parts. Firſt, of the name of Indulgence. Secondly, whether there be any Indulgences, and of the Spirituall treaſure of the Church. Thirdly, what Indulgence is. Fourthly, of the diuers kinds of Indulgences. Fifthly, of the fruit and vtility of Indulgences. Sixthly, to whom the power of granting Indulgences belongeth. Seuenthly, of the diſpoſition of them that muſt receiue Indulgences. Eightly, whether Indulgences doe any way profit the dead.

The firſt part, of the name of Indulgence.

The Papiſts.

21. Errour. Iſay 6.61. 1 Cor. 7.6. Bellarmine taketh this word Indulgence to ſignifie remiſſionem pœnarum, quæ remanent luendæ poſt remiſſionem culparum: The remiſſion of the puniſhments, which remaine to be ſatisfied for, after the remiſſion of the faults, lib.1. de Indulg. c.1. And whereas he produceth two ſignifications of this word: that firſt it betokeneth remiſſion. 1. Prædicare captiuis indulgentiam: To preach indulgence to the Captiues. Secondly, it ſignifieth facilitie, This I ſpeake by way of indulgence or conceſſion, &c. Of theſe two ſignifications, they make one, compounding them together: and ſo take Indulgence for a remiſſion of the puniſhment onely of fauour. Bellarm. ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Firſt the place alleadged out of Eſay is directly againſt them, for Saint Luke interpreting that place, readeth for Indulgence, ἄφεσιν, remiſſion of ſinnes, not of the puniſhment only: ſo then Indulgence properly ſignifieth remiſſion of ſinnes.

Secondly, the place alledged out of Saint Paul is impertinent: for there Indulgence is taken for conceſſion: as Peter Lombard very well ſheweth that Indulgence is taken three wayes, for remiſſion, permiſſion, conceſſion, lib.4. diſt.16. liter. d. and he vnderſtandeth Saint Paul to ſpeake here of conceſſion: but it is very improper to take Indulgence for conceſſion, licence, or a grant, when we ſpeake of ſinnes and the paine due vnto them, both which are pardoned, not by conceſſion, but by remiſſion.

Thirdly, the Fathers ſo vnderſtand Indulgence for the remiſſion of the ſinne it ſelfe, as Auguſtine: Securus ſum, quando me correxero, dat Deus Indulgentiam, &c. I am ſecure, if I doe amend my ſelfe, God will giue me Indulgence, Serm.16. in Matth. And againe, Vt ad peccatorum mereamur Indulgentiam peruenire &c. That we may be meete to come or attaine to the Indulgence of our ſinnes: Serm. de tempor.210.

Fourthly, ſometime Indulgence is otherwiſe taken, but then it ſignifieth a conceſſion of reward, not a remiſſion of puniſhment, as Ambroſe taketh it: Hora vndecima intromiſſos in vineam totius diei operarijs diuina indulgentia exæquauit: The diuine Indulgence did make them, which were ſent into the vineyard at the eleuenth houre equall to them, which laboured all day.

Fifthly, the Ciuill law, which he wreſteth to the contrary, ſo taketh this word Indulgence, for a whole remiſſion of puniſhment and fault committed againſt the law: the law maketh two kinds of Indulgences: there is Indulgentia generalis vel ſimplex, a generall or ſimple Indulgence; and indulgentia ſpecialis a ſpeciall indulgence: the ſimple or generall indulgence did not remit all the puniſhment: as Cod.lib.9. tit.51.leg.2. Antonin. Non ideo quod indulgentia mea pœna metalli liberatus eſſet, etiam bonorum reſtitutionem impetrauit: Becauſe by my Indulgence hee is freed from the mettall mines, he hath not therefore obtained reſtitution to his goods. But the ſpeciall indulgence remitted both the penaltie and the infamy, ibid. leg. 10. Dioclet. And leg.4. Alexander. Ex indulgentia reuerſus non tenetur creditoribus: He that is returned from exile by indulgence, is not bound to his creditors: And Leg.1. Antonin. This ſpeciall indulgence was in integrum reſtitutio: a reſtitution to the whole: Vt ſcias quid ſit in integrum reſtituere: honoribus & ordini tuo & omnibus cæteris te reſtituo: That you may know, what it is to reſtore wholly: I reſtore thee to thy order, to thy honour, and all the reſt: this then is the ſentence of the law: Sententiæ ſeueritas cum cæteris damnis tranſigere videtur: The ſeueritie of the ſentence doth paſſe together with all other dammages and inconueniences, Cod.lib.2.tit.12.leg.4.Seuer. That is, where the penaltie of the ſentence was remitted, there all other inconueniences as the infamy, diſhonour, tranſgreſſion, offence, were releaſed, which were ſequels of the ſentence: ex quo pœna remiſſa, & ſequela pœnæ, quæ eſt infamia: The penaltie being remitted, the ſequell thereof, which is the infamy, is pardoned: ſo ſaith the law, Cod. lib. 2. tit. 12. leg.3. in gloſſ.

Of the acceptation and vſe of this word indulgence.

The ſecond part, whether there be any Indulgence in the Church.

This part hath two queſtions. Firſt, of the ſpirituall treaſure of the Church. Secondly, of the power in diſtributing the ſame.

The firſt Queſtion, of the ſpirituall treaſure of the Church: which is diuided into foure propoſitions.

The firſt propoſition, whether good workes be meritorious and ſatisfactory.

The Papiſts.

22. Error.

This propoſition is affirmed by Bellarmine, that there is a double price in good works, namely of merit and ſatisfaction, the firſt procureth the reward, the ſecond redeemeth the puniſhment.

First, good works are ſatisfactory. 1. Almes, Tob.4.10. Almes deliuer from death. Eccleſiaſticus.3.33. As water quencheth fire, ſo almes take away ſinnes. 2. Faſting is ſatisfactorie, as appeareth by the example of the Niniuites. 3. Prayer doth ſatisfie for ſinne, as Matth.6.12. We pray for forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: and by this petition ſatisfie for our veniall ſinnes.

1 Tob 4. 10.
2 Eccl. 3. 33.
3 Matth.6.12.

Secondly, the ſame good workes likewiſe are meritorious, 1. Almes, Matth.25.34. Inherit the kingdome prepared for you, for when I was hungry, ye gaue me meate. 2. Faſting doth merit, Matth.6. verſ.8. Your father which ſeeth in ſecret will reward you openly. 3. So likewiſe God is ſaid, verſ.6. To reward prayer openly.

3 Matth.6.6.

Confutat. Firſt, the places alleadged prooue no ſatisfaction in our works. 1. You muſt bring better Scripture than Toby or Eccleſiaſticus (which are not Canonicall) to confirme a point of faith: and yet we denie not but almes may be ſaid to deliuer, not as cauſes of our deliuerance, Pſal.41.1. but as liuely ſignes of our faith, whereby we are delivered, as, Bleſſed is he that iudgeth wiſely of the poore, the Lord ſhall deliuer him: a man is firſt made bleſſed by the not imputation of his ſinnes by Pſal.32.1. faith. This bleſſedneſſe is teſtified by his charity, and rewarded of God in mercy, by deliverance.

2. Ionas 3.10. 2. The Ninivites faſting ſatisfied not for their ſinne, but only teſtified their repentance, God ſaw their workes, that they turned from their euill waies: which repentance God accepted in mercy: otherwiſe how could the Ninivites being idolaters and ignorant of God, merit or ſatisfie.

3. 3. The Lords prayer overthroweth ſatisfaction: for we conclude, for thine is the glory: we take not the glory to our ſelues, but aſcribe all to God: forgiueneſſe of the debt is of mercy: where then there is remiſſion of grace, there can be no ſatiſfaction of worthineſſe.

Secondly, prayer, almes, faſting, are rewarded we grant, but not for the worthineſſe of the worke, but through the gracious acceptance of God. Firſt, the kingdome is prepared from the foundations of the world, Matth.25.34. How then can it be merited? Secondly, When we haue done all that wee are commanded, we muſt ſay we are vnprofitable ſeruants, Luke 17.10. Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe ſaith, De vocat. gent. lib.1. cap.5. Nulla poſſe tam præclara opera exiſtere, quibus hoc, quod gratis tribuitur, per retributionis iudicium retribuatur: There can be no ſuch excellent workes, to the which, that which is freely giuen, is rendred by the right of retribution, &c. But of this queſtion of the merit and ſatisfaction of good workes, we haue treated before in the controverſie of good workes, that it were needleſſe and ſuperfluous now to handle the ſame matter againe, whither I referre the Reader.

The ſecond propoſition, whether good works, as they are ſatisfactory, may be applied vnto others.

The Papiſts.

23. Error. BEllarmine alleadgeth Scripture to prooue that good workes as they are meritorious, cannot be communicated to others, which we willingly grant, for a man cannot merit for himſelfe, much leſſe for others: but to confirme this propoſition, that one may ſatisfie for another, he alleadgeth no Scripture at all, lib.1. de Indulgen.c.2. propoſ.2.

The Proteſtants.

THe contrary is moſt evident out of Scripture, that all which a man can doe is little enough, yea and to little for himſelfe, much leſſe can he ſatisfie for another.

Matth.25.9. Matth.25.9. The wiſe Virgins make this anſwer to the fooliſh, We feare there will not bee enough for vs and you: whereupon Auguſtine thus writeth: Vnuſquiſque pro ſe rationem reddet, nec alieno teſtimonio quicquam adiuvatur apud Deum, cui ſecreta cordis apparent, & vix ſibi quiſque ſufficit, cui teſtimonium perhibeat conſcientia ſua: Euery man ſhall giue account for himſelfe: neither is a man helped by anothers teſtimonie before God, to whom the ſecrets of the heart are evident: every man ſcarce ſufficeth for himſelfe, to whom his owne conſcience doth beare witneſſe: ſerm.22. in Matth.

But if the other words, that follow, be obiected: Goe to them rather that ſell, and buy for your ſelues, One cannot ſatisfie for an other. Matth.25.9. Origen ſhall make anſwer, who vnderſtandeth by thoſe that ſell, the Doctors and Teachers of the Church: Non omnium habentium oleum, eſt etiam dare ex eo alijs, &c. It is not the part of all that haue oyle to giue to others, but it belongeth only to them, which are appointed to ſell it: Congregavit aliquis doctrinam, quæ ei ſufficit ad bene vivendum, non tamen, vt doctor fieri poſſit: One hath gathered doctrine, which may be ſufficient for himſelfe to liue well, but not to be a Doctor or teacher to others: Tract.32. in Matth.

The third propoſition, of the ſpirituall treaſure of the Church.

The Papiſts.

1. Acts 20.28. IT is affirmed that there is an infinite treaſure of the ſatisfactions purchaſed by the paſſion of Chriſt extant in the Church, as it is written, which he hath purchaſed with his owne bloud. Secondly, where2. 1 Iohn 2.2. as Chriſt died for all, as Saint Iohn ſaith, He is the reconciliation for the ſinnes of the whole world: and 24. Error. yet the price of Chriſts blood hath not beene applyed to all, the moſt part of men being ſubiect to condemnation: there remaineth then a great deale of the price of Chriſts death, yet to be applied: 3. Bellarm. cap.2. prop.3.

The Proteſtants.

1. FIrſt, we acknowledge that the price or vertue of Chriſts blood is infinite, and remaineth in his Church, as a rich treaſure, that can never be ſpent; as a fountaine that can never be dryed vp; as precious balme, that healeth alwaies effectually: and therefore the Apoſtle calleth it, the riches of his Epheſ.1.18. glorious inheritance, and the exceeding greatnes of his power toward vs, which beleeue. And as one ſaith: Effuſio iuſti ſanguinis Chriſti tam dives fuit ad precium, vt ſi vniverſitas captivorum in redemptorem ſuum crederet, nullum diaboli vincula retinerent: The effuſion of Chriſts righteous blood is ſo rich in price, that if all the captiues did beleeue in their Redeemer, the diuels bands could hold none: ex. epiſt. Gal.

Secondly,

2. Secondly, but it is vntrue that Chriſt dyed vniuerſally for the whole world, in this ſenſe, that is, for all men whatſoeuer: for Chriſt vouchſafeth not to pray for the world: I pray not for the world, but for thoſe which thou haſt giuen me: much leſſe then died he for the world. The Apoſtle then by the world vnderſtandeth the whole companie of the people of God, for whom Chriſt died: As S. Ambroſe well noteth: Habet populus dei plenitudinem ſuam, &c. & in electis, &c. ſpecialis quadam cenſetur vniuerſitas, vt de toto mundo totus mundus liberatus, &c. The people of God then hath a certaine fulneſſe: and there is a ſpeciall kinde of vniuerſalitie in the elect, ſo that the whole world ſeemeth to be deliuered out of the whole world: lib.1.de vocat. Gent.c,3.

Whether Chriſt died for all in generall. Iohn 17.9.

3. Thirdly, it is alſo vntrue that any, for whom Chriſt died, are ſubiect to condemnation, or that the price of his blood can be applyed to any, that are not ordained vnto life: Chriſt prayeth thus, Ioh.17.24. I will that they whom thou haſt giuen me, be with me where I am: Chriſt prayeth, that all, which are giuen him, for whom he died, ſhould come to euerlaſting glorie: but Chriſts prayer was alwaies effectuall: as hee himſelfe ſaith, Ioh.11.42. Thou heareſt me alwaies. Saint Ambroſe alſo ſaith: Chriſtus mortem vincens omnibus, qui ſunt ex eius corpore, vitam acquiſiuit: Chriſt ouercomming death, hath purchaſed or obtained life to all, that are of his bodie, in 1.Cor.15. All then, that are of his bodie, haue ſurely life, and cannot periſh, nor be condemned.

To whom Chriſts death is applyed.

The fourth propoſition, whether the paſsions and ſatisfactions of the Saints belong to this treaſure of the Church.

The Papiſts.

TO this treaſure of the Church belong the paſſions of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, and of all other Saints, who ſuffered more than their ſinnes required, Bellarm.lib.1. de indulgent.cap.2.propoſ.4. And in the Bull of Clement.6. it thus ſtandeth: Ad cuius theſauri cumulum beatæ Dei genetricis, & omnium iuſtorum merita adminiculum præſtare noſcuntur: To the heape of which treaſure doe adde helpe, the merits of the mother of our Lord and of all Saints: Extrau. commun.lib.5.tit,9.c.2.

35. Error.

1. Argum. 1. Mary had neither actuall nor originall ſinne to ſuffer for, and therefore her ſufferings are communicable to others.

2. Iohn alſo was of a moſt innocent life, and was ſubiect ſcarce to the leaſt ſinnes, and therefore he had no need of his faſting, auſtere life, impriſonment, death, to ſatisfie for himſelfe.

3. Likewiſe the Prophets ſufferings were beyond their ſinnes: as Iob complaineth, I would that my ſinnes, whereby I haue deſerued wrath, and the calamitie which I ſuffer, were laid in a balance; as the ſand of the ſea this would appeare more heauie. Iob 6.1.

4. Saint Pauls ſufferings were many and great: as he doth reckon them vp, 2.Cor.11.26. yet hee had no need of them himſelfe: for he ſaith, I know nothing by ſelfe. 1 Cor.4.4.

5. The martyrdome of the Saints is able to redeeme great offences: as Chriſt ſaith, Whoſoeuer confeſſeth me before men, him will I confeſſe before my father in heauen: But many of the Martyrs had ſmall offences at the time of their Martyrdome, and therefore there remaineth abundance of ſatisfaction for others: Bellarm.lib.1.de indulgen.c.2.prop.4. Matth.10.32.

1. Anſw. Firſt, 1. It is blaſphemie to ſay, that any man doth or hath ſuffered more, than his ſinnes require: for this were to accuſe God of iniuſtice, to lay vpon any man that which he hath not deſerued. But the Prophet ſaith otherwiſe, Lord if thou ſtraightly markeſt iniquities, who ſhall abide it? God laieth vpon no man ſo much as hee hath deſerued: much leſſe doth any ſuffer more. 2. As for the Virgin Mary, ſhe acknowledgeth Chriſt her Sauiour: My ſpirit reioyceth in God my Sauiour, and ſo conſequently confeſſeth her ſelfe a ſinner: for he is therefore called Ieſus, a Sauiour, becauſe hee ſhall ſaue the people from their ſinnes. 3. Saint Ambroſe accordingly ſaith: Non mirum ſi dominus redempturus mundum diuinam operationem ſuam inchoauit a matre, vt per quam ſalus omnibus parabatur, eadem prima fructum ſalutis hauriret ex pignore: No maruell, if the Lord being to redeeme the world, did begin his diuine worke in his mother, that ſhe, through whom ſaluation was in preparing for all, ſhould firſt receiue the benefit of ſaluation from her pledge or birth. lib.2.in 1. Luc. If ſhe receiued the benefit of ſaluation, what elſe was ſhe ſaued from, than her ſinnes?

Pſal.130 3. Luke 1.47. Matth.1.21. The Virgin Mary not free from ſinne.

2 Secondly, concerning Iohn Baptiſt, 1. we confeſſe he was an holy man, and endued with great grace, yet not without his ſinnes and corruptions: and therefore confeſſeth, that he had need to be baptized of Chriſt, which was, to remiſſion of ſinnes. 2. His afflictions were not laid vpon him as puniſhments for ſinne, but as Gods louing corrections to exerciſe his faith, and prepare him for his kingdome: As the Prophet Dauid ſaith, Before I was afflicted I went aſtray. Afflictions then to the righteous are not inflictions for their ſinne, but admonitions to encreaſe their vertue. 3. Of Iohn and of all other it is truly ſaid, as Hierome reciteth the Apoſtles words: Deus concluſit omnes ſub peccato, &c. God hath ſhut all vnder vnbeleefe, to haue mercy of all, abſque hoc qui peccatum non fecit: he onely excepted, that did no ſinne.

Matth.3.14. Pſal.119.67.

3. Thirdly, 1. Iob doth confeſſe himſelfe a great ſinner, that he could not anſwer God one thing of a thouſand, Iob 9.3. and he confeſſeth with Dauid, that God had afflicted him iuſtly, Pſal.119.75. for thus he ſaith, Iob 13.26. Thou makeſt me to poſſeſſe the iniquities of my youth.

Iob 9.3. chap.13.26. Pſal.119.75.

2. Concerning that place, Iob. 6.2 3. the Latine text doth tranſlate moſt corruptly. 1, There is no mention at all made of ſinnes, but the Hebrew word there vſed, ſignifieth wrath and indignation, which the 70. well expreſſe (ὀργὴν) 2. Where the Latine readeth, hac granior eſſet, this would be heauier, as though it were referred onely to his calamitie waighed againſt ſinne, the Septuagint well expreſſe the ſenſe of the Hebrew (though the ſingular number bee vſed) βαρύτερα, grauiora ſunt, are heauier in the plurall. 3 The Latine ſaith, quaſi arena, as the ſand: ſo is not the Hebrew מחול meecol; which ſignifieth præ arena, in reſpect of the ſand, or than the ſand: as the Septuagint readeth: ſo that this is the meaning, if his griefe and vexation were put into a balance, and weighed with the ſand, they would be found heauier than it: for who can endure this ſenſe, that his afflictions in reſpect his his ſinne were as a light thing to the ſand?

Iobs ſufferings whether greater thē his ſins.

4 Fourthly, 1. Saint Paul doth frankly confeſſe of himſelfe, Chriſt came into the world to ſaue ſinners, of whom I am chiefe: If he acknowledge himſelfe a ſinner, what reaſon hath any man to extenuate it. 2. He knew nothing by himſelfe: that is, in reſpect of the faithfull diſcharging of his calling, whereof he ſpake before: his conſcience therein did not accuſe him, yet he ſaith, hee was not thereby iuſtified. Much leſſe then is Saint Paul able to iuſtifie another. 3. He ſaith, That I may bee found in him not hauing mine owne righteouſneſſe. If S. Paul diſclaimeth his owne righteouſneſſe, how can it be a ſatisfaction for vs?

1 Tim.1.15. Paul not able to iuſtifie himſelf, much leſſe others. 1 Cor.4.3. Philip.3.9.

5 Fifthly, 1. The Martyrdome of the Saints was profitable to themſelues, God crowning their patience with immortalitie, through Chriſt: but they are not auaileable to vs, but onely for example: ſo S. Paul ſaith, was Paul crucified for you? Saint Ambroſe ſaith well: Pendebat in cruce filius, &c. While her ſonne hanged vpon the croſſe, Mary offered her ſelfe to the perſecutors, Si forte ſua morte publico muneri aliquid adderetur, ſed Chriſti paſſio adiutore non eguit: If ſo ſhee by her death might adde any thing to the publike benefit; but Chriſts paſſion needed no helper: Inſtitut. virg. c.5. If the ſufferings of Mary could adde nothing to Chriſts paſſion, much leſſe the afflictions of others.

1 Cor.1.13.

The Proteſtants.

THat the ſufferings of the Saints muſt be added to Chriſts ſatisfactions to make vp the treaſure of the Church: we iudge it a moſt horrible blaſphemie, which hath diſliked ſome of the Papiſts themſelues: as Durand. in 4. diſt. 20. queſt. 3. whoſe arguments I will propound.

1. The Saints ſatisfactions not to be ioyned with Chriſts.

Argum. 1. The ſatisfaction of Chriſt is of infinite vertue, and therefore there is no need, that the ſatisfactions of the Saints ſhould be ioyned vnto them.

2 Rom.8.18.

2. The Saints are already abundantly rewarded, and farre aboue their deſert, as the Apoſtle ſaith, I count that the afflictions of this preſent time are not worthy of the glorie, which ſhall be reuealed: wherefore the Saints ſufferings being ſo fully alreadie recompenſed, cannot helpe toward the expiation of the ſinnes of others.

3. Luke 17.10. Matth.25.9.

3. The Saints neither did, nor ſuffered any thing which they were not bound in dutie to doe and ſuffer: as appeareth, We are vnprofitable ſeruants, we did that which was our dutie to doe: And Mat.25.9. the wiſe virgins ſay, Leſt there will not be enough for you and vs: Ergo, the Saints haue nothing to communicate to others.

4. If by the Saints ſufferings our ſinnes could be expiated or redeemed, then might they bee counted our redeemers; but the Scripture onely acknowledgeth Chriſt our redeemer, Chriſt is made our righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, redemption.

1 Cor.1.30.

1. Anſw. 1. The Saints paſſions are ioyned vnto Chriſts ſufferings, not becauſe theſe are not ſufficient, but for that it is glorious vnto Chriſt, that the Saints ſufferings ſhould not be in vaine, ſeeing they receiue all their efficacy from Chriſt.

2. The Saints ſufferings as they are meritorious, are already abundantly rewarded; but as they are ſatisfactory, they ſhould be in vaine, vnleſſe they were imployed, in the expiation of other mens ſinnes, ſeeing the Saints needed not ſo great labours and ſufferings for themſelues.

3. Euen the obedience of the law, to the which the Saints are bound, is meritorious and ſatisfactory: the Virgins ſpeake not of ſatisfaction, but of the oyle of grace and charity, which euery one keepeth to kimſelfe, and cannot powre forth vpon another.

4. Properly and ſimply Chriſt is our redeemer, becauſe he redeemeth vs from our captiuity, but as a redeemer is largely taken for one that redeemeth from a ſmall debt, ſo the Saints may be ſaid to be our redeemers: if Nabuchadnezzer be adviſed by Daniel to redeeme his ſinnes by righteouſneſſe, much more the Saints may be ſaid to redeeme our ſinnes by their paſſions: and Saint Paul ſaith, I am made all things to all men, to ſaue ſome: why might he not be as well ſaid to redeeme them, as to ſaue them? ſeeing the name of Sauiour is as proper to Chriſt, as the name of Redeemer: Bellarm. lib. 1. de Indulgent. c. 4.

1. Cor.9.22.

1. 1 Cor.15.58. Iſay 63.5. Iſay 48.11.

Contra. 1. The paſſions of the Saints are not in vaine, though they be not ioyned to Chriſts, as ſatisfactory: as S. Paul ſheweth, Foraſmuch as ye know, that your labour is not in vaine in the Lord: that is, in reſpect of the reſurrection of the iuſt, when all their labours and trauailes ſhall be recompenſed. 2. It is inglorious for Chriſt to haue any ioyned vnto him as a helper: as the Prophet ſheweth, I looked, and there was none to helpe, therefore mine owne arme helped me. 3. Though the Saints receiue all their power and grace from Chriſt, yet they receiue no ſuch power, whereby to ſatisfie for others: for the Lord by the Prophet ſaith, I will not giue my glory to another.

1. If

2. 1. If the Saints ſufferings are rewarded as they are meritorious ; much more as they are ſatisfactory : for it is more to deſerue a reward, than to ſatisfie for a puniſhment : but the truth is, that the ſufferings of the Saints, doe neither merit nor yet ſatisfie the wrath of God, but yet their labours through Chriſt are abundantly recompenſed : Iacob confeſſeth, he was not worthy of the leaſt of Gods (temporall) mercies ; how much leſſe are the Saints worthie of eternall. 2. Their labours are not in Geneſ. 32.10.
vaine, though thereby they neither ſatisfie for themſelues nor others : for thereby their faith is exercised, and they learne obedience : It is good for me, that I haue beene afflicted, that I may learne thy ſtatutes.
3. And whereas he ſaith the Saints neede not ſo many ſufferings for themſelues, it is blaſphemie : Pſal. 119.71.
for Iob for all his vnſpeakable affliction confeſſeth, he did not anſwer God one thing of a thouſand: Iob. 9.3.
Quis amplius grunniet dicens, nimium laboramus, nimium ieiunamus, nimium vigilamus, cum nec milleſima, imo nec minima parti debitorum ſuorum valeat reſpondere: Who dare complaine from hencefoorth, and ſay, we labour too much, faſt too much, watch too much, when he cannot anſwer the thouſandth, nay not the leaſt part of his debt : ſer. de quadrupl. debit. Bernard.

3. Firſt, it is contrary to reaſon and Scripture, that a man ſhould merit by doing his dutie : our Sauiour ſaith, Doth he thanke that ſeruant, becauſe he did that, which was commanded him? I trow not : Luke 17.9.
if it be not thanke worthy, how is it meritorious or ſatisfactorie? Secondly, if the oyle of charity can not be communicated, then not the price of good workes, which proceede from charitie, being the fruites thereof : for no workes are good without charitie, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1. Cor. 13.3. then cannot a man lend the price of his workes, but he muſt alſo lend his charitie, which maketh them precious.
Thirdly, the virgins ſpeake of their iuſtice or righteouſneſſe, which they hold to bee little enough for themſelues: and ſo Bernard expoundeth, vpon theſe words, Mat. 25. 8. Giue vs of your Matth. 25.8.
oyle: Stulta petitio ; vix iuſtus ſaluabitur, vix ſanctis iuſtitia ſua oleum ſufficit ad ſalutem, quanto minus & ſibi & proximis : A fooliſh petition, the righteous ſhall ſcarce be ſaued, the oyle of their owne righteouſneſſe hardly ſufficeth the Saints to ſaluation, how much leſſe themſelues and their neighbours:
Noe, Daniel, Iob, ſhall not deliuer a ſonne or daughter, but like as the ſoule, that ſinneth, ſhall Ezech. 14.18.
die. Sic anima quæ iuſtitiam fecerit, ſola ſalvabitur : So that ſoule that doth righteouſneſſe, onely ſhall Ezech. 18.20.
be ſaued : Bernard. ſerm. de virgin.

clenſeth vs from all ſinne : and therefore the Saints cannot be ſaid to redeeme vs, no not from the leaſt 1. Ioh. 1.7. debt. Secondly, you tranſlate corruptly, Daniel biddeth him, not redeeme, but breake off his ſins by righteouſneſſe : And ſo man when hee beginneth to doe well, leaueth to doe euill, and by well doing breaketh off, or ſtoppeth the courſe of the ſinne. Thirdly, Paul ſaueth, not as Chriſt ſaueth: he as the author, Paul as the miniſter of reconciliation : but there can bee no redemption without paying of a 1. Cor. 5.18.
ranſome : Ye are bought for a price : This price becauſe no man could pay but Chriſt, no man can bee 1 Cor. 6. 20.
ſaid to redeeme but Chriſt, as the Apoſtle ſaith : Chriſt is made vnto vs our righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, 1 Cor. 1. 30.
redemption : as no man elſe can be ſaid to be our righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, ſo neither our redemption.

Peter Lombard alſo ſheweth, how Chriſt propriè dicitur redemptor : is properly called the redeemer, in reſpect of the Father and Sonne, who are called alſo Redeemers, but not ſo propperly, lib. 3. diſtinct. 19. liter. e. Whereby he inſinuateth, that no creature either properly, or improperly can bee called a Redeemer,

The ſecond Queſtion, of the power of diſtributing the ſpirituall treaſure and Indulgence of the Church.

The firſt Propoſition, whether the ſatisfactions of the Saints may be communicated to others.

The Papiſts.

THat the ſufferings and ſatisfactions of the Saints may be applyed to others, thus they labour to 26. Error.
proue it :
1. Firſt, by that article of the Creede, I beleeue the communion of Saints : therefore their ſatisfactions are communicable. 1 Cor. 12. 15.
2. Secondly, Saint Paul ſaith, I will moſt gladly beſtow and be beſtowed for your ſoules.
Thirdly, Now reioyce I in my ſufferings for you, and fulfill the reſt of the afflictions of Chriſt in my fleſh Coloſſ. 1. 24.
3. for his bodie ſake, which is the Church : Saint Paul did communicate his ſufferings and ſatisfactions to the faithfull : Bellar. in lib. 1. de Indulg. c. 3. propoſ. 1. Rhemiſt. annot. in hunc locum.

The Proteſtants.

Confut. FIrſt, 1. the argument followeth not, there is a communion of Saints : Ergo, ſatisfactions are communicable : the communion is in things communicable, but ſatisfactions they cannot communicate, becauſe they haue them not. 2. If they had ſatisfactions and merits, yet they could no more applie them vnto others, than they doe their faith, which is proper to euery man :
The iuſt ſhall liue by faith. 3. This communion conſiſteth in the mutuall helpe and aſſiſtance Rom. 1. 17.

Rom.1.9. 1 Theſſ.4.18. 1 Theſſ.5.11. 2 Pet.1.13.

of one another, as by prayer, Without ceaſing I make mention of you: By mutuall comfort, Comfort one another: by exhortation, Exhort one another: by teaching, I thinke it meete to ſtirre you vp by putting you in remembrance. 4. So Origen ſaith: Cæteri precibus peccata, hic ſolus poteſtate dimiſit: Others (namely the Apoſtles, of whom he ſpeaketh) remit ſinnes by their prayers, Chriſt by his power, Hom.24. in Numer. Chriſt onely then hath power to ſatisfie.

Philip.2.17.

Secondly, how Saint Paul would be beſtowed, he ſheweth Philip.2.17. he would bee offered vp for the ſeruice, λειτουργία, of their faith: His death then ſerued not for ſatisfaction, but for confirmation of their faith. As Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Chriſti paſſio nobis ſufficit ad ſalutem; Petri & Pauli, contulit ad exemplum: Chriſts paſſion ſufficeth to ſaluation: Peter and Pauls paſſion ſerue for example and confirmation, ſerm.66.

The ſufferings of the Saints ſerue for confirmation of others, not for ſatisfaction.

Thirdly, 1. Saint Paul expoundeth himſelfe in the next verſe, how he ſuffereth for the Churches ſake, Coloſſ.1 25. Whereof I am a Miniſter according to the diſpenſation of God, which is giuen mee to you ward, to fulfill the word of God. He did not then ſatisfie for others by his ſufferings, but thereby miniſter to their faith: that by his patience and example of ſuffering, the Word of God might be fulfilled, that is, generally receiued, and freely confeſſed of the brethren: as he himſelfe againe ſaith, Philip.1.13. My bands in Chriſt are famous throughout all the iudgement hall, and in all other places; in ſo much that many of the brethren in the Lord are boldened through my bands, and dare more franckely ſpeake the word.

2. Saint Auguſtine thus interpreteth: Non dixit preſſurarum mearum, ſed Chriſti, quia membrum erat Chriſti, & in perſecutionibus ſuis, quales Chriſtum in toto ſuo corpore pati oportebat, etiam ipſe preſſuras eius pro ſua portione adimplebat: He ſaith not my afflictions, but Chriſts, becauſe he was a member of Chriſt, and in his perſecutions, which Chriſt was to ſuffer in his whole body, he alſo fulfilled his afflictions for his part: Tract. in Ioann.108. Saint Paul then did but for his part ſuffer as a member of Chriſt, as all other his members muſt for their parts.

3. So Auguſtine againe ſaith elſewhere, writing vpon this text: Si in membris Chriſti es, quicquid pateris ab eis, qui non ſunt in membris Chriſti, deerat paſſionibus Chriſti; ideo additur, quæ deerant, menſuram implens, non ſuperfundens: tantum ergo pateris, quantum inferendum erat vniuerſæ paſſioni Chriſti, qui paſſus eſt in capite, & patitur in membris, &c. If thou art a member of Chriſt, whatſoeuer thou ſuffereſt of thoſe that are not his members, was wanting to the ſufferings of Chriſt: therefore it is added (which are wanting) filling the meaſure, not ouerflowing: therefore thou ſuffereſt ſo much, as was to be laid vpon the whole paſſion of Chriſt; who then ſuffered in the head, and now in the members, in Pſal.60. Saint Paul then did ſuffer for his part, as all other members muſt for their parts: and the meaſure of affliction is but filled vp, it ouerfloweth not by their ſufferings: Ergo, no mans ſufferings doe abound or ouerflow to ſatisfie for another.

The ſecond propoſition, whether the Paſtors of the Church haue power to diſpenſe the ſatisfactions and ſufferings of the Saints, and to grant Indulgences.

26. Error.

THat this power is committed to the Paſtors of the Church, to diſpenſe this ſpirituall treaſure, and thereby to abſolve from all ſinnes, and the puniſhment of ſinnes, to diſpenſe with oaths, vowes, lawes, if there be reaſonable cauſe: thus they would proove it.

Ioh.20.23. Ioh.21.15. Mat.18.18.

1 First, Chriſt ſaith to his Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, whoſe ſinnes ye remit, they are remitted; and to 2 Peter, Feed my ſheepe, Ioh.21.15. Here the ſupreme throne of Eccleſiaſticall power is giuen to Peter.
3 Likewiſe, Whatſoeuer ye binde in earth, ſhall be bound in heauen.

2 Cor.2.10.

Secondly, Saint Paul executeth this power, To whom ye forgiue any thing, I forgiue alſo: for verily if I forgaue any thing, to whom I forgaue it, for your ſakes forgaue I it in the ſight of Chriſt. Here Saint Paul forgiueth vnto the inceſtuous perſon, that, which remained of his penance.

The Paſtors of the Church haue no power to diſpenſe the ſufferings of the Saints to others.

This hath beene the continuall practice of the Church to remit the puniſhment to offenders: and to this purpoſe Tertullian and Cyprian are alleadged, with diuers Councels, and conſtitutions of the Biſhops of Rome: Bellarm.lib.1.de indulg.cap.3.prop.2.

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. FIrſt, 1. our Sauiour ſpeaketh of remiſſion of ſinnes, what is this to their indulgences, which ſerue to releaſe the puniſhment onely, as they ſay? and the Apoſtles did remit ſinnes not by their owne power, but as miniſters and diſpenſers in Chriſts name: Saint Peter denieth, that by his owne power he had made the lame man goe: much leſſe by his owne power could hee heale the ſoule.

Acts 3.12.

Acts 20.28. 1 Pet.5.3.

2. First, feeding the flocke, is not diſpenſing with them, or exerciſing iudiciall power ouer them, but preaching the word: ſo doth Saint Paul expound it, Act.20.28. and Saint Peter, 1. Pet.5.3. Feed the flocke of God: but the Pope vſeth not to preach, therefore he feedeth not. Againe, this feeding is not proper only to Peter, but common to all other Paſtors, as he himſelfe ſheweth writing to his fellow paſtors.

3. First, our Sauiour ſaying, Whatſoeuer you binde, ſpeaketh of binding and looſing of ſinnes, and not.

The fourth Propoſition.

The Papiſts.

28. Error.
29. Error.
30. Error.

1 BEllarmine here telleth vs, that the Prelates of the Church may diſpenſe Chriſts ſufferings both by the Sacraments, and by their Indulgences; yet the ſatisfactions and ſufferings of the Saints can-
2 not be applied, but by Indulgences: The reaſon is, becauſe their ſatisfactions ſerue onely for the re-
3 leaſe of the puniſhment, not for the remitting of the ſinne: but in the Sacraments, the puniſhment is not remitted without the ſinne, Bellarm.lib.1.c.3.propoſ.3.

The Proteſtants.

1. Rom.4.11.

Confut. FIrſt, it is vntrue that the Sacraments doe giue and apply the grace of remiſſion by Chriſts ſufferings: they are ſeales of the righteouſnes of faith. It is the property onely of faith to apprehend Chriſt, and to apply his merits: which faith is confirmed and encreaſed by the Sacraments. We doe in the Sacraments ſhew forth the death of Chriſt, 1 Cor.11.26. as Ambroſe ſaith, Euchariſtia myſterium memoria redemptionis eſt: The myſtery of the Euchariſt is the memory of the redemption, in 1 Cor.11. Faith by this memory being renewed and reviued, applieth Chriſt, without faith the Sacraments profit not: the Apoſtle biddeth to examine themſelues, and ſo eate of the bread; which examination is to trie their faith. Ambroſe ſaith, Quid proficiunt Iudæi, quod ſanguine agni domos & poſtes illinunt? quoniam ligna, aut ſaxa prodeſſe non poſſunt: What doth it profit the Iewes, that they anoint their houſes and poſts with the blood of the Lambe? what can wood or ſtones profit them? ſerm.12. Pſal.119. No more doth water, bread or wine profit without faith.

1 Cor.11.26. Sacraments profit not without faith. 1 Cor.11.28. 1 Cor.13.5.

2. Baptiſme ſerueth for ſinnes paſt and to come. Tit.3.5.

Secondly, if in the Sacraments, as namely in Baptiſme, remittitur omnis pœna ſiue temporalis, ſiue æterna; all puniſhment of ſinne is remitted, both temporall and eternall, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, the application of the ſatisfactions of Saints is ſuperfluous to releaſe the temporall puniſhment, ſeeing it is done already: And that the efficacy of Baptiſme extendeth to the waſhing away of all ſinnes both preceding and following; Saint Paul ſheweth, ſaying, that we are ſaued by the waſhing of the new birth, and the renewing of the holy Ghoſt. If we haue then perfect ſaluation in Baptiſme, what can be added more? So Saint Hierome: Si baptiſmus nouum hominem facit, & ex toto nouum creat, nihilque in eo veteris hominis reſervatur, non poteſt novo imputari, quod in veteri quondam fuit: If Baptiſme make a man wholly new, that nothing of the old man remaine, that cannot be imputed to the new man, which was ſometime in the old: Hieron. Ocean.tom.3.

3. The puniſhment remitted together with the ſinne. Mark.2.5.

Thirdly, neither doth there remaine any puniſhment before God to be ſatisfied for, the ſinne being once remitted: but we being releaſed of our ſinnes, are alſo exempted from the puniſhment: as Chriſt ſaid to the man ſicke of the palſie. Thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee; ſignifying, that together with his ſinne, his ſickneſſe, as it was a puniſhment thereof was alſo looſed. The ſorrowes and griefes that ſtill hang vpon vs doe remaine, as Auguſtine ſaith, Vel ad demonſtrationem debitæ miſeriæ, vel ad emendationem labilis vitæ, vel ad exercitationem neceſſariæ patientiæ: Either for a demonſtration of our deſerued miſery, the emendation of our fraile life, or the exercitation of our neceſſary patience; Tract. 124. in Ioann. Wherefore the ſatisfactions of the Saints applicable by Indulgences, are ſuperfluous, ſeeing there remaineth after remiſſion of ſinnes obtained, no puniſhment before God to be ſatisfied for.

The third part, what Indulgence is.

THis part is divided into foure queſtions: Firſt, whether the Indulgence of the Church be a ſpirituall ſolution, or a iudiciary abſolution. Secondly, whether it be a releaſe, de pœnitentijs iniunctis vel iniungendis, of penance already enioyned or to be enioyned. Thirdly, whether it be a remiſſion of the fault, or of the puniſhment onely. Fourthly, whether by indulgence the puniſhment due vnto ſinne be remitted before God.

The firſt Queſtion, whether the Indulgence of the Church be a ſpirituall ſolution only, or a iudiciary abſolution.

The Papiſts.

THis queſtion though it be chiefly controverted among the Popiſh writers themſelues, yet I will briefly ſhew which part commeth neereſt the truth. Some of them thinke, that the Indulgence of the Church is onely an application of the treaſure of the Church, without any iudiciary authority, and ſo a ſolution onely: ſic Durand. in 4 diſtinct.20. qu.3. Paludan.ibid.qu.4.cum alijs. Others thinke Indulgence to be nothing elſe, but iudiciariam abſolutionem, a iudiciary abſolution, Franciſcus Mairon.4.ſent.diſt.19.qu.2. which ſeemeth to be the truer opinion, as I will ſhew afterward. Bellarmine

31. Error.

he confoundeth both theſe opinions, and maketh Indulgence not only a iudiciarie abſolution, but a ſpirituall ſolution.

Augum.

not the puniſhment onely : as this place is expounded by that, Ioh. 20.23. Whoſe ſinnes ye retaine. Againe, he ſpeaketh to all the Apoſtles : wherefore they all, and their ſucceſſors, and not Peter onely haue this power. Further, this power muſt be executed in Chriſts name, verſ. 20. Indulgences then in the name of Saints haue no place here.

Secondly, 1. Saint Paul did not enioyne the inceſtuous perſon penance to ſatisfie God for his ſin, 2 1. Cor. 5. 5. but he was deliuered to Satan, that his ſpirit might be ſaued, &c. that he might be brought to effectuall ſorrow for his offence : which was accordingly effected. 2. Another end of his ſeparation, was for the example of others, and that the Church might be ſatisfied, whom he had offended : and therefore the Apoſtle writeth to the whole Church, that they would forgiue him, and hold themſelues ſatisfied 2. Cor. 2. 7. with his ſufficient ſorrow. 3 The Apoſtle then remitteth not any puniſhment to the young man due vnto Gods iuſtice, but releaſeth him of the cenſure of excommunication, after he did ſee him ſufficiently to haue ſorrowed. And this power we denie not but the Church hath, to reconcile thoſe againe to the Congregation, and to remit the cenſure of the Church, when the partie hath teſtified his effectuall ſorrow, and ſatisfied the congregation. Thus Auguſtine ſaith : Recte conſtituuntur ab his qui Eccleſiæ præſunt tempore pœnitentiæ, vt ſatisfiat etiam Eccleſiæ : Certaine times of pennance are appointed by the gouernours of the Church, that the Church may be ſatisfied, diſt. 1. de pœnitent. c. 84. Satisfaction then is made not to God, but to the Church, and the releaſing thereof, as a remitting not of the puniſhment of ſinne before God, but of the cenſure impoſed by the Church.

Thirdly, after this manner we denie not but the Church vſed in Tertullian and Cyprians time to re- 3 concile offenders to the peace of the Church, and many times at the inſtance and requeſt of Martyrs, to remit vnto them ſome part of Eccleſiaſticall cenſure : but this maketh nothing for the applying or communicating of other mens ſatisfactions. Auguſtine ſaith, as he is cited, diſt. 1. de pœnitent. c. 84. In actione pœnitentiæ vbi tale crimen commiſſum eſt, vt qui commiſit à Chriſti corpore ſeparetur, non tam conſideranda eſt menſura temporis, quam doloris : In the action of penance, where ſuch a ſinne is committed, that he which committed it, muſt be ſeparated from the body of Chriſt, the meaſure of time muſt not be ſo much conſidered, as of griefe, &c. So then the ancient manner of indulgence was this, when the Church ſeeing the vnfained ſorrow of the penitent perſons, in Chriſtian compaſſion, leſt they ſhould be ſwallowed vp of too much griefe, as the Apoſtle ſaith, did mitigate the rigor of the ſentence of the Church, and releaſe them of their penance. 2. Cor. 2. 7. This diſcreete and Chriſtian lenitie ought ſtill to be retained in the Church, as Ambroſe well ſaith : Quemadmodum ſe tibi curandum præberet, qui ſe contemptui, non compaſſioni medico ſuo putet futurum? non ſunt pro Chriſti diſcipulis habendi, qui cum ipſi quærunt Domini miſerecordiam, alijs eam denegant : How ſhould a man commit himſelfe to be cured, when he ſeeth contempt rather than compaſſion to be in the Phyſitian? they are not to be counted for the diſciples of Chriſt, that ſeeking mercie themſelues, deny it vnto others: de pœnitent. lib. 1. 1.

The third propoſition, of the antiquitie and originall of Iubile pardons and Indulgences.

The Papiſts.

IT is affirmed by them, that whereas the beginning, authors, time, and place of other hereſies may be 17. Errour. aſſigned, yet it cannot be ſhewed when Indulgences and Pardons were brought in : and therefore it is moſt like, that they tooke beginning from the Apoſtles time, Bellarm. lib. 1. de indulgen. c. 3.

The Proteſtants.

Confut. FIrſt, the propoſition is not true, that all hereſies may bee aſſigned to their ſeuerall authors : as Bernard thus witneſſeth of the Heretikes called Apoſtolici : Quære ab illis ſectæ authorem, neminem dabunt : Aske of them the authour of their ſect, they can ſhew none, &c. the Manichees had Manes, the Sabellians Sabellius, the Arians Arius, beginners of their ſect, &c. but theſe can ſhew none : Cantic. ſer. 66.

Secondly, it followeth not, the author of generall and plenarie Indulgences, grounded vpon the ouerflowing ſatisfactions of the Church cannot be produced : Ergo, they came from Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Bernard ſheweth that this is no good conſequent : ſpeaking of the foreſaid heretikes, Apoſtolici, and in the ſame place : Non eſt ab homine illorum hæreſis, abſit tamen vt per reuelationem Ieſu Chriſti, ſed magis per immiſſionem & fraudem dæmoniorum : Their hereſie is not from man, yet God forbid it ſhould be by reuelation of Ieſus Chriſt, but rather by the deceit and illuſion of the diuell.

Thirdly, we can produce and demonſtrate the author of their Iubile pardons, which was Boniface the 8. anno 1300. the firſt inſtitutor of the popiſh Iubile : We denie not, but that before this time in the declining ages of the Church, Indulgences were abuſed, and that anno 1170. or thereabout, exception was taken againſt them by the Waldenſes : but at the time aforeſaid, anno 1300. when Antichriſt came to his height, the moſt blaſphemous indulgences, and Iubile pardons came in together with the Iubile, which then was inſtituted by Boniface 8. as Polydor Virgil ſaith of him: Boniface the 8. Lib. inuent. 8. cap. 8. primus omnium Iubileum retulit : firſt of all brought in againe the Iubile : and Maſſonius ſaith, plenam In vit. Bonif. 8 præſtitit debitorum omnium liberationem, &c. he gaue full deliuerance of all debts to thoſe which viſited the Apoſtles houſes, &c. the author then, by the teſtimony of their owne writers, of their Iubiles and Iubile-pardons may be aſſigned.

☞ Argum. His beſt argument is, becauſe Indulgence may be granted to the dead, ouer whom no iudiciary power can be exerciſed.

Anſw. 1. It is well that theſe popiſh Diuines, ſomewhat better aduiſed than their forefathers, doe exempt the dead from their iudiciary Conſiſtories : yet the elder Papiſts haue not beene aſhamed to proceed iudicially againſt the dead : to cite them by proceſſe, call them by name in court, and for not appearing to proceede againſt them as contumacious, to produce witneſſe againſt them, and to condemne and burne them being dead. Thus was Richard Hun ſerued being dead, condemned and burnt in Smithfield : ſee his ſtory Fox pag. 808. And in like manner were Bucer and Paulus Phagius proceeded againſt in Cambridge before the Cardinals viſitors there : ſee likewiſe the ſtorie Fox pag. 1961. 2.

2. Bellarmine hath vſed a very ſilly argument : for the dead can neither be abſolued nor condemned by the ſentence of the liuing : God hath diſpoſed of them; and euery one receiueth his finall ſentence at his death: as a man dyeth, ſo he lyeth, and ſo he riſeth: As Auguſtine well ſaith : Vnuſquiſque cum cauſa ſua dormit, cum cauſa ſua ſurgit : Euery man ſleepeth or dyeth with his cauſe, and with the ſame riſeth againe. So that in this caſe we may apply the Apoſtles ſpeech, Who art thou that condemneſt another mans ſeruant? he ſtandeth, or falleth to his owne maſter. Rom. 14. 4. The dead are at Gods diſpoſition, and are no more ſeruants or at the command of the liuing. This place of the Apoſtle is ſo applyed by Anaſtaſ. decret.

The Proteſtants.

WE acknowledge a ſpirituall ſolution of ſinne in the Church of God, which is diſpenſed by the miniſtery of the Word, and applicable to all them, which by faith are capable of it : but the Indulgence of the Church, which they make a releaſe onely of temporall puniſhment, is onely a iudiciary abſolution in the outward face of the Church. The indulgence of the Church onely a iudiciary abſolution.

Argum. 1. Such was that indulgence, pardon and forgiueneſſe granted by S. Paul to the penitent young man, To whom you forgaue any thing, I forgiue alſo. 2 Cor. 2. 10. This was nothing elſe but a releaſing of the offender from the ſentence of excommunication, after he had ſufficiently ſorrowed. The ſpirituall ſolution, and forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, which followed his repentance, he receiued at Chriſts hands: but the outward cenſure was releaſed by the iudiciary power of the Church.

Franciſcus Mairon, one of their owne Doctors, cited before, is of this opinion, that the Indulgence of the Church is but a Iudiciary abſolution.

Argum. 2. It further appeareth thus : no eccleſiaſticall Iudge, no not the Pope, can be partaker of that Indulgence, which he granteth to another. Of this opinion are ſome of the Papiſts, Archidiacon. in cap. de indulg. in c. 6. and the reaſon is, becauſe no man can abſolue himſelfe : wherefore the Indulgence is onely an abſolution : for as concerning the ſpirituall ſolution of ſinnes, he is as well partaker of it, that miniſtreth it, as he to whom it is miniſtred. And Bellarmine here greatly beſtirring himſelfe to ſhew how the Pope may receiue abſolution, reſolueth thus : that he vſeth abſolution to another, but himſelfe is beneficed onely by the ſpirituall ſolution. But the Pope can apply no Indulgence to himſelfe : Ergo, it is an abſolution iudiciary : Bellarm. cap. 6. reſponſ. ad obiect. 7.

The ſame is proued out of their owne law : Decret. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 38. c. 4. Alexand. 3. A non ſuo iudice ligari nullus valeat, vel abſolui : No man can be looſed or abſolued but of his owne iudge : Ergo, Indulgence onely reſpecteth the eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction, and iudiciary power of the Church, for otherwiſe the ſpirituall ſolution of ſinne may be miniſtred by another, than the proper paſtor, in the preaching of the Word, and applying of other ſpirituall comforts.

The ſecond queſtion, whether Indulgence be for penance enioyned, or to be enioyned.

The Papiſts.

WHen Indulgence is granted, it muſt bee vnderſtood that all kinde of penance is pardoned, 31. Errour. both that which is already enioyned or inflicted, or may be enioyned afterward : arguments he hath none of account, nor yet good reaſon for this aſſertion, lib. 1. de Indulg. cap. 7. concluſ. 6.

The Proteſtants.

IT is a moſt abſurd and groſſe thing, that Indulgence ſhould not onely diſpenſe, with the penance already inflicted by the ſentence of Church, but to giue licenſe for that which may afterward be incurred: for what is this elſe but to giue men liberty to ſinne, being now exempted from the cenſure of the Church?

Argum. Saint Paul doth not ſo, but onely forgiueth the young man and releaſeth that cenſure which he was then vnder for his ſinne paſt, 2. Cor. 2. 6. It was ſufficient for the ſame man, that he was rebuked of many : he ſpeaketh of the rebuke and cenſure already paſt, he deliuered him not from any ſentence of the Church, which he might incurre afterward.

Gelaſius to this purpoſe ſaith notably : Auditum ſub cœlo non legitur, quod eorum voce depromitur, Date nobis veniam, dum tamen nos in errore duremus: neſcio inter quæ mundi prodigia hoc poſſit admitti : remitti culpa de præterito poteſt correctione ſine dubio ſubſequente : nam ſi deinceps ſinitur manſura peruerſitas;

uerſitas, non eſt benignitas remittentis, ſed conſentientis aſſenſio: It was neuer heard vnder heauen, as they ſay: giue vs pardon, while we notwithſtanding continue in error: I cannot tell among what monſters this may be accounted: the fault may be remitted for the time paſt, correction or amendment following: but if by this meanes their peruerſity doe remaine, it is not a benignity in the remitter, but a conſpiracy in the conſenter: Gelaſ. epiſt. ad Fauſtum. Thus then the remiſſion of puniſhment to come, is a further inſtigation vnto ſinne.

The third queſtion, whether an Indulgence bee a remiſſion of the fault, or puniſhment.

The Papiſts.

33. Error. BEllarmine alleageth to this purpoſe certaine diſtinctions, there is a double guilt, either of the ſinne, or puniſhment: the puniſhment is either naturall, as death, ſickeneſſe; or perſonall, as was the plague ſent vpon the people in Dauids time: and it is either in the internall court of the conſcience, or the externall court of the Church: the internall is of two ſorts, either to ſatisfie God, or the Church.

Then he ſetteth downe this poſition, that by the Indulgence of the Church we are not deliuered from the guilt of any ſinne, veniall or mortall, but of the puniſhment only.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, I note certaine abſurdities and contradictions in the foreſaid diſtinctions. 1. Whereas hee maketh the plague in Dauids time to be a perſonall puniſhment, and he thinketh that Indulgences may take away perſonall puniſhments, I aske whether the Popes Iubilee-pardons and Indulgences can preuent, or turne aſide the peſtilence: If they were of ſuch force, I thinke the Pope would not ſuffer the plague ſo often to viſit Rome. 2. He maketh the ſatisfaction of the Church to belong to the internall court, whereas the court of the Church is externall.

The ſpirituall indulgence of Chriſt deliuereth both from the ſinne and puniſhment.

Secondly, we ſay that the ſpirituall indulgence of Chriſt in the Church, being applyed and apprehended by faith, doth deliuer vs both from the ſinne and paine: but the Eccleſiaſticall indulgence doth onely releaſe the externall puniſhment not before God, but before men.

Thirdly, this poſition of Bellarmine is contrary to the Popes Iubile-pardons, which goe vnder this tenure: Boniface 8. Non ſolum plenam & largiorem, ſed pleniſſimam concedimus veniam omnium peccatorum: extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1. We grant not onely full, and larger, but moſt full remiſſion of all their ſinnes: ſo likewiſe Clemens 6. in his Bull: Suorum omnium obtinerent pleniſſimam veniam peccatorum: That they ſhould obtaine moſt full pardon of all their ſinnes: Sixtus the fourth alſo doth call them, Indulgentias & remiſſiones peccatorum, Indulgences and remiſſions of ſinnes.

Bellarmine anſwereth. 1. That whereas ſometime mention is made in the letters of abſolution, à pœna & culpa, from the puniſhment and the fault, it is ſo ſaid, becauſe ordinarily abſolution is ioyned with confeſſion, whereby the fault is pardoned. 2. By pardon or remiſſion of ſinnes we muſt vnderſtand the puniſhment. c. 7. propoſ. 1.

Contra. 1. But your Indulgences are properly granted, you ſay, without a Sacrament: as Bellarmine defineth it, Indulgentia eſt abſolutio, &c. extra ſacramentum data: Indulgence is abſolution giuen without a Sacrament, c. 8, in fine. Then cannot an indulgence take away the fault, which is onely releaſed in the Sacraments: that clauſe therefore, à pœna & culpa, in their Indulgences is contrary to their owne doctrine.

2. Neither by plenary remiſſion of ſins can the puniſhment in any ſenſe be vnderſtood. 1. It is called pleniſſima, a moſt full pardon, omnium peccatorum, of all ſinnes: if moſt full, and of all, how are the ſinnes themſelues excluded? 2. I pray you how doe you vnderſtand your beliefe: Credo remiſſionem peccatorum, I beleeue the remiſſion of ſinnes: doe ye beleeue the puniſhment onely remitted, and not the ſinne? vnleſſe your Bull beleeueth otherwiſe than the Creed, as it doth indeed, and bringeth in a new faith. 3. Boniface in his Bull maketh this preface: Quia iuxta officij noſtri debitum, ſalutem appetimus ſingulorum: Becauſe according to our bounden duty, we ſeeke the ſaluation of all: but to ſaluation, not the releaſing onely of the paine, but the remitting of the debt belongeth.

Fourthly, that the ſatisfactions of Chriſt applied (for ſatisfactions of Saints applicable, we acknowledge none) doe deliuer à pœna & culpa, both from the ſinne and the puniſhment, it is euident out of Scripture, Iohn 13.10. He that is waſhed by Chriſt, eſt mundus totus, is cleane euery whit: there remaineth then nothing to be waſhed away: And they themſelues confeſſe, that Baptiſme doth waſh away both ſinne and puniſhment: likewiſe the Apoſtle, Hebr. 7. 25. He is able perfectly to ſaue them, that come vnto God. If Chriſt then doe ſaue vs perfectly, then both from ſinne and the penalty.

Iohn 13. 10.

Peter Lombard confeſſeth as much: Per ipſius pœnam, quam in cruce tulit, omnis pœna temporalis: quæ pro peccato conuerſis debetur in baptiſmo penitus relaxatur, vt nulla à baptizato exigatur, &c. By Chriſts paine, which he ſuffered vpon the croſſe, all temporall paine, which is due for ſinne to them, which are conuerted, is altogether releaſed in Baptiſme, that none at all is exacted of him that is baptized, lib. 3. diſt. 19. liter. d. If then there remaine no puniſhment after baptiſme, your Indulgences are nothing worth.

I will conclude with Saint Ambroſe: who ſpeaking of the gathering of Manna, Exod. 16.18. He that had gathered much, had nothing ouer, and he that had gathered little, had no lacke: Hoc plenius de ſanguine Chriſti intelligitur, &c. Et ſi parum ſumas, & ſi plurimum haurias eadem perfecta eſt omnibus menſura redemptionis: This is more fully vnderſtood of the blood of Chriſt, though you take little or draw much, there is the ſame perfect meaſure of redemption to all, Epiſt.1. Wherefore if by Indulgences, neuer ſo little of Chriſts blood be applyed, the redemption is perfect, both from the ſinne and penalty, for otherwiſe it ſhould not be perfect.

The fourth queſtion, whether the Indulgences of the Church, deliuer from the puniſhment of ſinne, not onely before the Church, but before God.

The Papiſts.

IT is ſo affirmed by Bellarmine, that by the cenſure of the Church impoſed vpon offenders, they do not onely ſatisfie the Church, but God alſo, and ſo conſequently the Indulgence of the Church doth ſet them free from the guilt of the puniſhment of ſinne, both before God and men. 34. Error.

1. Argum. 1. Matth.18.18. Whatſoeuer yee looſe in earth, ſhall be looſed in Heauen: if it be looſed in heauen, then before God.

2. 2. Penance voluntarily aſſumed, or priuately enioyned, cannot be for example ſake to ſatisfie men, therefore thereby God is ſatisfied: as Pſal.6.6. I water my couch euery night with teares. Pſal.6.6.

3. 3. Tertullian ſaith: Qui per delictorum pœnitentiam inſtituerat domino ſatisfacere: Which had purpoſed to ſatisfie God by the penance of his ſinnes: lib. de pœnitent. Cyprian alſo is alleaged: Dominus noſtra ſatisfactione placandus: God is to be pleaſed with our ſatisfaction. Likewiſe Auguſtine: De ijs, quæ facta ſunt, ſatisfiat Deo per pœnitentiæ dolorem: God muſt be ſatisfied for the things that are done by the ſorrow of repentance: Ergo, God is ſatisfied by penitentiary workes: Bellarm. cap. 7. prop. 4.

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. 1. FIrſt, we grant that the ſpirituall diſpenſation of the Church doth truly looſe the penitent perſons by faith in Chriſt, both from the ſin and puniſhment: but that Indulgence which onely releaſeth the puniſhment, is but a relaxation before the Church, therefore this place, which is vnderſtood of looſing and binding of ſinnes, is vnproperly alleaged for the releaſe of the puniſhment onely.

2. Secondly, 1. Voluntary and priuate repentance, though it be not to the eye of the world, to ſatisfie men: yet it is profitable more effectually to humble their owne ſoule; as Auguſtine ſaith ſpeaking of prayer, which may be applyed alſo to outward ſorrow for ſinne: vt his ſeipſum magis homo excitat ad orandum,—illiſque rurſus viſibiliter factis, inuiſibilis animi affectus augetur: By the geſture of the body, as the bowing of the knees, the ſpreading of the hands, a man doth ſtirre vp himſelfe to prayer; and theſe things being viſibly done, the inuiſible affection of the ſoule is encreaſed: de cur. mortuor. cap.6. 2. It followeth not then; In priuate repentance, man is not ſatisfied: Ergo, God is ſatisfied: for there is an other ſatisfaction beſide, when a man by ſufficient ſorrow and puniſhment, as it were taken of himſelfe, doth ſatisfie his owne ſoule: and beſide; priuate repentance, though it preuaile not to ſatisfaction, yet it is auailable to effectuall contrition, and vnfained conuerſion.

3. Thirdly, concerning the teſtimony of the Fathers. Firſt, we deny not but ſome of them doe vſe that phraſe of ſpeech, to ſatisfie God by repentance: but not in the popiſh ſenſe, to ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, for Tertullian ſpeaketh of ſatisfying for ſinne: yet the Papiſts themſelues hold no ſatisfaction in penance for ſinne, but for the puniſhment onely. Secondly, God then is ſaid to be ſatisfied, that is pleaſed with the worke of repentance: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.13.17. With ſuch ſacrifice God is pleaſed or delighted: his iuſtice is not ſatisfied, but his will pleaſed in Chriſt, when he ſeeth his pleaſure obeyed by our repentance: So Bernard vnderſtandeth ſatisfaction. Condigna ſatisfactio eſt malefacta corrigere, & correcta non reiterare: It is condigne ſatisfaction, to correct euill deeds, and not to iterate or doe them againe, proœm. de inter. dom. But this is no ſatisfaction to Gods iuſtice for a man to turne from his euill wayes, otherwiſe than as God through Chriſt is well pleaſed therewith. Thirdly, there are then foure kinds of ſatisfactions: the firſt is to God: the ſecond to the Church publikely: the third to men whom we haue offended priuately: the fourth to a mans owne ſoule: the firſt by vs can be no way performed: for as Iob ſaith, 9.3. We cannot anſwer God one thing of a thouſand: Vix milleſimæ parti debitorum quis valeat reſpondere: a man can ſcarce anſwer the thouſandth part of his debt to God: Bernard de quadrapl. debit. This ſatisfaction to Gods iuſtice we muſt wholly remit vnto Chriſt, the other three ſatisfactions are in mans power: firſt, to ſatisfie the Church, It is ſufficient for the ſame man, that he was rebuked of many: Arauſican. concil. 1. decret. ex Gratian. The ancient forme of excommunication was this: Authoritate Dei & iudicio ſancti ſpiritus è gremio ſanctæ matris Eccleſiæ eliminamus, quouſque reſipiſcant & Eccleſiæ ſatisfaciant, &c. By the authoritie of God and his holy ſpirit, we caſt them out of the boſome of the Church, vntill they repent, and ſatisfie the Church. Secondly, our brother whom we haue offended, muſt be ſatisfied; as Zacheus reſtoreth foure fold, that which he had wrongfully gotten, Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Peccaſti in fratrem, fac ſatis & ſanatus es: Haſt thou offended againſt thy brother, ſatisfie him, and thou art healed: Serm.16. in Matth.

2 Cor.2.6.
Foure kinds of ſatisfaction.

Luke 19.8.
What ſatisfaction is in mans power.

Thirdly, by godly repentance a man doth ſatisfie his owne ſoule, and cleare his conſcience by puniſhing of himſelfe: as 2.Cor.7.11. 2 *Cor.*7.11.this godly ſorrow, what great care hath it wrought in you,&c.what puniſhment, &c. you haue ſhewed your ſelues in all things that you are pure in this matter. To this purpoſe S. Auguſtine, Quid aliud eſt ieiunium, quam debita membrorum ſatisfactio : membra enim ſatisfacere debent propter peccata, quæ commiſerunt ; vnde ſi quis in gula peccauerit, ſatisfaciat ieiunio—ſi oculus peccabit, claudatur : What elſe is faſting, but a due ſatisfaction of the members : for the members muſt ſatisfie for the ſinne they haue committed:if a man haue ſinned in gluttony,let him make ſatisfaction by faſting ; if the eye haue ſinned, let it be ſhut : *Ad fratrem in erem.ſerm.*24. All theſe kinds of ſatisfactions we admit, but Gods iuſtice cannot be ſatisfied by vs : Chriſt onely hath ſo ſatisfied God for vs, both for ſin and puniſhment, and appeaſed his wrath, and *ſlaine hatred by his croſſe, and reconciled vs to God,Epheſ.*2.16. Auguſtine well ſaith (to conclude this point) Fateor, quia peccaui & conſcientia mea non ſufficit ad ſatisfactionem ; ſed certum eſt, quod miſericordia tua ſuperat omnem offenſionem : I confeſſe I haue ſinned, and my conſcience deſerueth damnation, but my repentance ſufficeth not for ſatisfaction : but it is certaine, that thy mercy exceedeth all tranſgreſſion: *Tom.*9.*meditat,c.*39.

Laſtly, we haue one of their owne ſide againſt them : Petrus Paludanus, who affirmeth, that veniall ſinnes and not the puniſhment onely are releaſed by Indulgences : In 4.*diſt.*20.*qu.*4.

The fourth part, of the diuers kinds of Indulgences.

The Papiſts.

35. Error. Bellarmine rehearſeth fiue kinds of Indulgences, and he iuſtifieth them all ; 1. There is an Indulgence of forty dayes, which is a releaſe of the penance which was to be done forty dayes.

36. Error. 2. There is an Indulgence of the third or fourth part of their ſinnes,that is, of the puniſhment due for ſo much of their ſinnes.

37. Error. 3. An Indulgence plenary was from the whole puniſhment : and ſome time Indulgences are granted for ten or twenty thouſand yeeres ; for euery mortall ſinne deſerueth a penance of three or ſeuen yeeres : then ſo many blaſphemies and other ſinnes, as are by ſome committed euery moment, deſerue many thouſand yeeres penance : which notwithſtanding by the ſharpneſſe of Purgatory paine, may be ſatisfied for in three or foure hundred yeeres.

38. Error. 4. Indulgences are granted to ſome in their life time, to ſome in the point of death.

39. Error. 5. Some are temporary, for a time as limited to dayes or yeeres,ſome are perpetuall, which are tyed to places, Churches,altars,or to things moueable, as to *roſaries,holy graines,&c.*All theſe kinds of Indulgences Bellarmine holdeth to be good and godly : but for this we muſt take his word, for Scriptures or good reaſons he hath none.

The Proteſtants.

1. First, 1. if your Indulgences doe releaſe the puniſhment due to Gods iuſtice, what great preſumption is it for you,to limit God to fortie daies,that the puniſhment of the offender ſhould for that time be ſuſpended : this was the ſinne of Iſrael, Pſal.88.41. Circumſcripſerunt Deum Iſrael : They limited the God of Iſrael. 2. Likewiſe Bellarmine hath this poſition, that Indulgences doe not take away the paines, that are enioyned in courts eccleſiaſticall : *cap.*7.*prop.*3. and yet heere he ſaith, that indulgentia quadragena, this Indulgence of fortie dayes is a releaſe of penance, which was to be done forty daies : which penance is inflicted by the Church. Thus he is found contrary to himſelfe. 3. I haue ſhewed before that the releaſe of puniſhment to be inflicted,is contrary to the Scriptures and the ancient practice of the Church : ſee before. *error.*32.

2. Secondly, if your Indulgences doe releaſe from puniſhment before God,then they ſhould not releaſe from the third or fourth part onely,but from the whole puniſhment: for where God pardoneth, Pſal.68.28. he forgiueth all : he worketh perfectly, Finiſh, O Lord, that which thou haſt wrought in vs : and the Eccleſ.3.14. wiſe man ſaith : I know, that whatſoeuer God doth, it ſhall be for euer, to it can no man adde, and from it can none diminiſh. 2. Neither when the Church forgiueth, doth it pardon onely in part,but wholly ; as 2 Cor.2.8.10. 2 *Cor.*2.8. Confirme or ratifie your loue toward him ; verſ.10. I forgaue in the ſight of Chriſt, that is freely from the heart:thus was the young man fully reſtored to the Church,and not in part onely : likewiſe Philem.15.17. Philem.15. Saint Paul writeth vnto him to receiue his ſeruant Oneſimus, Who had offended him, for euer ; verſ. 17. receiue him as my ſelfe : that is, freely, franckly, wholly, fully. 3. But this releaſing of the third or fourth part of penance is but a popiſh tricke for their further aduantage, that looke how many parts men would be releaſed of, they ſhould pay ſo many pounds more.

True Indulgence and forgiueneſſe is not from part of the puniſhment, but the whole.

3. Thirdly, 1. Plenarie indulgence from the whole puniſhment of ſinne, is but an encouragement to ſinners, and a meanes to make them more ſecure : for though they ſinne, yet they are free from puniſhment ; Chriſt ſaith otherwiſe to the lame man, Iohn 5.14. Sinne no more, leſt a worſe thing happen vnto thee : Chriſt releaſeth him for that preſent, of the puniſhment of his ſinne, the lameneſſe of his body, but he giueth him no generall warrant. To this purpoſe Gelaſius as I cited him before, and as he is alleaged, *cauſ.*24.*queſt.*2.*c.*2. It was neuer heard of which ſay they, Date veniam, dummodo nos in errore duremus : pardon vs, that we may continue in error ſtill : Secondly, they are blaſphemous indulgences, that are made for twenty thouſands of yeeres: for thus they take vpon them to releaſe eternall puniſhment, which is contrarie to their owne doctrine: for that puniſhment which is extended beyond the time of purgatory, which ſhall end with the worlde, muſt needs be the euerlaſting puniſhment of hell. 2. If then they can giue indulgence for hell puniſhment, they can deliuer damned ſoules, which is an horrible blaſphemie, and contrary to the Scripture, They cannot come from thence to vs: and how farre are they then from that hereſie, that diuels and all in the end ſhould be ſaued, which is confuted by Saint Auguſtine. lib.21. de ciuitat. c.17.23. 3. It is true that a mans ſinnes may bee ſo great and ſo many, as that he may be worthie not onely of twentie thouſand yeeres, but euerlaſting puniſhment: as he giueth inſtance of ſuch as blaſpheme euery moment; but doe yee thinke ſuch obſtinate and incorrigible ſinners capable of your indulgences? you are very lauiſh of the treaſure of the Church, to grant it to ſuch. 4. And ſeeing your purgatorie paine is imagined to bee ſo great, that one day of puniſhment there is anſwerable to many yeeres of penance in this life, how can three or foure hundred yeers paines in purgatorie ſatisfie for twentie thouſand? and miſerable comforters are ye, to appoint men ſo many hundred yeeres puniſhment in purgatorie: it is nothing elſe but to feare them, that they may giue the more money not to come there. 5. But though Bellarmine be not aſhamed of theſe blaſphemous indulgences for twenty thouſand yeeres, who taketh vpon him euery where to defend the moſt groſſeſt points in poperie: yet ſome of the learned papiſts are more modeſt, who thinke that ſuch indugences are neuer granted by the Pope, but deuiſed of the pardoners for their gaine: Gerſon in tract. de abſolut. ſacrament. Dominic. a Soto in 4. diſtinct. 21. qu. 2. artic. 1. and ſo Bellarmine himſelfe alleadgeth.

Luke 16.16.

No temporall puniſhment can be releaſed after death by the indulgence of the Church.

Iob 33.23.

Fourthly, 1. I pray you from what puniſhment doe you releaſe men at the point of death? ſeeing there remaineth none but in hell, from the which (ſay you) you releaſe not: for your purgatory fire is but a popiſh ſcarrebugge to feare thoſe with, that beleeue your lies: ſeeing the theefe, that had ſo many ſinnes to be purged of, and made no ſatisfaction for them, went ſtraight from the croſſe to Paradiſe, which I thinke you will not ſay was in Purgatory. 2. A man vpon his death bed being truly contrite, may be comforted with the declaration of the forgiueneſſe of his ſinne in Chriſt, as it is in Iob 33.23. His ſoule draweth neere to the graue, and his life to the buriers: if there bee a meſſenger with him, to declare vnto man his righteouſneſſe: but puniſhment there remaineth none to bee releaſed to him, that dieth in the faith of Chriſt. 3. Vnleſſe we count it a puniſhment for the body to lye in the graue: but from this, not your indulgence, but Chriſts omnipotence ſhall free vs at the latter day: as your maſter ſaith: A temporali pœna nos penitus liberabit in futuro, cum nouiſſima mors inimica deſtruetur, adhuc enim expectamus redemptionem corporis: From temporall paine he ſhall fully free vs hereafter, when as the laſt enemy death ſhall be deſtroyed, for we yet looke for the redemption of our bodies, lib. 3. diſtinct. 19. lit. c.

Marke 2.7.

Indulgences not limited to Altars, Churches, and ſuch like.

Fifthly, it is moſt groſſe and abſurd, to limit the power of indulgences to altars, Churches, or any other thing without life and ſenſe. 1. The Phariſes were not ſo blind, for they held this as a principle, that none can forgiue ſinnes but God, Marke 2.7. What then doe ye elſe, but make ſtones and walles as Gods to forgiue ſinnes? 2. The Prophet Haggie ſheweth that a mans garment touching holy fleſh is not holy, Hag. 2.23. your altar ſtones haue no greater vertue, than the holy fleſh of the ſacrifices, nor yet ſo much, becauſe that was of Gods inſtitution, the other is of your owne inuention, how can they then make holy thoſe that touch them? 3. We may ſay then as Ambroſe of the poſtes and ſtones of the Iewes houſes, which they ſtriked with the blood of the Lambe: Quid ligna & ſaxa prodeſſe poſſunt? What can wood or ſtones profit. ſerm. 12. in Pſalm. 119.

The time of penance longer or ſhorter, according to the quality of the offence.

Sixthly, to conclude then: we may find that in the ancient former times, there were diuers kinds of penance enioyned for yeeres more or leſſe according to the quality of the offence: As players at dice had one yeeres penance appointed. Eliberin. 79. They which were preſent at the pagans feaſts, two yeeres. ibid. can. 55. They which, though conſtrained, did eate in idoll temples, foure yeeres. Ancyran. c. 5. They which obſerued diuinations, fiue yeers. concil. Ancyran. can. 23. They which were threatned and ſo ſacrificed, did penance ſixe yeeres. ibid c. 6. They which did twice ſacrifice to idols, ſeuen yeeres. Ancyran. can. 8. They which perſwaded others to ſacrifice ten yeeres ibid. can. 9. They which lay with bruit beaſts, twentie yeeres. Ancyran. can. 16.

We alſo confeſſe that this power was left to the gouernors of the Church, to ſhorten theſe times of penance according to the contrition of the offender: as it was thus decreed. Nicen. 1. can. 11. Quicunque cum omni timore & lachrimis conuerſationem ſuam non verbis ſolum, ſed opere demonſtrant, licebit Epiſcopo humanius circa eos aliquid ſtatuere: Whoſoeuer with feare and teares doe not onely in word, but in deed ſhew their conuerſation, it ſhal be lawfull for the Biſhop to ſhew them fauour. &c. But theſe were relaxations of penance inflicted by the Church, no indulgences of puniſhment, not enioyned by the Church, before God.

The fiſt part, to whom Indulgences are profitable.

The Papiſts.

4. Error.

THey hold that indulgences are profitable to all whoſoeuer, not onely to notorious and publike offenders, but euen to thoſe that are tending to perfection: his reaſon is this: becauſe it is profitable to all to be deliuered from thoſe things, which hinder them from eternall life; but ſuch is the temporall paine of Purgatory, which keepeth them backe a while, that they cannot goe to heauen. Bellarm. cap. 10.

1 Iohn 1.10. Indulgences of temporall puniſhment not profitable to the righteous. 1 Tim. 1. 10. Iob 23.10. Philip. 1.23.

Anſw. 1. We grant that all men though neuer ſo perfect haue need of Chriſts indulgence in the remiſſion of their ſinnes, for there is none that ſinneth not: as Saint Iohn ſaith, He that ſaith he ſinneth not, is a lyar. 2. But as for the externall indulgences of the Church (for other indulgence from the puniſhment onely we acknowledge none) they belong not to the innocent and vertuous liuers, but to offenders that muſt be reſtrained by the cenſures of the Church: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, lex non eſt poſita iuſtis: the law is not giuen to a righteous man. 3. Doth your purgatory paine then hinder mens going to heauen? it is a ſhame for you then to driue ſo many ſoules thither, if you can keepe them from thence by your plenary indulgences. 4. If purgatory were ſuch a place as you imagine it, where men are purged from their ſinnes, and ſo made fitter to goe to heauen, it is no hindrance but a furtherance to them: like as the fire doth no hurt to the gold that is purified by it: as Iob ſaith, exibo vt aurum, I ſhall come forth like gold. 5. And they which are perfect, in your owne doctrine ſhall not goe to Purgatory, but ſtraight to heauen: as Paul preſently vpon his diſſolution knew he ſhould be with Chriſt. And it is an approued ſaying among you: Iniuriam facit martyri, qui orat pro martyre: He doth iniury to a martyr that prayeth for him, that is, ſuppoſing him to be in Purgatory, for they onely of the dead are not to be prayed for in your ſenſe: if all then need not feare Purgatory, then indulgences are not profitable to all.

The Proteſtants.

THat indulgences of the Church are not profitable to the iuſt and righteous, it is thus prooued.

Pſalme 119.71. 1 Peter 1.23.

Argum. 1. It profiteth not to be deliuered from that which worketh vnto a mans ſaluation: but the afflictions and puniſhments of this life are ſuch, as the Prophet ſaith. It is good for me that I haue beene afflicted, and the Apoſtle ſaith, Chriſt ſuffered for vs, leauing for vs an example that we ſhould follow his ſteps: Ergo, from ſuch temporall afflictions, indulgences are not to be ſought.

Romanes 1. 17.

2. It is better for a man to liue by himſelfe and his owne faith, than to ſeeke ſatisfaction by another: but the iuſt liueth by his faith: Ergo, he needeth not another mans ſatisfaction.

1. Anſw. 1. Firſt, ſuch afflictions as further their ſaluation, are not to be ſhunned: but ſuch as withhold from entring into heauen, as is the temporall paine of Purgatory.

2. Secondly, as it is better for a man to goe vpon both legges, than one: ſo to relye vpon other mens ſatisfactions as well as his owne, is a ſafer and more ſure way: Bellarm. cap. 10. reſponſ. ad 1. & 3. obiect.

1. Contra. Firſt, if you grant all temporall paines profitable, but onely the ſuppoſed torments of Purgatory, then are no paines or puniſhments at all left, to be releaſed by your Indulgences: for your purgatory fire hath beene long agoe quenched by the water of life flowing from the Scriptures: 1. Chriſt hath by himſelfe purged our ſinnes: we doe not purge them our ſelues. 2. The Scripture acknowledgeth but two places after this life, heauen or hell: Tribulation and anguiſh ſhall be vpon the ſoule of euery one that doth euill: but to euery one that doth good, glory and honour. So ſaith S. Ambroſe: Qui non intrat regnum, neceſſario remanet in inferno: He that entreth not into the kingdome, remaineth in hell, ſerm. 22. 3. That ſtate wherein a man dyeth cannot be altered: Euery man ſhall receiue according to the things done in the body. Ambroſe alſo ſaith: Mors deteriorem ſtatum non efficit, ſed qualem in ſingulis inuenerit, talem iudicio futuro reſeruat: Death maketh not a mans ſtate worſe, but as it findeth euery one; ſo it reſerueth them to the iudgement to come, &c. But concerning the vanity of this deuice of Purgatory, I haue treated before at large, Contra. 9. qu. 1. part. 2. 2. If Purgatory be ſuch a place, as they imagine, which ſerueth to purge away the reliques of ſinne, it is no hindrance but a furtherance: like as the rodde of correction is profitable to the child, and doth deliuer his ſoule from hell. 3. If Purgatory be a let becauſe it ſtayeth the ſoule a while from heauen: by the ſame reaſon alſo all the afflictions of this life are lets: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, While we are at home in the body, we are abſent from the Lord.

Hebrewes 1. 3. Romanes 2. 9. No purgatory after this life. 2 Cor. 5. 10. Prou. 23. 13. 2 Cor. 5. 6.

2. Secondly, 1. the ſimilitude which he vſeth is not fitly or properly applied, which rather may be turned thus: that as it is better for a man to goe vpon his owne legs, than to leane vpon anothers ſtaffe; and if he can goe vpright of himſelfe, to lay hold of another is but an hindrance: ſo in the matter of ſaluation it is better to truſt to a mans owne faith. 2. So the Scripture ſaith, The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, that is, euery one by his owne faith: As, The ſoule that ſinneth ſhall dye, Ezech. 18.20. No man ſhall beare anothers puniſhment: ſo no mans faith can profit another: Qui per vos peccaſtis per vos erubeſcatis: They that ſinne by themſelues, muſt repent by themſelues: Cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. c. 88.

Romanes 1.17. Ezech. 18.20.

THE

The ſixth part, to whom the power to grant Indulgences belongeth.

The Papiſts.

1. 41. Error. Matth. 16.19. First, the power of granting Indulgences doth reſt onely in the Pope as the ſucceſſor of Peter, to whom Chriſt ſaid, Whatſoeuer you looſe in earth, ſhall be looſed in heauen, Matth. 16.19.

2. 42. Error. Secondly, plenary Indulgences can onely be granted by the Pope, neither by Cardinals, whoſe indulgences exceed not an hundred dayes, neither by Biſhops or Metropolitanes, who can grant indulgences but for one yeere in the dedication of Churches, and for forty dayes at other times: nor yet by generall Councels.

3. 43. Error. Thirdly, Biſhops receiue this power to giue indulgences not immediately from God, but from the Pope, from whom alſo they receiue their iuriſdiction: and this is an argument thereof, becauſe the Pope may make voide indulgences granted by Biſhops: but ſo can he not orders and Sacraments miniſtred by them.

4. 44. Error. Fourthly, Pariſh paſtors haue no power to giue indulgences, but by commiſſion from the Pope, or their Biſhop; becauſe they are the Princes of the people of God, to whom it belongeth to diſtribute the common goods of the Church.

5 45. Error. Fifthly, the power of Order is not neceſſary to giue indulgences, but the power of iuriſdiction onely, and therefore the Pope or Biſhop may grant indulgences, though they bee not in Orders.

6. 46. Error. Sixthly, neither is this power of indulgences loſt by any deadly ſin: ſic Bellar. lib. de Indulg. cap. 11.

The Proteſtants.

1. The keyes not committed onely to Peter. First, the keyes of the Church to binde or looſe, open or ſhut, were no more committed to Peter, then vnto the reſt of the Apoſtles: as Saint Hierome well noteth: Cuncti claues regni cœlorum accipiunt, & ex æquo ſuper eos eccleſiæ fortitudo ſolidatur: All the Apoſtles receiue the keyes of the kingdome, and the ſtrength of the Church equally is founded vpon them all, lib. 1. aduerſ. Iouinian. For as in this place the words ſeeme to be ſpoken to Peter, though for, and in the name of the reſt: ſo elſewhere the commiſſion is granted generally to all, Whatſoeuer you binde in earth, &c. And, Whoſe ſinnes you remit, they are remitted. Matth. 18.18. Iohn 20.23.

2. Secondly, 1. plenary Indulgences properly ſo called, which are of all ſinnes, neither Pope, Cardinall, nor Biſhop haue power to grant, but they are reſerued onely to Chriſt: The blood of Chriſt (onely purgeth) from all ſinne. 1 Iohn 1.7. 2. In the adminiſtration of the Church-keyes, the Pope hath no preeminence before other Biſhops, but they haue the ſame power in their dioceſſe, which he hath in his: as Saint Peter diſdaineth not to call the reſt of the paſtors Elders, and himſelfe συμπρεσβύτερον, a fellow Elder, and he exhorteth them to feede the flocke: not taking this office of feeding wholly to himſelfe. 1 Peter 5.1. 3. Yet though Peter be prooued to haue had a ſuperiority, it is not ſtraight derived to the Pope, who is not his true ſucceſſor. Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Oues Chriſti non ſolum tunc ſuſcepit beatus Petrus, ſed & nobiſcum eas ſuſcepit, & cum illo eas ſuſcepimus omnes: The ſheepe of Chriſt bleſſed Peter did not then onely receiue, but he tooke them together with vs, and we with him: de dignit. ſacerdot. c. 2. 4. As for that diſtinction of plenary Indulgences for forty, an hundred dayes, for a yeere, it is but a Romiſh deuice, and of no antiquity, for the Popes aduantage, and as a ſteppe to lift vp the Pope into his chaire of pride, that in euery caſe ſtill a prerogatiue may be reſerued to him. Plenary indulgences not peculiar to the Pope. 5. The office and calling of Cardinals is one of the Popes creatures, and what priuiledge they haue, we doe not greatly force: it is grounded rather vpon cuſtome, than any law, as Bellarmine confeſſeth cap. 11. we hold both the calling of them, with all their immunities to be Antichriſtian, as I haue ſhewed before, Contr. 5. qu. 3. part. 3. 6. Concerning generall Councels, that they haue authority aboue the Pope, I haue likewiſe prooued before, Contr. 3. qu. 7. whither I referre the reader: And that Councels may alſo giue plenary Indulgences as well as the Pope, it appeareth both by their practice: for ſo did the Councell of Baſil, wherein Panormitane alloweth the act of the Councell, a great popiſh Doctor, though Bellarminus call it a ſchiſmaticall Councell: And beſide, of this iudgement are Felinus ſer. de indulg. num. 28. Dominic. à Soto, Nauarrus, with others cited by Bellar. cap. 11.

3. Acts 20.28. Biſhops and Paſtors haue their calling from God not from the Pope. Thirdly, Biſhops and Paſtors receiue their calling from God, and not from the Pope: Acts 20. verſe 28. Spiritus ſanctus conſtituit vos Epiſcopos, &c. The holy Spirit hath made you Biſhops. Cyprian: Chriſtus dicit ad Apoſtolos, ac per hoc ad omnes præpoſitos, qui Apoſtolis vicaria ordinatione ſuccedunt: Chriſt ſaith to the Apoſtles, and to all gouernours of the Church, which ſucceed the Apoſtles as their Vicars, lib. 4. epiſt. 9. Hierom. Omnes epiſcopi Apoſtolorum ſucceſſores: All Biſhops are the Apoſtles ſucceſſors, Euagrio. Their authority then is not deriued to them from the Pope: 2. neither can the Pope infringe or make voide the acts of other Biſhops by right, but therein he is an vſurper: As Cyprian ſaith: Nec quiſquam epiſcopum ſe eſſe epiſcoporum conſtituit, aut tyrannidis terrore ad obſequendi neceſſitatem collegas ſuos adigit, &c. None of vs muſt make himſelfe a Biſhop of Biſhops, or with tyrannicall feare compell his colleagues to obey, &c. in concil. Carthag.

4. Fourthly, 1. that Biſhops are Princes of the Lords people, is contrary to the Apoſtle, Not as though yee were Lords ouer Gods heritage. 1 Peter 5.3. Saint Hieronie ſaith: Patres ſe ſciant eſſe, non dominos

Of Paſtors and Preachers of the word, how they doe bind and looſe.

Let them know themſelues to be fathers, not Lords, Hieron. ad Theophil. 2. All Paſtors, to whom the preaching of the word is committed, by the ſame word haue authority to bind and looſe: that which our Sauiour ſpake to his Apoſtles, Iohn 20.23. Whoſe ſinnes you remit, &c. is vnderſtood of all paſtors: and the Rhemiſts confeſſe in their annotations vpon this place, that this ſpeciall facultie of the Prieſthood conſiſting in remitting of ſinne, is here beſtowed vpon them. Saint Paul ſheweth, that all paſtors and teachers are giuen, for the gathering together of the Saints, the worke of the miniſtery, the edification of the body of Chriſt. But theſe duties cannot be performed without the power of binding and looſing. Hierome ſaith, Quid facit excepta ordinatione epiſcopus, quod non facit presbyter? What doth a Biſhop, beſide ordination, which a presbyter doth not? Hier. Euag. Origen ſaith, Epiſcopis & presbyteris cradita ſunt cathedra. The chaire of the Church is committed to Biſhops and prieſts, tract. 15. in Mat. Your owne decrees witneſſe: Qui vult confiteri, quarat ſacerdotem ſcientem ligare, & ſoluere: He that will confeſſe, let him ſeeke a prieſt, that knoweth how to binde and looſe, Cauſ. 33. diſt. 1. c. 88. Laſtly, ſome of your owne Doctors doe affirme, that euery prieſt that heareth confeſſions, hath authority to abſolue and grant Indulgences: Angelus in ſumma verb. indulgent. num. 5. Barthol. Fumus. in ſumma verb. indulgent. num. 2. And thus much Bellarmine acknowledgeth.

Epheſ. 4.12.

The power of binding and looſing belongeth not to thoſe that are not paſtors.

Fifthly, 1. that the power of Indulgence may be diſpenſed by any which are not entred into the Orders of the Church, nor admitted to the miniſtery of the word, it is contrary to the Scriptures: for Chriſt ſpeaketh to his Apoſtles, whom he had choſen and appointed to that office before, Mat. 10.1. Whatſoeuer ye bind in earth, &c. And Iohn 20.21. he firſt doth breath vpon them the holy Ghoſt, and ſaith, Whoſe ſinnes ye remit, &c. Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Verbum dei dimittit peccata, &c. The Word of God forgiueth ſinnes, qui ſoluendi ius non habet ligandi non habet, &c. ius hoc ſolis permiſſum eſt ſacerdotibus: They that haue not power to looſe, haue not power to bind, &c. this power is onely permitted to prieſts, lib. 2. de Cain & Abel. cap. 4. Therefore he muſt be a prieſt, and a miniſter of the word, which hath power to bind or looſe. Yea, the Rhemiſts confeſſe, that to remit ſinnes is a ſpeciall faculty of the prieſthood, as I alleadged before: wherefore none can execute this power that is not in orders.

He that is in deadly ſin cannot caſt out others, being caſt out himſelfe.

Sixthly, 1. this laſt aſſertion is contrary to the Scripture, for he that hath a beame in his owne eye cannot ſee clearely to caſt out the moat out of his brothers eye: for how can a man iudge rightly of another mans ſinne, that doth not iudge it in himſelfe? 2. Origen ſaith: Qui funibus ſuorum peccatorum conſtringitur, fruſtra vel ligat, vel ſoluit: He that is tyed with the cordes of his owne ſinnes, bindeth or looſeth in vaine: tract. in Matth. 1. 3. Nicholaus 1. one of their Popes, Epiſt. ad Michaelem, thus ſaith, Qui ligati ſunt ligare, & qui ipſi mortui ſunt alios mortificare non poſſunt: They that are bound themſelues cannot bind others, and they which are dead themſelues, cannot mortifie or giue ouer others to death, &c. And to the ſame purpoſe he alleadgeth his predeceſſor Celeſtinus: Non iudicamus eum remotum, quia non poterat quenquam eius remouere ſententia, qui ſe iam prabuerat ipſe remouendum: We doe not iudge him as remooued, becauſe his ſentence could not remoue any, who did ſhew himſelfe worthy to be remooued, &c. He then that is in any damnable ſinne, and is worthy to be caſt out himſelfe, hath no power to caſt out others.

An Appendix to this part, whether Indulgences may be granted without great and weighty cauſe.

The Papiſts.

WHere as the popiſh diuines are diuided about this queſtion, ſome affirming that ſo the cauſe be lawfull and honeſt, not euill, vaine or worldly, but belonging to Gods glory, though it be not otherwiſe a matter of great waight, indulgences may be granted: as when the Pope vpon Eaſter day giueth plenary indulgence to the people that ſtand about the gate of Saint Peters Church; which ſeemeth to be but a ſmall matter: ſic. Thom. in 4. d. 20. qu. 1. ar. 3. qu. 2. Durand. Antonius, and others by Bellarmine produced: others doe thinke, that the cauſe muſt not onely be honeſt and godly, but proportionable in greatnes to the indulgence granted: ſic Bonauentur. Richard. Ioan. Gerſon. Adrianus Papa, with others rehearſed by Bellarmine: to the latter opinion he ſeemeth to encline, giuing notwithſtanding ſuch cauteles, as that he alloweth indulgences granted for the ſmalleſt matters: as firſt the cauſe, which is light in it ſelfe may tend to a great end, as the ſtanding of the people before S. Peters Church gate, is a meane to teſtifie their faith of the head of the Church, to the honour of the Apoſtolike Sea: ſecondly, it is not for the ſubiect to iudge which are great and weighty cauſes: they may be great, which ſeeme but ſmall to them: Bellarm. de indulgent. lib. 1. c. 12.

47. Error

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, who ſeeth not how this captious and quaint diſtinguiſher by his quirkes and ſubtilties goeth about to maintaine all the ridiculous and raſh indulgences, which are granted by the Popes: for if ſtanding at S. Peters Church doore, and looking vpon it, be a matter of ſo great weight, to deſerue a plenary indulgence, you ſhall neuer want weighty cauſes for your pardons: and to barre the people (whom you call the Popes ſubiects) from eſtimating or valuing the greatnes or ſmalnes of cauſes, you doe but make a way, to doe what you liſt with your pardons.

Secondly, whereas then you require theſe conditions in giuing of pardons, they muſt not be granted, firſt, for euill works: ſecondly, for worldly matters: thirdly, but ſuch as tend to the honour of God: fourthly, and are not light or vaine, but of ſome waight and importance. It is euident that the Popes pardons haue offended againſt all theſe rules: firſt, forty dayes pardon was proclaimed vnder Longland Biſhop of Lincolne to as many as brought a fagot to burne the poore ſeruants of Chriſt, which was an euill and vncharitable worke. Fox pag.983.

Indulgences not to be granted for euill workes.

2. Full remiſſion of ſins was granted to as many as did aſſiſt Spencer Biſhop of Norwich to fight for Pope Vrbane the ſixth, againſt the Antipope Clement p.446. which was but a meere worldly and temporall matter.

Nor for worldly matters.

3. Sixtus the fourth granted great indulgences to thoſe that did celebrate the feaſt of the conception of the Virgin Mary, adding this clauſe to the Aue Mary: Haile Mary full of grace, &c. and bleſſed is Anna thy mother, of whom thy virgins fleſh hath proceeded without ſpot of originall ſinne, Fox pag.800. this cauſe was not to the honour, but to the diſhonour of Chriſt; whoſe onely conception was without ſinne: as is before ſhewed, contr. 9. qu. 9. part. 1.

Nor where Gods honour is not ſought.

4. When as the Friar Tecellius went about with the Popes pardons, offering for ten ſhillings, that whoſo would, ſhould deliuer one ſoule out of purgatory. ex Chriſtian. Maſ. lib. 10. This was no waighty or great cauſe, being but a matter of ten ſhillings.

Nor for trifles.

Thirdly, the Popes friends then ſhould giue him counſell to be more ſparing and not ſo lauiſh of the Church-treaſure: Eugenius the fourth being requeſted to ioyne with the Councell of Baſil to grant generall Indulgences for the reducing of the Greeke Church, anſwered, Ne claues eccleſiæ contemnerentur, velle ſe maturus incedere: That he would take pauſe in the matter, leſt the keyes of the Church ſhould be contemned, epiſt ſyndal. 8. If the Pope would be aduiſed in ſo great a matter, it is intolerable raſhneſſe to laſh out with his Indulgences, where no ſuch cauſe is.

Fourthly, Saint Paul would not grant pardon or indulgence lightly to the young man, but after he perceiued his ſorrow and heauineſſe to be ſo great, that he was like to be ſwallowed vp of it: if he were not comforted.

2 Corin. 2. 7.

Saint Cyprian ſaith, as he is cited in the Decrees, diſt. 50. ca. 27. Satis eſt temerarius, qui remiſſionem peccatorum cunctis ſe dare poſſe confidit: He is very raſh, that thinketh he can giue remiſſion of ſinnes to all, &c. as the Pope doth, when he giueth plenary Indulgence to whole multitudes together.

The ſeuenth part, of the diſpoſition required to bee in them that receiue Indulgences.

The Papiſts.

First, Indulgences may be granted to a ſinner, and for ſuch workes as are done while he is in the ſtate of ſinne, as if a ſinfull man doe contribute toward the recouering of Ieruſalem: Bellarm. cap. 13. 1 48. Error.

Secondly, yet a man cannot perceiue the fruit of ſuch indulgences, vnleſſe hee be in the ſtate of grace, Bellarm. lib. 1. c. 13. queſt. 1. 2 49. Error.

Thirdly, if the good worke enioyned to be done be accompanied or ioyned with veniall ſinne, it hindereth the fruit of indulgence, Bellarm. ibid. 3 50. Error.

Fourthly, he that will receiue benefit by theſe indulgences, muſt confeſſe and be truely penitent. 4 51. Error.

Fifthly, he cannot enioy the indulgence, that doth not performe all the workes that are enioyned, ibid. queſt. 4. 5 52. Error.

Sixthly, Indulgences may be profitable to thoſe that will not, though they can, ſatisfie for themſelues, but doe reſt in the ſatisfaction of others, ibid. queſt. 5. 6 53. Error.

The Proteſtants.

First, 1. the Apoſtle ſaith, without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb. 11. 6. how dare yee then grant indulgence or remiſſion to them which are yet in their ſinnes, and not reconciled to God? 2. This is alſo contrary to their owne doctrine: for they ſay, an indulgence is a releaſe of the puniſhment of ſinne, which remaineth after the fault it ſelfe is remitted: but now it is affirmed, that indulgence may be granted to them which are yet in their ſinnes. 3. It is contrary to their owne law: Peccati venia non datur niſi correcto: The pardon of ſinnes muſt be granted to none, but to them that are amended, ſext. decretal. regul. iuris. 5.

1. Pardon and indulgence onely to be giuen to them that are corrected and amended.

Secondly, as we willingly grant, that a man being not in the ſtate of grace, cannot be partaker of the true indulgence and remiſſion of ſinnes: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, By grace are yee ſaued through faith: ſo this poſition is flatly oppoſite to the popiſh error of Indulgences: for if a man be in the ſtate of grace before the Indulgence be granted, which they ſay is but a releaſe of the puniſhment, then is their Indulgence altogether ſuperfluous: for to a man being in the ſtate of grace, there remaineth neither ſinne nor puniſhment of ſin. Rom 5. 1. Being iuſtified by faith, we are at peace with

2. Epheſ. 2. 8. A man in the ſtate of grace and no other indulgence of the puniſhment. Romanes 5. 1.

God: v.9. Being iuſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaued from wrath through him. If we are then preſently vpon our iuſtification at peace with God, and deliuered from his wrath, then there remaineth no puniſhment of ſinne: for God doth not puniſh for ſinne but in wrath. S. Ambroſe ſaith, Qui fidem habet, habet regnum cœlorum: he that hath faith, hath the Kingdome of heauen, in Luk. 13. And he that is in the ſtate of grace hath faith, he hath then already the Kingdome of heauen, and ſo your Indulgences come too late.

3. Indulgences not hindred by veniall ſins. Iſay 64.6.

Thirdly, 1. If euery veniall, that is, ſmall offence, ſhould hinder the true indulgence and remiſſion of ſinnes, then it were impoſſible for any man to attaine vnto it: for our beſt workes are blemiſhed, as the Prophet ſaith, All our righteouſneſſe is as a ſtained cloth. And Origen very well noteth vpon theſe words of our Sauiour, Luk. 17.10. When you haue done all, ſay, you are vnprofitable ſeruants: Nec enim ſi verè bona eſſent, quæ facimus, ſcriptum eſſet, vt facientes ea dicamus nos inutiles ſeruos, &c. For if they were truely good things which we doe, it ſhould not be written, that doing ſuch things, we ſhould ſay wee are vnprofitable ſeruants: in compariſon of other mens workes they are called good, ſed quantum ad veritatem, bonum noſtrum non eſt bonum: But in reſpect of the verity it ſelfe, our good works are not good, Tract. 8. in Matth. 2. And concerning your owne indulgences, thinke you, that when vnder Clemens 6. in the Iubilee celebrated anno 1350. there were numbred 500. euery day going and comming to Rome, and an hundred thouſand waiting at the Popes gates for pardons, that none of theſe had any veniall faults? 3. And are your Iubilee pardons of ſo ſmall force, that whereas they can releaſe Purgatory paines for many thouſand yeeres, they cannot remooue one poore veniall ſinne? If this doctrine were generally knowne to your friends and welwillers, I thinke your Iubile pardons would not find many chapmen to buy them.

Pſalmes 4.4. Pſalmes 51.27. Repentance bringeth indulgence whereſoeuer, and not at Rome onely.

Fourthly, 1. If your Indulgences profit not, vnleſſe they be truely penitent and confeſſe their ſins which doe receiue them, what need the poore people take ſo long iourneyes to come to Rome for pardons? for if they be truly contrite, they ſhall find forgiueneſſe at home: yea, if they examine their heart vpon their bedr, and tremble, it ſhall be a good ſacrifice to God: A broken and a contrite heart God will not deſpiſe, Pſalm. 51. 17. To whom will I looke, ſaith the Lord? to him that is poore and of a contrite ſpirit, Iſai. 66.2. Whereſoeuer a man repenteth, and whenſoeuer, he ſhall find remiſſion. Ambroſe ſaith: Iob in ſtercore ſedens, omnia, quæ amiſerat, recuperauit: Iob ſitting vpon the dunghill, recouered all he loſt, de pœnit. lib. 1. c. 1. No place can be ſo meane, or baſe, where true repentance is not accepted of God.

2. But how ſtandeth this with your doctrine of Indulgences, to require repentance and confeſſion, whereby we obtaine remiſſion of ſinnes, and not of the puniſhment onely? and you ſay indulgence releaſeth onely the puniſhment remaining after remiſſion: but now your Indulgences are proclaimed, before remiſſion of ſinnes by repentance and confeſſion: for in the Bull of Indulgences this clauſe is inſerted: Pœnitentibus & verè confeſſis, vel qui verè pœnitebunt & confitebuntur: The Indulgence is granted to them that are truely penitent and confeſſed, or which ſhall be truly penitent, and confeſſe, Bonif. 8. extrau. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1. And thus they are promiſed a releaſe of the puniſhment, before they haue repented of the ſinne.

3. It is an hard matter, for your poore ſuppliants, by this meanes to find repentance: for your yeere of Iubile maketh them ſecure, and many doe ſin willingly in hope of forgiueneſſe then. But this is no true repentance to ſinne that grace may more abound, and to doe euill, that good may come of it. Of ſuch Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Alij propoſita ſpe agenda pœnitentiæ, licentiam ſibi peccandi propagatam putant: Some vpon hope of penance propounded or publiſhed, doe thinke their liberty of ſinning enlarged, lib. 2. de pœnitent. c. 9. And it is Bellarmines owne poſition, that if a man in hope of the yeere of Iubilee doe willingly fall into ſinne, he may notwithſtanding bee abſolued, lib. 1. de Indulg. cap. 10. pag. 60.

Romanes 3.8.

Iſai. 1.16. Deut. 30.13. Performance of enioyned workes of penance not neceſſary to obtaine true indulgence.

Fifthly, it is an hard condition, that a man cannot enioy a Popes pardon, vnleſſe he performe all workes that are enioyned: Firſt, pardon with God is more eaſily obtained: for he requireth of vs no ſuch painefull works, but onely to ceaſe to doe euill, and to learne to doe well. Secondly, he requireth not of vs to goe ouer the ſea in pilgrimage, to Ieruſalem, to Rome, or to any other place. Neither is it yet beyond the ſeas, that thou ſhouldeſt ſay, who ſhall goe ouer the ſea for vs, to bring it vs? Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe ſaith of Dauids repentance: Dauid exclamauit, peccaui, & mox audiuit, Deus abſtulit peccatum; quantum valent tres ſyllabæ? tres enim ſyllabæ ſunt, peccaui, ſed in iſtis tribus ſyllabis flamma ſacrificij cordis eius ad cœlum aſcendit; Dauid cryed out, I haue ſinned, and ſtraight he heard, God hath taken away thy ſinne: ſee how much three ſyllables auaile: I haue ſinned, are but three ſyllables, yet in theſe three ſyllables the flaming ſacrifice of his heart aſcended: exhortat. ad pœnitent. Here are all the workes required of Dauid, with a ſorrowfull heart to pronounce three ſyllables. Fourthly, Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Nunquam ſpernit pœnitentiam, ſi ei ſincere & ſimpliciter offeratur,—etiam ſi quis explere non poterit omnem ſatisfaciendi ordinem: He neuer deſpiſeth repentance, if it be ſincerely and ſimply offered him, although a man doe not fulfill all the order of ſatisfaction, de temp. ſerm. 181. c. 16. God then forgiueth, though a man cannot fulfill all that is enioyned: but the Pope will not pardon, vnleſſe the whole ſatisfaction enioyned be performed.

Sixthly, againſt the laſt propoſition Cardinall Caietane reaſoneth thus: That Indulgences cannot profit them, that haue not a purpoſe to ſatisfie for themſelues.

1. Becauſe ſuch are vnworthy of Indulgence, but the Church intendeth not to beſtow Indulgences vpon the vnworthy.

Indulgences cannot profit them, that haue no purpoſe to ſatisfie by themſelues.

2. It is not fit for a man to aske of his friend to ſatisfie for him, if hee be able himſelfe to doe it.

3. In a well conſtituted common-wealth, the common treaſure muſt not be employed to pay their debts, that are able themſelues, &c.

4. Indulgences are granted to ſuch as are truly penitent; but they are not, that refuſe to bring forth fruits of repentance: ſic Caietan tract. 10, de ſuſcipientib. indulg. c. 1.

Anſwere 1. Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſuch bee not vnworthy, but non digni, not worthy onely.

2. A man may craue his friends ſatisfaction in ſuch a caſe of fauour, becauſe his friend hath no need himſelfe.

3. There may be cauſe, when it is fit their debts ſhould be paid of the common treaſury, that are able to diſcharge them of their owne.

4. They are truly penitent, that haue a purpoſe to ſatisfie themſelues, if others did not ſatisfie for them, Bellarm. c. 13.

1. Heb. 11.36. Matth. 22.8. Acts 13. 46. Indulgences not to be granted to the vnworthy. 2 Theſ. 1. 11.

Contra. 1. This is a very nice diſtinction, to make a difference betweene indignum, vnworthy, and non dignum, not worthy: the Scripture vſeth them both indifferently: as Heb. 11.36. Of whom the world was not worthy: was not the world vnworthy of them alſo? So Matth. 22.8. They which were bidden, were not worthy: were they not alſo vnworthy? And ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, Acts 13. 46. You iudge your ſelues vnworthy of euerlaſting life: ſo to be vnworthy, and not worthy, are all one. 2. The ſpirituall treaſure of the Church is not beſtowed vpon any, but ſuch as are thought worthy: That our God may make you worthy of his calling: therefore it is not to be giuen to thoſe that are not worthie.

2. 2 Sam. 12.4,5. Luke 11.6. Matth. 25.9.

Secondly, 1. If it be no fault for a man to borrow of his neighbour when hee hath enough himſelfe, why did Dauid iudge him worthy of death, that hauing many ſheepe of his owne, fetcht his poore neighbours ſheepe to entertaine his friend with? 2. One friend vſeth not to lend to another, but when he needeth, as it is in the Parable, One commeth to his friend at midnight, and ſaith, Lend me three loaues, for a friend of mine is come out of the way vnto me, and I haue nothing to ſet before him: verſ.8. Though he would not ariſe and giue him, becauſe he is his friend, yet becauſe of his importunity, he would riſe and giue him as many as he needed. Here we ſee that one friend is not to trouble another, but when he hath need. 3. in ſpirituall things a man hath need of all himſelfe, Leſt there be not enough for vs and you.

3. 1 Tim. 5. 16.

Thirdly, Saint Paul commandeth the contrary, that where there is ſufficient beſide, none ſhould be at the common charge, If any faithfull man or woman haue widowes, let them miniſter vnto them, and let not the Church be charged: and this reaſon is giuen, that there may be ſufficient for widowes indeed: that is, for them which haue no maintenance of their owne. So then, if the common wealth ſhould ſpend their treaſure vpon them that are able of themſelues, the poore ſhould want it.

4. Marke 9.50. Matth. 3. 10. None helped by the ſatisfaction of others.

Fourthly, 1. the Scripture ſaith, Haue ſalt in your ſelues, Euery man muſt be ſeaſoned in himſelfe, and not looke to be ſeaſoned by another. 2. And Iohn Baptiſt ſheweth who they are that bring forth fruits worthy of repentance by the example of a tree, Euery tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewen downe and caſt into the fire. It excuſeth not a barren tree, to haue another tree that is fruitfull to grow by it: ſo neither can one man be ſaued by anothers workes. 3. Ambroſe therefore ſaith: Ablue igitur te lachrymis tuis, ſi tu ipſe te fleueris, alius te non flebit: nam ſi Saul defleſſet peccata ſua, Samuel eum non fleuiſſet: Therefore waſh thy ſelfe with thine owne teares, if thou weepe for thy ſelfe, another ſhall not neede to weepe for thee: for if Saul had wept for his ſinne, Samuel would not haue wept for him: lib. 5. in Luc. Like as then Samuels teares did not profit Saul, becauſe he lamented not for himſelfe, ſo neither can other mens workes helpe them that doe not worke for themſelues. Wherefore Caietane doth here come ſomewhat neere the marke, and Bellarmine hath miſt the cuſhen.

The eighth part, whether Indulgences doe profit the dead:

This part is diuided into fiue queſtions.

The firſt queſtion, whether the dead haue any benefit by the Indulgences of the Church.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine proueth the queſtion thus:

Argum. 1. The prayers of the liuing and other workes by way of impetration profit the dead: Ergo, the ſame workes, as prayer, faſting, being alſo ſatisfactorie, doe alſo benefit them by way of ſatisfaction. 54. Error.

2. The faithfull departed make one body, and one Church with the faithfull liuing: therefore the ſatisfactions of the liuing may be applyed to the dead.

3. And if priuate men may apply their ſatisfactions to the reſt of the members being dead, much more may they apply vnto them the ſatisfactions of Chriſt, and of the Saints: Bellarmine cap. 14. qu. 1.

The Proteſtants.

1. Confut. 1. First the argument followeth not, we may pray for the dead: Ergo, we may alſo ſatisfie for them: for we grant that we may one pray for another while we liue, but we cannot ſatisfie one for another, becauſe ſupplication is of mercy: but ſatisfaction is of deſert. Secondly, neither is it true that the prayers of the liuing doe profit the dead: requeſt or interceſſion auaileth not after ſentence giuen, and iudgement paſt, which is in the finall end and departure in this life: for after the gate is ſhut, there is no entring, Matth. 25. 10. and your Canons ſay, Mortuorum cauſa Deo reſeruanda eſt: The cauſe of the dead muſt be reſerued to God. cauſ. 24. qu. 2. c. 1. Leo.

Matth. 25. 10.

2. Secondly, First the Apoſtle ſaith, Of whom is named the whole family in heauen and in earth: wee acknowledge a glorious part of the family of the Church to be in heauen: but of any part thereof to be in purgatory we read not: 2. If this be a good reaſon, the ſoules in Purgatory are our fellow members; Ergo, we may ſatisfie for them, it will follow as well, that they may ſatisfie for vs, becauſe we are their members alſo; and much rather, becauſe the torments of purgatory being ſo exceeding painefull, they are ſo much the more able to ſatisfie. 3. It is not a ſufficient warrant to pray for the dead, becauſe they are members; for then we ſhould pray alſo for the ſpirits of the iuſt that are in heauen: but our prayer muſt be in faith, Iam. 5. 15. the prayer of faith: We muſt haue a particular knowledge of their ſtate, for whom we pray, and an aſſurance that our prayers ſhall be heard; but concerning prayer for the dead, we can haue neither knowledge of their ſtate, neither haue we any ſuch warrant out of the word that our prayers are heard.

3. Thirdly, 1. It followeth not, a man may diſpenſe his owne goods, Ergo, another may doe it for him: the Saints ſatisfactions are (as the Rhemiſts ſay. annot in Coloſſ. 1. verſ. 24.) applicable by the ſufferers ſpeciall intention: Ergo, a man hath more right to diſpoſe of his owne, than the Pope hath. 2. No man can ſatisfie for himſelfe at all, and we deny abſolutely that there are any ſuch ſatisfactions applicable, priuately or publikely to the liuing, or to the dead: ſome of our reaſons are theſe.

Reaſons ſhewing that no ſatisfactions are applicable to the dead.

Argum. 1. The Prophet ſaith, Pſal. 49. A man can by no meanes redeeme his brother, he cannot giue his ranſome to God: but to deliuer ſoules out of Purgatory, and to ſatisfie for them, is to redeeme them: Ergo, by ſatisfactions ſoules cannot be helped out of Purgatory, if there were any.

2. No man can ſatisfie for himſelfe, much leſſe for any other; for when a man hath done all, he is but an vnprofitable ſeruant, Luke 17. 10. if he be an vnprofitable ſeruant for himſelfe, hee cannot be profitable for another.

3. Dauid ceaſeth to pray for his child, when it was dead: though he were out of hope of life for it in this world, yet he might haue prayed, and faſted, and ſatisfied for the ſoule of his child being departed, if ſo be any ſuch courſe to be taken for the dead, were acceptable to God: But ſo Dauid doth not, but reaſoneth thus: 2 Sam. 12. 23. Now being dead, wherefore ſhould I now faſt? He ſeeth no reaſon why he ſhould faſt or vſe any other ſatisfaction for the dead.

4. Saint Ambroſe ſaith directly: Nihil proſunt flagella poſt mortem, & ideo Dauid, dum eſſet in iſtius corporis vita, in flagella ſe praeparauit, vt eum Dominus reciperet caſtigatum: Stripes profit not after death, and therefore Dauid, while he was in the life of this body, prepared himſelfe for ſtripes, that the Lord might receiue him now already chaſtiſed and corrected. de interpret. lib. 4. c. 4.

5. Gelaſius ſaith, as he is cited: cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 4. de eo qui in diuino eſt iudicio conſtitutus, nobis fas non eſt aliud decernere prater id, in quo eum dies ſupremus inuenit: of him that is now appointed to the diuine iudgement, it is not lawfull for vs otherwiſe to diſcerne and iudge, than as his laſt day, found him, &c. How then can any man thinke to alter the ſtate of the dead, by ſatisfactions, or indulgences whatſoeuer?

6. The words of the Popes Bull of indulgences are theſe: Verè pœnitentibus & confeſſis pleniſſimam concedimus veniam peccatorum: We grant plenary forgiueneſſe of ſinnes to them that are truly penitent and confeſſed: but in purgatory there is no repentance, which muſt be done in the body, when they may bring forth fruites of repentance; neither is there any Prieſt there to be confeſſed vnto: Ergo, the benefit of indulgences cannot extend to them.

7. We haue teſtimony heere of ſome of our aduerſaries: theſe are of opinion, that indulgences doe not profit the dead: Oſtienſis in ſumma. lib. 5. tit. de remiſſionib. Num. 9. Gabriel lect. 57. in canon. miſſ. Ioan. Maior. in 4. diſt. 20. qu. 2.

The ſecond queſtion, of the manner how Indulgences are applyed to the dead.

The Papiſts.

1. 55. Error. First, ſome of them affirme, that the Pope may iudicially abſolue the ſoules in purgatory, and that they doe belong vnto his iuriſdiction, and ſo he may extend his indulgences vnto them, as vnto the liuing: Michael Medina diſput. 7. de indulgent. c. 34. Bellarmine with other Papiſts miſliketh this opinion, who deny not, but that the Pope may apply indulgences to the dead, but not iudicially, or as exerciſing any iuriſdiction ouer them. Bellarm.c.24. queſt.2.

2. 56. Error. Secondly, Bellarmine affirmeth, that indulgences are profitable to the dead, per modum ſuffragij, after the manner of the ſuffrage of the Church, that as the ſuffrage or prayer of the Church doe helpe by way of merite, impetration, ſatisfaction; ſo indulgences are granted to the dead, as they are ſatisfactory, and ſo per modum ſuffragij ſatisfactorij: after the manner of a ſuffrage as it is ſatisfactory. Ibid. qu.3.

3. 57. Error. Thirdly, ſome of them thinke, that indulgences doe profit the dead, ex condigno, of condignity and worthineſſe: Dominicus à Soto in 4. diſt.22. qu.2. art.3. Nauarr. de Iubilao. notab. 22. num.20. Other of them rather thinke, that indulgences are not auaileable for the dead, otherwiſe then by the mercy of God, and ſo of congruite, rather than of condignity; ſo Caietanus, Petrus à Soto, Cordubenſ. to whom Bellarmine ſubſcribeth: their reaſon is, becauſe one liuing cannot ſatisfie for another of condignity, much leſſe for the dead. Bellarm.c.14. queſt.4.

4. 58. Error. Fourthly, to apply iudulgences to the dead, there is required a ſupreame and high authority, and therefore Biſhops and other inferiour prelates cannot apply indulgences to the dead, but onely the Pope, ibid. queſt.5.

5. 59. Error. Fifthly, the Pope cannot deliuer at his pleaſure ſoules out of purgatory, but there muſt be ſome particular iuſt cauſe belonging to the glory of God, and the profit of the Church, &c. a generall cauſe is not ſufficient, for then Chriſt himſelfe ſhould haue deliuered all the ſoules already out of purgatory. Bellarm. ibid. qu.5.

6. 60. Error. Sixthly, indulgences directly belong to the liuing, indirectly to the dead, no otherwiſe, then as the liuing doe performe the workes enioyned for the dead. Bellarm. ibid.

7. 61. Error. Seuenthly, indulgences doe not profit the dead in common, otherwiſe then as they reioyce one for anothers good, but onely thoſe ſoules are deliuered thereby, to whom they are particularly intended. Bellarm.c.24. qu.6.

8. 62. Error. Eighthly, the Pope may releaſe vnto a man liuing by indulgence, the paine of purgatory, which otherwiſe he were ſubiect vnto. c.6. reſp. ad obiect.1.

9. 63. Error. Ninthly, concerning the greatneſſe of the paine of purgatory, Bellarmine thinketh, that though it be greater than all the paines of this life, yet the voluntarie puniſhment of this life is more effectuall for the expiation of ſinne, than the more grieuous paine of purgatory: becauſe this is a time of mercy, that of iuſtice; others doe thinke contrary, that one day of paine in purgatory is more auaileable than many yeeres of moſt ſeuere penance in this life. Dominicus à Soto in 4. diſt. 21. qu. 2. artic. 1. Bellarm.c.9.

The Proteſtants.

1. No binding or looſing but in earth in this life.

FIrſt, 1. The Pope hath no power to extend his Indulgences any way at all to the dead, either iudicially by way of abſolution, or indulgently by way of diſpenſation: for the Scripture is euident, whatſoeuer you bind in earth ſhall be bound in heauen, Matth.18.18. Gelaſius vrgeth theſe words, ſuper terram, vpon the earth: in hac ligatione defunctum nuſquam dixit abſolui, he no where ſaith, that a man dying being bound, can afterward be abſolued, cauſ.24. qu.3. c.2. And whereas Bellarmine telleth vs, that this is ſpoken onely of iudiciall abſolution: the words are generall of all binding and looſing, that it muſt bee done vpon earth, and therefore cannot be extended to them, which are dead.

The Pope hath no iuriſdiction ouer the dead.

2. Yet contrary to this doctrine of Bellarmine, the Pope taketh vpon him as a iudge to abſolue and condemne the dead. 1. Becauſe he doth excommunicate the dead: which although Bellarmine ſaith is nothing elſe but a declaration of that ſentence, which ſhould haue beene pronounced, while they liued: yet it is euident by their owne law, that indulgentiæ non proſunt non ſubditis, that indulgences, abſolutions (and ſo conſequently, ligations, excommunications) doe not profit (and ſo likewiſe diſprofit or preiudice) them that are no ſubiects. decr. Greg. lib.5. tit.38. cap.4. Wherefore if the dead bee not ſubiect to the Popes iuriſdiction, the ſentence of excommunication or abſolution doth not bind or looſe them. 2. It is Bellarmines owne poſition, vt indulgentiæ dentur, requiritur iuriſdictio, that indulgences may be granted, there is required a iuriſdiction. lib.1. de indulg. cap.14. qu.3. if the Pope then haue no iuriſdiction ouer the dead, he can grant no indulgences vnto them. 3. One of their owne Doctors ſaith: Animæ exiſtentes in purgatorio, ſunt de iuriſdictione papæ: Soules being in purgatory are of the Popes iuriſdiction, Iohan. Angelus. 4. And though they will not be bound to the opinion of one Doctor, yet they cannot refuſe the iudgement of the Pope: Clemens 6. thus ſaith in his Bull, Mandamus Angelis paradiſi: We command the Angels of Paradiſe, to carry the ſoules deliuered out of purgatory to the glory of Paradiſe, &c. If the Pope then doe command Angels, and ſo doe exerciſe iuriſdiction ouer them, much more ouer purgatory ſoules: the Pope then cannot giue indulgence, but where he hath iuriſdiction: but their new Doctors aſhamed of the groſſeneſſe of the elder Papiſts, allow the Pope no iuriſdiction ouer the dead, then conſequently he cannot grant them any indulgence.

The Pope commandeth Angels.

2. Secondly, 1. We deny that the ſuffrages and the prayers of the liuing, are ſatisfactory for one another, but only deprecatory & impetratory: for praier receiueth al the force thereof from faith, Iam.5.15.

Epheſ.2.8.

Prayers not ſatisfactory neither for the liuing nor dead.

the prayer of faith : and faith is grounded vpon grace and fauour : as the Apoſtle ſaith, By grace are ye ſaued through faith. It is one thing to pray and intreate, another to ſatisfie : as Origen ſheweth the difference. Cæteri precibus, peccata Chriſtus ſolus poteſtate dimiſit : Others by prayers, Chriſt by his power onely remitteth ſinnes : hom.24. in Numer. If then we cannot ſatisfie by our prayers for the liuing, much leſſe for the dead.

2. Some of the Papiſts doe thinke, that indulgences doe not profit the dead, but ſola vi ſuffragiorum, onely by the force of ſuffrages or prayers : Oſtienſ. If indulgences then are not auaileable but by prayer, indulgences are ſuperfluous and needleſſe. But I haue ſhewed before, that neither prayers profit for the dead.

Reuel. 5.9. All ſatisfaction muſt be of condignity.

3. Thirdly, 1. If an indulgence be an application of Chriſts merits, it muſt needs be auaileable ex condigno, of condignity ; for Chriſt, I truſt, hath worthily ſatisfied, and done all neceſſary things to our redemption, thou art worthy. 2. A ſatisfaction muſt be ex condigno, of condignity, or worthineſſe : for how can a man facere ſatis, ſatisfie, that is, fully content, if he doe it not ſufficiently ? An acceptation is not properly a ſatisfaction, the one is of fauour, the other of debt, Rom.4.4. To him that worketh, the wages is not counted by fauour, but by debt : but ſatisfaction is a worke, therefore what is due vnto it, is by debt, and ſo of condignity ; congruity is of fauour. 3. But we affirme that neither indulgences, nor any other workes of the liuing doe benefit the dead at all ; and ſo neither of congruity, nor condignity, Reuel.14.13. They that dye in the Lord, their workes follow them : their owne workes, and not any bodies elſe. Leo Epiſt.89. Multum vtile & neceſſarium eſt vt peccatorum reatus ante vltimum diem ſacerdotali ſupplicatione ſoluatur : It is very profitable and neceſſary, that the guilt of ſinnes ſhould be looſed by the ſupplication of the Prieſt before the laſt day, that is the day of death, &c. if it be neceſſary before, then it commeth too late afterward.

To apply indulgences to the dead, the Pope hath no more power than other Biſhops, that is, none at all.

4. Fourthly, 1. That the Pope hath no more iuriſdiction in the Church than other Biſhops in their dioceſſe, I haue ſhewed before in the confutation of the 41. error : ſo that I need not to repeat the ſame here. 2. If the Pope haue no iuriſdiction at all ouer the ſoules in purgatory, and ſo no more than any other prelate hath ; he hath no more authority to conferre indulgences vpon them, than others. 3. All the authority that Saint Peter had, was to feed his ſheepe, when Chriſt ſaid, paſce oues, feed my ſheepe, Iohn 21. but the ſoules in purgatory are not his ſheepe, becauſe they cannot be fed, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, c.14.q.2. therefore neither Peter, nor the Pope from Peter can challenge any prerogatiue more than other ouer the dead. 4. That prerogatiue which Peter had ouer hell, when Chriſt ſaid ; Hell ſhall not preuaile againſt it, Matth.16.18. was giuen to his faith and confeſſion, and ſo is common to all faithfull : as Ambroſe well expoundeth : Non de carne Petri, ſed de fide dictum eſt, quia portæ mortis non præualebunt, ſed confeſſio vicit infernum : Not of the fleſh of Peter, but of his faith it was ſaid, the gates of hell ſhall not preuaile, &c. de incarnat.c.5. his confeſſion ouercame hell.

What particular cauſes the Pope hath to deliuer ſome ſoules aut of Purgatory, not all.

5. Fifthly, firſt if the Pope cannot deliuer all ſoules out of purgatory, then is one of your great Doctors proued a lyar and a falſe prophet : Papa ſi vellet poſſet totum purgatorium euacuare : The Pope if he would, could euacuate and empty all purgatory. Iohan. Angel. 2. But what particular cauſe I pray you doth moue the Pope to deliuer ſome ſoules, more than other ? hath he ſome ſpeciall reuelation, to know the particular needes of the purgatory ſoules ? or is not the generall cauſe of Chriſts glory in ſending ſo many ſoules to be Angels fellowes, to be preferred before the Popes partichlar cauſe, in bringing ſo many Angels to his purſe ? for if they would ſpeake plainely, this is the particular cauſe, that moueth the Pope, when hee or his are particularly waged and fee-ed to deliuer ſome particular ſoules. 3. Wherefore this old obiection againſt the Popes purgatory is not yet anſwered : that if the Pope can deliuer all ſoules at once, and will not, he is vncharitable ; if he would and cannot, then Saint Peters keyes doe faile and are not auaileable. 4. But concerning your reſpect of particular cauſe, Clemens the ſixt derideth it : for he in his Bull giueth authority cruce ſignatis, to thoſe, that tooke vpon them the croſſe, vt tres vel quatuor animas, quas vellent, to deliuer out of purgatory three or foure ſoules, which they would, &c. this power was left to the liberty of their will, not tyed to the neceſſity of the cauſe. 5. And doe you doubt, whether Chriſt hath cleered purgatory, you ſay, that by his deſcent he harrowed hell, and deliuered all the Patriarches : hath he done leſſe for beleeuers ſince his death, than for thoſe which before by faith, expected his death ? the Apoſtle ſaith, the bloud of Chriſt doth cleanſe vs from all ſinne, 1 Ioh. 1.7. what remaineth then to bee cleanſed in purgatory ? Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Qui hic non acceperit remiſſionem peccatorum, illic non erit, quia vita æterna remiſſio peccatorum eſt : He that hath not receiued here the remiſſion of ſinnes, ſhall not bee there, that is, in heauen, for eternall life is the remiſſion of ſinnes : de bon. mort.c.2. He then that hath here receiued remiſſion of ſinnes, is preſently in heauen, and ſo not in purgatory ; he that hath not, ſhall neuer come to heauen, and ſo is in hell.

1 Cor.15.29. The liuing can not performe any ſatisfactory workes for the dead.

6. Sixthly, 1. It is ſtrange doctrine, that ſatisfactory workes may be enioyned the liuing in behalfe of the dead : Bellarmine himſelfe reporteth this to haue been an erronious practice of the Montaniſts and Marcionites, to baptize the liuing in the name of the dead ; to the which cuſtome ſome thinke Saint Paul had relation, where he ſaith, Why are they baptized for the dead ? Bellarmine lib.1.p.1800. But if a man may pray, and faſt, and giue almes for the dead, why not alſo be baptized for them ?

2. The Diſciples, when Dorcas was dead, did not vndertake any workes for her of theirs, but onely ſhewed her owne workes, the coats and garments which ſhe had made, whereof Saint Cyprian ſaith, Non pro defuncta ſuis vocibus; ſed ipſius operibus deprecantes: Not making requeſt for the dead with their voyces, but with her workes, ſerm. de eleemoſ. And againe: Confiteantur fratres vos ſinguli delictum ſuum, dum adhuc, qui deliquit, in ſeculo eſt, dum admitti confeſſio eius poteſt, dum ſatisfactio & remiſſio per ſacerdotem facta apud dominum grata eſt: Confeſſe (brethren) euery one his fault, while he that ſinned is yet in the world, while his confeſſion may be admitted, while ſatisfaction and remiſſion giuen by the Prieſt are accepted with God, ſerm. de lapſ. Ergo, ſatisfaction done afterward, is not accepted.

7. Seuenthly, 1. what reaſon haue you to thinke, that your Limbus was emptied all at once at Chriſts comming, and that Purgatory ſhall be but ſucceſſiuely cleered, and one after another deliuered? If ſome are freed, while other frie in Purgatory, becauſe of ſome particular prayers, the ſame reaſon may be alleaged for the Fathers that were in Limbus, that they alſo might haue beene holpen by particular prayers. If you ſay Chriſt was not then come, and therefore hell could not be harrowed, ſo neither is Chriſt yet come to iudgement, before which time you ſay all Purgatory ſhall not be cleanſed. 2. To ſee others exempted from paine, and themſelues ſtill in bondage, it can be no great ioy: the Scripture ſaith, there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, when they ſee all the Prophets in the Kingdome of God, and your ſelues thruſt out at the doores. The beholding then of other mens felicity doth not miniſter ioy, but encreaſe torment to them that are ſtill in miſery. 3. And why are not the common prayers of the whole Church for all ſoules as effectuall to deliuer all, as particular prayers are of ſome to deliuer their friends? what letteth then, but all ſoules ſhould be let looſe by common prayers? vnleſſe it be this, as the truth is, then the Pope ſhould want vtterance for his Iubilee pardons, and ſoule-prieſts for their Maſſes for the dead. 4. That all the ſoules of the faithfull and iuſt men (for as for vnbeleeuers, they haue their part in the lake) are altogether in heauen, the Apoſtle witneſſeth, We are come to celeſtiall Ieruſalem, to the congregation of the firſt borne, &c. to the ſpirits of iuſt and perfect men. I aske where theſe iuſt men are, are they not in celeſtiall Ieruſalem? they are then all out of Purgatory. Saint Cyprian ſaith: Ad refrigerium iuſti vocantur, ad ſupplicium rapiuntur iniuſti, datur velocius tutela fidentibus, perfidis pœna: The iuſt are called to reſt and refreſhing, the vniuſt are haled to paine, pardon is quickely giuen to the beleeuing, to the perfidious paine: ſerm. de immortal. All men then are either iuſt, or vniuſt: the iuſt are ſpeedily carried to heauen, the vniuſt to puniſhment: no iuſt men then are out of heauen, nor none vniuſt ſhall come thither. 5. If the Pope know how to deliuer ſome, and not all out of Purgatory, he hath not Saint Peters ſpirit: of whom Saint Ambroſe thus ſaith: Hic eſt Petrus, qui reſpondit pro cæteris Apoſtolis, &c. quia nouit non ſolum proprium ſed commune ſeruare, &c. This is Peter, which anſwered for the reſt of the Apoſtles, and therefore is called a foundation, (or a rocke or ſtone) becauſe he knew how to ſaue not himſelfe onely, but in common: de incarnat. c. 4.

Luke 13. 18.
The common prayers of the Church more auaileable, than priuate and particular.

Apocal. 21. 8.
Heb. 12. 22.

8. Eighthly, 1. no thankes to the Pope to deliuer a man from that, which he ſhall neuer taſte of, for, there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus, ſuch need neither feare hell, nor Purgatory. 2. And is it in the Popes power to deliuer a man that hee ſhall neuer goe to Purgatory? how commeth it then to paſſe, that he cannot deliuer his owne ſoule from thence? for, you doe not thinke otherwiſe, but that ſome of your Popes are in Purgatory: it were in vaine elſe to ſay ſo many Maſſes for the Pope when he is dead. The Scripture thus reaſoneth, Noe, Iob, Daniel, though they were in the middeſt of it, ſhall neither deliuer ſonne nor daughter, but onely their owne ſoules. A man may ſaue himſelfe, though he ſaue not another: but if he ſaue others, not inſtrumentally, as one that giueth counſell, but efficiently, as one hauing power, as they imagine of the Pope, he muſt needs alſo ſaue himſelfe: he therefore that ſeeth the Popes ſoule broyling in Purgatory, will neuer thinke he can pull others out of the fire. 3. It is not the Popes pardon, but a mans owne faith that preſerueth him from condemnation: He that beleeueth ſhall not come into condemnation, but is paſſed from death to life. Saint Ambroſe well ſaith: Aliæ cruces nihil mihi proſunt, ſola crux Chriſti mihi vtilis eſt, per quam mihi mundus crucifixus eſt, &c. Other croſſes profit me little, onely the croſſe of Chriſt is profitable to me, whereby I am crucified to the world, and the world to me, &c. lib. 6. in Luc. Wherefore no croſſes of penance, of any ſatisfactory or painefull workes, but onely faith in Chriſts croſſe doth deliuer vs.

Romans 8. 1.

Ezech. 14. 20.
The Pope cannot deliuer his owne ſoule from purgatory, much leſſe other, if any ſuch were.
Iohn 5. 24.

9. Ninthly, 1 Bellarmine ſaith truely, that repentance in this life is more effectuall to doe away ſinne, than penance or puniſhment afterward: for Auguſtine well ſaith, Ibi erit pœnitentia dolorem habens, ſed medicinam non habens: There ſhall be repentance hauing griefe, but no releife: tom. 9. de rectitud. cathol. conuerſ.

2. For it is euident that after this life there is no place at all for repentance, but for iudgement: Where there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſinnes, but a horrible looking for of iudgement. But after this life, there is no ſacrifice for ſinnes: Ergo, an horrible expectation of iudgement. Auguſtine againe ſaith, Corrigant ſe, qui tales ſunt, dum viuunt, ne poſtea velint & non poſſint, quia ſubito venit mors, & non eſt qui corrigatur, ſed vt in ignem mittatur: Let them that are ſuch, correct themſelues while they liue, leſt afterward they would and cannot; becauſe death commeth ſodainely, that they can be no more corrected, but committed to the fire, ſer. de tempor. 164

Heb. 10. 26.
No place for repentance after this life.

3. When they are ſo deuided themſelues about purgatory: ſome holding, that a man cannot, though

The papiſticall variance about purgatory.

though he be a notable ſinner, be aboue twenty yeeres in purgatory, Dominic. a Soto in 4. diſt. 21. queſt. 2. art. 1. others, that purgatory paines may continue an hundred, yea, a thouſand yeeres, Bellar. lib. 1. de indulg. c. 9. ſome that purgatory paine exceedeth all paine in this life, Dominic. à Soto ibid. other that the penance of this life is more effectuall: doe they not now by this their vncertainety make all the world beleeue that purgatory fire is but a drowſie dreame of their owne?

For if there were any ſuch purgatory paine, it ſhould farre exceed all the griefe of this life, and ſo conſequently more effectually purge ſinne: As Origen ſaith, Vt vehementius corpus cruciant verbera nudum, quam veſtitum; ſic anima carnis indumento depoſito, ſubtilius ſentiet tormenta: Like as the body naked feeleth ſtripes more, than clothed; ſo the ſoule being vnclothed of the fleſh, hath a more liuely ſenſe of torment. Origen, ex Pamphil.

5. Bellarmines reaſon is very good vtterly to ouerthrow Purgatory penance, becauſe that is a time of iuſtice, this of mercy: this ſheweth well, not that repentance onely is more effectuall in this life, but that it is onely here to be found: as Auguſtine well applyeth theſe words of the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 6. 2. Behold now the accepted time, behold the day of ſaluation: Ecce nunc tempus ſalutis, tempus eſt nunc remiſſionis pœnitentibus, ſed tempus erit poſt mortem vindicationis negligentibus confiteri peccata: Behold now the time of ſaluation, the time of remiſſion to the penitent, but after death it is a time of vengeance to all them that neglected here to confeſſe their ſinnes. ſerm. 66.

Penance in this life more effectuall then purgatory paine by Bellarmines owne confeſſion,

6. Laſtly, becauſe Bellarmine ſeemeth to extenuate the paines of purgatory, preferring the ſufferings of this life before the torments thereof: I will to the ſame purpoſe adioyne the notable teſtimony, and moſt godly ſentence of the bleſſed ſeruant of God Maſter Latimer, a reuerend Biſhop and holy Martyr: who doubteth not to ſay, that hee had rather bee in purgatory, than in Lollards Tower the Biſhop of Londons priſon, for diuers reaſons, whereof ſome I will ſet downe.

1. I might in the one dye for lacke of meate and drinke, but not in the other.
2. In this I might lacke charity.
3. Looſe my patience.
4. I might be in perill of death.
5. I might be without ſurety of ſaluation.
6. In this I might murmure againſt God.
7. I might diſpleaſe God.
8. I might be iudged to perpetuall priſon.
9. I might be brought to beare a fagot.
10. I might be ſeparated from Chriſt.
11. I might be a member of the diuell.
12. An inheritor of hell.

In that I could not.

13. In this my Lord and his Chaplens might manacle me by night.
14. They might ſtrangle me and ſay I hanged my ſelfe.
15. They might haue mee to their conſiſtory and iudge me after their faſhion.

In that they could not.

Ergo, I had rather be there than here, for though the fire be called neuer ſo hot, yet and if the Biſhops two fingers can ſhake away a peece, a friars coule an other part, and ſcala cœli altogether, I will neuer found Abbey, Colledge, nor Chantrey for that matter: thus much Maſter Latimer, Fox. pag. 1742.

Thus this godly Martyr derided long ſince, this popiſh ſcare-bug of purgatory fire, making it inferior to the Biſhops priſon. And Bellarmine much diſſenteth not, making the penance which a man may ſuffer in this life of greater efficacy and vertue, than purgatory paines: This being ſo, men may learne to be wiſer, and ſeeke to be reconciled to God in this life, and not much care for Popes pardons, which are not ſo much worth, as to be ſet free out of their Biſhops priſons, and Inquiſitors purgatory.

Now in the laſt place generally concerning indulgences, let vs ſee the iudgement and practice of other Churches.

Regul. contra. queſt. 25.

1. The ancient Greeke Church did not take vpon them by any indulgence to receiue any, that offended before full ſatisfaction made, and their vnfained repentance euidently by manifeſt and apparent ſignes teſtified. So Baſil ſaith: Poteſtas remittendi peccata, non eſt abſolute data, ſed in reſipiſcentis obedientia, &c. The power of remitting ſinnes is not abſolutely giuen, but conſiſteth in the obedience of the party repenting, and his conſent, that hath the cure of his ſoule, &c. And as he teacheth, ſo he practiſed: for he would not receiue Valens the Emperour, vntill he had publikely profeſſed, that he embraced the doctrine of Baſil, and ſhewed effectuall fruits and ſignes of repentance: as Ambroſe likewiſe would not admit Theodoſius the Emperour, vntill he had ſpent eight moneths in ſorrow and mourning, and ſo had ſhewed his effectuall repentance.

Theodoret. lib. 4. cap. 19.

Theodoret. lib. 5. cap. 18.

The Moderne Greeke Church alloweth no indulgences for gaine, nor for thoſe which are in purgatory. The Muſcouites to this day hold indulgences and Iubilees, nullius efficacia to be of no force or efficacy.

2. Againſt the facility and lauiſh vſe of indulgences, Cyprian thus writeth, Si quis præpropera fe- ſtinatione temerarius, remiſſionem peccatorum dare ſe cunctis putat poſſe,&c. If any man raſh in his preposterous haſt thinke he can giue remiſſion of ſinnes to all, he doth not onely not profit, but hurteth them which are falne, &c. But before him Tertullian more directly: Præcauent, quaſi nolint admitti aliquid, indulgent, quaſi velint admitti, quando ſi admitti nolint non debeant indulgere: They forewarne them (of ſins) as though they would not haue them committed, and they pardon them, as though they would haue them committed, whereas if they would not haue them committed, they ſhould not haue them pardoned, &c. And againe: Si diſciplinæ ſolius officia ſortitus es, nec imperio præſidere, ſed miniſterio, quis aut quantus es indulgere, qui neque prophetam, nec apoſtolum exhibeas, cares ea virtute, cuius eſt indulgere: If thou onely haſt obtained the office of diſcipline, not being ſet ouer others by any imperiall power, but miniſteriall: who art thou to giue indulgence, who being neither Prophet nor Apoſtle, doſt want that power, which is to grant indulgence, &c. to giue indulgence he thinketh to be a Propheticall or Apoſtolicall gift, both which are now ceaſed: In the moderne Africane and Æthiopike Church there is no liberty or power granted to their Patriarke to giue indulgences vpon any occaſion whatſoeuer: Zaga Zabo an Æthiopike Biſhop ſo confeſſeth.

3. Confeſſion of Heluetia the latter, cap. 14. We condemne the Popes gainefull doctrine of penance, and againſt his Simoniacall indulgences, &c. Saxony artic. 17. We ſay that this application of indulgences, whereby the Pope applyeth the merits of the Saints, is inuented at his pleaſure.

Harm. § 8. p. 218.

4. The application of indulgences to the dead to releaſe them out of Purgatory was not knowne of ancient time in the Romane Church: for whereas the cuſtome was to giue releaſe vnto the penitent before Eaſter in the laſt weeke of Lent: Innocentius decreed, that if any were ſicke they ſhould be releaſed at any time, giuing this reaſon, Ne de ſeculo abſque communione diſcedat: Leaſt he ſhould goe out of the world without the communion, &c. their opinion then was, that there could be no remiſſion or relaxation after death: and indeed of ſuch indulgences, their owne men confeſſe, that there is nothing expreſſely found either in the Scriptures, or ſayings of the Fathers: and that Boniface the 8. was the firſt, that extended indulgences to Purgatory, which was about anno 1300. Oſtienſis and Gabriel Biel are of opinion, that indulgences profit not the dead, as Bellarmine confeſſeth: yea one of their late Popes, Clemens the 5. decreed againſt certaine Queſtors and Pardoners, that made them beleeue, which gaue them almes: Quod animas tres vel plures ex purgatorio (vt mendaciter aſſerunt) extrahant: That they might draw three or more of their friends ſoules out of Purgatory, as they falſe affirmed, &c. It is then a falſe and lying aſſertion, by the Popes owne teſtimony, that by any ſuch meanes ſoules may be pulled out of Purgatory. Adde hereunto the teſtimony of Roffenſis: Si tollas purgatorium, quorſum indulgentijs eſt opus: If you take away Purgatory, what need is there of indulgences, &c. But ſome of their owne writers and Popes, as we haue ſeene, take away this vſe of indulgences, and ſo conſequently there ſhall be none at all; and ſo, themſelues being witneſſes, theſe things follow in order, no purgatory no indulgences, no indulgences, no Iubile: and thus both Purgatory, popiſh indulgences, and Iubilees are found to be meere humane deuices, and plants not of Gods planting, and ſo ſhall be rooted out. All the purgation of our ſoules is in this life, firſt, the expiatory purgation of our ſoules is by the blood of Chriſt as the Apoſtle ſaith: who by himſelfe hath purged our ſinnes: there is alſo a purgation, applicatory that is by affliction: as Iob ſaith, Exibo tanquam aurum: I ſhall come forth like gold: then there is a third purgation which ſhall be of our bodies by fire in the day of Lord, when all corruption ſhall be purged from our bodies: and ſo the Lord at his appearing is likened by the Prophet to a purging fire and fullers ſope: other Purgatory we acknowledge none after this life.

Thus haue I briefely diſcouered the errors of the Popes Iubile, and Indulgences: whereby I truſt it is euident, how they delude the world with their fooleries, and ſeeke to ſnare men with their toyiſh ceremonies, and to blind them with their phantaſticall deuices. They that haue not viſited Rome the laſt Iubile yeare, need not repent them, that they went not ſo farre to ſee nothing: they that went, at their returne (I truſt) did remember what they haue ſeene, and regard ſuch toyes but as a ſtage play, and thinke, that they may find a much better Iubile at home in their Country by the faith of the Goſpell, than they could ſee at Rome in the Popiſh pompous vanity.

I haue now ſpunne out (by Gods aſſiſtance) this weary taske, and found out an end of this long twined thread: the cauſe which I haue handled, is of God; the ſtrength wherewith I haue trauailed in it, was from God: the end wherefore I haue laboured in it, is for God. And as to his honor I referre all theſe my labours, as the principall end; ſo to the iudgement of the true Church of God I ſubmit my ſelfe and my penne, as the meane, whereby I may attaine that cheife end. I ſay no more, but with Auguſtine: Si quid in ſcriptis meis veri comprehenderis, exiſtendo non eſt meum; at intelligendo & amando & tuum ſit & meum: ſiquid falſi conuiceris, errando fuerit meum, ſed iam cauendo, nec tuum fuerit, nec meum: If you find that is true in my writings, it is not mine in being; but in vnderſtanding, and louing the ſame, let it be both mine and thine: if thou conuince any thing that is falſe, it was mine in erring, but let it be neither mine nor thine in heed taking: lib. 3. de Trinitat. præfat. But as I am not guilty to my ſelfe of any error eſcaped, but am perſwaded that I haue throughout the truth defended; ſo I would deſire the Chriſtian reader to be aduiſed in iudging that, which was not without aduiſement written. And here againe I remember Auguſtines words in the ſame place: Sicut lectorem meum nolo mihi eſſe deditum; ita correctorem nolo ſibi: ille me non amet amplius, quam catholicam fidem; iſte ſe non amet amplius, quam catholicam veritatem: As I would not haue the reader addicted to me, ſo neither the correcter wedded to himſelfe: let not him be more affected to me, than to the verity; nor the other loue himſelfe more than the truth, &c. And ſo I conclude: Videor mihi debitum huius ingentis operis reddidiſſe, adiuuante Deo: quibus parum, vel nimium eſt, mihi ignoſcant; quibus autem ſatis eſt, non mihi ſed domino mecum gratias congratulantes agant; I haue now by Gods aſſiſtance rendred the debt of this great worke: to whom it is ſhort or ouer, let them forgiue mee; to whom it ſeemeth ſufficient, let vs to God giue thankes together, who enableth vs to euery good worke, to whom be praiſe through Ieſus Chriſt in his Church for euer. Amen.

TO

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE SIR THOMAS MIDDLETON LORD MAIOR, and to the right Worſhipfull Companies and Comminalty of the City of LONDON.

I Doe here preſent vnto you of your owne, a catalogue of ſuch good workes, as haue been done ſince the times of the Goſpell, eſpecially in this honourable City: but what ſaid I? (of your owne) nay of our owne we can haue no good thing: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, It is God which worketh in you both the will and the deed: I here then offer vnto your view, ſuch worthy acts, as God hath ſtirred vp the worſhipfull citizens of your body to be inſtruments of. A more exact rehearſall I would haue made, if I could haue receiued as full inſtructions from all your ſeuerall Companies, as I had from ſome of them, but ſpecially from the Vniuerſities: but notwithſtanding the Lord Maiors care, that then was, in ſending his precepts, and yours that now are in the place, yet I failed of the helpes which I expected: which if after may be had vpon a ſecond conſultation, that which is now wanting may be ſupplyed. In the meane time, here I haue taken vpon me to proue, that the Goſpell in the ſpace of 60. yeeres hath brought forth more fruit, than twice ſo many of the late times of Popery can ſhew: yea to adde more, I haue heard by ſome that haue made diligent ſearch, that more hath beene performed in this kinde, of founding of free Schooles, Hoſpitals, and other like true deedes of charity, ſince the firſt of Queene Elizabeth, than can be found for fiue hundred yeeres before from the Conqueſt vntill that time. But howſoeuer that may be, it is ſufficient for my purpoſe to make good the former compariſon of the times: And verily I thinke alſo that as theſe times exceed the former, ſo the pious and charitable workes performed within this time in this worthy City, may equalize [a] all the kingdome beſide, and may compare, if not goe beyond any City in the world. So that in theſe foure points haue the charitable workes of Proteſtants exceeded them of the Papiſts: 1. in number, 2. in quantity and greatneſſe, as is euident in Maſter Suttons goodly Hoſpitall: 3. in quality: theirs were done in the pride of their heart, in opinion of merit to purchaſe remiſſion of ſinnes, and the Kingdome of Heauen: ours onely ſerue as teſtimonies of our faith: 4. in the end: they erected foundations to the honour of Saints, Proteſtants to the glory of God. In ſuch workes this City hath abounded to the praiſe of God, the honour of this beautifull body, and good example of the whole land: into euery part whereof, but ſpecially to the two Vniuerſities the bounty of this City hath ſtreamed: So that we may ſay here of London, as S. Paul of Corinthus, Your zeale hath prouoked many. Who then will not pray for the proſperity of this City? and ſay with the Prophet Dauid, O pray for the peace of Ieruſalem, let them proſper that loue thee, peace be within thy walles, and proſperity within thy Palaces. This City is a nurſing mother to the whole land, the Chamber, Treaſurie and Store-houſe of the Kingdome: like the two golden pipes which conueyed the fatneſſe of the oliue into the golden Candleſticke of the Church. But as the oyle went thorow golden pipes, ſo the fatneſſe of almes-deedes muſt runne forth by good and lawfull meanes: Men muſt not doe wrong, deceiue; gather riches by extortion, violence, vſury and ſuch like, that they may giue almes: this were but like the Phariſaicall waſhing of platters, that were within full of bribery and exceſſe. S. Paul hath giuen vs a good rule for this: We muſt not not doe euill, that good may come thereof: and as Auguſtine ſaith of the ſinne of adultery: Ne putetis fratres quotidiè facienda adulteria & quotidiè eleemoſynis mundanda, De 10. Chord. 11. Doe not thinke brethren that we may euery day commit adultery, and euery day cleanſe it by almes &c. So wee may ſay of all other ſinnes, of couetouſneſſe, pride, extortion, drunkenneſſe, ſwearing, prophaning the Lords Day and the like, wee muſt not liue in them, and thinke to clenſe the fouleneſſe of ſinne, by a little almes. And ſeeing I am fallen into mention of theſe ouerflowing ſinnes of the City: as the Lord hath giuen you a minde in your places to doe good; ſo let it be your care to ſuppreſſe theſe vices. And vnto you (my Lord Maior) hath the Lord committed this truſt, to ſee theſe inordinate vices corrected and reſtrained, as adulterers to be puniſhed: the Lords day not to be prophaned: for externall matters, which belong vnto the body, as the moderating of prices of victuals, enlarging the aſſiſes of Bread and Beere, ſingular is the care of this City: ſo if you ſhew your ſelfe as carefull and faithfull in things which concerne Gods glory and the good of mens ſoules, as God ſhall haue the honour, ſo you ſhall finde comfort. Goe on then (worthy citizens) in your Chriſtian courſe, both wayes in doing of good, and vndoing and hindring what is euill: and let me be bold to diſcharge toward you, the Apoſtles charge to vs the Miniſters: Charge them which be rich in this world, that they be not high minded, and that they truſt not in vncertaine riches, but in the liuing God (which giueth vs abundantly all things to enioy) that they doe good, and be rich in good workes, and be ready to diſtribute and communicate, laying vp in ſtore for themſelues a good foundation againſt the time to come, that they may obtaine eternall life: to the which the Lord bring vs in Chriſt.

A CATALOGVE OF SVCH CHARITABLE WORKES, AS HAVE BEENE done in the times of the Goſpell within the ſpace of 60. yeeres, vnder the happy raignes of King Edward, Queene Elizabeth, King James, our Gracious Soueraigne.

The charitable workes in 60. yeeres in Londō, Cambridge and Oxford, are ſummed to a Million or thereabout.

WHereas the profeſſors of the Goſpell are generally charged by the Romaniſts as barren and fruitles of good works: I will, to ſtop their ſlanderous mouths, ſhew by a particular induction, that more charitable workes haue beene parformed in the times of the Goſpell, than they can ſhew to haue beene done in the like time in popery, ſpecially ſince the publike oppoſition of religion, which began about 250. yeers ſince, counting from the times of Iohn Wickliffe: or in twice ſo much time now going immediately before. And becauſe it would require an endleſſe labour to make collection of all ſuch works, as may be found through the land, which could not be done without a ſpeciall commiſſion to that end, and generall ſuruey, which I truſt may be by ſome vndertaken hereafter: In the meane time I will giue inſtance onely of the three moſt famous places of this land, which haue moſt abounded in theſe fruits, namely, the City of London, and the two Vniuerſities of Cambridge and Oxford: Now then will I proceed to this golden Catalogue, which ſhould haue beene inſerted, p. 1068. but vpon the reaſons there alleadged, reſpited and tranſmitted ouer to this place: I will firſt begin with the famous workes of our Kings and Nobles, and then deſcend to the particular acts exemplified by others in the three places giuen in inſtance.

The ſite and edifices of theſe Hoſpitals giuen by the King, may be eſtimated at 20000. pound.

King Edward of bleſſed memory. Ann. 1552. in the 6. yeere of his raigne founded the Hoſpitals of Chriſts Church in London, and of S. Thomas in Southwarke, and the next yeere of Bridewell, for the maintenance of 3. ſorts of poore: the firſt for the education of poore children, the ſecond for impotent and lame perſons, the third for idle perſons, to imploy and ſet them on work: a Princely gift whereby prouiſion was made for all ſorts of poore people, ſuch as either were borne poore, caſually, or wilfully poore: Beſide by the ſaid vertuous Prince were founded 2. free ſchooles in Louth, in Lincolneſhire, the one for Grammar, the other for the Engliſh tongue, to make children fit for the Grammar ſchoole, with liberall maintenance for a ſchoolemaſter & vſher in them both: Likewiſe Chriſts Colledge in the Vniuerſity of Cābridge enioieth a fellowſhip, & 3. ſchollarſhips by the gift of the ſaid excellent Prince

But of all other times, the raigne of our late renowned Soueraigne, Queene Elizabeth of happy memory, hath abounded with excellent fruits, and the yeeres that haue runne ſince vnder the godly and peaceable gouernment of our noble King Iames: where firſt honourable mention is to be made of theſe worthy Princes themſelues: Q. Elizabeth, though no new foundations were laid by her hand, that came to my knowledge; yet herein ſhe was a princely benefactor, 1. in confirming and ratifying many Colledges, Hoſpitals, free Schooles, ſpecially in maintaining the priuiledges and immunities of both the Vniuerſities, which otherwiſe had beene in danger to be ſhaken and violated. 2. In patronizing the Goſpell, and procuring perpetuall peace at home, both which gaue opportunity of many charitable workes, which were by this occaſion vndertaken. 3. In making ſuch excellent lawes for the encouraging and ſtirring vp of her ſubiects to doe good workes: of which kinde theſe ſpecially are worthy to be remembred. The firſt worthy act in this kind, was the Statute of prouiſion of Corne for Colledges in both Vniuerſities, made in the eighteenth of her Maieſties raigne, whereby it is prouided, that in euery leaſe to be made, the third part of the rent ſhould be paid in corne for the mending and encreaſing of the common diet: Wheat to be ſerued in, at 6. ſhillings 8. pence, and Mault at 5. ſhillings the quarter, or ſo much money: by benefit of which act, the rents vpon new leaſes, which are made voide without reſeruation of ſuch prouiſion, are doubled, to the great releefe of the company of Students: The benefit whereof may in time ariſe to the encreaſe of more then 12. thouſand pounds, per annum, in both Vniuerſities: this act was deuiſed, and procured by the prudent and prouident care of Sir William Cecill, L. Treaſurer, and Chancellor of the Vniuerſity of Cambridge: An other act was made in the Parliament held, anno 39. chap. 3. for the releefe of the poore in euery Pariſh, and ſetting of them to worke: by vertue of which act, there cannot be leſſe gathered yeerely for the aforeſaid charitable vſes thorow the land than 30. or 40. thouſand pounds yeerely; yeerely: another in the ſame Parliament, *chap.*5. enacting, authoriſing euery one without further licence to be procured, to build and erect almeſ-houſes, Hoſpitals, free-Schooles, houſes of correction, and ſuch like, ſo that the reuenewes laid vnto them exceed not 200. pound by the yeere, nor be vnder 10. pound: The third act was made anno 43. chap. 3. for the relieuing of maimed ſouldiers and marriners, and raiſing of penſions for their maintenance: a fourth act in the ſame Parliament, *chap.*5. was deuiſed for reſtoring of lands, houſes, ſtockes of money miſimployed, which were giuen to charitable vſes. Theſe and many other ſuch wholeſome lawes were eſtabliſhed vnder the raigne of our late gracious Soueraigne; whereby many charitable workes were no leſſe effected, than if out of Her owne treaſure they had beene procured.

12000. encreaſe of rent in time in both Vniuerſities.

Our Worthy King that now is, herein hath followed Queene Elizabeths ſteps; as in founding the Kings Colledge at Chelſey, ordained for Diuines to be employed in the writing of Controuerſies: to the which that induſtrious man, and learned writer, the Reuerend Deane of Exceter, Doctor Sutcliffe, Prouoſt of the ſaid Colledge, hath beene a large benefactor and contributor: So neceſſary a worke and profitable for the good of the whole Church, what well minded man will not wiſh may proſper? ſuch as God hath enabled, cannot do better than ſet to their helping hands, to finiſh the building begun, and to raiſe vp the wals, which are now but riſing out of the ground, and to thruſt vnder their ſhoulders to ſupport this building, which Atlas alone would not ſuffice to beare. Euery great City almoſt in Popiſh countries can find a way to build a Colledge for Ieſuites to plant ſuperſtition, and ſupplant true religion; and ſhall not ſuch a Kingdome as this is, afford means to reare one Colledge of Diuines to confront them, and to build vp, as faſt as they pull downe? They ſpare for no coſt; one Colledge of the Ieſuits at Lafleſh in France is thought to haue coſt (for the building) 100000. markes, and the lands laid vnto it as much: And ſhall we be ſparing in the defence of the truth: tanti vitrum! quanti margaritam? if they make ſo much of brittle glaſſe, how much more ſhould we ſet by the right precious ſtone? But to proceed: his Maieſty hath laid vnto the two publike Readers of Diuinty in either Vniuerſities, beſide their ordinary ſtipends of 40. pound per annum, to each of them certaine ſpirituall promotions, ſome of 200. pound per annum, the leaſt 200. markes, as they ſhall fall void, for the perpetuall maintenance, and encouragement of the ſaid profeſſors: His Maieſty beſide hath ſet forward an other excellent worke, that goodly Hoſpitall deuiſed by the laſt will and teſtament of Maſter Sutton, to the which he bequeathed his great eſtate, laying vnto it 4. or 5. thouſand pound by the yeere, and appointing 5. thouſand for the enlarging of that goodly building of Charterhouſe, where his will was his Hoſpitall ſhould be founded; and leauing diuers thouſands more to be laid vnto it at the diſcretion of his Executors: The greateſt gift, that theſe many hundred yeeres was giuen by any one man, to charitable vſes, and I doubt whether the like can bee ſhewed to haue been done in this land in any age. This admirable and magnificent foundation was but intended, and as it were portraited by that rich Eſquire, but now like to be perfited and finiſhed by the princely care of our Gracious Soueraigne, who hath put life into this vaſt body, which without him would haue moued but ſlowly: he, as Dauid, prouided matter, as gold, ſiluer, braſſe, iron for the Temple: but his Maieſty, as a munificent Salomon, hath put them together. Iehoſaphat made ſhips to goe to Ophir, but they were broken at Ezion Gaber: and this great veſſell as rigged and trimmed for the ſeas, might haue miſcaried, if our Princely pilot had not guided it, and giuen it wind and weather to driue it: who found concurring with him, his experienced mariners and ſailers to ſet it going: We are all to giue vnto God great thankes, that hath put it into the heart of our Soueraigne, and of his honorable Miniſters, to further ſuch an excellent worke, which will be to Gods glory, and the good of Chriſts poore members: but might I put in heere my ſimple wiſh: if ſome part of this liberall gift had been, or yet might be tranſlated from the Hoſpitall, to the Colledge of Diuines now in building at Chelſey, both tending to charitable ends, it would not be, in mine opinion, againſt the intent and meaning of the founder, or contra formam collationis: ſpecially ſeeing both theſe foundations conſiſt by the grace and fauour of his Maieſty, who as a chiefe builder, euen another Zorobabel might with his plummet of tinne in his hand haue appointed euery ſtone his place: We may thanke ſo faithfull an Ouerſeer, that the will of the dead hath taken place: But let this be a warning to like minded Gentlemen that intend to doe good, to ſee it performed in their life: to make their owne eyes their Ouerſeers, and their owne hands their Executors: ſo their worke ſhall proſper, and their ſeruice ſhall be ſo much the more acceptable vnto God: who ſhall be herein like to faithfull Abraham, of whom Ambroſe thus writeth: Abraham ſua manu quondam vitulum occidit, vt hoſpitibus epulantibus miniſtraret, nec in miniſterio religioſo aliorum adiumenta quæſiuit: Abraham once with his owne hand did ſlay a calfe to prouide for his gueſts, neither in that religious ſeruice, required the helpe of others: I remember that in the laſt edition of this worke, I made mention of the intendment and purpoſe, which Maſter Sutton had to erect an Hoſpitall of a great proportion and capacity, commending ſo good an intention, and aduiſing withall, that he would imitate the worthy preſident of Sir Gualter Mildmay, to ſee ſomewhat done in his life time: Which courſe if he had taken, it had been better; but howſoeuer, it falleth out well enough: But (thankes be to our gracious King) the Hoſpitall ſhall goe forward: his Maieſty hath done as much in putting life into a dead mans gift, as if he had raiſed it by his owne charge; that I may ſay vnto him, as Ambroſe to the Emperor Valentinian: De tuo magis conferre videbere, quam de ſuo reddere: You herein ſeeme rather to conferre of your owne, than to

2 Cor. 1.11.

Next vnto the Princely liberality of our renowned Princes, followeth to be recorded, the honourable diſpoſition of our Nobles and Peeres. Sir William Cecil not long ſince Lord Treaſurer, in his life time gaue thirty pounds by the yeere to Saint Iohns Colledge in Cambridge: He founded alſo an Hoſpitall at Stamford for twelue poore people, allowing to each of them ſixe pound per annum. he alſo left great ſummes of money in truſt in the hands of Maſter Iohn Billet one of his Executors: who as carefully performed that truſt, and partly by this meanes, partly out of his owne eſtate, as I haue beene informed, hath done theſe excellent workes: He repaired, and in a manner reedified at the charge of diuerſe hundred pounds the great Church in the City of Bath: hee enlarged the hot, and croſſe Bath there, walling them about. He built an Hoſpitall there, to giue entertainment for twelue poore people, for a moneth at the ſpring, and three moneths at the fall of the leafe, with allowance of foure pence a day; aſſuring vnto this end twenty fiue pounds yeerely: he gaue 200. pounds toward the repairing of Saint Martins Church: an 100. markes to Saint Clements to build a window, and to the foure pariſhes in Weſtminſter was giuen for twelue yeeres fiue pounds to each: vpon the building of the market houſe there he beſtowed 300. pound: whereof is made ten pound a yeere for the benefit of the poore: he gaue alſo 20. pound per annum to Chriſts Hoſpitall, till 200. pound came out.

30. pound per annum.
72. pound per annum, beſide the building, which may be ſet at a 1000. Marke.
All theſe works could not coſt ſo little as 2000. pound.

The charge of all this, with the building of the houſe, may reach to 4000. pound.

The right Honorable the Lord Thomas Howard, Earle of Suffolke, Lord Chamberlaine, hath built at Audle-End neare vnto Walden in Eſſex, a goodly Hoſpitall for 24. poore people, with ſufficient allowance of meate, drinke, and cloth.

Other Noble men and women haue not beene behind with their part in theſe charitable workes: as I am informed of an Hoſpitall in Kent, built by the late Lord Cobham, the particulars whereof I could not learne: many like workes I doubt not but haue beene performed by our Nobility in diuers parts of this land, which I for want of inſtruction am forced to omit: but they, whoſe names are not heere regiſtred, are before the Lord remembred.

Neither haue our ſpirituall Lords been barren in this kind. Doctor Parker Archbiſhop of Canturbury was a great benefactor to Bennet Colledge in Cambridge, and to ſome other Colledges.

Doctor Grindall that worthy Archbiſhop of Canturbury, founded a free Schoole at S. Bees in Cumberland, beſide many other perſons, that are kept in worke, hath beene ſince much augmented, and encreaſed by the liberalitie of the Citie, and the gift of diuers worſhipfull citizens: when Sir Iohn Hart was Maior, as I haue learned, there was a collection made in the Citie of ſeuen hundred pound: and in Sir William Riders yeere fiue hundred pound toward the reliefe of the houſe, being ouercharged and caſt behind hand: the ſpeciall particular gifts of the citizens ſhall be expreſſed afterward: this and the other three Hoſpitals may be thought to ſpend by charitable gifts vpon the poore about ten thouſand pound yeerely.

8. In the ſame Bridewell at the Cities charge haue beene built of late twelue new faire Granaries, which are ſufficient to conteine ſixe thouſand quarters of corne, and two ſtore houſes, which may hold foure thouſand chaldron of coales, for the prouiſion of the citie, at the charge of three thouſand pound, or thereabout.

9. Morefields at the charge of foure or fiue thouſand pounds, by the coſt of the Citie in Sir Leonard Hollidaies Maioraltie, being before an vnwholeſome place, was conuerted into pleaſant walkes beſet with trees, compaſſed with a bricke wall, with vaults vnder the earth for conueiance for the water: which is a ſpeciall meanes to preſerue the health of the Citie: and may bee numbred among other prudent, and in ſome reſpect pious workes.

Morefields 5000 pound.

10. Bedlem, otherwiſe called Bethlem, a place appointed for the recouerie of ſuch as are beſtraught in their wits: is maintained in part by the beneuolence of the Citie. And let not here be forgotten the great good that is done to all the land by the citie of London, in receuing ſo many hundred children yeerely to be apprentices, to be brought vp in trades: which were the greateſt charitie of all, if citizens did not require ſuch great ſummes of money with apprentices: that hardly now a poore boy comming in his white coate will proue to bee Lord Maior of London: as ſome haue done in times paſt: but howſoeuer, the Citie in training vp youth, that otherwiſe would liue idely, deſerueth great commendation.

Bethlem.
The Citie of London doth great good in receiuing of apprentices.

I might here make mention of the new Conduits built in the Citie, a great helpe both to rich and poore, as one built at Walbroke, anno 1568. another in Fleetſtreet, anno 1581. at the charges of the Citie, beſide thoſe which were made by the gift of priuate men: which ſhall afterward be remembred. And becauſe I am fallen into mention of Conduits and conueiance of water: I may remember alſo the goodly Water workes, one at the Bridge, another at Brokenwharfe: and the third exceeding the reſt, the cutting of a new Riuer, to bring water to the Citie from about Ware, which is thought to runne, if all the creekes and turnings be meaſured, no leſſe than threeſcore miles: vndertaken at the great charge of an induſtrious Merchant Maſter Middleton, and of others: and is now after many rubs and lets brought to good effect, the water being now arriued at, or deriued rather to the Citie: which ſaid water-workes, although they haue beene taken in hand vpon hope of priuate gaine, yet becauſe the benefit thereof is publike, and will redound both to rich and poore, they may be ranged if not among the direct charitable, yet the magificent and commendable workes of the Citie. In that ranke alſo may paſſe the publike ſumptuous buildings; as of Ludgate at the Cities charge of more than three thouſand pound: of Aldgate, which coſt aboue foure thouſand pound: of Blackwell Hall, which was built at the charge of three thouſand pound. I omit other goodly buildings round about the Citie in euery corner, which haue beene raiſed vp in greater number within theſe twentie yeeres, than in an hundred yeeres before. Adde hereunto alſo the beautifull enlarging of the Innes of Court, thoſe famous Nurſeries of our honourable and reuerend Iudges, and learned Counſellers: as Grayes Inne, the Middle and Inner Temple haue been with goodly buildings adorned and beautified: But Lincolnes Inne (to which worſhipfull ſocietie I am more [a] ſpecially bound) in faire building excedeth the reſt, as in number of honourable Iudges at this time it hath the prioritie: wherein hath been beſtowed, as I haue learned, about eight or nine thouſand pound. I doe not mention theſe workes as teſtimonies of charitie (though it be not the leaſt part of charitie to employ poore men in worke) as euidence of the ſtate and magnificence of this renowned citie, which the profeſſion of the Goſpel hath enriched and endowed it withall.

Conduits built by the Citie at 2000. pound charge.

Fiue Iudges with the Lord Chancelor of Lincolnes Inne: 9000. pound beſtowed in building.

Hitherto I haue ſet forth the publike workes atchieued by the common charge of the City: I will now adde vnto theſe the charitable employments of the worſhipfull Companies, and pariſhes, in their ſeuerall bodies, and then deſcend to the particular gifts of diuers charitable men: The Worſhipfull companies, in the Citie of London doe exceed in three principall workes of charitie; in the loane of ſummes of money to poore occupiers of their company, and in yeerely reliefe of the poore and exhibitions to the poore ſchollers: the twelue worſhipfull Companies, as I am informed, doe not lend leſſe then two thouſand pound euery of them, counting one with another, to poore occupiers: and they, and ſome other chiefe companies of the ſecond ranke, as the worſhipfull Companies of Letherſellers, and Stationers, with ſome others, are thought to giue, one with another, an hundred pound yeerely to the poore; ſome of them giue a 100. pound, ſome more, yeerely among their poore: I could not learne the particulars, becauſe I found ſome Companies herein too nice and ſcrupulous; yet I thinke I haue ſpoken within my bounds, as farre as I could informe my ſelfe by conference with ſome, which were acquainted with the ſtate and affaires of the companies: And touching their charitable reliefe extended vnto poore ſchollers: there are not ſo few as 80. ſchollers maintained in both Vniuerſities by the twelue chiefe Companies, and ſome others; ſome maintaining foure

This ſumme among all the Companies may be geſſed at 30000. pound.
This ſumme of yeerely beneuolence may be ſet at 1200. pound at the leaſt.
This yeerely exhibition may be well rated at 300 pound per annum.

Cumberland laying vnto it thirtie pound a yeere: he gaue alſo twentie pound a yeere to Pembroke Hall to maintaine a fellow and two ſchollers, and his executors ſince haue added one ſcholler more: he gaue one hundred pound to maintaine a ſcholler in Magdalene Colledge in Cambridge: he alſo gaue twenty pound per annum to Queenes Colledge in Oxford to mainetaine a fellow and two ſchollers: all theſe eight places to be furniſhed out of the ſaid ſchoole of S. Bees.

70. pound per annum.

The right reuerend Iohn Whitgift Archbiſhop of Canturburie at his owne proper charge cauſed an Hoſpitall to be built at Croyden for the maintenance of thirtie poore people, with a free ſchoole, hauing a Maſter and an Vſher, and laid vnto it two hundred pound per annum, beſide the charge of the building, which is ſuppoſed to haue coſt two thouſand pound.

200. pound per annum. 2000. pound.

The reuerend Biſhop of London Iohn Elmer gaue three hundred pound for the maintenance of the preachers at Pauls Croſſe.

300. pound.

The reuerend Biſhop of Bath Doctor Montague that now is, allowed lead for the couering of the great Church at Bath, amounting as I heare to the charge of two thouſand markes.

2000. markes.

Theſe noble Earles, Lords and Ladies, I haue ſet in the forefront of this catalogue, as the Captaines and leaders of this heauenly armie of Chriſts ſouldiers, confeſſing and ſetting forth their godly faith by their Chriſtian workes: I may ſay of theſe noble Lords and Ladies, as Ambroſe of a worthie Earle, that built a Church: Si Centurio à Domino commendatur, qui ædificauit Synagogam, vbi Chriſtus negatur, quanto commendatior, qui fabricauit Eccleſiam, vbi Chriſtus prædicatur? If the Centurion be commended of the Lord, for building a Synagogue, where Chriſt is denied, how much more to be commended is he that hath erected a Church, wherein Chriſt is preached? &c. Now in the next place vnto our honourable Nobilitie, I will ſet downe ſuch of worſhipfull place and condition, whoſe hearts the Lord hath ſtirred vp, ſince the time of the Goſpell in this land, to be inſtruments of good workes: I will begin, as I firſt propoſed, with the worthie Citie of London.

Serm. 89.

Charitable workes done in and by the honourable Citie of London, and the worſhipfull Citizens thereof.

I Will begin with the publike workes procured by the common charge of that honourable Citie, which are theſe tenne of more ſpeciall account.

1 Chriſt Church Hoſpitall, which was founded firſt by King Edward of bleſſed memorie, and encreaſed ſince by the liberall contribution of diuers noble and worſhipfull benefactors, the chiefe whereof are in this catalogue diſperſedly named, receiueth yeerely by the gift of the Citie 600. pound per annum out of Blackewell Hall, beſide the yeerely allowance that commeth out of diuers pariſhes, ſo that by theſe meanes, that famous Hoſpitall maintaineth yeerely to the number of ſeuen hundred perſons, poore children, with the officers and miniſters, which charge is thought yeerely to extend to 4000. pound.

Chriſts Hoſpitall.

2. Saint Bartholomewes Hoſpitall maintaineth by the gifts of diuers, well nigh three hunred poore diſeaſed people, or thereabout, which are vnder cure, at the yeerely charge of 2000. pound, toward which charge, the Citie alloweth 200. pound per annum out of Blackewell Hall: which charitable foundation ſo well deuiſed by that famous and renowned King Henry the 8, hath ſince the times of the Goſpel been much augmented: and is by the wiſe gouernours of the houſe as faithfully imployed to the comfort of many poore members of Chriſt, which by the charitie of that houſe, haue beene healed of diuers diſeaſes otherwiſe incurable. We reade that an Angel ſtirred the poole of Betheſda and made it apt to cure all manner of diſeaſes: but here not onely the Angel of God goeth in and out among them, but Chriſt himſelfe is preſent, aſſiſting them in ſuch charitable workes, and giuing a bleſſing thereunto.

S. Bartholmews Hoſpitall. Seuen hundred diſeaſed people cured the laſt yeere ending at S. Michael in S. Bartholmewes Hoſpitall, as is credibly by ſome Chirurgions of the houſe affirmed.

3. Saint Thomas Hoſpitall alſo in Southwarke founded firſt by vertuous King Edward, hath been ſince by the gift of many worthy citizens of London augmented: ſo that it now maintaineth about three hundred poore people continually, being vnder cure with the charge of no leſſe then 2000. pound by the yeere.

S. Thomas Hoſpitall.

4. [a] The plantation in Ireland, as I haue learned, hath ſtood the Citie in fiftie thouſand pound, in building of two cities: God giue proſperous ſucceſſe thereunto.

5. [b] The plantation in Virginia, and in the Iſle of Bermuda, hath hitherto been vndertaken and followed at the charge of fiftie thouſand pounds: The Lord Chriſt grant, that by theſe good beginnings, the bounds of his Church may be enlarged in thoſe parts.

[a] Ex relatione D. Ioan. Swinarton. 50000. pound.

[b] Ex relatione D Thomæ Smithi. 50000. pound.

Bridewell.

Maſter Suttons Hoſpitall, conſiſting of a Maſter or Governor, a Preacher, a free ſchoole, with a Maſter and Uſher, 80. poore people, and 30. Scholars, maintained with ſufficient meat and drinke and wages, with other officers and miniſters. the number whereof ſhall encreaſe, as the revenues upon the expiration of the leaſes is encreaſed. This Hoſpitall, I ſay, with the value of the lands laid unto it, which are eſtimated at 4000 pound per annum, and the purchaſe of the houſe, where it is appointed to bee, which coſt 13000. pound, with the ſtocke of a 1000. pound laid to the Hoſpitall, and 5000. pound allowed to the building, and the remainder of his goods unbequeathed, which hee hath given to his hoſpitall, and reſidue of the 20000. pound, left to the diſcretion of his Executors, may very well ariſe to 100000. pound and above: the greateſt gift that ever was given in England, no Abbey at the firſt foundation thereof excepted.

Among theſe long and bountfull Benefactors, now at reſt in the Lord, I will remember ſome yet living, that have done excellently in this kind: whoſe charitie and bounty is ſo much the more gratefull unto God; becauſe they doe it in their life time: for both their wiſdome herein appeareth, in ſeeing with their owne eyes their benevolence beſtowed, which buſineſſe many times committed to executors, is not ſo faithfully performed: and their charity is ſo much the more commendable, becauſe they are content to part with a portion of their wealth, before it leave them: whereas men dying, cannot carry their ſubſtance with them, they muſt leave it to the world.

I know, that this office which I performe unto them, will not be very acceptable, nay, I was wiſhed not to make mention of the charitable acts of ſome living: wherein their modeſtie appeareth, in following that precept of our bleſſed Saviour, Let not thy right hand know, what thy left hand doth: whereupon Ambroſe thus well writeth: Perfecta eſt liberalitas, ubi ſilentio quis tegit opus ſuum, & neceſſitatibus ſingulorum occulte ſubvenit: That is perfect liberality, when one hideth his worke in ſilence and ſecrecie, and cloſely ſuccoureth every ones neceſſity, &c. yet I thought it fit, though againſt their mind, to make their ſecret godly acts publike, to the praiſe of God, and good example of others.

Here then I will be bold to mention the R. Worſhipfull, S. Stephen Soames, Alderman of London, who hath built of late an Almes-houſe at Thinlye in Eſſex, for ſix poore people, together with a free Schoole now in building.

The R. Worſhipfull, S. William Craven, likewiſe Alderman of London, hath done worthily in this kind, he hath given a 1000. pound to Chriſts Hoſpitall in London, to purchaſe land for the maintenance of that houſe: he hath alſo been a worthy Benefactor to S. Iohns Colledge in Oxford, as is afterward expreſſed. Beſide, the ſaid charitable Knight hath built at burnſall in Yorkeſhiere a Church, compaſſing it with a wall at his charge of 600. pound. He hath alſo erected a Schoole, with allowance of 20. pound per annum, He hath build one bridge, that coſt 500. pound: another 250. pound: a third, 100. marks, a fourth, 20. pound and cauſed a cauſey to be made at 100. pound charge.

1000. pound.

Sir Baptiſt Hicks of London hath at his owne charge of 900. pound, or thereabouts, built a Shire-houſe for the Juſtices of Middleſex in Saint Iohns ſtreet, and an Hoſpitall for 12. perſons at Cambden, in the Countie of Gloceſter, the building beſide the yeerely maintenance coſt 900. pound.

One Maſter Ioanes a Merchant abiding at Stode, of the Companie of the Habberdaſhers, a moſt bountifull man in charity, hath ſent of late to the Company 6000. pound to bee beſtowed in Munmoth in Wales, where he was borne, in charitable works: and that worſhipfull Company according to that truſt, already have bought 200. l. per annum, and more allowing 150. l. per annum to an hoſpitall for twenty poore people, and 100. marks to a painfull Preacher, to preach twice on the Lords day.

Maſter Campe a ſilke man hath built ſix Almes-houſes in London upon the wall neere to Biſhopsgate, and another goodly foundation for an hoſpitall in the Pariſh of Fryan: the charge of both was above 800. pound.

800. pound.

Many there are beſide yet living of the Citie of London, whoſe hearts God hath moved in this kinde, whom I had no notice of, but many more at reſt in the Lord, whoſe charitable gifts came not to my knowledge, for want of inſtruction from the Companies and Pariſhes. Theſe which I have ſet downe, if they bee brought to a ſumme, wee ſhall find more than 20. Hoſpitals and Almes-houſes, above as many free Schooles, tenne Churches and Chapels to have been erected: the ſummes of money given to charitable uſes in and by the Citie of London, together with the gift of divers noble perſonages there, and the yeerely penſions and annuities, caſt up to a valuable proportion, (which ſhall be more particularly ſummed afterward) at fifteene yeeres purchaſe, being added together, will make about 600000. pounds. The reſt, which either I omitted, as of ſmaller ſummes of money, as five pound, tenne pound, twelve pound, thirtie pound: and leſſer annuities, as of twentie ſhillings, thirtie ſhillings, fortie ſhillings, three pound per annum: (which I would not ſet downe in ſome, having not notice of others, only taking the greateſt gifts) together with ſuch gifts both great and ſmall, which I had no intelligence of, will make up a great ſumme beſide, not leſſe, I ſuppoſe, than an hundred thouſand pound more, which hath been given by the citizens of London only.

The ſumme of ſuch charitable works as have been done in & by the Citie of London within 60. yeeres, will amount to more than 600000. pound.

In other places of the land, and by others alſo much hath been performed: as that reverend man Maſter Robert Iohnſon Archdeacon of Leiceſter, Preacher and Paſtor of North-Luffenham in the Countie of Rutland, hath been a worthie inſtrument in this kinde: who at his owne charge hath cauſed two free Schooles to bee built in two market townes in that Countie, one at Okam, the other at Uppingham, with allowance to each, of 24 pound to the Maſter, and 12. pound to the Uſher.

Three Hoſpitals and two free ſchooles founded by Maſter Robert Iohnſon.

He hath alſo built two Hoſpitals, called by the name of Chriſts Hoſpitall in the foreſaid townes, with proviſion in each of them for 24. poore people: hee purchaſed lands of Queene Elizabeth, which hee hath laid to thoſe Hoſpitals, and procured a mortmaine of foure hundred marks per annum.

Likewiſe he redeemed a third Hoſpitall, which had been erected by one William Dabby, and was diſſolved, being found to bee concealed land: their uncharitable attempts, that went about to ſubvert ſuch a foundation, deſerveth as much blame, as Gods is to be praiſed, for the others endevovr in reviving and recovering it.

Beſide, he hath given the perpetuall patronage of the Church of North-Luffenham to Emmanuel Colledge in Cambridge, that the towne may alwayes be provided of a ſufficient Preacher.

He hath alſo made good proviſion in both Univerſities for ſchollers which ſhall bee brought up in the ſaid Schooles.

He hath given alſo twentie marks per annum toward the maintenance of Preachers, that are called to Pauls-Croſſe.

He hath alſo been very beneficiall to the townes of Luffenham, Stamford, and other places in Rutland in providing for the education of their poore children, and placing them apprentices: praiſed be God for ſuch an excellent inſtrument.

Doctor White, one of the Reſidenciaries of Pauls in London, a reverend learned man, hath built an Hoſpitall in the Citie of Briſtoll for tenne poore people, with yeerely maintenance of 50. pound: And God I truſt will enlarge his heart, to adde other like works to this ſo good beginning.

One Maſter George Iilſon a man of great wealth, borne in the towne of Buckland in the Countie of Hartford, hath built of late an Hoſpitall for ſix poore people, with the yeerely maintenance of 40. pound, in the towne of Morcot [a] in the Countie of Ruthland: who alſo yet living hath given to his [b] poore kinred 160. pound yeerely for certaine yeeres: God ſtrengthen him to goe forward in ſuch pious works, that to his able hand a willing heart be never wanting.

[a] Or Northhampton.

[b] The greateſt charitie, of the living toward the living, and to begin with their owne familie.

One Maſter W. Latham a Miniſter of Barnewell in Northhamptonſhire hath built, as I am informed, two Hoſpitals, one for women, the other for men, and a free Schoole in the ſaid towne, with convenient yeerely maintenance laid to them all.

Maſter Wilſon Vicar of Cammerwell beſide London, hath, as I heare, built a free Schoole there. If ſuch men out of ſo ſmall meanes have been ſtirred up to compaſſe ſuch profitable works; more certainly is required of thoſe, which are of greater abilitie.

I will not here forget alſo to make mention of the Almes-houſes now in hand in the towne of Barley where I dwell, to the which theſe benefactors have largely contributed: Maſter William Roe of London Eſquier, Maſter Raph Dobinſon of S. Martins in the field, borne in the ſaid pariſh, together with the help of the ſaid towne: and God (I truſt) will raiſe up other wel-willers and helpers to this good worke.

Many other there are, now at reſt in the Lord, and ſome living, that in divers parts of this land have not been unfruitfull, whoſe charitable works, for want of intelligence, I could not rehearſe: but their names that are not in this booke expreſſed, are no doubt in Gods booke of remembrance regiſtred: for whom God alwaies be praiſed.

Charitable works performed in the Vniverſities of Cambridge and Oxford in the times of the Goſpell under the reigne of King Edward, but ſpecially of Queene Elizabeth, and the Kings Majeſtie that now is.

IN this renowned Univerſitie of Cambridge, the charitable benevolence, bountifull liberality, large expences beſtowed partly in founding and erecting of Colledges, partly in augmenting the former foundations with increaſe of revenewes, partly in adorning and beautifying the fabricke and building of the Colledges, within the compaſſe of 60. yeeres, may compare with the like continuance in the dayes of Poperie, and doe farre exceed them.

Clare Hall. 3. Fell. and 32. Schol.

5000. pound.

Doctor Stephen Peirce Doctor of Phyſicke, one of the fellowes of the ſaid Colledge, hath likewiſe by his laſt will taken order, that eight fellowſhips, and eight ſchollerſhips more ſhall bee added unto the ſaid houſe, and that certaine poore ſchollerſhips bee increaſed, with lodgings to bee builded for the ſaid fellowes and ſchollers: likewiſe he intendeth to build a free Schoole in Cambridge, with allowance of 40. pound per annum to the Maſter, and 20. pound to the Uſher: And further hee purpoſeth to give eight pound per annum, to the keeping cleane of the new brooke that commeth in at Spittle-houſe end, and he intendeth to continue the Calſey by him already begun in Jeſus lane, about a mile and halfe further to meet with Doctor Harvies Calſey: God hath alſo enlarged his heart to extend his charitable hand further, to give unto Norwich, Cambridge, Linne, Berrie; to the firſt, two thouſand pound ſtocke, to each of the reſt one thouſand pound a peece to be lent unto poore occupiers. Neither can I forget here his liberall benevolence toward the building of certaine Almes-houſes in the towne of Barley, where I live: All this, which he hath ſet downe with himſelfe, to be beſtowed in theſe charitable works, may amount to 7. or 8. thouſand pound. If exception ſhall bee made to this relation, becauſe the parties be yet living, and the works not yet done: to the firſt I anſwer, that although the parties themſelves deſired to be concealed, and not to have theſe things mentioned, yet I take it not to bee unſeaſonable, becauſe the examples of men living, may move more, than of the dead: and to the other I ſay, that although theſe things are not actually done, yet I am informed, that there is in theſe well minded men ſuch a firme reſolution, that they inſerted theſe things into their laſt will, with a purpoſe not to reverſe them. I remember that in the laſt edition of this booke before this, I made mention of Maſter Suttons intention to build an Hoſpitall, then giving my advice, that he would begin in his life time: that worke hath now taken effect, thanks bee to God, though with ſome difficultie, and ſo I truſt ſhall theſe, but without any ſuch oppoſition: yet it were a ſurer way to prevent ſuch croſſe occurrents, if they would make an entrance and beginning in their life time. But I will proceed to the reſt of the Colledges.

Kings Colledge.

140. pound.

44. pound, per annum.

Kings Colledge hath not had many Benefactors ſince their royall foundation by that devout Prince King Henrie the ſixth, increaſe of Schollerſhips and Fellowſhips they have none by reaſon their foundation is certaine, conſiſting of 70. Schollers and fellowes: ſome other helpes they have had, but not many: men, otherwiſe well diſpoſed, not preſuming, as I thinke, to adde to ſuch a princely foundation. Doctor Goad, that reverend father, and learned Divine, and wiſe governour, who was Provoſt there 40. yeeres, gave to 20. Fellowes 40. pound, and to the Colledge the Patronage of Milton parſonage, of the yeerely value of 80. pound. Maſter Rabins, ſometime Fellow, gave to the Colledge and to Eaton 140. pound. Sidney Colledge alſo was erected and raiſed out of the ground by the right Honourable Counteſſe of Suſſex, conſiſting of a Maſter and tenne Fellowes and twenty Schollers by the gift of the foundreſſe, and ſince encreaſed with two fellowſhips, and foure ſchollerſhips by Sir Iohn Hart Alderman of London: two fellowſhips, and two ſchollerſhips given by Maſter Blundel, and an Hebrew lecture of five pound per annum: Sir Iohn Hart gave more for a Greeke lecture foure pound per annum: Maſter Freeſtone of Yorkſhire a fellowſhip and two ſchollerſhips. Maſter Leonard Smith of London one fellowſhip and one ſchollerſhip: the building of this Colledge coſt three thouſand pound at the founders charge.

3000. pound.

Counting two Maſterſhips at two fellowſhips a peece.

The ſumme of all theſe gifts will ariſe to a great proportion there are numbred 68. fellowſhips, which at twenty pound a peece will amount to 1360. pound yeerely or thereabout, one with another: the ſchollerſhips given will be found to bee about 291. which valued but at three pound tenne ſhillings a peece one with another will make about 1020. pound, the penſions and annuities given as for Lectures and other ſuch uſes, will make about 558. pound per annum: which ſums put together come to 1940. pound per annum, or thereabout, which at 15. years purchaſe will amount to 44100. pounds or thereabout: the ſums of money beſtowed in the building and fabricke of divers Colledges, and given to ſeverall houſes will ariſe to about 45000. pound: ſo that there hath been given (bleſſed be God) by the charitable benevolence of well diſpoſed Chriſtians, noble and other to the Univerſitie of Cambridge within compaſſe of leſſe than ſixty yeeres about 88000. and ſome odde hundreds, which may compare with any age in Popery, and double in proportion, the times next preceding, ſince the publike oppoſition of religion began. In which ſumme of 87000. pound, we neither include the yearly proviſion of rent corne: which in time may encreaſe to 5. or 6000. per annum, above the auncient revenewes, nor yet the exhibitions from the companies in London, which may be forty in Cambridge only at three pounds tenne ſhillings a peece will come to an 140. p. per annum more: which yeerely annuities of 6140. pound being reduced to the valuable rate of 15. yeeres purchaſe, will make 90000. pound more. Bleſſed be God for this great charity.

The ſumme of Schollerſhips, Fellowſhips, money and yeerely ſtipends given in Cambridge. Theſe ſummes are not exactly caſt, but only roved at.

Charitable works done in the Vniverſity of Oxford, in the ſpace of ſixty yeeres ſince the firſt yeere of Elizabeth.

I Will now come unto the other famous Univerſitie of Oxford, which is not behind her other ſiſter of Cambridge in theſe liberall endowments: the beauty and lovely grace of our ſiſter, as the amiable ſpouſe of Chriſt, hath drawne unto her the affection of many of the bridegroomes friends: I will firſt ſet downe the publike works concerning the body of the Univerſitie in generall: and then come to the ſeverall Colledges.

I will begin with that worthy Knight Sir Thomas Bodley his bountifull gift, who in his zeale of Gods glory and love of Religion and learning, beſtowed partly in his life time, partly to be employed after his death, in and toward the building, repairing, and finiſhing the Univerſity Library, in lands, goods, and money, above 18. thouſand pounds.

Beſide within theſe twelve yeeres laſt paſt, there hath been beſtowed in books for the ſaid Library, partly by the ſaid Sir Thomas gift, partly by others by his procurement about tenne thouſand pound. The company of Stationers have conſented to give one booke of every impreſſion of any new booke for ever.

The building of the Schooles now in hand, will amount to the ſumme of ſix or ſeven thouſand pound, which worke is undertaken by the right worſhipfull Sir Iohn Bennet Judge of the prerogative Court, that what the contributions collected from the willing gifts of ſuch as are and have been of that Univerſitie ſhall want of the ſaid charge, he will out of his owne purſe ſupply.

Unto the which library among other benefactors that learned Knight Sir Henry Savill Provoſt of Eaton, and Warden of Merton Colledge hath given Chryſoſtomes works in Greeke with other books, of whom ſeeing I have made mention, let that worthy worke of his alſo bee remembred in cauſing all Chryſoſtomes works to be ſet forth in Greeke at his proper and only charge, eſtimated at five thouſand pounds beſides his owne induſtry and travell, in the correcting and overſeeing of the worke: wherein three excellent things are performed: divers volumes are ſet forth not extant before: that which was before printed, commeth out much amended and perfected: and all is ſet out in moſt excellent manner both for paper, letter, and workmanſhip.

And here I cannot but make mention alſo, of that worthy man Doctor Reynalds, who while hee lived was a living Library, a ſtorehouſe of all true learning, and dying diſperſed his dead Library of moſt choice books diſperſing the ſame unto divers Libraries, to the Univerſity library, Queens, & Corpus Chriſti Colledge, ſuch as were of greateſt account, the reſt being divided among poore Schollers and ſtudents in the Univerſity: Theſe carefull collectors of the beſt authors, and treaſurers up of books and founders of Libraries, I may compare to thoſe ancient lovers and ſerchers out of books,

Pan-

[a] Pantenus, [b] Melito, [c] Pamphilus, Acarius, Euzoius: And this famous Librarie may bee judged not inferiour to thoſe renouned Libraries: erected by Ptolomie Philopater[d] in Alexandria, by Alexander [e] at Jeruſalem, [e] Pamphilus at Cæſaria, [f] Theodoſius Iunior at [g] Conſtantinople, [h] Hilarius at Rome; or Cicero his Librarie, which is to this day to be ſeene as a ſacred thing: at [i] Putali in Italie. We read alſo of other famous Libraries; as one founded by [k] Acra at Hagulſtade:[l] by Benedictus at Dover,[m] by Egbertus at Yorke: But this may be thought far to exceed them: ſo that I may ſay of this worthie Knight the founder of this Treaſure houſe of the Muſes, as Hierome of Pamphilus: [o] Beatus Pamphilus, cum Demetrium Phalereum & Piſiſtratum in ſacra bibliotheca ſtudio voluit æquare imagines ingeniorum, quæ vera ſunt & æterna monumenta, toto orbe perquiſivit: Bleſſed Pamphilus, equalizing Demetrius, Phalerius, and Piſiſtratus in the ſtudious care of ſacred Libraries, did ſearch out through the world, the images of mens induſtrie, which are the true and eternall monuments.

Now will I proceed to the particular Colledges, not ſetting them downe in their order of antiquitie, which I know not, but as the certificats came unto my hands.

In Chriſts Church, there hath been of late builded a goodly Librarie, with the charge of ſeven hundred pound, by Maſter Otho Nicolſon, one of the examiners of the Chancerie: who alſo hath given an hundred pound to be beſtowed in books of Divinity.

Doctor Biſſe Canon of the Church of Wells, gave his Librarie unto it, conſiſting of two thouſand three hundred books valued at a thouſand ſeven hundred pound. But here let this bee obſerved, that although the founders of this Colledge were knowne to be Popiſh, yet they provide by Statute, that all their ſchollers ſhould reſort to divine ſervice, as it is now profeſſed.

The number of all the fellowſhips given to theſe ſeverall houſes is about twenty ſeven, which at twenty pound a man commeth to 5. hundred and forty pound per annum, the ſchollerſhips added being about 62. at three pound ten ſhillings a peece, will make about 220. pound per annum; the yeerely rents & penſions which have been given to the Colledges, will riſe to 1070. pounds per annum, or thereabout, which ſummes put together will make about 1900. pounds per annum, which at fifteene yeeres purchaſe will amount to 28500. pounds or thereabouts: the ſummes laid forth upon the Univerſity librarie, and books, and in the particular buildings of the Colledges, and given beſide to the houſes, will make 61900. pounds or thereabouts: both ſummes added together will ariſe to 90000. pounds and ſome odde hundreds or thereabout: I take not upon mee to bee an exact auditor, divers ſummes might eſcape mee in the caſting up, but I thinke I have ſomewhat neere roaved at it: And thus the difference in theſe charitable gifts betweene the two Univerſities will appeare not to bee very great. But herein I cannot but commend the diligence and care of Doctor Singleton Vicechancelor of Oxford, and of Maſter Iames Keeper of the Library there, who in three dayes ſpace ſent mee a more exact certificate from every Colledge than I could get in Cambridge, by viſiting every Colledge my ſelfe: divers being from home, that might have given mee more perfect inſtruction.

The number of ſchollerſhips & fellowſhips in Oxford which is ſmaller; but the ſumme of their yeerely increaſe of rents and ſums of money is greater than in Cambridge. Beſide the like ſum of 90000. pounds for the yeerely increaſe of rent and exhibitiõs was caſt up before in Cambridge.

Here as I was about to cloſe up this catalogue, having proceeded thus farre, I requeſted ſome further inſtructions concerning certaine charitable works done in the citie of London, which I thought better to inſert here, though ſomewhat out of place, than to omit altogether.

Whereas mention is made of ſir Rowland Hills gifts before page 1225. wherein I followed maſter Stoe his relation, by the inſpection of his will, I find theſe charitable legacies beſide, given to Schollers thirty pound: to an hundred poore people, one hundred nobles: to the town of Stoke, fifty pound: to Drayton 20. marks: to his ſervants, two hundred pound: to the twenty foure wards in London foure pound a peece: to the company of Mercers fifty pound: beſide hee forgave all his tenants in the townes of Alderley and Sponeley a yeeres rent, and bindeth his Heyres, to make them leaſes for 21. yeeres for two yeeres rent.

I find more theſe particular legacies given by Sir Thomas Offley, who is mentioned before, page 1226. to 50. poore men in gownes, 50. pound: to the priſons twelve pound: to Chriſts Hoſpitall one hundred pound: to poore houſholders ten pound: to poore maids marriages ten pound: in coales three pound per annum for twenty yeeres: to poore ſchollers, twenty pounds: to the towne of Stafford to be lent to poore occupyers 100. pound: for mending of high wayes 400. marks: to his ſervants thirty pound, and halfe the reſt of his goods unbequeathed he gave to poore ſchollers, toward the mending of high wayes, and ſuch other charitable uſes: all theſe gifts are ſummed before, as they might be gheſſed at.

Mention alſo is made before, page, 1226. of Mr. Iohn Heydons charitable gifts in generall: the particulars whereof in his will I ſaw to be theſe. To one hundred poore ſo many gownes one hundred pound, and twelve pence a peece in money: to the worſhipfull company of the Mercers 600. pound to be lent to yong men, at three pound ſix ſhillings eight pence the hundred: which maketh twenty pound to be given yeerely to the poore: likewiſe 400. pound more he gave to the ſame company to be lent out at the ſame rate, and the yeerely annuity of thirteene pound ſix ſhilling eight pence ariſing thereof, to go to the maintaining of the lecture in S. Michael pater noſter: to Chriſts Hoſpitall 500. pound: to the eleven worſhipfull companies beſide eleven hundred pounds to bee lent out to young men, at three pound ſix ſhillings eight pence the hundred: and out of the annuity ariſing thereof twenty pound per annum to go to the Hoſpitals, and ſixteene pound to the poore: to Exceter 200. pound, to Briſtol 100. pound, Gloceſter 100. pound, to be lent to young occupiers, at three pound ſix ſhillings eight pence the hundred, to the uſe of poore priſoners, and other poore people: to the towne of Wardberrie, ſix pound thirteene ſhillings foure pence. To the company of Mercers for a cup, 40. pound: to his ſervants, 240. pound, out of the reſt of his moytie hee gave to the foreſaid companies 50. pound to each to the uſes aforeſaid.

Maſter Heydens ſingular charity.

This worthy Citizen Maſter Iohn Heydon Alderman, and Sheriffe in his time, a Mercer hath given a good example to all Citizens and others: And as I am credibly informed, that right worſhipfull company of the Mercers, hath of late ſhewed the like charitable and bountifull mind, in allowing to ten ſchollers, that ſhould goe out of that ſchoole to the Univerſities, to each ten pound per annum for ten yeeres, which commeth to one hundred pound a peece, and ſo ſucceſſively to ten other ſchollers of the ſame ſchoole for ever, beſide their liberality to the teachers, and their bountifull purpoſe to increaſe their maintenance.

100. pound per annum, the worthy liberality of the right worſhipfull Company of the Mercers of London, toward the Schollers of their Schoole S.Paul.

One Maſter Edmund English of Weſtminſter who died in March, anno 1603. gave by his laſt will and teſtament to Emmanuel Colledge in Cambridge, for two fellowſhips and ſix ſchollerſhips,[a] one thouſand pound: to Chriſts hoſpitall one hundred pound: to the poore of Weſtminſter 12. pound per annum, to the poore of Peterborough 100. pound.

[a] All this will make 1400. l.

Mention alſo is made before, p. 1228. of an Hoſpitall and free Schoole founded by Miſtreſſe Owen at Iſlington: but many more good works were performed by her in her life time. She gave to the Univerſitie Librarie at Oxford 200. pound: to S. Iohns Colledge Librarie in Cambridge, 20. pound: a certaine ſum of money for the founding of one fellowſhip and ſchollerſhip in Emmanuel Colledge. To Chriſts Hoſpitall threeſcore pound, to give twelve pence weekely to the poore of Iſlington: ſhee beſtowed threeſcore and ſix pound thirteene ſhillings foure pence in beautifying the Cloyſters of Chriſts Church Hoſpitall: toward a Schoolehouſe at Edmunton twentie pound: to the Pariſh of Condover in Shropſhire, ſhe gave fiftie pound for a great Bell: the building of the Almes-houſes for ten poore women at Iſlington, and the purchaſe of the lands laid unto it, coſt her 1415. pound, and the building of the Schoole-houſe there 361. ſhe gave alſo yeerely divers ſummes of money to Preachers not beneficed, and to the priſons in her life time.

By her laſt will ſhe hath provided, that 22. pound per annum ſhall be purchaſed for the maintenance of the Schoole at Iſlington: to Preachers ſhe hath bequeathed 35. pound: to the Pariſh of Baſhingſhaw to increaſe the ſtocke of the poore, twentie pound: to the priſons eight pound: to the companie of the Brewers, to whom ſhe hath committed the government and overſight of the ſaid Almes-houſes and Schoole at Iſlington, for their care to be taken in that buſines, in linnen, plate and money 100. pound. The ſum of theſe moneyes will amount, beſide the annuitie of 22. pound, to 2322. pound or thereabout. This Chriſtian Matrones charitie is ſo much the more commendable, becauſe ſhee did give the moſt of theſe ſummes in her life time, and ſaw them beſtowed with her owne eyes: whereas the uſuall cuſtome of men is to part with nothing while they live; and beſide, whereas ſhe at the time of her death had 22. children, and childrens children, yet ſhee could find a good portion among her childrens parts for Chriſts poore members. Likewiſe ſhe ſhewed her thankfulneſſe to God, that whereas being a child borne at Iſlington, ſhee eſcaped a great danger, (an arrow being ſhot in the fields, where ſhe then was by occaſion, through her hat, and ſhee not touched) that in the ſame towne, and not farre from that place, ſhee would offer up unto God this charitable worke, in building there an Almes-houſe, and a free Schoole.

2322. pound. Miſtreſſe Owens charity in her life time.

Whereas mention alſo is before made, p. 1223. of the 4. Hoſpitals of London, thus much I thought good to adde more, that in Chriſts Hoſpitall this yeere 1613. there are kept of children in the houſe and citie, 534. and at nurſe in the countrie 164. beſide others which are placed apprentices, and ſome dead: in all 763.

In S. Bartholmewes Hoſpitall there hath been cured this yeere 785. there are under cure at this preſent 258.

In S. Thomas Hoſpitall there hath been cured this yeere 780. there are under cure 205.

In Bridewell this yeere there have been ſent out by paſports of vagrant perſons brought thither 1372. many of them having been chargeable to the houſe for their diet, bands, hoſe and ſhooes, and ſuch like: there are there kept in labour 120. perſons, whereof 80. are poore children taken out of divers Pariſhes in London, and there brought up in trades being apprentices, and afterward to be made free men of the Citie. Many other there are beſide, whom I have no notice of: yet by the good help which I had by certaine collections of charitable gifts, gathered together by the diligent care of an induſtrious Clerke of the Prerogative Court, who of a good mind was willing to further this worke, I came to the knowledge of theſe charitable men and their gifts, whom otherwiſe I ignorantly ſhould have omitted: I have ſet them downe here ſummarily in their order.

The ſumme alſo hereof may ariſe to 1611. or therabout, beſide other ſmaller ſummes under fifty pound, which came to a 1440. or thereabout which 3051. pound. both together make 3051. pound or thereabout.

Likewiſe to poore ſchollars there hath been given within this time by Iames Stoddard to Braſen neſe in Oxford five pound per annum, and to Queenes in Cambridge five pound per annum. William Walthall Alderman to poore ſchollers in Cambridge nine pound per annum. Roger Owfield gave to both Univerſities an hundred pound. Andrew Banning 5. l. per annum to Cambridge, Randall Manning 8. pound per annum to Chriſts and Emanuell in Cambridge: which ſummes reducing the annuities of 32. pound per annum to a proportionable rate after the uſuall purchaſe make 550. pound beſide 160. 710. pound. pound given in ſmaller ſummes, within this time ſince anno 1606. which make in all 710. pound.

More given to poore maids marriages by Iane Baker, one hundred pound, and other ſmaller gifts 205. pound. by divers, making the ſumme of one hundred and five pound as appeareth in the booke of particulars which I followed in the whole 205. pound. Beſide, there hath been given more to the Hoſpitalls: by Ralph Newberrie a Stationer, a certaine ſtocke of books and certaine privileges of Printing to bee Not valued. ſold to the uſe of Chriſts Hoſpitall and Bridewell. Sir Robert Hampſon Alderman gave one hundred and thirty pound in money, and the reverſion of two tenements: William Walthall beſide his former gifts, gave to Chriſts Hoſpitall tenne pound per annum, and five hundred pound to the company of Mercers to be lent unto yong men.

Roger How gave fifteene pound to certaine priſons, and if his ſecond daughter dyed, 800. pounds to purchaſe lands, one moytie to go to the Hoſpitals, the other to the reliefe of the priſons. Iohn Pountis gave to the priſons eighteene pound, and two ſhillings every weeke in bread to priſoners in the hole in the Counter in the poultrie: Iohn Porter gave the reſidue of all his goods not valued, his debts paid, and funerall diſcharged, to be diſtributed to the poore at his executors diſcretion.

In this ſummary catalogue, which I gathered out of thoſe collections which came to my hand, I neither ſet downe the ſmaller ſummes, nor yet the yeere, nor the particular places, as of hoſpitals or priſons, for brevity ſake: the particular ſommes of thoſe charitable legacies from anno 58. to 67. will make 3100. pound or thereabout: from anno 1575. to 1596. about 11608. l. from anno. 1596. to 1606. the ſumme will be about 8658. l. or therebouts. From anno 1606. to 1613. the ſumme will be 9300. l. all which ſummes will make 32550. l. or thereabout, for the ſpace of forty yeeres ſince anno. 60. for the account of eighth yeeres is wanting, which I could not get from anno. 1567. to anno. 1575. which according to the proportion for the reſt being ſupplied, would make up the ſumme of 40000. pound or thereabout.

So then within the ſpace of three ſcore yeeres, we find to have been given in the Citie of London, and by the Citizens and inhabitants thereof in money, about 335000. pound: in annuities and perpetuities about 16000. pound: which being valued at fifteene yeeres purchaſe, will ariſe to 240000. pound, or thereabout: which ſummes put together, will make about 575000. pound: whereunto if the former ſumme of particulars of 40000 pound be added, there will ariſe the ſumme of 615000. pound; which together with the bountifull gifts in both Univerſities in Cambridge and Oxford, put together will make 180000. pound, or thereabout, and the encreaſe of their yeerely rent corne, at 12000. pound per annum, valued at 180000. pound more, will not want much of a million: But if a other gifts which came not to my knowledge were added, the ſumme will farre exceed a million. In which ſumme I comprehend not the yeerely collection of 30000. pound through the pariſhes in this land, mentioned before pag. 1220. Now whereas it will be ſaid, that to make up this great ſumme, I make mention of ſome mens gifts twice, as ſome gifts of the Citizens are reckoned among the charitable works of London, and of the Univerſities: I anſwer, that this is not found in many, nor the ſame the greateſt gifts, and in liew thereof, ſome great gifts are not ſummed up, which are rehearſed before the particular catalogue, as that of Miſtriſſe Owen which commeth to 2302. pound: and beſide ſome Hoſpitals and free Schooles, are ſpoken of and not valued at any certaine ſumme. Further, whereas I have in this catalogue ſet downe the ſummes throughout, adding together ſtill the leſſe, that the value of them may appeare: I doe not take upon mee exactly to ſet them downe, for I conſidered I had no Auditors account in hand: it is ſufficient for my purpoſe though the ſummes ſometime be ſhort, ſometime over, as they are caſt: yet it is ſufficient to our purpoſe, if ſometimes I doe but rove at the ſumme, though I hit it not to a pound, or a ſhilling. Howſoever I truſt I have made it good, that more charitable works have been done in theſe 60. yeeres of the Goſpell, than in the like time of Poperie: I thinke they cannot ſhew in any age, within 60. yeeres ſpace, almoſt a million to have been beſtowed in works of charity in theſe three places of Lodon, Cambridge and Oxford given in inſtance, ſo many Hoſpitals built, more than forty, free Scooles above twentie, and more than tenne Colledges and Churches. And thus is the ſlandrous objection of the Papiſts anſwered, that crie out untruly that Proteſtants doe no good works but are enemies unto them.

The charitable works of London exceed 600000. pound within three ſcore yeeres ſpace: and together with the like in Cābridge & Oxford, they will make well nie a million.

The reader muſt not looke for an exact account in the caſting up of the ſummes, for the author profeſſeth not to be an Auditor.

Above threeſcore Hoſpitals and free ſchooles built in threeſcore yeeres by the citizens of London.

Many charitable works have been done in other Cities and places of this land in the times of the Goſpell, as in Yorke, Norwich, and elſewhere, whereof I had not particular notice: but it may bee when ſufficient intelligence ſhall be had of thoſe things now omitted, that remembrance may be made afterward.

So then to conclude at this time: theſe and many other ſuch charitable works performed chiefly in London and in both Univerſities, doe gliſter as pearles, and the works thereof doe ſhine as ſtarres amongſt us: their religious acts are as the pomegranates in Aarons prieſtly garment, and themſelves as the tinkling bels hanging thereon, doe ſound abroad the praiſes of the Goſpell. Thoſe godly benefactors, whom I for want of knowledge have not remembred, are before God regiſtred: and they which are not here mentioned in the lines of this leafe, their names are written in the booke of life. And this I truſt may ſerve for a full and ſufficient anſwer to the Remiſts unjuſt accuſation, that wee condemne good works: though wee abound not in fruit, as we ſhould, yet (God bee thanked) wee are not fruitleſſe: and ſo I conclude with that ſaying of Hierome: Veneratio Dei non proficit ad ſalutem, niſi precepta creatoris impleveris: The veneration of God doth not profit, where the obſervation of his precepts doth not prevaile: Fabiola tom. 4. And here an end of this Catalogue.

So then to conclude at this time these, and many other such like [illegible] in London and in both Universities, doe glister as pearles, and the workes thereof [illegible] amongst their religious acts are as the pomegranate [illegible] garment, [illegible] like the [illegible] bels hanging thereon, doe sound abroad the praise of [illegible] Gospell. Those worthy benefactors, whom I for want of knowledge have not remembred, [illegible] they who are not here mentioned in the [illegible] of this [illegible], their names are written in the booke of life. [illegible] this I trust may serve for a full and sufficient [illegible] unjust accusation, [illegible] wee contemne good workes: though wee [illegible] and not in [illegible] we should, yet (God be thanked) wee are not faithlesse: and so I conclude with [illegible] saying of Hierome, [illegible]

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE SIR THOMAS EGERTON KNIGHT, LORD ELLESMERE, LORD CHANCELLOR OF England, and of his Majeſties moſt honourable privie Counſell, Grace and peace.

Right Honourable, and my very good Lord, If I ſhould forget your Honours bountifull liberalitie, and extraordinary favour, which I received at your Lordſhips hand in my firſt preferment, I might juſtly both of your Honour bee thought unworthy of that which was beſtowed, and of all men worthily condemned of great ingratitude: for thus it pleaſed the Lord to move your Honours heart towards me, that I being both unknowne unto your honourable Lordſhip, and wanting the mediation of friends, and having no other meane, but my ſimple labours preſented to your Honour to ſpeak for me, was notwithſtanding remembred & in my abſcence a convenient preferment for me reſerved: and not long after, a place of better worth falling void, I was of your Honour moſt tenderly reſpected, and before many other petitioners in that ſute preferred: wherein as I acknowledge Gods mercifull providence, as he well ſaith: Quicquid hic favoris captas, ſi ad Deum non retuleris, ipſi fruaris: So I hold my ſelfe infinitly bound unto your Honour as an eſpeciall mean effecting Gods gracious purpoſe towards me: as another well warneth me, Quid tam contra officium, quàm non reddere, quod acceperis: Nothing is ſo much againſt duty, as what thou haſt received, not to render thankfully, &c. And indeed your Honours fovour hath abounded toward me: I have ſerved other men without reward, your Honour hath rewarded me without ſervice: I have ſought ſome mens favour and not found it, yours I have found, and (in a manner) not ſought it: to ſome I have been long knowne, and ſeldome remembred; your Honour hath remembred me before I was knowne: and in one word, other have often promiſed, but your Honour hath performed: ſo that I may here truly ſay, as one in the like caſe: Alii ſerò præſtant, quod pollicentur, tu præſtas prius, quàm polliceris: Other men do ſlowly performe what they haſtily promiſe, but your Honour hath firſt performed before you promiſed.

Bernard. in Cantic. ſer. 13.

Ambr. lib. offic. 1. cap. 13.

Wherfore, while I conſidered with my ſelfe how infinitly I was bound to your Honour, I have indevoured in ſome meaſure to teſtifie my thankfulneſſe for the ſame; for ingratitude is counted an inhumane thing, of all men juſtly condemned, and by humane lawes ſharply cenſured. [a] Severus the Emperour made a law, That a father was not bound to nouriſh or keepe an ungratefull child. [b] the Sonne that was manumitted or ſet at libertie, might for his ingratitude be brought into ſubjection againe to his father: [c] the mother might revoke the gift, which ſhee had made to her unthankfull ſonne. [d] ſo might alſo the maſter doe to his ungratefull ſervant: And by as good right might your Honour reſume into your hands, that which you have conferred, and call back that which you have granted, if I ſhould behave my ſelfe either as an ungratefull ſervant to his maſter, or an undutifull ſchollar to his honourable Patrone.

I have then (may it pleaſe your Honour) ſome while abſented and withdrawne my ſelfe from your honourable preſence, not as forgetfull of the benefit received, which I ſhall remember while I live, but not preſuming to appeare emptie handed before you; I meane not citie gifts or courtly rewards, which your Honour is as free from, as ever any was in that

Lib.13 honorable place: they that doe buy their places doe commonly ſell; for as Piſo in Tacitus truly ſaith, Quod flagitio quæſitum, nemo unquam bonis artibus exercuit: That place which is unhoneſtly obtained, is never honeſtly executed: but as your Lordſhip hath been honorably to this place advanced, ſo have you by Gods grace moſt vertuouſly hitherto the ſame uſed.

I do therfore here preſent to your Honour, as a token of my thankfulneſſe, and a pledge of further dutie, this preſent treatiſe; not worthy your Honors acceptation, but ſuch as I preſently had, now this fourth time publiſhed, and in many places enlarged, and now againe to your Honor exhibited: and ſo I ſay with Ierome: Tibi & quæ poſſum, debeo, & quæ non Sophronio. poſſum, malui te vires potius meas, quam voluntatem quærere: I doe owe unto your Honor both what I preſently can, and what I cannot, but hereafter may, &c. I had rather power ſhould be wanting in me than will. It is now ſixteene yeeres ſince I received my firſt preferment at your Honors hand: which although I now retaine not, being ſomewhile ſince called to another paſtorall charge: yet your favour is more to be eſteemed, than the value: and the firſt collation, than the preſent poſſeſſion: true thankfulneſſe is not worne out with time: neither yet ſhould the memory of the benefit die with the uſe: I ſay then here againe with Hierome: Tibi non brevi hac lucubratiuncula ſed tota nocte, immo tota vita vigilabit ſtylus: My pen ſhall awake and be devoted to your Honour, not in this ſhort treatiſe only, but nights and dayes, yea, I ſay more, while I live.

But leaving further to trouble your Honour with unneceſſarie matter, I will briefely declare theſe three points: firſt, the contents of this preſent Treatiſe. Secondly, the cauſes that moved me thereunto. Thirdly, why I would have it paſſe under your Honours name:

Firſt of all therefore, as in my former booke I have gathered together into one ſumme (the Lord by the gracious aſſiſtance of his ſpirit directing mee) the whole doctrine of the Church of Rome, and opinions of Papiſts: in that worke, but plainly and nakedly, offering to the Readers view, the ſubſtance of the controverſies, and ſtate of the queſtions betweene us: So further I though it not amiſſe, to bring to light, and to ſhew as in the face of the Sun, the manifold abſurdities, inconveniences, ſhifts, ſubtilties, blaſphemies, which our adverſaries in defence of their errors are conſtrained to uſe in oppugning the truth. This have I accordingly performed, I truſt, in this work, that the weakneſſe of their cauſe, the beggery of their Religion, the vanitie of their Councels, and deceit of their hearts might appeare and be made knowne unto all the world.

This booke I have intituled, the PILLARS OF PAPISTRIE: which is built upon lies and untruths, faced out with railing, and bitter ſpeech, propped up with blaſphemies, and patched together with diſſonant and contrarie opinions among themſelves. The proofe of theſe particulars followeth at large diſcourſed in this treatiſe. Firſt, as touching their lying and untruths, I could have wiſhed that they had embraced his wiſe counſell, that ſaith: Aut cavenda ſunt mendacia recte agendo, aut confitenda pœnitendo, non autem cum abundent infeliciter vivendo, augenda ſunt & docendo, Auguſt. lib. 2. de mendac. cap. 21. But they are ſo far from correcting by repentance, that which they have offended in practice; that they are not only become lie-makers, but lie-maſters, not practiſers of this craft, but teachers and Lib. de anima. defenders; that we may ſay of them, as Tertullian of Pythagoras: ut hanc ſententiam extrueret, non turpi modo, ſed temerario mendacio incubuit, To confirme this ſentence, hee relied upon not onely an unſeemly, but a raſh lie. Concerning their railing ſpeech, it is all the Rhethorike they uſe: Such are but young ſchollars and novices among them, that have not filed and whetted their tongues to ſmite and wound us withall. But here I ſay unto them, Epiſt. 177. as Auguſtine did to the heretike Paſcentius: Literæ tuæ nec ad reddendá convitia me provocant, nec à reddendis literis me revocare potuerunt: So neither ſhall their railing writings provoke us likewiſe to paſſe the bonds of modeſtie, and to pay them whom in the ſame kind, neither yet cauſe us to ceaſe from anſwering their follie.

Now as for their blaſphemies, it would offend a chaſte and Chriſtian eare, to heare what horrible and ungodly ſayings do paſſe from them: in the ſecond Pillar of this book I have gathered a great heape of them. But as Auguſtine ſaith to ſome, who the more readily to deſcrie heretikes, themſelves alſo fell into blaſphemy: Tolerabilius in ſuis foveis deliteſcerent vulpes, quàm propter illas capiendas in blaſphemiæ foveam caderent venatores : The ſoxes might more ſafely lurke in their holes, than the huntſmen, to take them, ſhould fall into the pit of blaſphemie,&c. So though we were the foxes, and they the huntſmen, it is no good way for the huntſmen to ſnare themſelves, to intangle the foxes. But we indeed are the huntſmen, and they the foxes, as it is ſaid, *Take us theſe foxes, theſe little foxes that deſtroy the vines, Cantic.*2.15. And here againe I ſay with Tertullian : Verecundia magis periditor quam probatione, In ſetting downe their blaſphemous ſpeeches and ungodly ſayings : I am more ſparing for ſhame than want of proofe.

De mendacio. lib.2.cap.9.

Concerning the diſſentions and diviſions among Papiſts, it is no ſtrange thing as hee ſaith : Omnia vitia erroreſque mortalium diviſi ſunt inter ſe & contrarii : apud Idolorum cultores diviſi ſunt ſpiritus Iunonis & ſpiritus Herculis : Paganus & Iudæus hoſtes ſunt Chriſti, ſed diviſi inter ſe; Arrianus & Photinianus hæretici, & diviſi inter ſe; ſic Donatiſtæ ſic Maximianiſtæ : All vices and errors among men are divided and contrarie to themſelves : among the Idolatrous Heathen, the ſpirit of Iuno and Hercules are divided; the Pagans and Jewes enemies to Chriſt, and yet divided : the Arrians likewiſe and Photinians, the Donatiſts and Maximinianiſts : and alſo the Scotiſts and Thomiſts among the Papiſts divided betweene themſelves, yet Ambo pertinent ad regnum diaboli, Both doe belong to the reigne or kingdome of the devill.

Auguſt.in Mat.ſer. 11.

Now the reaſons that hath moved mee principally to enterpriſe this buſineſſe were theſe, Firſt, in reſpect of thoſe countrey men of ours, which hath ſuffered themſelves a long time to be ſeduced and deceived with falſe opinions, and a vaine ſhew of holineſſe, being as it were made drunke with the whore of Babylons intoxicate cup : that they now at the length ſeeing the nakedneſſe and beggery of popiſh religion, would take heed to themſelves in time, and thinke it enough, yea and too much, to have ſipped of that poyſoned cup, leſt drinking more deeply thereof, they afterward be conſtrained to draw out the dregs, and to be partakers of their plagues: of them we ſay with Auguſtine, Licet non timentur ut perdant, non negligendi ſunt tamen, ut pereant : Though we feare them not to hurt us, yet they muſt not be neglected and ſuffered to be loſt.

Epiſt.105.

As for their ring-leaders, and ſect-maſters, our counſell alſo to them is, that they would learne at the length to give place to the truth, Auguſtine ſaid of ſome heretikes : Puto, quòd ipſe diabolus, ſi authoritate judicis, quem ipſe eligerat, toties vinceretur, non eſſet tam impudens, ut in ea cauſa perſiſteret : I thinke if the devill had bin ſo often overcome before a Judge of his owne chooſing, he would not be ſo impudent as to perſiſt ſtill in an evill cauſe, &c. But our adverſaries have been often vanquiſhed, even by their owne Judges, the teſtimonies of ancient writers, and conſent of antiquitie, and yet for all this will not yeeld : well, as one ſaith : Non oramus ut moriantur inimici, ſed ut corrigantur, ſic mortui erunt inimici, jam enim correcti non amplius erunt inimici : Wee deſire not that our enemies were dead, but amended and ſo our enemies ſhould be dead, for being once amended and corrected, they would no longer be our enemies.

Epiſt.167.

There are other alſo of our countrimen, who (though not ſo farre gone as the other yet) are not ſufficiently grounded in knowledge, or ſettled in judgement to be able to diſcerne betweene the truth and error : Qui brevia non valent intelligere, prolixa non amant legere : Who can neither underſtand briefe matters, nor will abide to read long : for their ſakes alſo have I compoſed this treatiſe, neither very long to make unwilling, nor yet too ſhort to hinder underſtanding. But even as they which have tender eyes, doe not firſt behold the ſunne, but the fire or the ſtarres, or ſome ſuch like, and then turne them to looke upon the ſunne : ſo muſt wee deale with theſe men, Gradibus perducendi ad ſumma ſunt : By degrees they muſt bee brought to underſtand the higher points. For their cauſe chiefly have I undertaken this labour, that they which are not able to conceive the chiefe matters in queſtion, yet may ſafely take knowledge of the nakedneſſe and pooreneſſe of our adverſaries cauſe.

Aug.ſoli. loq.cap.14.

Concerning my ſelfe alſo, ſomewhat there was, which in this reſpect induced me to ſet hand to this plough : for as he ſaith, Vt diſcamus, invitare nos debet ſuavitas veritatis, ut doceamus, cogere debet neceſſitas charitatis : As the pleaſantnes of the truth doth intice us to learne, ſo the bond of charitie ſhould urge us to teach, &c. And the rather conſidering that now is the time or not farre off, wherein the fall of babylon is to bee expected and looked for, according to the prophecie in the Revelation: Every man that beareth hatred to the ſcarlet and blood-thirſtie whore, ought to ſhew his readineſſe in defacing and pulling downe the kingdome of Antichriſt. As Chriſtian Kings and Princes then by their ſacred authoritie have begun for their part to lay Babylon waſte, ſo is it our part to diſcover her nakedneſſe: they are the Lords Captaines to ſlay the enemie, wee his watchmen to diſcrie the enemies comming: they with battle canons, and engines, doe batter the walles, wee come with ropes of argument and perſuaſion to pull downe the towers: they fight with Sauls ſword, and put on his Kingly armour, we muſt aſſault Goliah with Davids ſling and ſtones out of the brooke. The text ſaith, They ſhall make the whore deſolate and naked, eat her fleſh, and conſume her with fire. It is our part to ſtrip her, and make her naked, and ſhew her filthineſſe: by the word of God to deſcrie their corruptions: Then commeth the Chriſtian Magiſtrate, and eateth her fleſh, and burneth it with fire, that is, draweth out the ſword of juſtice after them. Now in the laſt place unto your Honour: I briefly direct my ſpeech, unto whom I doe conſecrate, and devote theſe labours of mine, as a ſigne of my thankfulnes, and a profeſſion of further dutie to your Honour: as alſo unto one, who himſelfe is able to judge of theſe matters: neither is it the leaſt part of your Honours ſtudie and care to bee throughly acquainted with the controverſies of religion: as it is moſt meet honourable perſonages ſhould be. Themiſtocles (as Auguſtine reporteth it) did not care, that he was counted ſomewhat rude, becauſe he could not ſing to the pipe at feaſts: Interrogatus, quid ſciret, reſpondit, rem publicam ex parva magnam facere: It was enough for him to know how to inlarge the Common-wealth, of a little one to make a greater. So may I ſay, it belongeth chiefly to Chriſtian Magiſtrates, Scire Religionem ex parva magnam facere, To know how to inlarge and propagate Religion, and to cauſe the Goſpell to flouriſh.

Pſal.71.v.6.7.

The Lord hath advanced you to this ſeat of honour: for promotion (as the Pſalmiſt ſaith) neither commeth from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt: but it is the Lord that ſetteth up one, and pulleth downe another. The chiefe husbandman hath planted you as an hedge to keep his vineyard: your Honour now is in place to profit the Church of God greatly, as (praiſed be God) you do in advancing of learning, in helping to furniſh the Lords harveſt with plentie of labourers, in incouraging the workmen of Gods houſe, whoſe hands do hang downe, and their knees wax feeble. There are many in this land, who would gladly bee ſet on worke, and cannot, whoſe outward wants doe ſlake their inward deſire: for that old ſaying is moſt true, οὐ᾽δὲν πενίας βαρύτηρον ἐςὶ φορτίον: there is no ſuch heavie clogge, as povertie is: And the Poet ſpake by good experience:

Haud facilè emergunt quorum virtutibus obſtat

* or diſtaffe.

You (Right Honourable) with the reſt, as one well ſaith: Pugnatis contra viſibiles inimicos, nos pro vobis contra inviſibiles: Your Honours by ſage counſell and advice, fight againſt our viſible enemies, but we fight for you by our ſtudy and prayers againſt the ſpirituall and inviſible. The Lord hath now made your Honour a captaine to lead his ſouldiers into battell, and to ſet them in aray: and thanks be unto God, unto whoſe praiſe be it ſpoken, the ſouldies of this ſpirituall warfare, never received better incouragement, to fight the Lords battell, than ſince your Honour had the leading of the field, and the diſtributing of the eccleſiaſticall preferments (the ſincere and indifferent beſtowing wherof, not in giving to, him that hath, which is the rule of the world; nor in giving for that which a man hath which is the rule of darknes, but in giving freely to him that hath not, which is according to the rule of God) ſhall never be forgotten in this land to the glory of God, and your endleſſe comfort, Auguſtine writeth well upon thoſe words, *Prov.*31.19. *She putteth her hands to the * wheele, and her hands handle the ſpindle: Opus tuum in fuſo ſit, non in colo, in colo enim eſt, quod facturus es, in fuſo, quod feciſti:* Let thy worke be in the ſpindle, not in the diſtaffe: that is in the diſtaffe, which thou maiſt do hereafter, that is in the ſpindle, which thou haſt alreadie done. So when God beſtoweth upon a man, honour, riches, authoritie: Omnia iſta in colo ſunt, tranſeant ad fuſum, Theſe things are yet upon the diſtaffe, let them be ſpun out, and turned upon the ſpindle. But your work, Right Honouroble, as we have all good experience is already in Fuſo, not in Colo: and wee doubt not but that unto your good beginnings, ginnings, you will adde alſo good proceedings : and the Lord both unto your good proceedings, and vertuous beginning, ſhall give an happie end. In te nunc puta cunctorum ora & oculos converſos, & adſpectaculum vitæ tuæ, votam conſediſſe Angliam : All mens eies are upon your Honour, and have as it were ſetled themſelves to behold your doings: God grant (and we truſt, as we have allreadie ſeene) that all things ſhall be anſwerable to their expectation. Laſtly, the Lord proſper your godly enterpriſes, and give a bleſſing to your holy Counſels, even the bleſſings of Caleb : That as Caleb drove the Anakims great giants by ſtrong hand out of Hebron, ſo at the length, by your prudent and godly counſell, with the aſſiſtance of the reſt of the honourable Lords of the Counſell and Nobilitie, under the leading of our happie Iosua, and gracious Sovereigne, the Romiſh Anakims, traiterous Jeſuits and Seminaries, with other rebellious and hollow hearted Canaanites, may be weeded out of the Lords field in England : that you with faithfull Caleb and Iosua, may alſo have an everlaſting inheritance, in the heavenly Canaan, through the onely merits of Jeſus Chriſt : to whom be praiſe for ever.

And thus I humbly take my leave of your Honour: this preſent October 1613.

Tui honoris ſtudioſiſſimus.

ANDREAS WILLET.

The Preface to the Chriſtian Reader.

IT is the common and uſuall practice of wrangling and cavelling ſpirits, that to prevent other mens accuſations, they will themſelves firſt begin to accuſe & challenge others of the ſame crimes, which they are guiltie of: Thus Satan the Iob.1. accuſer of the brethren, ſometime dealt with Iob, ſaying unto God, that if he would but ſtretch forth his hand a little, and touch all he had, hee would not ſpare to blaſpheme God to the face, wheras nothing is more common with that old Serpent, than to curſe & blaſpeme God. Thus our adverſaries of the Popiſh religion (which indeeed is no religion, but meer ſuperſtition) have ſubtilly ſought to undermine us, crying out againſt us, that we are liers, Idolaters, blaſphemers, and ſuch like, which are titles and epithites fitter and more proper to themſelves. They charge us with railing: Harding Confut.apol.cap.16.diviſ.2. with lying: Defenſ.apol.pa.597. with corrupting and altering of Scripture: Rhemiſt. 2 Cor. 2. ſect. 8. with fables: Rhem. 1. Tim. 1. ſect. 4. with execrations and blaſphemies: Jud. 3. with hereſies, Bellar. de notis eccleſ. lib. 4. cap. 9. They object againſt us the weakneſſe of our proofes, and arguments: Harding def. apol. p. 625. often innovating and changing of religion: Rhemiſt. 2 Cor. 2. 8. Diviſions and diſſenſions among our ſelves: Harding def. apol. p. 239. Yea that we may ſee how true their other accuſations are, they are not aſhamed to charge us with Idolatry, and worſhipping of Idols, Rhemiſt. 1 Cor. 10. ſect. 9. wherefore that it may appeare to the world, how unjuſtly they have accuſed us, and how ſubtilly they would unburthen & exonerate themſelves of thoſe crimes which are theirs and not ours, to this end I have undertaken this labour in this treatiſe, to detect and bewray their guiltineſſe in this behalfe, that we may be purged from their ſlanders, and our cauſe juſtified, and that the ſhame and blame may fall upon them that have deſerved it.

As for us, we raile not, neither uſe reviling ſpeech, yet ſomtime we tell them roundly their owne, and this may be done without railing: unleſſe they will ſay Chriſt railed, when he told the Iews that they had made his fathers houſe a den of theeves. But their railing, and venemous darts which they ſhoot at us, are notoriouſly knowne and cannot be hid. It is the grace of Popiſh writers both old and new, to ſtuffe their books full with curſing & railing: Stapleton that black mouthed Sophiſter, of Lovain, did not long ſince ſet forth a book againſt D. Whitakers, wherin beſide the badnes of his cauſe, he hath diſgraced his profeſſion, with bitter & filthy tearms, calling that learned and godly man, Ruſticum, fatuum, aſinum, aſininum, profeſſorem, morionem, ſtolidum: Foole, clowne, aſſe, dolt: yea, he is ſo impudent, that he ſpareth not to revile the dead, moſt ſhamefully Liq.1.cap.1. ſect.8. calling Calvin, that worthy miniſter of the Goſpell, Egregium nebulonem, a notable knave: I think Stapletons owne friends and patrons here in England, will bluſh and bee aſhamed of him, Hier.cont. Helvid. when they find ſuch ſtuffe in his book: And here I may ſay to M. Stapleton as Hierome unto Helvidius, Arbitror te veritate ſuperatum, ad maledicta converti: I think you being overcome of the truth, do fall to railing. And he ſaith further, Solent hoc mulierculæ facere, quæ victoribus Dominis male optant in angulis: Much after the guiſe of ſiely women, that raile of their maſters in corners, when they have beaten them. So plaieth M. Stapleton, that being beaten downe with evidence of truth, hee falleth to railing in the melancholy corners of his ſtudy.

Neither doth he thus take on in his mood, as carried away with ſome intemperate heat, but being in his wits (if in his right wits) & well adviſed, and of purpoſe he falleth into this raging vein: Admonit.ad Whitak. giving M. Whitakers warning therof aforehand, Age Whitakere, & ad patientia te compone: willing him to take patiently, what he ſaith. Indeed M. Stapleton your counſell is good, for ſhoot out your venemous darts as long as ye will, we care not, we have a fenſe for them, & a buckler to latch De ſalutar.docum.cep.12, them, as Auguſtine ſaith very well: Quæſo mi frater, quaſi has diaboli ſagittas, ad petrā, quæ eſt Chriſtus, allidens, ſume ſcutu fidei: I give thee counſell (my brother) to rebound theſe arrows of Satan upon the rock, which is Chriſt, taking the ſhield of faith: And ſuch patience is in this caſe neceſſarie as then for M. Whitakers, ſo now for the reſt of us Proteſtants that are living, as the ſame De ſer.in monte cup.33. father ſpeaketh of elſwher: Quemadmodum parentes à filiis vel pueris, vel phreneticis multa patiuntur donec infantia, vel ægritudo tranſeat, ita Chriſtianus ab impiis tanquam phreneticis multa pati debet : Like as parents do ſuffer many things at their ſons hands, while they are children or phrentick till their childiſhneſſe or phrenſie be paſt, &c. thus Chriſtians muſt patiently beare many things of the wicked, as of men taken with phrenſie. Such intemperate and railing ſpeeches then of Papiſts, we attribute either to their childiſh ignorance or phrentick maliciouſneſſe.

Concerning the other accuſations of hereſie, blaſphemie, lying, corruption of Scriptures, and ſuch other, it ſhall appeare I truſt, in this diſcourſe, that they are the men, and none other, that are faulty herein. As for fables, they do us great wrong to caſt them upon us : their owne legend of lies and infinit fabulous ſtories, do plainly tell us, that poperie is fuller of fables, than the hereſies of the Valentinians or the Manichees. Their other charge concerning innovation and diſſention is returned upon themſelves : for who knoweth not, that the Ieſuites of theſe daies, have innovated and changed in the moſt points, the old popiſh profeſſion, and have caſt it into a new mould, and brought in a new forme of Pope-catholik doctrine : But we in ſubſtance retaine the ſame religion, which at the firſt reviving of the Goſpell was maintained 50. yeers agoe by the Proteſtants. As for diſſentions in fundamentall points and articles concerning faith, we have none. In other matters, there have bin ſome contentions among us, more we grant than needed, and more hotly purſued of ſome than was requiſit : yet they are neither in weight ſo great, or in number ſo many, nor ſo egerly proſecuted, as diſſentions among Papiſts have been : for an. 1509. we read that the Franciſcan Fries purſued the poor Dominicks to death : and the contention began about the conception of the Virgin Mary : Fox.p. 802. Such rigour & fiercenes hath not yet bin ſeen among the Proteſtants, neither (I truſt) ever ſhal.

But in ſaying that Proteſtants are Idolaters, they make too leaud a lie : for it is well knowne unto them, that we have no images or Idols of braſſe, wood ſtone, ſilver at all in our Churches, as they have, nor any pictures, carved, painted or graven, ſet up to be worſhipped : If two men ſhould be ſet before us : the one lifteth up his eies to heaven, and calleth upon the name of God, having no ſimilitude or reſemblance before him, the other praieth before a ſtock or ſtone Image : is any man ſo ſenſleſſe, as to ſay the other is an Idolater, rather than this ? But thus blind and ſottiſh are the Papiſts in their judgements. Take heed ye Engliſh Pope-catholiks, do you not ſe, how your ghoſtly fathers go about to make fooles of you ? Now then, to the intent our adverſaries ſlanderous mouths ſhould be ſtopped, and their falſhood deſcried, I have given a ſeverall taſte in this work, in every kind of their fraudulent dealing with us, and of their unſeemly behaviour, and ungodly ſhifts, which they uſe in oppugning of the truth, and defence of their bad cauſe. The whole book I have divided into 4. parts, ſhewing the foure principall pillars of Papiſtry, and every pillar containeth divers parts beſide, as it is ſet forth in the title of this book : the third edition of this book was herein inlarged more than the two former ; every where I added more particulars, for the proofe of the argument handled, but eſpecially in the 3. part of the firſt pillar, where I at large examined the decrees fathered upon the Biſhop martyrs of Rome ; and ſhewed them to bee forged : likewiſe in the third part of the 2. pillar ; where our adverſaries charge us with twentie ſeverall hereſies : I out of their owne Canons confirmed thoſe doctrines, which they call hereſies : and beſtowed upon them twentie hereſies more, that is, fortie in all : alſo in the third part of the 3. pillar, I did out of their owne Canons overthrow their ſubtill ſophiſticall diſtinctions, and in the 4. pillar throughout, I added 260. contradictions more at the leaſt, but eſpecially I laid open the diſſonance and diſagreement of their owne Canons and conſtitutions. This I performed in the third edition : and in the fourth this Reader ſhall find divers additions throughout, with an anſwer to certaine objections of a popiſh Caviller here and there inſerted in the margen. I truſt, throughout this treatiſe, that our adverſaries ſhall not juſtly challenge me for the dealing untruly or deceitfully with them, ſeeing I have ſet downe their ſayings and opinions, as I find them, quoting the places, and citing the authors whence I have them (ſo that I doubt not to ſay with Auguſtine : Ego omnia, quod bona fide coram Deo dixerim, ſine ullo ſtudio contentionis, ſine aliqua dubitatione veritatis, ſine aliquo præjudicio diligentioris tractatus expoſui : I truſt I may ſay with a good conſcience before God, that I have ſet downe all things without deſire of contention, or doubting of the truth, and without prejudicing other mens more exact labours herein. If ſometime I ſhall ſeeme to ſpeak ſomewhat roundly or ſharply, I hope the diſcreet reader will judge it to be done not without cauſe, and to ſay, as that good father in like caſe : Novi fratrem meum, ſi quid in diſputatione pro fide ſua dixit ferventius, non illa contumacia, ſed fiducia dicenda eſt : I know if our brother be ſometime fervent and hot, in the defence of faith, that it proceedeth not of contumacie, but his full reſolution in the truth.

Lib. 2. de Gen. cap. 29.

Auguſt. ep. 147.

Concerning our adverſaries, I would have them think, that I have undertaken theſe labours for their good, if they could ſo conſtrue it, that ſeeing now the nakedneſſe of their cauſe, they may at the length be better adviſed: we have not caſt off all love and care of our enemies: we ſay of them, as Epiſt.106. Auguſtine did ſometime of Pelagius the hereticke: Nos non ſolum diligimus, ſed dileximus eos, ſed aliter nunc diligimus, aliter aliquando dileximus, tunc, quia nobis rectæ fidei videbantur, nunc ut ab errore liberentur: We both love them now, and loved them before, but otherwiſe now than before; then we loved them, becauſe we thought they were of a right faith: but now wee love them, to the end they might be delivered from error. Now unto my brethren of the ſame faith and religion, thus much I ſay, that whatſoever blaſphemies, hereſies, abſurdities, they read here to be affirmed and maintained by Papiſts, they would take no offence therby, nor ſeem to ſtum- Aug.tract.in Iohn.6. ble therat: Sed facite inde quod fecit Dominus, cum illi obtulerunt amarum potum, guſtavit & reſpuit, ſic vos audite & abjicite: But do ye as Chriſt did, when they offered him vineger to drink, he taſted and refuſed it: ſo give you the hearing and reading of theſe things, but in judgement caſt them away, and reject them.

Thus I have by the Lords aſſiſtance, finiſhed my taske, and ended my travell for this time: I will now ſit me downe a while and reſt my weary pen, and give place to others. This I have done, partly to diſcharge my dutie to God, and debt to his Church; partly to provoke others by this example to put forth their talent; who for skill are more able, for their leiſue more fit, for outward helps have better incouragement, and in reſpect of their reward are more bound: I would we might now at the length ſpare our ſelves at home, and forbeare to provoke one another by writing, and joyne our ſtrength againſt our common adverſary. If our wits want whetting, our pens exerciſe, our bodies labour, our adverſaries abroad can and will afford us worke enough: we need not hew one another. Let us do as Moſes did, ſlay the Ægyptian, it is not ſeemly for one Hebrew to ſtrive with another. The timber that muſt make the houſe, ſhall be prepared and hewen in the field, Prov. 24.27. when it commeth to be ſet together, not ſo much as the noiſe of an hammer ſhould be heard, as wee read of Salomons Temple: ſo we ſhould labour to hew and cut off popiſh ſuperſtition and corruption of manners as in the field abroad, but we ought to build peaceably, and without noiſe Auguſtine. among our ſelves. One ſaith well, Omnia alia bona, aurum, argentum, divitiæ dividi poſſunt; non poteſt dividi (pacem meam do vobis:) All other goods, gold, ſilver, riches may bee divided; this inheritance onely cannot be divided, my peace I leave with you: And therefore, ſaith he, Chriſtus noluit fieri judex ad diviſionem: Chriſt refuſed to be a judge or divider of the inheritance. God grant that wee may at the length learne, as carefull children, or faithfull ſtewards, to keepe whole Chriſts inheritance lent unto us, that rich patrimonie of brotherly love aud peace: that wee may one yeeld to another in the truth, every one to ſtudie to amend what is amiſſe, and all joyne together to ſeek Gods glorie.

Thus ſhall we be ſure to embrace and enjoy peace: for what elſe is the cauſe of contention among Bernard. epiſt.127. us: Niſi (as one ſaith) quia diſplicet mortalibus angelica illa partitio quia gloria Deo, pax hominibus nunciatur: quonam modo ſtabit pax hominum coram Deo, ſi Deo apud homines non poteſt tuta eſſe ſua gloria? Becauſe mortall men like not that Angelicall partition, when they pronounced glorie unto God, and peace in earth: for how can the peace of men ſtand in force before God, when Gods ſpirit is not kept ſafe and ſound amongſt men? This then is the way to procure peace, and to nouriſh it, to remove and avoid diſſention, every one in his ſeverall place and calling to labour to amend what is amiſſe, to reſtore what is decaied; to ſupply what is wanting, and to redreſſe what is out of order, and ſo to ſeek chiefly to advance Gods glorie. Thus ſhall wee have peace at home and peace abroad, our diſſentions ſhall ſlake within, and by our peace, our ſtrength and courage ſhall increaſe againſt our enemies without. We ſhall run upon them as one man; ten ſhall chaſe an hundred, and an hundred a thouſand. Thus the Goſpell by Gods grace ſhall ſtill flouriſh in this land, ſuperſtition ſhall decreaſe and weare away, and poperie ſhall bee weeded and rooted out: which God grant for his welbeloved and onely begotten Sonnes ſake Ieſus Chriſt our Lord: to whom be praiſe for ever. Amen.

THE FIRST PILLER OF POPERIE, CONSISTING OF INTEMPERATE RAYLING, WITH SHAMEFULL ſLANDERS AND UNTRUTHS.

WHat our purpoſe is in this treatiſe following, we have already partly declared in the Preface: that our intent is not in this enterpriſe ſo much to charge our adverſaries with ſuch matter, as may be juſtly objected againſt them, as to diſcharge our ſelves of ſuch unjuſt crimes, as they doe burthen us withall: not to accuſe, but to excuſe: not to fight, but to fence: not to dare them with our darts, but to arme our ſelves againſt their venemous arrows, which they ſhoot at us: and here I ſay with Saint Hierome: Vulneratus nequaquam contra perſecutorum tela direxi, ſed meo tantum vulneri admovi manum: Being wounded, I will not ſmite the ſtriker againe, but lay mine hand upon mine owne ſoare. Hier. ad Ruffin. Wheras therfore they every where almoſt in their books and pamphlets, do lay ſore unto our charge, that we are railers, revilers, liers, blaſphemers, hereticks, cavillers, ſophiſters, divided into many ſects and ſchiſmes, diſagreeing amongſt our ſelves: our beſt and ſafeſt way to free and deliver both us and our cauſe from theſe ſo unjuſt, untrue, and uncharitable accuſations, is to returne them upon themſelves, to whom they doe more properly belong: and to cloath them with their owne liverie, which will fit more comely, without pleat or wrinkle upon their back.

Firſt of all therefore, according to that order which we have ſet downe, we will trie and examine the modeſtie, ſobrietie and temperance of their ſpirit, wherewith they are inflamed againſt us. Firſt, of their reviling and bitter ſpeech: then of their malicious ſlanders againſt us, and our cauſe: thirdly, of their forgeries: fourthly, of the manifold untruths, which in plaine engliſh are no better than lies, which they are not aſhamed in heaps to utter. Firſt, then concerning their contumelious and reproachfull ſpeeches, and their adders tongues which they ſmite and ſting us withall: I would wee might ſay unto them, as Auguſtine ſometime did unto Vincentius, a young malapert ſpringall, that unſeemly taunted that reverend father in his writings: Si quid inter diſputandum (ſaith Auguſtine) quod ad meam contumeliam redundat expreſſit non enim convitiantis volunte crediderim, ſed diverſa ſentientis neceſſitate feciſſe: ubi enim hominis erga me animus ignotus eſt & incertus, melius arbitror meliora ſentire, quam inexplorata culpare: If any thing fall out in diſputation, which may redound unto my reproach, I thinke that he did it not ſo much with a mind to revile me, as being enforced by diverſitie of opinion: for where a mans mind is unto me uncertaine and unknowne, I hold it better to thinke the beſt, than to blame what I know not, &c. So if our adverſaries were carried away onely in the heat of their cauſe, and with a blind zeale of ſuperſtition, when they ſpit ſuch venemous words at us, and had not a ſpeciall purpoſe (as wee have, but too much experience) in ſo doing to maligne the truth, and diſgrace the profeſſors thereof, we ſhould be able better to brooke their ſpeeches, and to beare their outrages, than now, knowing the contrarie, we either can or will. This then is that, that ſometimes thruſteth us forward, when we ſee not ſo much our perſons to be ſtricken and gauled with their tongues, as the truth to be wounded through our ſides, to ſpeak home unto them, and to tel them their owne; not reviling, but reproving; not taunting, but telling them their fault and follie. Creſconius an Archdonatiſt, doth roundly take up Auguſtine, becauſe hee uſed theſe words againſt them: Sicut non poteſt Satanus Satanam excludere, &c. As Satan (ſaith he) cannot drive out Satan, ſo the error of the Manichees cannot overthrow the error of the Donatiſts. Auguſtine anſwereth very well: Quaſi (inquit) Petilianum Satanæ comparaverim, ac non errorem potius: Apoſtolica enim manſuetudo, cum quibus modeſte agi præcepit, eos ipſos docet à diabolo captivatos: nec tamen quam commendavit, amiſit lenitatem quia eam (quam docebat) tacere noluit veritatem: As though (ſaith he) I compared Petilian himſelfe to Satan, and not his error rather: for ſo the Apoſtle doth ſay, that even they, whom notwithſtanding hee wiſheth to bee gently dealt withall, were captived and ſnared of the devell: neither did he in ſo ſaying, offend againſt that lenitie, which he commendeth, while he uttered the truth, which was not to bee concealed, &c. Thus Auguſtine defended himſelfe, by Saint Pauls example, and ſheweth though it bee not lawfull to ſpeake evill or to revile, yet freely to open our mouthes, and to crie out againſt the enemies of the truth, it is not forbidden. Bernard a later writer, and and one of their Catholike Doctors, as they take it, (though in truth in moſt points in controverſie between us,he is more ours,than theirs)he uſed the like libertie of ſpeech in his daies,and thought he Serm.ſup. Cantic.33. offended not: as inveying againſt the Clergie of his time, he ſaith: Miniſtri ſunt Chriſti, & ſerviunt Antichriſto: They are the miniſters of Chriſt, and yet ſerve Antichriſt. Yea of the Biſhops themſelves and the chiefe of the Clergie, he doubteth not to ſay, having firſt rehearſed thoſe words of Chriſt to Serm.ad paſtor.in Synod. his Apoſtles: Have I not choſen you twelve, and one of you is a devill? Sic facit Ieſus hodie, eligens ſibi multos diabolos Epiſcopos: Even ſo doth Jeſus (ſaith he) now a dayes, chuſing many devils to bee Biſhops.

Epiſt.45. He ſtaieth not here, but climbeth up even unto the Popes chaire: Triſtes vidimus, triſtes eloquimur honorem eccleſiæ, Honorij tempore non minimè læſum: We have ſeen it with griefe, and we ſpeak it with griefe, that in Pope Honorius time, the honour of the Church was not a little endamaged.
And in another place finding fault with the Cardinals of Rome, that they had fetcht Eugenius out of Epiſt.147. his cloyſter, and of an Abbot, made him a Pope: he taunted them in theſe words: Aſcendit Ierichò, incidit in latrones: He is gone up from Jeruſalem to Jericho, he is falne among theeves: thus comparing Rome to Jericho, and the Cardinals to theeves. If Bernard then a Doctor of their owne, could aſſume unto himſelfe ſuch libertie of ſpeech, as to terme evill miniſters, the ſervants of Antichriſt, Biſhops devils, Cardinals theeves, in hatred and deteſtation of the corruptions of thoſe times: I thinke we may be excuſed, if for love and zeale of the truth,we deale plainly many times with our adverſaries, and do not flatter them a whit: though I thinke few or none of us have uſed like freeneſſe of ſpeech, as either Auguſtine againſt the hereticks of that age, or Bernard againſt the corruptions of his time.
Harding defenſ.apolog. pag.52. Therefore to conclude this point, we ſay, as not long ſince a darling of their owne ſaid, yet with better right and more truly, I am ſure than he: Now the law of upright dealing ſpecially in Gods cauſe ſo requiring, ye muſt pardon us, if as among husbandmen, we call a rake a rake, a ſpade a ſpade, a mattock
» a mattock: ſo among Divines, we call hereſie hereſie, and likewiſe falſhood, lying, ſlaundering, » craft, hypocriſie, blaſphemie, every ſuch crime by his proper name without all gloſing.

» But leaving off here in this place further to make apologie, or to ſeeke defence in this point for our ſelves, which were a needleſſe and ſuperfluous labour, the writings of our learned and godly brethren are abroad to be ſeene and read: I truſt they ſhall be found neither to ſavour of ſo envious a ſpirit, nor to bee mixed with ſuch intemperate and undigeſted humours, as our adverſaries writings are ſawced and powdred withall. Wee will now proceed (not further keeping the reader in ſuſpenſe, to collect ſome flowers of popiſh eloquence and Rethoricke, which their books are beautified, and adorned withall.

First, we will bee ſo bold as walke into our countrie man M. Hardings garden, and there a little refreſh our ſelves with the pleaſant ſent of his ſweet ſmelling hearbs. And here in the very entrance, I find a noſegay alreadie gathered to my hand by that skilfull and cunning gardener, not in name but in Preface in defenſ.apol. deed, B. Iewell: let us take up this poſey, and ſmell a little thereon: Maſter Harding therefore writing againſt Biſhop Iewell, cloyeth and overchargeth them with theſe and ſuch like ſweet ſpeeches: Who ever heard ſuch an impudent man? a moſt impudent lyer, and a wicked ſlanderer: and all becauſe he ſaid

2. Againe: Who ever ſaw ſo impudent a man, what ſhall I ſay to this fellow? fie for ſhame man, a miniſter of fables, a miniſter of lyes? fooliſh ignorance, ſhameleſſe malice, ſo ignorant, ſo witleſſe, lewd wretches, Iewiſh, Heatheniſh, ſhameleſſe, blaſphemous villaines, falſe miniſters, falſe harlots, ye lie falſly, yea, ye lie for advantage, ye are impudent liers, lewd liers, heaps of lies, nothing but lies, and all is lies. But what is the cauſe thinke you, that this meeke ſpirited man ſhould be ſo diſquieted and make ſuch outcryes againſt lyers? forſooth becauſe Biſhop Iewell in one place leaveth out (enim) in another place (hoc) in in another place, the Printer ſet downe ſchemate, for ſciſmate, and ſuch like: Is not here great cauſe

Qui mendacii alterum criminaris, deſinas ipſe mentiri: He that chargeth others with lying, muſt leave off to lie himſelfe: ſo ſhould Maſter Harding have done.

Is not this a ſweet noſegay (thinke you) and is it not compounded of choice flowers? the ſent is ſo ſtrong to my ſmell, that I cannot chuſe but ſtop my noſe: Niſi, as Bernard ſaith, omnium paſſim naribus injecto fœtore, ſolus diſſimulem peſtem, nec audeo naſum contra peſſimum putorem propria manu munire:
Unleſſe, as he ſaith, the ſtinke ſmelling ſtrong in every mans noſe, I onely ſhould diſſemble the matter, and not dare to fenſe my noſe with mine owne hand againſt the contagious ſmell, &c. But let us have patience a little, and paſſe along, to ſee what ſtore of ſuch ſweet ſmelling flowers M. Hardings garden will afoord us.

Defenſ.Eccl. Angle.3. Biſhop Iewell ſaith, that many Kings and Princes are fallen away from the Sea of Rome, and have joyned themſelves to the Church of God.

4. Pag. 42. This is his heatheniſh heart, what could Porphurie, or Iulius, or Celſus ſay more? becauſe

5 Pag. 85. We take you to be mad: would God you were not worſe than mad: were you mad, you ſhould be tied up: Elſe were you ſuffered to goe abroad, for feare folke would flie from you, and then ſhould you doe little hurt. So Hierome reporteth of Paula that vertuous matron, Quod præ nimio fervore quibuſdam videretur inſana, & cerebrum ejus contovendum: That for her great zeale ſome deemed her to be mad, and that her braine had need be ſetled, &c. but ſhe anſwered for her ſelfe, as we doe in the like caſe, that as we are charged with madneſſe for the love of the truth, ſo our Saviour Chriſt of his owne kinſfolks was thought to be beſide himſelfe, and therefore they went about to ſhut him up.

Epitaph. Paulæ.

6 Pag. 145. How ſay you ſir Miniſter Biſhop, ought the miniſter to be lawfully called?

7 Pag. 146. Touching the exerciſe of your miniſterie, you doe all things without order: unleſſe yee meane ſuch order, as Theeves obſerve among themſelves in diſtribution of their robberies.

8 Pag. 153. If he were ſo fooliſh to thinke ſo, yet you M. Iewel in that behalfe ſhould not beare the bable with him: ſpeaking of Nilus a Greeke writer, a learned man and a reverend Biſhop. But here I anſwer M. Harding, as Hierome doth Vigilantius, Si omnes tecum fatui ſunt, ſapiens quis eſſe poterit: If all were fooles, whom you call fooles, we ſhould have but a few wiſe men.

9 Pag. 162. You ſhew your ſelfe to be a man of evill diſpoſition, no man ever ſaid it, but Illyricus or bawdie Bale: Namely, that Pope Zoſimus corrupted the Councell of Nice, the truth whereof notwithſtanding is prooved by B. Iewel out of the Aphricane Councell cap. 101. 102. 103. Concil. Carthag. 6. c. 4. Concil. Florentin. ſeſſ. 20.

10 Pag. 164. You are errant ſlaunderous liers: how ſeemeth not this wicked generation to ſpring of the devill: becauſe M. Iewel ſaith, by the teſtimonie of Alphonſ. de caſtro. Sabellic. Plantina, and others, that Pope Liberius was an Arrian heretike.

11 Pag. 189. This ſir defender learned in the ſchoole of Satan, and now lieth bound in Satans fetters.

12 Pag. 201. Their Biſhops for cuſtodie of their chaſtitie after their former old yoke-fellowes deceaſe, ſolace themſelves with new ſtrumpets.

13 Pag. 209. Of what ſmall ſubſtance this reaſon is, the veryeſt Coblers of all their Miniſters, if they can read any Engliſh beſide their communion booke, may eaſily perceive. B. Iewel telleth Harding, hee might have remembred, that not long ſince Iulius the ſecond, of a wherriſlave was made Pope: but we have no coblers in the miniſterie.

14 Pag. 290. Mauger the malice of the devill and of all the ſacramentaries, the old truth ſhall prevaile: he meaneth the converſion and tranſubſtantiating (as hee calleth it) of the bread and wine in the ſacrament, into the very body and blood of Chriſt. But this is no truth at all, neither old, nor ancient: confeſſed by D. Tunſtall to have come in twelve hundred yeeres after the Goſpell: as in that place it is manifeſtly prooved.

15 Pag. 297. Now ſir, I report me to every man that hath ſenſe, whether I may not lawfully give you the »
Menti, as for manners ſake I may uſe the Italian terme, and challenge you in plaine termes of a lie for uttering this untruth: and yet there is no untruth uttered: ſee the place. »

16 Pag. 313. It liked your filthie ſpirit, with vile words to bring that holy myſterie into contempt: wherein you do the Devill, author of all hereſies, the greateſt ſervice that may be deviſed: becauſe with Origen he had affirmed that the bread in the ſacrament, as touching the materiall ſubſtance thereof, goeth into the bellie, and is caſt into the privie. Here M. Harding much forgetteth himſelfe, with ſuch vile termes to ſlander us: for they ſhew a filthie ſpirit that uſe filthie words, and not the blaſphemed, but the blaſphemer, the reviler, not the reviled, doe the devill the greateſt ſervice: for as Hierome well ſaith: apud Chriſtianos, non qui patitur, ſed qui facit contumeliam, miſer eſt: among Chriſtians, not hee that ſuffereth, but he that offereth reproch, is the vile and miſerable man.

Hieron. Tranquillino.

17 Pag. 342. The things, which it liketh your Satanicall ſpirit, with blaſphemous words to diſhonour: he meaneth the ſacrament, which indeed is by them moſt of all abuſed and diſhonored.

18 Pag. 359. He calleth us curſed Cananites.

19 Pag. 187. Ye falſely and wickedly leade the people, ye are Apoſtataes, ye are heretiks, ye are impudent and rebellious children.

20 Pag. 404. Theſe defenders in conditions be like ſuch honeſt women, as commonly wee call Scolds.

21 Pag. 409. Loe a grievous and an heavy caſe, that the world calleth you wicked and ungodly men: Iwis, they be too blame for it, and ſo be they that call them theeves, which come to be promoted to Tiberne.

22 Pag. 446. Your impudencie of lying hath no meaſure nor end.

23 Pag. 459. The fiends of hell were not yet let looſe, that begat Lutherans, Zuinglians, Calviniſts: your Church is no other but the malignant Church, and Synagogue of Satan.

24 Pag. 465. Though the defender feare not to be accounted a lyer, yet ſhould he be loth to be accounted an unhoneſt man, you and ſpecially a foole.

25 Pag. 502. We recken not, what Luther ſaith, what Zuinglius, what Calvine, what Antichriſt, what Satan ſaith.

26 Pag. 506. If this defender were compared to a mad dog, ſome perhaps would thinke it an unmannerlie compariſon, let the man be as he is, verily the manner and faſhion of both is alike.

27 Pag. 510. He calleth us light preachers, wicked vowbreakers, lewd lecherous lurdens, deteſtable blaſphemers: ſuch is your devilliſh rabble, ſaith he: This is M. Hardings eloquence.

28 Pag. 524. O thou captaine lyer: O moſt worthy not the reward of a wheſtone, but the judgement of a backbiter, backbiter, of a ſlanderer, of a curſed ſpeaker, of the accuſer of the brethren, of a blaſphemer. Canſt thou perſwade thy ſelfe to get credit by lying, to ſeeme ſober by rayling, honeſt by villanie, charitable by ſlandering? And all this ſtirre is, becauſe we charge them with burning of ſcriptures: which their ungodlie practices here in England doe notoriouſly ſhew to bee true. And ſee here, how this unſhamefaſt man chargeth ſo reverent, ſo modeſt, ſo worthie a prelate with railing, villanie, ſlandering, whereas all theſe are to be found more truly in himſelfe, ſo that we may juſtly complaine with that learned father: quid poſſumus facere ſi unuſquiſque ſe putat juſtè facere, quod facit, & videtur ſibi remorderi potiùs, quàm mordere: What a world is this, that every man thinketh he doth well that he doth: and that he is backbited, when himſelfe is the backbiter.

Hieron. ad Ruffin.

29 Pag. 549. He ſheweth himſelfe a foole, a ſlanderer, an unlearned man.

30 Pag. 576. Here pricketh forth this haſtie defender, as peart as a pearemonger, and faine would talke with the Pope himſelfe.

31 Pag. 602. Ye cannot abide ſalt, water, oyle, the croſſe: And no marvell: No more cannot the devill, who poſſeſſeth you, and rideth you.

32 Pag. 607. It ſhould have become Scoggin, Patch, Jolle, Harry Pattenſon, or Will Sommer, to have told this tale much better than your ſuperintendentſhips: And if yee would needs have plaied the part your ſelves, it had been more convenient to have done it upon the ſtage, under a vices coat, than in a booke &c.

And all this, becauſe their practices in ſeducing the people of God, are compared to Ierobeams, who entiſed the people from the true worſhip of God at Jeruſalem, by ſetting up two golden calves.

Pag. 616. When were ever ſuch theeves in the Church of God as yee are?

33 Ibid. If all iffes were true, than if heaven fell, we ſhould catch larks. 34 And if a bridge were made betweene Dover and Calleis, we might goe to Boleine a foot, as William Sommer once told King Henry the eight. Becauſe M. Iewel had ſaid, if the Church of Rome cannot erre, the good lucke thereof is farre greater than theſe mens policie: for ſuch is their doctrine and life, that for all them the Church may not only erre, but be utterly ſpoiled, 35 Pag. 617. By your Apoſtaſie yee have done more wickedly, than if yee committed Idolatrie.

36 Pag 648. Sirs, would yee have the common people to come to the generall Councels? Whom meane yee, I pray you? Tinkers and Tapſters, Fidlers and Pipers, ſuch as your Miniſters be? Alas poore ſoules, what ſhould they doe there? for there is no * tinking, nor tipling, nor fidling, nor piping: there they may ſhut up both budgets and mouthes. But here M. Harding need not thus to have upbraided our Miniſters with ſuch ſcoffing and jeſter-like termes, if he had remembred (as M. Iewel telleth him) what Alphonſ. de Caſtro reporteth of the Popes, Conſtat plures Papas adeo eſſe illiteratos, ut grammaticam penitùs ignorent, That many of them were ſo unlearned, that they were ignorant of their grammar.

* Yet in your late Trident chapter there was ſuch tinking of other mens kettles, and tipling off their cups, that two adulterous Popiſh Biſhops came to a ſhamefull end: wherof one was ſlaine with a bore-ſpeare, being found with another mans wife: the other was hanged in a grin laid for him in his muſe, where hee was wont to creep in at a window. Fox pag. 2107.

37 Pag. 680. As I cannot well take an haire from your lying beard, ſo wiſh I that I could plucke malice from your blaſphemous heart.

Neither doth M. Harding here content himſelfe, thus ſpitefully to have entreated the living, calling our Miniſters, Coblers, Tapſters, Tinkers: Miniſters wives, ſober and grave matrons, with him no better than ſtrumpets: But he doth moſt unhoneſtly ſnatch and carpe at the dead, and revile Gods Saints, 38 terming the booke of Acts and Monuments, a huge dunghill of ſtinking Martyrs: Yea, hee preſu-meth to ſit in Gods chaire, wreſting the judgement out of his hand, and giveth ſentence of condem- p.33 39 nation againſt us. The authors and profeſſors of them be dead and rotten in hell fire, with weeping and grinning of teeth: the like judgement looke yee and your fellowes to have if yee repent not. And in another place: After yee have fried and boyled (ſaith he) in rancour and malice againſt the Church, yee are like p.16 to leape into the furnace of hell. But the writer hereof ſhould have remembred Chriſts rule, judge not, pag. 632.
that you be not judged: as for his corrupt and malicious judgement, we paſſe not: he well ſaith, * prima virtus Chriſtiani eſt contemnere hominum judicia: it is the firſt point of Chriſtianitie not to regard the judgement of men. Thus we heare M. Hardings ſugred eloquence: Judge now (good Chriſtian Reader) whether this man have not been well trained up in Satans ſchoole, as hee ſlanderouſly ſaith of us.

* Hieron. ad Pammach. Fox p. 883.

Theſe and ſuch like are M. Hardings flowers, who liſt to take a further view of them, ſhall find them to be collected as into one bundle by B. Iewel: where theſe pleaſant ſorts ſhall be offered to his ſmell: Your deviliſh ſpite, your deviliſh wickednes, your deviliſh villanie, Satan is your ſchoolemaſter, your father the devill: your new Church ſet up by Satan, you are the ſchoole of Satan, children of the devill. A page, a ſlave, a clawbacke of the devill, your reprobate congregation, your confuſed tents of Satan, the novice of the devill. Satans brood, Satan holdeth you captive, yee are faſt bound in Satans fetters, looſe apoſtataes, prophane hel-hounds, your blaſphemies and Sathaniſmes, Calviniſts, Sathaniſts: your wicked Chams brood your damnable ſide, your deviliſh rabble, your congregation of reprobates, your Turkiſh doctrine. As craftie knaves in a comedie, they are Apes, they are Aſſes, with ſuch like, Iewel prefat. defenſ. Apolog.

But leſt we ſhould thinke that M. Harding only hath profited in this blacke and Popiſh Rhetorike, let us ſee alſo the modeſtie of other mens ſpirits, out of that ſchoole. Wee ſhall eaſily find that they are all one womans children, and have had all one ſchoolemaſter, their ſtile and ſpeech is ſo alike.

Bonaventure, a Frier of Loraine diſputing with Wolfgangus, uſed theſe as his beſt arguments: Thou 40 heretike, Iudas, Beelzebub.

Bellarmine, the mildeſt and moſt modeſt child of that crue, yet ſometime ſheweth the badge of his 41 profeſſion: Ab alio ſpiritu Calvinus agitur (ſaith he) ut ſe Valentino opponat, ſic inter ſe dæmonibus col- ” ludentibus: Calvine being moved of another ſpirit, doth ſet himſelfe againſt Valentinus, the Tritheiſt, ” who affirmed that there were three Gods: one devill thus mocking with another. Is not here (thinke ”
you) a gentle reward for Calvine, for oppoſing himſelfe againſt that vile heretike, and maintaining the doctrine of the Trinitie? Is not this to blaſpheme the ſpirit of God, ſpeaking and writing in Calvine in the defenſe of the truth?

Præfat. in 2. contro. de Chriſto.

But what ſay yee to our Rhemiſts, thoſe jolly champions? if any man be deſirous to know their pregnant wits, and eloquent tongues, thus they write:

Annot. in Act. 8. ſect. 10. Simon Magus that ſorcerer had more true knowledge of religion, than the Proteſtants have: he blaſphemed not, as they blaſpheme. 42

They call us Miſcreants, Iam. 5. ſect. 5. and compare us to the impious ſonnes of Cham. Galat. 2. ” ſect. 8. to Cain, Balaam and Core, Iudg. v. 11. 43

Yea with a foule blacke mouth, they are not aſhamed to call Calvin, Beza, Verone, reprobates, 44
Rom. 11. verſ. 33. but thanks be to God, as he well ſaith, aliter hominum malitia, aliter Chriſtus judi- cat, mans malice judgeth one way, and Chriſt another: from their helliſh judgement of us, we appeale to Chriſts heavenly throne.

Hierom. ad Julian.

Thus at the burning of M. Frith, that worthy ſervant of God and bleſſed martyr, D. Cooke moſt un- 45 charitably admoniſhed the people, that they ſhould pray no more for him, than they would for a dog.
Fox pag. 1036.

Now commeth in railing Cochleus, and filleth up the meaſure of this iniquitie, writing thus moſt 46 wickedly of Iohn Hus, I ſay therefore Iohn Hus is neither to be counted holy nor bleſſed, but rather wic- ” ked and eternally wretched: in ſo much that in the day of judgement, it ſhall be more eaſie, not only with the ”
Infidell Pagans, Turks, Tartarians and Iewes, but alſo with the moſt ſinfull Sodomites, and the abominable ” Perſians, which moſt filthie doe lie with their daughters, ſiſters, or mothers: yea alſo with moſt impious ”
Cain killer of his owne brother, with Thyeſtes killer of his owne mother, and the Leſtrygones, and other ”
Anthropophagi which devoure mans fleſh: yea more eaſie with thoſe moſt infamous murderers of infants, ”
Pharao and Herod, than with him. Cochle. lib. 2. hiſtor. Huſſitar. tranſlated by Maſt. Fox, p. 631. ”

I marvell at my heart, that they without horror of conſcience could thus ſpeake or write of the ſer-vants of God, or that the earth did not open under them to ſwallow up ſuch blaſphemers: but whatſo-ever they of blind malice uncharitably ſay or judge of us, here is our comfort, that God judgeth not as man doth: and concerning the faithfull ſervant of God Iohn Huſſe, whoſe blood they unjuſtly ſpilt in earth, and his ſoule falſely condemne to hell, I ſay as Auguſtine in the like caſe of Cyprian: alia eſt ſella terrena, aliud tribunal cælorum, ab inferiore accepit ſententiam, à ſuperiore coronam: there is one throne in earth, another tribunall in heaven, he hath received ſentence below, and a crowne from above, &c.
We need not now thinke it ſtrange that the Rhemiſts charge us with blaſphemie, Revel. 13. ſect. 2. And Harding with ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, becauſe we ſpeake againſt the Pope: This fellow goeth further, making the holy ſervant of God worſe than Cain, than Pharao, than Infidels, or Pagans: I pray God it be not laid to their charge: yet they ſtay not here, neither are content thus to revile our per-ſons, which might better be borne at their hands, but they open their mouth even againſt heaven, and ſpare not to blaſpheme the truth, which we profeſſe. The holy communion, which we obſerve according to Chriſts inſtitution, Harding ſpitefully calleth a leane and carrien banquet, pag. 320.

In Pſalm. 36. cont. 3.

The Rhemiſts ſay, that Calvins ſupper with his bread and wine, which is not his ſupper but Chriſts, is like at length to come to the ſacrifice of Ceres and Bacchus. Iohn 4. ſect. 4. 49

And yet more wickedly they ſay, that our communion is the very table and cup of devils, wherein the 50 devill is properly ſerved, 1 Cor. 10. ſect. 9. But alas ſeelie men, we pittie their caſe: They ſpeake evill (as S. 51 Iude ſaith) of things they know not. If they underſtood (what theſe holy myſteries were) they would, I thinke be more ſparing in blaſpheming. We will not requite them againe with evill ſpeech, Michael durſt not doe it to the devill, but the Lord rebuke them and amend them. And that it may appeare how they are all led with the ſame ſpirit of envie, one Iurgevicius the Popes champion writing againſt 52
Volanus a learned proteſtant, thus in one ſentence woundeth both him and his profeſſion: mendacio.
53. fol. 71. ad veſtrum (ſcelerate ſenex) prophanum panem & poculum ſufficiunt fauces, &c. thou leaud and wicked old fellow, for your prophane bread and cup, the teeth and jawes are ſufficient.

Likewiſe another of that ſide, calleth the Centuriators, which have with great labour and induſtrie 53 collected the Centuries, atheiſts; a ſimple reward for ſo excellent and worthy a worke: Arthur. de invocat. ſanctor. theſ. 91. c. 9.

But to let other paſſe, whoſe curſing and reviling ſpeeches are infinit and too many, as alſo needles to be rehearſed, now in the laſt place I will adjoyne certaine ſhowers of our countriman M. Stapletons eloquence, collected out of his booke ſet forth againſt our worthy and learned countrieman D. Whi- takers, that it may appeare what ſpirit they are of, that with ſuch bitter ſpeech and vile termes do taunt and revile the profeſſors of the Goſpell.

To omit how odiouſly and proudly hee chargeth him with ignorance and want of learning: 54 calling him every where, Doctorem indoctum, unlearned Doctor, and profeſſorem indignum, unworthy profeſſor, not worthy to be admitted to the leaſt degree in ſchooles, lib. 1. c. 2. ſect. 4. Whitakerus quovis tyrone ineptior, more fooliſh than any boy ſcholler or new beginner, lib. 2. cap. 1. ſect. 3. yea hee bluſheth not to call him ſcriptorem barbarum, a barbarous writer. To let paſſe theſe and ſuch like arrogant challenges, which are common with all papiſts who boaſt of themſelves, as of the onely learned and eloquent men, but alas, poore ſoules, it ſeemeth they dwell by evill neighbours, when they are faine to praiſe themſelves. But as for M. Stapleton, he is foully overſeene, in charging ſo worthy a man with want of learning, whoſe bookes hee is ſcarce worthy in reſpect of true learning to carrie after him. And if the queſtion be of eloquence, this Lovanian Doctors writing is but a kind of barking in reſpect of the others, either for ſmoothnes of ſtile, or good phraſe of ſpeech. And concerning both theſe, namely the choice of the words for the phraſe, and the placing of them for the ſtile, I cannot give Maſter Stapleton a fitter commendation, than Hierome beſtoweth upon Ruffinus and Iovinian. Firſt concerning the phraſe he thus writeth: Tam putidè & confuſe loquitur, ut plus ego in reprehendendo laborem, quàm ille in ſcribendo, &c. Hee ſpeaketh ſo groſſely and confuſedly, that a man may eaſily take more paine in mending, than he did in making: and for the ſtile, hee that readeth that Lovanian profeſſors diſcourſe, may remember what Hierome ſaith of Iovinian his manner of writing: quotieſcunque eum legero, ubicunque me defecerit ſpiritus, ibi eſt diſtinctio, totum incipit, totum pendet ex altero: when I reade him, I find no diſtinction with a breath: every ſentence is a beginning, and every thing hangeth and is continued together.

Apol. 2. cont. Ruffin.

Adverſ. Iovinian.

But to returne to our countryman Stapletons Rhetorike: and to let paſſe theſe before rehearſed, as 55 the moſt mild and courteous termes he hath, this eloquent Lovanian profeſſor thus ſetteth upon that reverent and learned man, thus ſaying unto him, Miniſter Sathanæ effectus, profeſſor perfidus, magiſter mendax & impudentiſſimus: Thou art become a miniſter of Satan, a faithleſſe or forſworne profeſſor, a lying and moſt impudent teacher. Admonit. ad Whitaker. Profeſſor aſinine. Aſſe-head profeſſor, l. 1. cap. 1. ſect. 12 He lyeth for the whetſtone. Facis mendacium cote dignum, cap. 2. ſect. 6. abſurditas Aſinina adverſarii, His aſinine abſurditie, lib. 1. cap. 7. ſect. 3. Ineptiſſimus diſputator, Moſt fooliſh diſputer: ibid. ſect. 9. Fatuus ruſticus. A clowniſh or ruſticall foole. cap. 12. ſect. 4. Stultiſſimus. A very foole. ibid. Sophiſta impudens, An impudent Sophiſter. lib. 2. cap 5. ſect. 10. Barbara impudentia, His barbarous impudencie. cap. 7. ſect. 6 He playeth the ſycophant. cap. 8. ſect. 4. Stultiſſime ſophiſta, Moſt fooliſh ſophiſter. cap 9. ſect. 1. Diſputator abſurdiſſime, Moſt abſurd diſputer. Ibid. ſect. 8. Mentiendi conſuetudo in naturam tibi verſa, Your cuſtome of lying is become your verie nature. cap. 10. ſect. 1. What could be ſaid more of the devill? Hebetudinis tuæ & tarditatis, &c. Your dulneſſe and blockiſhnes, &c. ſect. 10. Mentiendi libido vel neceſſitas, He hath either pleaſure or neceſſitie to lie. ſect. 13. Mendacium rotundum, He maketh a round lie. ſect. 16. Craſſa ignorantia, Groſſe ignorance. lib. 3. cap. 7. ſect. 3. Mendacium ridiculum & morione dignum, A ridiculous lie and fit for a foole. lib. 3. cap. 13. ſect. 1. Mendacium nobile, A noble lie. cap. 14. ſect. 5. Mendacium ſplendidum: ſect. 8. A notable or leaud lie. Mendacium ſtupidum, A blockiſh lie. cap. 16. ſect. 7. Craſſa ſtupiditas, Groſſe blockiſhneſſe, ibid. Stultitia & hebetudo prorſus aſinina, Aſinine fooliſhneſſe and dulneſſe, cap. 19. ſect. 11. Theſe and an hundred ſuch like proper Rhetoricall ſpeeches our good Countriman hath ſent us from Lovaine, to ſhew how he hath profited in popiſh eloquence: and to make up our mouthes, after he hath long dallied in words, in good ſober ſadneſſe, he ſpeaketh thus friendly unto us: Omnium quidem hæreticorum & cæcitas magna eſt, & pertinacia ſingularis, ſed veſtra hodie Whitakere, tua inquam, tuorumque convenarum hæreticorum tum cæcitas tum pertinacia longè maxima eſt. In all heretikes, there is both great blindneſſe and ſingular obſtinacy, but thy blindneſſe Whitakers, and wilfulneſſe, with the reſt of thy fellow-heretikes, paſſeth all. lib. 3. cap. 7. ſect. 5. Wee are much beholding to you, good countriman, Father, Thomas Stapleton, that worthie Lovanian profeſſor, (for wee will give you your titles) though that worthy man be but plaine Whitakers with you, that you can find in your heart to give us the upper hand in blindneſſe and wilfulneſſe of all heretikes that ever were: But Gods curſe will light upon all ſuch heretikes, as are more wilfully blind and obſtinate againſt the truth than Papiſts be.

The true and juſt commendation of Doctor Whitaker.

But here I would adviſe our countriman to bethinke himſelfe what hee hath done, and whom hee hath railed upon: namely a man as unworthie of thoſe taunts and ſlanders, as any man he could have written againſt: whom, while he lived, was knowne to be a man both learned, and of a moſt meeke and humble ſpirit withall: no lyer, but a lover of the truth, of a vertuous and godly life: in his readings exact, grave in his ſermons, in his diſputations earneſt, ſtrong in argument, readie in his utterance, pithie in writing, ſound in counſell, familiar in conference, wiſe for direction of ſtudie, an encourager of the good, a preferrer of the learned, and rewarder of the painfull: and what more can I ſay of him, as he was in his life, ſo he ſhewed himſelfe in his end: while he lived, in good actions fervent, in his ſicknes patient, in death confident, and now in heaven triumphant: Therefore I ſay unto M. Stapleton, as Hierome in the like caſe, non facilis eſt venia prava dixiſſe de rectis: it is no ſmall fault to ſpeake evill of the good, and perverſely of the righteous: and againe with S. Ambroſe, ſi pro otioſo verbo ratio poſcitur, quanto magis pro ſermone impietatis pœna exolvitur? if for every idle word account ſhall bee required, how much greater puniſhment for wicked reviling ſpeech is like to be endured?

Hieron. Aſella.
Lib. offic. 1. c. 1.

And yet a little further to anſwer in a word to this Lovanian Doctor, who chargeth, as wee have ſeene, this godly learned man, with foure eſpeciall crimes, ignorance, follie, impudencie, lying.

M. Stapleton herein ſheweth himſelfe neither ſo deepe a clarke, nor ſo wiſe a man, or of ſo ſober a ſpirit as hee would bee taken for. As for the firſt, his, which the other calleth ignorance, hath been found able, (thanks bee to God) to match and overmatch his Lovanian learning, or ſophiſtrie rather. The fooliſhneſſe of the Goſpell, and ſimplicitie of the truth in him hath not given place to the others humane and ſerpentine wiſedome. Indeed hee was too modeſt, too milde and humble a man to deale with ſo proud, and vaine glorious boaſters. A wrangling Sophiſter had been fitter to anſwer ſuch intemperate and immodeſt rayling, than ſo grave and reverend a divine. But as for lying, take it to your ſelves, both it and the father thereof. There is more truth found in few of his lines, than in many of the others leaves: and more good divinitie in one page, than is in that whole booke. And have you been theſe foure yeeres in hatching ſo goodly a bird, and bringing forth a Cockatrice egge? Surely you have ſpent your time well. And bee theſe the fruits of your ſtudies? Well, ex unguibus Leonem: by ſuch fruits wee know what the tree is; what need other arguments? your uſuall and cuſtomarie railing bewrayeth your malicious ſpirit. I will omit here to make mention of another rayling Romiſh Rabſakeh, who hath thus powred out his venemous gall of bitter words againſt my ſelfe, calling mee a notable lyer and falſour, filthie Doctor, ſhameleſſe mate, malicious Miniſter, charging mee often, with abominable, palpable, ſhameleſſe, notorious, malicious lies: whereas he is not able to convince mee of one lie, or untruth. But I will bee ſparing in rehearſing theſe things, being aſhamed to repeat that which they bluſh not to write: I have ſet downe a catalogue of ſuch ſtuffe, and ſummed them together els*where. Neither will I offend the Readers eares with ſuch like virulent termes uſed by another, not forbearing the ſweet words of impoſtor, Machivell, falſour, inſolent, diſhoneſt, foole, gooſe, and ſuch like: I will be ſilent herein, both becauſe I have made my apologie alreadie, but moſt of all for that a ſecond replie of like bitterneſſe, being offered by the ſame author to the preſſe, was ſuppreſſed by prudent [a] and grave authoritie, and (though ſurreptitiouſly allowed before) by the diſcreet and friendly endevour of [b] ſome, to whom I acknowledge my ſelfe much bound, both for their pietie in ſtaying of domeſticall contentions, which might breed ſcandall, and for their love in not ſuffering his name to bee traduced who deſireth to be peaceable.

* In the preface to the Refection printed, an. 1603. The Lord Archb. of Canturb. The Lord B. of London. D. Mocket. D. Barkam,

But to returne where I left: tell mee yee popiſh pettifoggers, which have nothing more common in your mouthes, than to call us aſſes, doults, fooles, how can you eſcape that heavie ſentence of our Saviour, which ſaith, that who ſo calleth his brother foole, is in danger of hell fire? Mat. 5. But it is no new thing for heretikes to raile and revile: it hath ever been their cuſtome and guiſe: The Pelagians called Auguſtine, Cultorem dæmonum: a worſhipper of devils. Auguſt. cont. Iulian. l. 3. c. 18. The Donatiſts accuſed Cecilian a Catholicke Biſhop, of ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt: Aug. cont. Creſcon. l. 4. cap. 17. So it is true as one well ſaith: Hæretici, cum perverſitatis ſuæ non poſſunt reddere rationem, ad maledicta convertuntur: Heretikes, when they find themſelves not able to yeeld a reaſon of their wilfulnes; then they fall to plaine rayling. Such plentie of ſcoffes and taunts, of curſings and revilings, is an evident ſigne of an evill cauſe, and bewrayeth a cankred ſtomacke. We will not anſwer them in the ſame kind; for our cauſe is better, and our malice and hatred much leſſe. It grieveth not us to bee evill ſpoken of without cauſe. We are ſorie for them: they hurt not us, but blemiſh their owne credit before men, and make their account more heavie before God. And as Gregorie well ſaith: quid aliud detrahentes faciunt, niſi quod in pulverem ſufflant, atque in oculos ſuos terram excitant: what elſe doe theſe ſlanderers, but as blow the duſt upon their owne faces; ſo our adverſaries by reviling of us, doe get a blot to themſelves. I will ſhut up this place with that good ſaying of Bernard, Bonum mihi, ſi me dignetur Deus uti pro Clypeo, libens excipio in me detrahentium linguas maledicas, ut non ad ipſum perveniant: It is good for me, if God vouchſafe to uſe me in ſtead of a buckler, I willingly doe latch in my ſelfe the darts of ſlanderous tongues, that they light not upon him.

De conſiderat. lib. 2.

Popiſh ſlanders and falſe accuſations. Part. 2.

NOw in the next place, having taſted ſufficiently of the firſt diſh of their bitter and ſower taunts and reproches, which we have had but a cold welcome unto; let us take an aſſay of the next: And that I feare me, we ſhall find not much pleaſanter. Yet becauſe we will not be unmanerly gheſts, we wil taſte of every diſh. Our adverſaries therefore are not contented to loade us with bitter and unſavoury words; but they doe alſo charge us with fained and deviſed things, accuſing us falſely, and impoſing upon us ſtrange and unknowne articles: who in their ſo doing doe not hurt us, in laying things to our charge, which are altogether untrue, but the ſhame redoundeth upon themſelves: as Origen well noteth upon that ſtory of Moſes and Mariam his ſiſter, Num. 12. who after ſhe had attempted to diſgrace Moſes, was ſtriken with the leproſie, but Moſes is commended of God: videte, quid ſibi pœna cumulerint obtrectatores, quid verò illi, cui obtrectaverant, quæſiverint laudis: ſibi turpitudinem, illi ſplendorem, ſibi lepram, illi gloriam: ſee what puniſhment Moſes backbiters brought upon themſelves, and what praiſe they procured unto him: ſhame to themſelves, renowne unto him, ſhe the leproſie, and he thereby had more glory, &c. Their accuſations then & falſe challenges, are either generall againſt our whole Church, or particular, directed and leavelled againſt ſome ſpeciall men, and both kinds concerning either doctrine or manners of our Church: of theſe in order, and firſt of their accuſations in generall, & vaine ſurmiſes, of our doctrine: and here I will eſpecially follow our Rhemiſts, as before wee made bold with Maſter Harding, who in this caſe are very plentifull.

1 They charge us to ſay; That the Church conſiſteth only of the elect: and that there are no evill men in the Church. Annot. Mat. 3. ſect. 7. & Matth. 22. ſect. 2. Whereas we affirme, that the viſible Church upon earth hath both good and bad in it: but the inviſible Church wee hold to conſiſt of the elect only.

2 Annot. Mat. 19. ſect. 11. That wee ſhould ſay; God can do no more than hee hath done or will doe: which they call blaſphemous infidelitie. Wee ſay no ſuch thing, but only this; that God can do nothing contrary to his owne will, word, and glory, and yet is almightie.

3 Annot. Mat. 23. ſect. 6. That wee teach; It is enough to have onely faith. Wee teach no ſuch thing: we ſay, that faith only juſtifieth, but faith working by love, as Saint Paul ſaith; not void of good works, Galat. 5. 6.

4 That we ſay, the Church hath failed many hundred yeeres, till Luther and Calvin, Annot. Matth. 28. ſect. 2. Whereas we beleeve, that the Church hath alwayes continued, and ſhall continue till the end of the world.

5 That we hold, that it is ſufficient to bee baptized with the holy Ghoſt, and that water is not neceſſary, Annot. Mark. 1. ſect. 5. But we grant that baptiſme with water is neceſſary, if it may bee had according to Chriſts inſtitution: Otherwiſe in thoſe that are prevented by death, wee affirme that the lacke of water cannot deprive them of their inheritance.

6 That wee ſay, all things are eaſie in Scripture, Annot. Luk. 6. ſect. 1. We ſay no ſuch thing: but confeſſe that many things are therein hard to bee underſtood: yet the doctrine of faith to bee in the word plainly declared, ſo that the people may ſafely bee admitted to the reading thereof.

7 That we affirme, the Church may faile in faith. Annot. Luke 18. ſect. 8. We ſay only, that the Church may erre in ſome points of doctrine, but not finally fall away from the faith, Fulke. ibid.

8 That wee pretend, that God draweth us againſt our will, and without any reſpect to our conſent, Ioh. 6. 2. God of unwilling maketh us willing, by changing our will to imbrace Chriſt gladly, and otherwiſe we teach not.

9 That we affirme the holy Ghoſt to be none other, but the gift of wiſdome in the Apoſtles, and a few other for government: Annot. Act. 8. Sect. 7. But none of us ſaith ſo: it is a meere ſlander.

10 That we allow no faſting, but morall temperance, and ſpirituall faſting from ſinne. Act. 13. ſect. 5. Whereas wee doe acknowledge a Chriſtian uſe of faſting and abſtinence from all meats and drinks, for the taming of the fleſh, and making us more fit to pray: not an abſtinence from fleſh only, as they doe ſuperſtitiouſly imagine.

11 That we ſhould ſay, that the preaching of the law, and judgement to come, maketh men hypocrites. Act. 24. ſect. 2. Whereas we hold the preaching of the law to be neceſſary to bring men to repentance: But juſtification by keeping the law, which they teach, we utterly condemne.

12 That wee would have all men to bee preſent, and give voice in Councels. Act. 19. ſect. 5. We ſay not ſo, for that were impoſſible: But wee hold againſt our adverſaries, that as well the learned and diſcreet amongſt the Lay-men, as the Clergie, ought to bee admitted to conſult of religion: And that not onely Biſhops, but other Paſtors alſo and Miniſters ought to have deciding voices in Councels.

13 That wee condemne good workes as ſinfull, phariſaicall, hypocriticall. Rom. 2. ſect. 3. Whereas we acknowledge them to bee the good gifts of God, the fruits of juſtification, the way wherein all Chriſtians muſt walke to ſalvation, wee onely exclude them from being any cauſe of our juſtification before God.

14 Annot. Rom. ſect. 4. That we affirme that God juſtifieth man, that is to ſay, imputeth to him the „ juſtice of Chriſt, though hee bee not indeed juſt: or of favour reputeth him as juſt, when indeed hee is „ wicked, impious and unjuſt: And that wee thinke it is more to Gods glorie, and more to the commendation
„ of Chriſts juſtice, merits and mercie, to call and count an evill man ſo continuing for juſt,
„ than of his grace and mercie, to make him of an ill one, juſt in deed, and ſo truely to juſtifie him, &c.
This is a great ſlander: For wee thinke and ſay; that God of a wicked man, by his grace and mercie, doth make him juſt in deed, by the juſtice of Chriſt, neither calling, nor accounting him juſt that continueth wicked, as hee was before, but giving him alſo the ſpirit of ſanctification, whereby after hee is made juſt by grace, he doth the works of juſtice, and keepeth Gods commandements, though not perfectly in this life. Fulke. ibid.

15 That we gather of thoſe termes, uſed by the Apoſtle, Rom. 4. covered. v. 7. not imputed. v. 8. That the ſinnes of men bee never truly forgiven, but hidden onely. Annot. Rom. 4. ſect. 7. Wee ſay, that our ſinnes are truly forgiven us for Chriſts ſake, and our conſcience freely diſcharged of them, Chriſt having ſatisfied the juſtice of God perfectly for them.

16 That wee teach, that the Sacraments of the Church give not grace and juſtice of faith: but that they bee notes, markes, and badges onely of our remiſſion of ſinnes. Rom. 4. ſect. 8. Wee ſay not, that they are onely markes and badges, but as the Apoſtle ſaith, ſeales of God to aſſure our faith of juſtification by remiſſion of ſinnes: And yet it followeth not, that the ſacraments ſhould give or conferre grace.

17 That to eſtabliſh our fiction of confidence (as they ſcornfully call it) wee make no account of the Articles of the faith; the beleeving whereof onely juſtifieth, they ſay, Annot. Rom. 4. ſect. 9. Whereas wee affirme, that we are juſtified by none other faith, but that which is declared in thoſe Articles, not by a bare knowledge or beleefe of them, that they are true, which the devill hath and many reprobates: but by ſtedfaſt beleeving of them, with a ſure truſt and confidence in Chriſt, whereby wee are made partakers of his precious merits, and aſſured of the remiſſion of our ſinnes.

18 That we ſhould ſay, Man hath no more free will, than a peece of clay, Rom. 9. ſect. 7. Whereas wee only ſay, that our free will hath no power or ſtrength at all, to will, or doe the thing that is good, without the grace of God.

19 That we ſay, the faithfull be ſure they ſhall never ſinne: Rom. 8. ſect. 9. We ſay only, that they are ſure to be preſerved from that ſinne which is irremiſſible, which is the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, and from all ſuch ſinnes, as ſhould hinder their ſalvation.

20 That where the Apoſtle ſaith, It is better to marry than to burne; that the Proteſtants thinke, to burne, is nothing elſe but to be tempted, becauſe they would eaſily picke quarrels to marrie: 1 Cor. 7. ſect. 8. We doe not ſo thinke, that to burne, is only to be tempted, but to be ſo continually inflamed with luſt, that the will alſo and deſire doth conſent.

21 That wee will not have men worke well in reſpect of reward at Gods hand: 1 Corinth. 9. ſect. 7. Wee ſay not ſo; but that men ought not to worke well as hirelings, for hope of reward as merited by their worke; but chiefly and principally, of loving obedience and dutie, as of children to their father.

22 That we ſeeme by abandoning other names of the Communion (ſaving this, calling it a ſupper) to have it at night, and after meat: 1 Corinth. 11. ſect. 8. We retaine other names of this Sacrament beſide, as the Communion, the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, the Euchariſt, and ſuch like: and it is but a vaine conceit, that wee incline to have it at night, when they ſee our uſuall and daily practice to the contrary.

23 They ſay, wee profeſſe, that wee make no conſecration, benediction, or ſanctification of the bread and wine at all in the ſacrament, but let the bread and wine ſtand alooſe: and that wee occupie Chriſts words, by way of report onely and narration, applying them not at all to the elements propoſed to bee occupied: 1 Corinth. 11. ſect. 9. All this is utterly falſe, for wee profeſſe, that by praiſe and thankſgiving for the death of Chriſt, and by prayer unto God, that wee may be partakers of the body and blood of Chriſt, we conſecrate, bleſſe and ſanctifie the bread and wine, to bee the holy and bleſſed Sacraments of the body and blood of Chriſt. And we doe alſo apply the words of inſtitution to the Elements (though not after their Magicall fantaſie) praying thus: That wee receiving theſe creatures of bread and wine, according to Chriſts holy inſtitution, (which is rehearſed out of the Goſpell) in remembrance of his paſſion, may be partakers of his moſt bleſſed body and blood. This is (who ſeeth not) a manifeſt applying of the words to the matter propoſed to be occupied.

24 That wee would make the ſimple beleeve, that no puniſhment of a mans owne perſon, for ſinnes committed, nor penance injoyned by the Church, is neceſſary, but all ſuch things to bee ſuperfluous, becauſe Chriſt hath ſatisfied enough for all: 2 Corinth. 2. ſect. 2. This is a malicious ſlander. Wee affirme indeed, that no puniſhment laid upon any mans perſon, either by himſelfe, or by the Church, is any ſatisfaction to the juſtice of God for our ſinnes, becauſe Chriſt only was able and hath made ſuch ſatisfaction: yet temporall puniſhment, for chaſtiſement, eccleſiaſticall diſcipline for ſatisfaction of the Church, and amendment of open offenders, are neceſſarie by the ordinance of Gods word, and in our Church are practiſed: Fulke. ibid.

25 They ſay, that Luther, Calvin, and ſuch wicked Libertines, as it pleaſeth them to terme us, doe teach, that Contrition is altogether a meane to make ſinners either hypocrites, or to put them in deſpaire. Annot. 2. Corinth. 7. ſect. 3. We ſpeake onely againſt the popiſh opinion of penance, or ſorrow to bee ſatisfactorie for ſinne, and not againſt ſuch ſorrow which worketh true repentance, and true contrition for all their ſinnes paſt.

26 That we refuſe all mans atteſtation and approbation, and will be tried by Scriptures onely: and that we count it a great abſurditie to have the Scriptures approved by the Churches teſtimonie: Galath. 2. ſect. 4. But we affirme no ſuch thing, neither doe we refuſe to be tried by men judging according to the Scriptures. The approbation of the Scriptures by the Church we allow: but we count it a great abſurditie, that the authoritie of the Scripture ſhould depend upon the Churches approbation and triall, which is the thing in queſtion betweene us.

27 That we teach, that the charge of the Apoſtles was ſo diſtinct, that none could preach, or exerciſe juriſdiction, but in thoſe ſeverall places, which by Gods appointment, or their lot for more particular regard of peace, and orders ſake, were limited to every one, Galat. 2. ſect. 6. But we teach contrariwiſe, that every one of the Apoſtles had as large and as generall authoritie, as the other: and that any of the Apoſtles by their commiſſion, might lawfully have preached at Rome, as well as Peter or Paul. But after this diſtinction was made by God, it was not lawfull for the Apoſtles to leave or forſake their ſpeciall charges, and to intrude themſelves into anothers limits, as S. Paul ſaith: wee doe not ſtretch our ſelves beyond our meaſure: 2 Corinth. 10. 14.

28 That wee have no other arguments againſt the reall preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, but ſuch as wee borrow of Ariſtotle and his like, concerning quantity, accidents, place, poſition, dimenſions, ſight, taſte, and other ſtraites of reaſon, to the which they bring Chriſts myſteries. Coloſſ. 2. 1. Wee have other arguments out of holy Scripture, and the ancient writers: Neither have we any arguments out of Philoſophie, but ſuch as are grounded upon the Scriptures, which teach the perfect humanitie of Chriſt, and all eſſentiall properties of a true and naturall bodie.

29 They ſay, wee apply that text of S. Paul: He that will not labour, let him not eate: 2. Theſſ. 3. 2. againſt the vacant life of the Clergie. Annot. in hunc locum. But wee require no ſuch thing, as to labour with the hands, of ſuch of the Clergie, as labour in ſtudie and teaching. Againſt the idle life of Monkes, Nunnes, Friers, and the reſt of that crue, as alſo againſt idle maſſe-prieſts this text is ſtrong.

30 That we hold nothing to be neceſſarie to ſalvation but the Scriptures. 2. Timoth. 3. ſect. 3. We hold no ſuch thing: for ſo we ſhould exclude Chriſt himſelfe as unneceſſarie to ſalvation. But wee affirme, that the Scripture containeth all things neceſſary to be learned to ſalvation, and this is the true ſtate of the queſtion.

31 That wee plainly deny Melchiſedech to have been a Prieſt. Hebr. 7. ſect. 8. Here without ſhame they ſlander us. This wee never denied, neither by Gods grace will ever: though wee affirme, that his Prieſthood conſiſted not in offering of bread and wine: neither doth the Apoſtle, or any text of Scripture ſo teach.

32 They charge us with this hereſie: That Chriſt was not the firſt man that entred into heaven: Heb. 10. ſect. 1. They belie us, to ſay wee hold, that Chriſt was not the firſt man that entred into heaven, with his body or whole humanitie, as the text is, Heb. 10. 20. And that dedicated and prepared a way for all his members to enter into heaven, both with their bodies, and their ſoules: by vertue of whoſe death, all the faithfull from the beginning were received into heavenly reſt in their ſoules.

33 That we will have no difference betweene the laitie and the Clergie, 1. Pet. 5. ſect. 2. It is falſe, which here they object againſt us. We only miſlike their popiſh difference, who doe in ſuch ſort ſet apart their Clergie from the reſt of the people, as though they only were the Lords lot and inreritance, the reſt excluded.

34 That wee ſay, the Scriptures bee ſo eaſie, that they may bee not only ſafely read, but alſo expounded boldly of all the people, as well unlearned as learned: and conſequently, every one by himſelfe, and his private ſpirit, without reſpect of the expoſitions of the learned fathers, or expectation of their paſtors judgement, may determine and make choice of ſuch ſenſe as himſelfe liketh. 2. Pet. 3. ſect. 1. All theſe are great untruthts. Indeed wee doe hold, that the people may ſafely be admitted to the reading of the Scriptures, though wee deny not, but that there are certaine places therein hard to bee underſtood: yet wee give them not libertie to expound Scripture, as themſelves liſteth, not ſtaying for the judgement of their paſtors: For wee plainly proteſt, that whoſoever deſpiſeth the ordinarie miniſtery of the word, which God hath eſtabliſhed in his Church, for the direction of us in the truth, ſhall never attaine unto true knowledge. As for the expoſitions of the fathers, we are ſo farre from rejecting them, where they interpret according to the ſenſe of the Scriptures, that they doe in a manner avow all our interpretations, which you miſlike.

35 That we affirme, that we neither keepe, neither poſſibly can keepe Gods commandements, 1. Ioh. 2. ſect. 7. We ſay not ſo, but that wee cannot keepe them in ſuch perfection, as the juſtice of God requireth, though by his grace we doubt not, but we are enabled in ſuch meaſure to keepe them, as his mercie in Chriſt accepteth, Fulke. ibid.

36 Thus we ſee with how many ſlanders our countrimen of Rhemes doe unkindly charge and load us withall: neither are theſe all: more, who pleaſeth may collect out of that blacke booke of theirs. The want of the reſt, which I have not here ſet downe, I will ſupply out of another countrimans booke of ours, to whom we are much beholding for affoarding of us ſuch plentie of ſo good ſtuffe. Firſt, P. 146. He thus friendly ſaith unto us. If you doe not allow everie man, yea and every woman to bee a Prieſt, why drive yee not ſome of your fellowes to recant, that ſo have preached? Why allow yee the bookes of your new Evangeliſts that ſo have written? An odious untruth: for touching the miniſterie of the Church, wee have none that either have preached ſo, or written ſo, Iewel. defenſ. Apolog. pag. 146.

Harding.

37 That we ſay, all things neceſſary to ſalvation are expreſſed in the Scriptures, pag. 240. But ſo we ſay not: we hold that all things neceſſarie are either in the Scriptures expreſſed, or therein contained, by neceſſarie collection and diduction to be drawne from the ſame.

38 That wee, which ſay wee can by no meanes fulfill the law of God, doe make God unjuſt, evill, impotent, and not able to give ſo much grace, as may helpe to fulfill his law, pag. 368. Wee make not God unjuſt or impotent, but wee confeſſe our ſelves to be ſinners. Neither is the queſtion here, what God is able to doe, but what he hath promiſed: for howſoever God be able, by his abounding grace, to make us perfect in this life, and altogether void of ſinne, as we ſhall bee in the life to come: yet his power is not contrary to his will revealed in his word, which ſaith, that all men have ſinned. And as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curſe.

Rom. 3. 23.
Galath. 3. 9.

39 That we tell Chriſtian men, they may worke as much as they will, but all in vaine, pag. 371. Untruth, for we ſay with S. Paul, your works ſhall not be in vaine in the Lord. Although wee doe exclude them from being any cauſe, or meane of our ſalvation, and that by the warrant of the Scriptures, Rom. 3. 28. Epheſ. 2. 10. and in other places.

40 That we profeſſe, that the faith of the Catholike Church may faile and fall, pag. 493. Wee ſpeake not of the univerſall Catholike Church, but of the Church of Rome, or of any other particular Church, which may faile in faith, as we ſee the Churches of Corinth and Galatia are now thoroughly departed from the faith, and are wholly ſubject to the Turke.

41 That we animate temporall Magiſtrates, by the pretenſed example of David and Salomon, to intermeddle with Biſhops offices, pag. 689. Untruth, it is not our doctrine: But they rather embolden the Pope to meddle with Princes offices. And Bellarmine a great Champion of theirs doth free us from this ſlander, who confeſſeth of us, that we hold Regimen Eccleſiaſticum ſpirituale eſſe, & diſtinctum à politico: That the Eccleſiaſticall regiment is ſpirituall, and a thing diſtinct from the politicall, or temporall.

42 That wee teach, that the Lords ſupper is very bakers bread, and wine, with the only figure of Chriſts bodie and blood, pag. 320. But we never ſo unreverently called that holy Sacrament. It is your ſelfe (Maſter Harding) that doth ſo vilely diſgrace this holy Myſterie, calling it A peece of bread not worth a point: a leane and carrien banquet; a toye. We call it the Sacrament of thankſ-giving, the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, with other names fit for ſo great myſteries. Neither do we make them bare figures and ſignes, but as the Apoſtle ſaith, ſeales of the righteouſnes of faith. Rom.4.11.

Now, having ſeene thus farre, with what falſe opinions they charge our Church generally, in reſpect of our doctrine, let us take ſome triall alſo of their juſt and true dealing with us, in matters belonging to manners. And here I doe not thinke but we ſhall find them halting, as before.

43 Firſt, Harding chargeth us with continuall advoutrie and inceſt, calling without all honeſtie or ſhame, Miniſters lawfull wedded wives, their filthie yoke-fellowes, pag. 439. Yea, hee ſaith, that our Goſpell hath no ſubſtance, beſide carnall libertie and licentious living, pag. 289. And that through our evill teaching, the world groweth more to be diſſolute and wicked, pag. 382. But if Maſter Harding had remembred the diſſolutenes, and licentiouſnes of life that is at Rome, he could not without bluſhing have charged us with inceſt, advoutries, and all carnall libertie. Hee had forgotten belike that old Engliſh proverbe, He that goeth once to Rome, ſeeth a wicked man: he that goeth twiſe, learneth to know him: he that goeth thriſe, bringeth him home with him: Fox. pag. 843.

44 The Rhemiſts doe accuſe the Proteſtants (whom they call heretiks) for their lightneſſe in admitting every one without diſcretion to the Clergie, 1 Timoth. 3, 6. But, as for that uncharitable name of heretikes, we ſhall ſhew anon, that it is more proper unto them, than unto us. And never any hereſie admitted more unworthie perſons to the Clergie, than Papiſtrie hath done: not only into the inferiour places, but even into their chiefe Biſhops ſee: for as Alphonſ. teſtifieth, whom we cited before, Many of their Popes did not know ſo much as their Grammar. And from hence iſſued that decree of Pope Zacharie to helpe the ignorance of their ſottiſh prieſts, that the baptiſme, which was ſolemnized by a Prieſt ſpeaking falſe Latine, ſaying, In nomine patria, filia & ſpiritu ſancta, ſhould be taken for good baptiſme. Decr. p 3. diſ. 4. c. 86.

45 Harding chargeth the Proteſtants in divers Countries to have attempted to wreſt the ſword out of the Princes hands. Were the hundred thouſand Boures in Germanie (ſaith he) conſumed by the ſword of the Nobilitie there for their obedience? P. 441. So he ſlandereth Luther alſo, that he ſtirred up Thomas Munzer in Thuringia, who was the Rebels preacher, pag. 447. Thus the Rhemiſts deale with Calvin, calling him one of the principall Rebels of this time, and moſt falſely give out of the Proteſtants, that their Conſiſtories are ſhops of rebellion.

Thus alſo they report of Wickliffe, that he ſhould teach, that Princes are not to be obeyed being in deadly ſinne, Annotat. 1 Pet. 2. ſect. 8.

All theſe are malicious ſlanders deviſed againſt us. Firſt, the Boures of Germanie were moſt of them adverſaries to Luther, and underſtood no part of the Goſpell, but conſpired together, as they ſaid, only againſt the crueltie of their Lords, as they had two and twentie yeares before in the conſpiracie called (Liga Sotularia,) Anno 1503. fifteene yeares before Doctor Luther began to preach, which was Anno 1518. Iewel pag. 441. Secondly, Luther was ſo farre from ſtirring up Thomas Munzer, that he called him the preacher of Satan, Sleidan. li. 5. Thirdly, neither did Wickliffe teach any ſuch thing, for he himſelfe was obedient both to Edward the third, and to Richard the ſecond; both which Princes, as we know, were guiltie of ſome notorious ſinnes. Fourthly, you rather ſhew your ſelves the rebels of this age, who make no conſcience in moving the ſubjects to riſe up and conſpire againſt their naturall Soveraignes. And England knoweth by experience, that your Seminaries of Rome and Rhemes, are the ſhops of rebellion, which have forged ſo many conſpiracies againſt our Soveraigne, but all hitherto in vaine, the Lord be thanked, and we truſt in God ſhall bee ſo ſtill: yee might therefore have been aſhamed, to have caſt us in the teeth with that, which your owne conſciences may accuſe your ſelves of.

Thus much of the ſlanders in generall, which they belch out againſt our whole Church: now wee will a little touch thoſe popiſh forgeries, which they have in their idle and phantaſticall braine, deviſed againſt ſome particular men amongſt us, ſorted out from among the reſt.

46 And firſt of all, they lay load upon poore Wickliffe, charging him with many things which hee never held: As that he ſhould teach, that a Prince is not to be obeyed being in deadly ſinne, Rhemiſt. Rom. 13. ſect. 4. 1 Pet. 2. ſect. 8. which we have ſhewed before to be a great untruth.

47 That Wickliffe did condemne degrees of ſchooles, and titles of Doctors and Maſters, Rhemiſt. Matth. 23. ſect. 4. this is a meere ſlander of Wickliffe : Fulk, ibid.

48 That he ſhould ſay, that God ought to obey the devill, Bellarmine, Præfat. in controverſ. and addeth for the proofe hereof, that this his hereſie was condemned in the Councell of Conſtance, Seſſ. 8. We take this to be a meere ſlander as the reſt : for there is no ſuch thing found objected againſt Wickliffe, neither in thoſe 18. articles exhibited againſt him in the convocation of certaine Biſhops at Lambeth, Fox pag. 432. nor yet amongſt thoſe 9. articles, which were condemned as hereticall : nor thoſe 23. which were condemned as erronious, Fox pag. 435. Yet concerning this matter, three ſchollers of the ſaid Wickliffe, that followed not long after, ſhewed their opinion, namely, Nicholas Herford, Phillip Repingdon, Iohn Ayſhton. And thus they ſay, that God ought not to obey the devill in his owne perſon, or eſſence, nor with the obedience of neceſſitie : for ſo to affirme, ſay they, it is hereſie, Fox pag. 438. And againe they granted, that they meant an obedience of love, becauſe God loved the devill, and puniſhed him as hee ought, pag. 439. The phraſe and manner of ſpeech is ſomewhat ſtrange : but who ſeeth not, that their meaning is ſound and good. Firſt, that God not in his owne perſon, but in his creatures yeeldeth obedience to the devill : that is, ſometime giveth him power over his creatures. Secondly, yet not of neceſſitie, for God can when it pleaſeth him, tie Satan ſhort, and exempt his creatures from his power. Thirdly, that God loveth him as his creature, and ſo hee doth alſo the wicked, ſuffering the Sunne to ſhine upon them, Matth. 5. Fourthly, that the Lord in his juſtice is to puniſh the devill, and ſo doth : they are reſerved in everlaſting chaines of darknes, Iud. 6.

In this ſort alſo they dealt with Iohn Huſſe, deviſing ſtrange Articles againſt him which hee never 49 thought : As that he ſhould ſay, that Saint Gregorie, when they alleadged his authoritie againſt him, was but a rimer : wherein Iohn Huſſe himſelfe anſwered, that they did him great injurie, for ſo much, as he alwaies eſteemed and reputed Saint Gregorie for a moſt holy Doctor of the Church : Fox pag. 606.

50 Thus it was falſely objected againſt the ſame Iohn Huſſe in the Councell of Conſtance, where hee was moſt unjuſtly condemned : that hee ſaid, there ſhould bee a fourth perſon in divinitie, and that a Doctor heard him to ſpeake the ſame. Iohn Huſſe deſired the Doctor might be named, which not obtaining, he thus crieth out : O miſerable and wretched man that I am, which am forced and compelled to beare ſuch blaſphemie and ſlander : Fox pag. 622.

This was, as wee ſee, the guiſe of the old Papiſts, thus without all feare, to ſlander the children of God, whoſe of-ſpring, I meane the Papiſts of later time, doe tread in the ſame their fathers ſteps.

51 So was Maſter Tindall that faithfull ſervant of God abuſed by them, upon whom they fathered many falſe articles : As that he ſhould ſay, that it is impoſſible for us to conſent to the will of God, Fox pag. 1247. Artic. 3. Whereas he meant, and ſo ſpake, that by nature it is impoſſible, no otherwiſe than the Apoſtle ſaith ; That the wiſdome of the fleſh is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.

52 That hee ſhould ſay, every man is Lord of another mans goods : as though hee ſhould favour the Anabaptiſticall communitie : pag. 1248. Article 18. Tindals words be theſe : If thy brother or neighbour need, and thou have to help him, and yet ſheweſt no mercie, but withdraweſt thine hands from him, thou robbeſt him of his owne.

53 That hee ſhould ſay, the worſt Turke hath as much right to my goods, at his need, as mine houſehold or mine owne ſelfe : pag. 1248 Article 20. Tindal ſaith and writeth thus : If thy neighbours which thou knoweſt bee ſerved, and thou have yet ſuperfluitie, to the very Infidels wee are debters, if they need, as farre forth as we maintaine them not againſt Chriſt. Loe, here is no mention made of any Turke : and expreſly he ſaith, that our neighbours, and ſo our owne familie is to be preferred : the reſt to have of the remainder and ſuperfluitie. Is not this great hereſie thinke you ?

54 That Chriſt tooke away all lawes, and maketh us free and at libertie, P. 1251. Articl. 5. Tyndall ſaith thus : He hath not delivered us from the Law, but from the power and violence of the Law : but for all that, hee hath not taken away from the powers and officers their right, ſword, and authority to puniſh the evill.

55 That he ſhould affirme, that by works wee decay from the faith : P. 1252. Articl. 16. But Tyndall ſaith, By truſting in works, we decay from the faith.

56 That keeping of virginitie and chaſtitie of Religion is a diveliſh thing, pag. 1253. Articl. 20. Tindall hath not the chaſtitie of Religion, but of the Religious, meaning Monks and Friers : upon whom the yoke of ſingle life was impoſed, and violently enforced, which Saint Paul himſelfe calleth a doctrine of divels.

57 That hee ſhould ſay, if wee beleeve that God hath promiſed everlaſting life, it is impoſſible wee ſhould periſh, P. 1255. Articl. 6. But Tyndall thus writeth : when with a perfect courage we put all our truſt in God, and in his promiſes, it is impoſſible we ſhould periſh, for he hath promiſed us everlaſting life. He ſpeaketh not of a generall beleefe onely, but of an aſſured truſt and confidence in God.

58 That he ſhould hold, that the Goſpell maketh all true Chriſtian men ſervants to all the world, P. 1257. But Tyndall thus, By the rule of charity, and not of office and duty, every Chriſtian man is bound one to help another. Thus deceitfully they clip and mangle the good mans words, to make him to ſpeake what they liſt themſelves.

59 And as wee ſee their falſhood in collecting theſe articles, the like craft they uſed in a great number more, againſt this good man Maſter Tyndall, they falſifie 29. articles out of his booke called the wicked Mammon: 25. out of the booke entituled the Obedience of a Chriſtian man: 37. out of his booke called the Revelation of Antichriſt: 41. out of his booke named the *Summe of the Scripture, conſul. Fox. à P.*1247.*ad P.*1257. The number in all is 132.articles, ſome forged,ſome wreſted, ſome mangled, none ſincerely alleaged, which they object againſt him.

60 Now let us ſee how they deale with Martin Luther; ſurely after the ſame faſhion, as they doe with the reſt. Firſt Harding chargeth him to have written againſt the power of lawfull Magiſtrates. Luthers words (ſaith he) be theſe, Inter Chriſtianos nullus neque poteſt, neque debet eſſe magiſtratus: Among Chriſtian men, none can, nor ought to be a Magiſtrate, Defenſ. Apol. P. 446. Luther ſpeaketh not theſe words of the outward civill government, but only of our inward band, and obedience toward God: And in this reſpect, there is no King, nor Prince indeed, nor may bee any. In this ſenſe, Saint Paul ſaith, *There is no Iew, there is no Gentile, there is no Lord, there is no ſervant, there is no man, there is no woman, for all you are one in Chriſt Ieſus, Galath.*3. They might therefore as well have charged S. Paul to have written againſt civill governours, as Luther. But what his opinion was of the authority of the civill Magiſtrate, may appeare, where he writeth thus unto the rebels in Germanie, being in the field againſt their Lords: Yee take the ſword and withſtand the Magiſtrate, whom God hath appointed, is not this raſhly to abuſe the name of God? Iohn Sleidan, lib. 5.

61 Our Rhemiſts charge Luther, that upon theſe words of our Saviour, Reſiſt not evill, *Matth.*5.39. hee ſhould hold that Chriſtians might not reſiſt the Turke, Annot. Matth. 5.*ſect.*9. This is a ſlander of Luther, he did write only, that Chriſtians ſhould not hope to have victory againſt the Turks, before the Church were reformed.

61 That Luther teacheth, that only infidelitie is ſinne: Annot. Mat. 7. ſect. 5. Luther doth not teach that infidelitie only is ſinne, but that it is the root of all ſinne.

62 That Luther and Calvine do teach, that God was the author of the traiterous ſinne of Iudas: *Act.*2. ſect. 9. They never ſo taught, but ſpeake only as the Scripture doth, That Chriſt was delivered up, according to the determinate Counſell and fore-knowledge of God.

Act. 2. 23.

63 That Luther and Calvine attempted to caſt out devils, and ſped much like, as the 7. ſons of Sceva did, *Act.*19.*ſect.*9. This is a great ſlander invented of them by a lying ſpirit: yet it is moſt credibly reported of Luther, that God by his hand wrought a miraculous worke upon a yong man, that had given himſelfe body and ſoule to the devill, ſee the ſtorie, Fox. pag. 864.

64 Againſt Melancthon they object, that hee avouched three Sacraments: Baptiſme, the Euchariſt, and Orders. Harding defenſ. apolog. 162. Melancthon only ſaith thus, That hee can well call Orders a Sacrament, ſo that it bee knowne from Baptiſme, and the ſupper: which in proper ſpeech, and verily bee called Sacraments, in apolog. confeſ. Auguſt.

65 So another Sorboniſt diſputing with Frederike Danvile Martyr, belied Melancthon, that in his booke of common places, he ſhould call auricular confeſſion, Evangelicum ſecretum, A ſecret of the Goſpell, Fox pag. 921. Whereas Melancthon ſaith cleane contrary in that booke, calling it a ſnare of the conſcience, and againſt the Goſpell.

66 But above all other, they have a great ſpite at Calvin: Harding accuſeth him, that he ſhould teach, that where the death of Chriſt may bee remembred otherwiſe, there all Sacraments bee ſuperfluous: Defenſ. apolog. pag. 185. But Calvine teacheth cleane contrarie: Sic eſt exigua noſtra fides, (ſaith he) &c. So ſmall is our faith, that unleſſe it be borne up on every ſide, and by all meanes bee held up, it wavereth, and is like to fall. By which words he ſheweth, that we have great need of ſuch remedies, becauſe of the weaknes of our faith: much leſſe, are they ſuperfluous: thus Maſter Harding by his leave is proved a lyer.

67 The Rhemiſtes charge Calvine with this hereſie, that God is the author of ſinne, Mat. 13. ſect. 2. Neither Calvine, nor any of us ſay ſo, but we ſay and hold as Auguſtine doth, that God hardeneth the wicked, not as an evill author, but as a righteous Judge, not by a bare permiſſion or ſuffering, as the Papiſts teach, but by with-drawing, and with-holding his grace, and delivering them to the deceit of Satan, as a juſt puniſhment of their ſinnes, thus Auguſtine at large Cont. Iulian. lib. 5. cap. 3. Thus alſo Saint Paul affirmeth of the Idolatrous Gentiles, *That God gave them over to their hearts luſt, Rom.*1. 24. Fulk. ibid.

68 That Calvine holdeth the ſecond perſon to be God, not as of God the Father, but as of himſelfe, *Ioh.*1. *ſect.*3. Calvine teacheth that Chriſt is God, of God the Father in reſpect of his perſon, as the Son; yet very God of himſelfe, in reſpect of his divine nature and eſſence, and of one and the ſame Godhead with his Father, which is not multiplied by communication of generation, but is one and moſt ſingular in all the three perſons. And this is ſound and Catholike doctrine.

69 That Calvine teacheth, that Chriſtian mens children bee ſo holy, that they need no Baptiſme, 1 *Corinth.*7.ſect. 11. Rhemiſt. A falſe ſlander, for Calvine contrariwiſe doth reaſon againſt the Anabaptiſts out of S. Pauls words, that becauſe they are holy, they are to be baptized.

70 That Calvine and Luther, and their followers, refuſe to put their preaching to the triall of holy Councels, Rhemiſt. 2.Galat. ſect. 3. It is falſe, they never refuſed, neither do we, to put our doctrine to the conference of lawfull Councels, but have often deſired, that ſuch a generall Councell by conſent of Chriſtian Princes might bee gathered: we only refuſe to bee tried by popiſh Councels, ſuch as the late Chapter of Trent was, where the Pope is both the partie accuſed, and the Judge.

71 That Calvine exhorteth all men to have reſpect to Saint Pauls Apoſtleſhip, rather than unto Saint Peters: as though the preaching, authoritie and Apoſtleſhip of both, were not alike true, and all of one holy ſpirit, whether they preached to Jewes or Gentils, Galath. 2. ſect. 6. See what ſophiſticall cavilling here is: Calvine maketh no difference of the truth of doctrine, or Apoſtolike authoritie, which was the ſame whether in Paul or in Peter: but biddeth us to keepe the difference of primacie and diſtinction of provinces made betweene them by the holy Ghoſt, that Paul ſhould be the chiefe Apoſtle of the Gentiles, and Peter of the Circumciſion, Calvin. lib. 4. inſtit. 6. 14.

72 Bellarmine ſeemeth to charge Calvine yet further, that he ſhould affirme, Chriſtum in cruce deſperaſſe, & eſſe damnatum: That Chriſt did deſpaire upon the Croſſe, and was damned, lib. 4. de Chriſti anima. cap. 8. This is a grievous ſlander: Calvine only ſaith, that it was neceſſary, that Chriſt ſhould non only ſuffer in body, but even abide the wrath of God in his ſoule for the ſinnes of the world, which inforced him, and not his bodily paine, to crie out upon the croſſe, that he was forſaken of his father. This is neither hereſie nor blaſphemie: but ſound doctrine, and agreeable to Scripture.

Our Rhemiſts alſo in divers places have a fling at that reverend and learned Paſtor Maſter Beza, and finding no juſt matter to upbraid him withall, they thus fondly picke quarrels againſt him.

73 Heare (ſay they) what a principall ſect-maſter, with his blaſphemous mouth or penne uttereth, ſaying: In the very beſt times, ſuch was partly the ambition of Biſhops, partly their ignorance and fooliſhnes, that the very blind may eaſily perceive, Sathan verily to have been preſident of their aſſemblies. And in the margent they note Bezas blaſphemie againſt the firſt generall Councels, Rhemiſt. Act. 15. ſect. 10. In this place Beza ſpeaketh not one word againſt the firſt generall Councels, but againſt the aſſemblies of proud and unlearned light headed Biſhops of Greece, which lived in thoſe beſt times, whereof it is manifeſt by the Church ſtories, that many of them were hereticall and blaſphemous. It is a looſe argument: Beza ſaith, there were wicked Biſhops in the beſt times: Ergo, he blaſphemeth againſt the firſt generall Councels.

74 That Beza ſaith Melchiſedechs prieſt-hood was wholly ſpirituall, Annot. Heb. 8. ſect. 3. He ſaith not, that Melchiſedechs prieſt-hood was only ſpirituall, as the ſpirituall prieſt-hood of the faithfull is: but that Melchiſedechs prieſt-hood was figurative, having a ſpirituall relation to Chriſts eternall prieſthood, Fulke ibid.

75 But no marvell if they make not daintie to ſlander the Miniſters of the Goſpell, when they dare open their lying mouthes againſt Chriſtian Princes, and offer violence to the Lords annointed: As Bellarmine moſt ſlanderouſly giveth out of our late gracious Soveraigne: Iam reipſa Calviniſtis in Anglia mulier quadam ſummus pontifex eſt: And now in truth, a certaine woman in England taketh upon her to be chiefe Biſhop of the Calviniſts, Bellarm. de notis eccleſiæ. lib. 4. cap. 9. A foule and diſdainefull ſlander: Whereas neither our Queene then, nor king now, do uſurp upon the office of Biſhops and Miniſters: but as all godly Princes have done, as David, Hezekiah, and others: His Majeſtie thinketh that it belongeth to his princely charge, to have a care of Religion, and to looke to the houſe of God. Beſide theſe ſlanders, which they have raiſed concerning the opinions and doctrine of our Church, they have deviſed and forged lies alſo concerning other matters.

76 Staphylus and furious Surius ſay, that Luther learned his divinitie of the devill. Another maintaineth, that he was borne of the devill. Another that he dyed of drunkennes, vide Fox. pag. 1257.

77 Bellarmine reporteth out of railing Cochleus, that Luther died ſuddenly: for ſaith he, having ſupped very daintily, and being made merrie with good cheere, and with his jeaſts made all at the table to burſt forth into laughter, he immediatly ſickned, and dyed the ſame night. Bellar. lib. 4. de notis eccle. cap. 17. And he maketh himſelfe pretie ſport in telling a lying tale out of the ſame Cochleus: how Luthers body being clapt in leade, in the midſt of winter, in the froſt and cold, ſudainely began ſo to ſtincke, that the very ſmell pearced the leade, and whereas they were purpoſed to convey his corps to Wittemberge to be buried, they*were conſtrained to leave it by the way. Lib. 4. de notis eccleſ. cap. 14. They may be aſhamed to forge ſuch ſhamefull lies, for neither was Luthers death ſuddaine: who had an old infirmity hanging upon him, being accuſtomed to be much troubled with oppreſſion of humors in the orifice or opening of his ſtomacke. Neither dyed he the ſame night, but the next morning betweene eight and nine of the clocke: Reported by Melancthon, who better was acquainted both with Luthers life and death, than any Papiſt of them all. Luther made a moſt comfortable end, and made a moſt ſweet prayer before his death, which is rare I thinke with the popiſh ſort, conſul. Fox pag. 864.

A great untruth, for Luthers body lieth buried at Wittemberge in the Chappell of the Caſtle there, 78 The reſt, which they report of his body is as true as that which was fained of Maſter Bucer, that he ſhould deny at his death, that Chriſt our Meſſiah was come, Fox. pag. 1257. colum. 2. whoſe manner of death Doctor Redman that preached at his funerall, and many other Engliſhmen knew to bee contrary to their ungodly reports.

79 Of like credit is that foule forgerie of Maſter Calvins departure, as Bellarmine, though not the deviſer thereof, yet bluſheth not to be the reporter. That Calvine calling upon the devill, blaſpheming and ſwearing gave up the ghoſt, and that he accurſed the day and houre, when ever he began to apply himſelfe to ſtudy and writing, Bellar. lib. 4. De notis eccleſ. cap. 8. Whoſe eares now would not tingle, to heare theſe malicious and devilliſh reports of ſo godly a man? as though M. Beza, who was an eye-witneſſe both of his life and death, and hath penned the ſtorie thereof, could not better teſtifie for this matter, than they, which have all by heareſay. Well, M. Calvine lived well, and died the Lords ſervant, whatſoever theſe black-mouthed and hard-hearted Papiſts ſay to the contrary: It were better for them rather to make Balaams wiſh, that they alſo may dye the death of the righteous, than thus to blaſpheme Gods ſaints. And that all the world may know what a ſingular facultie they have to in- 80 vent, and an impudent face to avouch a lie, their late practices againſt that reverend father and learned paſtor of Geneva M. Beza, doe ſufficiently declare: For in the yeere 1597. Puteanus the generall father of the Jeſuits in Burgundia, and the reſt of that perverſe ſect, were not aſhamed with their lying lips to report, with their ſlanderous letters to publiſh, and out of their popiſh pulpits to preach, that Beza perceiving death to bee at hand, did renounce his former profeſſion of the Goſpell, and was reconciled to the Church of Rome, and deſired the Senate of Geneva, if they did hope to bee ſaved, to doe the like: and that after his death for further direction, they would ſend for the Jeſuits: and that hereupon the whole citie of Geneva was returned to the obedience of the Pope: and the Lantgrave of Heſia hearing the report thereof, ſent meſſengers of purpoſe to Geneva, who certified him of the truth thereof: this loud lie of the Jeſuits is extant in a pamphlet printed at Geneva, with a confutation thereof annexed by M. Beza, and the whole Church there. What more impudent or ſhameleſſe lie could have been deviſed, when as M. Beza was then not dead, but living, not converted to them, but confirmed in the Goſpell: and the Church of Geneva yet continueth, and I hope ſtill ſhall in the obedience of the faith of the Goſpell. But no marvell if they thus deale with M. Beza, ſo they ſerved maſter Calvine ſome 48. yeeres ſince, reporting of him, that he was become one of their Catholiks: What will theſe men now be aſhamed to report?

Beza belied by the Ieſuites to be turned a Papiſt.

81 As though wee were ignorant of their popiſh cuſtome and practice in belying the ſervants of God: When Horſey that wicked Chancelor had with his owne hands murthered Rich. Hun in the priſon, was it not given out, that he had hanged himſelfe? Fox pag. 867.

82 How cruelly was the congregation at Paris perſecuted, and moſt vilely ſlandered of them? Anno 1558. the Prieſts and Friers in their railing ſermons perſwaded the people, that the Lutheranes aſſembled together to make a banquet in the night, and there putting out the candles, they went together, Jacke with Jill, as they ſaid, after a filthie and beaſtly manner. Other Sorboniſts accuſed them, that they maintained, there was no God: and denied the divinitie and humanitie of Chriſt, the immortality of the ſoule, the reſurrection of the dead, and briefly all the articles of true religion, Fox pag. 927. with ſuch like malicious miſreports and ſlanders, the ancient Church in the primitive time was ſlandered, who were aceuſed of inceſt, conſpiracie, ſacrificing of infants, putting out of candles, & filthy whoredome, with ſuch like, Fox pag. 36. Therefore it need not ſeeme ſtrange unto us, that the enemies of the Church doe in theſe dayes alſo whet and ſharpen their tongues againſt the profeſſors of the truth: eſpecially, ſeeing that they, which doe even now ſcourge and afflict us with their ſcorpion tongues, are not aſhamed to ſpeake broadly, yea and untruly of the primitive Church; for theſe are the Rhe- 83 miſts owne words: In the primitive Church, when Infidels dwelt among the Chriſtians, and oftentimes came to their publike preachings, it was both unprofitable and ridiculous to heare a number talking, teaching, ſinging Pſalmes, one in this language, another in that, all at once like a black Sauntes: Annot. 1 Cor.
14. ſect. 5. Although there were ſome diſorder among the Corinthians, yet is it lewdly done, generally to charge the whole primitive Church: And (thinke yee) theſe men have not a very reverend opinion of the labours of the Apoſtles, that compare the publike exerciſes of the Corinthians, who were a Church planted and founded by S. Paul, to a black Sauntes?

Barke on now yee Papiſts, and ſeeing you ſpare neither Apoſtle, Paſtor, nor Miniſter, neither primitive and ancient, nor preſent and now being Church, ſay on ſtill as yee doe, that the Proteſtants tend every day more and more to Atheiſme and Antichriſtianiſme, Rhemiſt. 2 Theſſal. 2. ſect. 14. That the Proteſtants have forſaken Chriſt, the Proteſtants are become Iewes, the Proteſtants will be circumciſed according to Moſes law, the Proteſtants require to have the paſchall Lambe, the Proteſtants tell the people there is no hell at all: the Proteſtants at their next proceeding will utterly deny God: Harding, præfat. ad defenſ. apolog. ex Iuello. Well yee ſlanderous mouthed hypocrites, if Ieremies ſaying were not verified upon you, Thou haſt a whores forehead, thou wouldeſt not be aſhamed, 3. 3. yee might well bluſh, and ſhew all your blood in your face, when yon invent ſuch unchriſtian ſlanders againſt us, which the world crieth ſhame upon, and your owne conſciences accuſe yee of: It were now to bee wiſhed that the ancient lawes were revived againſt ſlanderers, and forgers of untrue reports and infamous libels: as either that law of Valentinian the Emperor, who decreed capitali ſententia ſubjugandum, that he ſhould dye for it, that was found to be the author of any ſlanderous libell: Cod. lib. 9. tit. 36. leg. 1. Or that of the Emperour Honorius: pæna calumnia ſimilitudo ſupplicii, that the ſlanderer ſhould endure like puniſhment to him that was ſlandered, if the crime could have been proved againſt him: Cod. lib. 9. tit. 46. leg. 10.

Or if they take themſelves to bee exempted from the Imperiall conſtitutions, I would their owne pontificials were in force againſt them, as that of Pope Hadriane: Vt qui ſcripturam in alterius famam confinxerit flagelletur: That he ſhould have whipping cheare, that publiſhed any thing to hurt anothers good name. Or that conſtitution of Gregorie, that ſuch an one ſhould bee excommunicate, Decr. part. 2. conſ. 5. queſt. 1. cap. 1.

Ibid. cap. 2.

and deprived of the Communion: if any of thoſe lawes were executed, to puniſh all ſlanderers with death, or like puniſhment, whipping or excommunication, it would, I thinke, be ſome bridle, to ſtay the raging humour of our adverſaries: But ſince wee are not to looke for any ſuch thing, we have no other ſhield to hold up againſt theſe injuries of theirs, but the Prophet Davids, ſaying with his words in the perſon of our Church: As he loved curſing, ſo let it come unto him: and as hee loved not bleſſing, ſo ſhall it bee farre from him: as he clothed himſelfe with curſing, like a rayment, ſo ſhall it come into his bowels like water, and like oyle into his bones. Let it be unto him as a garment to cover him, and for a girdle, wherewith he ſhall alway be girded. Let this be the reward of mine adverſaries from God, and of them that ſpeake evill againſt my ſoule: Pſal. 109. verſ. 17, 18, 19, 20.

Heare yee alſo what Bernard ſaith: Gladius anceps lingua detractoris: Nec verò hujuſmodi linguam ipſo mucrone, quo dominicum latus confoſſum eſt, crudeliorem dicere verearis: hac enim non jam exanime Chriſti corpus fodit, ſed facit exanime fodiendo: A ſlanderous tongue is a two edged ſword: And ſuch a tongue wee need not doubt to call more cruell, than the ſpeares point that pierced our Lords ſide: for this doth not pierce or wound the dead body of Chriſt, but ſlaieth & woundeth it to death: ſerm. de triplici cuſtodia. Thus yee Papiſts, ſhew your ſelves greater enemies to Chriſt, in ſlandring his Church, than if ye had thruſt his body thorow that hanged upon the Croſſe: for then his body was firſt dead before it was pierced: But you doe rent and wound the lively body of Chriſt now which is his Church: I pray God give you grace, as yee belong unto him, to repent you of this wickedneſſe. And thus much alſo concerning the ſlanders and malicious reports given out by Papiſts againſt our Church.

The third part of the manifold untruths, forgeries, and bold denials of Papiſts of manifeſt truths. Part. 3.

IT followeth now in the third place, having already ſufficiently diſcourſed of their perſonall ſlanders, which they vomit and ſpue up, either againſt our Church in generall, or againſt ſome particular members thereof, that now we lay open to the world their untruths and lyes, which in heapes are coyned and forged out of their ſhops, that whereas they accuſe us of lying, ſaying moſt ſcornfully, That lyes are as common with heretiks as lice with beggers; it may evidently appeare to the world, whether of twaine be the great liers: and firſt of their forgeries. Never any heretiks were more cunning, or had better dexteritie in forging of writings, and foiſting books of their owne deviſing and making, under the name of other authors.

Harding Defenſ. Apolog. 597.

Firſt, the Canons of the Apoſtles, as they call them, which are fathered upon the Apoſtles, are but baſtard writings, falſely going under their name: for in the laſt Canon, the Goſpell written by Saint Iohn is numbred among the books of the Teſtament, which is confeſſed by all to have been penned by the Evangeliſt, after the death of all, or moſt of the Apoſtles: How could then theſe Canons (as they affirme,) bee deviſed and publiſhed by the Apoſtles themſelves aſſembled together?

Againe, thoſe Canons of the Apoſtles doe reckon three books of the Macchabees amongſt the Canonicall Scripture: but the Papiſts themſelves receive but two: if then they were perſwaded themſelves, that they were the very Canons of the Apoſtles, how durſt they diſagree from them in opinion?

Thirdly, in the 84. Canon, the two epiſtles and conſtitutions of Clemens are reckoned amongſt the canonicall Scriptures, which is a great error, and moſt unworthy the name of the Apoſtles.

Fourthly, in the Canon 45. the baptiſme of heretikes is condemned, and the ſame is affirmed by the gloſſarie upon the decrees, part. 1. diſtinct. 32. cap. 6. That the Canons of the Apoſtles doe call the baptiſme of heretiks, Lavacrum diaboli, the devils laver: which was Cyprians error, afterward condemned of the Church,

Fifthly, the Canons of the Apoſtles make mention of many things, which then were not knowne, but long ſince brought into the Church: as Can. 29. that no man ſhould be preferred to a Church by the ſecular powers, when as in the Apoſtles time the ſecular powers were not patrons, but pullers downe of Churches: likewiſe the names of Primate or Metropolitane, mentioned Canon 33. were not knowne in the Apoſtles time, nor the degrees of Lector, Cantor, and the reſt rehearſed, Can. 68. were not then once heard of, as Vrbanus confeſſeth, that in the primitive Church there were but two orders, of Prieſts and Deacons, Canon. 68. mention is made of Lent, which was afterward brought in by Teleſphorus, Canon 72. ſpeaketh of ſilver and golden veſſels, which were long after ordained by Vrbanus: and many ſuch other new inventions are to bee found in the foreſaid Canons, which make them worthily to be ſuſpected.

Decr. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 14. cap. 9.

Sixthly, divers conſtitutions were afterward made in the Church, contrary to theſe Canons: as Can. 65. it is decreed that no man ſhould faſt upon the ſaturday, which was the Jewes ſabbath: the contrary is decreed by Innocentius, that this day ſhould be kept faſt, Can. 49. He that doth not dip thrice in Baptiſme, is depoſed, the contrary is concluded, Concil. Toletan. 4. c. 5. that they ſhould not dip thrice, becauſe the heretiks did ſo: and in the Trullane Councell, Can. 12. they doe in direct tearmes correct the Canons of the Apoſtles: which is an evident argument, that they did not hold them to bee made by the Apoſtles, for then it had been too great preſumption, to have concluded againſt them.

Seventhly, Gelaſius Biſhop of Rome doth count the Canons of the Apoſtles among the Apocryphall and obſcure writings: decret. part. 1. diſt. 15. cap. 3.* and Iſidore likewiſe, diſtinct. 16. cap. 1.*

Laſtly, they varie about the number of the Canons: Zepherinus ſaith, there are 60. Canons: decr. par. 1. diſt. 16. cap. 2.* Leo ſaith, there are 50. the ſixth Synode receiveth 85. Canons: decr. par. 1. diſt. 16. cap. 4.* Wherefore we have great reaſon upon theſe grounds, to ſuſpect the authority of the Canons of the Apoſtles; and to refuſe them as forged writings.

2 The conſtitutions alſo of the Apoſtles, the collection whereof is aſcribed to Clemens, ſeeme to bee but a forged booke, containing many things falſe and frivolous: as lib. 6, cap. 14.* he bringeth in Iames the brother of Iohn, writing and ſpeaking with the reſt of the Apoſtles, many yeeres after his death: lib. 6. cap. 7.* hee calleth Philip, ſpoken of Acts 8. an Apoſtle: but lib. 8. cap. 52.* he maketh him but a Deacon.

3 Of the like credit are the counterfeit writings which paſſe under the name of Abdias, Ignatius, Hippolytus, Polycarpus, as it may appeare by the homely ſtuffe contained in them. Abdias preſcribeth a moſt ſuperſtitious obſervation of Lent faſt, not only in abſtaining from all fleſh-meats, but alſo from all carnall copulation betweene man and wife.

The ſame Abdias is alſo contrary to himſelfe, for hee affirmeth that Paul ſuffered two yeeres after Peter: And ſaith further, that Paul, after Peter was crucified, remained in his cuſtodie at Rome, mentioned in the Acts of the Apoſtles, which was, as Hierome ſaith, the third or fourth yeere of Nero: ſo that by this account, there muſt be ten yeeres ſpace betweene the ſuffering of Paul and Peter, for it is confeſſed by all writers, that Paul ſuffered the fourteenth, that is, the laſt yeere of Nero.

4 Ignatius ſaith in his epiſtle to the Philippians, that if any man ſhall faſt on Sunday, or Saturday, he is a murtherer of Chriſt: ſo hot this counterfeit father is, about his counterfeit traditions.

5 Of the like authority is Policarpus epiſtle ad Philippen. which is gathered out of the Apocryphall conſtitutions of counterfeit Clemens.

6 Hippolytus booke is too full of fables, than to bee thought to bee that ancient Martyrs worke: for writing of Antichriſt, he ſaith, he ſhall be no man, but a devill in the ſhape of man: that Iohn the Evangeliſt ſhall come with Henoch and Helias, before the comming of Antichriſt: that Antichriſt ſhall bring devils with him in the ſhape of Angels, and command them to carry him up to heaven, with other ſuch ſtuffe.

Now commeth in that uncleane dunghill of decretals, which are falſely attributed to thoſe good Biſhops of Rome, that ſuffered in the great perſecutions in the primitive age of the Church, for the teſtimony of Jeſus: as we may ſtrongly conjecture by the matter, and ſubſtance, and other circumſtances of thoſe decretals.

The firſt epiſtle of Clement ſeemeth to bee forged: firſt, hee declareth the difference of Primates, 7 Archbiſhops, Metropolitanes, and decreeth that no Biſhops ſhould bee ordained in ſmall villages or townes, leſt they might grow into contempt: which conſtitution ſavoureth rather of ambition, than is agreeable to the ſimplicitie of thoſe times, neither is it like, that they would then ſtrive for titles in the Church, when they were not ſure of life: ſecondly, there are divers places cited in this epiſtle, out of the 5. and 14. chapters of Eſay, wherein the author followeth Hieromes tranſlation, who was long after Clement. Againſt the ſecond epiſtle we take exception, for that Clement writing to Iames the A- 8 poſtle, ſaith thus: Qualiter tenere debemus de Sacramentis te ex ordine nos decet inſtruere: What wee muſt hold concerning the Sacraments, it is fit I ſhould inſtruct you in order: and is it not a fit thing, may any man thinke, that Iames the Apoſtle ſhould now be put to ſchoole, and be catechiſed of Clement in the Sacraments? Againe, among other precepts, he thus giveth in charge, Vt murium ſtercora inter fragmenta dominicæ portionis non appareant: That mice turds ſhould in no wiſe appeare in the fragment of the Sacrament: and that the altar cloathes ſhould bee waſhed within in the Church, not without, becauſe of the duſt of the Lords body, that might fall downe: are not theſe now meet precepts for ſo worthy an Apoſtle to be inſtructed in?

9 To Anacletus, that next ſucceeded to Clement, are aſcribed three epiſtles, containing the like ſtuffe: in the firſt epiſtle, hee decreeth, that if any hard queſtions did ariſe, they ſhould bee referred to the ſeat Apoſtolicall at Rome: but if Anacletus dyed under Domitian, at what time Iohn the Apoſtle was alive, to whom rather ſhould the deciding of hard queſtions belong, than to ſo worthy an Apoſtle? Secondly, alleaging out of the 4. chap. of the 1. epiſt. of S. Peter, he uſeth the vulgar tranſlation, which was not then extant. Thirdly, in this epiſtle is cited the whole 3. chap. of the 1. of S. Iohn, verbatim to very ſmall purpoſe: ſo that the author of this epiſtle ſhould ſeeme to be a man of no great judgement.

10 The ſecond epiſtle of Anacletus, commeth out of the ſame forge: for firſt he affirmeth, that Iames ſurnamed Iuſtus, was by Peter, Iames, and Iohn, ordained Archbiſhop of Jeruſalem: when as the ſame Iames, which is held to have been Biſhop of Jeruſalem, is the very ſame, that is named with Peter and Iohn, Galath. 2. Secondly, this author ſaith, that the Apoſtles appointed 72. Diſciples, whereas they were ordained by Chriſt himſelfe. Thirdly, in the end of the epiſtle he calleth the author of the booke called Eccleſiaſticus, a Prophet, and yet in the 84. Canon of the Apoſtles, it is rejected out of the number of the Canonicall Scriptures.

The third epiſtle followeth, which giveth alſo juſt cauſe of ſuſpition: firſt, he affirmeth, that Abilius ſucceeded Mark in Alexandria, whereas Anianus firſt ſucceeded, then Abilius: hee ſaith alſo, that Peter made Ignatius Biſhop of Antioch, whereas Zaccheus and Evodius came betweene Peter and Ignatius. Secondly, this author deriveth the name of Peter (Cephas) of the Greeke word, which ſignifieth an head, whereas he is ſo called of a ſtone. Thirdly, he conſtantly avoucheth, that neither Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles appointed any more than two orders of prieſts and deacons: whereas in the 25. Canon of the Apoſtles, mention is made of lecturers, and ſingers: Wherefore, either thoſe Canons are none of the Apoſtles, or this is none of Anacletus epiſtle: for they are contrary one to the other.

12 Evariſtus followeth: firſt, hee is ſaid to have decreed, that no prieſt ſhould be ordained without a title: but it is not like that the Church of Rome was then in the dayes of perſecution divided into Cures and pariſhes, whereof they ſhould have their titles. Secondly, he decreeth concerning the manner of conſecrating Churches; when as yet in thoſe firſt perſecutions, there were no Churches nor Oratories permitted unto the Chriſtians. Thirdly, alſo hee willeth that none but altars of ſtone ſhould be conſecrated, whereas it is certaine, that untill Auguſtines time, and long after, the altars were made of wood, and not of ſtone: upon theſe and the like reaſons this decretall is doubted of, and not without cauſe of us refuſed.

13 The decretals of Alexander ſeeme to be counterfeit: firſt, in citing places out of the old teſtament, the author followeth Hieromes tranſlation: ſecondly, they containe no matter of conſolation, or doctrine fit for thoſe times: and therefore Caranza, who hath ſummed the decretals, out of the ſecond and third epiſtles hath collected nothing, as not finding any thing therein worthy to bee noted. Thirdly, the epiſtles beare date, when Trajanus and Ælianus were Conſuls, which was never; for Trajanus and Africanus, and Ælianus, and Vetus, were Conſuls together.

14 The decretals aſcribed to Sixtus, are of the ſame ſort: firſt, hee thus beginneth: Sixtus univerſalis Apoſtolicæ eccleſiæ Epiſcopus: Sixtus the univerſall Biſhop of the Apoſtolike Church: but this title of univerſall Biſhop begun after Gregory his time: ſecondly, they beare date when Adrianus and Verus were Conſuls: who, if any credit bee to bee given to Marianus Scotus, and Haloander, who have exactly collected the yeeres of the Conſuls, were never in that office together: but with Verus was joyned in office Servianus. Thirdly, in the firſt epiſtle he calleth Salomon the author of Eccleſiaſticus, whereas the 84. Canon of the Apoſtles rehearſeth but three bookes of Salomons, as the truth is, the Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, and the Canticles.

15 Teleſphorus decrees are alſo doubted of: firſt, he is ſaid to have decreed, that men ſhould faſt ſeven full weeks before Eaſter, but in the 68. Canon of the Apoſtles, the Lenten faſt is limited to 40 dayes: ſecondly, hee ordained that Maſſe or ſervice ſhould not bee ſaid before the third houre of the day, whereas it is certaine, that the Chriſtians in thoſe dayes had their Antelucanos hymnos, their ſongs before day: thirdly, they beare date, when Antoninus and Marcus were Conſuls, who were never together in that office, but Antoninus Pius and Brutius Praſens were colleagues.

16 Hyginus decretals are alſo worthily ſuſpected: Firſt, he is ſaid firſt to have inſtituted the degrees of orders, whereas in the 25. Canon of the Apoſtles, mention is made of ſingers, readers, deacons, &c. Secondly, in his firſt epiſtle hee affirmeth the firſt epiſtle of Saint Iohn to have been written to the Parthians, whereas in the authenticall Greeke it is inſcribed, the Catholike or univerſall epiſtle. Thirdly, in his ſecond epiſtle, he thus writeth: Papa Hyginus, &c. The Pope Hyginus to the Athenians, when as yet the name Papa was not appropriate to that ſea: and it is not like, that he being a Grecian himſelfe, and writing to the Greekes, would write in Latine: fourthly, he thus writeth, Apoſtolicæ ſedis juſſionibus inobedientem ſuſcipere non poſſumus: We may not receive any that is diſobedient to the Apoſtolike Sea: whereas it is certaine, that neither then, nor at any time after, the Greeke Church was obedient to the Sea of Rome. Fifthly, the epiſtles are dated when Camerinus and Magnus were Conſuls, which was never.

17 The epiſtles of Pius the firſt are not without cauſe called in queſtion: firſt, in the ſecond epiſtle he decreeth, that he which alienated the Church lands, ſhould bee held guiltie of ſacrilege: when as yet in thoſe grievous times of perſecution, the Church was endued with no lands or poſſeſſion: ſecondly, in the firſt epiſtle, he ordaineth, that the people ſhould not accuſe the Biſhop: but Biſhops ſhould bee left to the judgement of God: whereas in thoſe dayes, every common and vile perſon might draw the Chriſtian Biſhops before the heathen Judges. Thirdly, in the ſecond epiſtle, the ſixth chapter of the firſt to the Corinthians, is alleaged thoroughout with ſmall judgement, and to as ſmall purpoſe: and a great part of this epiſtle word for word, is taken out of the ſecond epiſtle of Anacletus, ſo that it is evident, that the decretals were patched together by ſome one man. Fourthly, the date of the epiſtles is in the Conſulſhip of Clarus and Severus, who were never fellow Conſuls together.

18 Anicetus epiſtle is ſuſpected of forgerie. Firſt, he affirmeth out of the ſecond of Anacletus, that Peter, Iames, and Iohn, made Iames, ſirnamed Iuſtus, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, which before I ſhewed to be a great error, unleſſe they will make two of that name Biſhops there. Secondly, he hath divers decrees not fit for that time: as how that a Biſhop ſhould be conſecrate with no fewer than three, that an Archbiſhop ſhould bee ordained by all his ſuffraganes: but it is not like, that in thoſe dayes, when they could not bee ſure of their life, that they had leiſure to take order for the dignities of the Church: as alſo hee decreeth, that Clergie men ſhould bee ſhaven round upon the crowne: but when there was ſuch ſhaving and cutting off of heads on every ſide, and killing of Chriſtians, who would thinke that they had any liſt to conſider of the ſhaving and cutting their haire. Thirdly, the epiſtle is dated, when Gallicanni and Ruffinus were Conſuls, which was never, for Damaſus in his pontificall joyneth Gallicanus and Vetius, Praſeus and Ruffinus together.

19 The decretals of Victor are of the ſame ſtampe. Firſt, hee calleth the Church of Rome, univerſall, which title was not knowne untill Gregorie his time. Secondly, hee maketh mention of Primats, Metropolitans, and of their dioceſſe: but Dionyſius, that followed long after, firſt brought in the diſtinction of pariſhes, and dioceſſe. Thirdly, in this epiſtle, the 50. and 51. chapter of Eſay are cited almoſt thoroughout, with no judgement at all: ſo that it ſhould ſeeme by theſe unneceſſarie and unfit allegations uſed in moſt of the decretals, that it was one mans worke to cobble them together.

20 Zepherinus in his epiſtle decreeth, that there ſhould be no leſſe than 72. witneſſes againſt a Biſhop; but in the 74. Canon of the Apoſtles, two or three witneſſes are allowed to be ſufficient: ſecondly, he would have the greater cauſes to be reſerved for the Sea of Rome: but it is unlike, that they had then leiſure to ſtrive for preeminence, and primacie of their Seas, when as they were hardly ſuffered to live.

21 Calixtus in his ſecond epiſtle confuteth them that denied to receive them that were fallen, which was the error of Novatus, which ſprung up long after in the time of Cornelius: ſo that this epiſtle came before his time.

22 Urbanus followeth, whoſe epiſtle ſeemeth to bee of the ſame credit with the reſt: firſt, hee taketh upon him to correct the decree of the Apoſtles, Acts 4. concerning the ſelling of their lands, and bringing the price thereof to the Apoſtles: now ſaith hee, it is found a more profitable way, to give the lands and poſſeſſions themſelves unto the Church, than the price thereof. Secondly, hee decreed, that all the Church veſſels ſhould bee of ſilver, and gave himſelfe 25. peeces of plate to the Church: but it may bee doubted, whether thoſe holy Biſhops and Martyrs, that were pinched with hunger, thirſt, impriſonment, baniſhment, were ſo well ſtored with ſilver, eſpecially, ſeeing till Zepherinus time, the next but one before Vrbane, all the veſſels were of wood, which Zepherinus altered to glaſſe veſſels. Thirdly, he approveth that cuſtome, that the Biſhops ſeat ſhould bee ſet up aloft, and erected as a throne in the Church: whereas in the Councell of Antioch, where Paulus Samoſatenus was condemned, it was miſliked, Quod tribunal ſibi in excelſioribus collocari in Eccleſia juſſit, Becauſe he commanded his tribunall to bee ſet up aloft in the Church: and is it like in thoſe times, when Chriſtian Biſhops were brought forth to the ſtage and ſcaffold to bee executed, that they ſo much cared to make themſelves ſtages in the Church? Fourthly, the date alſo of this epiſtle bewrayeth it: for it is dated in the Nones of September, when Antoninus and Alexander were Conſuls, which cannot bee, for Calixtus his predeceſſor, dated his ſecond epiſtle in the Ides of October, the ſame men being Conſuls, and his firſt, the eleventh day before the Calends of December in the ſame yeere; and if Vrbanus epiſtle were written the September before, then it was written before the epiſtles of Calixtus, which is not like, ſeeing Calixtus was Biſhop almoſt ſix yeeres before Vrbane: neither doe wee find, that Antoninus and Alexander were more than once Conſuls together.

23 Pontianus in his epiſtle writeth thus: Chriſt our Lord, and Peter, in whoſe cauſes you beſtow your ſelves, reward you with everlaſting life, &c. Is it like, that worthy Martyr would have uttered ſuch blaſphemie, as to make Peter together with Chriſt, patrons of eternall life, and to dye in Peters cauſe, as well as Chriſts? this alſo is contrary to the ſtile of his predeceſſors, as Clemens in the end of his ſecond epiſtle, ſaith not, God and S. Peter, Sed Deus te incolumem cuſtodiat, God keepe you in health: and Anacletus in the end of his firſt epiſtle: Soli Deo ſalvatori per Dominum Ieſum gloria: To God only our Saviour through Ieſus Chriſt, bee all glory. Wherefore it is manifeſt, that the name of Pontianus is here much abuſed.

24 Antherus in his epiſtle ſpeaketh much of the inthronizing of Biſhops, which every man may ſee to have been unfit matter to handle in that time.

25 Concerning Fabianus decretals, we have theſe exceptions. Firſt, his firſt epiſtle was made by ſome barbarous writer: for there ſhall you find, Diaconibus, for Diaconis, and, ſe nocentes, for ſibi nocentes, neither good Latine, nor good conſtruction, againſt their owne decrees, for, Falſa latinitas vitiat reſcriptum Papa, Falſe latine makes the Popes bull void: as Lucius decreed, writing thus: I doe heare that one hath preſented unto you letters of his abſolution, as from the Apoſtolike Sea, Quibus quoniam manifeſtum continent in conſtructione peccatum, fidem te nolumus adhibere: To the which, becauſe there is a manifeſt fault in conſtruction, wee would have you give no credit: wherfore according to this rule, becauſe this decretall of Fabian faileth in grammaticall conſtruction, wee are doubtfull to receive it. Secondly, in his ſecond epiſtle, hee ſaith, that Chriſt inſtituted Chriſme after his laſt ſupper: which is a meere forgerie, no ſuch thing being found in the Goſpell. Thirdly, in the third epiſtle hee giveth this rule, that if a Biſhop erre in faith, he muſt be corrected, but if he otherwiſe offend, he muſt be borne with: this is contrary to the 42. Canon of the Apoſtles, where it is thus decreed, that if a Prieſt be given unto drunkennes, or dice play, he ſhould be depoſed: and not for hereſie only, as this counterfeit Fabian would have it. Fourthly, this decree is fathered upon Fabian, that men ſhould communicate thrice in the yeere, but otherwiſe in the ninth Canon of the Apoſtles: they muſt communicate as often as they enter into the Church, and heare the Scriptures: wherefore theſe being ſo contrary each to other, either they muſt needs bee counterfeit Canons, or this a counterfeit Fabian.

26 We come now to the epiſtles of Cornelius, which untruly beare his name. Firſt, for that the ſtile of this epiſtle is rude and barbarous, unlike to have fallen out of Cornelius pen, whom Hierome reporteth to have been an eloquent man. Secondly, this decretall alſo provideth for appeales to bee made to Rome, which is the thing that moſt of theſe forged decrees doe aime at; whereby it may be gathered, that they were long after coyned by ſome ambitious Biſhops of Rome, that ſought the advancement of that Sea, and not by thoſe worthie Martyrs, that had no leiſure, nor deſire in thoſe troubleſome times, to thinke of any ſuch matter. Thirdly, he writeth in his firſt epiſtle, that at the requeſt of Lucina a noble Matron, he tranſlated the body of Peter, and buried it in the temple of Apollo in the Vaticane, which is untrue; for Damaſus in his pontificall reporteth, that Peter was firſt buried in the temple of Apollo: and in the life of Anacletus, ſucceſſor to Clemens, it is remembred in theſe words, Hic memoriam beati Petri conſtruxit & compoſuit: Hee did build a tombe or monument, or remembrance of bleſſed Peter. Againe, in the lives of Evariſtus Sixtus, Teleſphorus, Victor, and others it is recorded, Sepultus eſt juxta corpus beati Petri in Vaticano: He and he was buried beſide the body of S. Peter, in the Vaticane: if the body of Peter then were buried before in the Vaticane, it is not true, that Cornelius removed it thither. Fourthly, in the end of the ſecond epiſtle, hee giveth this caveat, Sacramenta fieri prohibeas: You ſhall forbid any oath to bee taken: in which prohibition he ſeemeth to take away the uſe of an oath, which Cornelius would never have done. Fiftly, this alſo is no ſmall conjecture, that whereas Cyprian writing to Cornelius, uſeth another tranſlation beſide the vulgar: Cornelius followeth Hieroms tranſlation, which as yet was not heard of: judge now indifferently reader, whether there be not cunning in foyſting theſe writings under theſe ancient Biſhops names.

27 Lucius epiſtle alſo masketh under a falſe name. Firſt, hee writeth that the Romane Church is mother of all other Churches, which is untrue: for Rome received the light of the Goſpell from the Eaſt Churches; and Jeruſalem, as the Apoſtle ſaith, is mother of us all, Galath. 4. 26. according to the prophecie of Eſay, The law ſhall come from Sion, and the word of God from Jeruſalem. Secondly, Gratiane aſcribeth this decree to Lucius, that no Miniſter after his orders, ſhould enter into the chamber of his owne wife; contrary to the doctrine of the Apoſtle, who giveth unto every man without exception, power over the body of his wife, 1 Cor. 7. 2. It is not like that thoſe good Biſhops would ever have enacted ſuch things. Thirdly, a great part of this epiſtle, from that place: Sed quicquid de comprovincialium coepiſcoporum cauſis, &c. unto that ſentence, Glorificetur Trinitas in ſecula, is taken out word for word, out of the firſt decretall of Calixtus: but it is not like, that this learned Biſhop, to whom Cyprian writeth, was driven to uſe ſo beggerly a ſhift, as to borrow from other mens writings. Fourthly, hee citeth the 11. chapter of Eccleſiaſticus throughout, without any judgement: which is a thing commonly uſed in all theſe decretals, which argueth that they all came from one barren braine, who wanting matter, was conſtrained thus to patch up his paltrie pelfe.

Decr.p.1.d.81. cap.19.

28 Stephanus decretals are thus alſo diſproved. Firſt, in his firſt epiſtle hee decreeth, that none which are not, corpore integri, of a perfect body, ſhould be admitted to orders contrary to the 76. Canon of the Apoſtles: if any man want an eye, or have a broken legge, if he bee worthie, hee may notwithſtanding be made a Biſhop. Secondly, in the end of the ſecond epiſtle, hee hath theſe words: which thing is forbidden both by lawes eccleſiaſticall and ſecular; namely, that no accuſation ſhould bee laid againſt Biſhops, till they were reſtored: but at this time there were no ſecular lawes made in the favour of Chriſtian Biſhops, but all againſt them. Thirdly, hee maketh mention of Primats, Archbiſhops, Metropolitans, which names and titles ſavouring of ambition, rather than of perſecution, may give us to ſuppoſe theſe epiſtles not to have been written by that Stephanus: and the Primats hee would have appointed in thoſe places, Ad quorum Primates, & gentiles pro majoribus negotiis appellabant: Whither the Gentiles were wont to appeale in their greater cauſes: where this cunning author bewrayeth himſelfe, for he ſpeaketh of the policie of the Gentiles, as now abrogated, according to the patterne whereof, hee would have the Eccleſiaſticall government deviſed: but as yet the Ethnik policie remained in force. Fourthly, there is alſo fathered upon this Stephanus, this decree, that none ſhould be choſen Pope, but of the Cardinals: whereas it is certaine, that the name and office of Cardinals was not yet knowne in Rome, nor for ſome hundred yeares after: and contrarie to this decree, Dionyſius, that was the ſecond Biſhop after this Stephanus of a Monke was made Pope: it is like they would not ſo ſoone have tranſgreſſed this decree, if there had been any ſuch.

29 The decretall epiſtles alſo of Sixtus the ſecond, are forged. Firſt, concerning appellations to bee made to Rome, he thus writeth: Cujus diſpoſitioni majores cauſas Eccleſiaſticas antiqua Apoſtolorum, eorumq́; ſucceſſorum, atq́; canonum reſervavit authoritas: To whoſe diſpoſition the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, and the Canons have reſerved the greater cauſes of the Church: but this is falſe, that the Apoſtles made any ſuch reſervation, for then Cyprian before this time would not have thus written to Cornelius, epiſt. 3. Oportet eos, quibus præſumus non circumcurſare, ſed agere illic cauſam ſuam, & niſi paucis deſperatis & perditis minor eſſe videtur authoritas Epiſcoporum in Africa conſtitutorum, &c. It is not fit, that they which are under our government, ſhould run up and downe, but have their cauſe handled there, where they may have both accuſers and witneſſes; unleſſe perhaps unto ſome deſperate fellowes, the Biſhops of Africa ſeeme to bee of leſſe authority: Cyprian would not have thus written, if there had bin any conſtitution of the Church to the contrary. Secondly, in his 2. epiſtle he chargeth the rulers of the Gentiles, by the authority of S. Peter, to reſtore unto the brethren, what they had violently taken from them. Si non vultis vos & Principes veſtri à collegio noſtro ſeparari: Unleſſe you and your Princes thinke good to be ſeparate or excommunicate from our colledge or company: but is it like that Sixtus would have thus ſpent his breath in vaine, to terrifie the heathen with excommunication, and the authority of Peter? what cared they for either, or how could Sixtus by this meanes deliver his brethren, who himſelfe notwithſtanding theſe menacies and threatnings, loſt his head under the tyrants Decius and Valerian? Thirdly, both the epiſtles beare date, when Decius and Valerianus were Conſuls: he might aſwell have dated them Græcis calendis, the Calends of the Greeks: for Decius and Valerianus were never Conſuls together, but Valerianus and Galienus, as the epiſtle of Stephen beareth date.

30 Dionyſius followeth, who is ſaid firſt to have diſtinguiſhed pariſhes and dioceſes; if this bee ſo, how commeth it to paſſe, that Sixtus his predeceſſor thus decreed, that if any man were injured of the Metropolitane, he ſhould complaine to the Primate of the Dioceſſe? Epiſt. 1. and in the 13. Canon of the Apoſtles, there is a decree againſt Prieſts, relinquentes propriam parœchiam, that left their owne pariſh: there were then both pariſhes and Dioceſſe before Dionyſius time; if Dionyſius decretall bee true, then are the other falſe; if they bee true, then is the other falſe, let them chuſe which part they will.

31 Felix the firſt is the next, whoſe epiſtles decretall are worthy no better credit. Firſt, in his ſecond epiſtle he confuteth their errour, which did affirme, that the Son was leſſe than the Father, which was the hereſie of Arrius, who ſprang up almoſt fortie yeeres after in Sylveſters time; ſo that it ſhould ſeeme this epiſtle was borne before the time: Secondly, in the firſt epiſtle, the 66. chapter of Eſay is cited almoſt thoroughout without any judgement: and in the third epiſtle, a great part is taken out of the decretall of Lucius: who ſeeth not that theſe decretals were all one mans worke, hee uſeth every where the like patching and peecing: Thirdly, the date alſo ſheweth forgerie: the firſt epiſtle is dated when Claudius & Aurelianus were Conſuls, which was never: the ſecond epiſtle beareth date the fifth day before the Ides of Auguſt, when Claudius and Paternus were conſuls, and yet Dionyſius his predeceſſor dated his ſecond epiſtle the fifth day before the Ides of September, under the ſame Conſuls: ſo that by this account, Dionyſius writeth his epiſtle after his ſucceſſor, that is, when hee was dead: for I thinke Auguſt muſt goe before September: this geare doth but ſlenderly hang together.

32 Eutychianus followeth, againſt whoſe decretals we doe thus object. Firſt, in his firſt epiſtle he thus decreeth: Faba tantum & uva, & cætera, quæ Apoſtoli conſtituerunt, ſuper altare offerantur: That beanes only and grapes, and other things appointed by the Apoſtles, ſhould bee offered upon the altar: whereas in the 3. Canon of the Apoſtles, quite contrary it is decreed, that hee which ſhould offer, legumina, pulſe, as peaſe or beanes upon the Altar, ſhould be depoſed. Secondly, in the ſecond epiſtle are alleaged the whole firſt chapter of the epiſtles to the Epheſ. the 17. chapter of Saint Iohns Goſpell thorowout, and the fourth chapter of the firſt epiſtle of S. Iohn: I thinke it cannot be found, that any of the ancient learned Fathers of the Church, or any other good writer, uſed thus without judgement to heape Scripture together: which is rather to write out Scripture, than to write upon Scripture; but the author cannot diſſemble, every where hee ſheweth himſelfe the ſame. Thirdly, in the ſecond epiſtle, there is this prohibition: Prohibemus, ut nulla cauſa à judicibus Eccleſiaſticis audiantur, quæ legibus prohibita eſſe noſcuntur: Wee forbid that Eccleſiaſticall Judges heare no cauſes which are forbidden by the lawes. But as yet this diſtinction of ſecular and Eccleſiaſticall cauſes was not brought in: when as the Chriſtians for their conſcience and religion, which was an Eccleſiaſticall cauſe, were brought before the temporall Judges, and condemned by their ſecular lawes.

33 Caius in his epiſtle decretall, willeth and commandeth all difficult queſtions in all provinces whatſoever, emerging to bee referred to the Sea Apoſtolike. How is it like, that this was decreed by Caius, when as above an 100. yeares after, anno. 420. in the ſixth Councell of Carthage, where Auguſtine was preſent, this privilege was denied to the Sea of Rome, and the contrary concluded, that no appeals ſhould bee made thither from forraigne countries. Againe, the ſame Caius decreed in theſe words; Nemo Epiſcopum apud ſeculares judices accuſare præſumat: That no man ſhould preſume to accuſe a Biſhop before ſecular Judges. But in thoſe cruell dayes, nothing was more common, than to ſee Chriſtian Biſhops drawne before ſecular Judges, and put to moſt cruell death: wherefore this decree ſavoureth not of thoſe times.

34 Marcellus epiſtle to get more authority with the Reader, is admixed with a great part of S. Pauls epiſtle to the Epheſians, word for word. Secondly, how is it like that Marcellinus, who dyed under Diocleſian, could write of conſubſtantiality of the divine perſons, when that controverſie and tearme was not heard of in the Church, before the Nicen Councell, which was 23. yeare after him. Thirdly, the ſame Marcellinus is made thus to write: Non licet Imperatori, vel cuipiam pietatem cuſtodienti, &c. It is not lawfull for the Emperour, or any man elſe profeſſing piety, to preſume any thing againſt the divine lawes: but at that time there was no Emperour which profeſſed piety or religion.

35 Marcellus in his ſecond epiſtle written unto Maxentius the tyrant, writeth thus: Synodum abſque hujus ſanctæ ſedis authoritate, &c. You cannot call a Synod of Biſhops without the authority of this Sea, though you may aſſemble ſome Biſhops together: this was very impertinent matter to write unto that tyrant of; who neither loved the company of Chriſtian Biſhops ſo well, as to aſſemble them together: and if hee had been diſpoſed ſo to doe, he would have done it beſide Marcellus leave; and notwithſtanding this decree, wee find that many yeeres after the Emperours tooke upon them by their owne rightfull authority to call Biſhops together, and to ſummon the Popes themſelves to their Councels: this decree alſo is fathered upon Marcellus, that no Biſhop ſhould hee brought before a ſecular Judge: Et magiſtratus, qui hoc jubere auſus eſt, amiſſione rerum plectetur: And that magiſtrate which ſhould bee ſo bold as command any ſuch thing, ſhould be puniſhed with the loſſe of all he had: is not this very ridiculous, that the perſecuted Biſhops, and namely this Marcellus, who by Maxentius was ſtripped of all he had, and conſtrained to be a dung-farmer unto cattell, ſhould preſcribe ſuch lawes to their perſecutors, and lay civill and ſecular mulcts upon them? and if according to their owne law, Iuriſdictio nullius videretur momenti, ſi coercitionem aliquam non haberet: That juriſdiction is of no force, which hath no ſtrength to puniſh: then were thoſe decrees in vaine, which they had no power to execute.

Decr. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 29. cap. 28 Innocen. 3.

36 Euſebius his epiſtles alſo ſeeme to bee counterfeit. Firſt, in his decretall hee writeth thus: In ſede Apoſtolica extra maculam ſemper Catholica ſervata eſt religio: In the Apoſtolike Sea, alwayes the Catholike religion hath been preſerved without any ſpot or blemiſh; and yet his late predeceſſor Marcellinus, within his time and remembrance, did fall grievouſly in ſacrificing to Idols, though afterward he repented thereof, and was condemned for the ſame, and expulſed the City by the Councell of 300. Biſhops; how then could Euſebius (this fault and error of his predeceſſor being ſo freſh in memory) ſo report of the Apoſtolike Sea, that it was never ſtained with any blemiſh in the faith? hence then it is apparant, that this decretall was none of his doing. Secondly, in the end of the firſt epiſtle, the whole fifth chapter of the firſt of S. Iohn is alleaged: in the ſecond epiſtle the 19. and 20. chapters of Eccleſiaſticus thorowout, and in the third epiſtle, the 14. and 15. chapters of the ſame booke are rehearſed to very ſmall purpoſe: whereby wee ſee that this author keepeth his old wont in heaping together of Scripture, and above the reſt, he ſeemeth to make account of the Apocryphall booke Eccleſiaſticus, which is cited in moſt of the decretals. Thirdly, in the third epiſtle this Euſebius ſaith, that the Croſſe of Chriſt was found in his time: which ſeemeth not to bee ſo; for the croſſe, if the ſtory may be credited, was found by Helena in Conſtantines reigne, when as hee had vanquiſhed the idolatrous tyrants, and began to reforme religion, and purge out the relikes of idolatry: but Euſebius beginning in the yeere 309. as it is in the pontificall, & ſitting in that Sea ſix yeeres, exceedeth not the reigne of Maxentius the tyrant, under whom it is not like that the Croſſe was found. Fourthly, the ſecond epiſtle of Euſebius beareth date the ninth before the Calends of October, when Conſtantine was Conſull, and the ſecond is dated the eighth before the Calends of September, under his conſulſhip: ſo that by this reckoning, the laſt epiſtle was written firſt: neither was Conſtantinus at any time Conſull alone.

37 Milchiades decretals alſo are not without great ſuſpition of deceitfull dealing. Firſt, he preferreth the Sacrament of Confirmation before Baptiſme, an humane conſtitution before a Sacrament of Chriſts making, this Milchiades would never have done. Secondly, here alſo the counterfeit author forgetteth not his old veine, in bringing forth Scripture in heapes, as the 2. and 3. chapters of the epiſtle to the Coloſſians: by this unskilfull alleaging of Scripture, it is eaſie to diſcerne one and the ſame author in moſt of the decretals. Thirdly, the date alſo bewrayeth the forgery: Voluſiano, Rufino clariſſimis viris conſulibus: When Voluſianus, and Rufinus, thoſe excellent men were Conſuls, but theſe two made but one Conſull: for Voluſianus Rufinus was one man, and Annianus was his colleague in his Conſulſhip, if wee may credit Gregorius Haloander, who hath exactly ſet downe the yeeres of the Conſuls.

And thus far have I laid open the nakedneſſe of theſe baſtard writings, and deviſed decretals, which are falſely fathered upon thoſe ancient Biſhops and worthy Martyrs, as it may appeare to any man not wilfully blinded, that ſhall diligently peruſe and examine them, for either the falſe date, wherein moſt of them are found halting, or the barbarous ſtile, the error or repugnance of doctrine, the unskilfull alleaging of Scripture, the borrowing, or rather robbing of one another, the unfit matter for the time, the generall conſpiracie in advancing the Sea of Rome, the mentioning of matters not incident to thoſe times, but falling out afterward: theſe and other ſuch like evident marks, may eaſily diſcover the craft and deceit of the author of theſe decretals; which are moſt like to have been later fanſies of ſome devoted clawbackes to the Sea of Rome, and for more credit ſake, are thruſt under the names of theſe holy Biſhops and Martyrs: I will now proceed to diſcover ſome other of their forged writings.

38 Dionyſius booke de eccleſ. Hierarchia, which commonly is thruſt upon Dionyſius Areopagita, who was converted by S. Paul, is worthily ſuſpected not to bee of that authors doing, for his writings could not have been unknowne to Euſebius, Hierome, Gennadius, who continued the catalogue of the principall writers of the Church for 500. yeeres after Chriſt. And Dionyſius Biſhop of Corinth, who lived in the reigne of Commodus, about Anno 185. writing of Dionyſius Areopagita, declareth how he was firſt converted to the faith by S. Paul, as it is in the Acts of the Apoſtles, and afterward was made Biſhop of Athens: but of his booke de Hierarch. he hath not one word, Euſeb. lib. 4. cap. 23. Gulielmus Grocinus did read in his open lecture in the Church of S. Paul, this booke de eccleſ. Hierarch. who at the firſt entrance vehemently inveighed againſt thoſe that held opinion, that Dionyſius Areopagita was not author of that booke: but after a few weekes, being better adviſed, hee altered his minde, and proteſted openly, that in his judgement, Dionyſius Areopag. mentioned in the Acts, was not author of that booke, Ex Eraſm. ad Pariſienſ.

39. 40. Hiſtoria paſſionis of S. Andrew, and S. Martialis epiſt. ad Burdegalenſ. are but counterfeit fables. Fulk. Heb. 10. ſect. 9.

41 No better is that pamphlet, which goeth under Linus name, intituled de Petri paſſione. Which if it were true that is here reported, Peter was moſt juſtly condemned, for entiſing and leading away women from their husbands: Beza annot. Ioh. 21. verſ. 19. againſt the doctrine of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles.

42 The Leiturgie of S. Iames is but a late deviſed toy, for Balſamon Patriarke of Antioch ſaith, that the Leiturgie of S. Iames was not extant in his time, but utterly worne away. Fulk. annot. 1 Corinth. 11. ſect. 10.

No marvell then, if theſe good fellowes make it not dainty to belie the ancient Biſhops and Martyrs, with phantaſticall and forged pamphlets, ſeeing that they preſume without bluſhing, to utter their forgeries, both of the Apoſtles themſelves and under their names: not much unlike to the old heretiks the Manichees, and others, that ſcattered abroad hereticall devices under the Apoſtles names, as the Apocalypſe of S. Paul, whereof S. Auguſtine maketh mention, Tract. in Iohan. 98. Another booke of S. Thomas the Apoſtle, Auguſt. epiſt. 38. Certaine epiſtles fathered upon the Apoſtles, Auguſt. in Pſalm. 47. Yea they contained not themſelves here, but in their fooliſh conceit deviſed fables more ancient than the flood, as the booke of Henoch, whereof Auguſtine ſpeaketh, De civit. Dei lib. 18. c. 38. And yet were more impudent: for they alleaged an epiſtle, which they ſay was of Chriſts owne writing: Auguſt. cont. Fauſt. lib. 38. cap. 4. I would now our adverſaries did not give us occaſion, by theſe imaginary and deceitfull writings of theirs, which they would notwithſtanding to be reputed as ſound and ſubſtantiall, to compare them in this reſpect to thoſe heretiks of elder time.

Concerning thoſe decretall epiſtles before rehearſed, Cardinall Cuſanus thinketh, that they which are aſcribed to Clemens and Anacletus are apocryphall and forged. 3. Concord. Catholic. 12. and Contius proveth by many reaſons, that all the decretall epiſtles of all the Popes untill Silveſter the 1. for the ſpace of 300. yeeres are falſe. diſtinct. 16. c. ſeptuagint.

Let us now ſee what other phantaſies they have, which doe maske under the name of ancient writers.

43 In the Leiturgie (that beareth the name of Chryſoſtome) which the Papiſts call Chryſoſtomes Maſſe, as it is ſet forth by Claudius de Sanctis, there is a prayer for Pope Nicholas, and the Emperor Alexius, whereof the one was neere 500. yeeres, the other 700. yeeres after Chryſoſtome: Judge therefore (Chriſtian Reader) whether it be likely to be Chryſoſtomes.

44 The Leiturgie bearing the name of Baſil, ſheweth it ſelfe to be none of his, becauſe it obſerveth not that forme of doxologie, that is, praiſe to the Holy Ghoſt, with the prepoſition σὺν, which Baſil doth ſo earneſtly maintaine to be derived from the Apoſtles tradition, de ſpirit. Sanct. cap. 27. 28.

45 There are foure books interſerted among Cyrils commentaries upon Iohn, which were compoſed by Iodocus Clictouaus, to ſupply ſo many books of Cyrils wanting: yet are they commonly alleaged by our adverſaries in Cyrils name.

46 Paulinus Biſhop of Nola in his epiſtles forged: For epiſtle 11. he writeth thus of the wood of the Croſſe: That it hath ſuch an incorruptible vertue, that it ſuſtaineth no diminiſhing, but continueth, as though it had never been touched, men daily taking part of it. Which is ſo groſſe a fable, that the Cenſors appointed according to the Councell of Trent, in their Ind. expurgat. commanded it to bee put out.

47 Likewiſe under Cyprians name there are divers books extant, which without queſtion were none of his: as the treatiſe of the invention of Iohn Baptiſts head, wherein mention is made of Athanaſius and Theophilus, Biſhops of Alexandria, and of King Pipinus, which were all long after Cyprians time.

48 The expoſition of the Symbole, wherein Donatus is named an arch-hereticke, is not S. Cyprians, who lived before Donatus.

49 The booke de duplici Martyrio, giveth occaſion of ſuſpition, wherein wee find theſe words: Si quis miles in Cæſaris verba juratus ad Turcam profugeret: If any ſouldier being ſworne unto Cæſar, ſhould flee unto the Turke; but the mame of Turkes was not heard of in Cyprians time. The ſermon under Cyprians name, De cœna Domini, is confeſſed by Bellarmine to ſeeme not to bee his. lib. 2. de Euchariſt. c. 9.

How many books are foiſted into Auguſtines works, it were too long to rehearſe: for as hee in number of his works exceeded any one of the ancient doctors of the Church beſide, which are reckoned to 232. books, beſide his Homilies, and Epiſtles, which were more than as many againe: So fooliſh men have preſumed to be moſt bold with his writings, defiling his learned works with ridiculous additions of their owne. All I cannot, neither is it needfull in this place to recite: only for ſome triall of the matter, I will ſet downe theſe few.

50 The queſtions, Veteris & novi teſtamenti, are none of Auguſtines, for queſt. 21. it is affirmed that Melchiſedech was the holy Ghoſt, which opinion is hereſie with Auguſtine: and in his booke de hæreſib.

reſib. he numbreth the Melchiſedechians amongſt other heretiks. Therefore Auguſtine is not the author: and this Bellarmine confeſſeth, De Sacrament. lib. 2. cap. 10. yet is the authority of this booke urged by our Rhemiſts as ſound: Annot. 1 Corinth. ſect. 5.

51 Saint Auguſtine not the author of the ſer. de ſanctis, for the author of theſe Homilies alleageth the teſtimonies of Iſidorus, who lived about 200. yeeres after Auguſtine.

52 Auguſt. ſer. 91. and 251. none of Auguſtines: the author ſaith that the mighty men, when they come to Church, compell the prieſt to make ſhort his Maſſe: this manner agreed not with Auguſtines age.

53 The booke de viſitatione infirmorum, none of his: Eraſmus ſaith it is the ſpeech of a brabler, neither learned nor eloquent, and moſt impudently intituled to S. Auguſtine.

54 The 215. ſerm. de tempore, the treatiſe de rectitud. Cathol. converſat. none of Auguſtines. Fulk. annot. Galath. 4. ſect. 2.

55 The booke de dogmatib. eccleſiaſtic. none of Auguſtines, for the author of that booke excludeth thoſe from orders that had either more wives than one, or one concubine. By this rule Auguſtine could never have been a Biſhop, for he had two concubines. And many other beſide theſe are found to be counterfeit books, as hee that will take the paines to peruſe Eraſmus cenſures upon Auguſtines works, ſhall eaſily find.

56 There are certaine Homilies upon the Goſpels of the whole yeere, which goe under the name of Euſebius Emiſſenus, which Sixtus Senenſis thinketh to be counterfeit. Bibliothec. lib. 4. tit. Euſebius.

Euſebius.

57 Many books doe paſſe under Ambroſe name, that are ſuppoſed not to bee his; as Poſſevinus the Jeſuite reckoneth up tenne ſeverall books; as of the conflict of vertues and vices: a booke to Simplicianus, the expoſition of the faith, with other: Salmeron the Jeſuite rejecteth all his Commentaries upon S. Pauls epiſtles.

Append. Sacr. tit. Ambroſius. Tom. 3. diſp 19.

58 Athanaſius epiſtles are held to be forged by Sixtus Senenſis: yet are they urged by Bellarmine, lib. 1. de purgat. c. 6. The ſame Senenſis, and Poſſevinus have diſcovered divers hundred forged books of this kind.

Biblioth. lib. 4 tit. Athanaſ.

59 The laſt forgery, which I will charge our adverſaries withall in this place, ſhall be concerning the donation of Conſtantine, upon the which the Biſhop of Rome doth ground his ſupreme dominion and right over all the politicall government of the Weſt parts. The which ſaid donation is but a forged and deviſed deed, or inſtrument of their owne.

Biblioth. lib. 4. tit. Poſſevin. apparat. tot.

For the donation ſaith, that Conſtantine was baptized at Rome of Sylveſter, and the fourth day after his baptiſme, this patrimony was given before his battell againſt Maximinus and Licinius. Here are many untruths couched together. Firſt, becauſe the truth of the ſtory of Conſtantines baptiſme is otherwiſe reported by Euſebius, Hierome, Ruffin, Socrates, Theodoret, Sozomen, that Conſtantine was baptized at Nicomedia, not at Rome, and by Euſebius Biſhop of Nicomedia, not by Sylveſter, and not before that battell, but in the 31. yeere of his reigne, a little before his death. For thus Theodoret writeth: Conſtantinus Nicomedia baptizatus eſt pauſo ante mortem, diſtulerat enim uſque ad illud tempus, in Iordane fluvio hoc promereri deſiderans: Conſtantine was baptized at Nicomedia, a little before his death, for hee had deferred his baptiſme till that time, deſiring to have received it in the flood Jordane. Theodor. lib. 1. cap. 32. 2. Whereas the ſaid donation giveth juriſdiction to the Biſhop of Rome, over the foure Patriarchall Seas, whereof Conſtantinople is named to bee one: it is apparant, that before the battell with Maximinus, when as this donation ſhould bee made, Conſtantinople was not yet ſo called: for Sozomen writeth, Cùm omnia proſperè ei cederent, propriam voluit habere civitatem: When all things fared proſperouſly with him, he bethought himſelfe to have a city of his owne: and Alexander, who in the Nicene Councell diſputed againſt Arrius, is called Bizantii Pontifex, the Biſhop of Bizantium, which afterward was called Conſtantinople: it is certaine therefore, that at what time Conſtantinus encountred with Maximinus, the city was not yet called after his name. 3. In this donation, the princedome and preeminence is given unto Rome, over the foure patriarchall Seas, contrary to the ſixth Canon of the Nicene Councell, wherein, parilis mos, the like cuſtome is given to Rome, as to the reſt, and no more. 4. Conſtantine giveth Sylveſter authority over all Judea, Thracia, Grecia, &c. and yet for all this grant, Grecia was never ſubject or obedient unto Rome. 5. Sylveſter in this grant is called univerſalis Papa, which huge title was not hatched in Rome, and was long after by Gregory refuſed. 6. This donation ſaith, that Conſtantine tooke the crowne of gold and precious ſtone from his owne head, and offered it to Sylveſter, who refuſed it, and in ſtead thereof the Emperour with his owne hands ſet upon his head a white Phrygian bonnet, &c. What reaſon then have the Popes ſucceſſors to Sylveſter, to weare a triple, & more than an Emperiall crown, ſince their predeceſſor would not receive it? 7. It is ſaid, that Conſtantinus led Sylveſters horſe by the bridle, and held his ſtirrup: but the Biſhops of Rome were not yet growne to that inſolency: indeed Conſtantine did reverence the Chriſtian Biſhops, embracing them, and kiſſing their martyred parts: but this ſervile homage it is not like that either Conſtantine would have offered, or Sylveſter ſuffered. 8. Further, in the donation it followeth thus, Ecce tam palatium noſtrum, quàm Romanam urbem, & omnes occidentalium regionum provincias Sylveſtro contradimus, & relinquimus: I give and leave unto Sylveſter, my palace, the City of Rome, and all the Occidentall provinces: how can this bee true, when afterward in the diſtribution of his Empire amongſt his ſonnes, he gave unto Con-

Conſtantines donation forged.

Decr. part. 2. cauſ. 12. qu. 1. cap. 15.

ſtantinus his ſonne, the government of the Weſt parts. 9. Melchiades alſo maketh mention of this donation, and of the Nicen Synod, and yet he being Sylveſters predeceſſor, was dead before: we may ſee then of what credit this donation is. 10. Laſt of all, the donation beareth date, Domino noſtro Flavio Conſtantino Auguſto quater, & Gallicano, &c. Our Lord Flavius Conſtantinus being the fourth time Conſull, and Gallicanus: where firſt they acknowledge Conſtantinus their Lord; then as yet for all this donation, Sylveſter was not Lord of Rome, neither were Conſtantinus and Gallicanus at any time Conſuls together, but with Gallicanus was joyned in office Septimius Baſſus, and when Conſtantine was the fourth time Conſull, Licinius was his Colleague, being then alſo Conſull the fourth time. Cardinall Cuſanus ſaith: Sunt meo judicio illa ſcripta de Conſtantini donatione falſa: In my judgement thoſe writings of Conſtantines donation are Apocryphall. lib. 3. Concord. Cath. c. 2. Thus the donation of Conſtantine is found very weake: and if the Pope had no ſurer hold of his triple crowne, than by Conſtantines gift, and if preſcription did not helpe him more than right, and uſurpation more than Conſtantines donation, his crowne might ſoone be ſet beſide his head, and himſelfe beſide his cuſhion. But when he commeth, whoſe Scepter is the Scepter of righteouſneſſe, and who ſitteth in the throne that judgeth right, then will it be knowne who hath all this while uſurped the Imperiall crowne and office.

Now all this notwithſtanding, which we have not barely and nakedly affirmed, but I truſt, ſufficiently proved, and to the indifferent Reader by more than probable arguments demonſtrated, that our adverſaries have uſed much deceit, in conveying falſe and forged writings, under ancient authors names, yet they will needs beare the world in hand, that there is no ſuch matter, but that they are thoſe authors proper and peculiar works. Whereupon they are bold in every controverſie, as they have occaſion, to preſſe us with their light and vaine authorities.

As the conſtitution of Clemens, alleaged by the Rhemiſts, annot. Luk. 4. ſect. 1. Ignatius, Matth. 4. ſect. 2. and 1 Pet. 2. ſect. 6. Hippolytus Matth. 24. ſect. 5. Policarpus. Act. 6. ſect. 1. Decret. Alexandri. 1 Timoth. 4. ſect. 13. Milchiad. Fabian. Act. 8. ſect. 6. Dionyſi. Areop. ibid. S. Andrew, S. Martial. Heb. 10. ſect. 11. Leiturg. Iacob. Baſil. Chryſoſt. 1 Corinth. 11. ſect. 10. Iodoc. Clictov. for Cyril. Ioh. 11. ſect. 1. Paulinus. Iohn 19. ſect. 2.

Thus we ſee both the great boldnes of our adverſaries, in urging ſuch authorities which they know to be counterfeit, as alſo the apparant weaknes of their cauſe, that are conſtrained to uſe ſuch beggerly ſhifts. But let them uſe and urge theſe ſtragling runnagate and fatherleſſe books never ſo much, wee will ſtild hold us to this point, wherein they ſhall never bee able to diſprove us, that they doe deceive themſelves, and abuſe the world, in making men to beleeve that they are the fathers owne writings. Wee ſay therefore of theſe, and of all ſuch other books, as Auguſtine did of that which went in Henochs name: Libri iſti ob nimiam antiquitatem, rejiciuntur: Theſe books are too old to bee true: de civit. Dei, lib. 18. cap. 38. And concerning ſome of them, as thoſe which are fathered upon the Apoſtles, and them that followed in the next age, as Auguſtine ſaith of the epiſtle which the Manichees aſcribed to Chriſt: Si aliqua hujuſmodi epiſtola fuit, ab eis proferri potuit, qui illi adhærebant: So if they wrote any ſuch books, it is like they would have brought them to light, that were the Apoſtles ſchollers, contr. Fauſt. lib. 22. cap. 79. And of them all, and the reſt of that ſort, wee pronounce this ſentence with the ſame Father: Quæ proferuntur ab errantibus ſub nomine ipſorum, quia non ſunt ipſorum, improbantur, nec acceptantur ab eccleſia: Thoſe books which are brought forth under the name (of the Apoſtles, and other ancient writers) becauſe they are not theirs, are rejected and not received or acknowledged of the Church, in Pſalm. 130.

And as the Papiſts have dealt with mens ſayings and writings, offering forged & counterfeit ſtuffe, as if it were right and true: ſo have they uſed the like poeticall practice in faigning and deviſing of forged works and miracles: for the proofe whereof I referre the Reader to the former Treatiſe, p. 88. 89. there I have given inſtance of divers fabulous fictions; ſo that I may ſay of theſe deviſers as Tertullian of the Heathen Poets: Poetis nec vigilantibus credam: I will not beleeve the Poets (not only not in their dreames) but not when they are awake; lib. de anima.

Thus having in part declared (ſo much as I thought neceſſary for the matter in hand) how deceitfully our adverſaries have dealt with the world, giving them Quid pro quo, as we ſay, one thing for another in falſly entituling their frivolous pamphlets with grave and good authors names: I will ſpend a little time, before I leave this place, to ſhew how they have not only thruſt upon thoſe ancient doctors and fathers falſe writings, but have alſo falſified their good works, by putting in, and putting out, by clipping, changing, and altering lines, words, ſentences: And no marvell then, if by ſuch cunning (rather couſening ſleights) they make thoſe good authors to ſpeake what they liſt themſelves.

Anno 420. There was a Councell held in Africa, by 217. Biſhops, called the ſixth Councell of Carthage, whereat Auguſtine was preſent: unto this Councell ſent Zoſimus then Biſhop of Rome certaine meſſengers with foure requeſts or demands, whereof this was one: that it might bee lawfull for Biſhops or prieſts to appeale from the ſentence of their Metropolitanes, and alſo of the Councell, to the Sea of Rome, alleaging for himſelfe certaine words, as hee pretended, taken out of the Nicene Councell. Hereupon the Councell ſent their Legats to Cyrillus Patriark of Alexandria, for the ancient copies in Greeke of the Nicene Councell: wherein they found no ſuch Canon as was pretended:

ded: but the contrary, how the decrees of the Nicene Councell had committed all and ſingular perſons Eccleſiaſticall unto the charge of their Metropolitanes. Thus then, to begin this game withall, the Biſhops of Rome themſelves are proved to be forgers and falſifiers of ancient writings. Plura apud Fox. pag. 10.

61 Caniſius reporting Auguſtines words, for the continuall ſucceſſion of the Biſhops of Rome from Peter, alleageth only the former part of the ſentence: Cathedra quid tibi fecit Eccleſia Romana in qua Petrus ſedit, & in qua hodie Anaſtaſius ſedet? What hath the Sea of the Church of Rome offended thee, wherein Peter ſometime ſate, and Anaſtaſius now ſitteth? but he craftily leaveth out that which followeth: Vel Eccleſia Hieroſolymitana, in qua Iacobus ſedit, & in qua hodie Ioannes ſedet? Or what hath the Sea of Jeruſalem offended thee, wherein Iames ſometimes ſate, and Iohn now ſitteth? theſe words he cunningly ſuppreſſeth, becauſe they made little for him. Caniſ. oper. catechiſtic. cap. de pracept. eccleſ. artic. 9.

62 Chriſtoferſon tranſlating Euſebius ſtory into Latine, where Novatus is brought in, thus adjuring the people that came to the oblations, holding both their hands in his: Sweare to me by the body and blood of the Lord Ieſus, that thou wilt not leave mee and goe to Cornelius, and hee refuſed to diſtribute unto them, till that, they ſwearing unto him, in ſtead of Amen, to be ſaid at the receiving of bread, ſhould anſwer, I will not returne to Cornelius. Chriſtoferſon, I ſay, comming to theſe words, craftily leaveth out the name of bread, becauſe the author ſo calleth it in plaine tearmes after conſecration. Chriſtofer, lib. 6. cap. 43.

63 The Rhemiſt. 1 Cor. 10. ſect. 8. ſpeaking of their popiſh ſacrifice of the Maſſe, alleage the authority of Cyril. Alexand. in concil. Epheſin. Anathem. 11. where he ſhould call it, The quickning holy ſacrifice, the unbloody hoaſt and victime. But this is a falſe forgerie, for there is no ſuch word found there. Likewiſe in the ſame place they quote Tertullian de coron. militis. Chryſoſt. homil. 41. in 1 Corinth. Cyprian. epiſt. 66. Auguſt. Enchirid. 109. That the Maſſe is a propitiatorie ſacrifice for the living and dead, which is found to be a great untruth: for thoſe authors in ſome of theſe places ſpeake of prayer for the dead, but of any ſuch propitiatorie ſacrifice not one word. Fulk. ibid.

64 Gregor. Nyſſen. oration. cap. 37. is made to ſpeake much of the tranſmutation of the bread in the Sacrament, and it is often repeated: but there is no ſuch thing found in many ancient copies. And Nicephorus writeth, that many things were foyſted into him by hereticks. Niceph. lib. 11. cap. 19.

65 The words of Cyprian. de unitat. eccleſ. are falſified by Pammelius, for whereas Cyprian writeth thus: Verily the reſt of the Apoſtles were the ſame thing that Peter was, endued with equall fellowſhip, both of honour and power, but the beginning proceedeth from one, that the Church may bee declared to bee one: The Rhemiſts according to that corrupt edition, reade thus: But the beginning proceedeth from one, the primacy is given to Peter, that the Church of Chriſt may be ſhewed to be one, and one chaire. Fulk. Iohn 21. ſect. 4.

66 In like ſort have the Papiſts corrected, as they ſay, but indeed corrupted other writings of the ancient Fathers, and eſpecially Bertram amongſt the reſt, who is a great enemie to their popiſh opinion of tranſubſtantiation. They meane to deale with him, as with other ancient writers, In whom, ſay they, we beare very many errors, and extenuate them, excuſe them, and very oftentimes by deviſing ſome prety ſhift, wee doe deny them, and doe faine ſome commodious ſenſe unto them, when they are oppoſed againſt us. This is the judgement of the Univerſity of Doway, in their owne words approved by the Cenſors according to the Councell of Trent.

Index expurgat. p. 11.

And thus they meant to have filed, nay rather defiled all the ancient writings, where they ſeemed to contradict them, as it appeareth in their Index expurgatorius, lately printed to their perpetuall ſhame, which they purpoſed to keepe in ſecret: Hee that will reſort to that booke, ſhall not want proofe of their popiſh falſifying of writers.

67 To theſe I will adde the like practices of ſome later popiſh writer: Vega fighting for tranſubſtantiation, citeth a place out of Auguſtine, lib. 3. de trinit. c. 1. theſ. 176. fol. 49. which is not there to be found: for thus he imagineth Auguſtine to write: Non nivis natura (erat enim Manna ſimile rori, aut nivibus, ſoleq́ ſolvebatur) ſed per verbum & virtutem Dei facto pane & carnibus ſub accidentibus nivis alebantur: They were not nouriſhed with the nature of ſnow (for Manna was like the dew or ſnow) but by the word and power of God bread and fleſh was made under the accidents of ſnow, wherewith they were fed.

68 The ſame Vega aſſert. 192. dealeth in like manner with Tertullian, aſcribing to him this ſentence: Panis figura ſeu ſpecies à corpore phantaſtico ſuſtineri non poſſunt: eſt igitur verum Chriſti corpus à quo in euchariſtia ſuſtententur panis ſpecies, non fantaſticum: The figure or ſhape of bread cannot be upheld of a phantaſticall body: therefore it is the very body of Chriſt, by the which in the Euchariſt the ſhewes of bread are ſuſtained, and not a phantaſticall body: but no ſuch words are to be found in Tertullian.

69 So the ſame Vega, Theſ. 135. ſaith, that Tertullian in his booke de oratione, calleth the bread in the Sacrament Chriſt: which is untrue, he hath there no ſuch ſaying.

70 Likewiſe the ſame Vega, in his 122. theſis of the Maſſe, alleageth out of the 34. queſtion of Athanaſius ad Antiochum, which cannot there be found, as if Athanaſius ſhould write thus: Intelligimus peccatorum animas participare beneficia ab incruenta immolatione pro ipſis facta: Wee underſtand that the ſoules of ſinners doe participate the benefits wrought for them by the unbloody ſacrifice: but Athanaſius in that place writeth farre otherwiſe, and nothing like to this in words or ſenſe: This then appeareth to bee continually their popiſh guiſe, to correct or corrupt rather the ſayings of the fathers at their pleaſure. The ſame hath bin the guiſe of former heretiks, the Pelagians corrupted the commentaries of Ambroſe: the Arrians the works of Origen: the Novatians the booke of Tertullian de Trinit. as witneſſe the Popiſh writers: Salmeron. Senenſ. Bellarm. And thus they themſelves have dealt with the fathers.

And it were to bee wiſhed, that they would have ſtayed here, (though this bee ſhamefull enough,) only to have defaced the writings of men: but when they take upon them to correct and amend the ſacred Scriptures, which are the Lords owne writings, who will not crie out againſt ſo great impietie?

71 As Dan. 11. 37. Where the text according to the Hebrew is, He ſhall not regard the Gods of his fathers, nor the deſires of women: Bellarmine readeth cleane contrary, taking upon him to correct the text, Erit in concupiſcentiis mulierum, He ſhall be given to the pleaſures of women.

Scriptures changed and altered by Papiſts.

72 Whereas Saint Paul ſaith, Titus 3. 10. Reject him that is an heretike after once or twice admonition: Bellarmine denieth the text, and ſaith it ſhould rather bee thus read, after once admonition, De laicis cap. 22.

73 Likewiſe where the true reading is agreeable to the originall, Gal. 2 9. Iames, Cephas, and Iohn: Bellarmine, not well content that Iames ſhould be named before Peter, ſaith the more ancient reading is thus, Peter, Iames and Iohn. De Roman. pontif. lib. 1. cap. 18.

74 Iudith cap. 5. v. 18. The text ſaith, That the Temple of the Iewes had been caſt downe to the ground: Bellarmine, to make his opinion ſtand, that the ſtory of Iudith fell out before the captivity, ſaith flatly that theſe words are ſuppoſitia, foiſted into the text. And this booke of Iudith, though it bee not with us, yet is ſcripture with them. Bellar. lib. 1. de verb. Dei, 12.

75 Levit. 18. 16. Whereas the text is plaine, Thou ſhalt not diſcover the ſhame of thy brothers wife: there ſteppeth mee forth a bold and ſhamefull papiſt, and ſaith plainly: Illud praeceptum vitio ſcriptorum ſuper additum: That this precept was put into the text through the default or overſight of the writer. Iohan. Major. in 4. ſentent. diſtinct. 40. qu. 3.

And as they are not aſhamed thus boldly and wickedly to defaulke and clip from the Scriptures, ſo another while, they will be ſo ſaucie as to adde thereunto, and put to of their owne.

76 Thus Pope Sixtus the 4. added this clauſe to the ſalutation of Marie, which is commonly called the Ave Maria: Haile Marie full of grace, the Lord is with thee, bleſſed art thou amongſt women, then followeth that blaſphemous addition, Et benedicta ſit Anna mater tua, de qua ſine macula tua proceſſit caro virginea: And bleſſed is Anna thy mother, of whom thy virgins fleſh hath proceeded without blot of originall ſinne, Fox 800. col. 2.

77 So in the idolatrous Canon of the Maſſe, they have thruſt in (Enim) into the words of inſtitution, Hoc enim eſt Corpus meum, For this is my body: that they might have five conſecratory words, as they call them, whereas the Goſpell affordeth them but foure.

78 Likewiſe in the ſame Canon, the Goſpell ſaith, who the ſame night that he was betrayed: but they contrary to the truth of the Scripture, ſay thus: Who the next day afore he ſuffered.

79 The like liberty alſo and boldneſſe Hoſius another Arch-papiſt uſeth in corrupting of Scripture, who to prove popiſh ſatisfaction, in ſtead of ſanctificationem, readeth, ſatisfactionem: where S. Paul ſaith, Exhibeamus membra noſtra ſervire juſtitiae in ſanctificationem, Let us give our members to ſerve righteouſnes unto ſanctification, Rom. 6. 19. He ſaith, altering the text, unto ſatisfaction.

Hoſius in confeſſ. cathol. fid. de ſacram. poenitent.

80 So alſo Stapleton, an Engliſh papiſt, and reader of late of popiſh divinity at Lovaine, to prove that wee are bound to receive whatſoever the Church delivereth unto us, abuſeth to that end a certaine place of Saint Paul, Galat. 1. 8, 9. Alleaging it thus, Si angelus de coelo evangelizaret praeterquam quod ab eccleſia accepimus, &c. If an Angell ſhould evangelize or preach otherwiſe than wee have received of the Church, or than the maſters of the Church have preached to us, let him bee accurſed, Lib. 2. defenſ. authorit. eccleſ. cap. 7. ſect. 8. Whereas S. Paul maketh no mention at all of the Church, or Church-maſters.

Thus we ſee, what great libertie the Papiſts take unto themſelves, in changing, and chopping, minſing and mangling, not the writings only of men, but even of the holy Ghoſt. Who, if they ſhall perſiſt in theſe fraudulent practices, and not revoke what hath either of ignorance or hereticall fraud fallen out of their pen, I will not doubt to compare them to the old Manichees, who likewiſe affirmed that many things were foiſted into the writings of the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles. As that of Iohn 5. 46. Had yee beleeved Moſes, yee would have beleeved me. Chriſt, ſay they, would not ſo ſpeake of Moſes: for he ſaith, that all that went before him, were theeves, Ioh. 10. But Chriſt in that place ſpeaketh of hirelings only, he condemneth not faithfull ſhepheards that went before him, Auguſt. lib. 16. cont. Fauſt. That alſo ſeemeth (ſay they) to be thruſt in, Matth. 5. That Chriſt ſaith, Hee came to fulfill the law, when as he neither obſerved their ceremonies, not offered ſacrifice according to the law. To this Auguſtine anſwereth: That theſe were but figures, Quarum figurarum veritas Chriſtus: Of which figures Chriſt was the truth: he therefore fulfilled the law, in that he was the very body and ſubſtance of the types and figures of the law, contr. Fauſt. lib. 18. cap. 17. That place alſo they would have to bee forged, Matth. 8. Many ſhall come from the Eaſt, and ſit downe with Abraham, &c. Becauſe (ſay they) Luke hath it not. Auguſtine anſwereth, that the Evangeliſts are not contrary one to the other, if one ſet downe that which the other hath omitted, cont. Fauſt. lib. 33.

Hier. Algaſiæ queſt. 7.
Amb. de fide lib. 3. c. 3.

The like libertie, or rather hereticall licence the Arrians did arrogate to themſelves, with other heretiks in changing and chopping of Scripture, as Matth. 10, 28. they read, nemo bonus, niſi unus Deus Pater: none is good, but God the father, that they might exclude the ſonne: and in the firſt of S. Iohns Goſpell, they read the third and fourth verſe thus, without any diſtinction, quod factum eſt in ipſo vita erat, that, which was made in him was life, to prove that the Word was made. So the ſame father reporteth of other heretiks, that whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, qui cœpit in vobis, Philip. 1. he that hath begun in you, they would have it, ex vobis, of you, to prove the beginning of every good worke to come from our ſelves.

Lib. 1. de vocat. gent. c. 9.

Lib. de ſpiritu 3. c. 11.

Againe he ſaith: illud Ioan. 4. (Deus eſt ſpiritus) hæretici quidam de codicib. ſuis auferebant: that in the fourth of Iohn, God is a ſpirit, ſome heretiks have raced out of their books.

Cont. Heluidium.

Hierome affirmeth the like of Heluidius, who ſhould ſay that thoſe words Luk. 2. 33. his father and mother wondred, are falſified in the greeke copies.

I pray you now, how farre off are our adverſaries from the practice of thoſe hereticks, which doe take upon them to amend and correct the text of Scripture by putting in, and pulling out, adding and detracting at their pleaſure? unto whom I ſay as Ambroſe in the like caſe, Literas quidem potuiſtis abolere, ſed fidem non potuiſtis auferre, You may race the letters, but you cannot deface the faith. But let them take heed how they dally with the ſcriptures, for as the ſame father ſaith, qui hanc deſtruit. i. ſcripturarum fidem, deſtruetur ipſe: he that deſtroyeth the faith of the Scriptures, ſhall be himſelfe deſtroyed. And where they doe not alter the letter of Scripture, if they pervert the ſenſe, it is all one, as he againe ſaith: pſeudapoſtoli verba Dei per malam interpretationem adulterabant, tollentes divinum ſenſum, ponebant humanum: the falſe apoſtles did adulterate the words of God by a falſe interpretation, bringing in an humane ſenſe for a divine: and this every where our adverſaries are guiltie of. But now I will proceed to that which followeth.

Lib. 3. de ſpiritu c. 11.

Amb. epiſt. 47. In 2 Cor. 2.

The bold and ſhameleſſe denials of Papiſts of manifeſt truths.

Part. 4.

AS we have already received ſome taſte of our adverſaries raylings, ſlaunders, forgeries: ſo wee will now be ſo bold as to reach our hands to this fourth diſh of their firſt courſe, which is their too free deniall of apparant truths, and too forward affirming of open and manifeſt untruths: for the firſt, we find plentifull ſtore in our countriman M. Hardings garden, that we need ſeeke no further.

1 Firſt, it was never ſaid, nor thought by the Catholiks (ſaith hee) that all religion dependeth upon the Popes authority, Defenſ. apolog. pag. 57. And yet Cardinall Cuſanus writeth thus: Veritas adhæret cathedræ: The truth cleaveth faſt to the Popes chaire. Ad Bohem. epiſt. 2. The Canoniſts ſay: Conſtat eccleſiam ideo eſſe unam, quia in univerſali eccleſia unum eſt caput ſupremum, ſcilicet Papa: It is plaine that therefore the Church is one, becauſe in the whole univerſall Church, there is but one ſupreme head, and that is the Pope, ex Iuello. pag. 61. What do theſe elſe affirme, but that all the popiſh religion dependeth of the unity of their head, which is the Pope?

2 That the Pope ſhould ſucceed Chriſt in his whole ſubſtance, that is, his whole power: there hath not been any ſuch fond ſaying uttered by their Divines. Hard. pag. 106. defenſ. apolog. Yet theſe words were ſpoken, and allowed in the Councell of Laterane held under Pope Iulius: Tibi data eſt omnis poteſtas in cœlo & in terra: Unto you is given all power in heaven and earth. And Panormitane is ſuffered to ſay, Papa poteſt omnia, quæ Deus poteſt: The Pope is able to doe whatſoever God is able to doe, Panor. de elect. ca. licet.

3 Hee denieth that there is any ſuch Canon to bee found in the Councell of Carthage, that no Biſhop ſhould be called the higheſt Biſhop. And yet they are the very words of the Councell, as they are cited by Gratian: Univerſalis autem, ne Romanus pontifex appelletur: Let not the Biſhop of Rome himſelfe be called the univerſall Biſhop.

Diſtinct 99. primæ. c. 3.

4 He denieth that Pope Zoſimus to maintaine the ſupremacy of his ſea, corrupted the Nicen Councel. Neither did any honeſt man ſay it from the beginning of the world: No man ever ſaid it but Illyricus and Bale, pag. 162. Wheras the ſtory is plaine, for the Councell of Carthage ſent to the Biſhops of Conſtantinople, Alexandria, Antiochia, and received authenticall copies from them in Greeke of the Nicen Councell: the Popes onſy copie was found to diſagree from the reſt. It is therefore eaſy to ſee, by whom the Canons of the Councell were corrupted, and to what purpoſe. In the Councell of Florence, Marcus the Archbiſhop of Epheſus ſaid, in the name of the reſt of the Biſhops of the Greeke Church, who were above 17. in number: Nonne vides, reverende pater, ſummum pontificem Zoſimum falſum decretum ad tantum Concilium pro re tam magna miſiſſe? Doe you not ſea, reverend father, that Pope Zoſimus the high Biſhop ſent unto ſo worthy a Councel, for a matter of ſo great waight, a falſe decree? Concil. Florent. ſeſſ. 20. How dare then Maſter Harding affirme, that never any honeſt man ſaid it?

5 Wee denie utterly, that any man after that hee hath received holy orders may marrie: Neither can

It be ſhewed that the marriage of ſuch was ever accounted lawfull in the Catholike Church. Hard. pag. 203. yet S. Hierome ſaith of his time: Quaſi non hodie quoq̃ plurimi ſacerdotes habeant matrimonia: As though now a dayes very many prieſts are not married: Adverſ. Iovinian. lib. 1. And Damaſus teſtifieth, Complures inveniuntur, qui de ſacerdotibus nati Apoſtolicæ ſedi præferunt: Many are found that being prieſts ſonnes ruled the Apoſtolike ſea of Rome: as Pope Silverius, Pope Deuſdedit, Pope Adrian 2. Pope Iohn 15. and divers other, ex Gratian. And Innocentius the third, confeſſeth of the Greeke Church, Orientalis eccleſia votum continentiæ non admiſit: The Eaſt Church never admitted the vow of continent or ſingle life: Decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 3. cap. 6. M. Harding therefore hath faced us out here in denying ſo evident a truth.

Diſtinct. 37. legunt.

6 We ſay plainely, that S. Auguſtine affirmeth purgatorie, and that it cannot bee ſhewed, where hee doubteth of it, Hard. pag. 354. And yet Auguſtine writeth thus, ſpeaking of purgatorie: Tale aliquid etiam poteſt hanc vitam fieri incredibile non eſt, & utrum ita ſit, quæri poteſt. Some ſuch thing to be after this life it is not incredible, and whether it be ſo or no, it may be a queſtion, ad Dulcitium quæſt. 1. Let any indifferent man now judge whether Auguſtine doubteth of purgatorie or not.

7 That fornication was never allowed in the Catholike Church, (he meaneth the Church of Rome.) Hard p. 7. defenſ. apolog. Neither have the Canoniſts ever taught the people, that ſimple fornication is no ſin, pag. 411. For triall of this matter, let us heare what their Canoniſts ſay: Et ſi notoria ſit fornicatio presbyterorum, tamen non propter eam abſtinendum eſt ab officiis illorum: Although the fornication of Prieſts be notorious, yet may no man therefore refraine from their ſervice, diſtinct. 32. Nullus. Iohan. Andrea. Maſter Harding himſelfe calleth the open Stewes in Rome, a neceſſarie evill, for avoiding of other diſorders that would be greater. Againe, Qui non habet uxorem, loco illius concubinam habere licet: It is lawfull for him that hath no wife, in ſtead of her to have a concubine, diſtinct. 34. 15. qui. Another ſaith: Si clericus amplectitur mulierem, laicus interpretabitur, quod cauſa benedicendi eam hoc faciat: If a prieſt embrace a woman, a lay man muſt judge, that hee doth it with intent to bleſſe her, 11. quæſt. 3. abſit in gloſſa. By this it may appeare, what account the Church of Rome in time paſt hath made of fornication, and whether it were tolerated amongſt them or not.

8 Harding ſaith, that the whores in Rome have not free libertie of dwelling in the haunted ſtreets, and places, but only in out-houſes, and by-lanes: neither is it lawfull for them to ride in Coaches or Chariots, but only to goe a foot in the ſtreets: and that by their ſhort vailes, a note of diſhoneſtie, they are diſcerned from honeſt women, pag. 423. All theſe are deſcribed to bee manifeſt lies and untruths: for the Cardinals gave cleane contrary information to Pope Paul the third: Meretrices in hac urbe, ut matronæ incedunt, mula vehuntur, habitant inſignes ædes: The curtizans of this citie goe like honeſt matrons, being carried upon Mules, and dwell in the faireſt houſes, ex Iuello defenſ. Apolog. 426. Thus wee ſee what credit is to be given to M. Harding, and what ſmall conſcience hee maketh of a lie.

9 Maſter Harding impudently denyeth, and ſo doe other Papiſts, that a woman named Ioane was ever Pope of Rome, and that there is no ſuch image repreſenting a woman in travell, nor no ſuch chaire for proofe of the Popes humanity at his creation, neither that the Popes in their proceſſion refraine to go that way, where the ſaid Pope Ioane in the middeſt of a ſolemne proceſſion fell in travell, p. 428 Yet the ſtorie is reported by Marianus Scotus that lived anno 1028. Sigibert. Gemblacenſ. that lived anno 1100. Martinus Polonius, the Popes Penitentiary, who wrote anno 1320. witneſſes of great antiquity. B. Iuel reckoneth up 16. authors beſide, that report the ſame thing, and none of them all Lutherans. That there is ſuch an image repreſenting ſuch a fact, and that the Pope of purpoſe refraineth that way, is teſtified by Theodorus Niemus the Popes Secretary. And concerning the hollow chaire of Porphyrie ſtone, which is kept for ſuch an uſe, Sabellicus doth report, Enead. 9. lib. 1. plura apud Iuel. pag. 433. Now who is more like to be the lyer, M. Harding, a new upſtart writer, or theſe ſo many ancient witneſſes, I thinke, it is not hard to judge.

10 He denieth the ſtory of Iohn Diazius death, how having been a Doctor of Sorbona in Paris, and afterward converted to the Goſpell, was moſt traiterouſly ſlaine by his owne brothers Alphonſus Diazius man at Nuburg in Germanie: how he was ſent up by his maſter with a carpenters axe to kill him, and ſo he did, his Maſter Alphonſus waiting below, and the quarrell was, becauſe good Iohn Diazius would not returne to poperie againe: this is the truth of the ſtorie, as it is faithfully reported by Iohn Sleidan, lib. 17. Yet M. Harding ſaith, we tell many lyes at once. pag. 435. what now will not theſe good fellowes denie?

11 That the Pope ever commanded any ſuch ſervice to be done unto him, as that the Emperour ſhould hold his ſtirrop, and leade his horſe by the bridle, yee can never ſhew it by any credible witneſſe, Hard. pag. 463 yet in the Popes owne booke of Ceremonies, cap. 8. it is found thus written: The Emperour commeth to the Popes horſe, and in honour of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe perſon in earth the Pope beareth, hee holdeth the ſtirrop till the Pope be mounted, and afterward he taketh the bridle and leadeth foorth his horſe. This is the Popes owne preſcription in his booke of Ceremonies. And therefore Pope Adrian 2. was angrie with the Emperour Frederike, for holding his ſtirrop on the wrong ſide, Greger. Haimburgenſ. in appellat. Sigiſmund, It ſeemeth therefore, that the Pope looked for this ſervice of dutie.

12 It is denied that the Pope put in armes Henrie the 5. againſt Henrie the 4. his father, Hard. 469. yet is it reported by an author of good credit, Paſchalis papa principes contra Henricum 4. concitavit, imo ejus proprium filium: Pope Paſchalis raiſed up the Nobilitie againſt Henry the fourth, yea his owne ſonne, Gregor. Haimburgenſ.

13 He denieth, that ever any of them taught, that Gods ſayings and precepts be void, except the Biſhop of Rome ratifie them, pag. 487. Yet are they the very words of Silveſter Prierias, Maſter of the Popes palace: A doctrina Romana eccleſia, & Romani Pontificis ſacra ſcriptura robur trahit & authoritatem: The holy Scripture taketh ſtrength and authoritie of the doctrine of the Romane Church, and of the Biſhop of Rome. Silveſter Prier. contr. Lutherum.

14 He ſaith, it is a ſlander, that any of them ſhould call the Scriptures dumbe and unprofitable, p. 535. Whereas it is certaine, they be their owne words: One calleth the Scripture, mortuum atramentum, dead inke, Lodovic. in Concil. Trident. Another ſaith: Scriptura eſt res inanimis & muta: The Scripture is a dead and dumbe thing, Epiſcop. Pictavienſ. Another calleth them, Evangelium nigrum, the blacke Goſpell, Eckius. conſul. Iuel. defenſ. Apolog. pag. 535.

15.16 It is denied, that there is any ſuch Canon in the old Romane Councell, that no man ſhould come to ſervice ſaid by a prieſt well knowne to keep a Concubine. It is alſo falſe and ſlanderous, that Concubines are let out to farme to prieſts: Hard. pag. 559. Yet for the one, the words of the decree ſtand thus: Nullus audit Miſſam presbyteri quem ſcit concubinam indubitanter habere: Let no man heare the Maſſe of that Prieſt, whom he undoubtedly knoweth to keep a concubine, Diſtinct. 32. Nullus. And for the other, it is certaine, that the Biſhop of Argentine hath a Florence by the yeere of every prieſt that keepeth a concubine, and if ſhee beare a child, hee hath foure, Ex Iuel. pag. 559. Apolog. defenſ.

These apparant untruths, and impudent denials, I thought good for example to note out of our Countrimans works. Who liſt to know more of his honeſt dealing, if hee will reſort to Biſhop Iuels learned treatiſes, ſhall find his deſire ſatisfied both in this, and in all other matters which hee can require. And concerning M. Hardings great licentiouſneſſe in avouching falſhoods, the ſaid reverend father thus writeth of him: Note that M. Harding in his 3. articles of anſwer to M. Iuel, hath publiſhed threeſcore and nine great untruths, Defenſ. Apolog. pag. 597. in margin.

69. Vntruths in one booke.

17 Of the like bold ſpirit to denie manifeſt truths we find other alſo of that ſect to be, that M. Harding ſhould not be alone. Scarga. art. 9. fol. 265. denieth any of their catholiks ever to have ſaid: Sacerdos eſt creator creatoris ſui: The Prieſt is the creator of his Creator, and he calleth it blaſphemum dictum, a blaſphemous ſaying: and yet Turriane tract. 1. cap. 17. fol. 97. writeth thus, Euchariſtia non eſt creatura, ſed creator Chriſtus: The Euchariſt is no creature, but the creator Chriſt: and their prieſts have power, as they ſay, conficiendi corporis Chriſti, to make the bodie of Chriſt, or to make the Euchariſt, which they doubt not to call Chriſt, therefore they muſt needs alſo make Chriſt. Boner alſo in a certaine oration to the Convocation houſe, ſaith, that the prieſt is a maker of his Creator, whom I thinke they will not denie to be a catholike.

Fox p. 1426. edition 4.

18 Bellarmine affirmeth, that in the law there were no ſacrifices appointed for the greater ſinnes, as for adultery, murther, idolatry, and ſuchlike, but only for the ſmaller offences, as of ignorance, &c. whereas notwithſtanding David after he had committed two great ſinnes of murther and adulterie, deſireth that God would purge him with yſop, Pſalm. 50. according to the ceremonie of the law, having notwithſtanding relation to that which was ſignified thereby.

Lib. 2. de ſacram. c. 27.

19 Arturus in his booke de ſanctorum invocat. c. 9. theſ. 96. denieth that ever any of the Catholikes called Sanctos ſervatores, the Saints our Saviours. Whereas Bonaventure doubteth not thus to ſay in his Lady Pſalter of the Virgin Mary, as it followeth afterward, blaſph. 82. O benedicta, in manib. tuis repoſita eſt noſtra ſalus: O thou moſt bleſſed, in thy hands reſteth our ſalvation: is not this to call her Saviour?

20 The ſame Arturus alſo c. 3. apolog. cont. Toſſanum, denieth inſtantly, that whereas the ſaid Toſſanus affirmed out of Irenæus, Ne invocationibus angelorum aliquid fiat, that nothing ſhould bee done by the invocation of Angels, that Irenæus hath any ſuch ſaying, whereas the ſaid Irenæus, lib. 2. cap. 58. hath theſe very words.

Judge now (good Chriſtian Reader) conſidering how eaſie and uſuall a thing it is with our adverſaries to deny whatſoever truth, never ſo manifeſt, which they are preſſed withall, if it may not be more truly ſaid of them, that their religion ſtandeth only upon deſtructions and negatives, than of us, whom the Rhemiſts falſely accuſe hereof. Indeed, wee affirme and avouch boldly, that which is true, and deny and deſtroy hereſie and falſehood. But, I truſt, they cannot, neither ſhall ever proove againſt us, that we have denied or gainſaid manifeſt truths, as they have done.

1 Pet. 5. verſ. 31. Rhem.

Unto theſe ſtrange denials of open and evident truths joyne alſo, if you pleaſe, their bold and ſtrange affirmations of untruths.

21 That their doctrine of tranſubſtantiation is no leſſe ancient than the Goſpell it ſelfe, Hard. pag. 290. Whereas it is confeſſed by Gabriel Biel, a Doctor of their owne, that how the body of Chriſt ſhould be in the Sacrament, whether by changing of ſomewhat into it, or Chriſts body begin to be there together with the bread, Manentibus ſubſtantia & accidentibus panis: The ſubſtance and accidents of the bread remaining ſtill, non invenitur (ſaith he) expreſſum in canone Biblia, It is not found in the Canon of the Bible: Gabriel. in canon. lect. 40. And Doctor Tonſtall ſaith, Licitum fuit ante Concilium lium Lateranum : Before the Councell of Laterane it was left at libertie, namely, concerning the manner of the preſence of Chriſts body, for every man to thinke as he would : de Euchariſt. lib. 1. pag. 46. And yet M. Harding will needs beare us in hand, that it is as ancient as the Goſpell.

22 It hath been an order from the beginning received, and hetherto continued, to have the Church ſervice in the Latine tongue, Hard. p. 382. Whereas they themſelves know the contrary. In Auguſtines time, ſuch a tongue was uſed as the people underſtood : Loquendi (ſaith hee) omnino nulla eſt, cauſa, ſi quod loquimur, non intelligunt, propter quos ut intelligant, loquimur : There is no cauſe why wee ſhould ſpeake at all, if they underſtand not what wee ſay, for whoſe ſake wee ſpeake, that they might underſtand us. Auguſt. de doctrin. Chriſtian. lib. 4. cap. 16.

23 Hee ſaith, Conſtantine gave place to Silveſter Biſhop of Rome, when hee was baptized, pag. 453. Whereas it is certaine, that Silveſter was dead long before Conſtantine was chriſtened, conſul. Iuell. ibidem.

24 That England received the true faith from S. Gregory Biſhop of Rome, and was converted to the faith by Auguſtine his Legate, Hard. pag. 539. But it is manifeſt out of hiſtories, that the faith of Chriſt had been planted in this land 400. yeeres before the comming of Auguſtine as Origen teſtifieth: Terra Britania conſenſit in religionem Chriſti: The land of Britannie hath conſented to Chriſts religion, in Ezech. homil. 4. who lived not much leſſe then 400. yeeres before Gregories time.

No marvell, if they affirme and maintaine many things contrary to the courſe of all true hiſtories: for they dare be as bold with Scripture.

25 Harding ſaith, that Chriſt never ſaid to any of the Apoſtles, as unto Peter, Feede yee, pág. 118. When Chriſt ſaid as much in effect notwithſtanding to the reſt : Receive yee the Holy Ghoſt. And Chriſt ſaid unto all, Goe and teach all nations, Matth. 28. If Peter then had no more the holy Ghoſt than the reſt : if he had no more authority to preach to the whole world than the reſt : it belonged no more to Peter to feed the Lords flocke than to the reſt : for what is it to feed, but to preach ? what is it to feed, but to receive the gifts of the holy Ghoſt, to teach and inſtruct ?

26 It is in vaine for you to ſay, that the Church of Rome hath erred, when the holy Ghoſt hath ſignified, that it cannot erre, Hard. pag. 485. But where ever, I pray you, did the holy Ghoſt make any ſuch promiſe ? if in that place, as you beare us in hand, where Chriſt ſaith : I prayed for thee Peter that thy faith ſhould not faile : S. Auguſtine may anſwer you, Nunquid pro Petro rogabat, pro Iohanne & Iacobo non rogabat ? Did Chriſt pray for Peter, and did hee not pray for Iohn and Iames alſo ? in quaeſt. nov. Teſtament. quaeſt. 75. And it is beſide a ſillie and childiſh argument, Chriſt prayed for Peter, that his faith ſhould not faile : Ergo, the Church of Rome cannot erre. Here then is another bold and untrue affirmation, without Scripture grounded upon Scripture.

But what ſay yee to father Robert Bellarmine, hee laſheth out luſtely, and in plaine terms, belyeth the Scripture : Habemus (ſaith hee) in teſtamento veteri, Heliam & Heliſaeum, ac filios Prophetarum 27
ſine uxoribus in hoc mundo vixiſſe : Wee have in the old Teſtament, that Helias and Heliſaeus, and the ſonnes of the Prophets lived in this world without wives, de Monachis, lib. 1. cap. 5. The text is flat contrary, which affirmeth, that the ſonnes of the Prophets were married, 2 King. 4. 1. And one of the wives of the ſonnes of the Prophets, cried unto Eliſha, ſaying, thy ſervant my husband, &c. Whether now is it more reaſonable, that we ſhould beleeve the Scripture, or Bellarmine?

But concerning the errors and untruths, which they hold and affirme directly oppoſite to ſcripture, wee have ordained another place, (which followeth in the next Pillar of Papiſtrie) more fully to handle them.

I will of purpoſe paſſe over many other untruths and lyes, which our adverſaries without ſhame 28 have forged : as how Cardinall Campeius ſaid openly to the Magiſtrats of Strausburgh, that the Greeks Fox p. 865.
doe not give libertie to their prieſts to marrie : which is a notorious lye : for their prieſts to this day make no vow of chaſtitie, Fox pag. 187. artic. 17. And in this caſe I will rather credite the Popes themſelves than a Cardinall, the Maſter before the man : for both Innocentius confeſſeth, as wee have ſeene before, that the Eaſt Church never admitted the vow of ſingle life, Decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 3. c. 6. as alſo Clemens 3. granteth in theſe words, Graecis ſacerdotibus legitimo matrimonio uti licet : It is lawfull for 29 the Greeke prieſts to uſe lawfull matrimonie : Decr. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 38. c. 7. Likewiſe to let paſſe how the Pope himſelfe maketh a loud lye in his Bull againſt Luther, ſaying that he offered money to Luther to come up to Rome, whereas it is certaine, that there were 300. crownes given to ruffians and catchpoles to murther Luther, pag. 1287. But I will not rub this ſore too long : that which I have already ſaid, may ſerve as a taſte and triall of their lying ſpirit.

Unto theſe untruths and lyes, may be added alſo the fables and deviſed tales, which goe for currant among Papiſts, which are not the leaſt props and ſtaies of popiſh ſuperſtition.

30 Of this kind is that fabulous ſtorie, that the wiſe men which came from the Eaſt to worſhip Chriſt, were three Kings of Perſia, whoſe names were (as the tale goeth) Gaſpar, Melchior, Baltaſar, whoſe bodies were tranſlated to Cullen, and there remaine. Here are many untruths, and unlikelihoods in this ſhort tale. Firſt, there was never but one King of Perſia at once. Secondly, though the Magi or wiſe men were of great account with the Kings of Perſia, yet were not the Kings called Magi. Thirdly, they returned Eaſtward from whence they came: how then could their bodies be tranſported ſo many hundred, nay thouſand miles? Fourthly, if their bodies lie buried at Cullen, how can they bee at Millaine too? for they alſo lay as good claime to them. Yet for all this, the Rhemiſts tell us in good ſooth, that it is a true ſtorie, Annot. Mat. 2. ſect. 4.

31 The like fiction they have of Gregorie Thaumaturgus, who removed a mountaine to make roome for the foundation of a Church: yet very ſoberly avouched by the Rhemiſts, Matth. 17. ſect. 6.

32 Such another proper tale: how Chriſt came in a Pilgrims weed to Gregories ordinarie table of poore men, Rhemiſt. Heb. 13. ſect. 2. which fiction, that Chriſt in his humanitie ſhould be ſeene upon earth, is contrary to the Scriptures, which teſtifie, that The heavens muſt containe him till his comming againe, Act. 3. 21. Many ſuch fables went for good payment amongſt the papiſts in times paſt in the daies of ignorance: but ſince that by the ſpringing of the Goſpell greater light is come into the world, they themſelves begin to reject divers of their legend ſtories, which were not called in queſtion before.

33 Bellarmine confeſſeth, that the ſtories which are reported out of Abdias, and others, ut plurimùm non ſunt prorſus indubitata, for the moſt part may be doubted of. The ſtories alſo of S. George, S. Chriſtopher, and S. Katherin, he judgeth to be Apocryphall, and worthy of ſmall credit: though hee would have their perſons ſtill kept in memory, Bellarm. lib. 1. de ſanctor. beatitud. 20.

34 The tale, how through the prayers of S. Gregory, the ſoule of Trajan the Emperour was delivered out of hell, is rejected by Bellarmine, de Purgator. lib. 2. 8.

Yet our countriman Maſter Harding is ſomewhat ſtrait laced, in juſtifying all the Legend ſtories, which were wont to be read in their Churches, and ſaying that we belye them, pag. 571. Yet Polydore Virgil ſaith, Multorum divorum vitas recitant, licet parùm ad fidem ſcriptas: They read many Saints lives, though not written according to the truth. And Lodovicus Vives, Legenda aurea pleniſſima eſt impudentiſſimis mendaciis: Their golden Legend, as they call it, is full of moſt impudent lies. And in the late Councell of Colone it is granted, Hiſtoria ſanctorum tam incultè & tam negligenti judicio conſcripta ſunt, ut nec authoritatem videantur habere, nec gravitatem: The hiſtories of the Saints are ſo barbarouſly and ſo negligently written, as they ſeeme neither to have authority, nor gravity, Conſul. Iuell. defenſ. Apolog. pag. 571.

Concil. Colonenſ. p. 2. can. 6.

Thus much of our adverſaries ſhameleſſe rejecting of truths, and of their bold bolſtring out of untruths, as alſo of their fables and lies: which things if they ſhall perſiſt ſtill to avouch, I will ſay with Bernard: Iuſtiùs os loquens talia fuſtibus tunderetur, quàm rationibus refelleretur: Hee that ſpeaketh ſuch vaine things, deſerveth rather to be beaten with clubs, than to bee confuted by arguments, Epiſt. 191. And as Auguſtine ſaith, writing againſt Petilian the Donatiſt: Quemadmodum, ſi mihi diceres, quod ego Petilianus ſum, non invenirem quomodo te refellerem, niſi aut jocantem riderem, aut inſanientem dolerem, hoc mihi nunc faciendum eſſe video: Even as if thou ſhouldeſt ſay unto me, that I am Petilian, I could not tell how to refell thee, but either in laughing at thy folly, or mourning for thy madneſſe: So muſt I bee faine to doe now, contra Petilian. lib. 2. cap. 38. And ſo muſt we be faine to doe, when wee ſee our adverſaries to paſſe the bounds of modeſtie, and to violate the law of reaſon, in making true falſe, and falſe true, in calling white blacke, and blacke white, wee muſt needs doe one of theſe two, either to ſcorne their folly, or to bewaile their blindneſſe, and ignorance, and hardneſſe of heart. And thus have wee the firſt Pillar of Poperie, conſiſting of rayling, ſlanders, forgeries, untruths, and fables.

THE

THE SECOND PILLAR OF PAPISTRIE, CONSISTING OF BLASPHEMIES, OPINIONS CONTRARY TO Scripture, Hereſies, ridiculous and abſurd poſitions.

The firſt part of Popiſh blaſphemies.

THe Rhemiſts doe lay great blaſphemies to our charge, writing in theſe words: No heretiks ever liker Antichriſt than theſe in our dayes, ſpecially in blaſphemies againſt Gods Church, Sacraments, Saints, and all ſacred things, Apoc. 13. Sect. 2. But I truſt in God, for all their great words, that they ſhall never prove one blaſphemie againſt us. No, be it knowne unto them, that we maintaine no blaſphemies: they miſtake the matter, they are themſelves blaſphemers, which do belch out blaſphemies againſt God, and his Church, the Scriptures, and againſt all holy things. This then muſt bee the iſſue, whether of us be theſe notorious blaſphemers, they or we: thus therefore beginneth our plea.

Firſt, wee will ſet downe their beadroll of blaſphemies, which they have uttered concerning the Scriptures.

1 Lodovicus a Canon of Laterane in Rome, pronounced in the late chapter of Trent: Scriptura eſt quaſi mortuum atramentum: The Scripture is as it were dead inke.

2 The Biſhop of Poiters in the ſame chapter: Scriptura eſt res inanimis & muta: The Scripture is a dead and dumbe thing. Iuel pag. 521. defenſ. Apolog.

3 Albertus Pigghius: Sunt ſcriptura muti Iudices: The Scriptures are dumbe Judges, Controv. 3. de Eccleſ.

4 Eckius calleth the Scriptures, Evangelium nigrum, & theologiam atramentariam; The blacke Goſpell, and inken divinity.

5 Pigghius againe ſaith: they are as a noſe of wax, Naſus cereus, to be drawne every way, Hierarch. lib. 3. cap. 3.

6 Hoſius ſpeaking of Davids Pſalmes, when it was objected that David the author thereof was no Biſhop, but a temporall Prince: hee maketh this heatheniſh and ſcornfull anſwer: Quid ni ſcriberet, ſcribimus indocti doctique poemata paſſim: No great matter if he writ them: for, as Horace ſaith, wee write ballads every body, both learned and unlearned, tagge and ragge, Hoſius lib. 2. contr. Brentium. Thus hee maketh the holy Prophet David but a writer of ballads.

7 Sylveſter Prierias contr. Luther. thus writeth: Indulgentia authoritate ſcriptura non innotuere nobis, ſed authoritate Romana Eccleſia, Romanorumque pontificum, qua major eſt: Pardons are not knowne to us by the authority of the Scriptures, but by the authority of the Church and Biſhops of Rome.

8 Apoſtoli quadam ſcripſerunt, non ut ſcripta illa praeeſſent fidei, & religioni noſtra, ſed potiùs ut ſubeſſent: The Apoſtles wrote certaine things, not that their writings ſhould bee above our faith and religion, but rather that they ſhould be under. Albert. Pigghius, Hierarch. lib. 1. cap. 2.

9 Gratian is not aſhamed to ſay, that the Canons of the Councels are of the ſame authority with the Scriptures, Diſtinct. 20. can. decretales. And Gregory 1. epiſt. 24. ſaith, hee doth reverence the foure generall Councels, as the foure Evangeliſts.

10 Yea, our Rhemiſts are not aſhamed to proteſt, that whatſoever the paſtors and prieſts doe teach in the unitie of the Church, is the word of God, 1 Theſ. 2. verſ. 12. So ſaith another: Determinatio eccleſia appellatur Evangelium: The determination of the Church is called the Goſpell, Iohannes Maria. And Hoſius, Quod eccleſia docet, expreſſum Dei, verbum eſt: Whatſoever the Church teacheth (meaning the Church of Rome) it is the expreſſe word of God, lib. de expreſſ. verb. Dei, p. 97. Thus they make the decrees and ordinances of men, equall to Gods word, nay above it, ut ſuprà loc. 8.

11 It was objected againſt certaine good Chriſtians, by D. Benet Chancellor to Fitzjames Biſhop of London, that upon a certaine night, they did read certaine chapters of the Evangeliſts in Engliſh, containing in them divers erronious, and damnable opinions and concluſions of hereſie, Fox. pag. 804. Here behold, with Papiſts the Scripture containeth hereſie.

12 Eckius thus ſaid before the Emperour at the city of Wormes, turning himſelfe to Luther : If he may once get this advantage, to be convinced by the Scriptures, we ſhall have nothing certaine and eſtabliſhed in Chriſtendome, Fox. pag. 851. Loe, the Scriptures with Papiſts breedeth uncertaintie of matters.

13 Anno 1553. the Kings Lievtenant at Lyons uttered theſe horrible blaſphemies unto Lodovicus Morſacus, Martyr: of the foure Evangeliſts, but two were pure, Matthew and Iohn; the other two Marke and Luke were but gathered out of the other. The Epiſtles of S. Paul, further ſaith he, but that the Doctors of the Church had authoriſed them, he would otherwiſe eſteeme them no better than the fables of Æſop: ex Criſp. pental. Fox pag. 908.

So alſo ſaid Hermanus a blaſphemous papiſt, that the Scripture ſhould bee of no more credit than Æſops fables, without the approbation of the Church: Which his ſaying is defended by Hoſius, lib. 3. de author, ſcrip. to be godly ſpoken.

14 The ſaid Lievtenant, to a maiden ſpeaking ſomewhat of the law, uttered theſe blaſphemous words: Curſed be the God of that law, ibid. Fox. pag. 908. What more vile blaſphemie could any of the deviliſh ſect of the Manichees have ſpued out?

15 The Biſhop of Cavaillon in France, examining certaine Chriſtians of Merindoll, was angrie with them, when they made mention of ſome demonſtration to be made out of the word of God: and in a furie curſed, and gave him to the devill that firſt invented that meane, Fox. pag. 949. And yet Chriſt for the triall of truth, biddeth us ſearch the Scriptures, Ioh. 5. No marvell then, if theſe fellowes curſe men, ſeeing they ſpare not Chriſt himſelfe.

16 A certaine blind popiſh Doctor reaſoning with Maſter Tindall, boldly ſaid, Wee were better to bee without Gods law, than the Popes, Fox. pag. 1076. Blaſph.

24 Lodovicus the Protonotary, ſtepped up in the Councell of Baſill, and ſaid, There was no argument to be gathered of the Acts of the Apoſtles, whoſe examples were more to be marvelled at, than followed, Fox. pag. 678. Loe here a great blaſphemie, Scripture is not to be followed. Blaſph.

17 Andradius thus unreverently writeth of the Scriptures, to ſay no more: Neque in ipſis libris, quibus ſacra myſteria conſcripta ſunt, quippiam ineſt divinitatis, qua nos ad credendum, qua illis continentur, aliqua religione conſtringat: In thoſe books wherein the holy myſteries are written, there is not one jot of divinity, which by any force of religion can tie or bind us to beleeve what is there contained: in 3. lib. defenſ. concil. Tridentin: A moſt impious and ungodly ſpeech: for where is there elſe any true divinity to be found, but in thoſe holy writings?

18 Cardinall Cuſanus, Scriptura (ſaith he) adapta ſunt ad tempus, & variè intelliguntur, ita ut uno tempore ſecundum currentem univerſalem ritum, exponantur: mutato ritu, iterum ſententia mutetur: The Scriptures are applied to the time, and may have ſundrie underſtandings: ſo that one time they may be expounded one way, according to the univerſall currant order of the (Church) and the ſame rite or order being broken, they may have another meaning, Cuſan ad Bohem. epiſt. 2. What heretike could have ſaid more than this, that the Scriptures are mutable and changeable?

19 Our Rhemiſt alſo ſhew great boldnes, in giving their raſh cenſures of the holy writers: for theſe are their words: If the Evangeliſts and other writers of holy Scripture, had not uſed all humane diligence to ſearch out the truth of matters, the holy Ghoſt would not have aſſiſted them, Act. 15. ſect. 10. And yet it is certaine, that Saint Paul had the Goſpell by revelation, without the help at all of humane diligence for he communicated not with fleſh and blood, Galat. 1. 16.

20 Againe, they ſay, that Saint Paul for feare of miſſing the line of truth, notwithſtanding hee had the Holy Ghoſt, went to conferre with Peter and the reſt, Rom. 12. ſect. 1. What is blaſphemie, if this be not, to ſay, that the Apoſtle, who was perſwaded hee had the Spirit of God, 1 Corinth. 7. 40. was afeard to miſſe the line of truth? how can this be, unleſſe it be imagined that the holy Ghoſt was not ſufficient to keep him in the right line of truth? Indeed hee went up to conferre with the Apoſtles, not to receive any further direction from them, for they did communicate nothing with him, Galat. 2. verſ. 6. but that they might give teſtimonie of their conſent in doctrine with him, to ſtop the ſlanderous mouthes of falſe brethren, who reported the contrary.

And now, to fill up the meaſure of their blaſphemies, let us heare what is credibly reported to have been uttered by no ſmall perſon, but even one of their late Popes, in the hearing of his Cardinals: Leo. 10. O quantum nobis profuit fabula iſta de Chriſto? O what advantage (ſaith hee) hath this fable of Chriſt brought us? ex Iuello. defenſ. Apolog. pag. 273. Thus by theſe few examples, wee may ſee what blaſphemous opinions many of the Papiſts (for wee doe not in this caſe charge them all) do hold concerning the Scriptures: Some making humane ordinances equall unto them in authority: ſome preferring them before Scripture: others calling them hereticall books, uncertaine, mutable, mute and dumbe Judges, and not to be followed in all things, with ſuch like blaſphemies: and theſe matters, not to bee affirmed only by ſome of the lay-ſort, but by their Divines, yea Doctors, yea Biſhops, yea and Cardinals too, and not by one or two ſingular men, but by a whole Colledge, as the Rhemiſts, yea by the Pope himſelfe, as wee have ſeene, whom they preferre even before Councels, and in whoſe breſt, they ſay, all knowledge is locked up. Now in the next place wee will collect ſuch blaſphemies as are common among them, concerning the ſaid ghoſtly father of theirs, the Pope of Rome.

Blaſphemie concerning the Pope.

23 The Pope under Chriſt and in ſtead of Chriſt is the head of the Church, and a man may tearme him the Vicegerent Bridegroome, Hard. pag. 99. If the Pope then be the head, then is the Church his body: and ſo indeed Pope Athanaſius calleth populos mundi, partes corporis ſui. The people of the world, the parts or members of his body, Iuel. pag. 657. But Paul maketh the Church the body only of Chriſt, Epheſ. 4. 12. And as the Church Catholike cannot be the body of any other but Chriſt, ſo no man can be the head thereof but Chriſt.

24 Another ſaith, Chriſtus & Papa faciunt unum conſiſtorium, & excepto peccato, poteſt Papa quaſi omnia facere, quæ poteſt Deus: Chriſt and the Pope make but one Court or Conſiſtorie, and ſin only excepted, the Pope in a manner can do all things that God can do, Panormitan. de election. cap. licet Abb.

25 The Pope hath the heavenly diſpoſition of things, and therefore may alter and change the natures of things by applying the ſubſtance of one thing to another, cap. Quando de tranſlat. Epiſc. tit. 7.

26 Againe, Papa nec Deus eſt, nec homo: The Pope is neither God nor man. And in another gloſſe, he is called, Dominus Deus noſter Papa, Our Lord God the Pope. Chriſtoph. Marcell ſaid in the Councell of Laterane, Tu es alter Deus in terris: Thou art another God upon earth. And in the late Tridentine chapter, they call the Pope terrenum Deum, an earthly God: ex citation. Iuel pag. 593.

27 In the late Councell of Laterane, one Simon Begnius B. of Modruſia, thus ſaid to Pope Leo, Ecce venis Leo de tribu Iuda, radix David: te Leo beatiſſime ſalvatorem expectavimus: Behold the Lion is come of the tribe of Juda, the root of David: O moſt bleſſed Leo, wee have looked for thee to be our Saviour. Concil. Lateran. ſeſſ. 6. pag. 601.

28 In the late Chapter of Trent, Cornelius the Biſhop of Bitonto ſaid thus: Papa lux venit in mundum, & dilexerunt homines tenebras magis, quàm lucem: The Pope being the light, is come into the world, and men loved darkneſſe more than light.

29 The Pope ſuffered the Ambaſſadors of Sicilia to lie proſtrate on the ground, and thus to crie out unto him, Qui tollis peccata mundi miſerêre noſtri: Thou that takeſt away the ſinnes of the world, have mercie upon us: Paul. Æmilius, lib. 7. ex Iuello. What horrible and unſufferable blaſphemies are theſe, to attribute to the Pope that which is proper only to Chriſt? And how intolerable is the pride of this man of ſin, to ſuffer ſuch things by his flatterers and clawbacks, ever to be given unto him?

30 That the Pope is the heart of the Church, in quickning the ſame ſpiritually, that hee is the welſpring, from the which floweth all vertue and goodneſſe, Ex epiſt. Iohan. Huſſ. Fox. pag. 628.

31 That he is able to make new articles, and aboliſh the old: Friers of Antwerp. ex Fox pag. 929. col. 1.

32 The Canoniſts ſay, Papa poteſt diſpenſare contra jus divinum: The Pope may diſpenſe againſt the law of God, 16. q. 1. Quicunque in gloſſa.

33 Papa poteſt diſpenſare contra jus naturæ: The Pope may diſpenſe againſt the law of nature, 15. q. 6. authoritate in gloſſ.

34 Papa poteſt diſpenſare contra Apoſtolum, diſtinct. 32. lector. The Pope may diſpenſe againſt the Apoſtle.

35 Papa poteſt diſpenſare contra novum Teſtamentum: The Pope may diſpenſe againſt the new Teſtament. Papa poteſt diſpenſare de omnibus præceptis veteris & novi Teſtamenti: The Pope may diſpenſe with all the precepts both of the old and new Teſtament; ut citatur à Iuel. pag. 59. defenſ. apolog.

36 That power which Chriſt had only in habitu, when he was here upon earth, the Pope hath now actu, that is, the univerſall juriſdiction both of ſpirituall and temporall things: Ex citation. Fox. pag. 791.

37 Major honos debetur Papæ, quàm angelis: Greater honor is due to the Pope than to Angels: Antoninus.

38 If Prelates be called and counted of Conſtantinus for gods, I then being above all prelates, ſeeme by this reaſon to be above all gods: wherfore no marvell, if it be in my power to change time & times, to alter and abrogate lawes, to diſpenſe with all things, yea with the precepts of Chriſt: Decretal. de tranſl. Epiſcop. cap. Quarto.

Laſtly, if the Pope doe lead innumerable ſoules by flocks into hell, yet no man muſt preſume to rebuke his faults in this world: Diſtinct. 40. cap. ſi Papa.

Thus have wee the opinion of the Popiſh Canoniſts of their high Biſhop. Hee is the light of the world, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, a God upon earth, higher than the Angels, able to diſpenſe with the law of nature and the law of God: yea, in earth above all gods. What horrible and filthie blaſphemies are theſe? Never did Antiochus, Nero, or Caligula, or who elſe commanded themſelves to bee worſhiped for gods upon earth, ever arrogate ſo much unto themſelves. What need wee now looke further for Antichriſt? Hee doth evidently reveale himſelfe: for here we have the adverſary that exalteth himſelfe againſt all that is called God, and that ſitteth in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelfe that hee is God, as S. Paul propheſieth of him, 2 Theſ. 24. Let us ſee further, what other blaſphemies we can find amongſt them.

39 That the Virgin Mary was conceived without originall ſinne, contrary to S. Paul, who ſaith, that God hath concluded all under ſinne, Rom. 11. 32. Rom. 3. 23. all have ſinned: that ſhe hath no need of remiſſion of ſinnes: that ſhe was not juſtified by Chriſt, being juſt from her beginning. neither that ſhe gave God thanks for expiation of her ſinne, or prayed at any time for remiſſion of her ſinnes: Franciſcan Friers, Fox p. 801. Theſe grievous blaſphemies are confuted by the Virgin Maries owne mouth:

My ſoule rejoyceth in God my Saviour : Chriſt therefore was her Saviour : who was ſo called in no other ſenſe, but becauſe he ſhould ſave his people from their ſinnes, Matth. 1.21.

40 Cardinall Cajetanus diſputing againſt Luther, affirmed that faith was not neceſſary to him that receiveth the Sacrament, Fox pag. 845. A blaſphemous untruth, contrary to Scripture : For without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb. 11.6. Without the which no ſervice of ours can bee accepted before him.

41 That wee need not now goe to Jeſus Chriſt, to have him an interceſſor, but to God alone, ſetting Jeſus Chriſt apart, and ſo ought wee verily to beleeve, affirmed by D. Benet, Maſter of the Sorboniſts, diſputing with Francis Rebezies Martyr, ex Criſpin. lib. 6. Fox pag. 921.

42 In the towne of Perth in Scotland, Frier Spenſe in his ſermon affirmed, that prayer made to Saints was ſo neceſſarie, that without it, there could bee no hope of ſalvation to man, ex Regiſt. Scotia. Fox pag. 1267. Thus Chriſt, we ſee is diſplaced, and thruſt out of dores, as whoſe mediation is not neceſſarie, and the idolatrous invocation of Saints brought in in ſtead thereof.

43 That there are ſome men in this life ſo juſt, that they need no repentance, affirmed by the Rhemiſts, Luk. 15. ſect. 1. for ſo they expound that place, verſe 7. of men that continue juſt and godly, and are not penitent for their ſinnes.

44 Another calleth marriage a prophanation of holy orders. Greg. Martin. diſcover. cap. 15. ſect. 11. Contrary to the Apoſtle, who ſaith, that marriage is honorable amongſt all men, Heb. 13.4.

45 Our hearts and inward repentance are open to the Angels and other celeſtiall ſpirits in heaven, Rhemiſt. Luk. 15. ſect. 2. And thus they blaſphemouſly rob God of his honour, in attributing that to creatures, which is peculiar to his Majeſtie : namely, to be a ſearcher and knower of our hearts, 1 King. 8.39. The ſame is alſo affirmed by Arturus de ſanctorum invocation. cap. 7. theſ. 65. Cognoſcunt Angeli intimos animorum ſenſus, adeoq; reconditas & penitus abſtruſas cogitationes : The Angels know our inward meaning, and the hidden and ſecret thoughts of our hearts : which is contrary to the Scripture, which maketh God only to be the ſearcher of the hearts.

46 That we may beleeve in Saints, and that it is true of them, as S. Paul ſaith, How can they call on him, on whom they have not beleeved? Rom. 10. 14. So wee cannot pray to any Saint in heaven, unleſſe we beleeve, and truſt that they can help us, Rhemiſt. Rom. 10. ſect. 4. A blaſphemie contrary to Scripture, which ſaith : yee beleeve in God, beleeve alſo in mee, Iohn 14.1. God only and his Chriſt is to be beleeved upon.

47 That we need not marvell, if the image of our Ladie and the like doe ſtranger and greater miracles than thoſe which Chriſt himſelfe did, Rhemiſt. Iohn 14. ſect. 3. A monſtrous blaſphemie, that images worke ſtranger miracles than Chriſt himſelfe.

48 Catharinus a great papiſt ſaith, that the commandement in the law againſt Images, was but temporall, and to continue but till the eſtabliſhing of the new Teſtament, ex Bellarm. de imaginibus ſanctor. lib. 2. cap. 7.

49 That there is a religious worſhip properly due unto Images, yea as they are conſidered in themſelves, Et non ſolum ut vicem gerunt exemplaris, And not only, as they repreſent another thing Bellar. de imaginib. ſanctor, lib. 2. cap. 21. Loe then by theſe popiſh doctrines, Images are to bee worſhipped with divine and religious worſhip, which the Angels themſelves refuſe, and is only due unto God, Revelat. 22. 9.

50 That every popiſh Prieſt is after the order of Melchiſedech, and that the proper act of Chriſts prieſthood, conſiſteth in the perpetuall offering of his body and blood in the Church : Rhemiſt. Heb. 7. ſect. 8. That the ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſſe was not after the order of Melchiſedech, but after the order of Aaron : Heskins lib. 1. cap. 13. What intollerable blaſphemie is this, to affirme that every vile maſſing Prieſt is after the order of Melchiſedech, and to denie that Chriſt upon the croſſe, was in that act a Prieſt of Melchiſedechs order? And thus ſhall every one of their ſhavelings bee more properly a Prieſt, than Chriſt.

51 In the idolatrous ſervice of their Maſſe, they utter blaſphemies in heapes : We beſeech thee (ſaith the prieſt) receive this oblation, and yet they affirme, that it is the very body and blood of Chriſt: here then the prieſt is made a mediator for Chriſt. And againe, Command thou theſe to be brought by the hands of the holy Angell into heaven. But if it be the body of Chriſt, what need it bee carried by an Angell? Let the Prieſt bow himſelfe to the hoaſt, ſaying, I worſhip thee, I glorifie thee. Lo here they worſhip a peece of bread : In canon. Miſſa. And to conclude, they doubt not to ſay, that Sacerdos eſt creator creatoris ſui : That the prieſt doth make his maker, Iuel reſponſ. ad articul. pag. 615.

52 It is not a ſufficient ſatisfaction to beleeve that Chriſt hath abundantly ſatisfied for us, but God alſo muſt be ſatisfied for our ſinnes, by the puniſhment of our ſelves. Concil. Tridentin. ſeſſ. 14. can. 13. A blaſphemous aſſertion, that Chriſts ſatisfaction is not ſufficient for us.

53 Men cannot be ſaved, though they be predeſtinate, unleſſe they keep Gods commandments, Rhemiſt. Act. 27. ſect. 3. By this ſpeech, they ſeeme to inſinuate, that a man predeſtinate of God, may miſſe of ſalvation : which is a blaſphemous thought, for Gods eternall decree changeth not.

54 The Rhemiſt alleage this ſaying of Hierome ; They follow the lambe, whither ſoever hee goeth, if the lambe bee in every place, then they that bee with the lambe, muſt bee every where, you ſee, ſay they, how that bleſſed father refuted the Calviniſts before they were borne : Rhemiſt. Apocal. 6. ſect. 1. Are not now the Papiſts I pray you become Ubiquitaries themſelves? Nay worſe than Ubiquitaries, inclining to the opinion of the omnipreſence, not only of the humanitie of Chriſt, but even of the Saints: which is a great blaſphemie.

That confidence and aſſurance, that faithfull men have of their ſalvation, they call a faithleſſe perſwaſion, a moſt damnable, falſe illuſion and preſumption, Rhemiſt. Rom. 8. ſect. 9. A fond ſpeciall faith and fiction, Rom. 4. ſect. 9. yea they moſt wickedly ſay, that it is not fides Apoſtolorum, but fides dæmoniorum, not the faith of the Apoſtles, but the faith of devils, 1 Corinth. 9. 9. yet this aſſurance and perſwaſion of ſalvation is grounded upon the Scriptures: as where S. Paul ſaith, I am perſwaded, or I am ſure, that neither death nor life, &c. ſhall be able to remove us from the love of God. And S. Peter, That we ſhould make our election and calling ſure. 56 Rom 8.38.39. 2 Pet. 1. 10.

A dead faith is a true faith, and the ſame which is called the Catholike faith, and in ſubſtance all one with that faith that juſtifieth, Rhemiſt. Iames 2 ſect. 11. So by this reaſon, the faith of devils and juſtifying faith ſhall bee all one in ſubſtance, for that dead faith, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, the devils themſelves may have, for they beleeve and tremble. 57 Iames 2. 19.

The certaintie of remiſſion of ſinnes, with a ſure confidence and truſt in Chriſt, may he found even amongſt ſchiſmatiks, heretiks and wicked men. Con. Trident. ſeſſ. 6. cap. 9. It appeareth by this, that they underſtand not, what this ſure truſt and confidence meaneth, when ſo unadviſedly and groſſely they affirme it to be found amongſt wicked men. None can be aſſured of remiſſion of ſinnes, but there followeth peace of conſcience with God: and this peace none can have, but they which are juſtified by faith: and none are ſo juſtified but the righteous and faithfull. 58 Rom. 5. 1.

That the decree and ſentence which was pronounced by the high Prieſts and Scribes againſt Chriſt, was juſt and right: Hoſius cont. Brentium. lib. 2. And that it might and was truly pronounced by Caiphas, that Chriſt was worthy of death: And thus wickedly they take part with Annas and Caiphas againſt Chriſt. Some other Papiſts ſay, that they erred not in the ſentence given againſt Chriſt: for hee was indeed guiltie of death, having taken our ſins upon him, but the error was in the manner of their proceeding, which was done tumultuouſly and by ſuborning of falſe witneſſes: And this (ſaith Bellarmine, their great doctor) is Probabilis ſententia: a very probable opinion, de concilior. authoritat. lib. 2. pag. 8. Yea they ſpeake yet more plainely: Iudæi mortaliter peccaſſent, niſi Chriſtum crucifixiſſent: The Jewes had ſinned mortally, if they had not crucified Chriſt. Diſtinct. 13. Item, in margine. 59

Another ſaith: Petrus non fidem Chriſti, ſed Chriſtum ſalva fide negavit: Peter denied not the faith of Chriſt, but, his faith ſaved, he denied but only Chriſt. Copus dialog. 1. pag. 51. Is not here good popiſh divinity, that Chriſt may be denied, without deniall of the faith? 60

The Rhemiſt affirme: that Chriſt did penance by faſting, ſolitarineſſe, and converſing with beaſts, Marke 1. ſect. 6. This is great blaſphemy, for Chriſt was free from ſin, & therfore needed no repentance. 61

That Lazarus and Abraham were both in hell, and not in the kingdome of heaven before Chriſt, Rhemiſt. Luk. 16. ſect. 1. A blaſphemie contrary to Scripture, which ſaith, that the rich man only was in hell, verſ. 23. and not that Lazarus was in hell. 62

They deny that Chriſt is αὐτόθεος, that is, God of himſelfe, Rhemiſt. Iohn 10. ſect. 3. Whereas the Scripture ſpeaketh plainely, that, as the father hath life in himſelfe, ſo likewiſe hath he given to the ſon, to have life in himſelfe, Ioh. 5. 26. what is it to have life in himſelfe, but to be God in himſelfe? 63

The ſufferings and paſſions of the Saints, dedicated and ſanctified in the blood of Chriſt, have a forcible ſatisfactioe for the Church, and the particular members thereof: and are the accompliſhment of the wants of Chriſts paſſion, Rhemiſt. Col. 1. ſect. 4. An horrible blaſphemie againſt the merit and ſatisfaction of Chriſts death, as though it were not ſufficient in it ſelfe to ſatisfie for all his members, but his wants muſt be ſupplied by the ſatisfaction of others, contrary to the Scripture, which ſaith: that Chriſt by himſelfe hath purged our ſinnes: therfore not by any other, but ſufficiently in his owne perſon. 64 Heb. 1. 3.

Bellarmine ſaith, Non dubitantur multi eſſe fideles, qui nondum juſtificati nec redempti ſunt: It is not to be doubted but that there are many faithfull men, which are not yet juſtified or redeemed de Miſſ. lib. 2. cap. 22. reſp. ad 4. obeject. yea he ſaith moſt blaſphemouſly: Hominem cum vera fide damnari: That a man having a true faith, may for all that be condemned: De baptiſm. lib. 1. cap. 14. Great blaſphemies contrary to Scripture, being juſtified by faith (ſaith S. Paul) we are at peace with God. And wee are ſaved by faith, Epheſ. 2. 10. If then faith bringeth peace of conſcience and ſalvation, how then is it poſſible that with this faith, men notwithſtanding ſhould be condemned? 65 Rom. 5. 1. Epheſ. 2. 10.

That we are not formaliter, that is, formally juſtified by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, Bellarm. lib. 2. de baptiſ. cap. 21 reſp. ad argum. 4. yet S. Paul ſaith, that Chriſt is our wiſdome and righteouſneſſe: his righteouſneſſe, is our righteouſneſſe, what is this elſe but the very forme, ſubſtance and matter of our righteouſneſſe? 66 1 Cor. 1. 30.

And againe ſaith he, Sacrificium crucis non efficienter juſtificat: Chriſts ſacrifice upon the croſſe, doth not juſtifie as an efficient cauſe, de Miſſ. lib. 2. cap. 4. Thus Chriſt death is neither formall nor efficient cauſe of our juſtification with Papiſts. I pray you then what is it? But the Apoſtle, I am ſure ſaith otherwiſe: That Chriſt hath reconciled us in the body of his fleſh: hee then that reconcileth, ranſometh or redeemeth us, what is he elſe but an agent, efficient, and working cauſe of our redemption and reconciliation? 67 Coloſſ. 1. 21. 22.

Bellarmine alſo ſaith: Accedente Dei gratia verè poſſumus aliquo modo ex propriis, & ad æquilitatem, 68 ac per hoc juſtè & ex condigno ſatisfacere: By the grace of God, we may make ſatisfaction truly in ſome ſort, of our owne, and to a full equality, yea juſtly and condignly, de pœnitent. lib. 4. cap. 7. A moſt horrible blaſphemie, that man may ſatisfie God by his owne proper works, fully according to the exact Iob 9.3. rule of juſtice: Iob ſaith contrary; That man cannot anſwer God one thing of a thouſand. Neither is this blaſphemie much qualified, by ſaying, that we may ſatisfie by grace: For theſe two, Gods grace, and our ſatisfactory works cannot ſtand together, as S. Paul ſheweth: If it be of grace, it is no more of works, for then grace were no more grace: but if it bee of works, it is no more of grace, for then works were no more works, Rom. 11. 6. Our ſalvation then cannot bee of grace and works together, Galath. 2. 21. for the one excludeth the other. And I pray you to what purpoſe died Chriſt, if men receive grace ſo Rom. 7 12. fully to ſatisfie for themſelves? If righteouſneſſe bee by the law (ſaith the Apoſtle) Chriſt died with- Iam. 1. 17. out cauſe. And even this righteouſneſſe of the Law was alſo of the grace and gift of God, for the Law is holy, juſt and good. And every good gift is of God. Wherefore to ſay, that a man by working well, even of the grace and the gift of God, is juſtified, is to make the death of Chriſt needleſſe and in vaine. What greater blaſphemie then can be utered by any heretiks in the world than this?

69 Now in the laſt place commeth in wicked blaſphemous Frier Tecell, the Popes pardoner: who made his proclamations openly in the Churches to the people in this ſort: Although a man had laine with our Ladie the mother of Chriſt, and had begotten her with child, yet were he able by the Popes power to pardon the fault. Sleidan. lib. 13.

Unto theſe blaſphemies afore rehearſed, we may adjoyne ſuch like popiſh ſtuffe, out of their Lady Pſalter, which was compiled by no ſmall perſon among them, but even by that Seraphicall Doctor of theirs Bonaventure, a Cardinall of Rome, who lived Anno 1170. and was Canonized for a Saint, by Pope Sixtus the fourth, Anno 1482. In this blaſphemous Pſalter, ſuch Pſalmes as the Prophet David endited to the honour of God, are applied by the foreſaid Doctor to the praiſe of his Ladie. And therfore he in divers Pſalmes in ſtead of the name of the Lord, hath put in the name of our Ladie. Some few examples it ſhall not be amiſſe to ſee.

70 Pſalm. 4. Benedicta ſis domina in æternum, & majeſtas tua in ſeculum, glorificate eam omnes gentes: Bleſſed bee thou O Ladie for ever, and thy majeſtie for ever and ever, glorifie her all nations of the earth.

71 7 Domina mea in te ſperavi, de inimicis meis libera me domina: O my Ladie, in thee doe I put my truſt, deliver me from mine enemies O Ladie.

72 11 Miſericordia illius noſtrorum auferat multitudinem peccatorum: Her mercie take from us the multitude of our ſinnes.

73 13 Uſque quo domina obliviſceris me, & non liberas me in die tribulationis? How long doſt thou forget me O Lady, and doſt not deliver me in the day of trouble?

74 25 Ad te domina levavi animam, non prævaleant adverſum me laquei mortis, ductrix mea eſto ad patriam: To thee O Lady, doe I lift up my ſoule, let not the ſnares of death prevaile againſt me, be thou my guide unto my heavenly countrey.

75 26 Iudica me domina: Judge me O Ladie.

76 31 In te domina ſperavi, non confundar in æternum: in manus tuas domina commendo ſpiritum meum: In thee O Ladie doe I put my truſt, let me not be confounded for ever: into thy hands (O Lady) I commend my ſpirit.

77 91 Qui habitat in adjutorio matris Dei, in protectione ipſius commorabitur: Who ſo dwelleth in the help of the mother of God, ſhall dwell in the ſhadow of her protection.

78 110 Dominus dixit dominæ noſtræ, Sede mater mea à dextris meis: The Lord ſaid to our Ladie, Sit here my mother on my right hand.

79 119 Miſerationibus tuis plena eſt terra: The whole earth is full of thy mercies.

80 127 Niſi domina ædificaverit domum cordis noſtri, non permanebit ædificium ejus: Except our Lady ſhall build the houſe of our hearts, the building thereof ſhall not continue.

81 Exultat totum genus humanum, quia talem dedit mediatricem Dominus Deus tuus: Rejoyce, O all mankind, becauſe the Lord thy God hath given unto thee ſuch a mediatrix.

82 O benedicta, in manib. tuis repoſita eſt noſtra ſalus: O thou bleſſed, in thy hands is laid up our ſalvation.

83 In nomine tuo omne genu flectatur cœleſtium, &c. In thy name let every knee bend, in heaven, in earth, and hell.

84 Quemadmodum infans ſine nutrice non poteſt vivere, ita nec ſine domina noſtra poſſes habere ſalutem: Like as the infant cannot live without a nurſe, ſo neither canſt thou have ſalvation without our Lady.

Many ſuch like blaſphemies are contained in that idolatrous and blaſphemous pſalter: for what greater blaſphemie can there be, than to aſcribe unto a creature the titles and honour due and proper unto God only? As that ſhe is our mediatrix, taketh away our ſinnes, edifieth our hearts, filleth all the earth with her mercies, ſitteth at the right hand of God, that we are to truſt in her, that ſhe is to be glorified, & all things to bow the knee unto her: How far are they now from making a God of their Lady? And thus they do moſt preſumptuouſly rob God of his honor, who will not give his glory to another.

85 To theſe ſo grievous blaſphemies afore rehearſed, I will adde alſo theſe that follow, the gloſſe upon the decrees: decr. pag. 1. diſt. 19. cap. 10. ſaith thus, citing the teſtimonie of Pope Adrian, concerning Leo the firſt, Cujus ſententiam, quicquid ubique catholicum eſt, velut cæleſte miraculum celebrat &

veneratur oraculum: Whoſe ſentence every catholike man doth celebrate as an heavenly miracle, and worſhip as an oracle: what could bee ſaid more of the ſayings of Saint Paul, yea of Chriſt himſelfe?

Diſtinct. 20. cap. 1. Leo the fourth thus decreeth: Patrum ſtatuta qui non retinere convincitur, nec quatuor Evangelia retinere creditur: He that holdeth not the Fathers decrees, cannot hold the foure Evangeliſts, what is this elſe, but to give equall authority to the one, as well as to the other? 86

Diſtinct. 40. cap. 6. The gloſſe reciting the words of Bonifacius commendeth thoſe, Qui religionis inſtitutionem ab ore praeceſſoris ejus, magis quàm à ſacris paginis expetant: Which did deſire to be inſtructed in the Chriſtian faith, rather from the mouth of his predeceſſor, that is, the Pope, than from the ſacred Scripture: what greater blaſphemy could be uttered? 87

In the ſame place that ſaying of Iob, as touching God, Si deſtruxerit nemo eſt qui adificet, If hee deſtroy, who can build up, is moſt blaſphemouſly applied to the Pope.

Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 2. qu. 7. cap. 39. The gloſſe ſaith thus: Chriſtus in populo ſuo paſtorale officium non gerebat: Chriſt did not beare a paſtorall office among his people: which ſaying, though it be thus qualified, that in certaine reſpects, Chriſt did not execute an office of the paſtor: yet it is not farre from blaſphemy to deny any part of the paſtorall office unto Chriſt. 89

In their Idolatrous Maſſe, after the words of conſecration, they ſing this ſong unto the bread: Non eſt panis, ſed Deus homo liberator meus: It is no bread, but God and man my deliverer: thus they ſay to a peece of bread. 90

Vega de miſſa. theſ. 41. Oblatio in cruce facta temporaria, non eſſet Chriſti aeternum ſacerdotium, ſed fuiſſet in cruce extinctum, &c. The temporarie oblation done upon the Croſſe, had not been that everlaſting Prieſthood, but ſhould have been extinct in the Croſſe, if there were not another permanent ſacrifice in the Church: a great blaſphemie, that Chriſt ſhould not have an everlaſting prieſthood, if their Maſſe were not. 91

The ſame Vega ſaith, it was no great gift that Chriſt promiſed at his departure to his Apoſtles, that he would be with them according to his divinity to the end of the world. 92

Innocentius thus interpreteth the word Maſſe: Miſſa quaſi hoſtia tranſmiſſa à nobis patri, ut intercedat pro nobis ad ipſum: hac enim ſola ſufficiens & idonea miſſio, &c. The Maſſe or miſſe is ſo called, becauſe it is a ſacrifice ſent by us unto the father to make interceſſion for us: for this is the only fit and ſufficient ſending unto God to appeaſe his wrath, &c. Behold, a peece of bakers bread is become the Mediator of the Papiſts: ſuch prayers, ſuch a Mediator: but if they ſay it is Chriſt himſelfe, cannot the Mediator execute his office, unleſſe he be ſent up by them in the forme of bread? 93

Now commeth in better ſtuffe than any wee had yet in their bookes of ceremonies, lib. 1. ſect. 2. they aſcribe unto their Chriſme as much as unto the blood of Chriſt: Peccatum frangit, ut Chriſti ſanguis & angit: It breaketh and chaceth away ſinne, even as the blood of Chriſt. 94

In their booke of conformities, they call Francis, Iheſum typicum, typicall Iheſus, for as Jeſus, ſay they, was the image of his father, ſo Francis is the image of Chriſt. 95

Nay they goe yet a ſtep further, not making Dominicus only equall to Chriſt, as they did Francis, but preferring him before: For thus we may find in the Chronicles of Antonius Biſhop of Florence, part. 3. tit. 23. Chriſt was borne naked, but to keepe him from the cold was laid in a cratch: but Dominicus did uſe being a child to lie naked upon the ground: when our Lord was borne, a ſtarre appeared in the ayre: when Dominicus was baptized, a ſtarre was ſeene in his forehead: Novum jubar praemonſtrans ſeculi, Shewing the new light of the world: Chriſt now being immortall, twice appeared to his Diſciples the doores being ſhut: Dominicus yet mortall, came into the Church being ſhut, for feare to awake his brethren: But I would he had been awake that thus wrote, and not in his heavy ſleep and Ægyptian darkneſſe, thus to have blaſphemed. 96

Great ſtore of ſuch like blaſphemies are every where to be found in popiſh treatiſes: my purpoſe is not to bring them all into the readers view, it were too long a peece of worke, and I thinke, needleſſe: neither doe I in this booke promiſe or profeſſe ſo much: but my intendment is only in every place to give the Chriſtian Reader a taſte of the bitter and ſowre fruits of popery. By this blacke beadroll of blaſphemies here rehearſed, it is no hard matter to gheſſe of what ſpirit they are, from whom they proceed, and what manner of religion that is which is fraught with ſuch ſtuffe. No man (ſaith Saint Paul) ſpeaking by the ſpirit of God, calleth Ieſus execrable. If they therefore had the ſpirit of God, as they boaſt, they would not in ſuch ſort as they doe, with ſuch vile tearmes deprave the holy Scriptures: nor ſo extenuate the precious death of Chriſt, adding other helpes and ſupplies thereunto, nor ſo defile that only propitiatory ſacrifice, which was once offered upon the Croſſe, by foyſting another in the place thereof, namely that abominable Idoll of the Maſſe, which they moſt blaſphemouſly affirme to bee the proper act of Chriſts prieſthood, yea more proper than the offering up of himſelfe upon the Croſſe. Doe not theſe grievous blaſphemies now, which they utter, rebound upon Chriſt, and tend to his diſhonour? What then is this elſe, but to call Jeſus execrable? Goe to then yee Papiſts: I will ſay unto you, as Auguſtine ſometime requited Iulian the Pelagian heretike: Nunc ergo, ne tui ſtomachi follis indigeſta maledictorum cruditate rumpatur, in hunc evome, ſi audes, calumnioſas tuas vanitates, contra Iulian. lib. 2. Now therefore, leſt this filthie windbagge of thy ſtomack ſhould burſt with the raw and undigeſted humour of ſuch wicked ſpeech, empty now thy ſtomacke, and vomit thy deceitfull and perverſe vanities upon him if thou dare, &c. If yee will not ceaſe thus to caſt up and bewray your blaſphemous thoughts, know yee, that yee blaſpheme not man, but yee have opened your mouth againſt Jeſus himſelfe. And let this ſuffice for this part.

Popiſh aſſertions flat contrary to Scripture.

1 1 Cor. 7. 14. THe Rhemiſts reprove Calvin, for affirming Chriſtian mens children to bee holy from their mothers wombe. Annot. Roman. 5. ſection. 8. Whereas notwithſtanding the Apoſtle himſelfe calleth them holy. Not, that they are not guilty of originall ſinne, but becauſe they are compriſed in Gods covenant, and have right to be baptized.

2 Rom. 7. 9. 17. Nothing done by concupiſcence without the conſent of will, can make a man guiltie before God, neither can the motions of the fleſh, in a juſt man any whit defile the operations of the ſpirit, but make them often more meritorious, Rhemiſt. Rom. 7. ſect. 9. flat oppoſite to Saint Paul. I doe not the good thing which I would, but the evill, which I would not, that doe I. Now then, it is no more I that doe it, but ſinne that dwelleth in mee. Here Saint Paul calleth the motions or deſire of the fleſh, yea without conſent of his will, evill, and giveth it the name of ſinne. How then doth not that, whith is evill and ſinfull, make us guiltie before God, and defile the operations of the ſpirit?

3 Matth. 7. 13. Chriſtians in their lives muſt ſeeke the ſtrait way, but in religion the ancient common way, Rhemiſt. Luke 13. 3. A corrupt gloſſe contrary to Scripture, for it is the ſtrait way that leadeth to life, whether in life or religion: the broad common way leadeth to deſtruction.

4 Matth. 3. 4. That Iohns baptiſme had not any ſpirituall grace, Rhemiſt. Iohn 3. ſect. 2. But the Scripture teſtifieth that it had remiſſion of ſinnes joyned unto it, which is a ſpirituall grace.

5 Gal. 1. 1. 16. That Saint Paul was to bee conſecrated, ordered, and admitted by men, Rhemiſt. Act. 13. ſect. 4. Saint Paul witneſſeth of himſelfe the contrary, Paul an Apoſtle, not of men, neither by men, but (immediately) by Jeſus Chriſt. And verſe 16. he ſaith, he did not immediatly (being now called and appointed of Chriſt) communicate with fleſh and blood.

6 2 Cor. 5. 7. Epheſ. 2. 10. Faith, which juſtifieth, is not the efficient, or inſtrumentall cauſe of ſalvation, Rhemiſt. Galath. 6. ſect. 4. But the contrary is proved out of Scripture, Wee walke by faith, and not by ſight. As the eye then is the inſtrument, whereby wee behold things preſent, ſo is faith the organon or inſtrument of the ſoule, whereby wee apprehend things abſent and inviſible. That alſo is an evident place to this purpoſe, Eph. 2. 10. By grace are yee ſaved through faith, and that not of your ſelves, for it is the gift of God, and not of works. What elſe can be the meaning of this place, but that wee are ſaved by grace, apprehended by faith? So that grace is the efficient cauſe, faith the inſtrumentall: And leſt that any man ſhould ſay, that faith ſaveth us, as other vertues wrought in us by grace, not by any apprehenſion of grace, but as a meritorious cauſe, as the Rhemiſts affirme: the Apoſtle addeth, that faith is the gift of God, and therefore meriteth not: and he excludeth works, even works of grace, ordained for us to walke in, from being any cauſe of juſtification before God. And ſo faith alſo is excluded as it is an act or worke of the underſtanding only, and hath place only in the matter of ſalvation, in reſpect of the apprehenſive faculty and power thereof.

7 Rom 6. 23. Whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, the gift of God is eternall life; The Rhemiſts take upon them to correct the Apoſtles words, ſaying thus: The ſequell of ſpeech required, that as he ſaid, Death or damnation is the ſtipend of ſinne, ſo life everlaſting is the ſtipend of juſtice, and ſo it is. Rhemiſt. Rom. 6. ſect. 8. What can bee more contrary to the Apoſtle than this? Life everlaſting, ſaith he, is the gift of God: Nay, ſay they, it is as properly the ſtipend of righteouſneſſe, as damnation is the ſtipend of ſinne: but the Apoſtles declination from that ſequell ſheweth the contrary.

8 Iohn 17. 5. Chriſts paines were of no account of their owne nature compared with his glory, Rhemiſt. Rom. 8. ſect. 5. A monſtrous blaſphemie, and contrary to Scripture, for if there were no compariſon betweene Chriſts ſufferings, and the glory which he hath purchaſed for us by them, then his ſufferings were no ſatisfaction to Gods juſtice: Wherefore his paſſion being the paſſion of the Sonne of God, was both a full ſatisfaction and a worthie deſert of that glory, which hee hath obtained for us: Thou art worthie to take the booke, and to open the ſeales thereof, becauſe thou waſt killed, Revelat. 5. ſect. 9. Chriſt therefore in reſpect of his paſſion did fully deſerve all that glory, which hee hath obtained for us: but there is no deſert, where there is not a proportion betweene the labour and the reward: yet we affirme not, that Chriſt merited for himſelfe, for his owne glorification was due unto him, before the world was.

9 That our afflictions are meritorious of heaven, Rom. 8. 18. S. Paul ſaith cleane contrary, that the afflictions of this time are not worthy of the glory which ſhall be revealed.

10 They deny that the Jewes did receive the truth or ſubſtance of Chriſt in their Sacraments, as wee doe in ours, or that they and we doe eat and drinke of the ſelfe ſame meat and drinke, Rhemiſt. 1 Cor. 10. ſect. 2. And yet the Apoſtle ſaith plainly, That they did eat all the ſame ſpirituall meat, & all drinke

the ſame ſpirituall drinke, for they dranke of the ſpirituall rocke which followed them, and the rocke was Chriſt. ibid. Doth not the Apoſtle now ſay here, that they did drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke with us? for Chriſt was their ſpirituall drinke, and ſo is he ours. 1 Cor. 10. 3.

11 That where the Apoſtle ſaith, This is not to eat the Lords ſupper; hee meaneth not the Sacrament which Chriſt inſtituted at ſupper, but the feaſts of love which were uſed in the primitive Church: Rhemiſt. ibid. 1 Cor. 11. 20.

And yet it is moſt manifeſt by the circumſtance of the place, that Saint Paul reproveth them for the abuſes in the Lords ſupper, and therefore putteth them in mind of the inſtitution of Chriſt, verſe 23. which had been a matter impertinent, if hee in ſo ſaying (the Lords ſupper) had not meant the Sacrament.

12 That the force and efficacie of common prayer dependeth not upon the peoples underſtanding, hearing or knowledge: and that the infant, idiote, and unlearned man taketh no leſſe fruit of divine office, than any other, Rhemiſt. 14. ſect. 10. And therefore it is not repugnant to Saint Paul to pray in Latine (that is an unknowne) tongue, ibidem ſect. 15. Yet in truth S. Paul flatly condemneth the uſing of an unknowne tongue, in publike prayers, and thankſgiving: He that occupieth the roome of the unlearned, cannot ſay Amen, at thy giving of thanks, ſeeing hee knoweth not what thou ſayeſt, for thou verily giveſt thanks well, but the other is not edified: And it followeth, verſe 19. I had rather in the Church ſpeake five words with mine underſtanding, that I might inſtruct others, than ten thouſand words in a ſtrange tongue. What could have been ſpoken more plainly againſt the uſe of an unknowne and unedifying tongue in the Church? 1 Cor. 14. 19.

13 That man hath proper freedome and motion in his thoughts and doings, and all is not to bee referred unto God, 1 Corinth. 3. ſect. 2. Rhemiſt. That man was never without free will, but it is made only more free by grace, Rhemiſt. Iohn 8. ſect. 2. That the Gentiles do beleeve by their free will, Acts 13. 2. All this is flat oppoſite to Scripture, which ſaith, wee are not able to thinke a good thought of our ſelves. And that God worketh in us both the will and the deed, Philip. 2. 13. 2 Cor. 3. 5.

14 That wee are not formally made juſt by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt imputed unto us, but by a juſtice inherent and reſiant in us. Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 6. can. 10. Rhemiſt. Rom. 2. ſect. 4. yea they condemne it as hereticall to ſay, that a man hath no juſtice of his owne (to be juſtified by) but the juſtice only of Chriſt, Rhemiſt. Philip. 3. ſect. 3. And yet S. Paul ſaith thus in plaine tearmes, That I might be found in him, not having mine owne righteouſneſſe, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, even the righteouſneſſe which is of God through faith. Here the Apoſtle refuſeth his owne inherent righteouſneſſe; and cleaveth only to the imputative juſtice of Chriſt, to be juſtified by: yet wee deny not an inherent righteouſneſſe in the faithfull, but imperfect, not a meanes of their juſtification before God: it is the fruits thereof; and no other than that which we call Sanctification. Philip. 3. 9.

15 They doe ſet up idols or images to be adored, and attribute unto them religious worſhip, contrary to the Scripture: Children keep your ſelves from Idols, 1 Iohn 5. 4. They doe uſually anſwer, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of heatheniſh Idols, not of theirs, which are Images, not Idols. Anſwer, the Scripture indifferently uſeth both the Greeke word εἴδωλον, which is tranſlated ſimulachrum, an Idoll, and the other word εἰκὼν, Imago, an Image. So that both Idols and Images, are by the Scripture condemned. Rom. 1. 23.

16 The Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt hath appeared but once to put away ſinne by the ſacrifice of himſelfe, and that hee hath but offered one ſacrifice for ſinnes, 10. 12. Yet they doubt not to ſay, that Chriſt is daily offered in ſacrifice, in their Maſſe: contrary to the Scripture, which ſaith, Hee need not to offer himſelfe often. Heb 9. 26. c. 10. 12. c. 9. 25.

17 That all ſinnes whatſoever may be remitted by penance, even apoſtaſie, and wilfull forſaking of the truth, Rhemiſt. Hebrew. 10. ſect. 11. And yet our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, that blaſphemie againſt the holy Ghoſt ſhall never be forgiven. Matth. 12. 32.

18 S. Iohn ſaith, Hereby ſhall yee know the ſpirit of God: every ſpirit that confeſſeth that Ieſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is of God. Here the Apoſtle giveth a generall note for all times, to diſcerne falſe doctrine by: But the Rhemiſts contrariwiſe affirme, That this marke will not ſerve for all times, nor in caſe of other falſe doctrines, but that it was then a neceſſary note, Rhemiſt. in hunc locum. 1 Ioh. 4. 2.

19 That it is poſſible to keep the law and commandements of God in this life, Rhemiſt. Rom. 8. ſect. 4. But our Saviour teacheth us to ſay, we are unprofitable ſervants, when we have done all that is commanded us. Luk. 17. 10.

20 They miniſter the Sacrament only in one kind to the people, wherein their practice impugneth the inſtitution of Chriſt, who gave both bread and wine at his laſt ſupper: And Saint Paul alſo rehearſing the inſtitution, ſaith, After the ſame manner alſo he tooke the cup: Where it is to bee noted, that S. Paul writeth to the whole Church of the Corinthians, both the paſtors and the people, preſcribing an uniforme order for them all in receiving the Lords ſupper. 1 Cor. 11. 25.

21 That there remaineth in the Children of God, an awe & feare of God and his judgements, with miſtruſt and feare of hell and damnation, Rhemiſt. 1. Ioh. 4. ſect. 6. But the Apoſtle ſaith, There is no feare in love, but perfect love thruſteth out feare, and maketh us to have confidence in the day of judgement. Where love is then, there remaineth no helliſh feare: where confidence is, there can be no miſtruſt, but ſuch a feare as is joyned with love and hope. 1 Ioh. 4. 17, 18.

22 Levit.18.12.13. That it is not unlawfull by Moſes law, for the Uncle or Aunts husband to marrie his niece, Bellar. de matrim. cap. 27. Yet it is by name prohibited, that the Nephew ſhould marrie his Aunt, the ſiſter of his father or of his mother. The like reaſon is of both.

23 1 Cor.10. 4. The Scripture ſaith, that Chriſt is the rocke, and that there can be no other foundation of the Church but Jeſus Chriſt, 1 *Cor.*3. 11. yet they ſay, that Peter is the rocke, and that Chriſt founded and built his Church upon Peter, Rhemiſt. Matth. 16. ſect. 8.

24 Mark.13.2. The Scripture ſaith, that of the day and houre of Chriſts comming to judgement, no man knoweth, neither the Angels of heaven, nor the Sonne of man, as he is man. But the Papiſts are bold to aſſigne the very day of his comming, juſt 45. dayes after the death of their Antichriſt, who ſhall reigne, as they imagine, three yeeres and an halfe before the comming of Chriſt, Bellarm. de Rom. pontific. lib. 3. cap. 9. And thus preſumptuouſly they take upon them to know more than either the Angels know, or Chriſt himſelfe as he is man.

25 Luk. 17.10. The Scripture ſaith, when we have done all that is commanded us, wee have done but that which was our dutie to doe. Yet Bellarmine cleane contrary, and that moſt blaſphemouſly affirmeth: Poſſumus facere pluſquàm debemus, ſi conſideremus legem nobis à Deo impoſitam, & proinde poſſumus facere plus, quàm revera facere teneamur, lib. 2. de Monachis cap. 13. Wee may, or are able to doe more than we ought, if we conſider the law impoſed upon us from God, and therefore wee may doe more than indeed we are bound to do: a great blaſphemie joyned with a notorious untruth.

26 Rom. 4. 11. They deny that the Sacraments are ſeales of the promiſes of God, Bellarm. de ſacram. lib. 1. cap. 17. And yet S. Paul doubteth not to call circumciſion, which was a Sacrament of the law, the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith.

27 Matth. 26.26, 27. Whereas Chriſt in the inſtitution of the Sacrament, ſaid, after the giving of the bread, only, Take yee, eat yee, but after he had given the cup, he ſaid, Drinke yee all of this. They nothing doubt to affirme, but that Chriſt ſaid as well, after the delivering of the bread, Eat yee all of this: which they have (ſay they) by Apoſtolike tradition: as he ſaid, after the cup delivered, Drinke yee all of this. And contrariwiſe they alſo affirme, that Chriſt ſaid only once, Hoc facite, doe this, and that was after he had given the bread: whereas S. Paul notwithſtanding rehearſing the inſtitution of Chriſt, doth twice repeat 1 Cor.11.24,25. theſe words, Hoc facite, both after the bread, and after the cup, as having been twice uſed of Chriſt in the inſtitution, Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib. 4. cap. 25. And thus they will make Chriſt to ſpeake that which the Scripture ſaith not he ſpake, only following blind tradition: and they will deny Chriſt to have uttered that which the Apoſtle notwithſtanding witneſſeth, was ſpoken by him.

28 Apoc. 1. 6. That all Chriſtians are not prieſts alike before God, but ſome more properly prieſts than other: Rhemiſt. Apocal. 1. ſect. 5. Whereas the Scripture ſpeaketh indifferently of all the faithfull: He hath made us Kings and prieſts to God his Father. For although there bee a difference of orders amongſt men, ſome are teachers, ſome to be taught; ſome paſtors, ſome ſheepe: yet this word ἱερεῖς, ſacrificers or prieſts, is indifferently given to all Chriſtians, and in this ſenſe, none before God are more properly prieſts, than others, but all alike, and Chriſt Jeſus an high prieſt for us all.

29 In the idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe, they affirme and practiſe many things contrary to Scripture.

1 The Scripture maketh this notable difference betweene the prieſts of the Law, and of the Goſpell, that among them there were many, becauſe they were forbidden by death to endure: but Chriſt, Heb.7.23,24 becauſe he dieth not, but liveth ever, hath an unchangeable prieſthood. Yet the Papiſts affirme that all their maſſing prieſts are of Melchiſedecks order: and ſo contrary to the Scriptures, they bring in a multitude of prieſts into the Goſpell, as there was in the Law.

30 Heb.10.18. 2 The Scripture ſaith, Where the remiſſion of theſe things is, there is no more offering for ſinne. But they teach, that their Maſſe is a ſacrifice propitiatorie both for the quicke and the dead: as though remiſſion of ſinnes were not already obtained by the oblation of Chriſt.

31 Heb. 9. 22. 3 Alſo the Scripture ſaith, Without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion. How then can their ſacrifice give remiſſion of ſins, as they affirme, where there is no effuſion or ſhedding of blood? for they call it the unbloody ſacrifice, Bellarm. de miſſ. lib. 1. cap. 25.

32 Their doctrine and ſuperſtitious uſe of private Maſſes, where the Prieſt receiveth alone, the people only gazing and looking upon him, neither eating, nor drinking, is altogether repugnant to the uſage and doctrine of the Apoſtles, as S. Paul witneſſeth: 1 Cor.11.17. We that are many are one bread, and one body, in as much as we are all partakers of one bread. There ought to be therefore many at the Communion, which are made partakes of one bread.

33 1 Cor. 11.34. They affirme that it is a neceſſary thing to receive the Communion faſting: Bellarm. de miſſ. lib. 2. cap. 14. But the Apoſtle ſeeth no ſuch neceſſity in it, giving liberty unto thoſe that cannot endure to faſt, to eat at home before. Yet abſtinence for them that are able, is convenient.

34 Matth. 5. 32. That it is lawfull for the parties married to be diſmiſſed each from other, for divers cauſes beſide fornication, as for hereſie, for avoiding of offence, for the vow of continencie, Bellarm. de matrim. lib. 1. cap. 14. Yet our Saviour Chriſts words are plaine to the contrary, Whoſoever doth put away his wife, except it be for fornication, cauſeth her to commit adultery.

35 That the coupling in marriage of a faithfull party with an infidell, is not only illicitum, but irritum, is not only unlawfull to be made, but being made, is void, Bellarm. de matrim. lib. 1. cap. 23. S. Paul teacheth the contrary; The woman that hath to her husband an infidell, if hee conſent to dwell with her, her, let her not put him away. The marriage therefore of ſuch is not in reſpect of the unbeleevers infidelity, if there be no other cauſe, actually void. Though we grant and acknowledge alſo with S. Paul, that it is not lawfull for the faithfull to match in marriage with an infidell. 1 Cor. 7. 13. 2 Cor. 6 14.

36 That it is not againſt the law of nature, for a man to marry his brothers wife, neither that it is ſimply prohibited in the law of Moſes, but that in ſome caſes it may be diſpenſed withall. Cajetan. & Bellar. Bellarm. de matrim. lib. 1. cap. 27. But Iohn Baptiſt, the beſt expounder of the law, openly reproved Herod ſaying, It is not lawfull for thee to have thy brothers wife, Matth. 14. Mark, 6. It is a generall reproofe, without any exception or limitation at all.

37 That we are not juſtified only by faith yea they ſay that works are more principall than faith in the matter of juſtification, Rhemiſt. Iam. 2. ſect. 7. Flat contrary to the doctrine of the Apoſtle: Therefore we hold that a man is juſtified by faith, without the works of the law. Works are ſo farre from being more principall than faith, that they have not to do at all in the matter of juſtification before God. Rom. 3. 28.

38 That ſome ſinnes are veniall and pardonable of their owne nature, and not worthy of damnation, Rhemiſt. Rom. 1. ſect. 11. Whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, That the ſtipend of ſinne is death, ſpeaking generally of all ſinne, yet both great and ſmall ſinnes are not only pardonable, but indeed cleerely remitted and pardoned by grace in Chriſt, unto the faithfull and beleevers which repent, and ſtudie to amend. Rom 6. 23.

39 The law by Chriſt, ſay they, is Miniſtratio vitæ effecta, is made the miniſtration of life, Andrad. lib. 5. And they call it, verbum fidei, the word of faith, Trident. Concil. ſeſſ. 6. cap. 7. But S. Paul calleth it a killing letter and miniſtery of condemnation. And that it ſerveth but as a ſchoolemaſter to bring us to Chriſt. And he ſaith flatly, that the law is not of faith, Galath. 3. 12. How then dare they call it the word of faith? unleſſe they liſt to play with an æquivocation of the word contrary to the Apoſtles meaning. 2 Cor. 3. 6. 9. Galath. 3. 24.

40 But it were too long to rehearſe all their opinions, which they maintaine contrary to Scripture: ſuch in a manner are all which they hold, wherein they diſſent from us. Let theſe therefore ſuffice for example ſake, which we have ſeene, and for the reſt we will take their owne confeſſion: who doe not denie, but that they hold divers opinions, which are not grounded nor gathered out of Scripture, as Gabriel Biel confeſſeth of tranſubſtantiation: Non invenitur in canone Biblia expreſſum: It is not found expreſſed in the canon of the Bible, In canon. lect. 40. Likewiſe, Silveſter Prierias, Indulgentia authoritate ſcripturæ non innotuere nobis: Pardons or indulgences are not knowne unto us by authority of Scripture, Lib. cont. Luth.

Bellarmine alſo granteth, that ſingle life is not impoſed upon Miniſters by the word of God, there being no precept, neither in the old or new Teſtament that forbiddeth Miniſters to marrie: De clericis lib. cap. 18. Againe in another caſe he confeſſeth, that Matrimonium inter fidelem & infidelem, non eſt jure divino irritum: That marriage betweene a beleever and an infidell is not void or fruſtrate by the law of God: and yet the Papiſts generally hold the contrary, De matrimon. lib. 1. cap. 23. And many other ſuch like opinions they have, which in their judgement are not found in Scripture, but as we thinke, and are able to prove, are contrary to Scripture: in ſo much, that it is a common ſaying of their ſchoole-divines: Thus would I ſay, and thus would I hold being in ſchooles: but yet, (bee it ſpoken here amongſt our ſelves) It cannot be ſo proved by the holy Scriptures: Ex Paralipom. Abbat. Vrſpergenſ. Bellarmine alſo concerning the adoration of Images, ſaith, that in a Sermon before the people it is not ſafe to affirme, that Images are to be adored, Cultu latreia, with religious worſhip: de ſanctor. imaginib. lib. 2. cap. 22. and yet he granteth that concerning the matter it ſelfe, it may be admitted, that images after a ſort, and improperly may have that kind of worſhip, cap. 23. Is not this now an holy religion, that in corners and ſecretly whiſpereth one thing as in the eare, and publikely maintaineth and teacheth another?

Papiſts teach one thing in ſchooles, another in their pulpits.

I conclude then this place with that ſaying of Bernard, as hee ſaid of certaine ſuperſtitious orders of Monks: An regula non concordat evangelio, vel apoſtolo? alioqui regula jam non eſt regula, quia non recta: Doth not your rule agree with the Goſpell, or the Apoſtle? then is it no rule becauſe it is not right. Apolog. Bernard. ſo may I ſay of this popiſh religion, if it agree not to the Goſpell: Non eſt religio, quia non recta, It is no religion, becauſe it is not right. But if they ſhall ſay unto us, that their profeſſion is agreeable to the word of God, not that which wee have written, but to the unwritten word, which are their traditions: I will ſhape them an anſwer againe out of Bernards words: Qui vos audit (inquit Chriſtus) me audit, ac ſi diceret, Iudicium meum inter obedientes, & contemnentes, non de mea ſecreta traditione, ſed de veſtra publica prædicatione pendebit: He that heareth you (ſaith Chriſt) heareth me; as if he ſhould have ſaid: I will judge betweene obedient hearers, and contemners, not by my ſecret tradition, but by your publike preaching, Epiſt. 77. How is it then, that our adverſaries doe flie from the writings and preachings of the Apoſtles, to ſecret and uncertaine traditions, which (they imagine) were given by Chriſt? and here ſhall be an end alſo of this part.

Hereſies maintained and defended by Papiſts.

OUr purpoſe is here, as in the reſt, to cleere & diſcharge both our ſelves and our cauſe, of and from thoſe foule and falſe accuſations of hereſie, which our adverſaries doe blaſpheme us withall. The Rhemiſts moſt wickedly match Calviniſts and Anabaptiſts together, 1 Tim. 1. ſect. 4. they maliciouſly call the ſects of Proteſtants the idolatry of this time, Rom. 1. ſect. 10. Whereas it is well knowne to all the world, that we worſhip no images or Idols, as they doe, yea moſt wretchedly they ſay, we paſſe all hereticks that ever were, Hebr. 13. ſect. 3. Bellarmine objecteth 20. ſeverall hereſies againſt us, Lib. 4. de notis eccleſ. cap. 9.

We will then this doe: firſt examine thoſe points particularly, which they object for hereſie: and this being done, wee will afterward requite them with as many more hereticall opinions, as they have invented againſt us, but more juſtly, and with a great deale more truth.

1 The firſt hereſie, which the Jeſuite objecteth againſt us, is of the Simonians, and heretiks called Eunomiani. The Simonians held opinion, that they were ſaved only by the grace of Simon their ſectmaſter, whom they made their Chriſt and Saviour. The Eunomiani taught that no ſinnes could hurt them if they had faith: Such alſo, ſaith hee, are the hereticks of this time, that would be juſtified only by faith. Wee anſwer, who ſeeth not with what impudency theſe things are objected againſt us? The Simonians ſaid, they were ſaved by the grace of Simon: wee by the grace of Chriſt: is it all one with Papiſts to bee ſaved by Simons grace, and by the grace of Chriſt? their hereſie therefore was condemned, not becauſe they aſcribed all to grace, but in that blaſphemouſly they ſet up Simon to be their ſaviour. The Eunomians were ſuch enemies to good works, as Auguſtine teſtifieth, that they affirmed, Quod nihil homini obeſſet quorumlibet perpetratio peccatorum: That the committing of the moſt haynous ſinnes could not hurt a man, Hereſ. 54. But God be thanked, we are not enemies to good works; for wee hold them to bee neceſſary, and without them it is impoſſible to bee ſaved: for a lively faith cannot bee void of good works: yet by them we are not juſtified before God, neither in part, nor in whole. And if therefore they condemne us as hereticks, becauſe wee affirme juſtification by faith only, let Auguſtine alſo goe in the number of hereticks: Noſtra fides (inquit) juſtos ab injuſtis non operum, ſed ipſa fidei lege diſcernit. cont. 2. epiſt. Pelagian. lib. 3. cap. 6. The righteous are diſcerned from the unrighteous by the law of faith, not of works. Abraham non merito ſui, tanquam ex operibus, ſed Dei gratia fide juſtificatus eſt: Abraham was not juſtified by any merit of his owne, as by his works, but by the grace of God through faith, lib. 2. expoſition. in Rom. c. 20, 21. Looke alſo your owne decrees: part. 3. diſt. 4. c. 99. Gratia Dei non requirit opus aliquod, ſed ſolam fidem, & omnia gratis condonat: The grace of God requireth no worke at all, but faith only, and ſo freely pardoneth all: they cannot then condemne us as hereticks in this point, unleſſe they refuſe this decree, as hereticall.

Proteſtants no enemies to good works.

Florinus the heretike affirmed, that God was the author of ſinne: this hereſie Bellarmine chargeth Calvin withall, becauſe hee writeth thus, that they which contemne the word of God, Their owne wickedneſſe is the cauſe thereof: Sed in hanc pravitatem à Deo addicti ſunt: But they are adjudged, or addicted unto this wickedneſſe by the appointment of God. Anſwer, Firſt, Auguſtine reporteth not this to have been the hereſie of Florinus, but another, that he ſhould hold, Deum malas naturas creaſſe, That God had created things evill by nature: Hereſ. 66. 2. We affirme alſo with Calvin, that men fall into ſinne not by Gods bare ſufferance or permiſſion only, but by the juſt ſentence and judgement of God: and ſo the Scripture ſaith, that God hardened Pharaoh his heart: Deus induravit cor Pharaonis per juſtum judicium, & ipſe Pharao per liberum arbitrium: God hardened Pharaohs heart by his juſt judgement, and Pharaoh hardened it himſelfe by his owne free will unto evill, de grat. & liber. arbit. cap. 23. And in another place treating of thoſe words of David concerning Shemei, the Lord hath bid him curſe David, he writeth thus: Non jubendo dixit, ubi obedientia laudaretur, ſed quod ejus voluntatem proprio ſuo vitio malam, in hoc peccatum judicio ſuo juſto & occulto inclinavit: Not that God commandeth him to curſe, for then his obedience were to be commended, but becauſe God by his ſecret and juſt judgement did leade his inclined will (being evill of it ſelfe) unto this ſinne. Unto this doctrine alſo agree your owne Canons, decr. p. 2. cauſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 22. Occulto Dei judicio mali obdurantur flagellis: By the ſecret judgement of God the wicked are hardened by their afflictions: whereof in the hardening of the heart God is not conſidered only as a patient permitter, but as an agent Judge. If Calvine now be counted an hereticke for ſo ſaying, let the Scripture bee blamed, that teacheth him ſo to ſpeake: and let Augrſtine alſo take part with him; and blame alſo your owne decrees.

2 Sam. 16. 10.

God not only a ſufferer of evill, but is to be conſidered as a juſt Judge: and a diſpoſer of all things to his owne glory.

Thirdly, he objecteth the hereſie which is aſcribed to Origen, that Adam utterly loſt the image of God by his fall, according to the which he was created. So Calvine affirmeth (ſaith hee:) Per peccatum hominis obliteratam eſſe cœleſtem imaginem: That by the ſinne of man, the heavenly image was blotted out. Anſwer 1. Calvine ſaith not that the image of God was altogether loſt and periſhed in man, but that is was corrupted only and depraved: as Saint Paul ſaith, Bee renewed in the ſpirit of your minds, ſhewing that the very pureſt part of our nature was corrupted. Secondly, Auguſtine goeth further than Calvine: Natura tota fuit per liberum arbitrium vitiata: Nature was wholly corrupted by mans free will, tract. in Iohan. 87. Homo non peccavit in parte aliqua, ſed tota, qua conditus eſt, natura deliquit : Man offended not in any one part, but in his whole nature, wherein he was created, he ſinned : Vitiato ergo libero arbitrio totus homo vitiatus eſt : Free will being therfore corrupted, man wholly, or in every part became corrupt, Hypog. lib. ſen. articul. 3. Examine alſo your owne decrees, decr. p. 2. cauſ. 33. de pæniten. diſt. 1. c. 35. the gloſſe thus teſtifieth : Sicut vivere non poteſt corpus abſente anima, ita nec vivere anima poteſt, niſi præſente Deo : As the body cannot live, but is dead, if the ſoule be abſent, ſo the ſoule cannot live unleſſe God by his grace be preſent; but the body is not halfe but altogether dead without the ſoule, ſo then is the ſoule without grace.

Man wholly fallen and corrupt in Adam.

Fourthly, Bellarmine objecteth the hereſie of the Pepuzians, who doe permit women to be prieſts : So Luther teacheth (ſaith he) that a woman or a boy may as well abſolve in the Sacrament of penance as a Biſhop or a Prieſt. And now in England ſaith hee, a certaine woman is the Calviniſts chiefe Biſhop : ſpeaking thus in contempt of our late gracious Soveraigne.

Anſw. 1. Luther is belied by the Jeſuite, hee ſaith only, that where a prieſt cannot bee had, there a Chriſtian man or woman may ſtand in as good ſtead : but he maketh no mention of boyes, Fox pag. 1281. articul. 13. condemned by Leo the tenth. By this we may ſee what ſmall credit is to bee given unto the Jeſuite, in citing and quoting the opinions or ſayings of Proteſtants. 2. Wee acknowledge no Sacrament of penance, and therefore whatſoever Luther thought of that Sacrament, it is no matter to us. But the other is a foule lie, and a monſtrous ſlander uttered of our late Prince : for her Majeſty did not take upon her any part of the paſtorall office of Biſhops or other Miniſters : Shee neither handled the Word nor Sacraments, nor exerciſed eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, nor ordained Miniſters, neither did any thing elſe properly incident to the office of eccleſiaſticall perſons, neither yet doth his Majeſty now. The Church of England did give unto her that lawfull power that Chriſtian Princes alwayes had : as to ordaine and conſtitute eccleſiaſticall lawes, to ſee that eccleſiaſticall perſons doe faithfully execute their office and charge, and to provide for the increaſe and eſtabliſhment of true religion. And this all lawes both civill and eccleſiaſticall, imperiall and pontificall allow, as Cod. lib. 1. tit. 4. leg. 1. Gratian, Valentinian, and Theodoſius Emperours, made this conſtitution for religion : Cunctos populos, quos clementiæ noſtræ regit imperium, in tali volumus religione verſari, &c. Wee will that all people under our Empire be of ſuch religion, &c. Likewiſe Leo the Emperour, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 26. decernimus, maketh a decree againſt ſuch as brought fained reliques into any publike place. Leo alſo Biſhop of Rome hath this conſtitution : Res humanæ aliter tutæ eſſe non poſſunt, niſi quæ ad divinam confeſſionem pertinent, & regia, & ſacerdotalis defendat authoritas : Humane matters cannot well ſtand, except both the princely and prieſtly authority maintaine whatſoever belongeth to faith, decr. p. 2. cauſ. 23. qu. 5. 21. And againe in another decree, Injuria ſacramentorum Chriſti à regibus vindicanda : The Injurie offered to the Sacraments of Chriſt muſt bee revenged by kings : our late gracious Soveraigne then attempted nothing in religion as wee ſee, to maintaine the truth, and to provide againſt all wrong offered to the faith, but what is by their owne law approved.

The Princes power in matters concerning religion.

3. They might here have remembred themſelves, how that ſometime indeed a woman was their chiefe Biſhop, Dame Ioan by name, that ſate 2. yeeres in the Popes chaire at Rome, though for ſhame, and yet without ſhame they denie ſo manifeſt and plaine a ſtory. 4. Yea they themſelves are the heretiks, that allow women to execute the office of Miniſters : for in a caſe of neceſſity, as they call it, they hold it lawfull for laymen, and women, yea heretiks and infidels to baptize, and conſequently in Baptiſme to give remiſſion of ſinnes : wherein they goe further than ever Luther did, who alloweth Chriſtians only and faithfull men and women to ſupply the want and abſence of the Prieſt or Miniſter, not heretiks or infidels : and if Baptiſme be the ſacrament of penance, as it is in their owne law confeſſed, decr. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 2. c. 40. wherein the ſumme that is called penance, which in the Canon is named Baptiſme : and they allow women to baptize, then conſequently they make them Miniſters of penance, and ſo they themſelves are found to bee the heretiks. The Jeſuite therefore might here have plucked himſelfe by the noſe, who ſo affirmeth, and not have twitted, or caſt another in the teeth with that hereſie, which hee himſelfe maintaineth : Bellarm. de baptiſm. lib. 1. cap 7.

Eugen. 4. in Concilio Florentino.

In the fifth place hee objecteth the hereſie of Proclus, who affirmed, that concupiſcence verily was ſinne, and that ſinne did reigne in thoſe that were borne anew.

Anſw. Firſt, that ſin reigneth in the faithfull that are regenerate, we utterly deny, being ſo taught by Saint Paul, Rom. 6. 12. [a] Secondly, that ſinne notwithſtanding remaineth in the regenerate, and that the concupiſcence or luſt of the fleſh even in them is ſinne, we learne out of the ſame Apoſtle, who doubteth not to call luſt ſinne : I knew not ſinne, but by the law : and preſently hee ſheweth what ſinne he ſpeaketh of, I had not knowne luſt, except the law had ſaid thou ſhalt not luſt, Rom. 7. 7. Likewiſe v. 14. 17. 20. of the ſame chapter, he giveth it the name of ſinne. So Auguſtine calleth concupiſcence, Per peccatum accidens malum, an evill brought in by ſinne : Hypognoſt. articul. 4. And againe, Adverſus libidinem ſi certas, malum eſt : this is a ſigne that concupiſcence is evill, becauſe wee ſtrive againſt it, cont. Iulian. lib. 3. cap. 21. To affirme then, that concupiſcence is ſinne, and properly evill of it ſelfe, is by S. Pauls rule no hereſie. Heare alſo what one of your Popes confeſſeth of this matter, Innocent. 3. In omni homine libido mala eſt : Luſt or concupiſcence is evill in all, and ſo conſequently ſinne, for there can be no evill without ſinne.

Rom. 6 12.

[a] Here exception is taken by a certaine popiſh caviller, becauſe Bellarmine reporteth Proclus opinion, that ſinne did live in the regenerate, and I tranſlate it, reigne : but if by living wee underſtand not reigning, but the being of ſinne, then is Bellarmine and his favorites found to be the heretiks if they denie it : this objection is anſwered at large, Retect. p. 160.

In the next place, hee compareth us to the Novatians, who denied that the Church had any power to reconcile men unto God but only by baptiſme: Such are we, he ſaith, becauſe we take away the Sacrament of penance.

Anſwer. Firſt the Novatians denied recoverie, or forgivenes of ſinnes to thoſe that fell after baptiſme: But we affirme no ſuch thing, holding no ſinne to bee irremiſſible, but blaſphemie againſt the ſpirit, according to the Scripture: and that it is never too late for men, while they live here upon earth, to repent them of their ſinne, and returne unto God: all this wee grant, and yet acknowledge no ſacrament of penance. Secondly, if wee are therefore heretiks becauſe wee refuſe the popiſh ſacraments of confirmation and penance, receiving only two, the ſacraments of Baptiſme and the Lords Supper: let Auguſtine beare us companie, who acknowledgeth no more, De latere Chriſti in cruce pendentis ſacramenta eccleſiæ profluxerunt: Out of Chriſts fide hanging on the croſſe the ſacraments of the Church flowed forth, Tract. 15. in Evang. Ioan. that is, water and blood, which ſignifie the two ſacraments, Baptiſme, and the Euchariſt. And your ſelves and not wee are the Novatians of this time: for the Novatians refuſed to receive thoſe which had fallen away into idolatrie or hereſie: and doth not your owne law ſay, Relapſi in hereſim ſunt curiæ ſeculari tradendi, licet pœniteat eos, & ad fidem redeant: They which are relapſed into hereſie, muſt bee delivered over to the ſecular power, that is, to death, though they repent, and returne to the faith: Sext. decret. lib. 5. tit. 2. c. 4. Alexand. 4. Where have they learned to forgive their brother but once, that offendeth? I am ſure Chriſts rule is contrarie: If thy brother ſinne againſt thee ſeven times in a day, and ſeven times a day turne againe to thee, ſaying, it repenteth me, thou ſhalt forgive him. Let indifferent men now judge, which of us come neereſt to the Novatian heretiks.

Luke 17. 4.

7 In the ſeventh place, Bellarmine objecteth the hereſie of the Sabellians, which affirme one perſon only to bee in God, and not three: of this opinion was Michael Servetus, ſaith hee. Anſw. True it is, that this impious wretch Servetus for this and ſuch like hereſies, was worthily put to death at Geneva. Is it not then great impudencie, for the Jeſuite to upbraid us with thoſe hereſies, which he himſelfe knoweth, are condemned by us, and judged worthy of death? So divers amongſt them have been detected of hereſie, yea divers of their pope-holy fathers: Marcellinus ſacrificed to Idols: Liberius ſubſcribed to the Arrians: Honorius the ſecond was a Monothelite: Silveſter the ſecond, a Magician and Necromancer: Iohannes the 22. affirmed, that the ſoules of the dead ſee not God before the reſurrection. Theſe and divers hereſies have been found even in the Popes chaire: Would they now thinke themſelves well dealt withall, if we ſhould charge their whole Church with theſe hereſies, that have been maintained by ſome amongſt them? and yet wee might doe it with better right, ſeeing their owne law ſaith, Error, cui non reſiſtitur, approbari videtur: That error, which is not reſiſted, ſeemeth to be approved: Extravag. Ioan. 22. tit. 5. c. 3. but ſuch errors as their Popes did hold, who are without checke and controulement, were not reſiſted, or gainſaid amongſt them, therfore approved.

Proteſtants put heretiks to death, therefore are free themſelves from thoſe hereſies.

8 Eightly, the Jeſuite chargeth us with the damnable hereſies of the Manichees. Firſt, they did not aſcribe the beginning or cauſe of ſinne unto free will, but unto the prince or god of darkneſſe: But we, ſaith this uncharitable man, are worſe than the Manichees, for we make God the author of ſinne. Anſw. Here this malicious man doth ſhamefully bely us: for which of us ever ſaid that God is the author of ſinne? or who ever denied, that mans free will was the cauſe of ſinne? A free will we confeſſe in man to doe evill, without conſtraint or enforcing, but not free at all, to make choice of good, as Auguſtine confeſſeth: Liberum arbitrium non eſt idoneum, quæ ad Deum pertinent ſine Deo aut inchoare aut peragere, cont. Pelag. Hypognoſt. articul. 3. Mans free will is not fit in divine matters to begin or finiſh any thing without God, &c. Secondly, ſaith the Jeſuite, the Manichees did accuſe the Fathers and Patriarks of the old Teſtament: ſo ſaith he, doth Calvine and the reſt. Anſw. The Manichees did not only condemne the Patriarks, but rejected alſo the old Teſtament: But wee both receive the law and the Prophets, as the oracles of God: neither doe wee condemne thoſe holy perſons, as wicked men, though wee excuſe not all their infirmities: but ſay with Auguſtine: Sic itaq; regis David legimus peccata, ſed legimus etiam recte facta: cont. Fauſt. lib. 22. c. 66 As we reade of Davids ſins, ſo we alſo read of his well doing. And againe, Nos ſcripturas ſanctas, non hominum peccata defendimus: We maintaine and defend the holy Scriptures, and not the ſins of men, cont. Fauſt. lib. 22. c. 45. And we ſay no more as touching the polygamie of the fathers, in which point chiefly they take exception againſt us, than is in their owne canons allowed, decr. p. 2. cauſ. 31. qu. 1. c. 10. where we find theſe words: Primus Lamech ſanguinarius & homicida unam carnem in duas diviſit uxores, fratricidium & digamiam eadem cataclyſmi delevit pœna: That bloody homicide Lamech, was the firſt that of one fleſh made two wives, but the flood came as a juſt puniſhment for their fratricide and digamie: by which ſentence the having of two or more wives, yea before the law is flatly condemned. Wee anſwer them further, as Auguſtine doth the Manichees: Bee it, ſaith he, that the Patriarks and Prophets were ſuch evill men as the Manichees ſlander them to be: Etiam ſic non dico electis eorum, ſed ipſo etiam Deo illorum demonſtrarentur meliores: Yet in that caſe being we can eaſily ſhew, that they are much better, not only than their chiefe Doctors and ringleaders, whom they call elect, but than their God, whom they imagine to bee polluted and defiled, with mixing himſelfe with the kingdome of darkneſſe, &c. Ibid. cap. 9. 8 So we ſay to our adverſaries: that if we ſhould yeeld, that the Patriarkes had greater infirmities, than indeed they had, yet confeſſing that their ſoules after death were preſently received up to heaven, we ſhould more honour them, than the Papiſts, who, howſoever they magnifie their holy and vertuous lives, yet allow them no place in heaven till the comming of Chriſt, but thruſt them downe into a place of darkneſſe, which they affirme to be a part and member of hell. Wherein they do offer the vileſt diſgrace to thoſe holy men that can be.

9 Ninthly, Bellarmine accuſeth us of Donatiſme: The Donatiſts denied, that the Church conſiſteth of good and bad, and ſo (ſaith hee) doe we. Anſw. Wee confeſſe that the viſible Church upon earth hath not only good, but bad therein: and therefore is compared to a houſe, wherein are veſſels of all ſorts: to a barne floore, which hath both chaffe and corne: to a net that containeth both good and bad fiſh. But the holy inviſible Catholike Church conſiſteth only of the elect, and ſuch as ſhall bee ſaved, for which Church Chriſt gave himſelfe, to ſanctifie it, and make it unto himſelfe, a glorious Church, That it ſhould be holy and without blame, as S. Paul ſaith. And Auguſtine being taught by the Apoſtle, ſaith: Illa Columba, unica, pudica, caſta, ſine macula & ruga, non intelligitur niſi in bonis, juſtis, ſanctis: That Dove, which is but one, chaſte, undefiled, unſpotted, without wrinkle, is not underſtood but of the good, righteous, holy, De baptiſm. lib. 6. cap. 3. Bernard alſo ſaith: Sponſa eſt eccleſia electorum, congregatio juſtorum: The ſponſe is the Church of the elect, and the congregation of the juſt. Yet neither Auguſtine, nor Bernard were for ſo ſaying counted Donatiſts. And if this be Donatiſme, why doe they not charge their owne law with it? decret. p. 3. diſtinct. 2. c. 63. which ſaith thus: Hunc cibum, & potum ſocietatem intelligi vult corporis & membrorum ſuorum, quod eſt eccleſia in prædeſtinatis: This meat and drinke is underſtood to bee the ſocietie of his body and members, which is the Church conſiſting of thoſe that are predeſtinate. Let them go now, and ſay, it is Donatiſme to affirme that the Church conſiſteth only of the elect.

The inviſible Church conſiſteth only of the elect, the viſible of good and bad.
Epheſ. 5. 25. 27.
Cantic. 6. 8.

10 Bellarmine layeth Arrianiſme to our charge, becauſe they in no wiſe received unwritten traditions. Anſ. If this be a point of Arrianiſme, then Auguſtine was an Arrian, who writeth thus of a certaine booke that treated of S. Thomas: Cui ſcriptura licet non credere, non eſt enim in catholico canone: Which booke, it is lawfull for us not to beleeve, becauſe it is not in the catholike Canon of the ſcripture, &c. Therefore wee are not bound to beleeve more, than is contained in ſcripture, and ſo conſequently no unwritten, and uncertaine traditions. Let them heare alſo what Leo ſaith: In hanc inſipientiam cadunt, qui non ad propheticas voces, non ad apoſtolicas literas, ſed ſeipſos recurrunt: No marvell if they fall into folly which have not recourſe to the voyce of the Prophets, and the writings of the Apoſtles, but to themſelves, &c. 10

De ſermon. Dom. in monte lib. 1. c. 38.
Decr. part. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. cap. 30.

Our kinde countrimen of Rhemes doe charge us with a deeper point of Arrianiſme, becauſe we affirme that Chriſt was our prieſt and mediator both as God and man; for this were, ſay they, to make Chriſt his Fathers prieſt, and not his Sonne, and ſo inferiour unto him, Heb 5. ſect. 4.

Anſw. In the office of the prieſthood of Chriſt, two things muſt be conſidered, a miniſterie and authority: the miniſteriall part of his prieſthood, as his obedience, his ſufferings and ſacrifice, Chriſt executed as hee was man: but the authority of reconciling us to God, hee wrought both as God and man: So Saint Paul ſaith, that Chriſt through his eternall ſpirit offered himſelfe. Therefore not as man only. And Auguſtine: Divina humanitas, & humana divinitas mediatrix: The divine humanity, and humane divinitie is our mediatrix: Homil. de ovib. cap. 12. Bernard alſo, though a writer in a corrupt time, might eaſily have reſolved them in this point: Sicut mediator noſter duas naturas humanitatem ſcilicet & divinitatem conjunxit in una perſona, ita ſingula ejus opera, ad hanc ſive illam neceſſe eſt pertinere naturam: quicquid ergo miſeria paſſus eſt, ex homine contraxit, quicquid potenter operatus eſt, à patre habuit: As our mediator hath joyned two natures, the humanity and divinity in one perſon, ſo all his works muſt neceſſarily bee referred to either one of them: whatſoever hee ſuffered in weaknes he tooke of his manhood, whatſoever he wrought in power, he received of his father, Serm. de verb. ſapient. And wee ſay no otherwiſe herein, than Innocentius their Pope, whoſe ſentence I thinke they will not refuſe: Ipſe rogat ſe, ipſe ſeipſum exaudit, ipſe ſervus rogat ſe dominum, ipſe Deus exaudit ſe hominem: Chriſt himſelfe prayeth to himſelfe, he heareth himſelfe: he as a ſervant doth pray to himſelfe as Lord; himſelfe as God heareth himſelfe as man, &c. Wee ſee then even by their owne teſtimonie, that both the natures of Chriſt do concurre in the office and execution of his mediatorſhip.

Heb. 9. 14.
Chriſt a Mediator both as God and man.

11 Bellarmine thruſteth upon us as an hereſie, that opinion of Aerius, that no prayer or oblation is to be made for the dead, which was, ſaith he, in time paſt in the ancient Church condemned for an hereſie.

Anſ. We deny not, but that divers of the ancient writers did incline too much this way, to maintaine and commend prayer for the dead: yea, and Auguſtine ſeemeth ſomewhat to bee infected with this error, though ſometime his ſpeech ſoundeth to the contrary, as where hee ſaith, Pompa funeris, agmina exequiarum, vivorum ſunt qualiacunque ſolatia, non adjutoria mortuorum—: impleant ergò homines iſta erga ſuos poſtremi muneris officia: The pompe of funerals, the rites and ſolemnities of buriall, are comforts of the living, no help to the dead:—let men therefore performe this laſt dutie to their friends, De verb. Apoſt. ſer. 34. [a]But prayer and ſupplication pertaineth to the rite of buriall: Ergo, it availeth not the dead. And if the honeſt buriall of our friends be the laſt duty wee owe unto them, the dutie of praying for them afterward is cut off. But whatſoever ſome ancient writers thought of this point, we doe rather credit the Apoſtles words, who ſaith, That every man ſhall receive according to the things done in his body, 2 Cor. 5. 10. Therefore it is in vaine to pray for the dead, ſeeing they they cannot undoe that which was done in their fleſh, or doe what was left undone. If Aerius then held no worſe opinion than this, wee ſee no cauſe why they ſhould condemne him for an heretike. They may as well charge their owne Canons with hereſie: for thus Innocentius 3. writeth: Injuriam facit martyri, qui orat pro martyre: Hee offereth wrong to a martyr that prayeth for a martyr: and ſo for other ſaints that are in joy and bliſſe, they hold it as vaine to pray; then whereas they are uncertaine of the ſtate of the dead, who are Saints, who are not, their prayers muſt needs be in vaine for all. And hereof grew a great error amongſt themſelves, that they uſed in their Maſſe ſacrifice to pray for the ſoule of Leo, ſaying thus: Annue nobis Domine, ut animæ famuli tui Leonis hæc proſit oblatio: Grant Lord that this oblation may profit the ſoule of thy ſervant Leo: But now they have corrected it thus, Ut interceſſione B. Leonis hæc nobis proſit oblatio: That by the interceſſion of Leo this oblation may profit us.

[a] Here a popiſh caviller crieth out, that Auguſtine is mangled: and that part of the ſentence following is left out, wherein he directly alloweth prayer for the dead. Anſw. In this place it is confeſſed that Auguſtine ſeemeth to be of that minde, but inſtance is only given of that part of his ſentence which ſeemeth found to the contrary, as this here recited: See this further anſwered Reteſt. p. 163.

Decret. Greg. l. 3. tit. 41. c. 6. Innocent. 3.

12 12 Now follow the hereſies of Iovinian, which the Jeſuite with open mouth caſteth upon us.

The firſt of Iovinians hereſies was this: Hee affirmed, that a man once endued with faith, can no more ſinne: And ſo Calvin (ſaith he) affirmeth, that faith once had cannot be loſt.

Anſw. Firſt, who ſeeth not the Jeſuits bad dealing: as though it were all one to ſay, The faithfull cannot ſinne, (which Iovinian affirmed, but we inſtantly deny) and to hold, that the faithfull cannot loſe their faith.

Secondly, that true faith, whereby wee are juſtified, once graft in a faithfull mans heart, cannot be loſt, and utterly extinguiſhed, though it may ſometime be hid, and lie as it were aſleep: Wee learne out of the Scripture,[a] The gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom. 11. 29. Whom Chriſt loveth, he loveth to the end, Ioh. 13. 1. Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Horum fides, quæ per dilectionem operatur, profectò, aut omninò non deficit, aut ſiqui ſunt, quorum deficit, reparatur, antequam vita iſta finiatur: Their faith, which worketh by love, either faileth not at all, or if it doe, it is repaired before their life be ended: de correption. & grat. cap. 7. Bernard alſo ſaith, Iuſtus quis eſt? niſi qui amanti ſe Deo, vicem rependit amoris; quod non fit, niſi revelante ſpiritu per fidem homini æternum Dei propoſitum ſuper ſua ſalute futura: Who is a juſt man? but hee, who ſeeing God to love him, loveth againe; which cannot bee, but by the ſpirit revealing by faith unto a man the eternall purpoſe of God concerning his ſalvation to come, epiſt. 108. By faith then a man commeth to know his election: but his election cannot change, therefore neither can that faith in him bee loſt, by meane whereof hee knoweth his election.

[a] Againſt this place exception alſo is taken that it proveth, that not only faith, but no other gift can be loſt. Anſ. Whereas it is evident that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh only of ſuch gifts as accompany election, whereof he made immediate mention in the former verſe, which gifts indeed cannot be loſt. See our further anſwer Retect. p. 134.

2 This accuſation of hereſie which they charge us with, lighteth alſo upon Gregory, who thus writeth: decr. part. 2. cauſ. 33. diſt. 2. de pœniten. cap. 44. Qui ſeduci, quandoque non reverſuri, poſſunt, quaſi habitam ſanctitatem ante oculos hominum videntur amittere, ſed eam ante oculos Dei nunquam habuerunt: They which fall away, and never returne, ſeeme to loſe a certaine holineſſe which they had before men, but they never had any before God: doth he not inſinuate that true holineſſe before God cannot be loſt?

The ſecond hereſie of Iovinian was, that hee affirmed faſting not to be meritorious. Anſw. A monſtrous hereſie ſure: let Auguſtine then the heretike ſpeake: Dona ſua coronat Deus, non merita tua; God crowneth his owne gifts, and not thy merits: de grat. & liber. arbitr. c. 6. And againe, Itaq; vita bona Dei gratia eſt, & vita æterna, quæ vitæ bonæ redditur, Dei gratia eſt. A good life is the gift of God, and life eternall the reward of a good life, is the gift alſo of God, Ibid. cap. 8. If life eternall then be a gift of favour, it is not of debt, Rom. 4. 4. Where then is there any place for merit? 3. Let them conſider alſo what Gregory writeth upon theſe words, Geneſ. 4. 4. and God had reſpect to Abel and to his offerings: Dicturus, quia dominus reſpexit ad munera, præmiſit ſollicitè, quia reſpexit ad Abel: ex qua re patenter oſtenditur, quia non offerens à munerib. ſed munera ab offerente placuerunt: Moſes purpoſing to ſay, that God had reſpect to his offerings, he firſt ſetteth downe, that God had reſpect to Abel: by the which it is evident, that the offerer is not accepted for his gifts, but the gifts for the offerers ſake, &c. Marke then that by your owne decrees a man is not accepted before God for his works.

Decret. p. 2. cauſ. 3. qu. 7. c. 5.

The third hereſie of Iovinian, that he ſhould make the married ſtate equall with virginity, which he chargeth us withall. Anſ. True and undefiled virginity we preferre alwayes, as the more noble and excellent gift in them to whom it is given. But we doubt not to ſay, that marriage is better in thoſe that cannot containe. And generally, we dare preferre the honeſt marriage of Chriſtians, before the proud and fained virginity of many Monaſticall votaries: As Auguſtine ſaith, Melius eſt humile conjugium, quam ſuperba virginitas: Lowly and humble mariage is better than proud and hautie virginity, in Pſal. 99. 4. Heare alſo what your owne decrees ſay of this matter: decr. part. 2. cauſ. 32. qu. 4. c. 6. Quis ignorat ſub altera diſpenſatione Dei, omnes retrò ſanctos ejuſdem fuiſſe meriti, cujus nunc ſunt Chriſtiani: quomodo Abraham ante placuit in conjugio, ſic nunc virgines placent in perpetua caſtitate: Who knoweth not, that under the law all the Saints before us were of as good merit, as Chriſtians are now: for Abraham pleaſed God as well in marriage, as virgins now in their ſingle life, &c. Here in your owne law virginity and mariage are matched in equality together.

Virginity not ſimply preferred before mariage.

The fourth hereſie of Iovinian was, that Mary in the birth of Chriſt loſt her virginity: of this hereſie the Jeſuit accuſeth Bucer, becauſe hee ſaith, that Chriſt did open in the birth the wombe of his mother. Anſw. Firſt, the Jeſuite here playeth falſe play: for it is not all one, to ſay, Mary loſt her virginity, and that holy babe opened her wombe: the one Bucer affirmeth, the other hee never thought.

Secondly, is this (I pray you) ſuch an hereticall point in popiſh divinity, that Chriſt opened his mothers wombe? whereas they are the flat werds of the Evangeliſt, where hee ſheweth, how Jeſus was brought to Jeruſalem to bee preſented unto the Lord, as it is written in the law of the Lord, Every man child that firſt openeth the wombe, ſhall bee called holy unto the Lord: But how could this accordingly be verified of Chriſt, if hee had not opened the wombe? Hierome alſo writeth, Solus Chriſtus clauſus portas vulvæ virginalis aperuit, Chriſt only opened the cloſed paſſages of the virgins wombe: And Auguſtine ſeemeth ſo to ſay, ſpeaking in the perſon of Chriſt, Ego viam meo itineri præparavi: and againe, Tranſitu meo illius non eſt corrupta virginitas: I prepared or made a way for my paſſage, and by my paſſing thorow, her virginity was not corrupted, de 5. hereſibus, cap. 5. There was therefore a way made and prepared, and as it were laid open for Chriſt to paſſe thorow, which was no more an hindrance or loſſe to Maries virginity, than that ſhe went with child, and bare Chriſt in her wombe, till her moneths were expired. Doe not alſo your Canons amongſt other heretiks condemne the Valentinians for ſaying, Chriſtum per Virginem tanquam per fiſtulam tranſiſſe, That Chriſt paſſed thorow the Virgin, as thorow a conduit, decret. part. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. How farre now are our adverſaries from this hereſie, who affirme that Chriſt opened not his mothers wombe, neither paſſed the ordinary way of birth, but imagine a new kinde of piercing or paſſing thorow with the Valentinians: and thus much for Iovinians hereſies.

Luke 2.23.

How Chriſt is ſaid to have opened the wombe.

Dialog. 2. adverſ. Pelagian.

13 Bellarmine chargeth us with foure hereſies of Vigilantius, as hee termeth them: but neither Vigilantius was an heretike, nor his opinions hereſies, nor yet condemned of the fathers. Hierome indeed was much offended with him, between whom there was great contention: but Auguſtine doth not count him among the number of heretiks.

1 The firſt paradox, or ſingular opinion of Vigilantius was, that the reliques of Saints were not to be reverenced or worſhipped. Anſw. If this be hereſie, Auguſtine alſo was an heretike: Nec tamen nos martyrib. (ſaith he) templa, ſacerdotia, ſacra aut ſacrificia conſtituimus: quoniam non ipſi, ſed Deus eorum, Deus nobis eſt, honoramus ſanè memorias eorum, tanquam ſanctorum hominum: Neither doe wee ſet up temples, prieſts, or erect ſacrifices to Martyrs, becauſe not they, but their God is alſo our God: we do honour the remembrance of them, as of holy men, De civit. Dei, lib. 8. 27. Charge alſo in this behalfe your own Canons with hereſie: decr. part. 2. cauſ. 1. qu. 1. c. 65. Si ita martyrium fecerimus, ut noſtras velimus reliquias ab hominibus honorari, huic operi non tam præmium, quàm pœna debetur: If wee deſire martyrdome that our reliques may bee honoured of men, this worke deſerveth no reward, but puniſhment, &c. but if the adoration of reliques, as they pretend, tend to Gods honour, it ſhould be no fault at all to deſire that, whereby God ſhould be more honoured.

2 The ſecond opinion of Vigilantius objected againſt us, is, that Saints are not to be invocated, or called upon in prayer. Anſw. This hereſie is confirmed by the Scripture: Call upon mee in the day of trouble (ſaith the Lord) Pſal. 50. 15. God only and no other is to bee called upon. Let Auguſtine alſo go for an heretike if this be hereſie: Vni Deo, & martyrum & noſtro ſacrificium immolamus, ad quod ſacrificium ſicut homines Dei, qui mundum in ejus confeſſione vicerunt ſuo loco & ordine nominantur, non tamen à ſacerdote invocantur: Wee doe immolate or offer ſacrifice unto one only God, both of the Martyrs and ours, in the which ſacrifice, they as holy men of God, that by their faithfull confeſſion overcame the world, are named in their place and order; but they are not by the Prieſt or Miniſter * prayed unto, De civit. Dei, lib. 22. cap. 20. And what ſacrifice Auguſtine meaneth, he ſheweth elſewhere, writing thus: Si pro ſuis peccatis humilitatis, & miſerationis & orationis ſacrificium vere immolare non negligunt Deo ſuo, tales imperatores Chriſtianos dicimus felices: If they doe not neglect truly to immolate or offer unto their God the ſacrifice of humility, ſorrow, and prayer, ſuch Chriſtian Emperors we count happy, de civit. Dei, lib. 5. 24. Prayer then is the proper ſacrifice of Chriſtians, wherein it is not lawfull (as he ſaith) to call upon Martyrs.

* Here our popiſh objecter ſaith, that Auguſtine meaneth ſuch invocation, as is due only to God. Anſw. But the ſcripture acknowledgeth only one kind of invocation: how can they call on him, upon whom they have not beleeved? Rom. 10. 14. but God only is to bee beleeved upon, therefore only to be invocated, &c. See our further anſwer Retect. p. 174.

This hereſie alſo Gregory the 10. one of their Popes, ſeemeth to have been of, that it was not lawfull to call upon the name of Saints in the Church, but upon the name of Chriſt only: Sit ad eccleſias humilis & devotus ingreſſus—& convenientes ibidem nomen illud, quod eſt ſuper omne nomen, à quo aliud ſub cœlo non eſt datum hominibus—nomen Iheſu Chriſti,—exhibitione ſpecialis reverentiæ attollant: Let them come humbly and devoutly to the Church, and being there aſſembled, let them with ſpeciall reverence extoll the name of Iheſus,—than the which there is no other name given to bee ſaved by, &c. This their holy father only remembreth the name of Jheſus to bee invocated in the congregation.

Sext. decret. lib. 3. tit. 23. cap. 2.

3 Vigilantius third hereſie was, ſaith the Jeſuit, that it was lawfull for eccleſiaſticall perſons to marrie, and to have wives. Anſw. A ſore hereſie, whereas the Jeſuite confeſſeth elſewhere, that there is no precept to be found, either in the old or new Teſtament, that forbiddeth the marriage of Miniſters: De clericis, lib. cap. 18. How then call they that hereſie, which is not contrary to the word of God, nor condemned by the ſame? Auguſtine alſo holdeth this perilous hereſie, quaſt. 127. ex utroq; mixtim, or who ſo was the author of thoſe queſtions: Sanctus Petrus uxorem habuiſſe cognoſcitur, ut primatum acciperet inter Apoſtolos, non ei obſtitit generatio filiorum: Hinc Apoſtolus eum, qui uxorem habeat, ſi in cæteris ſervet mandata, ſacerdotem fieri debere & poſſe oſtendit: Saint Peter is knowne to have had a wife, and the begetting of children was no hindrance to his primacie among the Apoſtles,

(a primacie of order he meaneth) whereby the Apoſtle ſheweth that he which hath a wife, if in other things hee keep Gods commandements, may and ought neverthleſſe to bee made a Prieſt or Miniſter.

Voluntary povertie not required, nor meritorious.

4 Vigilantius fourth hereſie as it pleaſeth Bellarmine to call it, was, that it profited not a man to leave all his riches, and to betake himſelfe to a religious, that is, a Monaſticall life: and the ſame, ſaith he, is defended by us. Anſw. Is not this a great hereſie? As though it were an evill thing to bee rich, or riches might not be well uſed. S. Paul biddeth not rich men caſt away their riches, but that they doe good, and bee rich in good works, 1 Tim. 6. 18. So ſaith Auguſtine, Divitiæ ſeculares, ſi deſunt, non per opera mala quærantur in mundo: ſi autem adſunt, per opera bona ſerventur in cœlo: Worldly riches, if they be wanting, doe not ſeeke them by evill doing in the world: and if thou have them by good works, lay them up in ſtore in heaven, epiſtol. 1. epiſtolar. 21. And againe, ſpeaking of Lazarus he ſaith, Non eſt in hoc Lazaro meritum paupertatis, ſed pietatis: There was not in Lazarus any merit or worth of povertie, but of godlineſſe, in Pſalm. 51. Your owne decrees alſo make for us: Decret. p. 2. cauſ. 12. qu. 1. c. 25. Homines ſine peccato poſſident ſua: Men poſſeſſe their owne without ſinne: And Cauſ. 16. q. 1. c. 68. Non tam in pauperibus paupertatem, quàm religionem debemus attendere: We muſt not ſo much reſpect in the poore their povertie, as religion: It is not then voluntary poverty, but religion that is ſo acceptable unto God.

14 14 In the next place the Jeſuite laboureth by his cunning to intangle us with the hereſies of the Pelagians, but he ſpeedeth no better here than he did in the reſt.

The firſt Pelagian hereſie is, they denied that there remained any originall ſinne in the faithfull. Of this hereſie, the Jeſuite falſely accuſeth Bucer, Zuinglius, and Calvin. Anſw. Firſt, the Papiſts themſelves rather are guilty of this hereſie, who affirme that concupiſcence in the regenerate is no ſinne, nor againſt the commandement, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 6. 8. What is this elſe, but to take away originall ſinne cleane? which if it be at all, muſt of neceſſity be ſinne. Secondly, Bellarmine did not here remember that old ſaying, Mendacem oportet eſſe memorem: A lyer had need to have a good memory: for a little before, Hæreſ. 5. hee accuſeth the Proteſtants, as if they ſhould affirme, that ſinne even in the regenerate reigneth, and is alive: but here hee caſteth upon us the cleane contrary opinion, that we ſhould hold no originall ſinne at all to remaine in the faithfull. So well the Jeſuite agreeth with himſelfe. Thirdly, our opinion then concerning originall ſinne is this: that it neither ruleth in the regenerate, nor yet is cleane extinguiſhed; but as Auguſtine confeſſeth, Mutatos eos dicet in melius, non ut ea carerent, quod in hac vita fieri non poteſt, ſed ut ei non obedirent, quod in bona vita fieri poteſt: The Apoſtle ſaith they were changed, not to be without concupiſcence, which cannot bee in this life, but not to obey it, which may be in a good life, &c. And againe, Quis ambigat in hac vita poſſe minui, non poſſe conſumi: Who doubteth but that it may in this life bee diminiſhed, but not extinguiſhed: cont. Iulian. 6. 5. And herein we confeſſe and hold no otherwiſe, than your owne Canons teach: Decr. part. 3. diſtin. 4. c. 2. Evacuatur caro peccati, non ut in ipſa vivente carne concupiſcentia innata repentè abſumatur, & non ſit, ſed ne obſit mortuo, quæ oberat nato: Indeed the fleſh of ſinne is evacuate, not ſo that concupiſcence borne in the fleſh ſhould ſuddenly be conſumed, and not be at all, but that it hurt not after death, which was hurtfull in the birth.

The ſecond hereſie of the Pelagians was, that every ſinne was mortall and worthy of death, which the Jeſuite alſo ſaith is affirmed by us.

Anſw. Firſt, Auguſtine in none of his large and learned treatiſes, which he wrote againſt the Pelagians (with whoſe hereſies he was as well acquainted as either Hierome or any elſe) doth charge them with this opinion. Secondly, no marvell; for if this were a point of Pelagianiſme, he was a Pelagian himſelfe who thus writeth: Inexcuſabilis eſt omnis peccator, vel reatu originis, vel additamento propriæ voluntatis, ſive qui novit, ſive qui ignorat: Quia & ipſa ignorantia, in iis qui intelligere noluerunt, ſine dubitatione peccatum eſt in iis qui non potuerunt pœna peccati: Every ſinner is left without excuſe, either by the guilt of originall ſin, or by default of his owne will: whether he that ſinneth of knowledge or of ignorance: for ignorance it ſelfe, in thoſe which refuſe to underſtand, is ſinne without doubt, in thoſe that cannot, the puniſhment of ſinne: Ergo in utriſque, (ſaith he) non eſt juſta excuſatio, ſed juſta damnatio: Therefore in both, there is no juſt excuſe, but juſt damnation, Epiſtol. 105.

All ſinne of it owne nature is mortall.

Here Auguſtine is of opinion, that even the leaſt ſinnes, thoſe which proceed of ignorance, are in themſelves mortall, if God ſhould deale with us in the rigour of his juſtice: As the Scripture teſtifieth, The wages of ſinne is death, Rom. 6. 23. which words are generally pronounced of all ſinne. We acknowledge alſo that there are veniall ſinnes, yet not in their owne nature, but as your owne Canons teach us: Decret. p. 2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. de pœnitent. c. 47. Venialis eſt culpa, quam ſequitur profeſſio delictorum: That fault is veniall and pardonable, after which there followeth confeſſion of ſinnes, &c. that is, by repentance and confeſſion ſinnes are become veniall, and not otherwiſe: can it then bee hereſie in us to affirme by the word of God, and according to your owne Canons, that all ſinne of it owne nature is mortall?

15 15 Bellarmine chargeth Beza with Neſtorianiſme in affirming that there are two hypoſtaticall unions in Chriſt; one of the ſoule with the fleſh, the other of the divinity and the humanity: lib. de hypoſtat. union.

Anſw. 1. This very objection Iacobus Andreas made againſt Beza: who anſwereth thus: 1 that there is difference betweene two hypoſtaticall and perſonall Unions, and two hypoſtaſes or perſons: for a thing may be hypoſtatically united, and yet not make an hypoſtaſis or perſon, unleſſe it bee conſidered by it ſelfe: as the hypoſtaticall uniting of the ſoule and body in another man, maketh a perſon, but in Chriſt it is never conſidered by it ſelfe, but united to the Godhead, and ſo maketh but one perſon. 2 Yet Beza ingeniouſly confeſſeth, non recuſo tamen, quod ambigue ſcriptum ſit emendare, I refuſe not to amend, whatſoever is doubtfully written: and in deed to ſpeake properly, the union of the ſoule and body which in other men is hypoſtaticall and perſonall, in Chriſt is eſſentiall and naturall, the Union only of the divine and humane nature is in him perſonall and hypoſtaticall. 3 That Beza was farre from making two perſons in Chriſt, appeareth in the beginning of the ſame booke, where he chargeth Brentius with Neſtorianiſme in making two unions in Chriſt of the divine and humane nature, one, which he calleth eſſentiall, common with Chriſt and other men, another perſonall, peculiar only unto Chriſt, and ſo in effect maketh two perſons in Chriſt.

But one hypoſtaticall Union in Chriſt.

2 Otherwiſe Beza never thought, but that the humane nature conſiſting of ſoule and body, united to the divine in Chriſt made but one perſon; and the ſame is the confeſſion of Auguſtine: Fatemur Chriſtum carnem, animam quoque humanam verbo unigenito coaptaſſe, quod eſſet una perſona, ut Chriſtus eſt verbum & homo, ſed & ipſe homo anima & caro: We doe confeſſe, that Chriſt hath ſo joyned his humane fleſh and ſoule to the only begotten word, to make one perſon, that the ſame Chriſt ſhould bee both the word and man, but man conſiſting both of ſoule and body: de Trinitat. Vnit. cap. 7. This then is our beleefe, that there are two natures in Chriſt, the divine, and humane: but both theſe doe concurre to make one perſon. But in truth the Papiſts are theſe Neſtorian heretiks, and not the Proteſtants: for they make two Chriſts, one that ſitteth in heaven borne of the Virgin Mary, another in the Euchariſt made of bread and wine: for one of them doubteth not to ſay that there is mutatio vini in ſanguinem Chriſti, a mutation of the wine into the blood of Chriſt, Turrian. tract. 1. c. 7. fol. 55. then Chriſt blood being made of wine, is another blood than that which he tooke of the Virgin: and thus they diſtinguiſh betweene Chriſt and Chriſt, and fall apparantly into Neſtorious hereſie.

16 The ſixteenth hereſie which he objecteth, is all one with the twentieth: to that place therefore we referre it. 16

17 The Eutychians were condemned for heretiks, becauſe they taught, that there was but one nature in Chriſt, his humane nature being abſorpt of his godhead, of which opinion (ſaith Bellarmine) is Swinkfeldius, and Brentius, who affirmeth, that the humanity of Chriſt is every where. 17

Anſw. Firſt, what have we to do with the Swinkfeldians, or the Ubiquitaries? it is nothing to the Proteſtants what they hold. The Papiſts come neerer the Ubiquitaries than Proteſtants: for it is their common opinion, that the body of Chriſt in one moment may bee in a thouſand places at once, and more, if it happen at one time the Maſſe to be celebrated in ſo many places: This is the difference betweene them, the Ubiquitaries ſay, Chriſts body is actually every where; the Papiſts, that it may bee every where, in as many places as it chanceth Maſſe to be ſaid.

Secondly, concerning this matter, our opinion is this, that it is a blaſphemous aſſertion to ſay in the abſtract, Humanitas Chriſti eſt ubique, The humanity of Chriſt is every where: but yet it is true in the concrete, In concreto, Chriſtus homo eſt ubique: The man Chriſt is every where; ſo that we neither deſtroy the natures by confounding them, nor diſſolve Chriſt by ſeparating and disjoyning them. But if you looke well about you, your ſelves are theſe Eutychian heretiks, or worſe: for their hereſie was this, that Chriſt after his aſcenſion doth no more conſiſt of two natures, but that his fleſh & humanity is turned into the nature of his divinity: ſo you, while you affirme that the body of Chriſt may be in a thouſand places at once, that it is in the Euchariſt without ſhape, forme, quantitie, qualitie of a bodie, without diſtinction of parts, &c. and ſo deſtroy the nature of the humanitie: what do you elſe, but either make Chriſt no body at all, or elſe attribute unto it a ſpirituall and divine nature? And yet your hereſie herein is worſe, than that of Eutiches: he affirmed the fleſh of Chriſt to be turned into the divine nature, but you ſay that the bread and wine are turned into the blood and fleſh of Chriſt, which is a more inglorious and unlikely change than the other, and yet both hereticall.

Chriſt as man not every where.

18 Xenaias the Perſian firſt openly taught, that the images of Chriſt and the Saints are not to bee worſhipped, ſo ſay the Proteſtants, Bellarmine. Anſw. Firſt, it is not true, that Xenaias firſt publiſhed this doctrine: the Apoſtles were long before him, who warne us to take heed of idolatrie, which is worſhipping of Images, Paul, Rom. 1.23. 1 Iohn 5.21. Auguſtine alſo maintaineth this doctrine, Illud (inquit) quod ſedere pater dicitur, non flexis poplitibus fieri putandum eſt: tale enim ſimulachrum Deo nefas eſt Chriſtiano in templo collocare: Whereas God the Father is ſaid to ſit, we muſt not thinke it is by bowing of his knees: for it is a heinous ſinne to erect ſuch an Image unto God in the temple of Chriſtians, De fid. & Symbol. cap. 7. Yet ſuch images of God the Father are every where to bee ſeene in popiſh Churches. And againe he ſaith, Nobis unus colendus & diligendus Deus præcipitur, qui fecit hæc omnia, quorum illi ſimulachra venerantur, vel tanquam Deos, vel tanquam ſigna & imagines Deorum: Wee are commanded to worſhip one only God, which made all theſe things: the pictures or portraitures whereof they worſhip either as Gods, or as the images or reſemblances of God, de Doct. Chriſtian. lib. 3. cap. 7. Images then are not to bee worſhipped, no not in the remembrance of God. What is become now, I pray you, of Xenaias hereſie? who in this aſſertion is no more an heretike, than 18

Rom. 1.23.
1 Iohn 5.21.

Images of Chriſt and Saints not to be worſhipped.

Gregory the firſt, and the beſt of that name: decret. p. 3. diſtinct. 3. c. 27. who writeth thus to Severus Biſhop of Marcellis, who had broken downe certaine images: Et quidem, quia eas adorari vetuiſſes omnino laudavimus, fregiſſe verò reprehendimus: And indeed wee commend you in forbidding them to bee worſhipped, but reprehend you for breaking of them: Would Gregory, thinke you, commend an hereticall fact?

19 19 The Jeſuite here hath found out a new hereſie of the Lampetiani, who ſhould ſay, that Monaſteries ought to be free from perpetuall vowes, that the parties might at their choice goe backe from their vowes. So ſaith hee, doth Luther hold and the reſt. Anſw. Is not this now a damnable hereſie? As though it were not lawfull for thoſe which have raſhly vowed, and above their ſtrength, even by the rules of the Goſpell, to be ſorie for their raſhneſſe: and feeling their owne weakneſſe, to deſire to be looſed from their vow, and to take heed that they do no more preſume beyond their ſtrength: As if a man hath fooliſhly vowed to live a ſingle life, and afterward is inflamed with luſt, and ſeeth he cannot containe, the Apoſtle giveth him leave to marrie; To avoid fornication, let every man have his wife, 1 Cor. 7. 2. He ſpeaketh of all, that cannot otherwiſe avoid fornication, have they vowed, or not vowed, Auguſtine giveth his ſentence of the vowes of faſting, ſaying thus: Iejunia legitima in neceſſitate ſoluta, non faciunt reos, ſi ſtomachi fuerit cauſa, aut infirmitatis febrium: Lawfull faſtes being broken for neceſſitie, as if the ſtomacke bee weake, or the partie ſicke, doe not make men guiltie of offence, ex novo Teſtament. quaeſt. 61. If the vow of faſting may bee broken, becauſe of the weakneſſe of the ſtomacke: why not the vow of continencie alſo for the frailtie of the fleſh? Yea, Auguſtine diſſwaded Bonifacius a ſecular Lord, who had vowed & purpoſed with himſelfe to become a Monke, Cupiebas te in ocium ſanctum conferre, & in ea vita vivere, in qua ſervi Dei Monachi vivunt, ut autem non faceres, quid te revocavit, niſi quia conſideraſti oſtendentibus nobis, quantum prodeſſet Chriſti eccleſiis, quod agebas? You were deſirous to have given your ſelfe to that holy vacant life of Monks: from ſo doing what elſe withdrew you, but that you conſidered, as I ſhewed you, how much your ſervice did profit the Churches of Chriſt? Epiſt. 70.

Raſh and unlawfull vowes bind not.

1 Cor. 7. 2.

This Boniface did fight in defence of the faith againſt the barbarous infidels: See then, S. Auguſtine taketh it to bee no fault to diſſwade a man from performing that which he had vowed with himſelfe. Heare alſo what a later writer ſaith, whom the Papiſts challenge wholly to bee theirs, but in truth is more ours than theirs: Non arbitror Deum, ſaith he, exigere quodcunque ſibi promiſſum bonum, ſi pro eo aliquid melius fuerit perſolutum: I doe not thinke that God will exact every thing vowed or promiſed unto him, if in ſtead thereof we performe ſomewhat that is better. So alſo S. Gregory as hee is alleaged in the decrees. Decret. Greg. lib. 2. tit. 24. c. 3. Hee writeth thus to the King of France: Non propoſitum, vel promiſſum infringit qui in melius illud commutat. Hee breaketh not his promiſe, purpoſe, or vow, that changeth it into a better, &c. But the married eſtate is better than the ſingle life to him that cannot containe: wherefore ſuch an one doth not evill, if after his vow he marrie. Againe, Id promittere nos in noſtra profeſſione non credimus, quod certum eſt non poſſe teneri lib. de diſperſ. We doe not take upon our ſelves to promiſe that, when we enter into our profeſſion, which it is certaine cannot be kept. Wherefore, men ought not to make abſolute vowes of ſingle life, but ſo farre as they ſhall bee able to containe. Neceſſitas (alſo ſaith he) non habet legem, & ob hoc excuſat diſpenſationem: Neceſſitie hath no law, and therefore excuſeth a diſpenſation or looſing of the vow, ibid. Let theſe men goe for heretiks together with us, if it bee hereſie to ſay, that raſh vowes upon neceſſitie may bee broken or diſpenſed withall. It were no great matter even out of your owne Canons to fetch this hereſie: for I aske you if an oath doth not as ſolemnely bind before God as a vow; yet Innocentius the third, whereas a man and his wife had ſworne not to come together againe, and afterward hee deſired the company of his wife, he willeth the woman by the cenſures of the Church, to returne to her husband: if an oath may be broken for the infirmitie of the parties, why not a vow alſo in the like caſe?

Bernard, epiſt. 57.

Decret. Gregor lib. 2. tit. 24. c. 24.

20 20 Two other hereſies remaine: the firſt, which is the ſixteenth in number with Bellarmine of certaine that are nameleſſe, he thinketh they were the Neſtorians, hee cannot tell, who affirmed that the body of Chriſt remained not in the Euchariſt, if it were kept till the next day. The other, which hee maketh the twentieth in number, is of thoſe, who ſhould ſay that the Euchariſt was a figure only of the body of Chriſt: and both theſe hereſies, as he calleth them, are, ſaith he, maintained by us.

Anſw. Firſt, he bringeth but weake proofe to make theſe two opinions hereſies: for neither can he produce the authors of them: neither are they condemned as hereſies by the writers by him cited. Againe, wee doe not ſay, that the Euchariſt is a bare ſigne of the body of Chriſt, but that Chriſt is verily preſent with all the benefits of his death to the faithfull, and worthy receiver. Thirdly, we utterly deny that the ſame fleſh which Chriſt tooke of his mother, which hanged upon the Croſſe, and wherwith all hee aſcended up into heaven is now really, ſubſtantially, and carnally preſent in the Sacrament at all, much leſſe that it remaineth there afterward. Neither for ſo holding ought we to be counted heretiks: for Chriſt ſaith, my words are ſpirit and life, the fleſh profiteth nothing, Iohn 6. Upon the which words Auguſtine thus writeth, Spiritualiter (inquit) intelligite, quod loquutus ſum: Non hoc corpus quod videtis, manducaturi eſtis, & bibituri illum ſanguinem, quem fuſuri ſunt, qui me crucifigent: ſacramentum vobis aliquod commendavi, ſpiritualiter intellectum vivificabit vos: You muſt ſpiritually underſtand, that which I ſay: You ſhall not eat this body which you ſee, nor drinke my blood, which they ſhall ſhed that ſhall crucifie me: I have commended unto you a certaine ſacrament, it being ſpiritually underſtood ſhall quicken you, in Pſalm. 98. So Bernard ſaith, writing of the Euchariſt, Cibus iſte non eſt ventris, ſed mentis, non vadit in ſeceſſum, ſed aſcendit in excelſum; This is not the food of the bellie, but of the mind, it goeth not into the draught, but tendeth to Heaven: Serm. de cœna Domini. But if the fleſh of Chriſt were verily eaten, as other materiall meates are, it muſt needs goe into the bellie, and ſo into the draught, which as the Scripture ſaith, is the purging of all meates, Mark. 7. 19 Againe he ſaith, Chriſtum habemus, non quomodo Angeli in præſentia maieſtatis, non quomodo Apoſtoli in viſione humanitatis, ſed quomodo eum etiam nunc habet eccleſia in fide & ſacramentis: Wee have Chriſt, not as the Angels have him in the preſence of his majeſty, not as the Apoſtles in the ſight of his humanitie, but as the Church now hath him in faith and the ſacraments, Serm. in feſt. Mart. Your owne decrees alſo allow this ſaying of Auguſtine as Catholike. Decre. part 3. diſt. 2. cap. 47. Quid paras dentes & ventrem, crede & manducaſti: qui credit in eum, manducat eum inviſibiliter ſaginatur, quia inviſibiliter naſcitur: Why doſt thou prepare thy bellie and teeth, beleeve and thou haſt eaten: for he that beleeveth in Chriſt, eateth him: he is inviſibly fed, becauſe he is inviſible borne againe, &c. but we are ſpiritually borne againe, and therfore ſpiritually fed: The preſence of Chriſt then in the ſacrament is no otherwiſe, than by faith: therefore he is not carnally preſent; for faith is not of things preſent, but hoped for, Heb. 11. 1. Thus are wee with other ancient fathers without cauſe, by the newfangled Papiſts, condemned as heretikes, Their mouthes we cannot ſtop, yet proofes they never ſhall have any againſt us.

Christ not preſent in the ſacrament.

Thus, as we ſee, the Jeſuite hath almoſt run himſelfe out of breath, in following us with open cry of hereſie: might and maine hath he laboured to charge us with twentie hereſies: but he hath told as many untruths, and lies. Let any indifferent man now conſider, how the Jeſuite hath paltred with us.

Firſt, he objecteth thoſe hereſies which we ous ſelves condemne, and that they know, as the hereſies of Servetus, hæreſ. 7. and of Swinkfield, hæreſ. 15.

Secondly, he forceth thoſe hereſies upon us, which do with better right recoyle upon themſelves, as hæreſ. 14. & 17.

Thirdly, he ſlandreth us with thoſe opinions which we hold not, as Luther, hæreſ. 4. Calvine and Bucer. hæreſ. 14. Beza, hæreſ. 5.

Fourthly, he calleth thoſe hereſies, which wee doubt not to defend as Catholike opinions, howſoever they diſpleaſed ſome of the old writers, ſuch is that of Aerius, that prayer is not to bee made for the dead, hæreſ. 11. And that of Vigilantius, that the reliques of Saints are not to be adored, nor themſelves to be prayed unto, hæreſ. 13. All the reſt for the moſt part, which the Jeſuite calleth hereſies, are by Auguſtine defended and maintained in his works, and have authority alſo, as I have ſhewed from their owne Canons: as therefore Hierome ſaid to Auguſtine, Epiſt. 11. inter epiſt. Aug. Si me reprehendis errantem, patere me quæſo, quaſi errare cum talibus: If you reprehend me for my error, give me leave to erre with ſuch notable men: after he had alleaged divers ancient writers of his opinion, &c. So if we were in ſome error, as we are not, neither ſhall the Jeſuite ever prove it againſt us, he might ſomewhat beare with us, becauſe we erre and are deceived with Auguſtine. Althouh in deed, as Auguſtine anſweareth Hierome: Puto, quia cum his errare nec te ipſe patieris: I thinke you would not willingly your ſelfe erre, no not with theſe worthy men, Epiſt. 19. So neither will we with Auguſtine, Hierome, or any other willingly (by Gods grace) maintaine any error, much leſſe hereſie.

Thus, I truſt, we have for this time, and for our purpoſed brevitie, ſufficiently anſwered the Jeſuite: he hath hitherto but ſpent his breath, and laid his nets in vaine. The pit of hereſie, which they digged for us, themſelves (as it ſhall now appeare) are fallen into: We will therefore, ſeeing the Jeſuite hath firſt provoked us to this combat, a little requite his kindneſſe, and repay him and his fellowes a full ſcore of hereſies, and twentie more for advantage, not deviſed or imagined by us, but ſuch as were condemned by the Fathers of the Church for hereſies, and are now either in part, or in whole maintained by the Church of Rome. And herein I will rather follow Auguſtine, than either Epiphanius, or Philaſter, to whom the Jeſuite ſeemeth to be more addicted: for Auguſtine hath written more exactly of this argument than either of them. And of Philaſter, Auguſtine giveth this cenſure, Multas hæreſes commemorat, quæ mihi appellandæ hæreſes non videntur: he reckoneth up many hereſies, which ſeeme to mee not worthy the name of hereſie, hæreſ. 80. But now to the purpoſe.

1 Hereſie to worſhip images.

Firſt, Marcellina the companion of Carpocrates that monſtrous heretike, was noted alſo of hereſie, becauſe ſhe worſhipped the images of Jeſus and Paul, and offered incenſe unto them, Auguſt. hæreſ. 7. So it was concluded in the ſecond Nicene Councell, that the image of God is to bee adored with the ſame worſhip that is due unto God, which idolatrous decree is defended by Thomas Aquinas, Bonaventure, Cajetanus. Bellarmine alſo alloweth cenſing and burning of odors before Images, lib. 1. de ſanctor. beatitud. cap. 13. Which is a part of divine worſhip: for therefore Heſekiah brake downe the braſen ſerpent, becauſe the people burned incenſe unto it, 2 King. 18. 4.

2 The Heracleonites aneeled the dead as papiſts uſe to doe.

Secondly, the heretiks called Heracleonitæ, did after a new ſort purge and redeeme their dead by annointing them with oyle and balme, hæreſ. 16. So the Papiſts have excogitate a ſacrament of extreme unction, wherein they annoint their ſicke with oyle for remiſſion of their ſinnes, their eyes their noſtrels, eares, mouth, hands, reines and feet: of this popiſh cuſtome of aneeling, ſee the Rhemiſt. annot. Galath. 4. ſect. 2. Iam. 5. ſect. 14.

3

Thirdly, the heretiks called Cajani, did highly extol Iudas, as a divine & holy man, & they counted his

his wicked act in betraying of Chriſt, for a ſingular benefit, Auguſt. hæreſ. 18. So ſome of the papiſts have written, Iudæi mortaliter peccaſſent, niſi Chriſtum crucifixiſſent: The Jewes had ſinned mortally, if they had not crucified Chriſt, diſtinct. 13. looke before Blaſ. 59.

4 The Papiſts with the heretiks Taciani condemne mariage.

4 The heretiks called Taciani, did condemne mariages, and made no better account of them than of fornication, neither doe they receive any maried perſon into their order, hereſ. 24. That the papiſts are not farre off from this hereſie, it appeareth both by their doctrine and practice: Firſt, for their doctrine thus they write, That the order of the prieſthood is prophaned by mariage, Greg. Martin. diſcov. cap. 15. ſect. 11. Whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, Mariage is honorable amongſt all men, Heb. 13. The Rhemiſts alſo are not a whit aſhamed to ſay, that the mariage of prieſts is the worſt ſort of incontinency, Annot. 1 Corinth. 7. ſect. 8. Pope Siricius Epiſt ad Himerium. Taraconenſ. applyeth that ſaying in the Scripture againſt mariage: Qui in carne ſunt, Deo placere non poſſunt: They that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God. Now, as their doctrine is, ſo is their practice: whereby they do not only make fornication equall to mariage, but even preferre it. It was one of the grievances of the Germanes, exhibited to Cardinall Campeius, that the Biſhops and their officials did not only ſuffer prieſts for their money to have Concubines, but compelled continent and chaſte prieſts to pay tribute to the Biſhop, and ſo it might be lawfull for them to live chaſte, or keep Concubines, Fox pag. 862. But honeſt mariage in Miniſters they puniſhed with death; as Anno 1525. Petr. Spenglerus was condemned to die for no other cauſe but that he had maried a wife, ex Oecolampad. Thus it is manifeſt, both by the doctrine and practice of the Church of Rome, they doe not only with theſe heretiks, match fornication, and honeſt mariage together, but give it the preferment before mariage.

5 The Cataphriges wherein like the Papiſts.

5 The Cataphriges did make or mingle their Euchariſt with the blood of children, hæreſ. 26. The papiſts much like unto them, have ſhewed the people in the Sacrament the blood of Ducks and Pigeons, making the people beleeve, that it was the blood of Chriſt: as here in England, the bloud of Hales, which men from all parts of the land came in pilgrimage unto many yeeres, taking it to bee the blood of Chriſt, was in the end found to be but the blood of a Drake, and openly ſhewed at Pauls Croſſe by the Biſhop of Rocheſter, the King himſelfe being preſent, Fox pag. 1188.

6 The Pepuzians allow women to bee prieſts.

6 The Pepuzians allow women to be prieſts, hæreſ. 27. So the Papiſts ſuffer women to execute the prieſts office in baptizing of children, vide ſupra, hæreſ. obiect. 4.

7 Papiſts proved Cathariſts.

7 The Cathariſts did ſo name themſelves, as being pure and cleane, hæreſ. 38. Such are the Papiſts, which affirme, that ſome are ſo juſt in this life, that they need no repentance, Rhemiſt. Annot. Luke 15. 1. That juſt men in this life may keep the law of God, and by their juſtice bee free from the curſe thereof, Galath. 3. ſect. 4. That habituall concupiſcence without conſent of will, is not properly forbidden in the law, neither doth make us guilty before God, Rom. 7. ſect. 5. 10. Doe not theſe men now in effect ſay, that they are pure and cleane in this life?

8 The Papiſts with the heretiks Angelici worſhip Angels.

8 The heretiks (Angelici) were ſo called becauſe they worſhipped the Angels, hæreſ. 39. which ſect Epiphanius (ſaith Auguſtine) thought to be worne out and extinguiſhed. But if Epiphanius were now alive, he ſhould ſee this hereſie revived by the papiſts: for they doe maintaine the worſhip and adoration of Angels, Rhemiſt. Apocal. 3. ſect. 6. & annot. in cap. 19. 22.

9 The heretiks Apoſtolici.

9 The heretiks called Apoſtolici, did not receive into their communion thoſe that had wives, or proper poſſeſſions, hæreſ. 46.

10 Hierarchites wherein they reſembled Papiſts.

10 The Hierarchites did receive only Monks and Nunnes to their ſociety, hæreſ. 47. Papiſtrie ſavoureth ſtrongly of theſe hereſies: for profeſſed Monks are with them the devouteſt men, how impure ſoever their life be: in ſo much, that the profeſſion of Monkerie hath obtained amongſt them the name of religion: the reſt that live in the world, they call ſeculares & mundanos, ſecular men, and of the world. The Rhemiſts affirme, that Monks come neereſt to the imitation of Chriſt, 1 Theſſal. cap. 1. verſe 6. The married prieſts cannot conveniently be occupied about prayer, or the Sacraments, but ought to abſtaine from all matrimoniall acts, 1 Cor. 7. verſ. 5. & 1 Tim. 5. verſ. 5. contrary to the Councell of Gangra, cap. 4. where it was decreed, that if any man make difference of a maried prieſt, and by occaſion thereof refraine from his oblation, he ſhould be accurſed. The Hierarchites alſo, Regnum cœlorum parvulis negant, Doe deny the Kingdome of heaven to infants: decr. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. So doe the papiſts to infants dying without baptiſme, for whom they have provided a certaine dungeon, which they call Limbus. Laſtly, the Apoſtolici would in no wiſe ſuffer thoſe, which had vowed ſingle life, afterward to marrie, though they found themſelves unable to keep their vow, Epiphan. hæreſ. 61. So the Rhemiſts allow virgins after their vow, upon no occaſion to marrie. Annot. 1. Cor. 7. verſ. 28.

11 Papiſts with the Euchites mumble up their mattens.

11 The Euchites did nothing elſe but pray, and held that it was not lawfull for Monks to labour with their hands for the ſuſtenance of their life, hæreſ. 17. The papiſts incline to both thoſe hereſies: for firſt, what elſe doe their Monks and Nuns, but mumble upon their beads a certaine ſtint of prayers in the Latine tongue, which moſt of them underſtand not, at all times and houres almoſt, both of day and night: as they have their Nocturnes, and primes, their morning, evening, midnight ſervice: their third, ſixth, and ninth houres, Rhemiſt. Annot. Act. 10. ſect. 6. Secondly, wee ſee, that moſt of their Cell birds, both cocks and hens, Monks and Nuns, I would ſay, doe live idly: and they beare them out in it: for religious men (ſay our Rhemiſts) ſuch as they count their Maſſe-monging Monks to be, are not bound to worke, Annot. 2 Theſſal. 3. ſect. 2.

12 There is another hereſie, ſaith Auguſtine, or ſect, that walketh with bare feet, becauſe God ſaid to Moſes, put off thy ſhooes, hereſ. 68. So among the Papiſts, there are ſects of Friers, that goe barefoot, as their Friers Flagellants, and Franciſcans.

12 Barefoot heretiks.

13 The Priſcillianiſts did make the Apocrypha, that is, books not canonicall of equall authority with Scripture, Hereſ. 70. So doe the Papiſts: the books of Tobie, Iudith, the Machabees, and others, which are not found in the Canon of the Hebrew, they make them books of Canonicall Scripture, and part of the word of God: yea their blind and uncertaine traditions, they are not aſhamed to call the word of God unwritten. And yet further, Whatſoever, ſay they, the Paſtors of the Church do teach beſide Scripture, in the unity of the Church, is to be taken for the word of God. Rhem. annot. 1 Theſ. 2. ſect. 2.

13 Papiſts with the Priſcillianiſts make apocryphall books canonicall.

14 There were certaine Heretiks that held, that by Chriſts deſcending into hell, the incredulous and unbeleevers beleeved, and that all were delivered thence at his comming. Hereſ. 79. This hereſie, I ſee not how the Papiſts can ſhift off from themſelves, who do all generally underſtand that place of S. Peter, 1 Epiſt. 3. verſ. 19. of Chriſts deſcending into hell. Where the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the incredulous and diſobedient perſons of the old world, who periſhed in the waters, and afterward remained in priſon, only eight perſons being ſaved in the ark. If Chriſt then ſhould deliver all theſe incredulous perſons, how can they avoid this hereſie, that hell was in a manner emptied by the deſcenſion of Chriſt?

14 How Papiſts concurre with certaine heretiks cõcerning Chriſts deſcenſion into hell.

15 The Coluthians affirmed, Deum non facere mala, that no evill was wrought by God, contrary to that ſaying of the Scripture: Ego Deus creans mala, I am the God that createth evill: ſhall there be evill in a citie, and the Lord hath not done it? Amos 3. 6. Aug. hereſ. 65. This hereſie the Papiſts are not free from, who affirme that Chriſts death was not Gods act otherwiſe than by permiſſion in reſpect of the malice of the Jewes, Act. 4. ſect. 2. Whereas the Scripture ſaith, it was done by Gods hand and counſell, which is more than permiſſion: and ſo indeed God did not only permit, but uſe the malice of the Jewes moſt holily and moſt juſtly to bring his purpoſe to effect. The Rhemiſts alſo affirme that ſin ſtandeth not with Gods will, intention, nor honour, Annot. Rom. 3. verſ. 4. True it is, that ſin is againſt the revealed will of God in his word, but nothing can come to paſſe againſt the ſecret will and determination of God in ſuffering and permitting ſin to bee, but not in decreeing it: Neither is God the author of ſin, which proceedeth from mans owne corruption, but as it is a demonſtration of his juſtice in the puniſhment thereof, as Auguſtine ſaith: Creat Deus mala pœnas juſtiſſimas irrogando: God createth evill, by inflicting of moſt juſt puniſhment, Hereſ. 66. The Papiſts then, which denie that evill any way commeth from God, incline to this hereſie of the Coluthians.

15

How farre God is an agent in evill things.

16 An Arch-heretike called Marcus, did hold that Chriſt did not verily ſuffer, and indeed, but in ſhew only and appearance, Hereſ. 14. The Apollinariſts alſo affirmed that Chriſt tooke humane fleſh without a ſoule, Auguſt. Hereſ. 55. I pray you how farre are the papiſts from this hereſie? who affirme, that Chriſt ſuffered not in ſoule: Nay the Rhemiſts hold it to be a blaſphemous aſſertion ſo to ſay, Annot. Heb. 5. verſ. 7. What is it elſe, but either with Marcus to ſay that Chriſt ſuffered but in ſhew, and that he felt nothing in ſoule when he cried out upon the Croſſe, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? (for if there were no ſuch matter indeed, Chriſt muſt have uttered theſe words only in outward ſhew and pretence.) Or elſe they muſt fall into the Apollinariſts hereſie: for why did Chriſt take upon him our fleſh and ſoule, but to redeeme man that was loſt, both in body and ſoule? And therfore he muſt needs have ſuffered both in body and ſoule: for if there were no uſe of the humane ſoule in the worke of redemption, you might as well ſay with the Apollinariſts, that Chriſt had no ſoule at all: Thus Auguſtine reaſoneth: Si totus homo periit, totus beneficio ſalvatoris indiguit: ſi totus beneficio ſalvatoris indigebat, totum Chriſtus veniendo ſalvavit. Cont. Felician. c. 13. If the whole man both body and ſoule were loſt, he wholly had need of a ſaviour: and if he wholly needed a ſaviour, Chriſt by his comming did wholly ſave him: Ergo, it followeth, that Chriſt muſt wholly have died and ſuffered in body & ſoule to redeeme man (for our redemption was wrought by his death) that was loſt in body and ſoule.

16 How Papiſts agree with heretiks that affirme Chriſt to have ſuffered only in ſhew.

17 The Anthropomorphites did imagine, that God was in ſhape and proportion like a man, Hereſ. 50. Doe not our Rhemiſts ſavour ſtrongly of this hereſie, which allow the Image of God to bee pictured in their Churches like an old man with gray haires? Annot. Act. 17. verſe 29.

17

18 The heretiks Seleuciani, or Hermiani, denied that Chriſt did ſit at the right hand of God in his fleſh, but that he had left or put off his fleſh, and placed it in the Sunne, hereſ. 59. The papiſts now, though in words they affirme not this, yet by a neceſſary ſequele of opinion, they muſt leave Chriſt without his fleſh in heaven, as often as they would have it preſent in the Maſſe: for it ſeemed an abſurd thing even to thoſe groſſe heretiks, that the body of Chriſt ſhould bee in many places at once, for if they had knowne the ſhifts which papiſts now have found out, to eſtabliſh their reall preſence, who doubt not to ſay, that the body of Chriſt may be in many places: to place Chriſts fleſh in the ſun, they needed not to have removed it out of heaven: They might have ſaid he was in both places at once. Yet herein the Seleuciani ſeeme to bee more reaſonable than papiſts, that they have provided ſo glorious a place for the body of Chriſt, even the beautifull tabernacle of the Sun: but the other thruſt the fleſh of Chriſt into a narrow roome, and bring him within the compaſſe of a thin cake, or put him into a box, and houſle him in their bellies, yea ſend his body to a viler place than ſo, even to the draught, where their bellies are purged, as ſome of them have been driven to grant: But that the fleſh of Chriſt cannot be in many places at once, Auguſtine ſheweth, writing thus upon thoſe words in the Goſpell, What if you ſee the Son of man aſcending where he was before? Illi putabant eum erogaturum corpus ſuum, ille autẽ ſe

Papiſts with the Seleuciani heretiks pull Chriſts fleſh out of heaven.

dixit aſcenſurum in cœlum, atq; integrum: They imagined that Chriſt would have beſtowed his body amongſt them, but he ſaith, he will aſcend into heaven, that is to ſay, whole & ſound, tract. in Ioh. 27. if ſo bee then Chriſt doth now beſtow his body in earth, in Auguſtines judgment hee cannot bee whole in heaven.

The Abelian-heretiks kept not company with their wives.

19 The heretiks called Abeliani, thought it not lawfull for their ſect to live without wives, and yet they never uſed nor kept company with their wives: Hæreſ. 87. Doe not the Papiſts come neere them, which hold that their Prieſts, which were maried before orders, ought not afterward to have acceſſe to their wives, yet are they their wives ſtill? Rhemiſt. Act. 21. ſect. 1.

20 The Pelagian heretiks did hold three pernicious opinions. Firſt, that a man may be perfect in this life and keep all the commandements. Hæreſ. 88. So the Rhemiſts ſay, it is poſſible to keep Gods commandements. Annot. Ioh. 4. ſect. 1. Secondly, the Pelagians ſay, that grace is given only unto men to this end, that they may doe more eaſily thoſe things which they are commanded to doe, by their owne free will. Hæreſ. 88. So the Rhemiſts ſay, that man was never without free will, but having the grace of Chriſt, it is truly made free. Annot. Ioh. 8. ſect. 2. What is this elſe,[a] but that his free will is made more free, and that grace helpeth him not wholly to worke, but more eaſily only? Thirdly, the Pelagians hold, Gratiam Dei non ad ſingulos actus dari: That the grace of God is not needfull to be given at every aſſay, but that their free will in moſt things is ſufficient: Aug. epiſt. 106. So the Rhemiſts ſay, that though the Gentiles beleeved ſpecially by Gods grace, yet they beleeved alſo of their owne free will. Act. 13. ſect. 2. What ſay they now elſe, but that a man may beleeve by his own free wil without grace.

[a] Here a Popiſh caviller objecteth, that this was not the Pelagians hereſie, but whether a juſt man might keep Gods commandements by his freewill without grace. Anſ. Aug. epiſt. 89. doth confute both theſe opinions of the Pelagians, one, that a man may bee perfect in this life without ſin: the other, that hee may keep Gods commandments by the power of free will: See our further anſwer, Retect. p. 190.

21 The Manichees condemned the eating of fleſh as being uncleane and impure: Hæreſ. 46. So the Papiſts at certaine times forbid the eating of fleſh. And herein perhaps they differ from the Manichees. They held that fleſh was uncleane by creation, the Papiſts by reaſon of the curſe: for God curſed the earth, and not the waters, ſay they: and therfore upon faſting daies fiſh is preferred before fleſh. Durand. lib. 6. cap. de aliis jejuniis. So they both agree in this, that fleſh is a thing uncleane and impure: for if they had not ſo thought, why did not the popiſh Biſhop of London Stokeſley, rather ſuffer the pig to be eaten, which was found in one Frebarnes houſe in Lent time, his wife great with child longing for a peece thereof, than command it as an uncleane thing to be buried in Finsbury fields, and ſo the good creature of God to be ſpilled and loſt? Fox pag. 1585.

Papiſts how like the Manichees. In Pſalm. 140. ſuper illa non combibabo cum electis eorum.

22 There was alſo another moſt blaſphemous opinion of the Manichees: for they held, that the parts and members of Chriſt were diſperſed every where, and that in their meats and drinks, they did deliver the members of Chriſt, which were tied and bound in the creatures: Tales, ſaith Auguſtine, ſunt electi eorum, ut non ſint ſalvandi à Deo, ſed ſalvatores Dei, &c. The elect amongſt them (for ſo they call their principals and ringleaders) are ſuch, that they looke not themſelves to be ſaved of God, but profeſſe rather to be the ſaviours and redeemers of God, &c. for they imagined, that they did ſet at libertie, as they imagine, the members of Chriſt in their daily eating, &c. Compare now the opinion of the Papiſts with theſe heretiks: ſee if they be not couſen germanes: for as they made themſelves, Salvatores Chriſti, the ſaviours of Chriſt: ſo is it a ſaying among Papiſts, that, Sacerdos eſt creator creatoris ſui; That the Prieſt doth make his maker, by five words ſpeaking in the Maſſe. But herein the Papiſts goe beyond the Manichees: for they delivered the body and members of Chriſt from the priſon of the creatures, and ſent them up to heaven: but the Papiſts bring them downe from heaven, and cloſe them in the creature under the ſhape of bread and wine.

Thus hitherto I have only payed Bellarmine his debt, giving a ſcore of hereſies with ſome advantage, for his ſcore, now alſo I will pay him intereſt: and I thinke I may find out for him as many more.

Other hereſies faſtened upon the Papiſts, as of the Arrians, Baſilidians, Ophites, Aquarii, 23 In the next place we charge them with Arrianiſme: the Arrians affirmed, Deum creari ex non entibus: That God might bee created of things that were not: they granted that Chriſt was God, yet created: and doe not the Papiſts likewiſe worſhip a created God? for they ſay, that the body of Chriſt in the Euchariſt is made of bread and wine: wherfore we ſay of them, as Gregorius Nyſſenus of the Arrians, that they are worſhippers of Idols: Nam qui creaturam adorat, licet nomine Chriſti id faciat, ſimulachrorum cultor eſt, Chriſti nomen ſimulachro imponens: For he that doth worſhip a creature (as the Papiſts do bread and wine in the Maſſe) though he do it in the name of Chriſt, is a worſhipper of idols, giving the name of Chriſt to an image.

24 The heretiks Baſilidiani, denied Chriſt to have ſuffered: Decre. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. Our adverſaries, though they deny not Chriſts whole paſſion, yet they take away a principall part thereof, namely his ſufferings in ſoule.

25 The heretiks Ophitæ did praiſe the ſerpent that ſeduced Eva, and ſay, he brought in the knowledge of vertue: decr. part. 2. ibid. in like maner our adverſaries praiſe concupiſcence, whereby our parents were ſeduced, and by the which the ſerpent tempted them: for this is the confeſſion of our Rhemiſts: The motions of the fleſh in a juſt man, to the which the mind conſenteth not, cannot any whit defile the operations of the ſpirit, but make them often more meritorious for the continuall combat, &c. Annot. Rom. 7. ſect. 10. And in another place they ſay, That originall concupiſcence is not properly ſinne, nor forbidden by commandement; Annot. Rom. 6. 6. What could be ſaid more in commendation of it?

26 The heretiks Aquarii were ſo called, Quia aquam ſolam offerant in calice, Becauſe they offer only water in the cup: decr. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. If they are counted heretiks for offering all water, the Papiſts are halfe heretiks for offering halfe water mingled with wine in the cup.

27 The heretiks Aetiani did hold that the Sonne was unlike the Father: decr. p. 2. cauſ. 24. ibid. So doe the Papiſts, ſaying, that Chriſt is not God of himſelfe, as the Father is.

Aetians.

28 Bonoſiani, Chriſtum adoptivum Dei filium dixerunt, did hold that Chriſt was the adopted Sonne of God: decret. ibid. Not much unlike is the opinion of the Papiſts, who affirme, That Chriſt merited for himſelfe, for ſo the Rhemiſts write, that he merited his owne glorification. Annot. 1. in 2. Heb. what is this elſe but to ſay, that Chriſt was adopted by his merits.

Bonoſiani.

29 There were certaine heretiks called Beguardini, that held divers hereticall and monſtrous opinions. Firſt, they affirmed, Animam non indigere lumine ipſum elevante ad Deum: That the ſoule needed not the light of grace, to lift it up unto God: Clementin. lib. 5. tit. 3. c. 3. So the Rhemiſts ſpeake, that the [a] Gentiles beleeved in Chriſt of their owne free will. Annot. Act. 13. ſect. 2.

Beguardinies.

30 Secondly, a ſecond error of theirs was, Hominum hic perfectum eſſe poſſe, That man may be perfect in this life: Clementin. ibid. and the Rhemiſts in other words do write, That it is poſſible for a man to keep Gods commandements: Annot. in 4. Ioh. ſect. 1.

31 A third hereſie of theirs is, Spiritualem humana obedientia non eſſe ſubjectum: That a ſpirituall man is ſubject to no humane obedience: Clementin. ibid. So the Papiſts ſay of their terrene God the Pope, that he is not ſubject to the judgement of any: nay, ſaith one of them, The Pope ſhould doe God great injurie, if he ſhould ſubmit himſelfe to the judgement of any: Iacobat. excitat. Tileman. er. 34. de pontif. Roman. All theſe hereſies were condemned by Clemens the fifth, in the Councell of Lions, as it appeareth in the Clementines before rehearſed, in the Beguardines, and are yet maintained by the Papiſts.

[a] Here it is objected, that the Rhemiſts words are clipped: for the whole ſentence ſtãdeth thus, though the Gentiles beleeved ſpecially by Gods grace, yet they beleeve alſo by their owne free will. Anſ. They do directly affirme, that the Gentiles beleeve of their own free will, though more ſpecially by grace: leſſe ſpecially thẽ or not ſo eaſily, yet beleeve they may by their free will: therefore here no wrong is done unto them: See further our anſwer: Retect. 204.

32 The Ebionites obſerved the ceremonies of the Law with the Goſpell, and therefore were counted heretiks: Decr. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. and from whence elſe do our adverſaries borrow their ſuperſtitious rites, and ceremonies, their cenſings, waſhings, oyle, ſalt, incenſe, copes, veſtments, inſtruments, and ſuch like, but from the imitation of the Jewes?

33 Certaine heretiks there were, Qui aquam Deo coaeternam faciant, which did make the water eternall with God: Decr. par. 2. ibid. As they attributed one property of the divine nature to the water, namely eternitie: ſo the Papiſts aſcribe another to water in Baptiſme, giving it power and efficacie to ſave thoſe that are dipped in it.

34 The heretiks Alogii were ſo called, as being without the word: which name moſt fitly agreeth to our adverſaries, who maketh no great account of the written word, as one of them ſaith: The Scripture was not alway extant, and it is not neceſſary to ſalvation: Petrus à Soto.

35 The Luciferians denied forgivenes to thoſe that were fallen, Decr. par. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. cap. 39. ſo the Papiſts ſhut up all compaſſion againſt thoſe that fall into relapſe.

36 The Nicolaitans did preferre uncleane concubines before honeſt married wives: what elſe doe our adverſaries? for they call mariage a prophanation of holy orders: Greg. Martin. diſcover. cap. 13. ſect. 11. but they ſuffer a prieſt having a concubine to miniſter: neither forbid they a man having a concubine from the Communion. For thus ſtandeth the decree: Si quis non habet uxorem, ſed pro uxore concubinam, à communione non repellatur: If a man have not a wife, but a concubine, let him not be put from the Communion. Decr. part. 2. diſt. 34. cap. 4.

37 How our adverſaries come neere to the Neſtorian hereſie, I have ſhewed before: Hereſ. 16. that is objected againſt us.

38 Likewiſe, Hereſ. 17. I have returned upon them the hereſie of the Eutychians.

39 Iohn 22. condemneth all them as heretiks, that affirme, Chriſtum & Apoſtolos nihil in ſpeciali habuiſſe: That Chriſt and his Apoſtles had nothing in proper or ſpeciall: that is, were beggers: Extrav. tit. 14. c. 4. 5. But Bellarmine nothing doubteth to ſay, that Chriſt was verè mendicus, truly and properly a begger. De monach. lib. 2. cap. 45. Bellarmine then muſt be content to weare the Popes liverie, and go for an heretike, till he can cleere himſelfe.

Papiſts Nicolaitans, Neſtoriãs, Eutichiãs.

Bellarmine an heretike by Pope Iohn 22. his definition.

40 I will take no other definition of an heretike, than out of your owne Canons: Quicunque aliter ſcripturam intelligit, quàm ſenſus Spiritus Sancti flagitat, quo ſcriptus eſt, hereticus appellari poterit: Whoſoever otherwiſe underſtandeth Scripture, than the meaning of the ſpirit is, may very well bee called an heretike: decre. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. cap. 27. But ſo do our adverſaries toſſe and turne Scripture, and wreſt it to their owne ſuperſtitious fancies: Ergo, they are heretiks.

Papiſts proved heretiks by their owne canons.

41 Laſtly, there was a notable heretike, one Rhetorius, who affirmed, that all other heretiks did Rectè ambulare, Walke the right way, and hold the truth. Hereſ. 72. But this ſeemeth ſo abſurd a thing to Auguſtine, that he doth not give credit unto it: Who if he were now alive, would not thinke it ſo incredible a thing: for excepting thoſe hereſies which have been raiſed concerning the natures of Chriſt, and his perſon (where notwithſtanding the Papiſts are not free from error) what hereſie hath there been held about the offices of Chriſt, his kingdome, prieſthood, and propheticall office, which is not this day, either in whole or in part, maintained by the Church of Rome? as it may partly appeare by that which we have ſaid already: ſo that I may fitly returne that tearme upon Bellarmine, which Arturus, one of his fellowes upbraydeth Volanus with; calling him Omnium hereticorum Simiam, The ape of all heretiks: de invocat. ſanctor. theſ. 132. cap. 12. So in truth are the Papiſts the very apiſh imitators and followers of all heretiks.

One Rhetorius allowed all heretiks.

And thus, I thinke, we have in ſome meaſure recompenſed our adverſaries courteous dealing, who ſo kindly upbraid us with hereſie, for Bellarmines twenty, I have paid him forty. Let all the world now judge who are neereſt coſens to heretiks, they or we. Wee may ſay unto them as Auguſtine ſometime to the Donatiſts, Videſne, quemadmodum iſta non ſententia ſua ſed veſica, non ſolum inani ſono, verumetiam in capite veſtro crepuerit? Do yee not ſee, how this their vaine ſentence and puffe of a bladder hath given a cracke, and is broken upon their owne head? Cont. Petilian. lib. 2. c. 101. So this ſtormie blaſt of hereſie, which they have puffed at us, is blowne upon their owne faces: and they only are found to be the heretiks. If they ſpeed no better in other matters, the worſt end of the ſtaffe is like to be theirs. And this ſhall ſuffice for this part.

Of the groſſe abſurdities and inconveniences of Popiſh Religion.

VVE will now (the Lord aſſiſting us) lay together ſome of thoſe abſurd and unreaſonable poſitions, which are boldly without ſhame affirmed by our adverſaries, having already ſufficiently detected and diſcovered their blaſphemies, opinions contrary to Scripture, together with their hereſies. And herein the Papiſts doe bewray ſuch ignorance and blindneſſe, that wee need not doubt to Rom. 11. 8. ſay, as it is alleaged by the holy Apoſtle, That God hath given them the ſpirit of ſlumber; eyes, that they 2 Theſ. 2. 11. ſhould not ſee; and eares, that they ſhould not heare to this day, Rom. 11. 8. And as in another place the ſame Apoſtle propheſieth: God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſions, that they ſhould beleeve lies, 2 Theſ. 2. 11. But now to the matter in hand.

1 Abſurd. They affirme that no generall Councell is of ſufficient authority, without the allowance of the Pope: and that he is in ſuch ſort above all Councels, that he cannot though he would, ſubmit himſelfe to their ſentence. Bellarm. de conciliis lib. 2. c. 11. & 14. But the Scripture ſaith, he that refuſeth to heare Matth. 18: 17. the Church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man, or publicane, Matth. 18. 17. Therefore if the Pope ſhall refuſe the ſentence of the Church aſſembled in generall Councels, hee is no better by the voyce of Chriſt, than an heathen. The papiſts being further urged, that if the Pope were above Councels, there ſhould be no way to reſiſt a wicked Pope, Bellarmine anſwereth like a Clerke, that there is no other remedy left in ſuch a caſe, but to pray to God, who will either convert or confound ſuch a Pope. Lib. 2. de Concil. cap. 19. An anſwer as abſurd as the opinion is: for by this meanes the Church ſhal run into ruine and decay, when it is in mens power to help it, which is nothing elſe but to tempt God, then to depend of his extraordinary worke, when he hath appointed an ordinary meane of redreſſe.

2 That to have been twice married, is a greater let and impediment to the election of a Biſhop, than either adulterie or fornication, Bellarm. de clericis, lib. 1. cap. 24. Whereas theſe are every where prohibited in Scripture, but not one place can be ſhewed, where ſecond mariage is forbidden.

3 That a man may attaine unto a greater meaſure and higher degree of the love of God, than is commanded in the law: Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy ſoule, with all thy ſtrength, Bellarm. de Monach. lib. 2. cap. 6. reſponſ. ad Melancthon. Whereas it is certaine that it is not poſſible for us to love God in ſuch perfection as we ought, and are commanded: much leſſe can we doe more than is our du-Luk. 17. 10. tie to doe, Luke 17. 10.

4 That it is not lawfull for a votarie to marrie, though hee were ſure by mariage to cure ſome mortall or deadly diſeaſe, that otherwiſe is incurable, Bellarm. de Monachis lib. 2. c. 32, reſp. ad 4. rationem. Yet 1 Tim. 5. 23. S. Paul counſelleth Timothy to drinke wine, whereas his maner was to drinke water, not for any mortall diſeaſe he had, but becauſe of his infirmitie and weakneſſe only, 1 Tim. 5. 23. And all ſuch vowes, as are made raſhly to the hurt and hindrance of our ſelves or others, may better bee broken than kept, Levit. 5. 4. 1 Sam. 25. 22. becauſe they offend againſt the law of charity, Levit. 5. 4. 1 Sam. 25. 22. David breaketh the oath or vow which he had raſhly made in his anger.

5 That Chriſt was, Verè mendicus, a meere begger, and wanted both the uſe, and dominion of temporall things, Bellarm. de Monach. lib. 2. cap. 45. But Auguſtine according to the Scriptures ſaith: Niſi putetis, quia dominus petebat & indigebat, cui ſerviebant angeli, qui de quinque panibus tot millia pavit: Unleſſe yee thinke (ſaith he) that Chriſt begged, and was in want, unto whom the Angels miniſtred, and who was able of five loaves to feed ſo many thouſand: in Pſalm. 146.

This opinion, which the Jeſuite holdeth, that Chriſt was a begger, was condemned by Pope Paulus 2. for hereſie, Anno 1465. ex hiſtor. ſca. mundi. And before that, by Iohn 22. extrav. tit. 14. cap. 4. How dare he then controule his pope holy fathers determinate ſentence?

6 Diabolus odit imagines: The devill himſelfe hateth and cannot abide an image. Bellarm. de imaginib. ſanctor. lib. 2. cap. 12. yet S. Paul ſaith, what is offered or ſacrificed to Idols, is ſacrificed to devils, 1 Cor. 10. 20. 1 Cor. 10. 20. He doth ſo abhor an Image, that who ſo worſhippeth them, doth the devill great ſervice.

7 Whenſoever we ſee either a manger to be painted or graven, to repreſent the nativity of Chriſt, or a poſt or pillar to repreſent his ſcourging, Non carent veneratione ſua: There is ſome religious reverence to be done unto them: Bellarm. de ſanctor. imaginib. lib. 2. cap. 30. So in the Jeſuites judgement, every Alehouſe painted cloth, ſhewing any ſuch picture, muſt bee adored and worſhipped.

8 That the Sacrament doth conferre grace, Ex opere operato, by the very worke that is wrought, that is, the externall action, nor for the worthines of the miniſter or the receiver. Neither doth faith give efficacy to the Sacrament, no more than the drineſſe of the wood is the cauſe that it burneth, but the fire. Bellarm. lib. 2. de effect. ſacrament. cap. 1. not. 4. Theſe are foule abſurdities: as to thinke, that any action of it ſelfe pleaſeth or is acceptable unto God without faith, contrary to the Scripture, *Heb.*11.6. And to make the Sacraments to be more principall than faith, whereof they are but ſeales, *Rom.*4.11. And faith being the very life of a righteous man, Rom. 1.17. Heb.11.6. Rom.4.11.

9 That a Pagane or Infidell may baptize in a caſe of neceſſitie or extremitie, *Bellar.de Baptiſm.lib.*1.*cap.*7. A very abſurd thing that one by Baptiſme may be received into the Church and made a member of Chriſt, by him that is not in the Church, nor of the body of Chriſt, nor ever was: Whereas Chriſt ſaid onely to his Apoſtles, Goe and teach all nations, baptizing them, &c. *Matth.*28.19. Matth.28.19.

10 That it is very probable that Iohn Baptiſt uſed no forme of words at all in his baptiſme, *Bellarm.de ſacram.Baptiſ.lib.*1.*cap.*20. Which is an abſurd ſaying, and contrarie to Saint Paul, who teſtifieth of Iohn, that he baptized the people, ſaying unto them, That they ſhould beleeve in him which ſhould come after him, that is, in Ieſus Chriſt, Acts 19.4.

11 That the Apoſtles were firſt made prieſts in the inſtitution of the Lords ſupper, and Biſhops afterward, when Chriſt was riſen from the dead. Bellarm. de ſacram.confirmat. cap. 12.reſp. ad 2.argum. But wat need they be ordained prieſts or Biſhops, who alreadie were called to be Apoſtles, which is the firſt and chiefeſt office in the Church? *Epheſ.*4.11. And includeth other inferiour functions: for the Apoſtles together with their Apoſtleſhip were made Paſtors, and Doctors, and Biſhops too, if you will, of the Church, ſo they needed not any new inveſting to theſe functions. Epheſ.4.11.

12 That a Biſhop is the onely paſtor of his dioceſſe, and that inferiour miniſters and teachers are not paſtors properly. *Bellar.de Concil.lib.*1.*cap.*15. Yet S.Peter maketh Elders, Presbyteri, (as they tranſlate) prieſts, to be the proper paſtors of their ſeverall charges: Feed the flocke of God, which dependeth on you: 1 *Pet.*5.3. But if a particular flocke or congregation depend on their teacher and inſtructer, then is he properly their paſtor. 1 Pet.5.3.

13 The regiment of the Church is eaſier than the government of the common wealth: Facilior eſt gubernatio eccleſiaſtica, quàm politica: Bellarm.de Roman.pontif.lib. 1.*cap.*9.reſponſ.ad object. 4. Here the Jeſuite bewrayeth his great ignorance, ſeeing there is no greater charge than that wich concerneth the ſouls of men: the care whereof Bellarmine confeſſeth not at all to belong to the politicall or civill magiſtrate. And therefore S.Paul cryeth out in admiration of this weightie and wonderfull calling: Who is ſufficient for theſe things? 2 *Cor.*2.16. And therefore calleth the care which he had of the Churches, a trouble and a cumbrance, 2 *Cor.*11.28. It is not therefore ſo light and eaſie an office as the Jeſuite thinketh, to have charge of mens ſoules. 2 Cor.2.16. 2 Cor.11.28.

14 Tantum abeſt (ſaith Bellarmine) ut negatio Petri obſit primatui, ut potius eum confirmet: Peters denying of Chriſt was ſo farre from hindering his primacie, that it did rather further it. *De Romar.pontific.lib.*1.*cap.*28. A great abſurditie: for it was ſo farre from being any helpe or furtherance to Peter, that it had been ſufficient without the great mercie of God, to have hindered his ſalvation. And if Peter received ſuch a benefit by his denyall of Chriſt, hee might have ſpared ſome teares, and not have wept ſo bitterly for his fault.

15 Whereas we alleage againſt our adverſaries, that it is like that Peter was not at Rome when S.Paul wrote his epiſtle to the Romans, becauſe he is not remembred amongſt ſo many, in the Apoſtles ſalutation, *cap.*16. They ſhape us theſe and the like anſwers: It might be that Peter at that time was out of the towne, or that there were ſpeciall letters ſent to Peter beſide, or this epiſtle might be ſent encloſed to S.Peter by his meanes to be delivered to the Church. Rhemiſt annot. *Rom.*16.*ſect.*4. Who ſeeth not the abſurditie and inſufficiencie of theſe anſwers?

16 That Peter failed in charitie, when he denied Chriſt, and not in faith, and if he failed in faith, he loſt the confeſſion of faith, not faith it ſelfe, *Bellar.de Roman. pontif.lib.*4.*cap.*3. But how I pray you can a man faile in charitie and not in faith, ſeeing a lively faith alwaies worketh by love? *Gal.*5.6. and cannot be ſeparated or divided from it. And it is as abſurd a thing to ſay, * a man may loſe the confeſſion of his faith, and yet keep his faith ſound: for theſe two are the principal fruits of faith, to beleeve with the heart, and confeſſe with the mouth, *Rom.*10.10. And where either of theſe is wanting, there cannot be a right and perfect faith.

*Here alſo it is objected, that elſewhere I affirme, that Peter loſt the Confeſſion of his faith, & yet his faith was not loſt, Synopſ p. 187 and ſo I contradict my ſelfe. Anſ. Peter neither loſt his faith, nor yet the confeſſion of his faith utterly: but both were weakened at that time: to ſay then, that he loſt his confeſſion in part, or at that time, but he loſt it not finally, are not contradictions. See our further anſwer Retect. pag. 130.

17 That the Pope as he is Pope cannot erre: and yet whether he may erre or not, Eſt ab omnibus fidelibus obedienter audiendus: He is obediently to be heard and followed of all the faithfull, *Bellarm. de Rom.pontific.lib.*4.*cap.*2. What an abſurd thing is this, to bind the Church abſolutely to obey a man, as well when he erreth, as when he erreth not? S.Paul durſt require no more of the Corinthians, but to follow him as he followed Chriſt, 1 *Cor.*11.1.

18 In the late deviſed doctrine of their imagined Antichriſt, our adverſaries are driven to grant many abſurdities. 1. That Antichriſt ſhall come of the tribe of Dan, Rhemiſt.2 *Theſ.*2.ſect.8. Whereas it is certaine that the Tribes of the Jewes are now ſhuffled together, and the diſtinction of their kinreds and families is not kept: for if in Ezra his time after the captivitie their genealogies were not perfectly knowne, and therefore ſome were put from the prieſthood, Ezra 2.62. how much more now, the Jewes having bin diſperſed in the world almoſt 16. hundred yeeres, is it like that their petigree and deſcent from their fathers is not obſerved?

19 2. Antichriſt, ſay they, ſhall have his imperiall ſeat at Jeruſalem, and re-edifie againe the Temple, and command circumciſion to be uſed. *Bellarm.lib.*3.*de pontif.cap.*13. This is a great abſurditie contradicting the truth of Scripture: for Haggai the Prophet calleth the Temple builded by Zera-

babel

Hag. 2, 10. babel the laſt houſe, 2.10. But if it ſhall bee the third time errected, how was that the laſt?

20 3. That Antichriſt ſhall reigne but three yeeres and an halfe: and yet in this ſpace ſhall fight with the three Kings of Lybia, Ægypt, Æthiopia, and perſecute the Chriſtians through the whole world, Bellar. cap. 16. But let any man ſay; how is it poſſible, that in ſo ſhort a time Antichriſt ſhould conquer and ſubdue the whole world? In which ſpace a man can hardly compaſſe, or goe through the world.

21 The popiſh religion preferreth the rich before the poore, even in ſpirituall matters. Ideo in hoc ſolo caſu melior eſt conditio divitis, quam pauperis, quia habet unde ſuffragia fiant pro ipſo. In this caſe only the eſtate of the rich is better than the poore, becauſe he hath wherewithall ſuffrages ſhould be made for him: that is, he is able to give largely for Maſſes. Albert. Mag. de offic. miſſal, tract. 3. But the Scripture biddeth otherwiſe, that we ſhould not have reſpect unto the rich, that hath a gold ring, or weareth gay apparell. Iam. 2.2.

22 The ſigne of the croſſe even by the very act and making of the ſigne, though it bee done by a Jew, Infidell, or Pagane, is of force to drive away the devill, Bellarm. de imagin. ſanct. cap. 30. Yea, but carnall weapons, ſuch as the ſigne of the Croſſe is, profit not good Chriſtians againſt their ſpirituall enemies, 2 Corin. 10.4. how much leſſe Paganes or Infidels.

23 The Jeſuite maketh two repreſentations of the death of Chriſt: there is ſimplex repreſentatio, a ſimple and plaine repreſentation, and that is in the ſacrament of the Euchariſt: and there is repræſentatio ad vivum, a full and lively repreſentation of Chriſt, that is upon good Friday, when Chriſts death is ſet forth by divers geſtures, actions, inſtruments, copes and veſtments. Bellarm. lib. 1. de Miſſ. cap. 1. But how abſurd a thing this is, every man may ſee: that the repreſentation of Chriſts death in the Sacrament, inſtituted of the Lord himſelfe, to be a ſhewing forth of his death, ſhould be but a plaine and ſimple repreſentation: and the other deviſed by man, being done without a Sacrament, ſhould bee called a lively repreſentation: What is this els, but to ſet the ſpirit of God to ſchoole, as though a more lively ſhewing forth of Chriſts death could be deviſed by man, than was ordained by Chriſt?

24 It is not neceſſary (they ſay) in every ſacrament to have a viſible ſigne, and therefore the words of abſolution (which are audible, though not viſible) may be the externall ſigne in penance. Bellar. lib. 1. de pœnitent. cap. 11. See what an abſurd ſaying this is for by this reaſon the preaching of the word may be a ſacrament, becauſe there is an audible ſound.

25 Likewiſe in the popiſh ſacrament of Matrimonie, the Jeſuite maketh the partis contracted, both the matter of Matrimonie, and the Miniſters, and the forme to be theſe words: I take thee, &c. Bellar. de Matrim. cap. 6. Here are two great abſurdities: for firſt the Preachers and Miniſters of the word only are the diſpenſers of the myſteries and ſacraments of the Church, 1 Cor. 4. 1. therefore the parties themſelves cannot be the miniſters of Matrimonie, which they ſay is a ſacrament. Secondly, it is not every word that ſanctifieth, but the word of God, 1 Tim. 4. 5. but theſe words, I take thee, &c. are no part of the word, therefore they have no power to ſanctifie.

1 Cor. 4. 1.

1 Tim. 4. 5.

26 The Rhemiſts hold opinion, that Henoch and Elias do yet live in their bodies in paradiſe: Apoc. 11. ſect. 4. But paradiſe is now no other place but heaven, 1 Cor. 12. 24. But there (they ſay) Henoch and Elias are not, for they ſhall come againe in their owne perſons (as they hold) and reſiſt Antichriſt, and in the end be ſlaine of him: but bodies once glorified in heaven, can no more die, neither are ſubject to violence: If then they be not in heaven, they are not in paradiſe, which is no other place but heaven. Let now any indifferent man judge, how handſomely theſe things agree together.

1 Cor. 12. 24.

27 That the Angels ſhall beare the ſigne of the croſſe before Chriſt comming to judgement Bellarm. de ſanctis, lib. 2. cap. 28. This alſo is a phantaſticall conceit of theirs, without any ground of Scripture, or any good reaſon.

Many abſurdities about the carnal preſence of Chriſts body in the Euchariſt which Papiſts are driven unto, they make Chriſts body in heaven and earth at one time, and ſo a monſtrous body that reacheth from heaven to earth. They encloſe Chriſts body in a thinne wafer-cake.

But of all other popiſt abſurdities, theſe are moſt groſſe and palpable, which they are driven to confeſſe about their device of tranſubſtantiation in the Euchariſt.

28 Firſt, they doe grant, that the body of Chriſt may be, and is in many places at once locally and viſibly, that his fleſh is at the ſame time in heaven; and in earth in the Euchariſt. Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib. 3. cap. 4. Yet the Angell ſaith contrary, He is riſen, for he is not here, Matth. 28. 6. Which had been no good argument, if Chriſts body be in many places at once.

29 Secondly, they further affirme, that Chriſts body in heaven, and at the ſame time in earth, are not ſundry bodies, or divers parts of one body, but one whole body, not divided or diſcontinued from it ſelfe, Bellar. ibid. Thus they make Chriſt a monſtrous body, that can fill heaven, and earth, and indeed they in ſo ſaying, deſtroy his humanity.

30 Thirdly, they grant that the body of Chriſt is in the Sacrament with all his parts and dimenſions, hands, face, feet. Bellarm. lib. 3. de Euchariſt. cap. 7. But what an abſurd and impoſſible thing is this, that the body of a man, as of three cubites in height, and having other dimenſions anſwerable to the proportion and ſtatute of an humane body, ſhould be incloſed in a thinne wafer cake, ſuch as they uſe in their Euchariſt, not a ſpanne in breadth, without deſtruction of the parts and dimenſions of the body?

31 Fourthly, that one and the ſame body of Chriſt, in the ſame inſtant, may be ſaid to be, Surſum, deorſum, Above, and below, Remotum, propinquum, Neere unto the earth, and farre diſtant from it, that it may be in motion in one place, and yet reſt and be at quiet in another, as the ſoule in the body, as it is in the feet, is neere to the earth, as in the head, it is further off. Bellarmine de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib. 3. cap. 4.

cap. 4. Theſe are abſurdities contrary to the rule of reaſon, that contradictory ſpeeches ſhould in one inſtant bee true of the ſame body or ſubject. And what is hereſie if this be not, to reſemble and compare the fleſh of Chriſt to a ſoule or ſpirit, that as the ſoule is in the body in no certaine place, but every where, ſo the fleſh of Chriſt ſhould be in the world? for this followeth of the Jeſuites compariſon betweene the ſoule of man, and the fleſh of Chriſt.

They make Chriſts body like the ſoule, and ſo ſpirituall.

32 5 Corpus Chriſti incipit eſſe in altari, (ſaith Bellarmine) per converſionem panis in ipſum, The body of Chriſt beginneth to be in the Altar by the converſion or turning of the bread into his body, Lib. 3 de ſacram. cap. 4. What great blaſphemie is this, to affirme that Chriſts fleſh is made of bread? for theſe are their owne words, that the bread is not annihilate, that is, turned into nothing, but into the body of Chriſt. And Bellarmine alſo confeſſeth that Chriſt body in the Euchariſt is made of bread, as the wine was of water by our Saviour Chriſt, Iohn 2. But in that miracle it is certaine the water was the matter whereof the wine was made, for otherwiſe Chriſt would noe have bid the ſervants fill the water-pots with water, if he had purpoſed to create wine of nothing rather than to change water into wine. Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib. 4. cap. 24. Thus Chriſt by popiſh divinity ſhall have a breaden body.

They make Chriſts body of bread.

33 6 That after the words of conſecration, there remaineth only the accidents of bread and wine, as their colour, taſt, roundneſſe, and ſuch like, the ſubſtances of them being changed: And ſo they confeſſe againſt the rule of nature and reaſon grounded upon Scripture, that accidents have a being and ſubſtance of their owne without a ſubject, Harding defenſ. apolog. 305. pag. And it is the generall opinion of all Papiſts: So in their opinion there may be the whitenes, roundnes, and taſt of bread, and yet no bread: the redneſſe, tartneſſe, and other properties of wine, and yet no wine. If a man then ſhould aske, what round or white or red thing is this? they cannot ſay bread or wine, for there is none left: Neither will they ſay, that the body of Chriſt is either white or red, and thus are they driven to their ſhifts. Whereupon ſome of their ſchoolemen have ſaid, Accidentia illi ſunt in aëre, tanquam in ſubjecto: The accidents are in the ayre as in their ſubject. De conſecrat. diſtinct. 2. Species, in gloſſa.

They make accidents without a ſubject.

34 7 They are the accidents of bread and wine, which are eaten, and chawen, or rent by the teeth, Bellarm. lib. 1. de ſacram. Euchariſt. cap. 11. reſponſ. ad argum. 5 And which go downe into the bellie, and nouriſh and feed the body, Harding. defenſ. apolog. pag. 305. Thus by popiſh philoſophie, the accidents of wine make a man drunke, the accidents of bread may feed a man and make him fat, without either bread or wine.

Accidents of wine may one drinke with Papiſts.

35 8 That Chriſt would not have the externall figures and ſhapes of the elements changed, but remaine ſtill, becauſe man would abhorre to eat humane fleſh in the proper ſhape, Bellarmine, lib. 3. de ſacram. Euchariſt. cap. 22. But what an abſurd thing is this? as though Chriſt would command any unſeemely thing, or contrary to humanity. And how could the Apoſtles command the Gentiles to abſtaine from ſtrangled, and from bloud: Act. 15. when as by their doctrine they did eat daily in their aſſemblies the raw fleſh and bloud of Chriſt?

They make Chriſtians eaters of raw fleſh.

36 9 If the conſecrate hoaſt, as they call it, chance to putrifie and corrupt, or to be burnt with fire, or devoured of a mouſe, or any other vermine by the negligence of the prieſt, they ſay, it ceaſeth to bee the body of Chriſt, and that God in that very inſtant ſupplieth ſome other matter. Bellar. lib. 3. de Euchariſt. cap. 24. ad arg. 6. Or elſe it returneth into the nature and ſubſtance of bread againe, as other Papiſts affirme, Fox pag. 496. So there is no leſſe miracle wrought by occaſion of the prieſts negligence, than was before by the words of conſecration. And it is not enough for God to worke miracles for men, but even for Mice alſo: yet Bellarmine telleth us very ſoberly, that all this is done, Sine miraculo, without a miracle: But how I pray you, can bread bee turned into fleſh, and fleſh againe into bread without a miracle?

Miracles wrought for mice in the Papiſts opinion.

37 10 Yea ſome of them are not aſhamed to write thus, Si canis vel porcus deglutiret hoſtiam conſecratam integram, non video quare corpus Domini, non ſimul traiiceretur in ventrem canis vel porci: If a Dogge or a Hogge ſhould devoure a whole conſecrated hoaſt, I ſee nothing to the contrary, but the bodie of Chriſt may paſſe withall into the bellie of the dogge or hogge. Alexander Halenſ. part. 4. quaſt. 25. memb. 1. And the allowed Gloſſe ſaith: Corpus Chriſti poteſt evomi, The body of Chriſt may be ſpued or vomited up againe: De conſecr. diſt. 2. cap. 28.

The body of Chriſt may bee vomited.

38 11 They ſuffer not the lay people to be partakers of the cup, but to receive in one kind only, alleaging theſe and ſuch like weightie cauſes, as the danger of ſpilling, ſheading, and ſhaking the blood out of the cup, or the ſouring, or elſe ſticking upon mens beards, and ſuch like, Bellarm. lib. 4. de Euchariſt. ca. 24. Fox pag. 1150. Are not theſe (thinke you) matters of great moment and importance, to fruſtrate, and make void the inſtitution of Chriſt?

They feare ſpilling of the wine upon mens beards.

Unto theſe and ſuch like abſurdities of pope-catholike religion, we may adjoyne alſo the profound and weightie queſtions, and deep diſcourſes of popiſh Divines: as to begin with their captaines and ringleaders, and firſt fathers of ſuperſtition: Auguſtine the Monke, that was ſent into England by Gregory the firſt, ſent unto his maſter to know his judgement and reſolution in theſe and ſuch like weightie matters.

1 Whether a woman great with child ought to be baptized. 2. After how many daies the children that are borne ought to be baptized.

3 If

40 3 If ſhe be in her monthly courſe, after the cuſtome of women, whether then ſhe may enter into the Church, and receive the communion.

41 4 Whether it bee lawfull for the man, after company had with his wife, before he be waſhed with water, to enter into the Church: Theſe and ſuch like grave queſtions this Seraphicall doctor ſent unto Rome to be diſcuſſed, ſavouring rather of Jewiſh ſuperſtition, than of Chriſtian faith and judgement. Plura apud Fox pag. 117.

42 The like ſtuffe a Monkiſh letter ſent to King Naiton King of Pictes, by Abbot Colfride, containeth, In the which entreating of the ſhaving of prieſts, he exhorteth the King to reforme his countrey, and to imitate the ſhaving of Saint Peter, rather than the ſhaving of Simon Magus: which at the firſt appearance (ſaith he) hath a ſhew of a ſhaven crowne, but if you marke his necke, you ſhall find it curtailed in ſuch wiſe, as you will ſay, it is rather meete to bee uſed of the Simoniſts, than of Chriſtians. The blind ſuperſtitious King having read this letter, kneeled on the ground, and gave God thanks that he had deſerved to receive ſuch a preſent out of England: Ex Beda lib. 5. cap. 22. Is not this deep divinity, and fit matter for the king and ſtates of a land to buſie their heads about? And had the countrey no need to be reformed touching the doctrine of faith or manners, but all muſt be laid aſide, and care only taken for ſhaving of crownes? He ſpeaketh much of S. Peters ſhaving, how Peter was ſhaven one way, Simon Magus another: but where findeth he in Scripture, or any approved writer, either this or that? But ſuch was the divinity, that Monks ſpent their time in in thoſe dayes.

43 Such another great and difficult queſtion much troubled and buſied the Popes ſchoolemen of later times: as who ſhould be our Ladies confeſſor, or ghoſtly father: after much diſcuſſing and debating of this matter, it was agreed to be S. Iohn. But hereupon ſprang a more doubtfull matter, that ſeeing our Lady was void of all ſinne both originall and actuall, as they affirme, what need ſhee ſhould have of confeſſion, or if ſhe did confeſſe, what ſhe did ſay in her confeſſion. And here Albertus Magnus doth help at a pinch, and telleth us plainely her confeſſion was this: That ſhe had received that great grace to be the mother of Chriſt, not ex condigno, of any dignity of her owne: but yet notwithſtanding of congruitie, Albert. cap. 74. ſuper Evang. Miſſus eſt.

44 Anno 1509. There was a fierce contention renewed betweene the Franciſcane & Dominike friers, about the conception of the Virgin Mary. The Franciſcans held this moſt blaſphemous opinion, that ſhe was not only void of actuall ſin, but even free from originall ſin, unto the which ſhee was not ſubject, no not one moment of her Conception. The Dominiks affirmed more agreeable to the Scriptures, that Chriſt only had this priviledge to bee conceived and borne without originall ſinne, notwithſtanding they granted that the bleſſed Virgin was alſo ſanctified and purged in her mothers wombe from originall ſinne.

Yet the Franciſcans prevailed, and the poore Dominiks with the truth, were cruſht to the walles, the Pope himſelfe (who was then Sixtus the fourth) determing againſt them, Plura Fox pag. 800. Were not theſe deep divines and profound doctors, that would trouble themſelves with this queſtion, which was long before decyded by the Apoſtle? who doubteth not to ſay, That all have ſinned, Rom. 3.23. & 5.12. Yea and Marie her ſelfe acknowledgeth that ſhe had need of a Savionr, Luke 1.47. and therefore was a ſinner as well as others. Such were the matters which in thoſe times of ignorance and darknes the popiſh Clergie did occupie themſelves in: Magis puerilibus ineptiis, quàm ſacerdotum & cordatorum virorum prudentiæ convenientia: Matters fitter for children to toy withall, than beſeeming the gravity of prieſts and ſtayed men, as Conſtantine ſaith, writing to Alexander and Arrius, Euſeb. de vit. Conſtantin. lib. 2.

Rom. 3. 23.
Rom. 5. 12.

45 Turrianus 2. tract. c. 17. hath this abſurd poſition, Tertii ordinis angeli præſunt ſacerdotibus & eorum præſidio ſacrificium conficitur: The angels of the third order are preſent with Prieſts at the altar, and help them to make the ſacrifice: firſt, when was he in Paradiſe to know which Angels are of the firſt, which of the ſecond, and third order? Againe, where find they that this office is committed to Angels to miniſter the Sacraments? Whereas our Saviour in ſaying hoc facite, doe this in remembrance, &c. gave charge not to Angels, but to his Apoſtles; for the Angels need no remembrance of Chriſt being alway in his preſence.

46 Bellarm. of the bread in the Euchariſt writeth thus, Panis per ſe irrationabilis eſt: The bread is without reaſon of it ſelfe, but the prieſt prayeth, ut rationabilis fiat tranſeundo in corpus Chriſti: that it may be made reaſonable, or indued with reaſon; by paſſing into the body of Chriſt, lib. 3. de Euchariſt. c. 20. Did ever any man heare before of reaſonable bread? was he reaſonable, thinke you, that thus writeth? for hee ſpeaketh not of Chriſts body, but of bread paſſing into his body, that it may bee reaſonable: and beſide here is another abſurdity granted, that bread goeth into Chriſts body, and Chriſts body commeth out of bread.

47 Bellarmine lib. 2. de effectu ſacramen. c. 22. ſaith, that the wicked man ſumit quidem ore verum corpus Chriſti, ſed nihil recipit in anima niſi peccatum, doth take the true body of Chriſt with his mouth, and ſinne into his ſoule: Here are many abſurdities joyned together, firſt, Chriſt is made the miniſter of ſinne, ſecondly, Chriſt and the devill are placed in one temple together, but what ſociety, ſaith the Scripture can there be betweene light and darknes, thirdly, Satan is made ſtronger than Chriſt, for he taketh poſſeſſion of the ſoule, Chriſt entreth only into the body.

48 Patricius lib. 3. c. 4. hath theſe words, Sancta eſt eccleſia, atqui ſanctius multo eſt in ea ſacrificium: The Church is holy, but the ſacrifice in the Church is more holy : a great abſurdity, that the idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe ſhould be more worthy than the Church : firſt, nothing in the whole world can be more excellent than the Church, but the bleſſed Trinity, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt : and therefore in the ſymbole, after our beleefe in the Trinity, followeth the Church, tanquam domus habitatori ſuo, as the houſe after the dweller, as Auguſtine ſaith : but of their Maſſe in the Creed, there is not one word. Secondly, the Maſſe receiveth ſtrength from the Church, for thus the Prieſt prayeth : Reſpect not my ſinnes, Lord, ſed fidem Eccleſiæ, but the faith of thy Church : therefore as our Saviour ſaid to the Phariſes, Whether is greater the gold of the Temple, or the Temple that ſanctifieth the gold? Math. 23. 17. ſo I aske them, whether is greater your Maſſe, or Math. 23. 17. the Church, which ſanctifieth and maketh your Maſſe acceptable? &c.

Thus farre alſo concerning the abſurd and frivolous oppoſitions maintained by our adverſaries : I profeſſe not (as I have often ſaid) in this Treatiſe to make a collection of all, but every where, taking what came next to hand, to give the Reader a taſte, referring the reſt to his owne obſervation ; and I truſt, by theſe few examples which I have ſet downe, we may eaſily judge and diſcerne of popiſh religion : for it fareth with them as Auguſtine ſaid of ſome other heretickes in his daies : Quemadmodum ſolet accidere, ut quando tranſeuntes nubes per obſcura noctis intuemur, earum caligine ſic acies noſtra turbetur, ut in contrarium nobis ſydera currere videantur : ſic iſti, quia in erroris ſui nubilo pacem non inveniunt, &c. As it happeneth when wee ſee the clouds move in a darke night, our ſight is ſo dimmed that we imagine the ſtarres to goe another way : So theſe fellowes not finding any end or ſtableneſſe in the clouds of their error, are not able rightly to judge of the truth, but thinke that the Scripture and all goeth awrie : De diverſ. ſerm. 15. Even thus our adverſaries being beſotted with their owne imaginations, and their eye of judgement obſcured with the thicke clouds of wilfull ignorance, doe runne, as it were in a maze, taking error for truth, and abſurd and ſtrange poſitions for catholike and ſound doctrine.

Now to the next Pillar.

THE THIRD PILLAR OF POPISH DOCTRINE,

Conſiſting of three parts; looſe Arguments, Weake Solutions, and ſubtile and ſophiſticall Diſtinctions.

The firſt part ſetting forth the looſe and light arguments whereby Papiſtry is upholden.

FIrſt, let us ſee how pithily our adverſaries diſpute, and how luſtily they lay about them for the ſupremacie, and peereleſſe authority of the Pope.

1 Acts 12.4. 1 Cor.9.5. Peter did excommunicate Ananias and Saphira: He healed the ſicke by his ſhadow: Ergo, he was head of the Church. Rhemiſt. Annot. Act.4. ſect.5.8. Peters perſon was guarded with foure quaternions of ſouldiers, Acts 12.4. the Church prayed for him, ibid. ſect.4. Paul nameth him Cephas, 1 Cor.9.5. Ergo, he was chiefe of the Apoſtles, and conſequently the Pope his ſucceſſor, is head of the Church.

2 Math.16.19. Chriſt ſaid unto Peter, I will give unto thee the keyes of the Kingdome of heaven, *Math.*16.19. And Chriſt againe bid Peter feede his ſheepe, Iohn 21. Ergo, Peter and his ſucceſſors the Popes, are the judges of the true ſenſe of the Scripture, Bellarm. de verb. interpet. libr.3. cap.5.

3 Iohn 10.16. Chriſt ſaith, Iohn 10.16. There ſhall be one ſhepheard and one ſheepfold: Ergo, there ought to be one chiefe Paſtor of the univerſall Church, and that is Peter and his ſucceſſors, Bellar. lib.1. de pontif. Rom. cap.9. Whereas Chriſt in that place ſpeaketh of the calling of the Gentiles: Other ſheepe I have alſo, which are not of this fold: That they together with the Iewes ſhall make but one ſheepefold under Chriſt.

4 Iohn 17.20. Chriſt ſaid to Peter, I have prayed for thee, that thy faith ſhould not faile: Ergo, the Pope cannot faile nor erre in faith, Bellarm. de Roman. pontif. lib.4. cap.3. So Chriſt prayeth for all the faithfull, Iohn 17.20. Therefore by this reaſon, all beleevers ſhould be priviledged from errour.

5 Math.18.20. Whereſoever two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midſt of them, *Math.*18.20. Ergo, it belongeth to the Pope to call and congregate councells: for to be aſſembled in the name of Chriſt, is nothing elſe but to be gathered together by the Popes authority, which hee hath received from Chriſt, Bellarm. de concil lib.1. cap.12.

So by this reaſon, if two or three of the faithfull meet together in the feare of God, Chriſt will not be preſent, unleſſe they have the Popes leave to come together.

6 Chriſt ſaid to Peter, Put up thy ſword into thy ſcabberd: Ergo, the Pope hath both ſwords, *Harding. ex Iuel. pag.*579. A ſimple argument, Peter was rather rebuked for ſtriking with the ſword, than commanded to uſe it.

7 1 Pet.5. 13. The Church that is at Babylon ſaluteth you, 1 Peter 5.13. Ergo, Peter was at Rome: for by Babylon here hee meaneth Rome, Bellarm. lib.2. de pontif. cap.2. A ſilly argument to prove Peters being at Rome: he was at Babylon, Ergo, at Rome: yet by their owne confeſsion Rome is Babylon, which is the ſeat of Antichriſt.

8 Rom.1.5. Your faith is publiſhed through the whole world, Rom. 1.5. Ergo, the Church of Rome cannot erre, Rhemiſt. ibid. So S. Paul ſaith of the Church of the Theſſalonians, Your faith is ſpread abroad into all quarters, 1 *Epiſt.*1.8. Ergo, neither could their Church erre in faith.

9 Numb. 11.16. God tooke of the ſpirit that was in Moſes, and gave it among the ſeventy elders, *Numb.*11.16 Ergo, Biſhops have their authority from the Pope, Bellarmine. Anſw. The Pope might rather challenge to be Aarons ſucceſſeur, who was the high Prieſt, than Moſes. And hath the Pope then ſuch abundance of the Spirit of God, that hee can afford a portion thereof to all the Biſhops in the world, and yet keepe enough for himſelfe?

20 Melchiſedech was both King and Prieſt: Ergo, the Pope is alſo temporall Prince, Bellar. lib.5. de Rom. pont. cap.9. This argument beſide that it hath no ſequele at all, containeth blaſphemy: for Melchiſedech was only a type and figure of the ſpirituall Kingdome and prieſthood of Chriſt, as the Apoſtle maketh the application, *Heb.*7.

11 Then began men to call upon the Name of the Lord, *Geneſ.*4. 26. Ergo, there were Monkes before the flood, *Bellarm.de Monach. lib.1.cap.*5.

Gen.4.26.

12 *Suffer little children to come unto me, Math.*19. *Ergo,*young men and children may be made Monks, *Bellarm. de Monach.lib.2.cap.*35.

13 God ſaid unto *Abraham, Goe out from thy kinred, and from thy Fathers houſe, Gen.*12.1. *Forget thine owne people, and thy Fathers houſe, Pſalm.*45.10 Ergo, it is lawfull for children without their parents conſent to enter into profeſsion of Monkery, *Bellarm. ibid. cap.*36.

Gen.12.1. Pſal.45.10.

14 Now, for Purgatory, which they imagine to be a place of temporall torment after this life, they reaſon thus out of Scripture. The Prophet David ſaith: *Lord, rebuke me not in thine anger, nor chaſtiſe me in thy wrath, Pſalm.*38.1. *We went through fire and water, Pſalm.*66.12. Who ſhall abide the day of his comming? for hee is like a purging fire, and as fullers ſope, Malach 3.2. Ergo, there is a purgatory fire after this life. Theſe arguments are too vaine for children: As though where the Scripture ſpeaketh of fire, it muſt needs be underſtood of purgatory fire, whereas the Prophet David by water and fire underſtandeth the afflictions of the Church: and the Prophet Malachy, the day of the Lords viſitation.

Pſal.38.1. Pſal.66.12. Malach.3.2.

15 The like pithy arguments they ground out of the new Teſtament, as *Math.*5.22. He that is angry with his brother, is culpable of judgement, he that ſaith racha, ſhall be judged by a Councell. Luke 23. the theefe upon the Croſſe ſaid to Chriſt, Remember me when thou commeſt into thy Kingdome, Acts 2.24. whom God hath raiſed up, and looſed the ſorrowes of hell (as they reade) for it was impoſſible for him to be holden of it. Ergo, there is a purgatory after this life, *Bellarm. de Purgator. lib.1. cap.4. loc.*5.7,8. Theſe be their goodly arguments, which if they prove any thing, doe inſinuate thus much, that Chriſts Kingdome is Purgatory, as in the ſecond place, and that Chriſt himſelfe was in Purgatory, as it followeth by their collection out of the third place alleaged: And that a man for a raſh word ſpeaking ſhall be tormented in Purgatory, which (they ſay) exceedeth all the paines and puniſhments of this life, as out of the firſt place.

Math.5.22. Luk.23.42. Acts 2.24.

16 The like arguments they have for Purgatory drawne from prophane authority, as from the Turks Alcaron, out of Plato in Gorgia, out of Cicero in ſomnio Scipionis, and Virgils Æneads, and laſt of all flames of fire doe breake forth from the great hill Ætna, and out of other places: Ergo, there muſt needs be a Purgatory, *Bellarm.cap.*7. & 11. Are not theſe ſubſtantiall arguments to ground a mans faith upon? for Bellarmine ſaith, it is an article of Faith to beleeve Purgatory, and that he which beleeveth it not, is ſure to goe to hell, *Lib.1.de Purgat.cap.*11. Thus the unbeleeving Turks, the heathen Philoſophers and Poets, are become maſters of Chriſtian mens faith.

17 Chriſt raiſed Lazarus from the dead, Iohn 11. the rulers daughter, *Math.*9. the widdowes ſonne, Luke 7. Ergo, wee ought alſo to pray for the dead: *Bellarm. lib.2. de Purgat.cap.*15.

18 *Rom.*2. 7. To them that continue in well doing, glory, honour, and immortality, Ergo, Saints are to be worſhipped, *Bellarm.de ſanct.beatit.lib.1.cap.13.arg.*7. Moſes prayeth thus: *Remember, O Lord, Abraham, Iſaac, and Iſrael thy ſervants, Exod.*32. Iob ſaith, have pitty upon mee, O my friends, Iob 19. 21. Ergo, we may, and ought to make our prayers unto Saints, *Bellarm.ibid.cap.*19. Theſe arguments doe rather move laughter, than miniſter any matter worthy of confutation.

Rom.2.7. Iob 19.21.

19 The Iſraelites were commanded to ſtrike the blood of the Paſcall Lamb upon the two ſide poſts of the dore, and the upper dore poſt, *Exod.*12.7. Iacob laying his hands acroſſe, did bleſſe Ioſephs ſons, *Gen.*48. Apoc. 14. 1. having his Fathers name written in their foreheads: this is the ſigne of the croſſe: Ergo it is an holy and venerable ſigne, *Bellarm. de imaginib. Sanctor. lib.2. cap.*29. Is not this well reaſoned for the croſſe?

Exod.12.7. Gen.48.14. Apoc.14.1.

20 The Iſraelites were commanded thrice a yeere to goe up to Ieruſalem, *Deu.*16. Chriſt went up with his mother and Ioſeph to Ieruſalem, Luke 2. Paul made haſte to goe up to Ieruſalem to keepe the feaſt of Pentecoſt, Acts 20. Ergo, now alſo Chriſtians may goe in pilgrimage to Ieruſalem, and to the holy Land, *Bellarm.de cult.Sanct.lib.3.cap.*8. Thus we learne a new point of popiſh Divinity, that our Saviour Chriſt and the Apoſtles went in pilgrimage: Whereas Chriſt himſelfe ſaith the contrary: The time commeth, when yee ſhall neither in this mountaine, nor in Ieruſalem worſhip the Father, Iohn 4.23. This agreeth with another popiſh tale, that Chriſt came in pilgrims weede to Saint Gregories table of hoſpitality, *Rhemiſt annot.Hebr.13.ſect.*2.

Iohn 4.23.

21 *Sweare not by heaven, it is the Lords ſeate, nor by the earth, it is the Lords footſtoole, Math.*5. *The place where thou ſtandeſt is holy ground, Exod.*3. Thou haſt knowne the holy Scriptures of a child, 2 *Tim.*3. 15. The very letters of Scripture are called holy, becauſe of the holy contents. Ergo, alſo images of Saints, becauſe they are ſignes of holy things, are to be reverenced and worſhipped, Bellarm. de imaginibus Sanctor. libr. 2*. cap.*12. And theſe with the like are their ſtout arguments for the adoration of Images.

Math.5.34. Exod.3.5. 2 Tim.3.15.

22 The Prophet commanded Naaman to waſh himſelfe ſeven times, 2 *King.*5. The Altar muſt be cleanſed ſeven daies, *Exod.*29.37. Iob offered ſeven Bullocks and ſeven Rammes for his friends, Iob 42. So in the Apocalyps, ſeven Churches, ſeven Angells, ſeven Starres, ſeven Candleſtickes, ſeven Thunders, and the like. Ergo, there are ſeven Sacraments, *Bellarm. de Sacrament. lib.2. cap.*26. *Rhemiſt. annot. Apocal. ſect.*3.

23 *Act.*8. 17. They did lay their hands upon them, and they received the holy Ghoſt. Ergo, confimation,

Acts 8.17.

Acts19.6. which is only by laying on of hands, is a Sacrament, Acts 19.6. Paul laid his hands upon them, and the holy Ghoſt came upon them, and they ſpake with tongues, Ergo, a Sacrament of confirmation, Bellarm. de Sacrament. Confirmat. lib. 2. cap. 2.

24 God is able to bring a Camell through the eye of a needle, Math. 20.26. Chriſt came in unto his Apoſtles the dores being ſhut, roſe out of his grave, the ſtone lying upon it: Ergo, he may as well, and is preſent bodily in the Euchariſt, Rhemiſt. Math. 26. ſect. 11. Bellarm. lib. 3. de Sacram. cap. 6. Chriſt transfigured his body in the mount, Math. 17. he turned water into wine, Iohn 2. Appeared to Saul out of heaven, Acts 9. Ergo, he may as well be preſent in the Sacrament, and conſequently is, Rhemiſt. Iohn 2. ſect. 2. Acts 9. ſect. 1.

25 Gen.24.18. Ierem.33.18. For the ſacrifice of the Maſſe they reaſon thus: Prov. 9.1. Wiſdome hath built her an houſe, ſlaine her victualls, and drawne her wine: Melchiſedech brought forth bread and wine to Abraham, Geneſ. 14. The Prieſts and Levites ſhall not want a man, to offer burnt offerings continually, Ierem. 33.18. Ergo, there is a ſacrificing prieſthood under the Goſpell, and the Maſſe is properly a ſacrifice; Bellarm. lib. 1. de Miſſa. cap. 6. 9. But here they have proved nothing, unleſſe they ſay, that the Maſſe is a burnt offering, or that therein there is an oblation of bread and wine, which they will not grant.

26 Iohn 4.23. Acts 13.2. Likewiſe they reaſon out of the new Teſtament: as Iohn 4. Chriſt ſaith, The houre commeth, when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip my Father in ſpirit and truth, Acts 13.2. As they miniſtred and faſted, the holy Ghoſt ſaid, Separate mee Paul and Barnabas. Chriſt alſo ſaid, Hoc facite, Doe this in remembrance of mee. In all theſe places, by worſhipping, miniſtring, doing, wee muſt underſtand ſacrificing: Ergo, the maſſe is truly and properly a ſacrifice, Bellarm. cap. 11. 12, 13.

27 Iob offered ſacrifice unto God for his friends, Iob 42. Ergo, the Maſſe a ſacrifice propitiatory: Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 2.

28 1 Tim.2.1. 1 Timoth. 2.1. I exhort (ſaith the Apoſtle) that firſt of all ſupplications, prayers, and giving of thanks be made for all men, for Kings, and for all that are in authority, that wee may leade a quiet and a godly life, Ergo, the Maſſe is a ſacrifice availeable for the obtaining of temporall bleſsings, for theſe are the ſupplications which are made in the Maſſe, Bellarm. lib. 2. de Miſſa, cap. 3.

29 Chriſt hanging upon the Croſſe, uttered but ſeven ſhort ſentences in the hearing of thoſe that ſtood by, for the ſpace of three houres, all the while beſide holding his peace: Ergo, the Prieſt at Maſſe is not bound to utter all the Canon with a loud and audible voyce, lib. 2. cap. 12.

30 Pſal.141.1. The Prophet David ſaith, Let my prayer be directed before thee as incenſe, Pſal. 141.1. Ergo, cenſing and burning of incenſe is to be uſed in the Maſſe, Bellarm. lib. 1. de Miſſa, cap. 15.

31 For auricular confeſsion, they bring theſe and ſuch like arguments: Adam and Eva confeſſed their ſinnes unto God, Gen. 3. and Cain alſo, Gen. 4. At the voice of Chriſt, Lazarus came forth of the Grave, and was looſed by his Apoſtles from his grave-cloathes, Iohn 11. So men confeſsing their ſinnes to the Prieſts, by them receive abſolution: Ergo, auricular confeſsion neceſſary with particular enumeration of ſinnes.

It were too long to heape together, either all, or moſt of thoſe childiſh and wanton arguments, whereby our adverſaries do rather dally than diſpute with us, miniſtring rather matter of ſport and laughter, than enforcing any ſound perſwation of their cauſe. But by theſe, which wee have ſeene we may geſſe of the reſt. Let indifferent men now judge, whether we may may not juſtly ſay unto them (their proofes and arguments being ſo weake, and hanging ſo evill together, as Irenæus objected to the Heretickes) that they make a rope of ſand. All the world beginneth to ſee their nakedneſſe and beggery, what ſlight arguments, what looſe conjectures, what poore ſhifts they uſe: and how in moſt of their chiefe queſtions, they are faine to begge ſome helpe of the Iewes, and runne to their beggarly ceremonies, as Saint Paul calleth them, for ſuccour: It ſhall not be amiſſe to ſee a few examples of this matter.

1 Papiſts borrow of the Iewes. Marke 7.9. To prove their traditions beſide Scripture, they alleage the unwritten traditions of the Iewes, Bellarmine de verb. lib. 4. cap. 8. And yet we reade of no ſuch authenticall traditions which they had, but thoſe which were unlawfull and ſuperſtitious, condemned by our Saviour Chriſt, Mark. 7. 9. Yee reject the Commandements of God, to obſerve your owne traditions.

2 Heb.4.15. & 9.24. They ground the uſurped monarchie of the Pope over the whole Church, upon the example of the high Prieſthood in the Law, which was a type and figure of Chriſt, and in him accompliſhed, Hebr. 4. 15. and 9. 24. Bellarm. de pontif. lib. 1. cap. 9.

3 The name of Clerkes or Cleargie men Bellarmine deriveth from the Iewes: amongſt whom the Levites were ſaid to be the Lords lot and inheritance, Numb. 18. Bellarm. lib 1. de Clericis, cap. 2. And thus hee would bring in a legall and Iudaicall difference betweene the Miniſters of the Goſpell and the people, as there was betweere the Levites and the other tribes: Whereas before the Lord there is no difference betweene them in that reſpect; for they are all, both people and Paſtors, the Lords inheritance and lot, 1 Peter 5.3. 1 Peter 5.3.

4 The ſingle life of the Cleargy he would prove by the example of the Prieſts in the Law, who when their courſe came to ſacrifice, ſeparated themſelves from their wives, Bellar. de Cleric. lib. 1. c. 19. But who ſeeth not that this was a legall ſanctity only, repreſenting the integrity and purity of the true and perfect Prieſt, Chriſt Ieſus: for otherwiſe by the ſame reaſon, they may exact the like abſtinence of all Chriſtian people, becauſe all Iſrael was commanded to keepe from their wives three daies, before the Lord appeared in Sinai, Exod. 19.

5. 35 Vowes and Monkerie proved by the example of the Nazarites and Rhecabites, amongſt the Iſraelites, Bellarm. de Monach. lib. 1. cap. 5.

6 Their lenten faſt warranted by Moſes and Elias, forty daies faſt, Rhemiſt. Math. 4 .ſect. 2.

7 They ſay the Temples of Chriſtians ought to be built, ad ſimilitudinem templi Salomonis, after the ſimilitude and patterne of Salomons Temple, Bellarm. lib. 3. de cultu Sanctor. cap. 3.

8 Their conſecrated oyle, ſalt, water, aſhes, and ſuch trumpery, they would warrant by the like ceremonies uſed in the Law, as the ſalt water, Numb. 5. the water mingled with aſhes, Numb. 19. Bellarm. de cultu Sanctor. lib. 3. cap. 7.

9 The Chriſme, which is uſed in the popiſh Church, in confirmation, brought in by ſuperſtitious imitation of the holy ointment, whereby the Prieſts and the Tabernacle were anointed in the Law, Bellarm. de Sacrament. Confirm. lib. 2. cap. 8.

10. 40 The Maſſe a ſacrifice propitiatory, becauſe the Iewes had ſacrifices for ſinne, Levit. 4. 5. Bellarm. de Miſſa, lib. 2. cap. 2. As though all thoſe ſacrifices were not types and figures of one only propitiatory ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the Croſſe. Levit.4. 5.

11 Their private Maſſes, wherein the Prieſt receiveth alone, the people ſtanding by, authoriſed by the practice of the Prieſts in the Law, who ſacrificed within, and the people waited without, Bellar. ibid. cap. 9. As though the vaile of the Temple was not rent aſunder in the paſsion of Chriſt, which before kept the people from the ſight of the holy things: and now the Papiſts would draw the curtaine before their eyes ſtill.

12 Popiſh Maſsing garments invented to reſemble the coſtly attire of the high Prieſt in the Law, Bellarm. de Miſſa. lib. 2. cap. 15. Whoſe rich ornaments and beautifull attire, were evident types and figures of the ſpirituall beauty and excellency of the Kingdome and Prieſthood of Chriſt, Pſalme 45. 9. 13, 14.

13 The ſuperſtitious dedication of their Churches, they borrow from the practice of people under the Law: as the Church was ſolemnly dedicated in Salomons time, in Ezra his daies, 2 Chron. 7. Ezra 6. and by the Machabees, 1 Michab. cap. 4. And therefore Chriſtian Churches ought to be dedicated in like ſort, Bellarm. de cultu Sanctor. lib. 3. cap. 5. whereas it is certaine, that the ſolemne dedication of the Iewiſh temple, was a lively reſemblance of the dedication of the true Tabernacle, which was the body of Chriſt, Heb. 8. 2. And of the new and living way, dedicated unto us by the vaile, that is, his fleſh, Heb. 10. 20. And yet never did the Iewes uſe halfe thoſe ceremonies (but ſuch toyes none at all) in dedicating the temple, as Papiſts doe in hallowing of theirs: Such are the burning of Tapers, picturing of Croſſes upon the walls, ſprinckling of water, and of aſhes upon the pavement, making of Characters: The Iewes themſelves would bluſh to behold ſuch things, Bellarm. ibid. Hebr. 8. 2. Heb. 10. 20.

14 The adorning of their Churches, with images, croſſes, veſtiments of ſilver, gold, ſilke, precious ſtone, their gorgeous and ſumptuous buildings, warranted by the example of Salomons Temple, which was beautifull both within and without, Bellarm. ibid. cap. 6. yet they might have knowne this, that the beauty and glory of the firſt houſe did ſhadow forth unto the Iewes the ſpirituall comlineſſe and excellency of the laſt houſe, that is, the Church of God under Chriſt, Haggeus 2. 10. And ſo ſaith the Prophet Eſay, ſpeaking of the ſpirituall Temple: I will lay thy ſtones with the Carbuncle, and thy foundations with Saphirs, cap. 54. 11. Hagg. 2. 10.

Yet wee deny not, but that the externall Churches alſo of Chriſtians ought to be built, and adorned with moderate coſt, after a decent and comely ſort.

15 The Prieſts in the Law, were to judge of leprous perſons, and to diſcerne their leproſie, Levit. 13. 14. Therefore Chriſtians are now alſo bound to make particular confeſsion and enumeration of their ſinnes in the eares of the Prieſts, Bellarm. de pœnitent. lib. 3. cap. 3. Yet the Prieſts were not to take knowledge of every infirmity or diſeaſe, but of this contagious and infectious kinde: how then can they hence conclude, that the knowledge of all ſinnes, both great and ſmall, belongeth to the Prieſt? And who knoweth not, that herein the Prieſthood of the Law, did decypher the Prieſthood of Chriſt, by whom our ſpirituall leproſies are diſcerned and cured? Levit. 13. 14.

16 Nay, they doe not content themſelves with an apiſh imagination of Iewiſh ceremonies, but they alſo borrow from the corrupt practice of the Iewes, and the erroneous gloſſes of their blind Rabbins, certaine points of their Pope Catholike Doctrine: as they allow prayer for the dead, by that preſident of Iudas Machabeus, 2 Machab. 12. 14. other points alſo of their popiſh faith, as concerning merits, free-will, invocation of Saints, traditions, beſide Scripture and ſuch like, they would warrant by the practice of the Iewiſh ſynogogue, and the allowance of ſome of their Rabbins, as the compilers of the Apologie for the Romane faith, out of Proteſtants, labour to prove.

Contra. 1. That place objected, is cited out of a booke not held of the Iewes themſelves to be Canonicall, and is rejected by Proteſtants out of the canon, according to the judgement of the ancient Fathers, and the purer ages of the Church: 2. The place is corrupted in the Latin tranſlation, which readeth, he ſent twelve thouſand drachmes of ſilver —— to be offered for a ſacrifice for the ſinne of the dead: whereas in the Greeke originall two thouſand onely are mentioned, and the word dead is omitted. 3. It ſeemeth, that the abridger of this hiſtory, added this of his owne, for neither Ioſeph, Ben Gorion, that writ five bookes in Hebrew of this matter, remembreth any ſuch thing to have beene done by Iudas Macchabeus, lib.3.cap.19. Nor yet Flavius Ioſephus, in his booke of antiquities, writing the ſame hiſtory, lib.12.cap.12. 4. And further, if this place were of any authority, it would juſtifie the praying for thoſe which die in mortall and damnable ſinnes, without any ſigne of repentance, as theſe did, who being dead, were found to have Iewells conſecrate to the Idolls of the Iamnites, which was a manifeſt tranſgreſsion of the Law. 5. And concerning their opinions borrowed of the Rabbins, we allow them to be fit maſters of their faith: If the blind leade the blind, both fall in- Math. 15. 14. to the ditch, as our bleſſed Saviour ſaith, and ſo it commeth to paſſe here: for theſe traditions, and doctrines of the Rabbins, contrary to the Scriptures, are the very ſame reproved by our bleſſed Saviour Marke 7. 7. in thoſe times: They worſhip for doctrine the commandements of men: and ſo Hierome teſtifieth, that the Iewiſh traditions, which the Lord reproved, had their beginning from R. Sammai Hille, Achaba, Epiſtol. ad Algaſ. q. 10. and ſome others, not long before the birth of Chriſt, which they call δευτερωσεις ſecond gloſſes or Libro de verb. expoſitions: and this Bellarmine alſo confeſſeth: againſt theſe traditions there is extant a conſtitu- Dei cap.10. ſſ. ſtitution of Iuſtinian in theſe words: Quæ deuteroſis, quaſi ſecundaria traditio ab ipſis dicitur, in uni- Hycronym. verſum interdicimus, ut quæ ſacris libris comprehenſa non ſit, neque deſuper tradita per Prophetas, &c. that Novel.146. which is called of them deuteroſis as a ſecond tradition, we forbid in generall, as not being comprehended in the ſacred bookes, nor moreover delivered by the Prophets, but containeth certaine things excepted by men, ſavoring of terrene things, and not at all of divine, &c.

Laſtly, the Papiſts doe farre exceed the Church of the Iewes, in number of ceremonies, but in lightneſſe and vanity of ſuch childiſh toyes, the Iewes never came neere them, or were once like un- 47. 17 to them. We will give one inſtance of the ceremonies uſed in baptiſme: First, they touch the eares Popiſh baptiſme full of toyes. and the noſtrels with ſpettle of the party baptized, that his eares may be opened to heare the word, and his noſtrells to diſcerne betweene the ſmell of good and evill. Secondly, the Prieſt ſigneth his eyes, eares, mouth, breſt, forehead, with the ſigne of the croſſe, that all his ſenſes thereby may be defended. Thirdly, hallowed ſalt is put into his mouth, that hee may be ſeaſoned with wiſdome, and kept from putrifying in ſinne. Fourthly, the party is anointed with oile on his breſt, that he may be ſafe from evill ſuggeſtions; and betweene the ſhoulders, which ſignifieth the receiving of ſpirituall ſtrength. Fifthly, hee is anointed with the Chriſme in the top of the head, and thereby is become a Chriſtian. Sixthly, a white garment is put upon him to betoken his regeneration. Seventhly, a vaile is put vpon his head, in token that he is now crowned with a royall Diademe. Eightly, a burning taper is put into his hand, to fulfill that ſaying of the Goſpel, Let your light ſhine before men, Bellar. lib.1. de Baptiſm.cap.26.27. I report mee now to the Iewes, if ever they uſed ſuch toyes, or doe to Epiſt.119. cap. 19. this day in any of their rites and ceremonies; So that we may juſtly ſay with Auguſtine, Ipſam religionem oneribus premunt, ut tolerabilior ſit conditio Iudæorum, qui legalib. ſarcinis non humanis præſumptionibus ſubijciuntur: They cumber Religion with their burthenſome inventions: ſo that the Iewes caſe was more tolerable, (than theirs that live under popery) who were ſubject only to legall ceremonies, not to the inventions of men. And thus wee ſee the weakneſſe of popiſh religion, and feebleneſſe of their cauſe, who through very beggery are conſtrained to patch up their tattered garments with Iewes ragges. Thus much for the firſt part. Now to the next.

The ſecond part of this Pillar, concerning the inſufficient Anſwers and Solutions of our adverſaries.

AS moſt of the arguments which our adverſaries uſe againſt the common cauſe of the Goſpell, and the truth, doe very feebly and weakely conclude any thing againſt us: ſo their anſwers likewiſe, which they ſhape unto ſuch arguments, as they are preſſed withall, are very ſimple, and doe bewray the weakneſſe of their cauſe. Some particulars for example ſake we will ſee.

Being urged concerning prayers in an unknowne tongue, with that place of Saint Paul; If I 1Cor.14.14. pray in an unknowne tongue, my ſpirit prayeth, but mine underſtanding is without fruit, 1 *Corinth.*14.14. That is, ſuch prayers are unprofitable to the Church, which it underſtandeth not. They anſwer, that publike prayer is made unto God, not to the people: and it is enough, if God underſtand, though the people underſtand not, Bellarmin. de verbo Dei, lib.2.cap.16. Object. 2. A very abſurd anſwer: For, if it were ſufficient that God underſtandeth publike prayers, they need not to be uttered with the voyce, but conceived onely in the heart, the thoughts whereof are as well underſtood of God, as the words of the mouth. And the Apoſtle reaſoneth cleane contrary, ſhewing that the unlearned cannot ſay Amen to prayers not underſtood, verſ.16. Ergo, the underſtanding alſo of the people is neceſſary.

2 Whereas we alleage that place, Apoc.22.18. If any man ſhall adde unto theſe things, God ſhall adde, &c. Apoc.22.18. To preve the Scriptures to be ſufficient, and to containe all neceſſary matter to ſalvation, and that nothing ought to be added to them to ſupply their wants. Their anſwer is, that Iohn doth only forbid any addition to be made to that Booke, Bellarm. de verbo Dei, lib.4. cap.10. reſp. ad ſecund. Deut.4.2.12. object. whereas notwithſtanding the ſame ſentence is pronounced elſewhere, generally of the whole Prov.30.6. word of God, that nothing muſt be added to it, Deut.4.2.12.32. Prov.30.6.

3 We againe reaſon thus, The whole Scripture is profitable to teach, to improve, &c : as S. Paul ſaith, 2. Timoth. 3. 16: therefore the Scriptures containe all things neceſſary to ſalvation, we need no other helps. Their anſwer is, that Saint Paul ſaith not, the Scriptures onely are ſufficient to theſe purpoſes, but that they do, ad hac omnia prodeſſe & juvare, they do profit and help towards theſe purpoſes, Bellarmine ibid. As though it followeth not in the ſame place, *that the man of God may be abſolute, being made perfect to all good worke, v.*17. If the Scriptures then worke an abſolute perfection in men touching the former duties, then are they not only profitable, but ſufficient.

2 Tim. 3. 16.

4 To prove, that although Chriſt, in the very firſt moment of his conception, was perfect God and perfect man, yet as man received not at once the fulneſſe of wiſedome, but grew up, and increaſed therein daily, we urge that place in Luke : And Ieſus increaſed in wiſedome and ſtature, cap. 2. 52. They anſwer, he did encreaſe opinione hominum, onely in the opinion of men : whereas it followeth in plaine and direct words in the text, He increaſed in the forenamed graces, *both with God and men. Bellarmin. de Chriſti anima, lib.*4.*cap.*5. reſp. ad 3. locum.

Luk. 2. 52.

5 To that place, Mark. 13. 32. Of that day and houre knoweth no man, no not the Angels which are in Heaven, neither the Sonne himſelfe ſave the Father: which words plainely ſhew, that Chriſt as man onely knoweth not the time of his comming to judgement: They frame this anſwer, Non ſcit ad dicendum aliys : The ſonne of man is ſaid not to know it, that is, to declare it to others, but to keep it ſecret to himſelfe, Bellar. ibid. This anſwer is very inſufficient : for as the Son knoweth it not, ſo neither doe the Angels: if the Son be ſaid, not to know it to tell others, and yet knoweth it in himſelfe : ſo likewiſe the Angels ſhould know to themſelves, though not for others. But I thinke, they will not ſay, that the houre of Chriſts comming is revealed to the Angels. Againe, as the Son is ſaid not to know it, ſo the Father is ſaid to know it ; if the Sonne onely know it not, to reveale it to others, then the Father knoweth it, to the intent he ſhould declare it to others : but never yet was it declared to any creature, nor ever ſhall, till Chriſt ſuddenly appeare in the cloudes.

Mark. 13. 32.

6 Whereas S. Peter ſaith, Whom God raiſed up, looſing the ſorrowes of Hell (as the Rhemiſts tranſlate) Chriſt, they ſay, looſed other men from thoſe dolours of hell : *Rhemiſt. in eum locum: Bellarm. de Chriſt. lib.*4.*cap.*8. yet it followeth, becauſe it was impoſſible for him to be holden of it: theſe ſorrows therfore were looſed, which Chriſt was in for a while, but could not be long kept there, namely, the ſorrowes of death, as we doe reade agreable to the Greeke text, not the ſorrowes of hell: It is therefore but a childiſh ſhift which they uſe, and contrary to the ſenſe and words of the text.

7 Being urged with that ſcape that Peter made, Galath. 2. for the which he was reproved of Paul, they ſhoote out theſe words, Sine dubio peccatum illud aut veniale, ac leviſſimum fuit. Either it was a veniall and moſt light offence, or he offended only materially: that is: erratum quoddam fuit, ſed abſq, Petri culpa: an error was committed, but without any fault at all of Peters, Bellar. de pontif. lib. 1. 28. A moſt groſſe and abſurd anſwer. Firſt, S. Paul ſaith, he withſtood Peter to the face, that is, openly and plainly rebuked him, and not without juſt cauſe, for he was to be blamed, Galat. 2. 11. Secondly, Peters faul was, that he conſtrained the Gentiles to do like the Iewes, v 14. And by his example he cauſed the Iewes and Barnabas to diſſemble: Is diſſimulation then ſo ſmall an offence? or was it ſo light a fault, to conſtraine the Gentiles Iudaizare, to play the Iewes? or was Paul ſo undiſcreet, ſo ſharply to reprove ſo worthy an Apoſtle for ſo ſmall a fault? Thirdly, what doctrine is this, that a man may ſinne, and not be guilty of ſinne, may do a fault, and not bee faulty ? as though ſinnes, committed ignorantly and unwittingly, doe not bring a guilt with them; albeit not ſo great and heinous, as ſinnes willingly done: For to what end elſe were ſacrifices appointed in the law for ſins of ignorance, *Levit.*4.

Gal. 2. 11, 14.

8 Where wee alleage the example of Saint Paul, that appealed unto Cæſar, ſaying thus, I ſtand at Cæſars judgement ſeate where I ought to be judged, Acts 25. 10. to prove that as Paul, ſo Peter and his ſucceſſors were ſubject to the terrene and ſecular power of the Emperors. Their anſwere is, that there is not the like reaſon of Heathen and Chriſtian governours : for unto them, even the chiefe Biſhop was ſubject in civill cauſes : but when Princes became Chriſtians, they then were to ſubmit themſelves to the Pope, as ſheepe to the ſhepheard. *Bellarm. de Rom. pontif. lib.*2. cap. 29. A worthy anſwere: as though the Goſpel did abridge the lawfull authority of Princes: for if it were the right of heathen Emperours to be ſupreme judges of al perſons: (otherwiſe the Apoſtle would not voluntarily have appealed to an unlawfull and uſurped power:) Much more may Chriſtian Princes chalenge the ſame right. They cannot anſwer, that Cæſar had his power by uſurpation : for the Apoſtle was not compelled thereunto, but made free choice of Cæſar to be his judge.

Acts 25. 10.

9 To prove that it is not lawfull nor convenient for one and the ſame man to be both an Eccleſiaſticall and temporall prince : We bring forth theſe and ſuch like places of Scripture, It is not meete we ſhould leave the word of God, and ſerve tables. Acts 6. 2. No man that goeth a warfare, entangleth himſelfe with ſecular buſineſſe, 2 Timoth. 2. They anſwere us, that it is not meete an Eccleſiaſticall perſon ſhould attend upon baſe offices, as to be a Cater or provider of victuals, to bee occupied in buying and ſelling, and ſuch like, *Bellar. de pontif. lib.*5.*cap.*10. But they have ſaid juſt nothing: for who ſeeth not that theſe ſecular affaires are forbidden not ſo much becauſe of their baſeneſſe or vilenes, or becauſe they are lets and impediments unto the paſtorall function? Now it is moſt plaine and evident, that the charge and care of civil government, are as great, nay a greater diſtraction of the mind, than the executing of ſmaller and baſer offices,and require greater ſtudy and induſtry, and therefore doe as well, nay,much rather hinder and let the progreſſe of ſpirituall matters. And yet further to ſhew what a frivolous and feeble anſwer they have made,our Saviour Chriſt ſaith,to put all out of doubt, Who made mee a Iudge,or a divider over you? Luke 12.14. They will not ſay (I trow) that theſe are baſe and vile offices,to be a Iudge of controverſies,and a divider of lands and hereditaments,and to give unto every man his owne: yet even theſe principall prerogatives of civill government our Saviour doth refuſe, as unfit to be matched with the preaching of the Goſpell.

Acts 6. 2.

Luk.12.41.

Acts 10.26.

10 Whereas we inferre upon Peters example, *Act.*10.26. who forbad Cornelius to worſhip him, that Saints and holy men are not therefore to be adored with any religious worſhip: It is anſwered, that Cornelius did well, and as he ought, in worſhipping Peter: but Peter of modeſty refuſed to take it at his hands, *Bellarm.de Sanct.lib.*1.*cap.*14. Yea,but Peter rendereth a reaſon: For I am alſo a man, *verſ.*26.inſinuating,that ſuch religious worſhip belonged unto God, not unto man: If it be then a point of modeſty only for the creature to refuſe that homage which is due to the Creator, then was this modeſty in Peter.

1Cor.10.4.

11 That there was and is,one and the ſelfe-ſame ſubſtance both of the Sacraments of the old Teſtament, and of ours, we prove it by S. Pauls words: They all did eate of the ſame ſpirituall meat, and did all drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke, 1 *Corinth.*10.4. Anſwer is made, that they did eate and drinke the ſame ſpirituall meate and drinke amongſt themſelves, not the ſame with us, *Bellarm. de Sacram.lib.*2.*cap.*17, which is but a vaine ſhift: for the Apoſtle addeth, They dranke of the ſpirituall Rocke that followed them, and the Rocke was Chriſt, *verſ.*4. Now,Chriſt is the ſame ſpirituall Rocke both unto us, and unto them: not unto them onely among themſelves,or to us onely, but both unto them, and unto us.

Luke 3.3.
Acts 2.38.
Rom.6.4.
Math.3.6.
Luke 3.1.

12 That the baptiſme of Iohn, and the baptiſme of Chriſt, was one and the ſame in ſubſtance, and of the ſame efficacy and force,wee prove it thus: Iohns baptiſme was the baptiſme of repentance for remiſsion of ſinnes: *Luk.*3.3. So alſo was the baptiſme of Chriſt: Repent and be baptized every one of you,in the name of Ieſus Chriſt,for the remiſſion of ſinnes: *Act.*2.38. Ergo, there was the ſame fruit and effect of each baptiſme. They doe anſwer us thus: No, ſaith the Ieſuite,there is not the like reaſon of both,for repentance went before Chriſts baptiſme as a neceſſary preparation thereunto,but it followed Iohns baptiſme, as an effect thereof: *Bellarm.de baptiſ.lib.*1 *cap.*23. This anſwer is too vaine and frivolous,for in repentance are two things,the purpoſe of heart, *Act.*11.23.and the amendment of life, which conſiſteth in being buried and dead unto ſinne, and riſing up to the newneſſe of life, *Rom.*6.4. This purpoſe and vow of heart,with confeſsion of ſinnes, went as well before Iohns baptiſme as Chriſts: for the people firſt came and confeſſed their ſins, and then were baptized of Iohn: *Math.*3.6.*Luk.*3.12. And as for amendment of life,which is the accompliſhment and fruit of repentance, it neither went before Iohns baptiſme,nor Chriſts: not Iohns, by their owne confeſsion, not Chriſts,for in the ſame inſtant,that the Apoſtle ſaid, Repent and be baptized: *Act.*2. They were baptized,ſo that the time ſerved them not to ſhew the fruits of repentance:and by baptiſme we are buried unto ſin,and raiſed up to newneſſe of life, Rom 6.4. But the fruits and efficacy of baptiſme goeth not before, but followeth after: thus the vanity of their anſwer is vaniſhed and blowne away.

Ioh,6.53.
Ioh.3.5.
Baptiſme no more neceſſary, than the Euchariſt by their owne confeſſion.

13 Whereas we object that ſaying of Chriſt, Except yee eate my fleſh,and drinke my blood,yee have no life in you, Iohn 6.53. That it cannot be underſtood of the Euchariſt,as our adverſaries doe expound all ſuch places in that chapter, for then no man could be ſaved without this ſacrament, which were an abſurd and hard ſaying: And ſo both infants, which are not fit to receive it, and all ſuch as are prevented by ſome remedileſſe neceſsity, ſhould be cut off from the hope of ſalvation: They anſwer thus: firſt,that the place is to be underſtood only of thoſe that are Adulti,of yeeres of diſcretion,not of infants. And againe,all men are bound either to communicate, reipſa, aut deſiderio, either in very deed,or elſe in vow and deſire, *Bellar.de ſacr.Euchar.lib.*1.*ca.*7.*reſp.ad argu.*4. This anſwer is like unto the reſt,very inſufficient,and may be turned upon themſelves; for whereas they urge the neceſsity of baptiſme out of theſe words of our Saviour, Except a man be borne of water, and the Spirit, hee cannot enter into the Kingdome of heaven, *Ioh.*3.5. May it not as well be anſwered, that children alſo are excluded here,as in the other place? for the words are in both places generally ſpoken without exception. Againe,Chriſt ſaith, Except yee eate: If this may be done in vow and deſire,that is,ſpiritually,which we affirme & grant, then it is not meant of the Sacramentall eating only,as the Papiſts beare us in hand,and ſo they are contrary to themſelves: Laſty,if it be neceſſary to receive the Euchariſt either actually and in deed, or in vow and deſire (which is moſt true.) There is the like neceſsity thereof,as of baptiſme: For the Rhemiſts confeſſe as much, that they before God are accepted as baptized, that depart this life with vow and deſire to have this ſacrament, but by ſome remedileſſe neceſſity could not obtaine it, Annot. Ioh. 3.*ſect.*2. Thus baptiſme by their owne confeſsion is proved to be no more neceſſary than the other Sacrament: and ſo are they taken with their owne wiles.

1 Cor.10.16.
1 Cor.11.26.

14 Againſt the reall preſence in the Euchariſt, amongſt other arguments, wee doe bring forh this: Saint Paul in divers places, calleth the Sacrament bread after conſecration: as 1 *Cor.*10.16. The bread which we breake, is it not the communion of the body of Chriſt? And chap. 11.26. As often as yee ſhall eate this bread, and drinke this cup, yee ſhew the Lords death till hee come.

The Apoſtle calleth it bread, Ergo,it is bread,not the body, fleſh or blood of Chriſt. To this argument, ment, they make us this anſwer: The Apoſtle calleth it bread, becauſe it was bread before, or becauſe it appeareth to be bread, not that it is bread, Bellar. de Euchariſt. lib. 1. cap. 14. reſponſ. ad loc 13. Yea, but the Apoſtle maketh mention together, both of the bread and cup: if it be called bread, becauſe of the appearance only; then by the like reaſon ſo is the cup: and as there is no bread indeed, ſo there ſhall be no cup. Againe ſaith he, The bread which we breake; but the ſhape or forme of bread cannot be broken, but the ſubſtance. Neither will they ſay, that Chriſts body is devided or broken: therefore it is true bread which the Apoſtle ſo calleth. Laſtly, if they like this ſpeech of the Apoſtle, that he ſhould call it bread after conſecration, how commeth it to paſſe, that they are afraid to call it bread in the Canon of the Maſſe, but the Body of Chriſt only? It ſhould ſeeme therefore by their practiſe, that they miſlike the Apoſtles phraſe and manner of ſpeech.

15 Ioh. 6. 53. That the Euchariſt ought to be miniſtred in both kinds, we confirme it out of that place, Ioh. 6. 53. Except ye eat the fleſh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his bloud, ye have no life in you: which our adverſaries expound of the Euchariſt. Their anſwere is thus: that here the conjunction or particle, &, and, muſt be taken after the phraſe of Scripture, for the disjunctive, vel, either: as if the ſenſe were this: except you either eate or drinke, Bellar. de Euchar. lib. 4. cap. 25. by this reaſon, they make it a thing indifferent, either to eate or drinke, to doe any one of them: and ſo, as the people doe onely eate in the Sacrament amongſt them, and not drinke; the contrary cuſtome alſo may be brought in, for the people to drinke onely, and not to eate, which I thinke they will be loath to grant.

Iohn 3.5. Againe, where they preſſe us for the neceſſity of Baptiſme with that place, Ioh. 3. 5. Except a man be borne of water and the Spirit: we can anſwer them with their owne words: and in this place, &, is taken for either, vel, as if it were ſaid, Every man muſt be borne either of water or of the Spirit. Although we have better anſwers, and are not driven to uſe any ſuch ſhift, yet thus they do make rods for themſelves to be whipt withall.

16 Whereas we thus reaſon, that the Euchariſt ought to be miniſtred in both kinds, becauſe the death of Chriſt cannot otherwiſe be lively ſhewed forth, but both by eating & drinking in remembrance of Chriſt: The Ieſuite boldly anſwereth, that a ſufficient commemoration may be made by receiving only in one kind, Bellar. de Sacram. Euchar. lib. 4. c. 27. cleane contrary to S. Paul, who ſaith: As often as ye ſhall eate this bread, and drinke this Cup, ye ſhew the Lords death till he come, 1 Cor. 11. 26. To remember and ſhew forth the death of Chriſt, he requireth receiving in both kinds. 1 Cor. 11. 26.

17 1 Tim. 3. 11. That the mariage of Miniſters, is authorized by the word of God, we prove out of S. Paul, 1 Tim. 3. 11. who having firſt deſcribed the office of Biſhops and Paſtors of the Church, & what manner of men they ought to be, commeth afterwards to ſet forth the qualities and conditions that ſhould be in their wives: That they ſhould be honeſt, ſober and faithful. The Ieſuit here telleth us, that the Apoſtle meaneth ſuch, as had been their wives before they were ordained, l. 1. de cleric. c. 20. Anſw. I wil aske them then one queſtion: Their former wives maried before, did they renounce them afterward, or retaine them? If they renounced them, what need had the Apoſtle to be ſo careful in ſetting downe rules & precepts for their wives? for it was no more to them, how they demeaned themſelves than other womē. If they retained them in the name of their wives, they either lived together, or apart: not apart, for the Apoſtle preſcribeth an order for the Miniſters houſe and children, ver. 4. But there is no reaſon that the mother ſhould want the comfort of her children, though ſhe enjoied not the company of her husband: It is therfore moſt like the mother lived with her children, and the children with their father: and where elſe then ſhould their mother live, but with their father? If then they lived in one houſe together, how then is ſhe not now his wife as freely, and for all honeſt purpoſes and ends of mariage as before? Who ſeeth not now, how weakly theſe things hang together?

18 1 Cor. 9. 5. And that it is as lawful for the Miniſters of Gods word to marry after their calling to the Miniſtery, as before, we ſhew it by theſe words of the Apoſtle: Have we not power to leade about a ſiſter a wife? 1 Cor. 9. 5. Their anſwer is, that it muſt be read thus, a ſiſter a woman: for certaine devout women followed the Apoſtles which miniſtred unto them of their ſubſtance, Rhemiſt. Annot. in hunc locum. Anſ. But this were a ſuperfluous ſpeech to ſay, a ſiſter a woman, whereas it had been enough to ſay, ſiſter, which word alſo expreſſeth the ſexe. And ſeeing the Apoſtles had wives of their owne, it is an abſurd thing to imagine, that they would chuſe rather to goe in the company of ſtrange women, their owne wives being more neceſſary to attend on them, and more fit for avoiding of offence.

19 Iohn 10. 16. That the hearing and preaching of the word of God, is a neceſſary note of the Church, wee conclude out of our Saviour Chriſts words: Ioh. 10. My ſheepe heare my voice. Bellarmine anſwereth, it is a note whereby a man may gueſſe of his election, to heare the Word of God, but not a viſible note to know the Church by, Bellarmin. de notis eccleſ. lib. 3. cap. 2. A groſſe anſwere, as though whereby a man is knowne to be a true member of the Church, the Church it ſelfe alſo is not known to be a true Church. If one man be knowne to be of the Church, becauſe he obeyeth the voice of Chriſt, why ſhall not a congregation of many men be knowne to bee the Church of God likewiſe by embracing the Word of God?

20 Math. 18. 10. Againe, our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, Whereſoever two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the middeſt, Mat. 18. Hence we conclude, that to aſſemble together in the name of Chriſt, that is, to heare his word, and receive the Sacraments, is a moſt manifeſt note of the true Church. Bellarmine mine anſwereth: this place ſheweth not where the Church is, but where Chriſt is, Bellarm. ibid. A moſt ridiculous and unskilfull anſwer: as though where Chriſt is knowne to be preſent, there is not neceſſarily the Church: for where elſe is he to be found, but in his Church?

21 Chriſt ſaid to Peter, Dic Eccleſiæ, Tell it to the Church; an obſtinate ſinner muſt be referred to the cenſure of the Church: Ergo, Peter and his ſucceſſors are not the ſupreame judges: for here he is referred to the Church. Bellarm. So the Pope doth dicere Eccleſiæ, tell it to the Church, id eſt, ſibi ipſi, that is, he telleth it to himſelfe, lib. de concil. 2. cap. 19. Anſwere. Is not here good ſtuffe? the Pope is now become the whole Church: contrary to the ſenſe of this place: for in cenſuring of offenders we muſt proceede by decreees: firſt, one muſt rebuke him that ſinneth, then two or three; laſt of all it muſt be declared to the Church: ſo then, as two or three are more than one, ſo the Church is more than 2. or 3. But the Pope is not 2. or 3. much leſſe can he ſtand for the whole Church.

22 Epheſ. 1. 20. That the Apoſtles were all equall in authority, we ſhew it out of Saint Paul, Epheſ. 2. 20. where the Church is ſaid to be built upon the foundation of the Apoſtles indifferently. Bellarmine anſwereth: that they had all chiefe authority committed unto them as Apoſtles, but Peter as ordinary paſtor. Anſwer. But the Apoſtleſhip was the higheſt office in the Church. A paſtor or Biſhop was inferior to an Apoſtle: firſt Apoſtles, ſaith Saint Paul, 1 Corinth 12. 28. If then they were equall as Apoſtles, there could be no ſuperiority among them: but ſuch are their fond and childiſh anſwers. 1 Cor. 12. 28.

23 Whereas wee reaſon thus againſt reliques: that therefore the Lord buried the body of Moſes, leaſt the Iſraelites ſhould have worſhipped his body, and ſo committed Idolatry. Bellarmine telleth us, that men are not ſo prone to Idolatry now as the Iſraelites were, and therefore may more ſafely be admitted to worſhip reliques, de Reliqu. Sanct. l. 2. c. 4 Whereas daily experience of popiſh Idolatry ſheweth the contrary: for there was never, no not in the moſt corrupt times of that Church, ſuch groſſe Idolatry and ſuperſtition, and with ſuch boldneſſe committed, and ſo uſually, as is now among Papiſts. And theſe with ſuch like are there anſwers to ſuch places of Scripture, as we bring againſt them. The like anſwers alſo they give us in other matters.

24 Apoc. 13. 18. Whereas we tell them, that this name Latinus in Greeke letters thus, λατεῖνος doth containe the myſticall number of 666. Apoc. 13. The Ieſuite maketh this ſimple anſwer, that Lateinus with e. i. maketh that number, not with ſingle i. Lib. 3. de pontif. cap. 10. Anſ. Herein firſt he ſheweth his ignorace, as though the Greeke diphthong, ei, be not uſually expreſſed by a ſingle i. in Latine. And what if e. be left out? we want but five of the number. But what a poore ſhift is this, we have found out the name of Antichriſt in Latinus ſaving one ſmall letter.

25 Where we tell them, that Rome is the City built upon ſeven hilles: they anſwer us, that it now ſtandeth in a plaine, in Campo Martio, Saunders. A ſilly ſhift. But it is certaine at that time, when Saint Iohn wrote the Apocalyps, that it ſtood upon ſeven hilles, & to this day, there are ancient monuments and goodly buildings, churches, chappels, abbeies, or ſuch like upon every one of thoſe hils.

26 It were too long particularly to ſet downe all their abſurd and anſwerleſſe anſwers, their ſilly ſhifts and ſtarting holes. As whereas Gregory maketh one Scholaſticus author of the Canon of the Maſſe, they anſwer, S. Petrus Scholaſticus dici prteſt, that S. Peter may well be termed a ſchooleman, Bellar. de Miſſ. lib. 2. cap. 19. which is indeed to ſet the ſpirit of God to ſchoole; to ſay that the Apoſtles were brought up in ſchooles.

27 Thus in another place he is conſtrained to grant, that mariage betweene Infidels ought to be after they are baptized, the ſecond time contracted and ſolemnized, Bellar. de Matrim. lib. 1: 5. as though they had lived in adultery before: for if the firſt contract were firme, what need a ſecond? and if the firſt contract be diſſolved by baptiſme; then are the parties free to marry where they will. See what an abſurd anſwere is this.

28 Whereas we tell them that Sylveſter the ſecond, was a great conjurer and Necromancer, as it is recorded in authentical ſtories: the Ieſuit thus pretily would excuſe the matter, that becauſe he was well ſeene in Geometry and in the Mathematickes, therefore that rude and unlearned age judged him to be a Sorcerer, Bellar. de pontif. lib. 4: cap. 14.

29 So another telleth us, whereas we worthily upbraid them with that whore-Pope of theirs dame Ioane, that ſate two yeares in Papacy: that the Pope might be an Hermaphrodite, or Herkinalſon, that is, both a man and a woman: or being firſt a man might afterwards be turned into a woman: Copus dialog. 1 p. 47. And all this might be more likely in their opinion, than that a woman ſhould ſtep into the Popes chaire. What now will theſe men be aſhamed to ſpeake or write, that dare utter ſuch follies?

30 It were too long to declare all their ſhifts of deſcant, as we ſay: as when they are preſſed with the authority of ancient writers, whom in words they will ſeeme to make great account of: if they cannot readily finde ſome cavill or other to ſhift it off, they will not ſticke boldly to refuſe and deny them: as where we report the ſtory out of Sozomene, upon what occaſion Nectarius Biſhop of Conſtantinople aboliſhed the cuſtome of auricular confeſsion: Bellarmine ſteppeth in boldly and ſaith, Non ignoramus Sozomena in hiſtoria multa eſſe mentitum: We are not ignorant, that Sozomene hath told many lies in his hiſtory, de pœnitent. lib. 3. cap. 14.

31 Likewiſe in another place the Ieſuite refuſeth Platina, non publica authoritate vitas illas Pontificum ſcripſit. He was not by publike authority allowed, to write the lives of the Popes, de pœnit. l. 3. c. 13.

Benno a Cardinall refuſed, that wrote the ſtory of Gregory the 7. And the Ieſuites looſe conjecture is, that the booke was made by ſome Lutherane: wheras it is manifeſt that the booke is more ancient by almoſt five hundred yeeres, than the name of Luther. Bellarm. de ſum. pontif. lib.4. cap. 13.

34 But thus they deale not only with theſe latter writers, but with the moſt ancient: if Tertullian be alleaged againſt them not to their liking, they cry out that he was an heretike, and wrote this or that in defence of hereſie, Harding detect. 238. Indeed Tertullian had his errors, but yet all that he wrote contrary to them, is not hereſie.

35 Where we cite that ſaying of Cyprian; If the truth faint or faile in any point, wee ought to returne to the originall of our Lord, and to the traditions of the Goſpell; We receive this anſwere: S. Cyprian uſed that ſaying in an evill cauſe: and therefore he defending a falſhood, was driven to the very ſame ſhifts, whereunto all heretickes are driven, defenſ. apolog. pag. 172. Harding. See the boldneſſe of this man: The counſell and commandement of Chriſt, Search the Scriptures, is no better with him than an hereticall ſhift.

36 When we affirme by S. Hieromes teſtimony, that Pope Liberius ſubſcribed to the Arrians, we are ſent away with this ſcornfull anſwer: that Hierome was deceived by a rumor dwelling in the Eaſt, Harding. pag. 661.

37 But that famous learned Father Auguſtine, is moſt uncourteouſly uſed at their hands of all the reſt. The Rhemiſts refuſe Auguſtines expoſition of theſe words in the Goſpell: upon this rocke, &c. Mat. 16. which he expoundeth not of Peters perſon, but of Peters faith, Annot. 16. Mat. 16. ſect. 8.

They likewiſe refuſe his reading, Heb. 11. Iacob worſhipped leaning upon his ſtaffe: but they will needs have it, Iacob worſhipped the top of his ſtaffe: as though Iacob made an Idoll of his ſtaffe, Annot. Heb. 11. verſe 21.

Bellarmine alſo taketh the ſame liberty to reject Auguſtines judgement: as where Auguſtine interpreteth that place of S. Paul, 1 Cor. 3. He ſhall be ſaved as through fire, of the afflictions or tribulations of this life. But the Ieſuite wreſteth the words to ſignifie purgatory, de purgator. lib. 1. cap. 4.

1 Cor.3.15.

And in another place he doth not onely refuſe, but confute at large Auguſtines interpretation of that place of Peter, Epiſt. 1. cap. 3. of the ſpirits now in priſon, which were ſometime diſobedient, de Chriſto, lib. 4. cap. 13.

Likewiſe Bellarmine reprehendeth Auguſtines interpretation of that place, Geneſ. 17. 14. and ſaith he was deceived in following the Greeke text, lib. 2. de effectu ſacram. cap. 17. Alſo he refuſeth Auguſtines interpretation, of thoſe words of Chriſt, upon this Rocke, which he expoundeth of faith: ſaying that Auguſtine was deceived through ignorance of the Hebrew tongue.

Geneſ.17.14.

Yea he doth not onely reject this learned Father, and by argument confute him, but he proceedeth further to charge him with ſome things which he holdeth not: as that Auguſtine ſhould hold the booke called Eccleſiaſticus for a divine and Canonicall booke: whereas he correcteth himſelfe, that howſoever he had formerly called and counted it prophetical: he retracteth it: Non videor recte appellaſſe verba prophetica, (quid ſuperbis terra & cinis?) quia non in ejus libro legitur, quem certi ſcimus appellatum eſſe prophetam: I may ſeeme not rightly to have called thoſe propheticall words (Why art thou proud O duſt and aſhes) becauſe it is not read in his booke, whom we are ſure to have bin called a Prophet. Beſide he avoucheth Auguſtine, that he ſhould make the booke of Wiſedome canonicall, and he citeth, lib. 1. de praedeſtin. c. 14. But Auguſtine in that place ſaith no ſuch thing: for whereas he had alleaged a certaine place concerning Henoch out of the 4. chapter, and he heard, that certain brethren refuſed that teſtimony, tanquam non de libro canonico adhibitum, as not taken out of a canonicall booke: Auguſtine anſwereth no more but this: 1. quaſi & excepta hujus libri atteſtatione, &c: as though excepting the witneſſe of this booke, the matter be not evident of it ſelfe. 2. Oportet ut iſtum librum omnibus tractatoribus anteponant: they muſt preferre this booke before all other writers. &c: he maketh it not canonicall, but giveth it a preheminence before other writings. 3. The moſt that hee ſaith of this booke is this: that the ancient writers when they cited this booke as a witneſſe, Nihil ſe adhibere niſi non divinum teſtimonium crediderunt: thought that they did uſe none other, than a divine teſtimony, &c. he only ſaith, and that, out of other mens opinions, that this booke hath divine ſayings in it: which being confeſſed maketh it not canonicall: for he granteth, that ſome divine things may be found among the heathen: ſi in ipſis poteſt aliquid divinum inveniri: If among the Heathen ſome divine thing may be found, &c. as he giveth inſtance of Oſtanes, Plato, Hermes.

So likewiſe he chargeth Auguſtine to thinke and ſay, that Salomon was reprobate of God, and to be a caſtaway: whereas Auguſtine in that place quoted in Pſalm. 26. hath indeed [a] ſuch words, that Salomon was reprobate of God, but it is evident that he ſpeaketh of his temporall rejection, not of his finall reprobation: as may appeare by theſe reaſons: 1. by whom (ſaith he) multa ſancta praecepta & divina ſacramenta ſpiritus ſanctus in divinis literis operatus eſt: The holy ſpirit in the divine writings wrought many holy precepts and divine ſacraments, &c. how could he have the ſpirit of ſanctification, and be a reprobate? 2. Ipſe Salomon mulierum amator fuit, &c. Salomon was a lover of women, &c. and then follow theſe words: and was reprobate of God: but every lover of women, is not reprobate of God eternally, though for a time he ſeeme to be. 3. What marveil, ſaith he, if Salomon fell among the people of God, in paradiſo non cecidit Adam, did not Adam fall in paradiſe, and the Angell in heaven? &c. Salomon did not fall in the counſell and decree of God, but among the people of God, [a] In another place, whereas I chanced to ſay, I find no ſuch thing in Auguſtine, my meaning is, not in that ſenſe. Retect. p. 199.

Salomon not finally reprobate.

which was but for a time: and as Adam fell who finally was ſaved. 4. Salomon built a temple to the Lord (ſaith Auguſtine) in typo & figura futuræ Eccleſiæ & corporis Domini: in a type and figure of the Church and of the body of the Lord, &c but they cannot ſhew any type or figure of Chriſt appointed of God, that was a caſtaway.

Many ſuch places may be found in Bellarmine, where he aſcribeth to Auguſtine ſome things, which he either affirmeth not at all, or at the leaſt not in his ſenſe: as he ſaith that Auguſtine abſurdiſſimum cenſuit, &c. thought[b] it an abſurd thing, that the hereſie of the Donatiſts after the yeere of the Lord 300. out of Cathage ſhould be propagated into all the world, &c: and he quoteth lib. de unitat. Eccleſ. c. 14. 15. for in this place produced Auguſtine. 1. Neither nameth the hereſie of the Donatiſts. 2. Nor yet uſeth the terme, moſt abſurd. 3. Nor yet maketh mention of the 300. yeere. 4. Neither ſpeaketh of the propagating of the Donatiſts hereſie into all the world, but that they ſhould fooliſhly think, that al others Churches being periſhed in the world, earum reparationem ex Africa per partem Donati, &c. they ſhould bee reſtored and repayred out of Africa by the part or ſect of Donatus, &c. Thus it appeareth evidently, that Auguſtine is here miſ-alleaged, howſoever a certaine popiſh caviller goe about to juſtifie Bellarmine.

In like manner Albertus Pigghius moſt unreverently ſaith of Auguſtine, that he erred and lied, and uſed falſe Logique, in affirming matrimony after a vow made to be perfit, and not to be undone againe. Diſtinct. 27. Quidnam.

38 Sometime they preferre Chryſoſtome before Auguſtine, as interpreting of thoſe words, 1 Cor. 10. They did all eate, eandem eſcam, the ſame meat: which words are expounded by Auguſtine, Tract. 26. in Ioannem. But his expoſition is by Bellarmine refuſed, lib. 1. de Euchar. c. 4 becauſe Auguſtine affirmeth, that they did eate the ſame ſpirituall meate with us.

39 Sometime againe they refuſe Chryſoſtome: as Turriane ſaith, Non bene interpretatum eſſe locum: That he hath not well interpreted a certaine place taken out of the 22. Pſalme: Turrian. tract. 1. cap. 18 fol. 104.

40 Arturus lib. Apolog. 3. c. 25. ſaith that Hierome erred in writing thus: Epiſcoporum ordinem in ſchiſmatis remedium non divino, ſed humano jure inſtitutum: That the order of Biſhops was inſtituted, not by divine, but rather humane law, for a remedy againſt ſchiſme.

41 Bellarmine with one breath ſaith, that Hilarius, Hypolitus, Apollinarius, were deceived in expounding a certaine place in the ninth of Daniel, of the times of Antichriſt.

42 When Cyprian is alleaged for the authority of Scripture againſt unwritten traditions: Bellarmine anſwereth that he ſo writ in the confirmation of his error.

So he refuſeth Chryſoſtome ſuppoſed to be author of the imperfect worke upon Matthew.

43 Maldonate refuſeth the expoſition of Auguſtine upon that place, Iohn 6. 62.

44 Bellarmine rejecteth the judgement of Beda, Theophylact. Oecumenius, about the unction ſpoken of 45 Mar. 6. and Iames 5. which they affirme to be the ſame.

46 Bernard is refuſed by the Ieſuite Salmeron concerning the conception of the Virgin Mary in originall ſinne.

47 Epiphanius is put off by D. Allen and Saunder, with this ſhift, that the words are imperfect, as Vaſquez the Ieſuite blameth them.

48 The Councell of Eliberis is refuſed (which condemneth adoration of Images) being 1300. yeares old, becauſe it was provinciall, and not confirmed by the Pope, which Vaſquez alloweth.

49 Yea, they doe not only now and then, reject ſome one two or more of the fathers: but ſometime at one lumpe they refuſe them all: as Bellarmine ſaith, Their ſentence is to be followed, as farre as reaſon ſhall perſwade. Maldonate upon that text Matth. 16. 18. ſaith, that doth not ſeeme unto me to be the true ſenſe which all Authors whom I can remember (except Hilary) doe follow. Tolet interpreting a verſe of the 31. Pſalme ſaith: neither the Greekes, nor the Latine authors ſeeme unto me to have delivered the perfect meaning thereof.

We ſee then, what account our adverſaries make of the Fathers: who do receive and refuſe them at their pleaſure: what meaneth Campian then thus to write? Ration. 5. Patres ingentis beneficij loco donatos explodere, quanti maleficij eſt? To refuſe the fathers, which are given unto us as a great treaſure, how great impiety is it? For I know none more guilty of this impiety than themſelves: and what is now become of his vaine brag? Ad Patres ſiquando licebit accedere, confectum eſt prælium: If the triall be put to the Fathers, the field is already won: when they themſelves fight not with, but againſt the Fathers at their pleaſure.

50 And as they deale with the ancient writers, ſo they ſpare not their owne friends. Harding ſaith, We take not upon us all that the Canoniſts or Schoolemen ſay or write. Defenſ. apolog. pag. 385. The like they ſay of others: We binde not our ſelves to maintaine whatſoever Albertus Pigghius hath written; Cardinall Cajetanus hath his errors. Eraſmus and Agrippa be men of ſmall credite, Alphonſus de caſtro, Beatus Rhenanus, Platina, appendix Concilij Baſilienſ. are ſtuffe little worth. Harding detection. 307 b. a.

Bellarmine alſo is ſo bold as to checke Æneas Sylvius, who afterward was Pope of Rome called Pius 2. for whereas we alleage that ſaying of his, Ante Nicenum Concilium ad Romanam Eccleſiam parvus habebatur reſpectus, Before the firſt Nicene Councell there was ſmal regard had to the church of Rome: The Ieſuite anſwereth, Quæ ſententia Æneæ Sylvij partim eſt vera, partim non eſt vera, which

[b] I ſo tranſlate it now to take away al occaſiõ of cavil, becauſe (though the word Cenſeo as Grãmarians know, ſignifie as well conſtituere, decernere to conſtitute, decree, as exiſtimare to thinke, and ſo elſwhere I tranſlated) yet the other ſeemeth rather to be Bellarmines meaning: yet hee is found ſtill Auguſtine to miſalleage as here appeareth. In another place he quoteth Apoc.14. v.1. for the ſigne of the Croſſe: and whereas the originall onely hath,having his Fathers name written in their foreheads, they put in this clauſe,Having his name, and his fathers name,after the vulgar Latine. So in the Canon of the Maſſe,they adde theſe words unto the Goſpell: Manducate ex hoc omnes,Eate ye all of this: whereas Chriſt ſaid onely,after the cup, Bibite ex hoc omnes,drinke ye all of this. Bellarmine ſaith,it is ſupplied by tradition,de ſacram.Euchariſt.lib.4 cap.25.

Vnto this place may be added all the corruptions of the vulgar Latine tranſlation,which are maintained by the Church of Rome, diſagreeing from the true originall in Greeke.

Theſe words,notwithſtanding Peter never ſpake,but they were ſpoken by the divel: a fit text ſure to ground the Popes Lord-like dominion upon, Archidiacon.Florentin. ex citation.Iuel. pag.615.defenſ.Apolog.

More who liſt to ſee of our adverſaries manner of corruping Scripture: I refer them to that which hath been before ſaid of this manner: 1.Pillar.part.3.à loc.36.ad 52. I ſay unto them now, as Auguſtine to certaine heretikes in his time: Mortuus ſine ſenſu jacet, & valent verba ipſius: ſedet Chriſtus in cœlo,& contradicitur teſtamento ejus: A man lieth dead without ſenſe, and his will remaineth in force: Chriſt ſitteth in heaven,and dieth not,yet his teſtament is gainſaid: in *Pſal.*21. Thus we ſee the weake anſwers,and beggerly ſhifts,which our adverſaries through the weakneſſe of their cauſe, are driven unto. Who may fitly be reſembled,to uſe Auguſtines compariſon,unto ſubtile & crafty foxes: Vulpes ſolent habere tales foveas,ut ex una parte intrent,ex alia exeant: Foxes were wont to have ſuch holes,that they may goe in one way,and go out another. Even ſo doe our adverſaries ſeeke ſtarting holes,playing faſt and looſe with us,ſomtime denying the Fathers,ſometime affirming with them, ſometime appealing to Scripture,other while running from Scripture to tradition: and ſo going in and out at their pleaſure. Sed ad utrumq, foramen,as Auguſtine ſaith,captor vulpium retia poſuit: But the fox-taker(ſeeing their craft)hath laid his nets in both holes,that comming in and going out they are ſure to be taken,in *Pſal.*80. So God be thanked,our Saviour Chriſt,this wiſe taker of foxes, hath ſo armed the defenders of his truth,that whether theſe wily foxes goe in or go out,pretend Scriptures, Fathers,or goe againſt them, we doubt not but their feet ſhall be caught with the ſnare of truth.

Sophiſticall diſtinctions and cunning ſleights deviſed for the maintenance of Popery. Part.3.

WE are now come(by the grace of God)to ſhake one of the principall pillars of papiſtry: for herein lieth the very ſtrength of their cauſe,and the very pith of popiſh ſchoole-divinity, in deviſing and inventing ſubtile and ſophiſticall diſtinctions: thinking therby to obſcure the light of the truth,and to ſhift off moſt evident places of Scripture. The chiefe of their diſtinctions,though not all,yet ſome we will ſet downe in their order, and weigh them in the balance of God Word, that their lightneſſe may appeare.

Diſtinct. 1. I will beginne with that diſtinction concerning the authority of Scripture: they ſay that, ſecundum ſe, of it ſelfe the Scripture and in it ſelfe is of ſufficient authority, but, Quoad nos, in reſpect of us, it dependeth of the approbation of the Church: and that we cannot know, neither are bound to beleeve the Scriptures, but becauſe of the teſtimony and allowance of the Church, Bellar. de conc. lib. 2. cap. 11. Rhem, annot. Gal. 2. ſect. 6. Anſw. This is but a ſubtill ſleight to ſteale away the credit of the word of God: for the Scriptures were wholly written for us and our uſe, & al the authority they have is for the benefit of men, and in reſpect of us: If then they have no authority with us, nor we bound to beleeve them, unleſſe the Church doth approve them, then they receive their authority from the Church, for Scripture was written for men, not for God himſelfe, or Angels. So this diſtinction is contrary to the word of God: I receive (ſaith Chriſt) no witneſſe of men, Io. 5. 34. But the

Iohn 5. 34.

Scripture is the voice of Chriſt, therefore it needeth not the approbation of men: The ſpirit beareth witneſſe that the ſpirit is the truth, 1 Io. 5. 6. That is, the Scriptures are diſcerned and knowne by the ſame ſpirit, the which they were written withall. The Church indeed is to teſtifie of the truth, but the truth is to be beleeved for the truth ſake, although it have no teſtimony of men: for my ſheep (ſaith our Saviour) heare my voice, Io. 10. Let them heare alſo what a Doctor of their owne ſaith: that great ſchoole-man Thomas Aquinas: Deum dupliciter operari, alia mediantibus cauſis, ut opera naturalia, alia immediatè, ut miracula: God worketh two waies: ſome things he doth by mediate cauſes, as al naturall workes, ſome things by his immediate power, as his miracles: and he proceedeth further: Hominis intellectum Deum per alias literas mediatè inſtruere, per ſacras immediatè, God inſtructeth mans underſtanding by other writings mediately, but by the holy Scriptures immediatly: like as therefore the miracles immediatly wrought, need no other teſtimony, but of themſelves ſhew Gods power, as the Egyptian ſorcerers could confeſſe and ſay, Digitus Dei eſt, It is the finger of God: ſo neither need the word of God any other evidence, but by the effectuall working thereof, ſheweth it ſelfe to proceed from the ſpirit: for it doth immediatly inſtruct us: but if the Church ſhould bring us to the Scripture, then ſhould God ſpeake not immediatly, but mediatly therein unto us.

2 Diſtinct. 2. They diſtinguiſh the word of God: there is Verbum Dei ſcriptum, The Word of God written, that is, their traditions, Bellarm. de ſcript. lib. 4. c. 2. Anſw. This is a vaine diſtinction: for the whole word of God revealed, is contained in Scripture, as out of Scripture we prove it thus: The word written, that is, the holy Scriptures are able to make a man perfect to every good worke,

2 Tim. 3. 17
All things needfull to ſalvation contained in Scripture.

2 Tim. 3. 17. and ſo unto ſalvation: But whatſoever is over and beſide that which is perfect, is ſuperfluous: but no part of Gods word is ſuperfluous, therefore no part of the word beſide Scripture: this diſtinction alſo is overthrowne by their owne decrees: dec. p. 1. diſt. 8 c. 9. Si ſolus Chriſtus audiendus eſt, non debemus attendere, quid aliquis ante nos faciendum putaverit, ſed quid, qui ante omnes eſt, Chriſtus prior fecerit: If Chriſt only muſt be heard, we muſt not attend, what any man before us hath thought good to be done, but what Chriſt, who is before all, hath firſt done: If Chriſt onely be to be heard, whoſe voice is alſo knowne in the Scriptures, then your diſtinction faileth.

3 Diſtinct. 3. The Church is built (ſay they) upon Peter and Peters faith: but faith heere hath a double conſideration: for it may be either abſolutely conſidered, or with relation to Peters perſon: But faith generally and abſolutly reſpected is not the foundation of the Church, but as it was in Peter, Bellarm. de Roman. pontif. lib. 1. cap. 11. Rhemiſt. annot. Matth. 16. ſect. 8. Anſwere. That Peters faith not his perſõ the foundation of the Church.

Peters faith, which was in Peter, and by Peter confeſſed, is a portion and individuum of the generall ſaving faith of the church, which is the foundation of the ſame Church, we deny not. But Peters perſonall faith cannot be this foundation: for then when Peter died, his faith being a particular accident to his perſon, going away with him, the Church ſhould have wanted a foundation. Againe, in Peter theſe two things are reſpected, his perſon and faith: whatſoever was in Peter beſide faith, was fleſh and bloud: but that could not be the foundation, Ergo, Peters faith onely was the foundation, his perſon had therein no part at all. Conſult with your owne decrees, they will tell you, Quod Petrus, quando claves accepit, Eccleſiam ſanctam ſignificavit: Peter when he had received the keyes, ſignified the whole Church: if in Peter the whole Church is conſidered, then Peters particular perſon is not included; then by your owne rule you have loſt a diſtinction.

4 Diſtinct 4. There is a principall and ſoveraigne head of the Church, and that is onely Chriſt; there is a miniſteriall head beſide of that part of the Church which is upon the earth, and ſo is the

The pope not the miniſteriall head of the Church.

Pope head of the Church, Rhemiſt. annot. Epheſ. 2. ſect. 5. This diſtinction by their owne confeſſion may be overthrowne, for if the Pope in any ſenſe may be the head of the whole Church, the Church alſo in the ſame ſenſe may be called his body: but the Church (ſay the Rhemiſts) is not called the body myſtical either of Peter, or of Pope, or any prelate whatſoever; Ergo, he is not the head. Againe, one family hath but one head, the Church in heaven and in earth maketh but one family,

Epheſ. 3. 15.

Epheſ. 3. 15. The Pope in no ſenſe can be ſaid to be head of the triumphant Church. Ergo, neither of that part that is in earth. I will here referre you to your owne law, Clement. lib. 2. tit. 9. cap. 1. Romanæ Eccleſiæ caput eſt Chriſtus redemptor noſter, Romanus pontifex ejuſdem redemptoris vicarius, &c. Chriſt our Redeemer is the head of the Romane Church, and the Biſhop of Rome his vicar, &c. Heere the Pope himſelfe maketh Chriſt onely the head, and himſelfe but the heads vicar; and the reaſon is included, becauſe Chriſt is the Redeemer, therefore the head; the Pope is not the Redeemer of the Church; Ergo, not the head; thus your diſtinction is deſtroyed.

5 Diſtinct. 5. The Pope as a private perſon, or as a man, and in matters of Faith may erre, and be deceived:

ceived: but as he is head paſtor, decreeing any thing concerning the faith, he cannot erre, Bellarm. lib. 4. de pontif. cap. 13. Harding. defenſ. apolog. 660. Anſw. Peter, when he was reproved of Paul, Galath. 2. erred not onely in example and converſation, as Bellarmine anſwereth: but it was an error concerning the faith: Saint Paul ſaith, they went not the right way to the truth of the Goſpell: they erred then from the truth of the Goſpell, Ergo, in faith: if Peter might fall into an error of faith, much more the Pope. Your owne gloſſe granteth, that Peter did exorbitare à fide, goe aſide or out of the way from the faith: for thus the words lie, Par in ſe eſt, à fide exorbitare & alios exemplo, vel verbo à fide deijcere: It is all one in it ſelfe, for one to erre from the faith, or by example or word to turne others from the faith, which Peter did: ſo this diſtinction alſo is proved but vaine.

Whether Peter erred in a matter of faith.

Decr. par. 2. cauſ. 2. qu. cap. 39. in gloſſe.

Diſtinct. 6. Non eſt idem, aliquid eſſe de fide & de jure divino: It is not all one for a thing to depend of faith, and of the law of God: as to beleeve that Paul had a cloake, is not a point of faith, yet it is, De jure divino: It belongeth to the Word of God: So to beleeve that the Pope is Peters ſucceſſor, belongeth to the faith, though it be not by the word, Bellarm. de Rom. pont. lib. 2. cap. 12. Anſw. This diſtinction is eaſily overthrowne: whatſoever is by the word of God, is De jure divino: Of the divine right, or of Gods law: but whatſoever is of faith, is grounded upon the word, for faith it ſelfe commeth by hearing the word preached, Rom. 10. 17. Ergo, whatſoever is of faith, is alſo De jure divino. Concerning the example alleaged, that Paul ſhould have a cloake, it was not neceſſary neither by the word, nor by faith ſimply: but by a conſequent, becauſe it is expreſſed in the word, and it is a point of faith to beleeve all things therein contained to be true, to beleeve this alſo, is of, or belonging to faith. See your owne Canons, Extravag. Iohan. 22. tit. 14. cap. 5. there ſhall you find this diſtinction: that Quædam directè pertinent ad fidem, Some things doe directly concerne the faith, as the articles of our beleefe, and whatſoever is contained in them; Quædam reductè, &c. Some things by way of reduction or conſequence belong to the faith, as to beleeve whatſoever is contained in Scripture: and upon this ground in the ſame place it is proved, that to affirme, that Chriſt had not the proper uſe of any thing, is neither of the faith directly, becauſe it is not contained in the articles, nor reductively, becauſe it is not found in Scripture: ſo by this good and neceſſary diſtinction, your conceit is overthrowne.

How every thing in the word contained belongeth to the faith.

Diſtinct. 7. There is a proper ſucceeding of the Apoſtles, and an improper: properly the Pope is Peters ſucceſſor, whom he ſucceedeth, as an ordinary paſtor of the Church; But other Biſhops doe ſuceeed the Apoſtles improperly, in reſpect of their paſtorall and epiſcopall calling, Bellarm. de Rom. pontif. li. 4. cap. 24. Anſw. If to ſucced in the place be a proper kind of ſucceſsion, as the Ieſuite ſeemeth to grant, as one King ſuceedeth another, and one Biſhop another, then had other Apoſtles their proper ſucceſſors, as S. Iames at Ieruſalem, S. Andrew at Conſtantinople, S. Iohn at Epheſus, S. Marke at Alexandria, as well as Peter had at Rome: If a proper ſucceſsion require a ſucceſsion of gifts & calling, than neither the Biſhop of Rome, nor any other doe properly ſucceed the Apoſtles, having not the calling of Apoſtles, but of Biſhops and paſtors of the Church. And the Ieſuite himſelfe granteth that the Pope ſucceedeth Peter not as an Apoſtle, but as a paſtor. But Apoſtles properly ſucceed Apoſtles, a paſtor improperly is ſaid to ſucceed an Apoſtle. I will urge againſt you the teſtimony of your owne Popes: Innocentius 3. ſaith that Epiſcopi, ſunt Apoſtolorum vicarij: Biſhops are the Apoſtles vicars: decr. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 15. c. 1. Will you here diſtinguiſh alſo that ſome are properly, ſome improperly vicars: but how can one be ſaid to be in anothers ſtead, if he doe it improperly? A man will chuſe ſuch an one to be his vicar, as may properly and fitly execute his place and office, as if he himſelfe did it: but if you ſay, here is the difference: Biſhops are the Apoſtles vicars, but the Pope is Chriſts vicar: remember what another of your Popes hath confeſſed: Clem. 5. lib. 5. tit. 8. c. 1. Epiſcopi Chriſti legati exiſtunt: Biſhops are Chriſts Legats: which is all one, as to ſay his vicars: if ſtill you wil urge your fanſie, and ſay ſome are proper, ſome improper Legats: then will I oppoſe againſt you another decree of your owne: decr. part. 1. diſtinct. 93. c. 24. Epiſcopi omnes Apoſtolorum ſucceſſores: ubicunq; fuerit Epiſcopus ſive Romæ, ſive Eugubij, ejuſdem meriti, ejuſdem ſacerdotij: All biſhops are the Apoſtles ſucceſſors: whereſoever a Biſhop is, whether at Rome, or Eugubium, they are all of one merit, and haue all one prieſthood, &c. If they be all of the ſame worthineſſe and office, what is become of your proper and improper diſtinction?

Good Biſhops ſucceed the Apoſtles more properly than the Pope.

Diſtinct. 8. The pope directly hath not any temporall juriſdiction over Kings and Princes, as they have over their ſubjects, or as he hath over biſhops, yet indirectly he hath, and ſo by his indirect power, as he is the ſpiritual Prince of the Church, he may deſpoſe Kings, cite them judicially before him abrogate the lawes of Princes, & eſtabliſh his own, if he ſee it neceſſary for the health of mens ſouls, Bellarm. de pontif. lib. 5. cap. 6. Anſw. The places which the Ieſuite himſelfe bringeth againſt the direct power of the Pope, do alſo overthrow his indirect power: As how Chriſt refuſed to be a king, Io. 6. & to be a Iudge, Lu. 12. 13. he did execute neither of theſe offices, either directly or indirectly: Ergo, no more ſhould the Pope. And S. Paul maketh every ſoule directly ſubject to the higher powers, that beare the ſword, Ro. 13. 1, 4. How then can any ſoule directly ſubject unto them, indirectly command and controule them? Indeed an indirect power it is which the Pope chalengeth, that is, uſurped and unlawfull, and they doe well ſo to call it. Conſult with your owne decrees, one of your Popes thus writeth: Leo. 4. to Lotharius the Emperour: Imperalia veſtra præcepta, quantum valemus, Chriſto propitio, nos conſervaturos modis omnibus profitemur: We doe promiſe to keepe your impe-riall lawes every way by the helpe of Chriſt: and if any man tell you otherwiſe, ſciatis eum pro certo mendacem, take him for a lyer. If every way, then both directly and indirectly: and if Bellarmine ſay otherwiſe, he muſt weare the Popes livery to be counted a lyer,

They which have a conſulting voice in Councels, ought alſo to have a deciding voice.

Diſtinct. 9. In generall Councels there are two kinds of voices or ſuffrages: there is ſuffragium deciſivum, a deciding or determining voice, which only belongeth to biſhops, and ſuffragium conſultativum, a conſulting or diſcuſsing voice, and ſo other Paſtors and Miniſters may aſſemble to conſult and give their advice, Bellar. lib. 1. de concil. c. 15. Anſ. In the Councell held by the Apoſtles and Elders, Act. 15. there was no ſuch difference of voices: the Apoſtles and Elders did indifferently both conſult and decide the matter in doubt, v. 6. the Apoſtles and Elders came together to looke to this matter, as well to provide ſome remedy, and to determine and conclude, as to examine and adviſe upon the matter: ſo v. 28. It ſeemed good to the holy Ghoſt, and unto us: The decree goeth out in the name of the Apoſtles and Elders. As therefore the Elders did decide and conclude with the Apoſtles, ſo ought Paſtors and Miniſters together with Biſhops. Search your owne decrees: Decr. p. 2. cauſ. 16. qu. 1. cap. 7. Romani ſenatum habebant, cujus conſilio cuncta agebant, & nos habemus ſenatum noſtrum, cœtum presbyterorum: The Romans had their ſenate, by whoſe counſell they did every thing: and we alſo have our Senate in the Church the aſſembly of our presbyters. As then the Senate in Rome did not conſult only, but decide matters, ſo ſhould the Senate in the Church.

Lay-men ought to have voices in Councels.

Diſtinct. 10. As by this diſtinction next before they would exclude the Clergy, all beſide Biſhops, ſo they have invented another tricke againſt the liberty of the Laity in Councels: The Biſhop ſubſcribed in this forme: Ego definiens ſubſcripſi: By giving my definitive voice I have ſubſcribed. The lay Magiſtrate thus: Ego conſentiens ſubſcripſi: I by giving my conſent have ſubſcribed, Hard. pag. 748. defenſ. apolog. B. Iewel in the ſame place ſheweth the vanity and untruth of this diſtinction, and proveth that theſe two formes were indifferently uſed: ſometime the Biſhop ſaid, I have conſented and ſubſcribed: ſometime the Magiſtrate is alſo ſaid in Councell to determine, as it is there alleaged of Conſtantinus out of Sozomene. This alſo is agreeable to your owne law: Pope Nicolas granteth thus much: Fides omnium communis eſt, quæ non ſolum ad clericos, verum etjam ad laicos, & ad omnes omninò pertinet Chriſtianos: Faith is common to all, and it doth not onely belong unto the Clergy, but unto Lay-men alſo, and generally to all Chriſtians, decr. par. 1. diſt. 96. c. 4. If faith then be common alike to all, both to the Laity and Clergy, why ſhould they not both have equall right to determine of that, which equally appertaineth to them both.

Iohn 1. 12. The child of the divell, no way the child of God.

Rom. 8. 17.

Diſtinct. 11. One may be ſaid to be the ſon or child of God truly, two manner of waies. Firſt, Veritate eſſentiæ ſeu formæ: If he have the true forme and eſſence of a member of Chriſt and child of God, as if he have love, and live inwardly by the ſpirit of Chriſt. Secondly, Veritate finis ſive permanentiæ: If he continue, and attaine unto the end. The firſt way men not predeſtinate may be ſaid truely to be the members of Chriſt, Bellar. de eccleſ. lib. 3. cap. 7. Anſw. 1 Charity is not the eſſence or forme of the child of God, but faith and beleefe, Ioh. 1. 12. To them that beleeve in his Name he gave power to be the ſons of God. 2. It is abſurd, that he which hath the forme and eſſence of a thing ſhould not obtaine the thing it ſelfe. 3. Though ſuch in reſpect of their preſent ſtate may after a ſort be called the ſons of God, yet they are not, Verè filij Dei: Truly and properly his ſons 4. For in this ſenſe none are truly the ſons of God, but they which ſhall be heires of ſalvation: If we be children, we are alſo heires, even the heires of God, and heires annexed with Chriſt, Rom. 8. 17. I will be judged herein by your owne law: der. part. 2. cauſ. 33. diſt. de pœnitent. 1. cap. 35. *gloſſ. And againe, Nemo filius Dei & diaboli ſimul eſſe poteſt: No man can be the Sonne of God and the ſon of the divell together. For the Scripture ſaith, No man can ſerve two maſters: But if they which are not predeſtinate, that is, the children of wrath and deſtruction, may be the ſonnes of God, then the ſons of the divell may be the Sons of God, which is here denied.

Heb. 11. 1.

Iohn 10. 16.

Mat. 18. 10.

The true notes of the Church.

Diſtinct. 12. Bellarmine diſputing of the true notes of the Church (in his opinion) as of ſucceſsion, antiquity, univerſality and ſuch like, he ſaith, though they doe not, Efficere evidentiam veritatis ſimpliciter: Yet they doe, Efficere evidentiam credibilitatis: Though they worke not the evidence of truth, that is, doe not certainely demonſtrate the Church, yet they worke the evidence of beleefe or likelihood: they ſhew great probability of the Church, Bellar. lib 4. de notis eccleſ. c. 3. Anſw. How can there be Evidentia, the evidence of any thing, which is but gueſſed at, nor certainly knowne? for that is ſaid to be evident, which is put out of doubt: as faith is ſaid to be the evidence of things not ſeene, Heb. 11. 1. not the evidence of probability, but of truth and certainty. 2. How can theſe be ſaid to be veræ notæ, true notes of the Church, if by theſe notes a man cãnot certainly find out the Church 3. Therefore the true notes doe bring Evidentiam veritatis: An evidence of truth, ſhewing and demonſtrating the Church without doubt: My ſheepe (ſaith Chriſt) heare my voice, Io. 10. Where the voice of Chriſt, that is, the word of God, is heard and obeied, there certainly are the ſheep & ſheepfold of Chriſt: and where two or three are aſſembled in my name, there am I in the middeſt, Mat. 18. to aſſemble in the name of Chriſt to heare his word, and duly receive the Sacraments, is an infallible note of Chriſts preſence, and ſo alſo of his Church. Theſe therefore are the true notes, the word and Sacraments, rightly taught and adminiſtred. But that your imagined notes neither bring evidence conjectural nor demonſtrative, I report me to your own decrees, which thus ſpeake of cuſtome and antiquity, one of your chiefe notes: *Decr.part.*1.*diſt.*8.*c.*8. Conſuetudo ſine veritate, vetuſtas erroris: Cuſtome without truth is the oldneſſe of error: and *cap.*6. Cum Chriſtus veritas eſt, ſequi magis debemus veritatem, quàm conſuetudinem, quia conſuetudinem ratio, & veritas ſemper excludit: Seeing Chriſt is truth, we muſt rather follow truth than cuſtome, for reaſon and verity alwaies exclude cuſtome and antiquity: if error then may be grounded upon cuſtome, how can any credence be given to cuſtome for the truth: and if truth exclude cuſtome, how can cuſtome include truth?

13 *Diſtinct.*13. They make a difference betweene Evangelicall precepts, and Evangelicall Counſels, to leave a precept undone is ſin, and every Chriſtian is bound unto it. But Evangelicall counſels are given only to the perfect, which they are not bound to keep, neither do they ſin in not keeping them yet if they obſerve them, they merit more. Such Counſels of perfection are theſe and ſuch like; to give all to the poore, to vow chaſtity, and ſuch like, *Bellar.de Monach.cap.*7.*Rhem.annot.Mat.*9.*ſect.*9. Anſ. We acknowledge no ſuch difference betweene precepts and Counſels, for whatſoever is to the glory of God, we are bound to doe, *Mat.*5.48. Ye ſhall be perfect, therefore all Counſels tending to perfection are commadements. And that a man can doe no more, when he hath done all, than is his duty to do, our Saviour Chriſt ſheweth in plaine words, *Lu.*17.10. It is therfore a vaine diſtinction. I further refer you herein, to the conſtitutions of your owne Popes: Pope Nicolas ſext. decr. lib. 5. tit. 12. *c.*3. Confeſſeth in plaine words, that there be, Nonnulla conſilia Evangelica ſub verbo & prohibitione præcepti: Some Evangelicall Counſels, expreſſed under the terme and prohibition of precepts: if Counſels then are underſtood by precepts, how then are they not confounded: ſome Counſels are precepts, and ſome precepts Counſels.

Counſels and precepts whether they differ.

14 *Diſtinct.*14. A vow is twofold; ſimplex votum: A ſimple or ſingle vow, which is made before God alone: Votum duplex vel ſolenne: A double or ſolemne vow made in the preſence of the Biſhop or Abbat: Marriage made after a ſingle or ſimple vow ſtandeth in force, but it cannot make voide a ſolemne vow made before, Hard. pag 547. defenſ.Apolog. Anſw. A ſingle vow bindeth as ſtraitly before God as a ſolemne vow, neither is it any thing to the Lord, whether wee vow in the hearing of others, or before witnes: therfore the Scripture knowing no ſuch diſtinction, generally biddeth men that have vowed unto God to pay their vowes, *Numb.*30.3. *Eccleſ.*5.3. And as for the other point, neither a ſingle nor a ſolemne vow is a ſufficient cauſe to deny mariage to him that cannot containe, as the Apoſtle ſaith, to avoid fornication, let every man have his wife, 1 *Cor.*7.2. They have here forgotten, what Celeſtinus 3. ſaith concerning vowes: Votum ſimplex non minus obligat apud Deum, quàm ſolenne: A ſimple vow doth no leſſe binde before God, than a ſolemne vow: *dec.Gre.lib.*4.*tit.*6. *c.*6. If then a ſimple or ſingle vow diſſolveth not marriage, neither ſhall a ſolemne.

15 *Diſtinct.*15. Wheras the Apoſtle ſaith, perfect love expelleth feare, Bellarmine diſtinguiſheth: there is, Timor pœnæ, and Timor culpæ propter pœnam: Feare of puniſhment, and feare of ſin, for the puniſhment ſake: Love expelleth not the firſt kind of feare, but the ſecond, *Bellarm.de purgator.lib.*2.*cap.*3. Anſw. I pray you what difference is there betweene feare of puniſhment, and feare of ſin, becauſe of the puniſhment? or how can theſe two be ſeparated? for he that is afraid to be damned, wil be afraid to ſin, which cauſeth damnation: Love therefore expelleth theſe ſervile kinds of feare, which have painfulneſſe, as the Apoſtle ſaith, but it retaineth the reverence or feare of children, which bringeth comfort rather, and boldneſſe in the day of judgement, *ibid.ver.*17. If you wil be tried by your owne law, this diſtinction will not ſerve your turne: *decr.Greg.lib.*5.*tit.*41.*c.*8. Qui ex timore facit præceptum, aliter, quàm debeat facit, & ideo jam non facit: He that of feare doth the commandement, doth it not, as he ought, and therefore doth it not at all: here is no ſuch minſing and clipping of feare, but it is generally excluded, whether the feare of ſin, or the puniſhment thereof.

1 Ioh.4.17,18

No ſervile fear can ſtand with love.

16 *Diſtinct.*16. *A mediator may bee underſtood two wayes. Firſt, hee is a mediator that payeth the debt unto the creditor for the debter: ſo Chriſt onely is our mediator, who hath payed the ranſome for us. Secondly, he that entreateth the creditor to forgive the debter, ſo the Saints may bee & are mediators in praying for us: Chriſt is the mediator of Redemption, they of interceſſion: Bellar. lib.*1.*de Sanct.c.*20. It is a very blaſphemous diſtinction, & contrary to Scripture: for our mediator betweene God and man, muſt be both God and man, 1 *Tim.*2 5. Therefore no creature can be our mediator. Again, to make interceſsion to God for us, belongeth to the Prieſthood of Chriſt, who, as the high Prieſt was wont to go into the moſt holy place to pray for the people, is now entred into the heavens to appeare in the ſight of God for us, *Heb.*9.24. But Chriſt only is our Prieſt in heaven, neither Angell nor Saint: Ergo he only is our mediator and interceſſor: Hearken what Auguſtine ſaith, Quem alium dirigam tibi interceſſorem, neſcio niſi hunc qui eſt propitiatio pro peccatis noſtris: I know not what other interceſſor to direct unto thee, but him that is the propitiation for our ſins, *lib.med.c.*5. Therefore there is one mediator both of interceſsion and propitiation or redemption. This ſentence of Auguſtine is approved by Eſpenſæus a writer of your owne, lib.de Chriſto mediator.c. 12.

1 Tim.2.5.
Not divers kinds of mediator.

Heb.9. 24.

17 *Diſtinct.*17. The queſtion ariſing betweene us, whether Chriſt be our mediator in reſpect of his manhood only, as they hold, or as he is both God and man, as we teach: they do coine us this ſophiſticall diſtinction, that Chriſt is our mediator in both his natures, Ratione ſuppoſiti, non ratione formalis principij, in reſpect of the ſuppoſitum or hypoſtaſis of the Mediator, not in reſpect of the formall beginning: to ſpeake this more plainly: The mediator muſt of neceſsity be both God and man, but the forme of his mediation, or that whereby he worketh his mediation, is his humane nature, Bellarm.

Chriſt mediator in both his natures. 2 Cor.5.19.

de Chriſto.lib.5.cap.3.Anſw. The Scripture attributeth the mediation of Chriſt to both his natures: God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelfe : Here God is a reconciler, and Chriſt a reconciler, that is, Chriſt reconcileth us both as God and man, 2 *Cor.*5.19. I oppoſe here againe the iudgement of Auguſtine, to the which Eſpenſaus your owne Doctor ſubſcribeth, *lib. de Chriſto mediat. c.*3. Auguſtine ſaith thus, Non mediator homo præter deitatem, non mediator Deus præter humanitatem, divinitas ſine humanitate non eſt mediatrix, humanitas ſine divinitate non eſt mediatrix: The man Chriſt is not mediator beſide his divinity, nor God Chriſt is not mediator beſide his humanity : his divinity doth not mediate without his humanity, nor his humanity without his divinity, *homil. de civib.c.*12. here alſo you have loſt your diſtinction.

18 *Diſtinct.*18. The Saints are our interceſſors, not as authors them ſelves of any benefit unto us, but obtaining through Chriſt and his merits, whatſoever by them is obtained for us, *Bellarm. de ſanct. lib.*1.*cap.*17.

Anſw. Firſt, their owne practiſe is contrary, for they make their Saints their mediators by their owne merits and worthineſſe, as in thoſe blaſphemous verſes made of Thomas Becket, is to be ſeene,

Tu per Thomæ ſanguinem, quem pro nobis impendit,
Fac nos Chriſte ſcandere quò Thomas aſcendit.
By the blood of Thomas, which for us he did ſpend,
Grant us Chriſt, whither he did, to aſcend.

Saints no way interceſſors. John 16, 24.

Secondly, the Scripture biddeth us pray in the name of Chriſt unto God, and we ſhall receive what we aske, which is a more compendious way, than to pray to Saints, and they by Chriſt unto God, for if praying in our owne perſons in the name of Chriſt, our prayers be heard, *Ioh.*16.24, invocation of Saints is ſuperfluous. Here I alſo object your owne decrees, *decr.part.*3.*diſtinct.*4.*cap.*39. Miniſtri dum ſunt, pro ducibus haberi nolunt, ſpem in ſe poni erubeſcunt: They are but miniſters, they will not be counted guides or patrones, and are aſhamed that any truſt ſhould be repoſed in them : Ergo, Saints are no waies patrones, or procurers of any grace unto us.

19 *Diſtinct.*19. They make two kinds of religious worſhip: one called λατρεία, which is only due unto God : the other δουλεία, which may be given to Angels and to Saints, *Bellar. lib.*3.*de ſanct. cap.*12.

Apocal. 22.9. No religious worſhip due to Saints. Galath.4.8. Dried. de libris apocry. lib 4. cap. 1.

Anſw. All religious worſhip is onely to be yeelded unto God : as the Angell would not ſuffer Iohn to worſhip him, but ſaid, Worſhip God, *Apoc.*22.*ver.*9. becauſe all worſhip is due unto him: he forbiddeth not Iohn ſome ſpecial kind of worſhip, but generally all: as acknowledging, that no kind of worſhip was due unto him And concering the word δουλεία, it is taken alſo in Scripture for the proper ſervice of God: as *Galat.*4.8. Ye did ſervice to them, that by nature were no Gods : there this word is uſed. And that no religious worſhip belongeth to Saints, heare what Driedo a writer of your own faith, who thinketh that certaine ſtories of the Saints are fained; as when, ſaith he, the Saints, Narrantur in mortis agone monuiſſe, ut ex hoc mundo tranſlati colerentur, &c. are ſaid in their death to have give charge to be worſhipped after they were gone: this, ſaith he, is not like they would have done.

20 *Diſtinct.*20. They diſtinguiſh betweene Idolum, an Idoll, and Imago, an Image, in Greeke, εἰκὼν, is a true ſimilitude of a thing, an Idoll, εἴδωλον, doth repreſent a vaine thing that is not: ſuch were the Idols of the heathen: Images, they ſay, they have, but no Idols, *Bellar. lib. de ſanct. cap.*5.

No difference between an Idoll and an Image. Rom.1.13.

*Anſw.*1. As concerning the word, the Idols in Scripture are alſo called Images, *Rom.*1.13. there the word εἰκὼν, is uſed. The papiſts then in worſhipping of Images, are proved alſo to be idolaters, worſhippers of Idols : This frivolous diſtinction helpeth them not. The civill law, which can beſt teach us the uſe of termes, and difference of words, maketh Images and Idols al one, as it thus may be ſhewed, ſimulachrum, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, *lib.*1.de imag. ſanct. c 5. is the Latine for the Greek word, εἴδωλον, an Idoll: now the Civill law taketh an Image, and a ſimulachre, that is, an Idoll for the ſame, as *Cod. lib.*1.*tit.*27.*leg.*3. that which the Emperour calleth noſtræ ſerenitatis imagines, the Images of our excellency, in the next title 28.*leg.*1: The ſame Emperour Theodoſius termeth, Imperatoria ſimulachra, the Emperours ſimulachre, or Idoll.

21 *Diſtinct.*21. They make this difference betweene the Idols of the heathen, and their Images: the heathen worſhipped their Idols as gods, and therefore were Idolaters: But they worſhip thir images for that relation they have to thoſe whoſe images they are, *Rhemiſt. Philip.*2.ſect 2.

Exod.32.4,5. Iudg.17.3. Images not to be worſhipped by way of relation.

Anſw. The Iewes alſo, which were plagued of God for their Idolatry, had a relation in their golden Calfe to that God which brought them out of Egypt, Exod 32.4.5. ſo *Iudg.*17.3. Micah his mother ſaith, that ſhe had conſecrated the ſhekels of ſilver to the Lord Iehovah, to make a molten image: yet for all this they were Idolaters, and ſo are the Papiſts: this ſhift of theirs helpeth them not a whit. And concerning this relative worſhip, let them heare what Gregory out of their owne decrees, ſaith ; *decret.part.*3.*diſtinct.*3 *cap.*23. Aliud eſt picturam adorare, aliud per picturæ hiſtoriam, quid ſit adorandum, addiſcere, nam, quod legentibus ſcriptura, hoc idiotis præſtat pictura cernentibus : It is one thing to worſhip a picture, an other by the pictured ſtory to learne what is to be worſhipped, for as the Scripture is to the Readers, ſo the picture is to the beholders, &c. Here Gregory granteth a relation in pictures, but no relative worſhip: for as we do not adore the letters of Scripture though they declare who is to be worſhipped : ſo, though a painted ſtory referre us unto God, yet unto it no divine worſhip is due, by relation, or otherwiſe, and this is S. Gregory his meaning.

22 *Diſtinct.*22. A thing may be honoured, or is ſaid to receive or be capable of honour after divers manner: Firſt, a thing is honoured Per ſe, vel per accidens, of it ſelfe, as the perſon of the King is honoured, or accidentally, as the Kings robes are honoured becauſe of the King. Secondly, a thing may be honoured, propter ſe, vel propter aliud, for it ſelfe ſake, or for and becauſe of ſome other thing, whereon the cauſe of honor dependeth. Thirdly, a thing may be honoured proprie, improprie, properly, which in reſpect of it ſelfe is honored: improprie, which in ſtead and place of another thing is honoured, as the Embaſſadour is for the King. Now, the images of Saints are to be worſhipped not only improperly, or accidentally, but properly, and of themſelves: yea, improperly, and by an accident, are capable of the higheſt kind of worſhip, as the image of God or Chriſt of the ſame honour that is due unto them, *Bellarm. lib.2. de Sanct.cap.*20.21.22,23. Anſw. I pray you how farre are theſe blaſphemous Papiſts from the higheſt kind of idolatry, and from making their ſtockes and ſtones, their gods? For the heathen in like ſort uſed ſuch diſtinctions: Non ego illum lapidem colo, adoro quem video, ſed ſervio ej quem non video: I doe not worſhip this ſtone, I adore that I ſee, but I ſerve him whom I ſee not: Auguſtin in *Pſal.*96. Thus properly they gave adoration to their images: but ſervice, which is the Engliſh of (λατρεία) *Rhemiſt. Math.*4.*ſect.*3. They reſerved unto that God whoſe image it was, yet for all this they were moſt monſtrous idolaters, and ſo are the Papiſts. Againe, no religious worſhip, properly, or improperly, accidentally, or otherwiſe is due to any, but only to the Lord, *Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve, Math.*4.10. Which Text is alleadged by our Saviour againſt Satan, who had tempted him to fall downe and adore him: wherefore by this Text all falling downe and proſtrating of our ſelves before any creature to adore it, is forbidden, without which ſubmiſſe geſture, not the meaneſt kind of religious worſhip can be exhibited to any: And that no religious worſhip, properly, or improperly; accidentally, or of it ſelfe, or any other kind of way belongeth to images; heare what your owne law ſaith: Chriſtiani non ſerviunt imaginibus cultu divino, nec alicui creaturæ, Chriſtians doe not yeeld any ſervice or divine worſhip to images, nor to any creature, *decr.part.3.diſtinct.3.c.*28. And if it be here anſwered, that indeed no divine ſervice, but only adoration is due unto images, I object againe that ſaying of S. Gregorie out of their owne decrees, *part.3. diſtinct.3.cap.*27. Quia imagines adorari vetuiſſes, omnino laudavimus: We commend you altogether, for that you forbad images to be adored: here alſo adoration of images is reſtrained.

Images not ſo much as accidentally to be worſhipped.

23 *Diſtinct.*23. There are then three kinds of religious worſhip due unto God, and his Saints: λατρεία ſervice proper unto God: δουλεία, adoration which may be given to Saints and Angells: ὑπερδουλεία, an higher kind of adoration due onely to the virgin Mary. And each of theſe three hath two kindes: every one of them may be conſidered Simpliciter vel ſecundum quid, ſimply or abſolutely, or in part only and reſpect: and every one of theſe kinds of worſhip, is either Cultus perfectus, or imperfectus, a perfect or imperfect worſhip. The perfect and ſimple kind of Latreia, is proper to God only, the imperfect and inferior or reſpective kind may be given, and is due to the image of God: ſo the perfect kind of δουλεία is for the Saint himſelfe, the imperfect for his image: the perfect kind of Hyperdouleia is for the virgin Mary only, the imperfect for her image, *Bellar.lib.2.de Sanct.2.cap.*25. Contr. Firſt, thus have we ſix kinds of religious worſhip forged and deviſed by Papiſts, more by five than the Word of God either knoweth, or acknowledgeth. 2. Where have they learned that the virgin Mary is worthy of an higher kind of adoration, than either Saint or Angell? The Scripture onely ſaith, that they ſhall be as Angells, not above or ſuperior to Angells, *Math.*22.30. and it was one of the hereſies of Pelagius, homines æquare angelis, to make men equall to Angells, *Eſpenſ.in cap.*3.2 *epiſt. ad Timoth.p.*121.d. 3. By this diſtinction of theirs, it commeth to paſſe, that the Image of God, of Chriſt, yea, of our Lady, ſhall have an higher kind of worſhip, not than the images of Saints, but than the Saints themſelves, than either Prophet or Apoſtle, for theſe have but their Douleia, their ſimple adoration: but the images of God and of Chriſt, have their kind of Latreia: the image of Mary, a kind of Hyperdouleia. But this is very groſſe and abſurd, that a dead thing that hath no life, ſhould be more honored than a reaſonable and underſtanding, yea an holy creature: Auguſtine ſaith: Artifex melior eſt eis. The image maker is better than the image, in Pſal. 113. but a Prophet or Apoſtle is farre to be preferred before every artificer or craff-man, and one would thinke that the lively image of God, which is man, that walketh and breatheth, ſhould be worthy of greater honor, than the dead and ſenſeleſſe image of God. Fourthly, by the places alleaged before, *Apoc.*22.9. *Math.*4.10. it is evident, that no kind of religious worſhip is due to any creature, bnt onely unto God. See alſo to this purpoſe the decree before alleaged, that Chriſtians doe not give any divine ſervice unto Images, *p.*3.*d.*3.*cap.*28 and yet Bellarm. doubteth not to ſay, that the Image of God may have the ſame ſervice which is due unto God, though in an unperfect manner.

But one kind of religious worſhip.

Apoc.22.9.
Math.4.10.

24 Diſtinct. 24. Sacræ ædes, Churches or holy houſes have a double relation or reſpect: for they may be conſidered as they are Templa, Temples or Churches, and ſo properly they are built onely to the honour of God: or as they are, Baſilicæ, or Memoriæ, ſumptuous buildings and monuments of remembrance, and ſo alſo they may be dedicated to Saints: *Bellar.lib.3.de Sanct.c.*4. Contr. Firſt, if the ſame place in a divers reſpect may be conſecrate to the honour of God and Saints together, great reaſon, that God ſhould be the more principal: but now it is not ſo, for they are called by the name of Saints: if God were the chiefe, he ſhould give the name to the place. And indeed the places of prayer are Gods houſes: My houſe ſhall be called the houſe of Prayer, Eſay 56.7. That Churchs are called by Saints names amongſt us, it is not for their honour, but onely for a civill difference and diſtinction

How temples are holy places.
Eſay 56.7.

of places: and in their ſenſe Churches are not dedicate unto God neither, for any holineſſe that is in the place; for in that ſort, Chriſt ſaith, his Father will not be worſhipped, neither in that mount Garizim, nor at Ieruſalem, Ioh.4.27, not in one place more than in another: but they are holy places, and for the honour of God, in reſpect of the uſe, which is for prayer, My houſe, an houſe of prayer, ſaith the Lord, and for hearing the Word of God, Acts 13.15. And thus your owne Doctor Thomas Aquinas determineth of this matter: Ad Deum adorandum, non ob neceſſitatem ſtatus locus eligitur ob eum, qui adoratur, quaſi loco concludatur, ſed ex quadam decentia propter adorantes: A certaine place is not choſen as of neceſsity toward the worſhip of God, as though hee that is worſhipped were tyed to a place, but for more decency and comlineſſe ſake in them that doe worſhip. 2. 2. quaeſt.84. Artic.3.

Acts 13.15.

25 Diſtinct.25. Saints, ſome are canonized, that is, publikely allowed to be Saints: ſome are not canonized, and received into the Kalendar: the difference is this; Canonized Saints, either generally by the Pope ſo canonized, for the whole Church, or more ſpecially by a Biſhop for his Province or Dioceſſe, may be publikely prayed unto, Temples built in their names, and their holy daies yeerely remembred, their reliques preſerved in Churches to be adored: But none of theſe things publikely may be exhibited to not Canonized Saints, unleſſe privately only, Bellarm. de ſanct. lib.1.cap.10. Contr: Firſt, that neither canonized, nor uncanonized Saints are in any ſuch ſort to be worſhipped, we have ſhewed before. Secondly, what an abſurd thing is this, it is lawfull to pray to ſome Saint privately, and yet unlawfull to doe it publikely? So men ſhall have houſe Saints and Church Saints: they ſhall ſerve one God at home, and another at the Church: ſuch were the toyes of the heathen: ſuch kinde of ſtuffe we reade of, Ezech.8.10. where the Princes of Iſrael were gotten into a corner, and there worſhipped the ſimilitude of creeping things, and abominable beaſts, which they were aſhamed to doe publikely: ſo belike Popiſh houſe-ſaints are ſuch goodly things, that they dare not be ſeene. Thirdly, if they be Saints, why are they not all canonized? If they be all Saints with God, why are they not with men? Fourthly, who gave them ſuch power to canonize ſome Saints, and not otherſome? Chriſt ſaith, To ſit at his right hand, or his left, is not his to give, Math.20.23. how then dare the Pope, or any prelate preſume to doe that which Chriſt aſſumeth not, as hee is man? See your owne decrees of this matter, as touching the canonizing of Saints: Decret.part.2.cauſ.11. quaeſt,3.cap..58. Chriſtum violat, qui ſanctum non ſanctum, vel non ſanctum, ſanctum eſſe crediderit: Hee violateth Chriſt, which counteth a Saint no Saint, or no Saint a Saint: by this rule, if there be any Saints that are not canonized, as they cannot deny, they doe offer great wrong unto Chriſt; for not to canonize a Saint, what is it elſe, but to count him no Saint? wherefore your diſtinction of canonized, and uncanonized Saints, is nothing worth.

Againſt popiſh canonizing of Saints.

26 Diſtinct.26. The hearts of men, their thoughts and cogitations are knowne two manner of waies: either naturally by an ordinary and proper power, and ſo our hearts are knowne only to God: or by an extraordinary grace and gift, and ſo both the Angells and Saints doe know our inward repentance, and deſires, Rhemiſt. 1 Cor.2.ſect.1. Contr. It is one thing by revelation to underſtand the ſecrets of mens hearts, as the Prophets ſometime did, and as Peter deſcried the fraud of Ananias and Saphira: another thing to receive a gift and power themſelves when they will, to looke into mens hearts, as they affirm of their Saints, that alwaies they are able to underſtand as the vocall voice, ſo our inward repentance: For if at any time they want this power, then prayers made unto them are ſometime in vaine, which I thinke they will not grant. But this is contrary to the Scripture, which ſaith, that God only knoweth the hearts of men, 1 King.8.39. It is not ſaid, he chiefly or properly knoweth them, but he only: And a reaſon is there given: Reward every man according to his waies, as thou knoweſt, his heart: God therefore only knoweth the heart, becauſe he only rewardeth men after their waies: and that the Saints departed have no ſuch power or faculty to know things done in the earth, much leſſe mens hearts, your owne canons doe teſtifie: Decret.part.2.cau.13.qu.2.c.29. Fatendum eſt, neſcire quidem mortuos, quid hic agatur, ſed dum hic agitur, poſteà verò audire ab ijs, qui hinc ad eos moriendo pergunt, non quidem omnia, ſed quæ ſinuntur judicare: We muſt confeſſe, that the dead know not the things here done, while they are in doing, but afterwards they heare them of thoſe that depart unto them by death, and yet all they know not, but only ſo much as they are ſuffered to declare unto them, if they know not the things that are outwardly done, much leſſe the inward thoughts and deſire.

Saints know not mens hearts.

27 Diſtinct. 27. The Papiſts divide hell into foure parts or members, according to the meaſure and continuance of the puniſhment, for the paine is either temporall or eternall: and there is duplex pœna, damni & ſenſus: a double puniſhment beſide, either of loſſe without ſmart, or of loſſe and damage, with ſmart and puniſhment together: The place of temporall loſſe only was Limbus patrum, the dungeon of darkneſſe, where the fathers remained till the comming of Chriſt: the place of temporall loſſe without ſmart, is Limbus infantum, the dungeon to the which children dying without baptiſme are ſent: the place of temporall loſſe and puniſhment withall, is Purgatory: the place of eternall loſſe and puniſhment is Hell: Bellarm. de Purgator. lib.2.cap.6 Contr. Theſe are phantaſticall and ſuperſtitious devices of men: for the Scripture maketh but one place of darkneſſe and puniſhment, as there is but one place of ioy and light, namely, heaven. Luke 16. The rich glutton went to hell, Lazarus into Abrahams boſome, which Auguſtine denieth could be a member of hell, becauſe it was felicitatis ſinus, a place or boſome of bliſſe, Epiſt.19. Againe, they make all theſe infernall regions to be places of darkneſſe: but the Scripture maketh no other place of darkneſſe but hell, into the which the divells were throwne downe: So Saint Peter taketh hell and the chaines of darkneſſe for all one: And what place elſe is that which the ſame Apoſtle calleth a priſon, 1 Pet.3.19. (which the Papiſts notwithſtanding underſtand of their Limbus patrum) but where the chaines of darknes are? for chaines and a priſon houſe, have a mutuall reference one to the other. 2. In hell there is not, neither can be a puniſhment of loſſe or damage onely, without ſenſe and ſmart of torment: for they which are in darkneſſe excluded from the preſence of God, do not only ſuſtaine the loſſe of that benefit, but they muſt needs alſo be in paine and ſorrow: for as the Pſalmiſt pronounceth of other creatures: If thou hideſt thy face they are troubled, Pſal.104.29. ſo is it alſo true of men, that the hiding of Gods face, the abſence of his Spirit bringeth ſorrow and trouble withall: So our Saviour ſaith, They ſhall be caſt into utter or exterior darkneſſe, there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, Math.8.12. darkneſſe then is accompanied with weeping and extreme horror: It is called the utter or exterior darkneſſe, becauſe without the Kingdome of heaven there is nothing but darkneſſe: but if they will have it ſo called, in reſpect of hell it ſelfe, as though ſome darkneſſe were exteriour or outward, ſome interiour or inward, the darkneſſe of Limbus patrum, which they ſay, is in the brim of hell, muſt be this exteriour darkneſſe, becauſe hell the place of the damned, is lower, and more inward, and that muſt be the interior darkneſſe. Thus we ſee how eaſily their vanities are blowne away: And if you will be iudged by your owne law, you ſhall miſſe of two parts of your hell, your Purgatory, and Limbus patrum: for as for your purgatory fire, your decrees have thus defined, *part.2.cau.27.qu.*1.c.11. Vt purificatorio igne pœnitudinis peccata poſſunt decoqui: That their ſinnes may be decocted or done away by the purging fire of repentance: behold, repentance in this life is our Purgatory: and concerning your Limbus, another decree out of Augustine hath theſe words as touching the ſpeech which counterfeit Samuel uſed to Saul, ſaying, to morrow thou ſhalt be with me, Virum peccatis preſſum, cum magna peccatorum & juſtorum diſtantia ſit, cum Samuele juſtiſſimo futurum mentitus eſt: Hee lied in ſaying, that Saul being a ſinner, ſhould be with Samuel, ſeeing there is a great diſtance betweene ſinners and the righteous, *decr.p.*2 cau 26.qu.5.c.14. then could they not be both in hell, for then they might be ſaid to be together, though they ſhould imagine divers regions in hell, as the theefe is ſaid to be with Chriſt in Paradiſe, and yet not in the ſame region or degree of glory.

As one heaven, ſo but one hell.

2 Pet.2.4.

Diſtinct.28. The Ieſuite maketh two kinds of voluntary worſhip: that is properly called cultus voluntarius, voluntary worſhip, qui ſine ratione ſuſcipitur: which is taken in hand without any reaſon or ground. There is another kinde of worſhip or ſervice: Qui exhibetur Deo per actus vertutum: Which is performed unto God by ſome act of vertue, and this is not properly a voluntary worſhip or Religion, though it be not commanded: of this ſort, they ſay, their Pilgrimages are, and ſuch like, Bellarm.de ſanct.lib.2.cap.8. Contr. Firſt, S. Paul forbiddeth all voluntary worſhip, Coloſſ.2.23. the word is ἐθελοθρησκείᾳ: wherefore all things brought into the worſhip of God without his commandement, by the will of man, what reaſon or cauſe ſoever is pretended, is but will-worſhip. 2. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of ſuch a will-worſhip, as is fondly enterpriſed without any cauſe, as if a man ſhould vow not to ſit downe at the table, till he have twice waſhed, as the Ieſuite putteth the example: but even of ſuch worſhip, as is commended by the Ieſuite, which is not raſhly begun, but with advice, and performed by ſome vertuous act: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that even wil-worſhip hath a ſhew of wiſdome: it is not, ſine ratione, but, habet rationem ſapientia. Againe, there is ſubmiſsion and humbleneſſe of the mind, and not ſparing, or not ſatisfying the fleſh; all theſe our adverſaries cannot deny to be vertuous acts: for ſuch are their faſtings, and other works of penance: Wherefore even ſuch things doe make but a will-worſhip. The Ieſuite then hath ſaid juſt nothing. Remember what one of your owne Popes hath written, Ioann.22.extrau.tit.7.cap.1. in fine Adulterinas plantationes, quas non pater cœleſtis, ſed humana temeritatis audacia plantat, apoſtolici culminis cenſura divellat: Falſe and adulterous plants, which not the heavenly Father, but the boldneſſe of humane raſhneſſe hath planted, let the cenſure of the Apoſtolike ſea remove: wherefore all inventions not grounded upon the Word, are counted adulterous plants, and conſequently voluntary worſhip.

Coloſſ.2.23.
All worſhip deviſed by man is will-worſhip.

Diſtinct. 29. Bellarmine granteth, that vowes may be made properly unto Saints, as unto God, but with this diſtinction: We doe promiſe and make a vow to God, in ſigne of our thankfulneſſe to him, as unto the author of all good things: but unto Saints we vow to betoken our thankfulneſſe unto them, as our mediatours and interceſſors, by whoſe meanes we doe receive theſe good things of God, Bellarm.lib.3.de ſanct.cap.9. Contra. Thus they are not aſhamed to rob God of his honour. The Scripture teecheth us, that vowes only are to be made to God, Eſay 19.21. In that day the Egyptians ſhall know the Lord, and ſhall doe ſacrifices, and vow vowes unto God. Here vowes and ſacrifices are joyned together, but ſacrifices no manner of way are due to Saints, therefore neither vowes. Againe, the Scripture maketh this reaſon, why wee ſhould vow unto God, and pay our vowes: For the Lord thy God will ſurely require it of thee, Deut.23.21. But God only is able to require and exact a vow at our hands, and to call us to account for it: Ergo, wee muſt vow onely unto him: See your owne decrees, part.2.cau.22 qu.1.c.9. concerning oathes, which are of the ſame nature with vowes, it is thus decreed: Excommunicetur Clericus per creaturas jurans: A Clergie man ſwearing by creatures, muſt be excõmunicate: but Saints are creatures, as it is then unlawfull to ſweare by their name, ſo alſo to make a vow unto them: for the Scripture reſerveth both theſe, namely oathes, and vowes, Vowes are to be made only to God.

Difference of daies, not for more holines, but for Chriſtian policy.
Rom.14.5.

Diſtinct 30. Daies among Chriſtians are pattly equall, partly unequall: Vnequall they are by reaſon of the precept and determination of the Church, and for the myſticall ſignification which they have: Equall they are: Quoad aſſentialia feſti. In reſpect of the eſſentiall matters of an holy day: As a man privately by himſelfe may upon any day receive the communion, heare the Word, and keepe the memory of Chriſts reſurrection, Bellarm. de cult. Sanctor. lib. 1. cap. 10. Contr. The difference and diſtinction of daies for ſignification and in reſpect of more holineſſe is meere Iudaicall, as the Apoſtle teſtifieth: This man eſteemeth one day above another day, another man counteth every day alike, Rom. 14.5. Wherefore daies are all equall and alike unto Chriſtians, not in reſpect only of thoſe eſſentials (for ſo were they alſo equall to the Iewes, they might by themſelves upon any day, if they would, read the Law, remember Gods benefits, and ſuch like,) but they are equall in nature, holineſſe and goodneſſe: ſo that difference of daies among Chriſtians is rather for Chriſtian order and policy ſake, for the people to meete together, to heare the Word and ſerve God, then as ſetting a part ſome daies for greater holineſſe in themſelves. Your ſuperſtitious difference of daies is condemned by your owne canons, *decr.p.2.cauſ.26.qu.7.cap.*17 Ad animarum periculum pertinere ſuperſtitioſas temporum obſervationes: That the ſuperſtitious obſervation of daies doth bring a manifeſt perill to the ſoule: and though in the ſame place an inſtance be given of heatheniſh obſervation of daies, yet who ſeeth not that generally all ſuperſtition that waies is condemned.

Math.26.11.

Chriſts body is neither viſibly nor inviſibly preſent in earth.
Acts 3.21.
Math.28.6.

*Diſtinct.*31. Whereas we object that place of the Goſpel: *The poore ye have alwaies: but me ye ſhall not have alwaies, Math.*26. againſt the reall and bodily preſence of Chriſt in the Euchariſt: They anſwer by this diſtinction: that Chriſt is not now preſent in body viſibili & corporali præſentia: by his viſible or corporall preſence: or, Secundum humanam converſationem, after his converſation, or as he was converſant among men: but inviſibly he may be preſent, and after another manner: Bellarm. de Euchariſt. lib. 1. cap. 14. reſp ad loc. 4. Contra. This diſtinction is thus by Scripture overthrowne: Saint Peter ſaith, The heavens muſt containe or receive Chriſt till his comming againe, Act. 3. 21. Hee cannot in his body be abſent from heaven till that time, therefore hee cannot any way be preſent in earth. If they anſwer as they doe, that he may be in heaven and in the Euchariſt all at one time, wee confute them by another place of Scripture: He is not here (ſaith the Angel) *for he is riſen, Math.*28.6. which had bin no good argument, if the body of Chriſt were likely to be in two places at once. Let them conſult with their owne Canons, there ſhall they finde it thus decreed: Corpus Domini, in quo reſurrexit, uno loco eſſe oportet: The dody of our Lord, wherein he aroſe againe, muſt needs be in one place: Decret. part. 3. diſtinct. 2, *c.*44. it cannot then be in heaven and earth at one time.

Papiſts are driven to hold retranſubſtã-tiation a new point of popiſh divinity.

Diſtinct. 32. Some things are properly attributed to the body of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, as whatſoever ſignifieth motion from place to place, as the body of Chriſt may be ſaid to be lifted up, and to be laid downe, and ſuch like: but other mutations or changes, as to waxe hot or cold, to ſower or be mouldy, doe very improperly, or not at all agree unto the body of Chriſt, Bellarm. de Euchariſt. lib. 1. cap. 3. Contra. We grant indeed, that Chriſts body is not now ſubject to heat or cold, nor any ſuch thing, and therefore we deny that his body is preſent in the Euchariſt, becauſe the elements doe receive theſe alterations: Let them tell us then, when the bread mouldeth, and the wine ſowreth, what it is that is mouldy or ſower; bread and wine after conſecration there is none; the accidents, as the whiteneſſe, roundneſſe, ſweetneſſe, cannot receive other accidents; we cannot ſay that they are mouldy, or ſower: are they not then driven to confeſſe, that the body of Chriſt is ſubject to mould, and ſowerneſſe? If they ſay Chriſts body departeth, and a new matter is ſupplied as before there was tranſubſtantiation by the turning of the bread into Chriſts body, then there muſt be a retranſubſtantiation (which is a new point of popiſh learning) by the returning of the bread againe. Here I will oppoſe them out of their owne Canons, for where *Decret.p.*3. Diſtinct. 2.*c.*28. it is affirmed, that the Euchariſt may be vomited up: and in the ſame Diſtinction, cap. 94. Si mus ſacrificium comederit, &c. If a mouſe chance to eate the ſacrifice: I aske them whether a mouſe may eat Chriſts body or not, or may it be vomited up? If they deny it, their owne canons are againſt them: if they affirme it, let any man iudge, if it be not as great a diſhonour to Chriſts body ſo to be uſed, as either to waxe ſower or mouldy? but indeed I thinke they know not what to ſay.

*Diſtinct.*33 Whereas they affirme, that the whole quantity and proportion of Chriſts body is in the hoaſt, we thus reply upon them, that it is an eſſentiall property of quantity to have partem extra partem, one part diſtinct from another, the head cannot be where the feete, nor the feete &c. But if Chriſts body in his proper quantity were in the hoaſt, his parts cannot be diſtinct in ſo ſmall a roome, but ſhuffled and confounded together, Bellarmine here coyneth a moſt frivolous and ſophiſticall diſtinction: Corpus quantum (ſaith hee) habet partem extra partem, ſi illud extra dicat habitudinem ad ſubjectum, non autem, ſi dicat habitudinem ad locum: That a body of due quantity hath parts diſtinct one from another in reſpect of the ſubject, or body it ſelfe, but not in reſpect of the place: ſo there may be extenſio & diſtinctio partium in ſubjecto, ſed non in loco: There may be an extenſion of the parts, and a diſtinction in the ſubject, though not in the place, *Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. libr.*3. cap. 7. This of all other is the moſt abſurd and witleſſe diſtinction; for how can there be a diſtinction reall of the parts in the body, if there be not in the place? for every part hath his proper place anſwerable thereunto, and as the body is leſſe or more, ſo the proper place therof is dilated, or contracted: If then we take a body of two cubites, and thruſt it into a roome of one cubite, or leſſe, there cannot be the like extenſion of the parts, as in a place of two cubites. All the ſophiſtry in the world (let the divel put to his wit and all) wil not help them here, that Chriſts body full and whole ſhould be encloſed in a thinne wafer cake, and yet all his parts keepe their place and due proportion ſtill. Alas, poore men, theſe reſtleſſe toyes will cauſe them ſooner to runne mad, than to helpe them at a pinch: they ſhould doe much better to leave theſe new devices, and hold them to their ancient canons, and to ſay, as in the decrees, part.3. diſtinct.2. cap.58. Chriſtus per partes manducatur in ſacramento, & manet integer totus in cœlo, manet integer totus in corde tuo: Chriſt is eaten by parcells in the Sacrament, (he meaneth the bread which is broken into parts, as a little before he ſaid, quiſque accipit partem ſuam, every man taketh his portion) but he remaineth whole in heaven, he remaineth whole in thy heart: he ſaith not, he remaineth whole in thy mouth, or in thy hands, but in thy heart: ſuch a ſpirituall preſence of Chriſt, without a locall diſtinction of parts we confeſſe, but no otherwiſe.

Chriſts bodie imagined by the Papiſts without quantity in the Sacrament.

34 Diſtinct. 34. They tell us of three kinds of converſion of things: there is converſio productiva, A converſion productive, when a thing is produced which was not before, as when Chriſt changed water into wine: Converſio conſervativa: A converſion conſervative, when one thing is corrupted or periſhed, and another thing is generated or preſerved: Converſio adductiva: A converſion adductive, when a thing is not produced that was before, but is only brought to a place where is was not: and ſo is the bread adductively changed into the body of Chriſt in the Sacrament, Bellarm. de ſacram. lib.3. cap.18. Contra. 1. Theſe ſpecies, or kinds of converſion are confounded, for the productive and conſervative are all one, as that example ſheweth of turning the water into wine: for the water was changed, and wine conſerved, and the wine was produced by the power of Chriſt, out of the ſubſtance of water: The creation was properly productive, when things were made and produced, that were not: but there is no creation now, and therefore no productive converſion. 2. Yet to keepe their diſtinction, we will eaſily prove, that the being of Chriſts body in the Euchariſt, is by a productive or conſervative change, not an adductive: for either the bread is there together with Chriſts body, as the Lutherans hold, and that is their conſubſtantiation, which Papiſts deny; or the bread is annihilate, and turned to nothing, which I thinke they will not grant: or it muſt needs be turned into Chriſts body, and ſo a thing is produced that was not, namely, the breaden body of Chriſt. They have nothing to anſwer but this, that the bread is turned into materia prima, the firſt matter, whereof things are made, as the water was when Chriſt made the wine, Bellar. ibid. cap.24. Contr. 1. Thus if Ariſtotle had not helped them with his phantaſticall device of materia prima, they had beene put to their trumps. 2. And ſo notwithſtanding they are: for Ariſtotles device cannot ſtand againſt Scripture, which ſaith concerning that miracle of Chriſts: Aquam vinum factam: As their own text hath: the water did not vaniſh into materia prima, or I wot not what; but it was made wine, namely, water: and if after the ſame manner the bread be converted in the Euchariſt, the bread is made the body of Chriſt, and the body of Chriſt is made of it. And this verily was the opinion of the elder Papiſts, as Innocentius 3. affirmeth thus, Probabilior opinio judicatur, quæ adſerit aquam cum vino in ſanguinem tranſmutari: It is the more probable opinion, which affirmeth that the water and wine are changed into Chriſts blood, Decret. Greg. lib.3. tit.41. c.6. Be aſhamed at length yee Papiſts of ſuch fooleries, and glorifie God, in confeſsing your error, and acknowledging the truth.

Bread turned into Chriſts body by neceſſary conſequence of popiſh doctrine.

35 Diſtinct. 35. Where we urge that place of the Apoſtle, Heb. 10.14. Chriſt with once offering, hath made perfect for ever them that are ſanctified. And therefore he is not offered or ſacrificed in the Maſſe. They have found out this quaint diſtinction: the oblation of Chriſt is, Cruenta vel incruenta: Bloody or unbloody: the bloody ſacrifice was offered but once, the unbloody may be offered often, Bellarm. lib.1. de miſſa, cap.6. reſponſ. ad 8. argum. Contr. This is a vaine diſtinction, void of learning and truth: For Chriſt cannot be offered up, but by dying, Heb. 9.27,28. And without ſhedding of blood, there is no remiſsion of ſinnes, verſ.22. But by the ſacrifice of Chriſt, ſo oft as it is offered, there is remiſsion of ſinnes: Ergo, alſo ſhedding of blood: there is then no ſuch unbloody ſacrifice or oblation of Chriſt. This diſtinction alſo of yours agreeth not with your owne canons: Decr. par.2. cauſ 1. qu.1. cap.84. Sacrificium dicitur, quaſi ſacrum factum, quia prece myſtica conſecratur, pro nobis, in memoriam Dominicæ paſſionis: It is called a ſacrifice, that is made holy, becauſe by prayer myſticall it is conſecrated for us, for a remembrance of the Lords paſsion, &c. Here then is no ſacrificing of Chriſt anew, but remembring only of his paſsion and ſacrifice already paſt.

No unbloody ſacrifice of Chriſts body. Heb.9.27,28.

36 Diſtinct. 36. In other ſacraments the Prieſt is the Miniſter of Chriſt, yet ſpeaketh in his owne perſon, as in baptiſme, I baptize thee with water: but in the Euchariſt, he is not only the Miniſter of Chriſt, but aſſumeth and taketh upon him his very perſon, ſaying, This is my body, as the Angells ſometime ſpake in the perſon of God, Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. libr.4. cap.14. Contra. 1. When Miniſters have ſuch warrant to ſpeake in the perſon of God, as the Angels had, they may doe as they did. 2. Therefore in the Euchariſt only, as Bellarmine ſaith, he aſſumeth not the perſon of Chriſt, but at other times alſo, by their owne confeſsion. 3. If to doe any thing in the perſon of Chriſt, be no more but in the name & power, or in the ſtead and place of Chriſt, we miſlike not the phraſe nor ſenſe, for the Scripture alloweth that ſpeech: We are meſſengers for Chriſt, and for Chriſt, or in Chriſts ſtead, we

And that the Prieſt doth not ſupply the perſon of Chriſt, it may be gathered out of your owne decrees, *decr. part.3. diſtinct.2. cap.71. If the Prieſt doe it then in remembrance of Chriſt, then not in his perſon as preſent, for we only remember things abſent.

37 Diſtinct.37 There is an action in the Church, which is both a ſacrifice, and a repreſentation of a ſacrifice beſide: there is alſo another that is no ſacrifice, but a repreſentation only: the firſt is the Maſſe, the ſecond the Euchariſt, *Bellarm. lib.*1. *de Miſſa, cap.*1. Contra.1. The Euchariſt alſo is a ſacrifice of praiſe and thanſgiving, as the word ſignifieth: for other ſacrifice externall in the Church we acknowledge none but theſe ſpirituall ones, Heb.13.15,16. 2. Such diſtinction of a ſacrifice repreſenting, and a repreſenting without a ſacrifice, they learne not out of the word, nay, it is contrary to it, for all that Chriſt cõmandeth us, is, to doe this in his remembrance, and this doing, is nothing elſe, but eating and drinking according to his inſtitution in the Sacrament, 1 Cor.11.26. and ver.25. This doe as often as yee drinke it: This doing is communicating by drinking, not ſacrificing, as they fondly imagine: and ſo Saint Paul expoundeth theſe words, ſaying: As often as yee ſhall eate this bread, and drinke this cup, yee ſhew the Lords death till he come, 1 Corinth.11.26. Vnto this agreeth your owne canon, decr.part.3.diſtinct.2. cap.53. Quod nos facimus, in commemorationem fit ejus quod factum eſt: That which we doe, is done in remembrance of that which was done: this doing then, is by eating and drinking and remembring, not by ſacrificing.

38 Diſtinct.38. There is duplex divortium, a double kinde of divorce in matrimony, quoad thorum & cohabitationem, & quoad vinculum: A divorce from bed and boord onely, the marriage-knot or bond remaining ſtill, as in caſe of adultery: and another kinde, when the knot or bond it ſelfe is diſſolved and looſed, *Bellarm.de Matrim. lib.*1. *cap.*14. Contr. This diſtinction is contrary to the Apoſtle, as we ſhall ſhew: Marriage cannot be diſſolved, in reſpect of bedding and boording together, but the bond vinculum muſt needs be united: What the vinculum or bond of marriage is, Saint Paul ſheweth, The wife hath not power over her owne body, but her husband: and ſo likewiſe the husband, &c. 1 Cor.7.4. and that this is the bond, it is gathered out of the 15. verſ. where ſpeaking of the departure of infidells, hee ſaith, that a brother or ſiſter is not in ſubjection, that is, is no longer bound to performe theſe duties and debts of marriage: and verſe 27. Art thou bound to a wife? ſeeke not to be looſed: Ergo, the bond may be looſed: the word here uſed is δέδεσαι, of the which word commeth δεσμὸς, or δέσμα, vinculum a bond: Therefore by not being in ſubjection, or under power one of another, is to be freed, and no longer bound. If the marriage-knot or bond could not be united among Chriſtians, the Apoſtle needed not to have ſaid, Seeke not to be looſed, for who will ſeeke for an unpoſſible thing? And that in the caſe of adultery, the marriage-knot it ſelfe is diſſolved, ſo that it is lawfull after ſuch divorce to marry againe, your owne decree ſheweth, *decr.p.*2.*cauſ.*32. *qu.*7.*cap.*17. Viro licet aliam ducere, ſi ab uxore diſceſſerit cauſa fornicationis: It is lawfull for the man to marry another, if he leave his wife for fornication.

39 Diſtinct.39. Some vertues are Morales, morall, ſome Theologica, Theologicall: repentance, which they call penance, is a vertue Morall, ſaith the Ieſuite: faith a vertue Theologicall, Bellarm. lib. 1. *de pœnitent.cap.*29. Contr. Firſt, this diſtinction is not currant: for if you underſtand by Theologicall, that which is divine, for ſo we Engliſh Theologia, Divinity; then are all the vertues of Chriſtians Theologicall, that is, Divine, both in reſpect of the author, for they are all the gifts of God, Iam.1.17. as alſo in reſpect of their operation and effect, Yee are partakers (ſaith S. Peter) of the divine nature, if yee flie the corruption of worldly luſts, 2 Epiſt.1.4. Lo the flying of worldly luſts, which is with them a Morall vertue, is now become a theologicall or divine vertue, becauſe thereby we are made divine, or like to the divine nature. Secondly, if they be morall vertues, which conſiſt in manners and practice; they theologicall, that conſiſt in knowledge and ſpeculation; Faith in that ſenſe is not theologicall only, but morall alſo, Faith working by love, Gal.6.5. Thirdly, what needeth ſuch diſtinction and ſeparation of vertues, ſeeing the Apoſtle joyneth them all together, Ioyne unto your faith vertue, to vertue knowledge, to knowledge temperance, 2 Pet.1.6.7. Therefore it is no good argument which the Ieſuite maketh, faith belongeth not to repentance, becauſe one is of this kinde, and another of that, ſeeing the Apoſtle both in nature and practice joyneth them together: and that faith in their ſenſe is not a vertue theologicall, conſiſting in ſpeculation of the mind, their owne decree ſheweth, *part.*2. *cauſ.*33. *diſtinct.*2.*c.*14.gloſſ. In Chriſtum non credit, qui charitatem non habet, in Chriſtum enim credere, eſt amando in ipſum credere: He beleeveth not in Chriſt who hath not charity, for to beleeve in Chriſt, is by loving him to beleeve in him: ſeeing therefore charity is practicall, not contemplative, faith alſo, which is joyned with charity, of neceſsity muſt belong as well to action, as contemplation.
